sweet . . blossom'd clo -ver. Sing hey! sing lack -a - day, for our loves ev - er rang - ing, Sing sweet blossom'd clo -ver. Sing hey! sing lack -a - day, for our loves ev - er rang - ing, Sing sweet . . blossom'd clo -ver. Sing hey! sing lack -a - day, for our loves ev - er rang - ing, Sing sweet blossom'd clo -ver. Sing hey! sing lack -a - day, for our loves ev - er rang - ing, Sing rall.
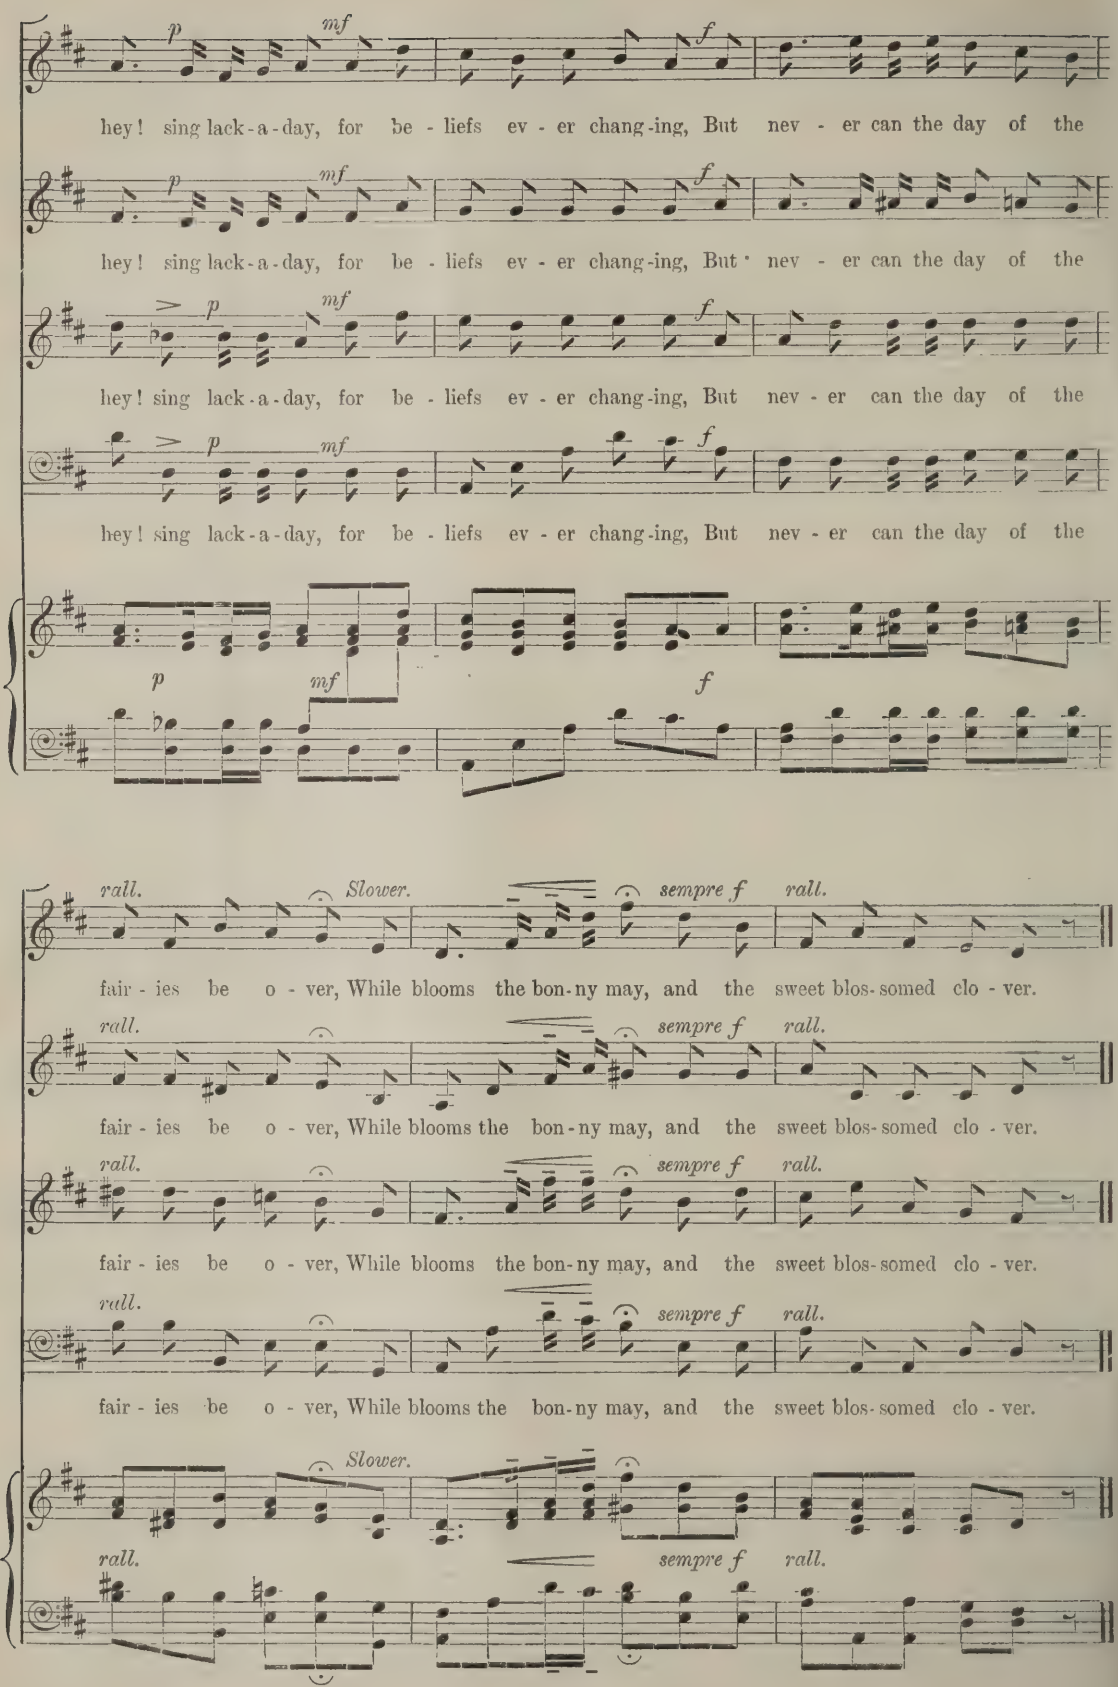
Quick.



p mf f
hey! sing lack-a-day, for be-liefs ev-er chang-ing, But nev-er can the day of the hey! sing lack-a-day, for be-liefs ev-er chang-ing, But nev-er can the day of the hey! sing lack-a-day, for be-liefs ev-er chang-ing, But nev-er can the day of the hey! sing lack-a-day, for be-liefs ev-er chang-ing, But nev-er can the day of the rall. Slower. sempre f rall.
fair-ies be o-ver, While blooms the bon-ny may, and the sweet blos-somed clo-ver.
fair-ies be o-ver, While blooms the bon-ny may, and the sweet blos-somed clo-ver.
fair-ies be o-ver, While blooms the bon-ny may, and the sweet blos-somed clo-ver.
fair-ies be o-ver, While blooms the bon-ny may, and the sweet blos-somed clo-ver.

The Musical Times

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT

July 1, 1925

No. 1142

NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK

Price (1½*d.*)

Amen

FROM THE ANTHEM "BEHOLD, THE HOUR COMETH"

BY

ORLANDO GIBBONS

(EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

MADE IN ENGLAND

Vesper Hymns.

286. ASHTON, A. T. LEE. Lord, keep us safe this night, in B flat ... ... 1½d.
329. *BEETHOVEN (Adapted from). Lord, keep us safe this night, in G. Two settings ... ... 1½d.
915. BUTTON, H. ELLIOT. Six Benediction Hymns ... ... 4d.
1068. CAREY, F. Save us, O Lord, waking, in B flat ... ... 1½d.
940. CHAMBERS, H. A. The day for labour, the night for rest, in A (Words only, 2s. per 100) ... ... 1½d.
975 COULDREY, H. R. Guard us waking, guard us sleeping, and Final Amen. No. 3, in F ... ... 1½d.
967. COULDREY, H. R. Through the day Thy love has spared us, and Final Amen, in G ... ... 1½d.
952. COWEN, F. H. Through the day Thy love has spared us, in D ... ... 1½d.
796. CRUICKSHANK, W. A. C. Saviour, when the day is ending, in E flat ... ... 1½d.
817. EARNSHAW, R. H. Another sweet Sabbath is past, in G ... ... 1½d.
662 FAYE, PHILIP DE. Silently, softly, falleth the night, in F 1½d.
925. *HARRISON, E. Ere we leave Thy House, O Father, in E flat (Words only, 2s. per 100) ... ... 1½d.
960. *HARRISON, E. In our waking hours, in E flat (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) ... ... 1½d.
801. HOLLINS, A. The Lord bless you and keep you, in E flat ... ... 1½d.
929. MARTIN, G. C. Darkness of Night, in F (Words only, 2s. per 100) 1½d
665. MATTHEWS, H. A. Lord, keep us safe this night, in D 1½d.
866. ROBERTS, J. V. Agents only, Holy Father, in F ... 1½d
762. SCOTT, F. Grant us Thy peace, O Lord, in E flat ... 1½d
261. *STEANE, B. Lord, keep us safe this night, in F ... 1½d.
859. STORR, A. O Light Everlasting, in C ... ... 1½d.
856. SULLIVAN, A. Calm be our rest to-night, in A flat ... 2d.
541. *SULLIVAN, A. Lord, keep us safe this night, in F. (Two Settings, with Sevenfold Amen) ... ... 1½d.
1064. VESPER HYMNS. Twelve Settings by various composers ... ... 1s.
264. VINGOE, A. L. Lord, keep us safe this night, in F ... 1½d.

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

Amens.

1101. BUNNETT. Sixfold Amen, in G ... ... 1½d.
457. ELLIOTT, J. W. Sevenfold Amen, in D (S.A.T.B.B.) ... 1½d.
603. *GIBBONS, ORLANDO. Threefold Amen, in D (S.A.A.T.B.) 1½d.
748. GIBBONS, ORLANDO. Sixfold Amen, in D (S.A.A.T.B.) ... 1½d.
431. GODFREY, A. E. Sevenfold Amen, in G ... ... 1½d.
284 GOUNOD, CH. { Threefold Amen / Fourfold Amen } in E flat ... 1½d.
574. LEMARE, E. H. Threefold Amen, in G ... ... 1½d.
435. LEMARE, E. H. Threefold Amen (Original Key), in G flat ... ... 4d.
LEMARE, E. H. Final Amen, in G flat (A.T.T.B.B.) ... 1½d.
687. PAGE, A. { Sevenfold Amen, No. 1, in A / Sevenfold Amen, No. 2, in D } ... ... 1½d.
485. SOMERVELL, A. Fourfold Amen, in F ... ... 1½d.
814. STAINER, J. Fourfold Amen, in G ... ... 1½d.
656. *STAINER, J. { Sevenfold Amen / Dresden Amen (Arr. by J. S.) } in A ... 1½d.
STAINER, J. Sevenfold Amen, in E flat (A.T.T.B.) ... 1½d.
STAINER, J. Sevenfold Amen (S.S.S.) 1½d
541. *SULLIVAN, A. (Arr.). Sevenfold Amen, in F ... ... 1½d.
577. WAGNER, R. (Arr.). Dresden (Twofold) Amen, in A flat 1½d
WAGNER, R. Dresden Amen, in E flat (A.T.T.B. or A.T.B.B.) (arranged from "Parsifal") 1½d 841. WESLEY, S. S. (Arr.). Fourfold Amen, in D ... ... 1½d.
492. WEST, JOHN E. Threefold Amen, in G ... ... 1½d.

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND CO., LIMITED; THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

(July, 1923)

THEMATIC LIST OF ORGAN PIECES

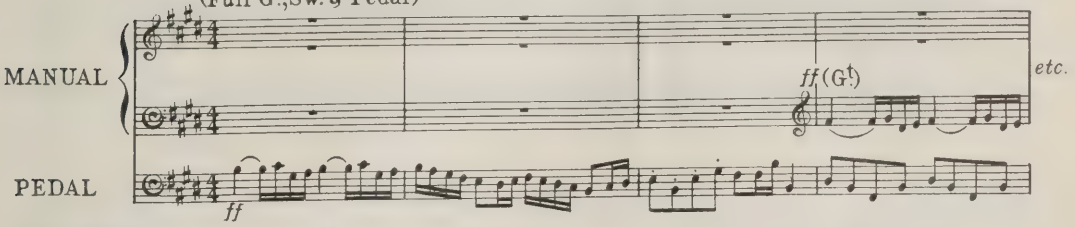
PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

DIFFICULT

FUGUE in E major

Allegro moderato
(Full G^t, Sw. & Pedal)

W. T. Best



2nd Extract

(Time of performance about 4 minutes)

Original Compositions for the Organ No 447. Price 1/6

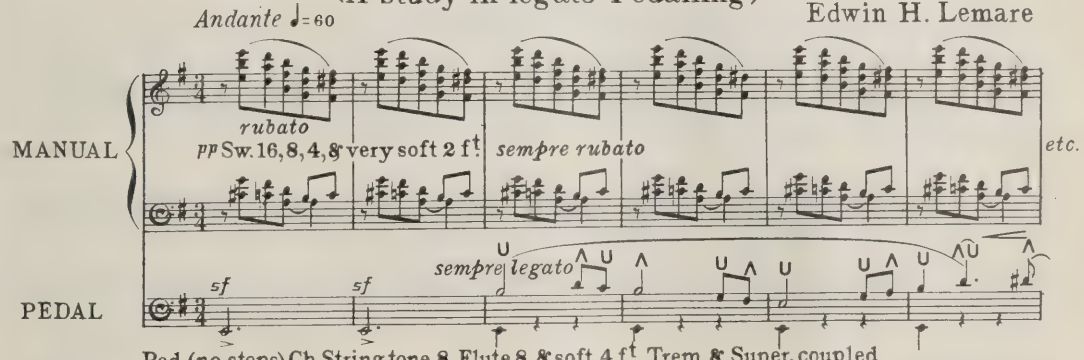
DIFFICULT

CARILLON

(A study in legato Pedalling)

Edwin H. Lemare

Andante ♩=60



Ped. (no stops) Ch. String tone 8, Flute 8, & soft 4 f^t., Trem. & Super, coupled al rigore di tempo ♩=66

Episode

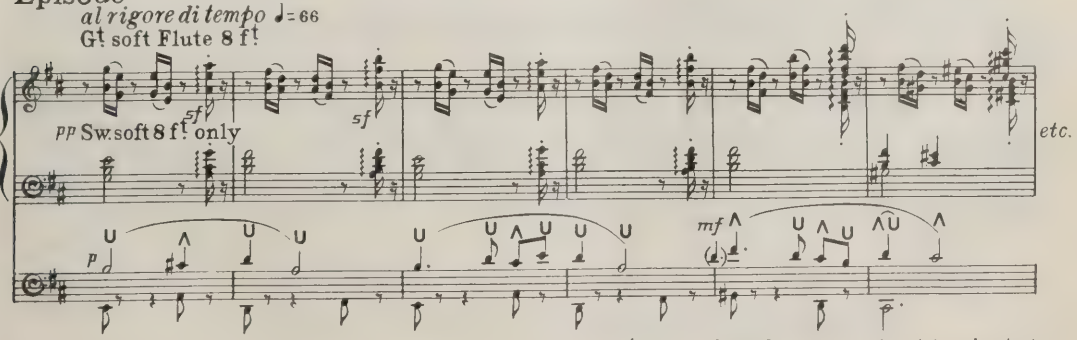
G^t soft Flute 8 f^t



(Time of performance about 5 minutes)

Copyright, 1911, by Novello & Company, Limited

Lemare Original Compositions No 33. Price 2/3

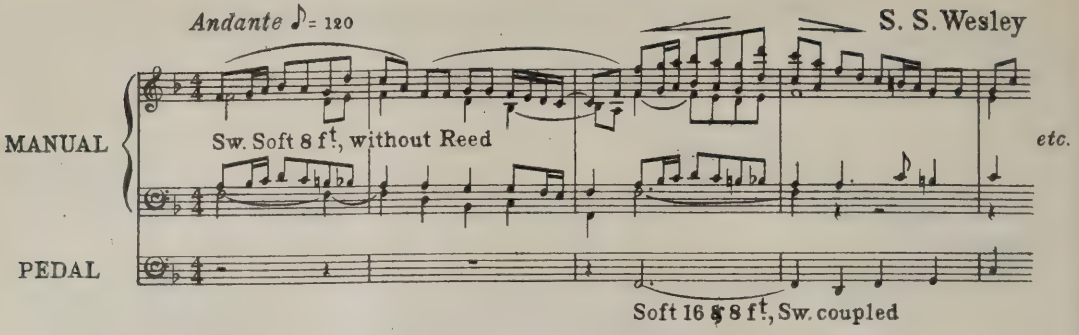
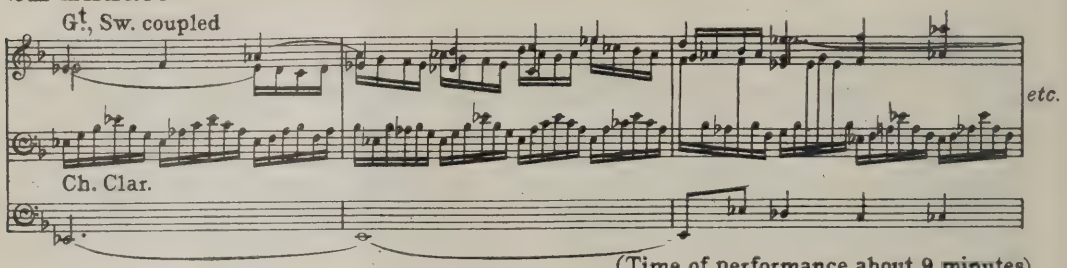
MODERATELY DIFFICULT

ANDANTE in F



2nd Extract



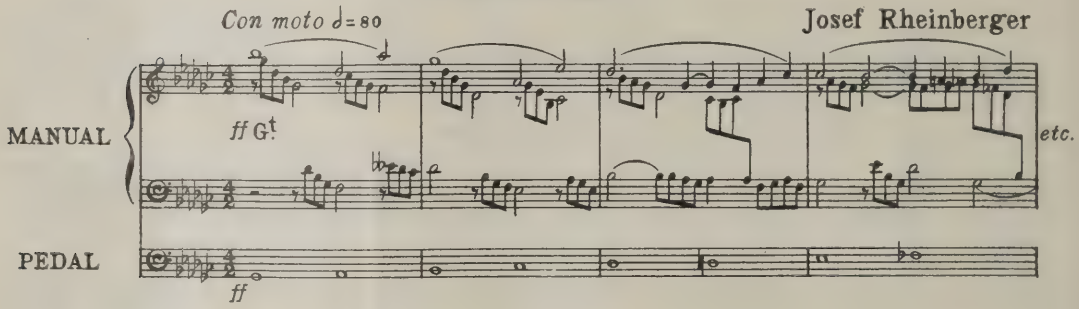
(Time of performance about 9 minutes)

Original Compositions for the Organ by S. S. Wesley, No 5. Price 2/3

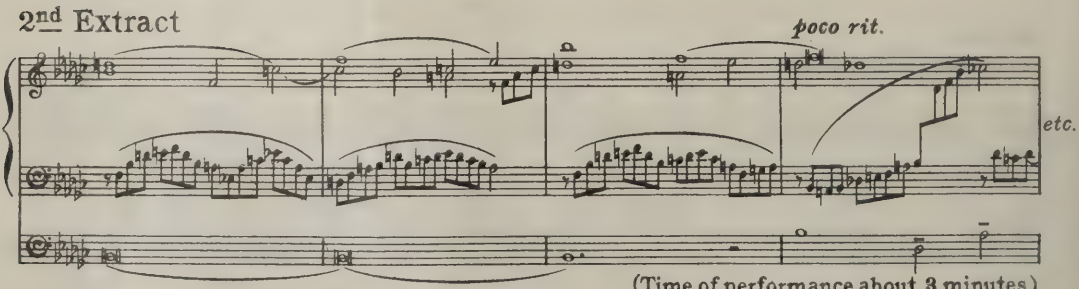
MODERATELY DIFFICULT

TWELVE PIECES, Op. 174

No 3. Aspiration
(Aufschwung)



2nd Extract



(Time of performance about 3 minutes)

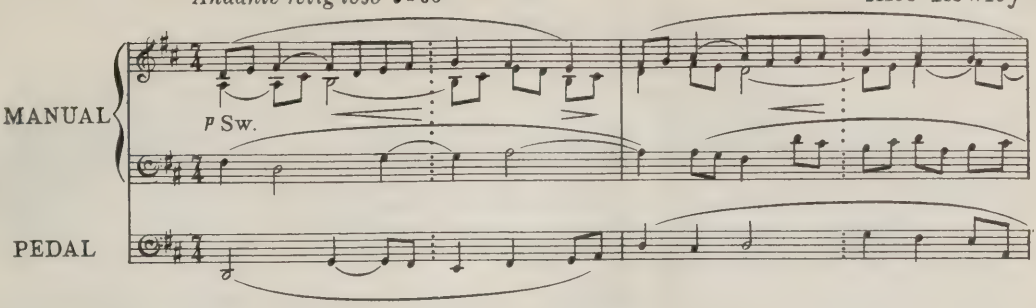
Original Compositions for the Organ No 206. Price (2 pieces) 2/3

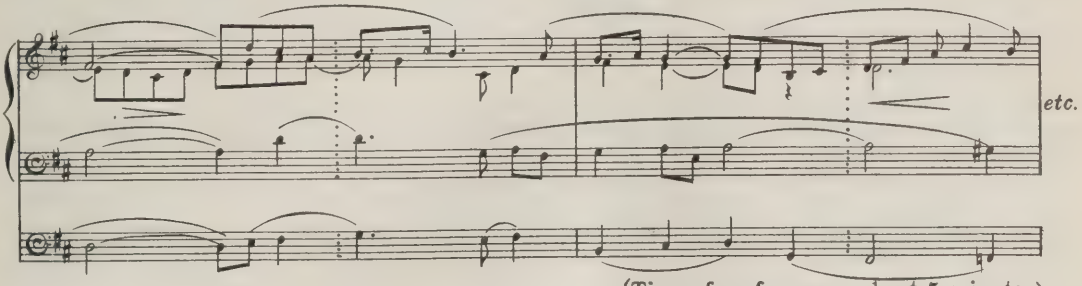
MODERATELY EASY

ANDANTE RELIGIOSO

Andante religioso ♩= 60

Alec Rowley





(Time of performance about 5 minutes)

Copyright, 1921, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No 77. Price 1/6

MODERATELY EASY

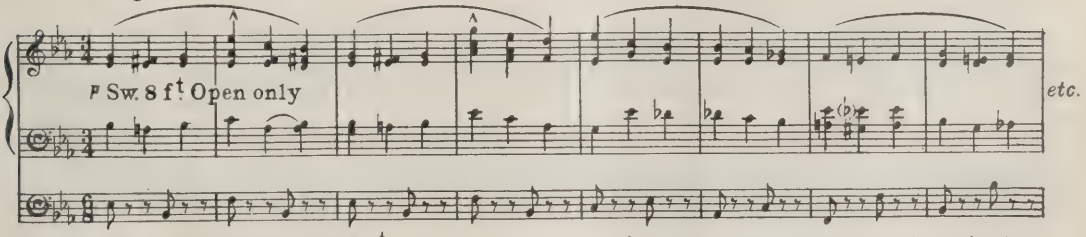
MORNING SONG

Poco Allegretto ♩= 66

Alfred Hollins

Episode

Poco più mosso ♩ = 72



p with soft Open Wood 16 ft

(Time of performance about 4 minutes)

Copyright, 1918, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No 53. Price 2/-

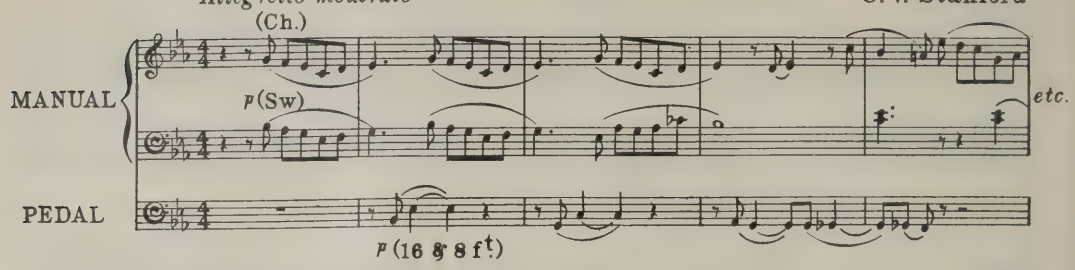
EASY

FOUR INTERMEZZI

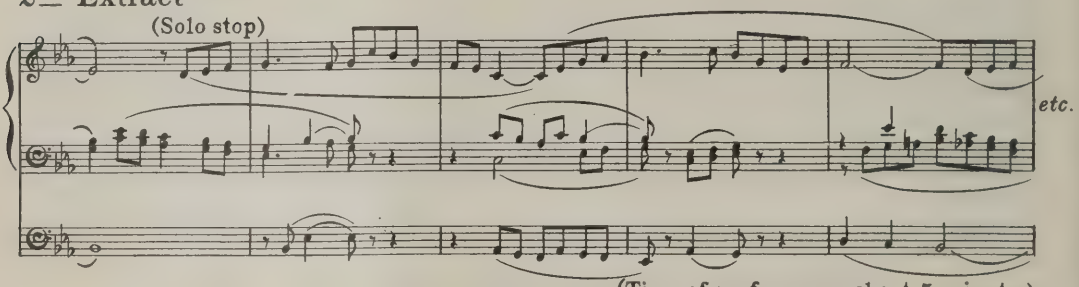
Nº 4.

(Founded upon an Irish Air)

Allegretto moderato C.V. Stanford



2nd Extract



(Time of performance about 5 minutes)

Copyright, 1923, by Novello & Company, Limited

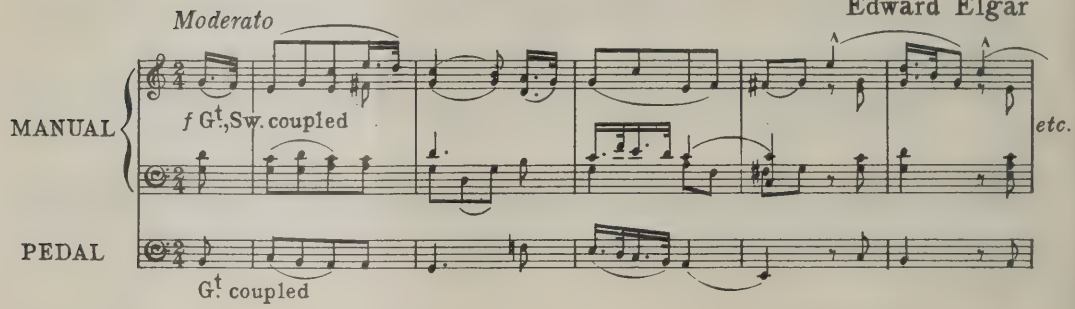
Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) Nº 94. Price 2/-

EASY

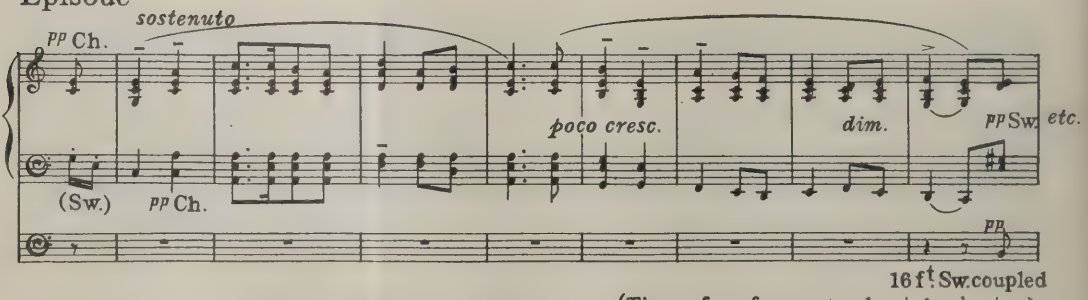
CANTIQUE

Edward Elgar

Moderato



Episode



(Time of performance about 4 minutes)

Copyright, 1913, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) Nº 18. Price 2/3

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 990.—Vol. 66
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

AUGUST 1 1925

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
General Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR, MUS. BAC.

(Season 1925—1926.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and must be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM will begin on Monday, September 21st.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Thursday, September 17th.

The WALTER STOKES SCHOLARSHIP for TENORS (value £150) will be offered for competition in September. Last day for receiving names, August 31st. Detailed particulars and entry forms will be supplied on application to the Secretary.

SPECIAL COURSES for the TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS and also for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS, the latter to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, have been arranged. A Junior Department is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., MUS. DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, ESQ., D.LITT.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, ESQ., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in September, December, and April. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

THE NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS.

PRESIDENT: S. H. NICHOLSON, ESQ., M.A., MUS. BAC.

ANNUAL CONGRESS,

EXETER, AUGUST 31, SEPTEMBER 1, 2, & 3, 1925.

The Congress Handbook is now ready, and will be sent, post free, to members making application for same. Copies to non-members, Threepence each.

The Executive Committee will be grateful for any offer of assistance in the formation of new branches of the Union.

Apply: JOHN BROOK, 24, FALKLAND ROAD, SOUTHPORT.

A

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Aria in F, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, p. 112; Augener, p. 1178; Peters, Vol. 9, No. 8, page 34.)

Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Op. 18, César Franck. No. 3 of Six Pièces d'Orgue. (Durand.)

Bridal March and Finale, "The Birds," C. H. H. Parry. Arranged by W. G. Alcock. Organ Arrangements edited by John E. West. No. 14. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1925.

Examination Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is closed during August.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).
Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 14th, 1925.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).
Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the October November Examinations close Wednesday, October 7th, 1925.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. Claud Biggs.

New Professor of Singing, Miss Marguerite Swale.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1924-1925.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20): WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11): SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASGOW

ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1924-25.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 8 to November 1, December 1 to March 7, and March 9 to June 5.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.

Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1925: WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, Mus. B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

LECTURE-RECITALS.

MR. A. M. HENDERSON

(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.),

PIANIST AND LECTURER

(Pupil of Cortôt, Pugno, Scharwenka, and Widor)

Organist to the University of Glasgow. One of His Majesty's Examiners in Music.

MR. A. M. HENDERSON specialises in PIANOFORTE LECTURE-RECITALS with Illustrative Programmes.

Also, assisted by MRS. A. M. HENDERSON, as Singer.

Prospectus and terms on application.

67, ANN STREET, GLASGOW, W.2.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

THE TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

A

HOLIDAY COURSE

WILL BE HELD BETWEEN

SEPTEMBER 14TH and 18TH (inclusive).

LECTURERS:

DR. STANLEY MARCHANT, MR. ERNEST READ,
MR. E. O. D. RADCLYFFE, and MR. CUTHBERT WHITEMORE.

Further particulars from (MRS.) MARION I. H. COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal and Founder, J. A. CROSS.

Late Principal (1897-1925), ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS,

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal ... ... WARD COWDERY.
Acting Principal ... ... DAVID GODELL.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art for both Professional and Amateur. Latent talent successfully developed. Public appearances arranged. Students' Concerts monthly. Auditions free.
Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

Conductor: ARTHUR FAGGE.

There are VACANCIES among the active members during the ensuing season—September to April—for those possessing good voices, musical ability, earnestness and enthusiasm. Apply, by letter, to Hon. Secretary, "Northrepps," Ashford, Middx.

THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL.

GLOUCESTER.

SEPTEMBER 6, 8, 9, 10, and 11, 1925.

Patrons: T.M.G.M. THE KING AND QUEEN, H.M.G.M. QUEEN ALEXANDRA, H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, T.R.H. THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF YORK.

Principals: Misses Margaret Balfour, Muriel Brunskill, Astra Desmond, Miriam Licette, Agnes Nicholls, Dorothy Silk, Elsie Suddaby, and Flora Woodman.
Messrs. Norman Allin, John Booth, John Coates, Gwynne Davies, Keith Falkner, Herbert Heyner, Robert Radford, Horace Stevens, and Norman Stone.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
CONDUCTOR ... ... DR. A. HERBERT BREWER.

IN THE CATHEDRAL.

TUESDAY, 11.30.—"Elijah," New Work (Harwood); 8 p.m., "Apostles" (Elgar).

WEDNESDAY, 11.30.—Symphony No. 1 (Elgar), "Job" (Parry), Selection, Mass in D (E. Smyth), "The Explorers" (Vaughan Williams), New Works by Walford Davies and G. Holst.

THURSDAY, 11.30. — "Stabat Mater" (Stanford), "Hebridean" Symphony (Bantock), New Symphony (Sibelius), "For the Fallen" (Elgar), New Work (Wood), "Give the hungry man thy bread" (Bach).

THURSDAY, 8.0 p.m. — "Requiem" (Verdi), "Death and Transfiguration" (Strauss), New Orchestral Work (McEwen), Tone-Poem, "Finlandia" (Sibelius).

FRIDAY, 11.30.—"Messiah."
Reserved Seats, 17*s.* 6*d.* to 2*s.* 6*d.*

IN THE SHIRE HALL.

WEDNESDAY, 8.0 p.m. — Choral Suite, "Summer Sports" (Brewer), Orchestral Works by Sibelius, German, Reed, Howells; Songs, &c.
Reserved Seats, 12*s.* and 7*s.* 6*d.*

FRIDAY, 8.0 p.m.—Miscellaneous.
Reserved Seats, 7*s.* 6*d.*, 5*s.*, and 2*s.* 6*d.*

For Programmes (6*d.*), Tickets, &c., apply, MINCHIN & GIBBS, Gloucester. A. A. G. JONES, Secretary, Gloucester.

GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL, 1925.

August 5, 6, 7, 8.—"LITTLE PLAYS OF ST. FRANCIS." By Laurence Housman, produced by the Author.

August 27 to September 5.—Daily performances of Arthurian Music-Dramas:
"THE BIRTH OF ARTHUR."
"THE ROUND TABLE."
By Reginald Buckley and Rutland Boughton.

"THE QUEEN OF CORNWALL," by Thomas Hardy. Set as a Music-Drama by Rutland Boughton.

And, in response to many requests, a few performances of "THE IMMORTAL HOUR." By Fiona Macleod and Rutland Boughton.

The following Artists have been engaged:

KATHLEEN BEER, VIVIENNE BENNETT, MONA BENSON, ANNETTE BLACKWELL, RUBY BOUGHTON, SYLVIA CLOUDE, CARYS DAVIES, NORAH DESMOND, SYBIL EVERS, GLADYS FISHER, JESSIE HALL, DOROTHY HOLLOWAY, OLIVE HOOPER, JOYCE MANSELL, MABEL RITCHIE, VALERIE RUSSELL, B. SAXON-SNELL, N. SAXON-SNELL, PENELOPE SPENCER, KATHLEEN VINCENT.

KENNEDY ARUNDEL, HENRY CASS, ARTHUR CRANMER, JOHN DEAN, SEYMOUR DOSSOR, GEOFFREY DUNN, DONALD FINLAY, ERIC GODLEY, CHARLES HEDGES, GEORGE HOLLOWAY, JACK KARSHINSKY, AUGUSTUS MILNER, CAVAN O'CONOR, FRANK PHILLIPS, GEORGE RICHARDSON, JOHN THORNE, LEYLAND WHITE, FREDERICK WOODHOUSE.

Costumes and Stage Decoration by CHRISTINA WALSHE.
Dances arranged and led by PENELOPE SPENCER.

Detailed Programmes free on application to the Secretary.
THOS. W. WALLER,
FESTIVAL SCHOOL, GLASTONBURY, SOMERSET.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

Leeds Triennial Musical Festival

OCTOBER 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, 1925.

CONDUCTORS:
MR. ALBERT COATES and SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.
CHORUS MASTER: DR. A. C. TYSOE.
FESTIVAL ORGANIST: MR. H. PERCY RICHARDSON.
CHORUS PIANIST: MR. NORMAN STRAFFORD.

PRINCIPALS:
MISS FLORENCE AUSTRAL, MISS DOROTHY SILK,
MISS ELSIE SUDDABY, MISS MARGARET BALFOUR,
MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL.
MR. WALTER HYDE, MR. WALTER WIDDOP, MR. RAYMOND HARTLEY, MR. STEUART WILSON, MR. NORMAN ALLIN, MR. ROBERT RADFORD, MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

SOLO PIANIST ... ... MISS MYRA HESS.
SOLO VIOLONCELLO ... MADAME GUILHERMINA SUGGIA.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
Chorus of 300 Voices chosen from singers in Leeds and the West Riding of the County of York.

Applications for all classes of seats should be made as early as possible.

For further detailed particulars see programme, which can be had free on application to the Chief Music Sellers, or to
CHARLES F. HAIGH, FESTIVAL OFFICES, TOWN HALL, LEEDS.

CARMARTHEN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

SEPTEMBER 24th and 25th, 1925.

President ... THE LORD BISHOP OF ST. DAVID'S.
St. Peter's, Carmarthen:
THURSDAY, 2.30.—"HYMN OF PRAISE," ETC.
,, 7 p.m.—"ELIJAH."
FRIDAY, 8 p.m.—ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.
Conductor ... J. CHARLES WILLIAMS, A.R.C.M.
For programmes (1*s.*), tickets, &c., apply, COLBY EVANS, Carmarthen.

SOUTHEND MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

NOVEMBER 5th to 14th, 1925.

OPEN GOLD MEDAL CLASSES
(Amateurs and Professionals).

SINGING.
PIANOFORTE PLAYING.
VIOLIN PLAYING.
ELOCUTION.

ALSO OPEN CLASSES.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION.
DANCING (SWORD).

Send stamp for SYLLABUS to Hon. Secretary,
HORACE BAYLISS,
63, Alexandra Road, Southend-on-Sea, Essex.

ST. JOHN AMBULANCE ASSOCIATION, BACUP CENTRE.

President: ALDERMAN J. H. LORD, J.P., H.S.B.
Hon. Treasurer: FRED COOPER, ESQ.
Hon. Secretary:
W. BROWN, H.S.B., 184, Todmorden Road, Bacup, Lancs.

ANNUAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL

IN CO-OPERATIVE AND TOWN HALLS, BACUP,
SATURDAYS, NOVEMBER 7th and 14th, 1925.
ENTRIES CLOSE OCTOBER 12TH.

JUVENILE COMPETITIONS include: Pianoforte and Solo-Singing, Choirs, &c. Both Open and Local Classes.

ADULT COMPETITIONS include: Pianoforte and Solo Singing, Quartet, Duets, Choirs, &c. All Open Classes. Trophies, Shields, Rose Bowls, Cup, Gala Medals (including the Norman Allin Gold Medal); also other valuable prizes.

Official SYLLABUS now ready, price 6*d.*, post free, from the Hon. Assistant-Secretary,
MR. HAROLD SHEPHERD, 13, Ribble Street, Bacup

HASLEMERE FESTIVAL
OF
CHAMBER MUSIC
16th, 17th, and 18th Centuries.
From AUGUST 24th to SEPTEMBER 5th.
UNDER THE DIRECTION OF
ARNOLD DOLMETSCH

Music of the great English, French, Italian, and German Composers, to be performed upon the instruments of the period: Lute, Viols, and Violins, Recorders, Harpsichord, Clavichord, Virginals, Chamber Organ, &c.

Exhibition of Instruments with Demonstrations every morning from 10.30 to 12.30. Concerts every evening at 8 (Sunday excepted).

Tickets for the Series (Tax included)—Reserved: £3 10*s.*, £2 10*s.*; Unreserved: £1 15*s.*, £1 5*s.*, from Charman's, High Street, Haslemere, Surrey.

Further particulars from MRS. DOLMETSCH, Jesses, Haslemere, Surrey.

HALIFAX
COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.
VICTORIA HALL,
Friday and Saturday,
NOVEMBER 27th and 28th, 1925.

SYLLABUS now ready. Price 3*d.* Post free, 4*d.*

Obtainable at Music Dealers, or,
J. E. HOYLE, Hon. Sec., 14A, Crossley Street, Halifax.

Perfect Touch & Technique without Laborious Practice

The fundamental principles of my System have stood the test of time. Proof of this lies in the enormous number of pupils who have passed through my hands to piano-mastery—who have found in the System the Royal Road to the whole of the practical side of Pianoforte Playing, without any keyboard drudgery.

The results are frequently described by pupils as "miraculous," "magical," &c.

Pianists of every grade of proficiency can benefit from this simple, inexpensive, and unique Postal Course. Many eminent musicians, including the late Sir Frederick Bridge, have used and highly recommended my System—the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM.

19,000 Successful Pupils of all ages.

"From Brain to Keyboard"
Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Read my Illustrated Book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing."

This explains fully how I teach my System by a Series of Postal Lessons, and gives particulars of the very reasonable fee for tuition. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much quicker and better results, based on my important discovery in physiology.

Apply for book to-day, but please do not omit to state whether average or advanced player, or, if a beginner, whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

CHARLES A. GILLETT
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL.

SPECIALIST IN THE Modern Teaching of Modern Technique
AND
The Production of Beautiful Tone.

Personal Lessons and Consultations Daily:

OR

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION—being instruction by post on exactly the same lines as the personal teaching, designed for those living at a distance, and including

FREE POSTAL CONSULTATIONS ON ALL INDIVIDUAL DIFFICULTIES.

Invaluable to every pianist—whether Amateur or Professional, Student, Teacher, or Performer.

Write or call—
11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.
OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.
"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."
RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.
2*s.* 6*d.* per lesson and postage.
"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.
A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:
SOLO-PLAYING. SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION. ACCOMPANIMENT.
ESSAY. (With list of 75 Solos.)
3*s.* each, 10*s.* 6*d.* the set.
These papers will help to secure for you the few extra marks often necessary to turn failure into success.
Send stamped addressed envelope for fuller particulars.
"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE TECHNIQUER
FOR STRETCH, STRENGTH, AND SUPPLENESS.
Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Highly recommended by the most eminent Performers and Teachers. Should be in the hands of all students.
See what LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, REDDIE, RONAY, FRYER, WALENN, ELLINGFORD, and many others have to say about it.

"Hand Development," with numerous photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*
Send for full particulars, &c.—
Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Sec.),
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

"A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING" (12,000 words). 1/8. Illustrated. Invaluable to Members of any Orchestra, Band, Church Choir, or Singing Class. Bandmaster M. T. Cooper, R.M.S.M., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool, Lancashire.

BY ARRANGEMENT WITH THE
BOGUE-LABERGE CONCERT MANAGEMENT
OF NEW YORK.

1925 TOUR.

CHARLES COURBOIN

(The Famous American Organist)

ON HIS GREAT EUROPEAN TOUR

WILL VISIT ENGLAND

OCTOBER—NOVEMBER, 1925.

MARCEL DUPRÉ

ORGAN RECITALS

NOVEMBER 10th—DECEMBER 6th.

Sole Agent for Great Britain and Ireland—
Mr. JOHN VERNE,
BRATHAY HOUSE,
9, THORNTON ROAD, LONDON, S.W.12.

For vacant dates, &c., apply to—
Mr. JOHN VERNE,
BRATHAY HOUSE,
9, THORNTON ROAD, LONDON, S.W.12.

PERSONAL CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus.Doc. (Lond.).

SPECIAL COURSES.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., for Sept. and Dec.
2. R.C.O. and T.C.L. for Jan. Diplomas.
3. Revision for Durham Mus. Bac., Sept.
4. London Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc., Dec.
5. Separate Subjects: Rudiments, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching, Touch and Technique (for vivâ voce part of Practical Examinations).

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

These Correspondence Lessons are so devised as to give a complete grip of everything necessary for success in the shortest possible time. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for Degrees and Diplomas in Music.

CONSULTATION LESSONS also in BRISTOL and LONDON.

Address: DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, Clarendon Road, Redland, Bristol.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL:

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

MATRIC. - SUCCESSES - 125 JULY, 1925 - 6
ALL AT 1ST ATTEMPT.

1ST M.B. - - MARCH, 1925 - - M.C.C. Students comprised 50% of the entire PASS LIST.

MUS. BAC. - - FOR ONE FEE (which can be paid by Monthly Instalments), Tuition is given until the Degree is gained.
THE FINEST OFFER ever made to Students of MUSIC.

LESS than 2 years - A Student who passed Matric., July, 1925, writes: "LESS than 2 years' coaching with you has obtained for me:
"A.R.C.O. ... ... 1st ATTEMPT.
"F.R.C.O. ... ... 2nd ATTEMPT.
"MATRIC. ... ... 1st ATTEMPT."

A.R.C.O. - - RECENT SUCCESSES 20

F.R.C.O. - - " " 8

SUCCESS AT 5TH ATTEMPT. A Student FAILS four times, A.R.C.O. (under other tuition). After four months with the M.C.C. this Student PASSES.

A. MUS. T.C.L. - This Exam. is entirely theoretical, and forms an excellent preliminary to Mus. Bac.
Marks gained by M.C.C. Students:
Art of Teaching 85%
Rudiments 100%
Counterpoint 94%

A.T.C.L. - - Art of Teaching 86%

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. RECENT SUCCESSES 26
April, 1925. A Student gains 81% (Pianoforte). At a previous Exam. this Student gained 66% (under other tuition).

FREE - - GUIDE TO MATRIC., MUS. BAC., ETC.

State Exam. interested in.

— ALL OUR SUCCESSES ARE BY CORRESPONDENCE. —

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

The COLLEGE that converts FAILURES into SUCCESSES.

Do you wish to GAIN the Mus. Bac.?

If so, take up our Guarantee Course and start NOW.

POSTAL TUITION (Buenos Ayres).

A Student of the M.C.C. passed Matric. (Dublin), May, 1925, and 1st Mus. Bac., June, 1925. This Student is now working for Final Mus. Bac., December, 1925.

A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Did you FAIL, July, 1925?

If so, send on your marks, and we will forward you full particulars of our Course for January, 1926.

SEVERAL of our Students Passed at the 1st ATTEMPT.

Are YOU an F.R.C.O.?

If so, start NOW for the Mus. Bac. You need not be AFRAID of MATRIC.!

A. MUS. T.C.L.

This is an excellent preliminary to Mus. Bac.

WANTED. 100 STUDENTS—not afraid of work—to COMMENCE NOW, and study for Mus. Bac.

MUS. BAC.—What would it be worth to YOU?

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MR. CHARLES TREE

3RD EDITION OF "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES READY SHORTLY. (12 ADDITIONAL PAGES.) 3/7 post free.
"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION." 5/2 post free. (If difficult to obtain, write direct.)
Miss Paris, Barrow, writes: "Have profited greatly by your lecture and books."
Concerts, &c., address, Bolton Mansions Hotel, S.W.5, Kensington 816.

ALBERT GARCIA'S

VOCAL STUDIO.

59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.
PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices, so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone, from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"

has recently been edited and revised from the original edition by ALBERT GARCIA.

Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland Street, W.1. Price 6*s*.

"A work that should be of interest to all singers, young or old, is Albert Garcia's newly-published edition of his grandfather's 'Art of Singing.' There are many famous cases of inherited talents in the arts, but not many where the same branch of the profession has been followed by successive generations, and the case of the Garcias is probably unique."—Daily Telegraph.

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),

undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.

8, THE RIDGWAY, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.
St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.
"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."
HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA" Pocket Finger Trainer

(Registered No. 692810).

INCREASES STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH.

Editor Musical Times says: "Have no hesitation in recommending."

Improved Model, 2*s*. 6*d*. post free.

"SIMPLEXA," 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

THE PROPRIETOR of PATENT No. 175,078, which relates to Grand Pianos, desires to sell the Patent or to grant Licenses on reasonable terms, to ensure the full development and practical working in this country. Address, E. P. Alexander & Son, Chartered Patent Agents, 306, High Holborn, London, W.C.1.

COMPOSERS.—SONGS, LYRICS, and MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS WANTED for PUBLICATION. We set Lyrics to Music if desired. Send MSS. (music or lyrics) to The Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W 6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EVELYNE KING

(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.). CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Recitals, At Homes, &c.
Oratorio. BACH a speciality.
All Modern and Standard Works.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
WEST-END STUDIOS.
For Lessons or Vacant Dates, apply,
117, Hampstead Way, Golders Green, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

PERCY BILSBURY

TENOR.
Parepa-Rosa Gold Medallist, R.A.M.
CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, RECITALS.
For terms, vacant dates, and Press Notices,
94, St. Helen's Road, Leigh, Lancs

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

REGINALD BUSSELL

(BARITONE.) R.C.M. (Leipzig), LONDON.
Provincial and 2LO Concerts.
Concerts, Oratorios, &c.
15, Aberdeen Road, Clifton, Bristol.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

SEYMOUR HOLDEN

(BASSO).

Open for Oratorio, Concert, and Opera Engagements.

(Large and Varied Repertoire.)

"I have great pleasure in stating that I have found Mr. Seymour Holden a most attractive singer, who can be relied on to enhance the value of any programme. He has a truly magnificent voice of astounding compass, enabling him to sing in Oratorio with all the breadth of style and depth of tone necessary, and in Opera with verve and brilliancy. I recommend him most highly to my fellow Choral Conductors." HUGH MARLEYN.
Conductor, Langham Choral Society,
St. George's Hall, Langham Place, London, W.1.

"H. S. Holden as Mercury, &c."

"A dignified and convincing Mercury."
Morning Post, 1st June, 1925.

For vacant dates, address:—
"ASHLEIGH," 42, AUDLEY ROAD. HENDON, LONDON, N.W.4.
Phone: Langham 1070.

ARTHUR LEES

BASS.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
58, Marmion Road, Hove, Sussex.

EDMUND TELFER (BARITONE)

For vacant dates, and Experts' criticisms,
Apply, Ibbs & Tillett, 124, Wigmore Street, London, W.1.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

ARTHUR FILLINGHAM

A.R.C.M., ETC. Registered Teacher.
Coach for PIANO TEACHER'S EXAMS., by post. Numerous Successes.
Author of "Guide to A.R.C.M. Exams.," &c., &c.
CRESCENT, ROUNDHAY, LEEDS.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).

The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.
Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.
Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.
Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast), gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing.
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MR. HÄNDEL TAYLOR
Diplômé of Royal Conservatoire of Music, Brussels,
and Conservatoire of Music, Mons,
HAS SEVERAL VACANCIES FOR PUPILS IN VIOLONCELLO PLAYING.
Next Term commences September 4th.
Communications to:
WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

PERSONAL CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.
(See page 677.)

MADAME ALBA, Dramatic Soprano (Italian Bel Canto), receives pupils. Perfect breath control. Clear enunciation. Italian, French, English. Cramer's Studios, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and Mus. D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-25 ... 270 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-25 ... 72 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus.Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.
(Address as above.)

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. — Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple, London, E.C.).
Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Organ Examinations.
SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.
RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" (Published by Reid Bros.), 2s. 8d. post free.
298, Balham High Road, London, S.W.17.
Telephone: Battersea 916.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O. Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes; 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac., Dunelm., F.R.C.O.; CORRESPONDENCE COACH. Pupils' latest passes (A.R.C.M. and A.T.C.L. Exams.) all at first attempt. "Zelgart," Harborough Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D.Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1924—Both Mus. Doc. passes and 3 out of the 5 Final Mus.Bac. passes. Also 2 in 1st Mus.Bac., 2 Mus. Doc., and 5 Mus. Bac. Exercises, all in 1924, after prelim. course in composition. Over 160 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus.Bac. Cantab.; Mus.Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto; F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. 15, Sydenham Villas Road, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

ALFRED MORRIS, L.Mus.T.C.L., Specialises in Postal Tuition for all Diplomas, Associated Board Examinations, &c. Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, &c. Interesting Courses. Model Lessons. Moderate Terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

ARTHUR FAGGE, Conductor of the London Choral Society, is willing to meet Choral Socicty Conductors at his Studio in London, and advise them technically and otherwise as to the interpretation of any works they are producing, and the best and most prudent methods to adopt. Details as to orchestra and artists essential. Address, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

HENRY M. BYRON, MANAGING-DIRECTOR, CONCERTS AND RECITALS. Established 1890. Address: 75, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

273 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
169 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the JANUARY, 1926, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work, which is often the result of training on wrong lines. Now in this system of tuition pupils are trained to produce work which is above the standard required by the examiners.

Special attention given to the Pianoforte Accompaniment Test, as most organ students fail to utilize the distinctive idioms of pianoforte writing, and make their work look like an organ accompaniment.

F.R.C.O. pupils are trained to work on a definite plan in such tests as Episode and Middle Entries, Stretto, and Song Writing, so as to acquire speed, which is a most vital factor, especially in the afternoon when so many candidates come to grief.

A complete analysis of the Brahms Sextet was sent to all pupils in June, and this anticipated the question on the Rondo set by the examiners, and supplied a detailed answer with musical illustrations.

Hints on how to study the score selected for the January examination as well as a complete analysis (which will give answers to likely questions) will be sent to all pupils.

All the new tests will be covered in these lessons, and complete musical illustrations will be sent to each candidate showing exactly what the examiners require.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

PARISH CHURCH, HIGHGATE.
BOY-CHORISTER REQUIRED; must be experienced. £10 per annum. Also ASSISTANT-ORGANIST, in return for coaching. Free organ practice. Fine organ. To sing in choir (alto or tenor). Mr. G. Pincher, F.R.C.O., 4, Hornsey Lane Gardens, N.6.

ALTOS and TENORS REQUIRED for Sunday mornings. Apply Rector, St. Clement Danes, Strand, W.C.

ALTO REQUIRED. S.W. district. Good reader. £25. Apply, "Organic," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TWO TENORS. £15 to £18. Ordinary duties. Commencing first week October. West Acton Parish Church. Write, A. Henry, 36, Marquess Road, Canonbury, N.1.

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.

MINOR CANON WANTED, age not over 38, who would be qualified to teach in King's School (general Form subjects). Graduate; good voice. Total Stipend, £300, with £40 house allowance. Applications to be made to the Chapter Clerks, College Green, Gloucester.

BASS. — Capable SOLOIST, excellent Reader (emergency Alto), desires APPOINTMENT, London. Harris, 48, Manor View, Finchley, N.3.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Larkhall Parish Church. Salary £60. Applications, with three testimonials (copies), to be lodged not later than August 7, 1925, with John Paterson, Claremont, Montgomery Street, Larkhall, from whom conditions of appointment can be obtained.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Wesleyan Central Church, Eastbourne. Applications, stating salary required, to Rev. J. T. Watts, 33, Hartfield Road, Eastbourne.

ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER (Honorary) required for Congregational Church, Woodford District. Write, Secretary, 22, Oxford Road, Woodford Green.

ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Malpas Church, Cheshire. Salary, £50 a year. Modern organ, two manuals, pneumatic action. Applications, accompanied by references and testimonials, and stating qualifications, with special regard to ability to train a Choir, to be sent to the Rev. L. Armitstead, The Rectory, Malpas, Cheshire.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Above Bar Congregational Church, Southampton.—Apply, not later than August 14, stating qualifications and salary required, to E. J. Curtis, 114, Lodge Road, Southampton.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, St. Mary's, Great Ilford. Salary, £50 to £60. Applications, stating qualifications, experience, and references, to Vicar, St. Mary's Vicarage, South Park Road, Ilford.

ST. STEPHEN'S, Battersea Bridge Road, S.W. Assistant-Organist (voluntary) required. Free organ practice. Apply, Organist, at above.

ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER (experienced) desires re-appointment as Organist or Organist-Choirmaster. Open to deputise. "H.," Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER requires POST. Thirty years' experience. Riding expenses in return. F. Gardner, 47, Browns Road, Hoe Street, Walthamstow.

EXPERIENCED ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER desires POST in London. Good testimonials. "Noctus," 43, Devonshire Road, Ealing, W.

WANTED.—Experienced Piano and Player-Piano Salesman for outdoor retail representation of well-established house. Apply, with full particulars of experience, &c., to "A. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FINANCIAL and TEACHING INTEREST WANTED in Musical College. Successful teacher and organizer. Apply, "E. E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LATE MUSIC CRITIC of the Standard, wishes post as Organist and Choirmaster, Country, about twenty miles London. Plainsong preferred, but good type congregational music not objected to. Good voice-trainer. "W. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

YOUNG LADY seeks position as Teacher of Pianoforte and Theory in Academy or High School. Fully qualified, certified and Diploma. Miss Duncombe, A.L.C.M., 299A, Lea Bridge Road, Leyton, E.10.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

PIPE ORGANS ENLARGED, RE-VOICED, REPAIRED and TUNED. Attractive Terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Established 1896.

FOR SALE.—Hydraulic Blowing Set, Engine, Feeders, and 25 yards of Lead piping. Suitable for small two-manual. Practically new. Can be seen in working order any time before August 15. Accept £30, or nearest offer. A. G. Vallis, 5, Alexandra Road, Headington, near Oxford.

ORGAN PEDAL ATTACHMENT (pneumatic), by Norman & Beard, Oak Bench. R.C.O. scale. Excellent condition. 10 Guineas. "A.R.C.O.," 190, Worple Road, Wimbledon.

WANTED.—PIANO PEDAL ATTACHMENT and Stool. Full particulars to G. G. Titcomb, 9, South Street, Godalming, Surrey.

FOR SALE.—Norman & Beard PIANO PEDALS, Radiating. Concave; and Stool. £7. Mitchelhill, 10, Cranbourne Road, N.10.

MALKIN ORGAN PEDALS, with STOOL, FOR SALE. Good condition. What offers? Glenview, Twizell Road, Beamish, Co. Durham.

WANTED.—A Set of Concave and Radiating PEDALS with pianoforte attachment. Write, stating condition, make, and price, to J. W. A. Clarke, 4, Royal Terrace, Southend-on-Sea.

ORGAN PEDALS (Pneumatic), by Hayter. R.C.O. Scale. No stool. £5. 4, Chichester Street, S.W.1 (Victoria).

FOR SALE.—VIOLIN. Old English, Betts (1801). Perfect Condition. Splendid Tone. Seen by appointment. J. A. Chambers, 45, Philbeach Gardens, S.W.5.

FOR SALE. — Four-String DOUBLE-BASS. Guaranteed 80-years' old French Model; excellent condition. Exchange Chamber-Bass entertained. Alder, 11A, Sackville Road, Hove.

ORGAN MUSIC, ETC. Bach, Hollins, Dubois, Grieg, &c. 168, Ivydale Road, Peckham.

FOR SALE. Musical Times, dating from 1869 to 1924 complete (unbound). What offers? Ogle, Canon House, Melksham, Wilts.

Original 2-Act Light Opera Libretto FOR DISPOSAL. 7 principal, 10 minor Characters. Full Chorus. Miss Bilton, 11, Belsize Grove, Hampstead, N.W.3.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new Songs, "THE GONDOLIER" (Oakley). Compass C to C. "BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER" (Oakley). Compass B♭ to E♭. Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SINGING.—A long-felt want. Very many lessons Saved by Special New Paper. Students taught how to obtain the full Singing Voice. Enclose P.O. 5s. to "Singing," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC BY MAIL.

EVERYTHING IN MUSIC.—Vocal, Instrumental, Educational, British and Foreign. Largest Stock in London. Murdochs, 23, Princes Street, Oxford Circus; and 463, Oxford Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COPYING, TRANSPOSITION and DUPLICATING. Neat, accurate, moderate. "A. K. B." (London), c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LIBRETTO WANTED for either Light Opera or Musical Comedy. Cooper, 18, Bankhouse Road, Nelson, Lancs.

MUSIC BINDING.

Music is costly. Protect it with durable bindings, in which we specialise.

TRIAL OFFER. Music, not exceeding 13-in. by 10-in. and of not more than 180 pages, strongly bound in linen covers, with title in gold on back, for 5s. 9d., including return postage. Slight extra charge if leaves need mending.

Every description of Music bound. Cost notified on receipt.

A. MALTBY & SON.

30, ST. MICHAEL'S STREET, OXFORD.

NOW READY. No. 17, JULY, 1925.

The First Number of the Fifth Volume.

"THE ORGAN"

"A QUARTERLY MAGAZINE WORTHY OF THE INSTRUMENT."

EIGHT PLATES.

ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE. General View and Console (2 plates).
KING GEORGE'S HALL, BLACKBURN. General View (1 plate).
ERECTING THE ORGAN IN LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL. Drawing by R. Schwabe (1 plate).
THE ITALIAN CHURCH, HATTON GARDEN. Console (1 plate).
A TYPICAL CASAVANT CONSOLE. (1 plate.)
THE CASAVANT FRÈRES OF ST. HYACINTHE. (1 plate.)
THE GIBBONS MEMORIAL AT CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. (1 plate.)

LITERARY CONTENTS.

64 quarto pages of literary matter, well printed on antique paper.

THE ORGANS OF ST. MAGNUS, LONDON BRIDGE. The Rev. Andrew Freeman, Mus. B., F.R.C.O. (Stonehouse, Glos.).
THE REMODELLING OF OLD ORGANS. D. E. L. Salwey (Lymington).
THE FRENCH ORGAN. R. Meyrick-Roberts (London).
THE ORGAN IN KING GEORGE'S HALL, LIVERPOOL. W. A. Roberts.
ORGAN REGISTRATION. A. Eaglefield Hull, Mus. D. (Huddersfield).
INTERESTING LONDON ORGANS: ITALIAN CHURCH, HATTON GARDEN. Gilbert Benham (Barnet).
AMERICA VISITED. Henry Willis (London).
REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR, Etc.

Copies may be purchased for 2*s.* each (post free, 2*s.* 2*d.*) at the office of Musical Opinion, 13, Chichester Rents, by the Old Gateway in Chancery Lane, London, W.C.2.
The Subscription is 8*s.* 6*d.* yearly, for Home or Overseas.

'DISCUS' ORGAN BLOWERS

(REGD.)

Over 1000 have been installed in Cathedrals, Churches, and Public Buildings, both at Home and Abroad.

Some of the "Discus" Installations are at WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL, QUEEN'S HALL, ROYAL ALBERT HALL, CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER, ETON, HARROW, BOMBAY, SHANGHAI, JOHANNESBURG, ETC., ETC.

"DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWING MEANS—

EFFICIENCY.
RELIABILITY.
ECONOMY.

ELECTRICITY, GAS, OR OIL SUPPLIES THE MOTIVE POWER.

Write for Illustrated Booklet.

WATKINS & WATSON,

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors ... ... H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ... Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A ... ... J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont" ... ... Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp" ... ... F. A. G. Ouseley
March ... ... Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser" ... ... Wagner
Marching off to Bed ... ... Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute" Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore" ... ... Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s*., by Post, 5*s*. 4½*d*.

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s*. 6*d*. each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

BY W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.
Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.
Publishers:
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

YORK ANTHEM SERIES, ETC.

No.
487.	MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS,			B minor	...T. T. Noble	6d.
822.	Do.	do.	do.	B flat	... T. T. Noble	6d.
836.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	... Alec Rowley	5d.
865.	Do.	do.	do.	D minor	... J. S. Horne	5d.
866.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	Henry Gibson	5d.
880.	Do.	do.	do.	D ...	Edwin J. Crow	6d.

Write complete List.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS,
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

THE SUPERB
BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at 126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.
Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.
Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.
Call or write for Catalogue.
The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

PIANOS
BECHSTEIN, BORD,
SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS
NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE.
Pianos taken in exchange.
Apply for lists:
CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
Phone: MUSEUM 439.

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOK, No. 271.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH

DESCANTS

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

AND OTHERS.

CONTENTS.

THE BAY OF BISCAY
A-HUNTING WE WILL GO
JOHN PEEL
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT
SCOTS WHA HAE
THE OAK AND THE ASH
EARLY ONE MORNING
O, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE THE BRITISH GRENADIERS
THE ASH GROVE
GOOD KING WENCESLAS
THE FIRST NOWELL

Price, Eightpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

Price, Paper Boards, Six Shillings each Series.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHORALES

HARMONIZED BY

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED IN MELODIC ORDER

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON

This Collection of Chorales harmonized by Bach contains, it is believed, all those that he arranged for voices. It includes also an Index by means of which any Chorale can easily be found if the first few notes of the melody are known.

Price ... ... Cloth, Ten Shillings and Sixpence

SOME PRESS OPINIONS

DAILY TELEGRAPH

"The task of making this noble collection has been undertaken by Mr. H. Elliot Button, who has made the volume particularly useful to organists and choirmasters by arranging the chorales in melodic order and providing an ingenious Melodic Index by means of which a particular Chorale may be found in a moment. Organists, indeed, may find themselves in clover by exploring the latest publications of this house."

BIRMINGHAM POST

"The compiler of this volume is H. Elliot Button, who has made an ingenious musical index based on the first note of each melody. The system also allows of all the harmonizations of a melody being kept together, and the student of Bach will find this an extremely interesting volume."

DAILY MAIL

"Mr. H. Elliot Button is a hard and conscientious worker on behalf of music. His research work is invaluable, and his latest work of compilation has resulted in the collection of 'Chorales Harmonized by Johann Sebastian Bach' which appears to be the first complete and comprehensive edition in one volume . . . . The Melodic Index which Mr. Button has introduced, in addition to the usual indices, shows remarkable ingenuity. By recourse to this unique invention no difficulty is experienced in immediately satisfying one's requirements . . . . There is evidence of great painstaking labour in this work, and apart from its value as a work of reference, the collection is redolent of melodic and harmonic wealth which will be found useful by pianists and organists for many and varied purposes."

YORKSHIRE POST

"The chorales are most clearly printed on good paper, and the book is one that will commend itself to all church organists."

ABERDEEN PRESS AND JOURNAL

"A complete and reliable collection of chorales harmonized by Bach has long been needed. It now appears in a handsome edition published by Novello. No longer need the student laboriously plough through the oratorios, the cantatas, and the motets in search of the various harmonizations of this or that chorale. He will find them all in Mr. Button's book, together with those chorales used by Bach in works no longer extant, but which have been accepted as authentic upon the evidence of Bach's greatest son . . . . The present volume is invaluable; to the student a real boon, and a source of endless pleasure.

SUNDAY MERCURY

Messrs. Novello have given to the world a wonderful book. J. S. Bach was, is, and ever will remain the most wonderful of all the great masters. The book is collected and arranged in melodic order by H. Elliot Button, who has indeed done the work with competence and amazing thoroughness."

YORKSHIRE HERALD

"The collection is admirably arranged; a chronological index of titles, an ingenious melodic index, invented by the author, combined with excellent type and binding make it a handsome volume."

TABLET

"Mr. Elliot Button has become our benefactor in giving us a fine folio edition of the Bach chorales on a very convenient plan. The melodic index is so contrived that even when you have completely forgotten the words of a particular chorale it is soon hunted down. This well-printed volume is handsomely bound in cloth gilt."

CHURCH TIMES

"The Bach lover will be delighted to add this fine compilation to his music library."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.
Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus.D., F.S.A.
Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins September 21st.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

The Clergy Voice-Training Class meets on Mondays, and is conducted by DR. GEORGE OLDROYD.

A special Class for Scoring for Brass and Military Bands, and the Theatre Orchestra, is conducted by Mr. HENRY GEEHL.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

A new feature of the Elkin Catalogue.

MESSRS. ELKIN & CO., LTD., have pleasure in announcing

THE ELKIN CHORAL SERIES,

A NEW SERIES OF PART-SONGS AND UNISON SONGS,

UNDER THE GENERAL EDITORSHIP OF

DR. JOHN BORLAND.

The first issues include:

PART-SONGS for Female Voices, Male Voices, and Mixed Voices by MACDOWELL, CYRIL SCOTT, EDGAR BAINTON, and CHARLES WATERS.

UNISON SONGS by
GRANVILLE BANTOCK, ERNEST AUSTIN, ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH, and CHARLES WATERS.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval to Teachers, Conductors, Festival Committees, &c.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

NEW EDITION.—JUST PUBLISHED.

CHURCH CHOIRS AND HOW TO TEACH THEM

With full explanations for breathing, voice production, and the correct rendering of the chants, hymn tunes, and other parts of the choral services of the church, together with hints for training mixed choirs, and useful exercises for the cultivation of the voice, and for the training of choirs in general.

BY ARTHUR W. MARCHANT,
Mus. D. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE NET.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING
MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY
MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s.*; Music only, 3*s.*

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

AUGUST 1 1925

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 751.)

GRESHAM ESSAYS

BY WALFORD DAVIES

(Gresham Lecturer in Music)

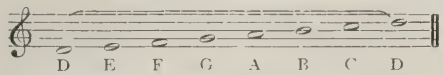
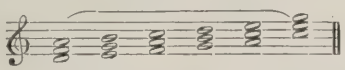
II.—SEVEN NOTES AND SIX CHORDS

DIATONICS

The seven notes here referred to are our familiar friends the related diatonic family found within any octave of white notes on a keyboard:



The six chords are the only six common chords that can be made from them:



These are also the notes and chords that can be written on any stave in any clef without use of accidentals.

The mere facts that they are found on the white notes of any keyboard and are the natural notes and natural common chords on a stave do not of course make them the intensely interesting and important things they are. But it seems likely that the same inherent reasons which give them their historic position and natural rights on keyboard and stave, also give them their natural and ever renewable claim on our attention. If Vaughan Williams or Holst write such passages as:

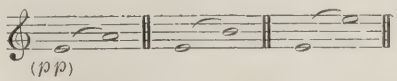
or con amore in the 20th century, they are certainly not following old custom or saving trouble on the keyboard, or saving ink on the stave; nor are they saying in effect: 'Here is the natural scale, let us use it as we find it'; nor are they necessarily writing in inverted commas, quoting a musical glory of the past. This family of notes reappears in each generation in its own right. It is sure to be written and re-written, heard and re-heard, for love. Whenever and wherever it is written or heard, its appeal to the mind of man is vital, direct, and seems to stand in the necessary line of thought which leads to the chromatic scale and to a grasp and enjoyment of all its inherent glories: for the appreciative musical mind is like a bird of passage. It enjoys long flights across musical ages; and while never disdaining earlier simplicities, it is never daunted by the complexities which sooner or later will follow naturally upon them.

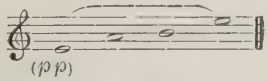
DIATONIC ORIGINS

Here is a homely Euclidean proposition for any music-lover:

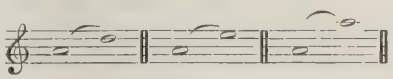
Take any note E*  (and sound it softly for just so long as is needed to concentrate upon and mentally contain it). From this note measure in succession the three perfect intervals:



Sound the notes so obtained in scale order:

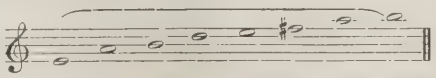


From the two newly-derived notes (A and B) again measure in succession the so-called perfect intervals†:

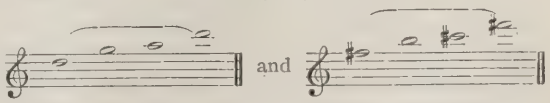


and

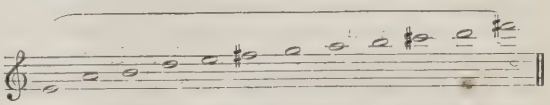
Again sound the resultant notes in scale order:



Then once more from the two newly-derived notes (in this case D and F♯) let the perfect intervals be measured:



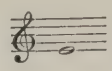
and once more let the resultant notes be set down in scale order:



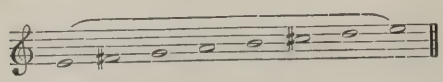
* The notes in this proposition should all be played and not merely read: for in a musical proposition we do not, as in Euclid, simply think about and describe relationships: we have to taste them. We have to bring them into being in the world of sound, and experience them. The ear, hearing a perfect fifth, actually tastes a ratio.

† It will be noticed that the so-called three perfect intervals happen to be the result of relating two notes to each other, whose vibration-numbers stand to one another respectively in the three simple ratios of 1 : 2, 2 : 3, 3 : 4.

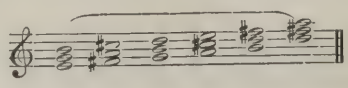
Now bring all the notes so obtained into close position, starting from the original note:



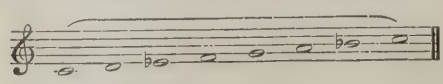
and the result will be the Dorian mode:



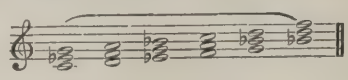
The common chords that are available within this family of seven notes are of course these six:



In the same way if the note C be taken as starting-point the results will be the following scale:



and the following chords:



Let the natural seven notes and six chords quoted at the head of this essay be played again, softly and slowly, and dwelt upon; then let the series of notes and chords just derived from E and C again be played, and in like manner softly and slowly dwelt upon in their closest position, and the hearer will probably become aware that the mental experiences he derives from the historic Dorian mode and from the six common chords to be found within it are identical (except as regards actual pitch or mere vibration-rapidity) with those he derives from the scale he has himself traced by pursuing the perfect intervals from any given starting-note.

This coincidence needs thought. Clearly it does not mean that the writers of old Dorian tunes—still less the wayward singers of tunes not even meant to be Dorian who unconsciously make them Dorian (as is done in Wales)—deliberately set themselves to build a scale on perfect intervals. It does not even mean that there was such a scale at all when the tunes that are in that scale were first sung and written. (Seven children may have a delightful game in their playground before ever they are made to stand on parade in scale order. So may seven related notes.) But it may well mean that the unconscious love of, and reliance upon, the simple perfections (fourth, fifth, and octave) and the careful safeguarding of inspired melody against the ugliness of the interval which in actual pitch of the voice nestles between the perfect fourth and fifth—once called diabolus in musica—are two ever-recurrent and significant factors in the musical mind, of which most careful stock should be taken by all students.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN TWO APPEALS

And here it seems well for the moment to digress in order to note the difference between what may be understood as music of the mind and music of the body. There is no need to be dogmatic about or to labour this distinction, but its recognition and acknowledgment from time to time are, I believe, needed. Put briefly, it may be generally seen and conceded that as sound when heard always communicates energy of some kind, however slight, so music is necessarily always energizing in its effect, whether in the rough or not. The mere sound of it involves, when heard, physical stimulus of some degree, whether slight or overwhelming. So it comes about that there is a whole department of musical enjoyment (or the reverse) which is rightly to be described as sensational. And even when the experience of listening becomes far more than sensational, it does not mean that it ceases to be sensational, at least to those of us who are still in the flesh; it simply becomes sensational plus something else more thrilling. And, further, it is obviously possible for music to become this something more, and to make an appeal that is welcome to our minds while it is at the same moment positively unwelcome (raucous, out of tune, or in some other way unpleasing) to the senses.

It may therefore perhaps be stated, as a matter deserving common recognition among musicians, that while music may stimulate the body without appealing to the mind, it cannot, when heard, reach the mind without stimulating the body; and, secondly, that while it can please the ear and yet leave the mind indolent, or (conversely) refresh the mind and yet afflict the ear, it can under ideal conditions both refresh the ear and illumine the mind at one and the same time. This distinction is set down here because it seems necessary to realise vividly that the mere sense-impression of the perfect fourth or fifth in given conditions may to the unthinking listener sound almost identical with that of the augmented fourth if sung in the same tones, whereas, the mental appeal is permanently and profoundly different. It is even more necessary to remember that should the augmented fourth be sung softly and sweetly and the perfect fourth loudly and roughly, the sense-impression might actually controvert the mental appeal for the moment; for the listening ear could find comparative rest in the soft sweetness of the discord, while the listening mind would always find its accustomed rest in the concord, however blatantly sounded. To the thinking listener—as to Bach himself—the diabolus in musica means its own meaning, however seductively sounded—and so does a perfect interval, however roughly or unpleasantly sounded. Therefore it is desirable to study intervals and chords rather in the old clavichord way; sounding them all, concords and discords alike, in equable quietude, we are most likely to apprehend their meanings. I may perhaps venture to add here the personal belief (so far borne out by experience) that music delights most when it offers a flawless presentment to the ear of the finest thoughts of an illumined mind. Flawlessness induces wonderment akin to worship. The matter may be put in three words, for a complete musical transaction in this world seems to be one that quickens in the hearer at once energy, wonderment, and thought. When these three are responsively one, there is a thrill of mastery which we know well when it is attained, and which we cannot experience too often.

COMBINED SYNTHETIC AND ANALYTIC INTERESTS

The joys of hearing melody and of hearing chords are distinguishable. When successive notes actually heard separately by the ear are made one by the mind, we have a synthetic joy called melody. In every department of life there are melodists. Poets, essayists, and orators are melodists. The man who takes several characters and relates them in a good short story is essentially a melodist, and gives his readers the joy of a good synthesis. On the other hand, when three combined notes sounded as one, heard as one, are received by the mind as one and yet instantly discerned as three, we have an analytic joy known to the discerner of chords. Every rich note is really a chord, in that it is the sounding of many tones in one. But it is heard synthetically as a note, not analytically as three notes. The joys of the chord-lover are distinctive. He hears many notes instanter, and tastes them as many though one. He can tell you what they are and where their component notes should lead the mind. He observes without disturbance their implied goals. He is a two-fold thinker, revelling in analysis and synthesis at one and the same time. So is the contrapuntist. No doubt combinations of these two kinds of joyous exercise of the mind are to be found in other mental pursuits. But in music they are combined to an exhilarating, possibly a quite unique, degree.

FROM MELODIC INTERVAL TO SCALE

A melodic interval  is not necessarily discerned by those who hear it; but the moment the mind detects beauty in the relationship of the two notes, the interval is more than merely heard. It is received by the mind as one, as a sensible phrase, and melody has begun. From one simple melodic interval enjoyed, it is a natural step to the enjoyment of many; and, as has been shown earlier, a scale of related tones at last emerges, connoting many relationships and interrelationships of intervals. It is noteworthy that the old pentatonic scale has in our recent stages of development become a very useful and, as will ultimately prove, a very popular chord. That is, the melodic relationships are so clearly known, so easy to hear and grasp, that they can be enjoyed under favourable conditions instantly—as a chord.

FROM HARMONIC INTERVAL TO CHORD

A harmonic interval is in like manner not necessarily discerned by the ear that hears it; but the moment it is mentally detected as a two-in-one experience it is more than heard: it is received and enjoyed by the mind as a two-note chord, and harmonic appreciation has been made possible. Here in like manner from one simple chord enjoyed it is a natural thing to go on to seek many. The evolution of chords and their ultimate use in lovely sequence by musicians, just as poets use words for purposes of high thought, cannot even be touched upon here. Chords must be the subject of later essays; but meanwhile the triad has proved its claim upon the mind so clearly, and is so universally admired and used, that it may perhaps be conceded its place in this essay for the moment without any further justification.

DIATONIC POSSIBILITIES

To return now to our seven notes and six chords, it is desirable to indicate their amazing possibilities. One recalls Sir Charles Stanford's playful Irish quip (fired off twenty years ago and now coming remarkably true) that 'Mozart is a composer with a great future behind him.' The white notes and their three minor and three major triads have certainly the mightiest of futures behind them and a terrific past before them. They are timeless and their beauties inexhaustible. There is clearly nothing in a simple ratio that can perish; and the ear that tastes the perfect fourth or fifth makes a simple, joyous, but fleeting register to the mind of a very simple, joyous thing that is not fleeting.

Should the reader need reasoned proof of the inexhaustible store before him, let him consider. Every note of every given group of seven has obviously its own individual relationship with the remaining six. Hence there are forty-two possible simple relationships of note to note within the diatonic scale; or even if we imagine the relationship of  as the same as that of  (that is: if we exclude inversions), there are still twenty-one. Now any two notes of these seven, viewed as inseparable companions, have obviously five friendly relationships to the five remaining notes of the group. This will give us 105 interesting relationships between any three notes of the seven (i.e., two with one). Similarly there may be found 420 relationships of any four notes of the seven, three with one; 1,260 of any five notes together, four with one; 2,520 of any six, five with one; and 2,520 more of all seven notes, any six with the remaining one. This leaves out of count the numberless varieties of threes related to two and two, or ones with three and three, &c., &c. It might surely waste an artist's days for him to tabulate his vast possibilities ; but he can never waste his time by exploring and using any one of the myriad beauties he thus finds at his disposal.

And what is true of the vast possibilities of melodic loveliness among seven notes that 'live together in unity' is equally true of the harmonic lovelinesses yet to be explored among the six companion chords found in the seven notes of the mode. The actual corresponding figures of first possibilities are rather less (viz.: 15 + 60 + 180 + 360 + 360), but when we move forward to chords of the sixth and all inversions, the riches are bewildering. Many melodic and harmonic relationships of these familiar notes and chords still await discovery.

SUMMARY

The aims of this preparatory essay have been chiefly to commend a completer mastery of the white notes; to encourage the diatonic music-lover to believe he is truly on the line of infinite possibilities of advance ; to press the claims for clear thought in music ; to distinguish between the sensational appeal of music which may be an obstacle to the mind, and the mental appeal, which never can be an obstacle to the ear ; to indicate the vast possibilities of white-note music ; and, in general, to suggest that the mind bent upon mastering new harmonic territory will do well to study diatonic origins—for it is clear that the man who hears most in the courageous complexities of to-morrow's music is he who has the very highest values for the equally courageous simplicities of yesterday. Such a man brings a touch of 'glad, confident morning' into all to-day's musical enthusiasms.

OBJECTIVITY IN CONTEMPORARY CRITICISM

By Edwin Evans

Is objective criticism possible? Is it possible to envisage a work of art in complete detachment from all considerations arising from its, and from the critic's, period, environment, and personal idiosyncrasies? Mr. Ernest Newman has attempted to prove not only that it is, but that critics of the past with whom he has much in common have done so, leaving us to imply that his affinity with them extends even to this. I maintain that were the feat possible, it would be inhuman, and therefore of no value. It might be godlike, but the only godlike attribute I have hitherto discovered in my brilliant confrère is that of being on the side of the big battalions. Much more likely is it that such a judgment would be soulless, and therefore ignore completely the things which are of the soul. I do Mr. Newman the justice of admitting that he is far more likely to err in the opposite direction, and to allow them to deflect his attention from the objective consideration of sonorous effects. I insist again, the feat is impossible. Even the most enduring masterpiece of human achievement is but one term of an equation, of which the other term is variable. Every masterpiece is differently apprehended by each successive generation, by each heterogeneous community, by each cultural stratum, and to a certain extent by each individual temperament. The man who could weigh in his mind, consciously or subconsciously, all that is vital in a work generating this infinity of reactions would cease to be a man. He must be either god or devil. After reading Mr. Newman's book I incline to the latter hypothesis. It has a charming, disarming, even dazzling speciousness which is clearly meant for man's undoing; but whom does it benefit? Only the dead branches of the musical tree. All the musty dry-as-dusts will find here chapter and verse which they can quote, with the authority of the most brilliant critic in the country, in support of things which, if he has any conscience at all, should make him squirm in agony. I wonder if he realises that the only effect of his book—apart from the pleasure one takes in watching an agile performance—will be to comfort the diehards behind him. Those whom he confronts can give themselves that pleasure with equanimity. Like another famous conservative leader, he has marched his arguments up the hill and marched them down again. That the hill has happened to be a Swiss mountain is immaterial, since each argument carried its refutation in its knapsack.

The major thesis is that the contemporary judgment of new music has been generally right, and that the stories of great music having been misjudged are mere legends. It is of course unfortunate that his first witness, poor old Lobe, in whom he says 'I seem to recognise a kindred spirit,' should gradually become less and less sound as he approaches his own immediate contemporaries, but Newman's forensic ability makes light of such trifles. He even tilts at Shaw for perpetuating the legend concerning Wagner. But here we reach the sphere of living memory. Shaw was speaking of what he knew, probably from personal experience. He is quite able to take care of himself, and will, if he thinks it worth while, produce his evidence. Then, still exercising his forensic ability, Newman will impugn the status and character of opposing counsel's witnesses, and we shall be just where we were, except for one little detail which happens to dominate the whole argument. It will then become a question of credentials, and an intelligent judge, assuming the innocence which is traditional on the bench, will ask, What is contemporary criticism?

It is quite easy, when some kind friend has carelessly left a library on a mountain top, to find a number of distinguished writers who took a fairly correct measure of Beethoven, or of Wagner, or of some other great revolutionary. But it is necessary to take into consideration, first of all, their general attitude towards music, but more especially the time and circumstances when they placed their appreciation on record. Contemporary criticism of a new work which for the time being is regarded as revolutionary, is criticism written at the time when it is so regarded. In quoting a critic of known conservative tendencies in favour of a work which at first offended conservative susceptibilities, the two important facts are the date of first performance or of publication, and the date of the criticism. Was it penned when the great conservative majority, disturbed from its habitual sluggishness, was consigning the new heretic to the stake, or was it penned a few years later, when there had been some uncomfortable self-questioning in the ranks? Was the critic one of those who either ignored the first appearance of the new work or treated it with contumely, then, a few years later discovered that, like the curate's egg, it was good in parts, and again a few years later, admitted its importance? If so his evidence, though that of a kindred spirit, does not give Newman's argument so much support as he appears to believe. In his book there is a passage admitting the importance of Stravinsky's 'Le Sacre du Printemps,'* and, what is more strange, 'L'Histoire du Soldat,' a portion of which was performed at that historical concert which Ansermet gave some years ago at Wigmore Hall. Generations hence, will the future kindred spirit quote this passage in support of his contention that these works were duly and correctly appreciated, or will he quote that elegant simile which pictured Stravinsky as a chicken with its throat cut, but able to run a few yards before expiring? Both quotations would be authentic. Their value would rest entirely upon their respective dates. In another portion of the book he writes, 'We will not allow the critic to go one way to-day and another to-morrow,' and refers to 'the critic for whom a certain work is a masterpiece on the 3rd of January, and commonplace by the middle of April,' but apparently his comment does not apply to the critic who reverses this order. It is all a question of point of view. To recapitulate the faults of 'Le Sacre' is quite irrelevant. The highest claim ever made on behalf of that work was that it stood to its own period as the B minor Mass, or the Ninth Symphony, stood to theirs. It was not made by me, and it is not my present purpose to defend it, but if there are faults in 'Le Sacre,' are there none in the Ninth? Their bearing on either instance is of minor consequence. Newman now places the former in a position corresponding to that of Monteverde's 'Orfeo,' which is sufficient for the day. His judgment has passed through corresponding stages concerning many works of the recent past. He has sometimes gone the length of reversing his original verdict, for which, I hasten to add, he has my highest respect. I do not quarrel with him for obeying at least half the injunction of St. Remi to the heathen Clovis, and worshipping where he has previously burnt, but I would really like to know which of the two attitudes represents the infallible objective judgment which is the central theme of his book. I know which is 'contemporary.' It is not necessary, for us to agree, that he should obey the other half of that injunction, and burn where he has previously worshipped, since we share most of our gods, and the only real difference is that my Olympus is a little more thickly populated, and the average age of its inhabitants a little less. In short, it is a little more contemporary.

I think it was Van Gogh who once declared that in art there are plagiarists and there are revolutionaries, and there are no others. It is a somewhat objectionable way of stating in its extreme form a truth which probably every one would swallow with ease if it were presented in a sugar coating. But not every one would be prepared to draw the line so far to the left. Nor is it necessary to do so. Van Gogh was not a critic. Had he been one, he would have commenced by ignoring completely the plagiarists, that vast army of creative artists who do not create—and then divided the small residue. Thus he would have found himself with great artists on either side of his dividing line, but possibly that is the very result that his overstatement was calculated to avoid. There are in fact two divergent types of creative artists in general and of composers in particular. As Newman, at the end of his 'Holiday,' has some characteristic things to say upon the one of these two types to which he is less sympathetic, perhaps I may be permitted to quote from an article on 'Composers and Inventors' which I contributed to The Academy of August 14, 1909, that is to say, on the very threshold of the divergence in musical opinion which has furnished Mr. Newman with the incentive to his 'Alpine Symphony':

> Composition consists in putting together musical material with a due regard to balance, proportion, appositeness, and form, and uttering the whole in a manner free from the sins of illiteracy. Musical invention, on the other hand, is the art of making new material, and of finding new idioms and new devices for its expression. Not all composers are inventors, and not all musical inventors are in the strictest sense composers. Generally the two elements are combined, but German Kapellmeisters and English organists have furnished innumerable examples of the composer who does not invent, and the talented young man in a hurry often invites us to listen to invention which is far from being composition. Assuming a certain measure of musical impulse, the more this energy is absorbed by invention the less will be available for composition, and vice versâ. The process of invention itself is much more exhaustive of brain energy than that of composition, and when a musician has invented a new idiom, he is tempted to perfect it at the cost of further demands on his reserve of nervous force. The composer who succeeds him inherits the idiom, and, being saved that much expenditure of energy, is often able to use it to far greater advantage than its actual inventor. That is why the names of the innovators who extend the limits of musical expression often sink into oblivion more rapidly than those of men who devote all their energy to the composition of the material at hand by means of existing devices. . . . The question which of the two types of creative musicians has the greater importance in musical history is one which only posterity can decide, and then it will rest not with the musical public, or the professional musician, but with the patient investigator of the past.

* It is only fair to state that Mr. Newman was not in London when 'Le Sacre' was first performed there in 1913, though, had he been curious, the music was available in print. The Musical News and Herald of June 11, 1921, contains a reprint of our leading critics' 'contemporary' judgment of that work, to which the reader may refer if he shares Mr. Newman's view that the stories of opposition to new ideas in music are legendary.

Now the occasion of all this pother is that just as composers with all their diversity conform to two basic types, so do critics. One type clings tenaciously to what is, and therefore dedicates himself to the past, or, at most, to such composers of more recent date in whom the inventive element is not paramount. The other is curious as to what may be, and on the alert for all that offers a hope, however faint, of growth and development. One regards new manifestations as a nuisance; the other will travel many miles to hear them, even though his professional duties may not involve the obligation. Mr. Newman, who wrote a self-revealing article to explain why he would not go to Salzburg, and who devotes so much of his valuable time to the supererogatory task of giving enthusiastic support to the Pyramids, appears to dislike the current division into conservatives and progressives. Above all, he detests the word 'reactionary.' But instead of offering us alternative slogans, such as 'safety first' and 'go ahead,' he gives us nothing better than 'objective criticism,' which, as his book shows, is merely another way of saying 'orthodoxy is my 'doxy.' Like his kindred spirit, Lobe, he has admirable theories to substantiate it, but, as with Lobe, they compare ill with his practice.

Every composer with strong claims to originality was at first appreciated by a minority, which has very rarely included any of these 'objective' critics. According to the latter, these minorities are 'cliques' or 'coteries' until the central figure wins their recognition, when, if they are remembered at all, they are dignified as circles. For instance, there was a Hugo Wolf circle, but when a few critics made the discovery that there was other music in the world besides that derived from the German tradition, they were the Russo-Franco-Italo, &c., coterie, which had gained a few English adherents. A coterie may thus embrace a very big slice of the musical world, but it does not become a circle until it is included in the objective 'doxy. There is nothing new in this. Lobe, who disapproved of Schumann, attributes his growing repute to the activities of the coterie surrounding him. Substitute Stravinsky, and there you are. Blessed kindred spirit!

These minorities tend to grow and sometimes to coalesce in accordance with circumstances which extend beyond the province of criticism. Even if they dwindle and finally disappear it is not ultimately significant, because they, or their central figure, may yet have contributed to the commonwealth of music. Music is more obsessed than any of the other arts with the shibboleth of immortality. The painter makes pictures for the houses of his patrons, the dramatist plays for the people of his day, the author novels for contemporary readers. Their critics do not apply the test of immortality. They do not take upon themselves to prescribe for their descendants. They are perfectly free to refer to, let us say, Noel Coward's latest comedy as brilliant, and nobody bothers to consider whether it will still be correctly described as brilliant when the environment which produced it has passed away. There is much music which is in every sense vital at the time of its appearance, as an expression of its times, or as a phase of musical development, or as a stepping-stone to new prospects, and which may quite legitimately become obsolete within a greater or smaller period. Personally, I doubt very much whether any enduring work of art means the same to one generation as it has meant to another, and admitting this possibility it is only one step further to admit that it may lose its meaning altogether. The essential point is, what did it mean at the time of its inception, and that is the province of contemporary criticism. I have myself frequently expressed the opinion that much of the work of Debussy would pass into oblivion, and that even those compositions which survived for a time had small chance of becoming immortal in the loose sense in which critics habitually employ that word. But I cannot see that this in any way lessens Debussy's greatness or importance from the point of view of the critical historian of music. The art could never again be as if Debussy had not existed. Is that not sufficient title to fame?

But, just as a work of art may convey a different meaning to different generations, can it not also affect differently communities of different antecedents? Here we have a contemporary illustration. Brahms, who means so much to the Germanic world and its periphery, fails to excite much response either in that great world whose culture is rooted in Latin soil, or in the new world of the Slavs. 'Objective criticism' is so self-satisfied that it is prepared to dismiss the opinion of half the world as incompetent. Paris rejects Elgar, and is put under the ban as a city of musical barbarians. I need scarcely add that I am not upholding the Parisian point of view. My argument is simply that when among people of high intelligence there can be such divergences as these, it is useless to urge that the soundest contemporary opinion has always been, in the main, right. It is only another way of saying that those who agree with you are right and those who do not are wrong.

Mr. Newman has occasionally shown signs of irritation at a fancied suggestion that, just as the Parisians apparently do not 'understand' Elgar, there may be certain contemporary composers whom he in turn does not 'understand.' On such occasions he sometimes prefaces his subsequent criticism with an elaborate statement of his critical impartiality, which of course convinces only those who share his own views. This really arises from a misuse of the word 'understand.' Nobody who knows Newman's work would for a moment deny him the fullest possible measure of everything implied in that word. As he says, he understands perfectly, but does not approve. As I should put it, he understands perfectly, but reacts promptly to one set of qualities and only reluctantly to a different set of qualities to which, even when he has fully apprehended them, he attaches less importance precisely because they are not the qualities to which he reacts with ease, and for no better reason. It may be fortuitous that these qualities happen to be those in which the Latin world excels. I believe that he honestly does regard himself as impartial, but whereas he counts it against Ravel that he lacks the qualities of Brahms, which Ravel would not borrow if he could, he nowhere counts it against Brahms that he lacks the qualities of Ravel. His Teutonic bias rather than his score-reading proclivity is the reason why he is so often inclined to defer judgment on a work which he has heard until he is able to see it on paper, for it shows a tendency to seek those qualities which appeal to the eye rather than the ear, and those are in the main Teutonic qualities. He thus sees in 'Pelléas' monotonous strings of incoherent, and, to him, insignificant chords, but their frequent superb appositeness, even when he has apprehended it, is to him a matter of comparatively little importance. It happens to be a Latin quality. In that he is neither impartial nor objective.

The kernel of the entire fallacy which he is at such pains to expound lies in the touchstone of curiosity. He, the most brilliant leader the conservative party has ever had in this country, conforms to the conservative type in the absence of curiosity. If a thing is not full of meaning for him, he has not the curiosity either to inquire of himself whether there may not be unresponsive patches in his temperamental predisposition, or to apply himself diligently to the conundrum why this thing which conveys no meaning to him should apparently convey significance to others as intelligent as himself. He takes the easier course of denying either their intelligence or their sincerity, and calling his own judgment 'objective.' He does it very amusingly, even brilliantly, and those who already agree with him will derive much comfort from his volume, but looking round the musical world of to-day, I find those who disagree with him, on the whole, better company.

DEBUSSY AND THE LEITMOTIVE

By M.-D. Calvocoressi

On June 1, 1903, Debussy's musical feuilleton in the Paris Gil Blas contained the following lines:

> It is hard to imagine the condition in which the strongest brain may be thrown by a hearing of the whole 'Ring': it becomes haunted by a quadrille of leitmotives in which 'Siegfried's horn-call' dances with the theme of 'Wotan's spear,' while the theme of the 'Curse' indulges in a weird 'cavalier seul.' Oh! How intolerable those helmeted, skin-clad characters become on the fourth evening! They never appear except escorted by their confounded leitmotive. Sometimes they even sing it—it suggests a mild lunatic who, while handing you his visiting-card, would sing to you the text thereof!

This remarkable passage (one of many not preserved in the posthumous volume 'Monsieur Croche, anti-dilettante') was written several years after the completion of 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' and over a year after its stormy first performance at the Paris Opéra-Comique. It is characteristic of Debussy's attitude towards Wagner's methods at its very worst.

Debussy, in those days, had some reason for being in a pessimistic and perhaps irritable frame of mind. The attitude of certain people (including a number of nominally 'influential' critics) towards 'Pelléas et Mélisande' had been not only hostile, but incredibly rude. Disturbing events were occurring in his private life—events that are little known because the few people who are aware of them have so far refrained from turning them into copy. He also disliked, I believe, having to write articles. In a letter which I received from him at the beginning of 1903, he wrote: 'Il faut pourtant bien qu'il me reste un peu de temps pour composer!' And some of the articles he wrote for Gil Blas (especially, perhaps, one on Grieg, which is reproduced in 'Monsieur Croche') bear distinct evidence of ill-humour.

But at all times he was wont to express his objections to Wagner's leitmotives. I wonder whether this is the reason for which it is often assumed that he does not use leitmotives in 'Pelléas et Mélisande.'

The first to put forth this assertion was, I think, the French critic, Pierre Lalo. He was promptly and emphatically contradicted by Frederic Spigl (in the Paris Revue Blanche, December, 1902). But there may be some justification in taking up the matter again, for the assertion continues to crop up now and then. For instance, Sir Henry Hadow, in his little book, 'Music,' says of 'Pelléas et Mélisande':

> The exquisite music dispensed with leitmotives—and what had France to do with leitmotives?—bringing back the orchestra to its function of support and commentary.

On the other hand, Mr. G. E. Abraham, in an 'Essay on the Leitmotive since Wagner' (Music and Letters, April, 1925), contents himself with remarking that 'Debussy . . . . reduced the use of the device to an absolute minimum.' Mr. Abraham's Essay, instructive in many respects, is very perfunctory as regards the French school. It contains no reference to the use of leitmotives in the dramatic works of d'Indy, Dukas, and Magnard, although Bizet and Charpentier are mentioned. As regards Debussy, the use of the words 'an absolute minimum' is not easily accounted for. Turning to the score of 'Pelléas et Mélisande' we see, not only that the alleged 'minimum' is as good as a feast, but that it exceeds—not inconsiderably—what we observe in works by other great composers: for instance, in Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godounov.'

Having been written after 'Pelléas,' Debussy's protest against the Wagnerian leitmotives may represent a change in his outlook. What he would have done in the various dramatic works which he planned or is alleged to have planned after 1903 (the list includes 'The Devil in the Belfry,' 'The Fall of the House of Usher,' 'Crimen Amoris,' and a 'Tristan' founded on Bédier's version of the old French poem) cannot even be conjectured. But the fact remains that in 'Pelléas et Mélisande' he did use leitmotives. He used them abundantly and systematically. It is true that his characters do not 'sing them,' but the orchestra very often introduces them just when (or before) the characters appear; so that, lacking the needful information, nobody would guess that the outburst I quoted emanated from the very composer who wrote 'Pelléas.'

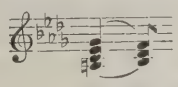
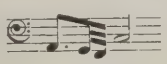
It is true that these motives are simple and unobtrusive. Rather than organized wholes, they are brief units, cells, so to speak, which go to the making of the musical tissue. Only one or two of them are so far organized as to consist not of a single cell, but of two (see below, Ex. 1).

This appears to be a very different procedure from Wagner's, as exemplified in most of his motives: but even in Wagner, typical and much used motives appear, which are but single cells. For instance, the 'Servitude' motive in the 'Ring':



or 'Walther's Wooing' in the 'Mastersingers':

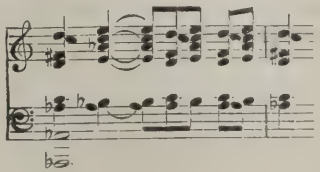


I shall not attempt to count and label the motives in 'Pelléas et Mélisande.' But to make my point obvious, I must indicate at least a few of the principal motives with their characteristic reappearances. Five, I think, ought to suffice.

What we label them does not, of course, matter in the least. For the sake of brevity, I shall label the first three, the Golaud, the Mélisande, and the Pelléas motives, although quite aware that they may (and probably better had) be taken as standing not for the characters as individuals, but for what the characters stand for in the play—even when they do reappear very nearly like 'visiting cards.'

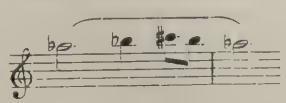
With the fifth bar of the brief Introduction one motive appears:

Ex. 1.



and with the twelfth another:

Ex. 2.



That the first is as closely associated with Golaud and the second with Mélisande as any motive in the 'Ring' will be found to be associated with a character, should be clear to all students of the score.

The Golaud motive reappears in the first scene (pp. 5 & 17. I quote from the original vocal score, not from the later edition with additional interludes which came, not as Debussy's own after-thought, but to provide extra time for shifting the stage settings). It occurs again: p. 43—Mélisande: 'C'est le navire qui m'a menée ici'; p. 45—Geneviève: 'Il est temps de rentrer'; p. 57—Pelléas: 'C'est au bord d'une fontaine aussi qu'il vous a trouvée'; p. 65, before the curtain discloses Golaud lying wounded. A dozen other characteristic instances might be quoted. A particularly significant reappearance is on p. 223, under Mélisande's words: 'Je ne mens qu'à ton frère.'

The function of Mélisande's motive is so obvious that I hardly need dwell upon it. It will be observed on pp. 25, 34, 46, 47, 89, 138, 161, 167, and so on, until the last reappearance, p. 279.

We also find it combined with the Golaud motive on pp. 43 and 188; with the Pelléas motive on p. 125; with the Wisdom or Arkel motive (referred to further) on p. 177; and with a motive which may be called the 'Threat-motive' on p. 264.

The part played by this 'Threat-motive' is remarkable, and definitely recalls Wagner's use of certain motives in the 'Ring' and in 'Tristan.'

It first appears, very significantly, on p. 22 in the interlude between the first two scenes—viz., at the point where the dramatic conflict is about to begin. And let it be remembered that I am referring to the original form of the interlude (this may serve to explain why I preferred not to quote from the lengthened, more easily accessible, edition):

Ex. 3

It reappears, p. 32—Arkel: 'Nous ne savons pas ce que le retour de ton frère nous prépare,' and p. 80, 'Il est vrai que ce château est très vieux et très sombre.' Naturally, it is very much in evidence during the scene in the underground cave (pp. 126, et seq.). It also plays a vital part during the scene between Golaud and Yniold (pp. 143, 144, 149). It is heard when Golaud is about to maltreat Mélisande (p. 191), and when Pelléas says to himself, 'Je ferais mieux de m'en aller sans la revoir' (p. 210).

Although the 'Wisdom-motive':

Ex. 4.

is closely connected with Arkel (pp. 22, 26, 34, 177), it would be most inaccurate to consider it as an individual motive, after noting the subtle association which leads to its reappearance (p. 58) under Pelléas's words, 'Ne jouez pas ainsi au dessus d'une eau si profonde.' Equally significant of the motive's true function are the reappearances, p. 181—Arkel: 'A mon âge,' and p. 277, 'Vous ne savez pas ce que c'est que l'âme.'

Often the part played by the fifth and last motive I wish to adduce is that of an individual motive, standing for Pelléas. It appears just before we see Pelléas for the first time (p. 30):

Ex. 5.

and, as a rule, escorts him faithfully (pp. 36, &c.). It is used, also, for purposes of allusion: p. 74—Golaud: 'Tu dois me cacher quelque chose'; p. 159, 'Restons un peu dans l'ombre; on ne sait pas'; p. 190, 'Je suis moins loin des grands secrets de l'autre monde'; and p. 262—Mélisande: 'Je l'ai aimé.' On the other hand, it is used to underline the expressive import of Pelléas's utterances on p. 209—'Je vais fuir'; p. 217—'Il y aurait plutôt de quoi pleurer'; and p. 228—'Viens dans la lumière'—which fact militates against its being described as a purely individual motive (if indeed such a thing can exist in music that is music).

These five instances, I am sure, are enough for my case. I am not out to allege that the score of 'Pelléas et Mélisande' is improved or deteriorated by Debussy's use of leitmotives, nor even that Debussy's practice and his theory were two different things. If they do happen to be different (although it is quite easy to realise that what Debussy objected to was the way in which Wagner applied the principle rather than the principle itself), then, of course, I am more grateful for the practice which gave us 'Pelléas' just as it is than for any theory which might encourage us to devote to being annoyed with Wagner's mannerisms, energies which are better employed in enjoying Wagner's genius.

In 1902, M. Spigl, rightly contradicting M. Pierre Lalo, wisely considered that it would be a pity to dissect and pin down, like dead things, the live elements in Debussy's music. Less wisely, perhaps, I have now thought fit not to profit by his example. My excuse is that my sole purpose was to arrest the progress of a definite fallacy which, as it happens, seems hard to kill. I am quite prepared to plead guilty to the indictment of having made a mountain out of a mole-hill. For what useful purpose can be served by adducing either that a composer used leitmotives, or that he didn't?

THE BANKRUPTCY OF OPERA

The committee responsible for the recent season of opera at Covent Garden took an unprecedented step in issuing before the closing of the season a manifesto in answer to the criticism levelled against certain features of their productions. This statement is of the utmost gravity. It has been interpreted by the daily press as a frank declaration that as the result of their experience the members of the committee have come to the conclusion that opera cannot be made to pay its way. If that is so, then opera is bankrupt as far as London is concerned, and sooner or later its production must be a thing of the past, for the number of wealthy music-lovers ready to risk a large sum with the certainty of losing a part of it must be limited. Yet, on the whole, we should welcome the declaration. If opera is in a parlous condition we owe it in part to the hush-hush policy which has prevailed at Covent Garden. If there is a remedy to the present situation it is in open discussion and complete frankness. Criticism, even adverse and bitter, can do no real harm if it is badly aimed. If it is well aimed, then its usefulness is evident in that it gives those who are responsible the opportunity to press for some needed reform or, maybe, to amend a flaw which had passed unnoticed. For instance, the scenery and lighting at Covent Garden have been the butt of much adverse criticism, and the declaration of the committee frankly admits its justice. Criticism has done good service in this instance by revealing at least one of the contributory causes of the present deplorable state of affairs. The obvious thing to do would now be to drive home the charge, but unfortunately here we have a classical instance of the dangers of the prevailing system. Who is responsible for the Covent Garden scenery? In whose interest would it be to bring it up-to-date and thus add to the attraction of all Covent Garden productions? To these questions, apparently, there is no satisfactory answer. It is not the concern of the recent management, for having paid the last chorister and the last charwoman, it has nothing more to do with Covent Garden. It is not the business of the Royal Opera Syndicate, which, so far as we know, holds only a lease of the house for a brief number of years. The ground landlord obviously cares nothing whether the scenery is good or bad so long as he is paid his rental. Where, then, should we turn? Is it nobody's business to see that the great traditions of the famous opera house are maintained? Surely it should be to somebody's advantage if those who can throw light on this dark subject would do so at the earliest moment. Until something is done any impresario—the Syndicate, the British National Company, or a private concern—must pay the penalty.

We are told that the case of opera is all but hopeless. If that is true, it is high time that something radical should be done, and done at once. If, as we believe, it is not, then the fact that some people believe it true ought to urge us to a thorough revision of our present system, and to strengthen its weak points, if they can be strengthened. Many of us believe that the right policy was that sketched out by Sir Thomas Beecham at the close of his last Covent Garden season, in the speech he made before the curtain. It was a policy of progress, a policy worthy of the capital of the world. Since Sir Thomas's retirement, however, instead of keeping that goal in view we seem to have gone back to the old and reproduced conditions in which, so far from having a definite policy—or any policy—we are content to drift along as far as possible, and the moment has come, according to the common interpretation of the Covent Garden manifesto, when drifting will lead us into the shallows for good and all. Is it unreasonable in the circumstances to ask for a little more light on questions of considerable public interest, questions which are also of considerable material importance to a large body of professional musicians? A National Trust has been founded to support opera. Any declaration from that body, which defined a little more clearly its aims and intentions, would be exceedingly welcome. It would be all the more welcome if it gave some consideration to the peculiar problems of London, and expressed a clear opinion as to what London can expect not only as regards material assistance, but rather in the way of advice and guidance. A responsible committee would do as much good in this way as in any other, especially if some kind of understanding were arrived at with the authorities at Covent Garden. In open discussion and combined effort may lie the salvation of opera. Such a committee could assume the responsibilities which apparently rest at present on nobody's shoulders.

Before concluding, however, it must be said that if the facts stated in the manifesto are distinctly interesting, the conclusions are not always convincing. In the first place, although the season resulted in financial loss, we are not told how heavy that loss was. In the second place, any loss incurred could be easily ascribed to errors of judgment committed with the best intention, or to the fatal lack of understanding between our opera concerns, whereby we must have either two theatres open to opera within a few yards of each other, or none. As for errors of judgment, these were not a few, if mainly due to inexperience or to failure to appreciate the conditions in which opera seasons can be run at Covent Garden. Some members of the orchestra, for instance, were beyond doubt the best players that could be engaged. Others, however, were not equal to the responsibilities of their position; it was a plucky (and expensive) thing to engage so many veritable 'stars,' but stars have a way of 'bossing the show' which does not make for good ensemble, especially when the time allotted to preparation is limited. In engaging foreign conductors the management was only following a tradition, but a foreign conductor who knows neither the orchestra nor the language of the country, is hardly likely to get the best results with a few rehearsals. This is not to disparage what has been done. But if we are to set our house in order, the errors of the past, remembered, will be the best means of avoiding errors in the future. B. V.

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

Q.—Would you go so far as to say that grand opera is the keystone for the building of a musical nation? What about chamber music, symphonic music, instrumental music of all kinds?

A.—I feel strongly that we cannot become a really musical nation until we give first consideration to grand opera. I believe it is the most representative of all musical art forms because it takes on all of them for its successful expression.

William S. Brady, in an interview in 'The Musician.'

A few months ago I 'released' some disparaging remarks on opera as a form; a reader, not without heat, challenges me to make them good. Far be it from me to knock at a door and run away, so I take up the challenge with alacrity.

Although my objections to opera are mainly concerned with the artistic side, and above all with the music, I am inclined to think that perhaps the most damaging charge to be brought against it (at all events in the present economic crisis) is that it calls for an expenditure out of proportion to the artistic result. I am well aware of the short-sighted folly of demanding that art shall 'pay' in the direct, hard cash sense of the term. The real profit that the community derives from any artistic or cultural enterprise is of the kind that cannot be appraised, so we must not look too closely at the bill. At the same time the bill cannot be ignored, and when it is so heavy as it is in the case of opera, we shall be foolish if we don't inspect it pretty closely, and ask ourselves if so costly a game is worth the candle.

The recent season at Covent Garden may well provoke such a question. During the eight weeks, full houses were the rule, despite summery weather and a heat wave that killed most indoor entertainments. Theatrical folk and concert-givers looked enviously on the opera queues, and thought of the handsome profit they would have made out of such patronage. Yet all this support did not avail, and there was a loss on every week. One would not complain of this if a complete and indisputably artistic success had been achieved. But this can hardly be claimed, in view of the quality of certain of the works put on during the Italian weeks, and the frequently poor standard of production generally. (In regard to this latter point, critics who poke fun at the adsurdities of opera were provided with ample powder and shot.)

This unfortunate Covent Garden balance-sheet comes at an awkward moment for those who are holding forth on the blessings of State-aided opera. Yet opera is the very last form of enterprise with claims on the State. Not only does it yield a poor artistic return for a vast outlay; there is the further objection that whereas concerts, free libraries, public parks, playing fields, &c., benefit the major part of the population, opera can be enjoyed only by the minimum. There is hardly a small town, large village, or drab suburb, unable to benefit from some at least of the amenities provided by the rates, whereas opera can be given only in the large towns and cities where there is a theatre fit for the purpose, and a public large enough and sufficiently affluent to fill it. When this country once more finds itself with money to burn—say in our great-grandchildren's time—and has done all that can be done in the way of subsidising orchestras, competitive festivals, touring chamber-music and other concert parties, &c., it will be justified in considering the subsidising of opera, and not before.

Until that day the enthusiasts for opera—a mélange that takes half-a-dozen fine arts and spoils the lot—must be prepared to foot the bill themselves.

The indignant reader who protests against that last sentence must calm himself and face the facts. Out of all the many hundreds of operas, are there more than a mere handful that can be regarded seriously from the combined points of view of music, literature, drama, and scenic effect? Very few will bear scrutiny on the score of music, and we can enjoy these as a rule only by closing our ears to the absurd libretto, shutting our eyes to the acting or scenery (or both), and switching our intelligence off from the plot. Apart from the pick of Wagner, I doubt if there are half-a-dozen operas that a musician can whole-heartedly admire so far as his art is concerned. (This is a test that cannot be shirked, seeing that opera is often claimed as the greatest of musical forms.) One of those few exceptions is Verdi's 'Falstaff,' and it is a damning fact that this masterpiece is one of the least performed of the composer's works. Would this be the case if operatic audiences were on the same level of musical intelligence as those who attend orchestral and chamber concerts? (I am not forgetting the practical difficulties that are alleged to prevent frequent performances of 'Falstaff.' But so long as the opera public is content with repetitions of a few inferior favourites, managers are not likely to put themselves out over 'Falstaff.' The work was given twice recently by R.A.M. students, and so ought not to be beyond the scope of a company recruited at ruinous cost from the ends of the earth.)

The fact is, opera is necessarily so hampered by conventions, makeshifts, and compromises, that a first-rate composer touches it at his peril. Wagner is the only one of the giants who has come out of the ordeal with flying colours, and even he provides the best of evidence as to the weakness of opera as a musical form. If opera were so successful a blending of the arts as is claimed, how comes it that practically all the music of his best operas can be enjoyed in the concert-room? In whole stretches of 'The Ring,' 'The Mastersingers,' 'Tristan,' and 'Parsifal,' we can dispense not only with the scenery and action; we can even replace the voice with an orchestral instrument, and listen to the result with more pleasure than is given by many a purely orchestral work. The explanation is that Wagner was not so much an opera composer as a great symphonic writer who took the wrong turning. The time may yet come when we shall see that one of the greatest disasters in the history of music was Wagner's stopping at his first Symphony. What a group of masterpieces he might have given us—a dozen that might have left Beethoven's nine in the shade—had he not messed about at the hopeless task of opera reform!

Musicians who attend a Wagner opera go to hear rather than to see. I know many who can enjoy 'The Ring' only by closing their eyes—in other words, by ignoring all the constituents of opera save one. Give them the music, and anybody may have the remainder—the long-winded text, the dragons, swans, and all the rest of the clumsy paraphernalia. The Zoo, the circus, and the cinema can supply most of these things far better. Of all the standard operas there are few which combine music that will bear scrutiny qua music, a text that is at least a sound piece of work on literary grounds, and a story with human appeal and probability told with genuine imagination. When you have mentioned 'The Mastersingers,' 'Carmen,' and 'Falstaff,' you will find yourself stuck. (And of these three, 'Falstaff,' as we have seen, is rarely off the shelf.)

On the other hand, the most successful operas are usually the work of third-rate composers who have what is called 'a sense of the theatre'—which often means a knack of writing music just good enough to help out the dramatic situation, but not sufficiently good to distract attention from it. A similar lowering of standards prevails in other departments. Thus, it is a physical and psychical impossibility for the principals to give us simultaneously acting and singing of the very best. Also, the text must not be unduly witty or significant, because the exigences of vocalism will make it difficult or impossible to 'put across.' Even if it can be delivered convincingly the hearer is so busy watching the acting and listening to the music that he can spare very little attention for the text. So it follows that opera demands of its constituent arts that they shall be always an appreciable degree below their best, in order that they may not kill one another. Only in the Overture or Intermezzo may the composer let himself go, whereupon enthusiasts for this 'greatest of musical forms' usually drown it with chatter. Is it surprising that with scarce an exception the most popular and successful operas have been written by composers who have done little or nothing worth hearing in the shape of pure music? This is another way of saying that they couldn't or wouldn't write music good enough to stand on its own feet and hold our interest unaided. On the whole I think 'couldn't' is the word. If you disagree, look down the list of opera composers in Kobbé's 'Complete Opera Book.' They are all there—the merest handful of somebodies and a host of nobodies. You will see a score of Bellinis, Donizettis, and Hérolds for one Beethoven with his solitary work (never heard nowadays, though described by an authority as 'standing almost alone in its perfect purity, in the moral grandeur of its subject, and in the resplendent ideality of its music.' But perhaps that's why it is neglected. A public that wants little more than the blood and passion of the 'Cav. and Pag.,' and 'Tosca,' or the inanities of the prima donna show-piece, is not likely to have much use for 'Fidelio').

All this time, says a reader, you have shirked the name of Mozart. Not a bit of it. His operas bear out what I said above. Only the music is worth listening to; who cares tuppence about the stories? And even so, for one performance of a Mozart we have dozens of a Puccini or a Leoncavallo.

The literary and dramatic feebleness of the average opera is admitted on all hands, and is tolerated for the sake of the music, or of a few brilliant snippets. No other form of art is allowed to cumber the ground on such slender excuses as appear to be sufficient for the repeated performance of certain operas. At the recent Italian season at Covent Garden several works—e.g., 'Fedora' and 'Lucia di Lammermoor'—were put on merely to give a prima donna an opportunity for display. This is true to tradition. For example, I learn from Kobbé that Donizetti's 'Elixir of Love' was revived at the Metropolitan, New York, in 1904, solely in order that Caruso might be heard in the romance in Act 2, 'Una furtiva lagrima.' Nobody pretends that this early example of Donizetti contains anything else worth hearing. Yet a huge audience sat out a feeble work lasting a whole evening in order that a tenor might disport himself in one air!

A similar point is made by M. César Saerchinger in his Musical Courier article on the Covent Garden season. Speaking of 'Lucia di Lammermoor' ('with inches of dust covering its once brilliant score'), he says:

> With all due respect to the genius of Donizetti, the creator of 'Don Pasquale,' I cannot squeeze a full half hour of genuine music out of all this noise. If a great coloratura must have that mad scene for her vehicle, why not give it and be done with it, throwing the sextet in for good measure? But to set a great apparatus in motion, and have all these people making believe at creating an illusion which is admittedly no longer possible is economic waste.

Burning the pigsty in order to roast the pig is an economical proceeding by the side of it. Imagine a parallel case in any other form of music—an orchestral concert of poor music, selected with a view to giving the conductor a five minutes' purple patch, or for the sake of a little bit of solo work by one of the players! It would never happen, simply because, with all their faults, concert-goers know pretty well what's what in orchestral music. If it be objected that they allow virtuoso conductors to confine themselves mainly to hackneyed works, the answer is that usually the hackneyed works are fine music. Moreover, what is hackneyed to the critic and to the regular concert-goer is often novel to many in the audience. The C minor Symphony perhaps holds no more thrills for you and me, but to the man in the next pew it may be a revelation. What has the 'Elixir of Love,' or 'Fedora,' or 'Lucia' to reveal to anybody?

Space is running out, so I must merely sketch the rest of my indictment of opera. Briefly, then, owing to the social glamour that still hangs round it, and to the absurd publicity given to the more brilliant of its exponents (especially if they quarrel to spitting point), opera attracts an amount of attention out of proportion to its real value. Think of the yards of space given recently to Jeritza's hair, to her jewellery, to her appearing in a church scene with uncovered head, to her singing 'Vissi d'arte' lying prone on the stage, &c. In no other form of art is so much fuss made over the things that don't matter, and so little over the things that do.

Opera does harm to the cause of singing in a variety of ways. One of the worst bits of singing I have ever heard was in 'Pagliacci,' when the performance of the Prologue was marked by practically every vocal fault—wobble, bad intonation, portamento ad nauseam and distorted rhythm. But the singer (I forget his name) looked the part and certainly could act, so the doped and dazzled audience roared its approval of singing that would have been tolerated nowhere else. There must have been a good many young students of singing present: what sort of a lesson and example was it for them? Again, consider the gramophone records of operatic singing in which the tenors alternately yell and sob, the baritones blast and bellow, and the women mostly scream. I do not exaggerate when I say that of every dozen of such records barely one is free from bad taste or bad vocalism, or both. What sort of a lesson is that for thousands of young singers?

But the crowning weakness of opera is that it leaves practically nothing to the imagination. To-day it is the fashion to sneer at oratorios and cantatas as Victorian and unimaginative. We are told that it is absurd for an oratorio soloist to personate (say) Elijah. 'Elijah,' says the scoffer, didn't wear a boiled shirt, and didn't denounce the prophets of Baal to an orchestral accompaniment.' (A similar objection of course might as reasonably be made to the singer of any kind of song demanding characterisation, or to most elocutionary performances.) But which representation of 'Elijah' calls for more imagination on the part of performers and audience? An oratorio, in which the text and music alone tell the story? or an opera, wherein the Prophet is given a flowing beard, sandals, and a kind of toga?

If, instead of seeing in your mind's eye the prophets of Baal leaping on the altar and cutting themselves with knives, you demand that a group of 'supers' or chorus singers shall more or less nimbly leap and pretend to carve themselves, your imagination must be in a bad way. Your place is in the cinema, where that particular kind of mental deficiency is provided for. Thus, when the heroine scornfully pulls the ring from her finger and throws it on the ground, you will be given a 'close-up' showing, first the ring on her finger (a finger the size of a well-nourished adult leg), then the pulling-off and throwing, and finally another 'close-up,' wherein you will see the ring reach the ground and go bounding off like a child's hoop. (This sample of brainlessness was seen at a London cinema not long ago.)

We can listen with pleasure to much of the music of the 'Flying Dutchman,' if we are allowed to imagine certain of the scenes. But when we see (as I saw once at a performance of this work) a score of stout mariners hauling laboriously at a rope that proved to have nothing more substantial at the end of it than a mere knot; or (as happened at a recent revival) two ships side by side, one in calm water, the other in rough, and with the wind blowing strongly two ways at once, we are not thrilled, but merely disrespectful.

The absurdity of the objection to oratorio is shown at once by the fact that 'Gerontius' fills the biggest hall in the country every year, and quite obviously moves those present as very few operas can do. Who cares a rap what John Coates wears when singing the name-part? Is the 'Angel's Farewell' a bit less exquisite for being sung by a wingless woman in crêpe de chine? Let a composer come along with a 'Gerontius,' or a cantata equal to 'The Revenge,' and he is sure of a public as large as that for opera, and a long sight more imaginative and intelligent.

Opera will continue to be the scorn of a very large proportion of musicians, and of such of the public as have not the cinema-mind, until it sheds its crude and childish realism and properties, gives us first-rate music, stories that are not ridiculous, and texts that are not stilted and sometimes even ungrammatical. All the signs point to the gradual decay of 'grand' opera—the type in which absurdities were thickest. Few, if any, more works will be written in that style. The Wagner music-dramas will continue to be given; we shall endure the longueurs and the comic properties for the sake of the music. But new works will be short, slighter in texture, and based on stories worth the telling.

'The Beggar's Opera' has shown us that the old ballad opera was not so foolish a form after all. Given good dialogue and first-rate songs, it may yet have a new lease of life. And I am inclined to think that Holst, in his Falstaffian Interlude, has taken the first step towards something like a new type—one in which rapid prose speech will for the first time be a constituent. Its setting presents problems that were not all solved in 'At the Boar's Head.' Even when the problems are solved there will be a further wait while the singers acquire a diction as quick, clear, and significant as that of the patter-song artist at the music-hall. There will then be another halt while audiences become sufficiently 'quick in the uptake' to keep abreast of a text that moves almost at speech-pace instead of being doled out fatly at the rate of about twelve words per minute. This is not to say that all new operas will be of the quick-fire order, but merely that the future lies mainly with the racy rather than the long-drawn 'grand' type.

'Grand opera' is not in our bones. As a nation we are too conscious of its absurdities and incongruities. Our real bent is shown in Gilbert and Sullivan, and by our flocking to the revivals of 'The Beggar's Opera' and 'Polly.' There is hope and significance in the fact that our composers are now working on lines that promise to be far more characteristic and suitable to our needs than the imitations of foreign 'grand' opera that were being produced a couple of decades ago.

(Since the above was written I have read Mr. Bonavia's capital article in the July Music and Letters, on 'At the Boar's Head' and other operatic signs of the times. Apropos of the choice of subject he makes the excellent suggestion that English fiction presents a good field for our composers, and he mentions specially the picaresque novels of Smollett as offering likely material. I am glad to see that so good a judge as Mr. Bonavia thinks as I do concerning the significance of 'At the Boar's Head.' His remarks on certain problems of opera composing should be read by all interested in the future of opera.)

Finally, we are sometimes told that opera is a good means of approach to pure music. 'Get the man in the street into the opera house, and he is half-way to Queen's Hall.' Only half-way, though, and likely to stay there. The man who makes his introduction to music through opera will inevitably associate the art with all sorts of extraneous things—stories, acting, appeal to the eye, &c., and will be so accustomed to regarding music as a mere constituent, that the genuine article will come as a cold douche. No; for one concert-goer made by opera, there are a hundred made by gramophone and wireless. The opera-house is not the place for the neophyte, but for the seasoned musician. The neophyte, imposed on by the glow and glitter, is easily persuaded into believing that he is assisting at an important artistic function, and so his taste is vitiated. The musician knows better. For him the average opera is merely a superior and very expensive kind of variety show, to be attended indulgently, and mainly for social reasons. But generally speaking, if he wants the best drama and the best music he takes them separately at the theatre and concert-hall.

A NEW PSALTER

[In the June Musical Times we announced that Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, and Dr. Percy C. Buck were preparing a new Psalter embodying freer methods of chanting than have hitherto been the rule. We have received so many inquiries on the matter that we have asked the Editors for a brief statement of their aims and methods. In response, they kindly send us the following. For typographical reasons three of the excerpts are reproduced in facsimile. The next issue of the Musical Times will contain a specimen page.]

It will be agreed by all that it is possible to chant badly. And it is clear that the faults to be found in bad chanting may be grouped in two categories: those due to the singer, and those due to the psalter from which he sings.

Failings of the former kind are, and must always be, the business of the choirmaster. The absence of rhythm, or its presence in a stilted and mechanical form; the lack of clearness in diction, or a clearness that is laboured and artificial; such faults constitute the problems of choir-practice. But the errors due to the pitfalls of the Psalter are at least as numerous, and are of even greater importance, since they appear to have produced a widespread distortion of the English language that is universally lamented. This distortion, moreover, is not only ugly in itself, but also, by its faulty verbal and syllabic stress, presents the words in so strange and unnatural a way that the mere comprehension of their meaning becomes a matter of difficulty.

The Editors of the new Psalter have tried to remedy this reproach by introducing principles which have in recent years met with an ever-growing acceptance by lovers and singers of the Psalms. The first principle is that no consideration should deter them from giving singers the opportunity for making their words as fluent and natural as in speech. The structure of Hebrew poetry and the idiosyncrasies of 17th-century punctuation are matters of interest to scholars; but it is unreasonable that reverence for them should persist to the point of murdering one's mother-tongue. Consequently many verses have been bracketed in couples, to be sung to one single chant—a stratagem used, and possibly invented, by Bishop Westcott in his 'Paragraph Psalter.' It is manifestly impossible, for example, to sing to an Anglican chant, without gross distortion of the English language, such a verse as:

> Behold, they speak with their mouth, and swords are in their lips: for who doth hear? (Ps. lix., 7), but Bishop Westcott's method immediately solves the problem.

Another principle is that the first minim after each reciting note, and the final semibreve of each melodic section, should invariably carry an accented syllable. Thus the old pointing of Ps. xli., 9:

> Yea even mine own familiar friend | whom I | trusted: who did also eat of my bread hath | laid great | wait for | me,

becomes

Yea even mine own familiar | friend .
whom I | trusted;
who did also eat of my | bread hath |
laid great | wait for me;

and Ps. l., 5:

> Gather my saints together | unto | me: those that have made a covenant with | me with | sacri- | fice,

becomes

Gather my saints to- | gether | unto .
me,
those that have made a | cove-nant with |
me with | sacri-fice.

There can be no need to catalogue the complete list in justification of every new departure made by the present Editors—though it would be easy to write at great length, as any experimenter in 'pointing' will agree, on such an apparently simple issue as the treatment of 'unto,' 'into,' and other enclitics. But a word must be said on the one and only innovation made: the use of the figure 3 over certain syllables to signify a triplet. If such sentences as are given below are read in a natural rhythm, few will dispute that the triplets are true:

O let my mouth be | $\overset{3}{\text{fi}}$lled with thy | praise. (Ps. lxxi., 7.)

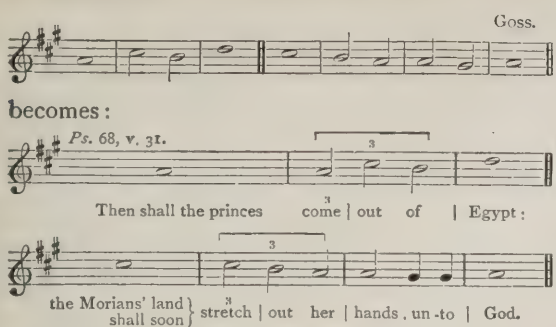
so shalt thou make their image to | vanish | $\overset{3}{\text{o}}$ut of the | city.
(Ps. lxxiii., 19.)

The method by which the music is adapted to the triplet is simple, and has been found easy (and many experiments have been made) even by those quite inexperienced in chanting: the first of the two minims of the bar is sung twice. The only difficulty in the process has proved to be that experienced chanters are apt, from ingrained habit, to sing | ♩ ♩ 𝅗𝅥 | instead of a true triplet. But with a little practice the rhythm becomes free and attractive to sing, and no one who has mastered it will willingly return to the old rigidity.

One form of this triplet, however, will require practice, and this is the sole feature in the new edition which the laziest singer could pretend to find difficult. Occasionally the figure 3 will be found over the final syllables of the recitation; in which case that word, and the two minims succeeding it, form a triplet. The following instance should make the process clear:



Many people, however, will demand from the Editors no apology for the fact that just one departure from common usage will make it essential to practise the psalms—at all events for a time—before singing them in Divine Service.

Music in the Foreign Press

MUSIC IN RUSSIA

In the Revue Musicale (July), L. Kochnitzky writes:

> It seems as though musical taste, while spreading through the Russian masses, has become shallower and poorer. The Soviet Government is accomplishing an unparalleled effort to promote musical culture. Never in modern times has a system of education ascribed so important a place to music. But the tendency is to propagate, glorify, and maintain certain tendencies that properly belong to the 19th century only—especially the heroic romanticism characterising the period from Wagner to Strauss, and the folk-lore (or rather, bogus folk-lore) current. Referring to over a hundred concert programmes, I was surprised to note the almost complete absence of the names of Bach, Handel, Gluck, and Mozart. Debussy and Ravel seem likewise proscribed. The Russian peasants and workmen are gluttons for plays and music. After a performance of Tchaikovsky's 'Onegin' at a workman's centre near Leningrad, the audience vociferously claimed, by way of an encore, Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony, which had been performed there a week before. Composers who received their education under the old régime will never be able to adapt themselves to present requirements. What the younger composers can achieve is yet uncertain. At least five or six years should elapse before we venture a judgment on present-day production. The performances given at the Leningrad and Moscow Operas are splendid. The famous Ballet School at Leningrad was carefully preserved, and is now in full sway.

The May issue of Melos contains, among various other articles on Russian music, the end of Sabaneiev's article on contemporary Russian composers (see Musical Times, June, p. 606).

Samuel Feinberg's music is worthy of attention; it is characteristic of a high-strung individuality, whose outlook is almost hysterically visionary. Anatoli Alexandrov is quieter, and has undergone various influences — from Scriabin and Ravel to Rachmaninov. Gödicke is determinedly conservative, and, broadly speaking, not unrelated to Brahms. Roslawetz is essentially a 'neo-academic' composer, at the very antipodes of Scriabin. Sabaneiev describes his own compositions as showing affinities, so far as tendencies are concerned, with the German romanticism of Schumann, Wagner, and Liszt. He names a dozen junior composers, briefly characterising each one of them.

CRITICISM AND WAGNER

By a remarkable coincidence, at the very moment when most of us (at least, I hope so) are anxiously weighing the evidence adduced by Mr. Newman in order to do away with the current notion that truly original composers are often abused and condemned by contemporary writers on music, Prof. Max Chop is writing in the Signale on 'Richard Wagner in the Light of Contemporary Criticism.' Only five instalments (June 10-July 8) are available so far; but one cannot help wishing that the author had drawn more extensively on the 'better-class criticism of Wagner in his own day,' to which Mr. Newman refers ('A Music Critic's Holiday,' p. 281), and less on Tappert's 'Schimpflexicon'—which Mr. Newman says, 'does not tell a quarter of the story.' It would be interesting to know how many of the men who wrote for the Press really proclaimed the greatness of Wagner's music when this music first came to light. The number of those who abused it is truly formidable. The list, as summarised by Prof. Chop, distinctly conveys the impression that readers who sought enlightenment in the daily Press, or in musical periodicals, must have found good grounds for thinking Wagner a poor musician indeed. When will the better-class criticism of 'Tristan' in 1865, of 'The Mastersingers' in 1868, or of 'The Ring' in 1876 be re-published, so that all of us may judge how many critics really displayed perspicacity on these momentous occasions?

A SNAPSHOT OF DEBUSSY

In the 'Nouvelles Littéraires' (quoted in the July Revue Musicale), Jacques Emile Blanche gives the following thumb-nail sketch of Debussy:

> He, who was so materialistic and so saturnine, except when the question arose where to obtain caviare or some other food for which he had an inordinate liking, so lethargic, so heavy, so intent on 'bagging' publishers—he whom Pierre Louys used to help in all sorts of ways to drive the devil from the door . . . would undergo a complete transformation as soon as his fingers, otherwise most clumsy, touched the keyboard. Then we would forget Wagner, and even our beloved Fauré. . . . At the end of those meetings, he would enter a pastry-cook's shop, Rue Favart, and with much prodding—to the shop-girl's disgust—select some luscious croustade. Then Pierre Louys and Tinan would take him to dine; and all night long the three wandered from bar to 'brasserie.' Debussy hated the theatre. Circuses and acrobats were already in vogue.

FRENCH SOCIETY AND MUSIC

In the same issue, E. Vuillermoz describes the new French fashions in art, thus:

> For the past few years Diaghilev, under the influence of an evolution which started in society circles, has worked chiefly for the painters. Painting is the art now in vogue. Wagner compelled high society, at least for a time, to display an interest in music; but fashion has changed. It is far smarter, nowadays, to think of Picasso than of Ravel, to collect canvases or drawings than to read music. The movement has reached the provinces. At Lyons, for instance, where music used to reign unchallenged, it is only in brushwork and pigments that thrills are sought.

A HUNGARIAN COMPOSER

In the same issue, Arthur Hœrée writes on Tibor Harsanyi, a Hungarian pupil of Kodály, and describes various works of his as attractive, and rich in promise of greater things to come.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

New Music

CHURCH MUSIC

A setting of 'Ye Holy Angels Bright,' composed for the two hundred and seventy-first Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, by Stanley Marchant (Novello), should make a welcome addition to the repertory of good choirs. It contains some skilful and highly-effective writing for the voices—without, however, providing any really serious problems for the average singer. The opening section (Andante maestoso) is for four-part chorus, with frequent subdivision of individual parts. 'Ye blessed souls at rest' opens with bass solo (tranquillo), and is continued by semi-chorus (S.S.A.). There is considerable diversity of key and treatment before the original key is reached on page 14. The final pages are broadly-written, and lead to an imposing close. Choirmasters should note that orchestral parts may be had on hire.

The outstanding features of E. W. Naylor's setting of 'We have heard with our ears' (Novello) are broad, smoothly-written voice-parts, quite easy to sing, and an interesting free organ accompaniment. The opening movement—in march time—develops through several pages a stately theme first given out by tenors and basses in unison. This may be used as a separate anthem. A short, vigorous section, 'Let us now praise famous men,' leads into an expressive movement, 'O pray for the peace of Jerusalem,' set for bass solo and chorus (S.S.A.T.B.). This also may be used separately. The work concludes with a recapitulation of the opening chorus.

A volume of Twelve Introits or Short Anthems (Novello) by various composers should prove useful in many churches. The pieces vary in length from two to four pages, and include, amongst others, Purcell's 'Let my prayer come up,' S. S. Wesley's 'Lead me, Lord,' Richard Farrant's 'Hide not Thou Thy face,' John E. West's 'Hide me under the shadow of Thy wings,' C. Lee Williams's 'Blessed Lord,' and 'O Lord, increase my faith,' by Orlando Gibbons. Each Introit is also published separately. From the Oxford University Press comes the first of Six Short Anthems for the Seasons of the Church, by Henry G. Ley. This is a setting of the Easter hymn, 'The strife is o'er,' to a melody of Melchior Vulpius (1609). The tune, which is a strong one, has been admirably treated by the composer, and we have as a result a fine, stately little work which has the double advantage of being short and also perfectly easy to sing.

From the S.P.C.K. come 'Three Simple Motets' (under one cover) by Geoffrey Shaw, and 'A People's Harvest Music' put together by Eleanor C. Gregory. The Motets are simple arrangements for four voices unaccompanied of (a) the melody from the Mechlin Gradual ('Therefore, we before Him bending'), (b) the Proper Melody, 'Adoro Te,' from the Solesmes Version ('Thee we adore'), and (c) the Proper Melody, Rouen Version, for 'Hail, true Body.' Needless to say, these are all laid out by Mr. Shaw with admirable taste and skill.

It is to be hoped that Miss Gregory's 'Harvest Music' will be widely used in those places where elaborate music is either not possible or not desired. It falls into five sections, under the headings: Our Daily Bread; Man does not live by bread alone; The Bread of Life; Labourers into the Harvest; The End of the World. Each section comprises one or more hymns and a reading. The people share in the singing of most of the hymns, in some of which variety is obtained by the occasional use of descant. There are two 'Choir Interludes' which, except for one simple verse, directed to be sung unaccompanied, are sung either in unison or by alternate men and boys. In the 67th Psalm, sung to Tone 5, alternate verses are sung by people and choir, the latter singing a faux-bourdon by Viadana.

'The Easter Hymn with Faux-bourdon,' by Martin Shaw (Curwen), is the well-known 'Jesus Christ is risen to-day.' Mr. Shaw uses the version altered from the melody in 'Lyra Davidica' (1708), and his faux-bourdon is an excellent example of its kind.

In his setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in C (Stainer & Bell) written for the 1925 Festival of the Rochester Diocesan Church Choir Association, C. Hylton Stewart has evidently aimed at simplicity and freshness. The treatment generally is restrained and subdued, and strenuous singing is rarely called for. Settings of this type are none too common, and choirs of all sorts will doubtless be glad to add the work to their repertory. In the third bar of line 2, page 2, the treble B is a misprint for C.

The issue by the Oxford University Press of fourteen Full Anthems, by Dr. John Blow (1648-1708), should prove of exceptional interest to choirmasters. These are published for the first time from transcriptions of the original manuscripts by Dr. Heathcote D. Statham. They display a great variety of treatment, and while some are fairly easy, others require a skilled choir. Most of them may be sung unaccompanied, but a few have a definite organ part. No. 1, 'Praise the Lord, O my soul,' has a verse part for double choir, and the greater part of No. 8, 'Bow down Thine ear, O Lord,' is written for S.A.T.B.B. Otherwise, four-part writing is the rule. It is impossible to discuss this fine series in detail, and choirmasters should take advantage of the offer of the publishers to supply specimen copies on application. G. G.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The issue in five books of the complete keyboard works of Orlando Gibbons is a practical way of observing his Tercentenary. The patient and enthusiastic editor and transcriber is Margaret H. Glyn, and the volumes are published by Stainer & Bell. (Books 4 and 5, consisting of pieces mainly intended for the organ, were discussed in last month's Musical Times.) The collection inevitably contains a proportion of matter that is of little more than antiquarian interest—sometimes not even that—but there are delightful things. One feels that the need now is for a single book containing the undoubted pick. The average player is not likely to spend five half-crowns in order to find a few plums in each book, but he will not grudge one for a well-selected album. The complete edition is for the library. There are two publics for old music—the comparatively small and special one which likes to have it handy for reference, and therefore wants complete editions; and the larger one that is genuinely anxious to play and teach such works as are practicable and interesting to-day. Unfortunately, those responsible for revivals have too often catered only for the former. Hence the wealth of delightful music of all kinds hidden, e.g., in the vast tomes of the Purcell Society, and unknown to the general musical public. These volumes of Gibbons contain fifty-two pieces, consisting of Masks and Dances (Book 1), Variations (Book 2), Pavans and Galliards (Book 3), and Fancies (Books 4 and 5). The Masks and Dances are the simplest, and perhaps the most immediately attractive. The Variations contain some thin and tedious pages, as well as some of real charm. The more elaborate of the Galliards call for a very good player. Miss Glyn contributes a long and interesting preface, and each book contains a list of corrections made by her. It is a pity these corrections could not have appeared as alternative readings on the pages in which they occur. The player comes across some progression that gives him pause, and if he wishes to know whether it stands so in the original, he has to turn back to a lengthy list (that in Book 3 contains nearly seventy entries) and painfully take up references to page, line, stave, bar, beat, and MS. reading. By the time he has got back to his page and laboriously tracked down the exact beat, he has probably forgotten what the list told him about the MS. version. Granted the need for such a list, it might easily have been made a good deal less formidable. Such obvious slips as an omitted tie, for example, might have been amended by the editor without further reference. Some of Miss Glyn's emendations in the matter of accidentals may be questioned; and, on the other hand, some progressions are passed that certainly seem to call for correction. Thus, on p. 6 of Book 2, in the opening bars of the French Coranto, we have this:

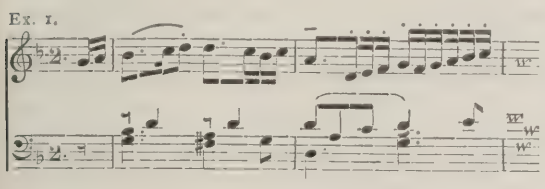
Ex. 1.



Can there be much doubt that in the second bar the F's should be sharpened? Here, surely, is an omission on the part of the copyist, and its non-correction points to a lack of either care or courage on the editor's part. Miss Glyn's estimate of certain of the pieces will probably strike some players as over-enthusiastic. For example, she describes the set of variations on 'The Hunt's Up' as 'a masterpiece of exquisite contrapuntal expression.' I have been a Gibbonsite for a good many years, but the fact does not hinder me from finding a large portion of the figuration in this piece puerile. If I didn't know that Gibbons shows far more resource and beauty elsewhere (e.g., in the really beautiful and expressive 'Ground'), such lavish praise would merely set me against Gibbons as a keyboard writer. Again, speaking of the Fancies for organ, Miss Glyn says:

> His Fancies, in reality free fugues, are the greatest of their kind that have ever been written, and they open a new door in the fugal line. After three hundred years, he is still in the van of development.

But the pieces are, after all, mere early feelings of the way towards the fugal form, and inevitably contain much that is experimental—even dull. Such efforts may be 'the greatest of their kind,' and yet be far from intrinsic greatness. Nor do I see how they 'open a new door in the fugal line,' or how in this respect Gibbons is 'in the van of development.' Like the early canzoni, ricercari, and other primitive fugal essays of the 16th-century Italian composers, they have been superseded by the fugue, and neither they nor their composers can be described as being still in the van. They were pioneers then, but not now. I dwell on this point, not out of disrespect to the memory and achievements of a great man, nor in any desire to belittle the work of Miss Glyn, but because I am sure that the cause of old music is damaged by indiscriminate praise. With these reservations I join in the chorus of thanks to Miss Glyn for giving us in these books much that is of historic interest, and not a little that is beautiful as well.

Bach's Toccatas have just been issued in an album by Augener, with fingering and expression marks added by an unnamed editor. From the same house comes a book of fifteen of Schumann's songs, arranged for pianoforte solo under the title 'A New Album for the Young.' The aim of the arranger, Alex Roloff, is to provide studies in melody playing. The pieces serve well for this, and also for other technical purposes; some, for example, are excellent for rather simple four-part playing. Inevitably a few of the songs suffer in transcription—a pause or repeated phrase that is full of significance when allied with words, often becomes feeble when merely played. But the pieces, which range from easy to moderately difficult, will provide good material for the young student. Mr. Roloff has added full fingering, and his arranging is tasteful and musicianly.

Alexander Tcherepnin is very much to the fore lately, his pianoforte works being edited and fingered by Isidore Philipp (under whom he studied), and published by Durand. His 'Sonatine Romantique,' like the rest of his work, shows not a little of the influence of Prokofiev, but there are signs that he will go farther than that composer. He seems to have a good deal more invention, and although he is still over-fond of the brittle higher reaches of the keyboard, his writing for the pianoforte shows a fine knowledge of effect. For one thing, he is rarely guilty of the modern fault of overloading his score. Generally his texture is on the lean side. His Sonatine consists of four movements, linked up thematically. There is a bleakness about much of it that the title does not lead us to expect, and, like a true Russian, the composer is prone to harp on a little scrap of tune, trusting to insistence for his effect. The work calls for an agile player, and one who will not flinch at asperities. Tcherepnin is still young—in the twenties—and his works point to his being a very considerable figure later on.

Harry Hodge's pianoforte music has been so favourably spoken of that I expected a good deal from his two works just published by Breitkopf & Härtel—'Eine Melodie mit Veränderungen' and 'Eine Kaffee-Fantasie.' The air in the first is simple, and rather too obviously alla Mozart. Neither it, nor the variations to which it is subjected, seem to be worth the very considerable technical effort involved. The Kaffee piece is on a necessarily angular theme, C A F F E E, and is in the form of a prelude and fugal Allegro. Such ingenuities as the combination of two different themes based on the letters are purely paper effects, and the music as a whole has an inappropriate dryness.

Frederick Nicholls's Toccata has spirit, though on the whole the keyboard writing is conventional. But some harmonic piquancies keep the interest from flagging. It makes a good show in return for a moderate degree of effort.

Under such a title as 'Trois Danses Exotiques' a composer may let himself go, and certainly Leo Kok is 'all out' in his 'Danse de l'esclave,' 'Valse un peu sentimentale,' and 'Danse Passionnée' (Chester). In the third he gives us a kind of chopstick effect, the right hand being in E minor, and the left in F sharp major. Throughout the set, the player has to play up to the titles with 'en extase,' 'désespéré,' 'le plus fort possible,' 'nerveux,' 'en délire,' &c., and at one point is bidden to play 'comme flûte et tam-tam, tres doux.' If he does, will the hearer be aware of it? In the Valse the right hand plays over and over again ppp the little clump of notes F sharp, G, A sharp, and B. Like the rest of the 'progressives,' the composer seems to take an almost childish delight in harping on some little feature of this kind. A player with a good range of power and tone-colour could make a hit, and easily acquire a reputation for up-to-dateness with these pieces, in which effect is everything and music next to nothing.

One doesn't need to look over much of the so-called 'advanced' type of new music in order to see that its composers fall into two groups. There are those who have something to say and who can say it in a manner that is genuinely novel, and yet natural and sincere. And there are the others. That Arthur Bliss belongs to the first group has always been evident to most of us. His 'Masks,' four pieces, just published under one cover by Curwens, strike me as being among the most significant of new pianoforte works. They abound in passages that look all wrong, but sound extraordinarily right. This, of course, is merely another way of saying that the composer knows his job; and it follows that the player must know his, too. He must not only be a good man of his hands; he must be able to manage the nice adjustment of tonal values necessary for the due effect of the more dissonant passages. Incidentally there are some bits of polytonality that have their natural place in the scheme, instead of being worked in as a kind of 'stunt.' Welcome, too, are the hints that Bliss is becoming less a mere clever, irresponsible leg-puller—for example, No. 3 is an ostinato with a curiously wistful touch. As is implied above, these pieces are difficult. They are not everybody's meat, but the player who is not at once repelled, and who perseveres with them, will find himself more and more attracted.

Frank Bridge's three Lyrics, 'Heart's Ease,' 'Dainty Rogue,' and the 'Hedgerow,' and two other pieces, 'Retrospect' and 'Through the Eaves,' all published separately (Augeners), vary a good deal in attractive power, and strike me as being more persistently dissonant than is usual with this composer. The first two make their way with one readily enough, but the others are slow in yielding up their charm. In fact, I am bound to confess that they have withheld it from me so far, although they contain much that is harmonically striking, and are, of course, very skilfully written for the keyboard. All are difficult except 'Heart's Ease,' which requires mainly singing-tone and delicacy of touch.

Scriabin may have had the best of his day as an orchestral composer, but the charm of his lesser pianoforte pieces will probably keep his memory green for a long while. A 'Scriabin Album' (Belaieff, Leipsic: Hawkes), containing thirty-three of his pieces, mainly Preludes, will meet the need of the large number of players who have no use for the Sonatas. The selection ranges from Op. 9 to Op. 56, and so gives a good idea of his development as a composer. Dr. Eaglefield Hull contributes a biographical preface, and a brief note to each piece. In the latter he unfortunately adopts the bad old habit of suggesting titles—'Outbreak of Anger,' 'Impending Tragedy,' 'Linked Sweetness,' 'Gloom,' &c.

In Edward Ballantine's Variations on 'Mary had a little lamb' (Arthur P. Schmidt Co.) we have a clever bit of fooling. The ten variations are in the styles of various composers. The imitation is generally good—sometimes with a touch of malice, as in the Mozart 'Agneletto in C,' and the Debussy 'Evening of a Lamb.' The titles and directions are as good fun as the music. Thus, the player of 'Evening of a Lamb' is exhorted to 'exagérez toutes les nuances, sans la moindre exagération,' 'épatez les bourgeois,' &c.; and the final direction, 'dans une sonorité muette et nostalgique,' appears thus in 'Editor's translation': 'Press the keys without them to make sound. Quit the last chord with a little noise of the keys and the pedal which rise suddenly.' Mr. Ballantine's jeu d'esprit calls for a nimble as well as a humorous player. H. G.

NEW VIOLIN MUSIC

The violin pieces published during the last month will not detain us long, for they amount to three—an arrangement of Goltermann's Cantilena from the 'Cello Concerto (Paxton), and two short pieces, 'From the Canebrake' and 'From the Rockies,' by Samuel Gardner (Hawkes). The Goltermann Cantilena has been arranged by Mr. C. Neil, and is as suitable for the viola as for the violin. Indeed the violinist can play it all without ever touching the E string, the arrangement consisting in directing him to play a bar on the E which can be equally effective on the A string. As for its artistic worth, Goltermann is no longer sub judice, and his name has completely disappeared from concert programmes. That there still exists a public which cherishes these innocent and straightforward ideals is more than we are prepared to assert. At any rate, since the printing is very neat we hope the publishers' confidence will be justified.

Mr. Gardner's composition suggests somehow that the 'Rockies' and the 'Canebrake' are not far removed: whatever merits or demerits one piece possesses, are shared with the other. Both make pretty play with double stops, and in both the harmonization is either very simple or obscure. It is not that any of the chords used by the composer are difficult or objectionable. No chord, however complex, is inadmissible to-day. But there is method in the apparent madness in the best moderns, and it is in the logic of harmony that Mr. Gardner seems somewhat unconvincing. B. V.

VOCAL SCORES

English versions of the Bach Cantatas steadily increase. The Oxford University Press has just issued 'See, now' ('Sehet, welch eine Liebe') and the secular Cantata, 'False Love' ('Amor Traditore'), edited by Dr. W. G. Whittaker, with English text by Dr. Sanford Terry. 'See, now' calls for soprano, contralto, and bass soloists. The choir work consists of three Chorales (instead of the solitary example usual in these works), and a splendid fugal chorus, fourteen pages in length. The choral parts of this work are in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa notations combined. 'Amor Traditore,' as everybody knows, is for bass solo, and is one of Bach's little group of essays in the Italian solo-cantata form.

Dr. Whittaker as editor takes us all with him, but as composer he sometimes leaves us guessing. His setting of 'The Cœlestial Spheares' (a fine poem by William Habington) is extremely difficult, and a reading of the vocal score does not convince us that the hard nuts always yield a kernel worth the effort. Perhaps the enterprising Philharmonic Choir will crack them for us and let us see. We feel that so practical a musician as Dr. Whittaker would not lightly set down these craggy and complex pages without being sure of his ground.

The vocal score of 'The Town of the Ford,' the pageant recently produced at Guildford, has been published by T. Andrews, of Guildford. The composer, Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill, is well fitted for work of this kind. He has a capital vein of tune, bold, graceful, and expressive by turn, and always vocal, and he is happy, too, in his treatment of traditional airs. There is ample material in this pageant music for an attractive suite, and no doubt the composer will take some such step to save the best of his music from the oblivion that otherwise might swallow a work primarily of local interest.

From Curwens comes Ethel Smyth's latest opera, 'Entente Cordiale,' described as 'a post-war comedy, founded on fact.' The composer has provided her own libretto, despite recent warnings as to the advisability of composers, like shoe-makers, sticking to their last. Judging from the songs—written in tolerable rhyme—the humour is somewhat elementary. The music is tuneful, and strikes one as over-facile. If the dialogue is good, 'Entente Cordiale' will probably make an attractive entertainment; but prophecy is vain where new operatic work is concerned, and we must await the event.

A vocal score of one of the Gloucester Festival novelties comes to hand—Sir Walford Davies's 'Men and Angels,' a choral suite for use in churches, for chorus, tenor solo, orchestra, and organ (Curwen). The text consists of half-a-dozen poems by unnamed authors, one of them Bunyan, whose now familiar 'True Valour' is given a fine extended setting. One or two of the other poems strike us as being perhaps too intimate and personal for choral use. The mystic flavour we expect from the composer is present, especially in the beautiful ending.

FULL SCORES

Adam Carse's Suite in C, for string orchestra, is written with an eye to amateur and school orchestras (with or without double-basses), and seems admirably adapted to their use. There are five movements, all tuneful and straightforward, and on the short side. The Suite may also be played as a string quartet. Our review copy is a version for piano-conductor, from which most of the music could be played effectively as a violin solo (Augener).

Benjamin Dale's 'A Holiday Tune' is also for small orchestra—strings, one flute, one oboe, two clarinets, one bassoon, and two horns. Here, again, is music that presents no problems (Augener).

A work that is all problem is Edgar Varese's 'Octandre' (Curwen). It is scored for flute (alternating with piccolo), clarinet, oboe, bassoon, horn, trumpet, tenor trombone, and double-bass tuned down to C. I have looked long at 'Octandre' without being able to gain much idea of its effect. It is consistently dissonant, and bristles with dynamic marks, sfff and ffff being as thick as peas. One must wait for a performance before deciding whether it is all worth while. On paper it looks incoherent—which is, perhaps, what the composer means it to be in performance. If one knew who, what, when, or where Octandre is, it might be a help.

From the same enterprising house comes a very handsomely bound and printed full score of Arthur Bliss's 'Colour' Symphony. Another performance of this work is surely overdue. I believe the composer is at present in this country; if so, it would be a graceful act to play the Symphony before he leaves us again. It would probably be a draw for one of the symphony evenings of the 'Proms.' The sight of the score raises hopes and desires that way. In default of the Symphony, perhaps we might be given Mr. Bliss's 'Mêlée Fantasque,' which has also just appeared in full score (Curwen). Bliss's music has been undeservedly neglected of late. Personally I should welcome his high spirits as a relief from much of the dismal grubbiness that prevails among the very Art-iest circles just now. His work has far more vitality and sincerity than much of the sham-antique that at present is the fashion in our academic groves. Let us hope the issue of these full scores will serve to remind conductors and public of a composer who is a far more considerable figure than the Aurics, Honeggers, and Prokofievs, not only by virtue of his achievements, but even more by his promise. And he is notable as one of the few composers who can be humorous—even witty—in terms of music.

A couple of scores come from the Oxford University Press. Edgar Bainton's set of three pieces, 'Pavane, Idyll, and Bacchanal,' is for string orchestra with, in the Idyll, a part for flute which may be taken by solo violin; there is an ad lib. tambourin in the Bacchanal. The pieces are moderately difficult, free in style, and attractive. An arrangement of Bach's Organ Prelude in C (that associated with the great five-voiced Fugue) has been made by Bernard Jackson for an orchestra of strings, two flutes, and two oboes. This fine movement is capable of more than one interpretation. Organists play it loudly or softly with equally good effect provided they manage the rhythmic flow. On the whole the flavour is pastoral, and Mr. Jackson has taken that view of it, even to the extent of calling it 'Pastoral Prelude'—a step in the wrong direction. It would have been more to the purpose to give the source of the work. Not many musicians outside the organ loft will identify it as an organ work, for, attractive as it is, performances of it are comparatively rare. In its small orchestra dress it should be very effective. The music, with its clear texture and pastoral mood, lends itself remarkably well to strings and wood-wind, and is well within the power of good amateur players.

Messrs. Hawkes send a full score of E. J. Moeran's First Rhapsody—an attractive-looking work for large orchestra, based on folk-tunes.

Gabriel Fauré's Quartet in E has just been issued in miniature score by Durand (Novello). H. G.

The Oxford University Press announce that they have appointed Mr. Norman Peterkin as manager of the Anglo-French Music Company, of which they have recently acquired control. Editorial and publishing matters of both businesses will be dealt with at Amen House, E.C., by Mr. Hubert J. Foss.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Ear-Training, Including Musical Appreciation and Rhythmic Movements.' Part 1. For Children from Five to Nine Years of Age. By Mabel Chamberlain.

[Novello, 6*s*.]

There is no more hopeful augury for the future of music in this country than the skill and enthusiasm spent on the subject in our schools. Much still remains to be done—for example, it ought not to be beyond the power of the education authorities to ensure that every school has the benefit of the services of a good musical instructor, either as a visitor or a member of the staff. At present the standard in singing varies to a degree that would not be tolerated in any other subject. We cannot imagine, for example, two neighbouring schools differing so much in the matter of arithmetic that their respective standards would be marked at 100 per cent. and 40 per cent. Yet it is no exaggeration to say that such inequality may be found where music is concerned. Any reader who has had much experience of children's days at competition festivals will have heard performances as wide as the poles asunder in regard to vocal quality and sight-singing, despite the fact that the children belonged to the same district, and were of the same type. Would a test in any of the 'three R's' have yielded so discrepant a result?

Clearly, then, there is much to be done; that it will be done, and in the near future, seems certain. The standard is steadily rising, and the official mind is becoming aware of the value of music as a factor in human life. Above all, the ideas and experiences of enthusiasts who are both musicians and trained teachers are gradually being made available for the rank and file, so that method is rapidly taking the place of muddle.

The mere title-page of Miss Chamberlain's book is an indication of the progress made during recent years so far as fundamental principles are concerned. As Dr. Borland says in his prefatory note, real ear-training formerly had no place in musical education, whether in school, college, or musical academy, and only recently have we come to see the importance of rhythmic training in the very earliest stages of musical education. No less significant is the fact that this large book is concerned only with the teaching of children of an age that was formerly provided for (if at all) by the casual picking up of a few songs 'written down' to the supposed capabilities of small children, and rarely of any musical value. To-day we know that there is no more justification for giving youngsters bad tunes to sing than there is for thinking (as our grandmothers thought) that any old tin-kettle of a pianoforte was good enough for practising purposes. Miss Chamberlain's book thus has the great merit of being based on the unassailable principles that the children must be caught young, put on the right path from the start, and systematically directed.

Those two last words may give pause to the folk who in a vague sort of way regard method as being necessarily inimical to music. An art so largely a matter of taste and imagination, they feel, is apt to lose rather than gain by a systematic treatment where the very young are concerned. But all depends on the system. That laid down in this book has nothing to do with the dry bones of music, but is concerned mainly with its life (rhythm) and its beauty (melody).

The plan of the work is roughly as follows; a few pages of practical hints as to teaching; five Steps dealing with the five years concerned; sections on rhythmic movements; Tonic Sol-fa hand-signs for pitch; arm-beating; the gramophone (with a valuable detailed list of records of various kinds—nursery rhymes and stories, marches, records suitable for lessons on the various instruments of the orchestra, &c.); illustrations of all the orchestral instruments; and an Appendix of exercises in tune and rhythm. This ends the letterpress part of the work. The musical section consists of about fifty songs of various kinds (nursery rhymes, national songs, studies, chants, rounds, descants, &c.; thirty-one rhythmic studies) various kinds of time-stepping, running, tripping, and dancing; and twenty-six pianoforte pieces for use as illustrations, recreation, &c., leading off with a two-part Fugue by Bach, and passing, viâ Handel, Couperin, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, and other classical composers, to a few arrangements of national tunes.

It is a capital idea thus to include under one cover all the music necessary for the carrying out of the scheme of the book, instead of merely referring the teacher to the source. As Dr. Borland says, formerly the musical examples would have called for 'a pile of volumes precariously poised on the pianoforte top.' Nor is the music confined to this section. The letterpress also contains many pages of music, and is sprinkled with music-type illustrations.

The reader may wonder what can be done in the way of teaching the young idea how to shoot in the case of five-year-olds. The first step is in the direction of cultivating musical memory, and for this purpose Miss Chamberlain suggests the use of such sounds as the child-mind has already recorded. Thus, he may be asked to give his recollections of bird-calls, cries of animals, motor horns, clock chimes, &c. Even the blast of a factory siren and the 'S.O.S.' of a police-whistle are laid under contribution—horrid sounds that will give the town youngsters a chance. This is an excellent way of beginning, for, as Miss Chamberlain says, 'the act of recollecting is in itself a feat of memory.' The same plan is adopted in the matter of rhythm, the first example suggested being the postman's knock, and (a happy touch) his double knock when he wants an answer. These and other rhythms may be tapped on a blackboard, or, more realistically, on a cupboard door.

The perception of differences in the quality, pitch, and pace of sounds is developed on the same homely and attractive lines, and so the way is prepared for simple exercises in time and tune. These five-year-olds also make the first steps towards part-singing by observing when music consists of a single part or of several; they are taught to show the values of crotchets and quavers by walking or running steps; the more obvious types of expression, such as soft and loud, slow and quick, are shown by various pieces; the crowning point of Step I. being the interpretation, in rhythmic action, of a few simple pieces and songs. Such a scheme not only ensures that the foundation is well and truly laid; it also provides lessons of an attractive and healthy type. One can be quite sure that the best musicians in the class will also be the brightest and best developed little people. Those of us who have had much to do with the training of choirboys know that the same thing holds good in later childhood. As has often been shown in this journal and elsewhere, one of the main advantages of choir-school-life is that the regular daily study and performance of music develops character and alertness: the best singers and sight-readers almost invariably make their way to the top in other subjects.

The remaining Steps in the book proceed on much the same practical and enjoyable lines. Each places the cultivation of memory in the forefront—a feature so valuable that one wonders whether it exists in any other branch of school work. If not, why not? Surely the development of memory, and its kindred faculty, observation, would be infinitely more valuable than some of the educational trimmings over which a good deal of time is spent. (I have in mind a boy who applied to a friend of mine for a post as office-boy. He didn't know what county Oxford was in, but had a smattering of information on winds, tides, and currents!)

The reader may ask what is the result of this first year's work.

The child will have acquired a sense of (approximately) absolute pitch through memorising the note C (octave above middle C on the pianoforte); he will have memorised as a kind of standard the pace, crotchet = 60, with its subdivision, quaver = 120; a good number of stock sequential figures will also have been got by heart (a particularly useful feature, this, for a variety of reasons); Tonic Sol-fa names (the scale and fe) will be familiar, and the child grounded in the relationships of the various notes; the use of the modulator will have been started by the class forming a 'human modulator,' aided by a chalk-marked floor; the time-names will have been learned, with time-beating as a part of regular work; ear-tests will have become quite advanced; part-singing will be well on the way with two-part ear-tests and the singing of three- and four-part rounds; and a few of the elements of form, such as the structure of simple melodies, &c., will have been grasped. Expression and imagination will have been helped by an explanation of the most frequently used directions, and by the study from an interpretative point of view of a few of the pieces from Schumann's 'Children's Album.' Here is ground well-prepared for future culture! Now, when you and I were aged five to nine . . .

A scheme of such amplitude depends a good deal on its setting forth. Here Miss Chamberlain is to be complimented warmly. Nothing seems to have been overlooked. The page is large, and the varied types convenient; cross-references are numerous; the illustrations are apt and ample. A special word of praise is due in regard to the arrangement and harmonization of the songs and other exercises. It is a frequent complaint that music for use in schools is too difficult, the song accompaniments, for example, often demanding highly-skilled players. Here the needs and limitations of the average teacher have been considered. The bulk of these accompaniments and arrangements are signed 'H. A. C.' Good work of this kind deserves something better than the semi-obscurity of initials. It is not easy to make such things both simple and interesting. The task calls for self-denial as well as musicianship, and many a teacher will bless Mr. Chambers for his use of both.

The book appears to be remarkably free from error. I note that Chopin's Prelude in C minor is called Etude; on page 7, in the music-type figure illustrating the horse's gallop, a crotchet appears instead of a quaver, with jazzy effect; and I am sorry that Miss Chamberlain should use the labels 'Harmonious Blacksmith' and 'Moonlight' Sonata save as alternatives to the proper titles of the works concerned. I must part company with her, too, in a detail of Step I. Speaking of the familiar lavender seller's song, she says that 'a little girl from the class would render the song feelingly, especially if she were provided with some bunches of lavender.' The suggestion as to the lavender comes as a surprise, seeing that Miss Chamberlain shows throughout a full realisation of the importance of developing the imagination. I mention this small point, because a good many teachers are inclined to materialistic methods of interpretation. I recall two instances that occurred in action-song classes at competition festivals. In a song called (I think) 'Dolly's Bedtime,' a class of small girls came on to the platform clad in nightdresses, bearing dolls and lighted candles, the latter being placed on the floor during the song! The hall was packed, the gangways were impassable, and a strong draught blew across the platform between two open doors. I have not spent many more uncomfortable spells than the ten minutes during which Dolly was put to bed. And I need hardly say that the adjudication contained a little bit of plain speaking on the folly (and in this case the appalling danger) of being too literal minded. The other occasion was merely funny. The song was 'Caller Herrin',' and the young fishwives entered with baskets on their arms. It was a hot summer's afternoon, and the song had barely started when I thought I detected an ancient, fish-like smell. Sure enough, with the start of the refrain twenty lassies waved as many bloaters! (When I told this story to a Scots audience, apropos of the abuse of properties in action-songs, there arose a howl of laughter that puzzled me until I was reminded that 'caller' means 'fresh,' and that the unimaginative Southrons with a passion for realism had waved salted ones instead.)

The letterpress and music of the work may be had separately. Dr. Borland contributes an appreciative Preface, and the author's note returns thanks for help received from a group of prominent educational experts. The book is a well-planned bit of work, thoroughly well carried out, with skill, patience, and enthusiasm manifest in every page.

H. G.

'Saint-Saëns.' Par Georges Servières. ('Les Maîtres de la Musique.')

[Paris: Alcan, 7 fr. 50 c.]

This short book is a model of its kind, and an example of French neatness and orderliness in book-making. Nor does it lack the flavour of a delicate irony, e.g., on p. 78, which describes the Saint-Saëns family vault, with all its massy emblems symbolising the composer's > . . . passion for astronomy, his musical vocation, and his love of fame.

The biography occupies rather more than a third of the book. The composer came of Norman peasant stock. There is nothing in the oft-repeated suggestion (based merely on the dimensions of his nose) that there was a Jewish strain. The child was puny, and extraordinarily precocious musically:

> At five he played sonatinas, practised transposition, and analysed the works he played. Before he was seven he was jotting down little compositions, waltzes and galops, with resorting to the pianoforte.

At his first orchestral concert he was delighted by the strings, but horrified by the brass. This reminds us of the child Mozart's horror of trumpets.

Saint-Saëns was lionised as an infant prodigy, but although his development was all that could be expected, and he became a most brilliant technician, the Paris of the Second Empire does not seem to have been very generous to the young man. That Paris was afraid of musical 'science'—Saint-Saëns was too capable :

> His organ compositions, his fame as a contrapuntist, his virtuosity at the pianoforte did him harm.

The celebrated Princess Mathilde was urged to push the young musician's fortunes :

> 'What!' she exclaimed. 'He plays the organ at the Madeleine and the piano in my drawing-room. What more can he want?'

Considering the number of mediocre operas regularly produced year in, year out, by the State theatres at Paris, it is strange what obstacles 'Samson and Delilah' found in its way. The sketch was written at Algiers in 1873, and Act 1 was sung at a concert two years later. The work was published in 1876, and the first performance was at Weimar, on December 2, 1877. It reached Hamburg in 1882, and Rouen in 1890. The Paris production came a few months later.

M. Servières is reticent on the subject of Saint-Saëns's unsuccessful marriage (1875). Husband and wife were not divorced, but made a private agreement to live apart. The two children died in infancy.

Saint-Saëns was enraged by allegations of his 'facility,' and insisted that he worked slowly and laboriously—except when orchestrating :

> I could go on scoring without trouble twelve hours a day.

Our author has seen him :

> He stood upright at a big desk, scattering swarms of notes over the staves with extraordinary velocity and not the least hesitation, and chatting meanwhile with me.

For all his successes and the delight he must have had in the exercise of an art in which he was such a master, Saint-Saëns was not a happy man. He was excessively ambitious, and was unable to rejoice in the progress of rivals. Hence the enthusiasm of Paris at different times for Wagner, for Franck, Strauss, and Stravinsky was a succession of bitter doses for him.

M. Servières reckons 'The Deluge,' 'Samson and Delilah,' and the C minor Symphony as Saint-Saëns's best music. He reproaches pianists ('the most conventional sect of musicians') for forgetting the 'Auvergne' Rhapsody and the 'Africa.' The Scherzo for two pianofortes, Op. 87 (1889), is classed as one of Saint-Saëns's most personal works, witty and elegant.

The early Pianoforte Trio in F remains one of the best-liked of the chamber compositions, but the 'Cello Suite, Op. 16, of the same period, has more nervous vigour. M. Servières considers the 'Cello Sonata, Op. 32, and the first Violin Sonata, in D (the second is colder and less spontaneous), as masterpieces. It is unfortunate that Saint-Saëns was at his most frigid in his string quartets. In one of the last works, the simple Clarinet Sonata, M. Servières finds > . . . the most moving Adagio, perhaps, which the master ever wrote—a sort of religious chant, in a grave-side mood. . . . Was the composer's imagination haunted by the thought of death? It seems likely, for the large consonant chords, of a great nobility, of the Coda of the movement suggest a glimpse of the Beyond.

Discussing the symphonic poems our author demands a high place for 'Phaëton.' There is, it seems, good music in the opera 'Proserpine,' though it suffers from a bad libretto. The plan of 'Samson' may be 'really too rudimentary and of a simplicity which, pushed to that point, becomes indigence' (Dukas). That is due to its having been conceived as an oratorio, and that very fact has helped in its survival, for Saint-Saëns in writing it was independent—unhampered by the exigences and fashions of the contemporary opera-house. And so 'Samson' has survived the pieces of Saint-Saëns written expressly for the theatre.

Melody was not the chief of Saint-Saëns's gifts, and M. Servières reproaches him for some indifference towards his first material. His harmony was always 'just, correct, and classic.' Above all, Saint-Saëns was a contrapuntist. Counterpoint was his natural language. His first ideas may be nondescript, but there is virtuosity in his episodical inventions. The flexibility of Saint-Saëns's counterpoint is less to be sought in the expected places (masses, motets, oratorios) than in the chamber music, orchestral works, and symphonic pages of the operatic pieces.

The most original element of Saint-Saëns is his rhythmical inventiveness. By his varied rhythms he differs principally from Mendelssohn, with whom he has oftentimes been compared. 'Mendelssohn wholly lacked that French fancifulness, caprice, and impulsive mobility.' Two things have worked against the popularity of his music—the lack of warm-heartedness in it, and its refusal to stoop and flatter any vulgar taste. Saint-Saëns's eclecticism is put down by our author not as a concession, but as a sign of a 'timorous, average, self-suspicious character,' and he hints that this 'playing for safety' came to Saint-Saëns as an inherited characteristic from the petty civil servant, his father, who would naturally have been bound by red tape and hedged in by circulars and administrative precedents.

But Saint-Saëns was a true and passionate lover and servant of music. As an executant he was the apostle of Bach, Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, Schumann, and Liszt. In an unmusical period he initiated the French public into the serious side of the art.

C.

'Pronunciation for Voice-Production.' Part 2 of 'Eurhythm: Thought in Action.' By H. H. Hulbert.

[Novello, 1*s.* 6*d.*]

It may be remembered that in response to many inquiries for Novello's Primer, 'Breathing for Voice-Production,' Chapter 8 of 'Eurhythm: Thought in Action' (which is 'Breathing for Voice-Production,' re-written and brought up-to-date) was recently issued as a separate treatise. All those interested in singing and speaking will be glad to hear that Chapter 7, 'The Sounds of the English Language,' and Chapter 9, 'The Articulatory Apparatus,' from the same work, are now issued as another separate treatise, entitled, 'Pronunciation for Voice-Production.'

The author has treated his subject in a very exhaustive manner, and copious exercises follow the analysis of each sound. Some comments on the oo sound are worthy the attention of choir-trainers, in view of the reaction against the excessive use of this vowel in choir-training:

> It is necessary carefully to differentiate between the musical tone of the pure oo sound, and the absence of music in its weak imitation by those who advocate the 'kooing' method of voice-training. The oo vowel has its own special harmonics, and if all of these are produced, like the other vowel sounds, it is full of music, but can easily be deprived of this music by a faulty shape and faulty production. So many musicians are tired of hearing the somewhat dove-like, feeble results of the 'kooing' training, that they have waged an unfair warfare against the pure oo sound. It is just as absurd to attempt to train a voice upon one sound only, as to expect to get good educational results from a part of a subject. All the sounds of a language must be learned if it is desired to speak or sing that language correctly.

Concerning nasal resonance the writer remarks that > . . . in the speaking of English there is a marked absence of nasal resonance, and consequently English people suffer much more from nasal catarrh than they should do, from the neglect of the proper use of the nasal chamber in making the nasal vowels 'm,' 'n,' and 'ng.'

The value of the nasal cavity as a resonance chamber is emphasised, and the opinion is expressed that > . . the possessors of phenomenal voices probably possess large nasal accessory cavities with very thin walls as well as a perfectly symmetrical vocal apparatus.

The discussion on diphthongs is particularly illuminating. Dr. Hulbert says:

> . . . the neglect of the proper pronunciation of the musical English diphthongs is so remarkable that it can be stated without fear of contradiction that no educated English person can pronounce them properly unless he has been carefully trained to do so by some one possessing the gift of an ear sufficiently musical to detect their real value.

The second part of the book contains a lucid description of the articulatory apparatus, illustrated by diagrams. Another diagram shows the various shapes for the vowel sounds. Included also are exercises for the soft palate, the tongue, the lower jaw, and the lips. G. G.

'A Cyclopædic Dictionary of Music.' By Ralph Dunstan.

[Curwen, 25*s*.]

This is the fourth edition of a work that has long since proved its value. It now contains 632 pages—a hundred more than formerly—and the additions comprise about four thousand new musical terms, a series of short articles on, and definitions of, plain-song terms and other musico-liturgical subjects, articles on Jewish music, about three hundred new biographical references, and about a thousand additions and corrections to the existing entries. The work has been done by an editorial board representing the various European countries, South Africa, Canada, the United States, and India, the translation and collation being in the hands of Dr. G. A. Pfister. A casual glance has revealed some interesting developments. For example, in the new edition the valuable bibliography shows fifty-six works on the organ and its repertory against thirty-two in the old edition. Musical periodicals in this country have increased very little—from twenty-one to twenty-four. But one cannot be certain on this point, for the new list seems to have been added to, but not revised. The addresses of several journals are out of date. The Musician no longer exists, having been absorbed by the Music Teacher; the latter appears under its old name the Music Student; that fine quarterly Music and Letters is given as a monthly; the Musical Standard has long since been a fortnightly, not a weekly; The Organ, a well-established quarterly, does not appear, nor does the monthly Musical Mirror, the Scottish Musical Record, nor Music and Youth and its junior companion, Pan-Pipes. On the other hand, one or two of the journals mentioned seem to be defunct; at all events, we never see or hear of them. Happily the few other references we have examined appear to be correct. We have always kept 'Dunstan' within arm's reach, and found it a very present help. Despite that largely fictitious list of musical journals, we expect the new edition to be even more of a stand-by, so up it goes, next to 'Grove.'

'Nuova Teoria dell' Armonia.' By A. Gentili.

[Bocca, Turin.]

A large volume of nearly six hundred pages testifies to the industry of Signor Gentili, who provides in his 'Nuova Teoria' an exhaustive examination of harmonic problems, viewed in the light of strict logic and history. It is a work which will commend itself to the theorist rather than to the practitioner. Signor Gentili takes us right through to modern times, and gives all that is due to the masters of previous epochs. And this is exactly matter which the historian and the theorist can most appraise. For the average student the theory of harmony is something different, and perhaps the time is not far distant when the whole curriculum will have to be reconsidered. As those whose duty it is to consider the work of young people well know, the most common error is not ignorance of harmonic laws, but ignorance of the canons of logic and good taste. The admirable work of Signor Gentili provides an excellent and stimulating grammar of music; but it is meant for the grammarian rather than for those who turn to a grammar merely as a means to an end. Naturally enough, we should all of us be the better for having mastered thoroughly every possible branch of our art. But if art is long, life is short, and our student days shorter still. Hence the need to find the shortest way to the goal. This is worth saying, perhaps, because it is a little disheartening to reflect upon all this thought and labour failing to reach the wide public. To our thinking the present need is not for a more complex system, but for shorter and more direct methods. There is no apparent reason why the teaching of composition should not follow in its main lines the teaching of language. Both share a common aim, i.e., to give an artist command of his medium. But while in the teaching of language the practical application is placed constantly before the student, in the teaching of composition the theory is often years behind practice. To some extent this can be explained by the rapidity and thoroughness with which changes and modifications take place in music, while the tools of the writer change hardly at all in a whole century. But unless we attempt somehow to neutralise the ill-effects of the phenomenon, and fill in as best we can the lacunæ, we run the risk of leaving young students without guidance just when guidance is most necessary. They will inevitably turn to the heroes of their own time; they cannot resist the glamour of a Strauss or a Debussy. What, in the circumstances, is the duty of the teacher? Obviously not only to explain how new harmonic combinations come into being, but their æsthetic purpose and exact æsthetic worth. There is the pitfall which so many young people seem utterly unable to avoid. They seem wanting in the power to discriminate between the right and the wrong place for a certain chord. They use a Stravinsky pattern for twenty bars, and then plunge with perfect sang-froid into Haydn's manner. They use light and piquant harmonies in a heavy and clumsy manner. The immense majority seem utterly unaware that economy of means is a test of fine workmanship. The only remedy to all this is, in our opinion, the study of the best modern models. These alone can inform the natural tastes of the student and direct him in the way he should go—short, of course, of powerful individual genius. But the schools cannot take into account or provide for genius. Genius is well able to take care of itself. What the schools can and must do is to make the best of talent. Signor Gentili has cleared with great patience and learning the roots of harmony. This would be admirable if there were not an urgent need to disentangle and thin out the topmost branches.

B. V.

'Wagner's Music-Drama of "The Ring."' By L. Archier Leroy.

[Noel Douglas, 12*s.* 6*d.*]

This handsomely-printed volume of a hundred and ninety-six pages covers familiar ground. Pages 2-13 are simple biography; pages 61-188 tell the story of the tetralogy straightforwardly and readably, with cursory reference to the Leading Motives. It is in no sense a musical analysis. Three pages of rather fanciful music-type at the end quote the principal Motives.

Wagner's own reading of the origin of the Nibelung myths is quoted uncritically. The author's chief originality, perhaps, is the importance he attributes to the dramatic as opposed to the musical interest of 'The Ring.' Mr. H. S. Chamberlain recently published a book to extol Wagner as a dramatist, but it is a view commoner in Germany than here. Mr. Leroy is so bold as to associate Wagner with Æschylus, Shakespeare, and Molière as one of 'the four corner-stones of the great world-theatre.' Here is the most original suggestion in the book:

> Unfortunately, thanks in large measure to the fact that the music-mind had dominated pre-Wagnerian opera, post-Wagnerian criticism and exegesis has been limited almost entirely to musical authorities. This peculiar inelasticity is demonstrated to-day very clearly by the fact that our principal journals send their musical critics to deal with Wagnerian opera, when, if they cannot send both dramatic and musical critics, it is perfectly obvious that preference should be given to the former.

Yet it is not obvious at all. But it is a happy thought. Only we fear that on the day it is carried out Wagner will get a drubbing such as will make the most vicious attacks of the mid-Victorian musical critics look like mere gnats'-bites. No; Wagner's librettos considered as pure drama will simply not hold water. Mr. Leroy does not attempt to prove his case. Still, we should like to see his happy thought adopted just once in a way, for the sake of the gaiety of nations.

Mr. Leroy is, it will be gathered, little enough interested in music. The older operatic arias were, he thinks, 'mere lifeless exercises for the larynx of some popular soprano.' An unsubstantiated and absurd statement.

The author sees in Wagner's plot 'a criticism of the finance-materialism of his time,' and an 'underlying criticism of bourgeois mentality,' but again he does not develop the thesis. (But Mr. Bernard Shaw did so well, for what it is worth, many years ago.)

He desires far more spectacular and realistic performances of 'The Ring' than we know. He feels it seriously that 'no theatrical engineer has yet provided a really workable steam-curtain.' He appears to be in no wise alarmed at the aids to Wagnerism he foresees for posterity, such as 'perhaps the three-dimensional and panchromatic kinema of the future, combined with synchronised reproduction and amplification of voice and orchestra.' This seems to us a vague but terrible threat, and on the day of its realisation Mr. Leroy's bugbear, 'the tyrany of the music-mind,' will certainly be routed with humiliation.

The book is provided with an introduction by Mr. H. R. Barbor, who is also in favour of something new and dashing in the way of Wagnerian stagecraft; and with wood engravings by Mr. Paul Nash, of an extremely austere and grim cubism.

For ourselves we do not believe for a moment in this passion for dressing a great artist of the past 'up-to-date.' The works of Æschylus, Shakespeare, and Molière are best seen in the conditions for which they were written. Why not leave Wagner his Bayreuthian scenery of 1876? It may be quaint, but it belongs to the period—it is Wagnerian, and that, Mr. Nash's cubes and Mr. Leroy's 'synchronised reproduction and amplification of voice and orchestra' never will be.

C.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Modern French Music.' By Edward Burlinghame Hill. Pp. 406. George Allen & Unwin, 15*s.*

'Rubato, or the Secret of Expression in Pianoforte Playing.' By J. Alfred Johnstone. Pp. 56. Joseph Williams, cloth, 4*s.* 6*d.*; paper, 3*s.*

'The Appreciation of Music by Means of the "Pianola" and "Duo-Art."' By Percy A. Scholes. Pp. 155. Oxford University Press, 5*s.*

'Musical Taste and How to Form It.' By M.-D. Calvocoressi. Pp. 88. Oxford University Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'The Common Sense of Music.' By Sigmund Spaeth. Pp. 374. Bodley Head, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'Ti-me-kun-dan, Prince of Buddhist Benevolence,' A Mystery Play. Pp. 128. (Translated from the Tibetan text by Millicent H. Morrison.) John Murray, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The Moral Destiny of British Music. Pp. 24. London: L. V. Hatt.

The autumn tour of the British National Opera Company will open at Leeds on September 14, and will go on until December 12, with visits to Glasgow, Edinburgh, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Manchester, Sheffield, and Birmingham.

SOME VARIETIES OF OPERATIC EXPERIENCE

By Frank Howes

Opera, we know, is a bastard art that has achieved respectability by the sheer tenacity of its existence. At any rate the two chief families now move in the very best circles. The one still maintains the mode of life of its Italian forbears, and lives and has its being to continuous musical accompaniment. The other branch with German blood in its veins is less high-minded, and tolerates the flippancy of spoken dialogue. But beside these two aristocratic and unexceptionable houses the past history and the current practice of the arts show a number of more obscure descendants from the union of music with the stage. The ballet, since its return from Russia, is accepted as a well-connected art, and does not concern us here, but some of the poorer relations have had a remarkably good show during the season just ended.

From the 'Agamemnon' of Æschylus to Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' is a fair step, a matter of twenty-three centuries or so in time, and an immeasurable change in any respect one can think of save one—both are attempts to present in artistic form a story set in a musical commentary. The boys of Bradfield College gave us the chance of making the acquaintance of this venerable ancestor, and the Royal Choral Society its very pert posterity, between Monday and Saturday of a single week in June.

In the Greek drama the lyrical portions of the chorus are of equal importance with the action, but the two are kept sharply apart: so that there is no difficulty in their relations—less even than in a ballad opera. The difficulty which Mr. D. G. A. Fox, who wrote the music for the Bradfield play, had to tackle was of a different kind. To be strictly archæological was impossible, though Mr. Abdy Williams once tried to get the nearest thing possible to genuine Greek music. To use modern technique and instruments would be hopelessly incongruous with the other Greek stage conventions employed. Mr. Fox's compromise preserved the spirit of the tragedy and the Greek method, but avoided outraging modern ears by its strangeness. The choral recitative was set to a free melody of a plainsong type, with frequent changes of time-signature, and was sung for the most part in unison in accordance with Greek practice. This strictness, however, was not rigidly observed, since here and there the chorus broke into two and three parts, and the accompaniment had a measure of independence. The instruments used were six lyres and four auloi—the latter being copied from an ancient bas-relief—simple pipes with a reed mouthpiece and emitting a very quiet noise in quality like the alto and tenor registers of a harmonium. When the limitations are remembered, Mr. Fox's achievement is seen to have been remarkable. The interesting thing to the opera-goer is that action and commentary are kept strictly separate, but that the musical part moves faster than the dramatic, and that the balance of interest is almost equal, with a slight preponderance to the dramatic side.

If from Æschylus we turn to Strauss we find all this reversed. Anything less like a Greek tragedy than 'Elektra' would be hard to find: for not only has the fundamental restraint (σωφροσύνη) of the Greek artistic temper gone, but the actual balance of interests has shifted, though the component elements are much the same except that a dozen elders or slaves who chant poetry have become a hundred orchestral players. In 'Elektra' the dramatic interest is almost nil. Orestes and Elektra do recognise one another on the stage, but no one pays any attention to them because their volcanic emotions are boiling over out of the orchestral crater. The opera is really a symphonic poem with voices obbligati, in which the pace of the music is far slower than that of the drama and its interest incomparably greater.

We now leave Covent Garden and go to the Albert Hall. Here we find a good deal of violence being done to artistic forms, but it is a jolly entertainment and stills the protests of a too energetic conscience with a new appeal to the eye. 'Hiawatha' is a narrative, not a drama, and to put it on the stage at all involves not a few dramatic absurdities. Thus Iago is superfluously present in the flesh while his doings are being related by the chorus. But a semi-dramatic interest is added to the work by giving it in operatic form and at one point comes to the aid of the music. Every one feels the weakness of the third cantata, 'Hiawatha's Departure,' compared with the first two parts; the musical interest peters out so that one becomes bored with the hero and a little hazy about what he is doing. When, however, eight hundred Indians stretch out sixteen hundred arms towards him as he embarks in his canoe one is made to feel what the music alone fails to convey—that this is the culmination of Hiawatha's career, the climax of the story. And so the work gains a new unity. Moreover, we get a new union of the stage with music in which the place of drama is taken by spectacle—a kind of cinema-art, perhaps, but better, and full of possibilities.

The possibilities, in fact, could be seen at Guildford a week or two earlier, where a compound of many arts was presented in a pageant play, 'The Town of the Ford.' Here the main skeleton of the structure was again dramatic, though the real interest was spectacular. The text, admirable for its purpose, could not be called a great literary work, and was really subordinate to the arts of colour and movement. Music was in this case reduced to a mere embellishment, but it had been worked into the fabric of the pageant so skilfully as to appear an integral part of it. In an ordinary historical pageant this can hardly ever be done because of the discrepancy between historic and poetic truth that arises when the attempt is made to unfold the two together, and at the same pace. But this 'pageant-play' contained several fanciful episodes in which music appeared a natural medium in which to say and do things. In the episode of 'The Fair Maid of Astolat,' melodrama (in the strict sense) was successfully employed, and formed an easy transition between speech and song. At one point the spoken words of the drama were accompanied by a harp and subdued female chorus, and the voices of the River calling for Elaine mingling with the litanies of her bower maidens, formed a kind of counter-subject to the fatal course of Elaine's love for Launcelot, with the voice of the River prevailing in the end. Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill, the composer of this quite considerable amount of incidental music, used melodrama fairly liberally, but only in non-realistic scenes where, if skilfully performed, it is effective. The other big musical episode was a Masque of Gloriana. But if we are considering Masques, we had better go down the line a few stations to Haslemere.

In 'Cupid and Death,' a Masque by James Shirley, with music by Christopher Gibbons and Matthew Lock, which Mr. Anthony Bernard gave at Haslemere, at Whitsuntide, we come full cycle to a play in which action and music are separated. We have a chorus of the Greek type commenting on the action but taking no part in it, but we also have an orchestra contributing interludes and dance music of its own. As in a ballad opera we also have an early example of recitative beside the set songs. Like its modern descendant, the revue, the masque provides an opportunity for the display of pretty frocks and other spectacular allurements, and we have some most entertaining comic scenes, including a hilarious dance by two ancient couples rejuvenated on the edge of the grave by Cupid's arrows shot at them in error.

And so it would appear that the possibilities of blending music with the arts of the stage are endless. In the June Musical Times 'Feste' complains that 'At the Boar's Head' has been wrongly criticised as 'undramatic.' It may not be an opera, it may be merely a 'musical interlude,' in which the action leads to no dramatic climax; its interest may be, as he says, literary and musical. That in itself does not make it a failure. Drama is not the only art of the stage, and there are more ways than one of compounding works of art out of music and stage-craft. Bastards are they? Perhaps, but good citizens for all that.

Occasional Notes

Within a few days of the publication of this issue of the Musical Times, the thirty-first season of the 'Proms.' will have started. Few changes are in prospect, and those few will, we believe, be for the better. More of Mozart will be heard than in the past, a large number of his works being down for the Tuesdays—Symphonies, Divertimenti, and Serenades. Hitherto a symphony has always been a feature of Wednesday; this year the programmes on that evening will be alternately symphonic and classical, with Bach predominating in the latter. Thursdays will, as heretofore, contain a proportion of new and unfamiliar works, with a capital new feature in the English Singers. This is a very happy idea. There must be many a promenader who hears little of what is now being done in the way of madrigal singing, and no doubt there are others (members of choirs, conductors, &c.) who will welcome this opportunity for an object-lesson. Moreover, the vocal music at these concerts has too long been confined to operatic extracts in the first half of the programme and ballads in the second. A group of unaccompanied items will be a relief of a delightful and instructive type. On Fridays the 'Nine' will of course be played. This year, however, the old plan of playing them in chronological order will be restored.

We may take some small credit for Saturday's innovation. For some years past we have pleaded for the proper use of the organ as a solo instrument, pointing out that this country is rich in fine players worthy to rank beside our other instrumental soloists. The former use of the organ as a mere provider of 'religioso' backgrounds to a few items such as Handel's 'Largo' was a shabby treatment of organ, organists, and organ composers, and we are glad to see that on every Saturday evening an organ solo will be played by a representative English organist. We have only one small complaint to make in regard to this new feature: all the items are by Bach. That John Sebastian should have the biggest show in organ solo work of course we admit, but other composers have written organ music hardly less worthy. We believe the Saturday promenaders would thoroughly enjoy (say) the Reubke Sonata, the splendid Liszt Fugue on 'Ad nos,' a Vierne movement, or even some of the organ music of British composers—Howells, Frank Bridge, Harwood, Stanford, Wolstenholme—these and others have written works worth playing in any company. However, we must not be in a hurry. Now that the organ is to be given a fair show, there is hope that its repertory—which is less meagre than most non-organist musicians imagine—will soon be similarly favoured.

Mr. Jack Hylton's advertisement for an orchestrator for his 'jazz-band' drew 678 applications. Report says that the post has been given to Mr. Hubert Bath. A good deal of speculation was raised by Mr. Hylton's announcement in the Press that the 678 aspirants included one who is 'perhaps the most distinguished British composer alive to-day.' Had there been no 'perhaps' we should naturally have feared that Elgar's gifts in orchestration were to be lavished on Mr. Hylton's band. It now turns out that the composer referred to was Mr. Josef Holbrooke. Mr. Hylton told a Daily Graphic interviewer that Mr. Holbrooke is about to write a work for his (Mr. Hylton's) band that will, in his (Mr. Holbrooke's) own words, 'petrify the critics.' Mr. Hylton himself, however, seemed not at all excited at the prospect. Indeed, he was quite patronising. 'I don't know that Holbrooke will be absolutely wonderful for my class of stuff,' he said, 'but I should say we might do something with him.' Clearly, if anybody is to be 'petrified,' it won't be Mr. Hylton.

Here is one way of describing a singer's return to his native town. We take it from the Musical Courier, which 'conveyed' it from a 'gatling-gun weekly' called Time:

> With a brand new paper suit-case, in look-me-over suitings and silk cravat, small boys see themselves in dreams returning, rich, famous, to astound the goateed station agent, the paunchy hotel proprietor, the sheriffs, rumdums and soda clerks of their old home town.
>
> * * *
>
> Last week Lawrence Tibbett, twenty-eight year-old U.S. baritone who came to fame one evening in 'Falstaff' at the Metropolitan Opera House, returned to the hamlet of Bakersfield, Cal. His travelling appointments and haberdashery were in perfect taste. In the local opera house, he lifted the voice that had made the gallery-ghouls of the Metropolitan beat their palms red and had thrilled the tympana of the Diamond Horseshoe. Striving to please, Baritone Tibbett continued his concert three-quarters of an hour overtime. 'I gave my best,' he said. Bakersfield bankers and merchants agreed that his tone was pleasing, his diction creditable.

From Punch:

OUR CYNICAL ORGANISTS

At a wedding:

> During the signing of the register the anthem, 'See that ye love another' (Wesley), was rendered by the choir.—Local Paper.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

The first note concerns prices. The Company asks me to refer to the fact that on August 1 the prices of the Light Blue label series will be reduced, the 12-in. by one shilling, the 10-in. by sixpence. This means a substantial reduction in the cost of symphonies and other long works. For example, 'The Planets,' in album, now costs 45*s.* 6*d.* instead of 52*s.* 6*d.* This change is gratifying to musicians, because it has been made possible by the large sales of such works, and so proves their contention that the gramophone public for good music is large enough to be catered for generously. It took the various companies some time to realise that there are some hundreds of thousands of folk with no use for shop ballads and jazz, but it is to their credit that, having realised it, they rose to the occasion handsomely.

The chief item in the July list is Beethoven's fifth Symphony, played by the London Symphony Orchestra under Weingartner. It fills eight sides, and for the benefit of readers who wish for a movement only, I point out that the opening movement is on the first record, the Andante on the second, and the Scherzo carries us half-way through the second side of the third. This is a really good set. The detail is clearer than usual; for once in a way we hear the ominous drum-part in the bridge-passage between the Scherzo and the Finale. The playing is first-rate, except in one respect: in the opening movement the three quavers of the 'knocking' motive are not always unanimous —so much so that in one case the figure is  rather than  (I presume this is not a peculiarity due to my instrument.) The Scherzo is particularly good, the fugato section especially so. The interpretation is of the sound, classical type that Weingartner stands for. Some people like it, others prefer a more vivid reading. I mention this so that readers who don't know Weingartner shall have no cause to complain on finding he is not a Toscanini.

The Bach Chaconne, transcribed for viola solo, is played by Lionel Tertis (two 12-in.). In some respects the work gains; there is more richness and breadth. On the other hand the more brilliant variations perhaps suffer somewhat. String players will find this an engrossing record; the rest of us, in the outer darkness of Philistia, will still feel that this great work is best with accompaniment. A solo violin or viola has to work desperately hard to make some of the chord-playing convincing.

The only other instrumental record, apart from the usual lively lot of dances, is one of the Grenadier Guards Band, conducted by Lieut. George Miller, playing Jullien's 'British Army Fantasia' (two 12-in.). An interesting survival, this, with its naive programme, from Daybreak to the Night Tattoo, Alarm, Attack, and Victory. The work was originally known as the British Army Quadrilles, and it made a mighty hit on its production about seventy years ago. There is some extraordinarily good playing in this record, especially on the part of the wood-wind.

Vocal records call for few words, and those not pleasant ones. It is something of a shock to hear such a singer as Elsa Stralia stooping to a couple of the feeblest of songs by d'Hardelot—'Sometimes in my dreams' and 'Because.' It is a satisfaction to be able to say that she sings them as badly as they deserve, especially 'Because.'

Riccardo Stracciari is heard, with orchestra, in a couple of extracts from Leoncavallo's 'Zaza'; here again the music is not worthy of the singer. Other operatic records are of Arnoldo Lindi in airs from 'Carmen,' 'Tosca,' 'Aïda,' and 'Forza del destino' (two 10-in.); Benvenuto Franci, who draws on 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' 'Gioconda,' and 'Andrea Chénier' (two 10-in.); and Ernesto Badini, in extracts from 'Gianni Schicchi' and 'The Magic Flute.' These records on the whole (like most operatic vocal records) suffer from a lack of balance. We hear too much of the voice and too little of the orchestral part. The result is that at times the harmonic progressions are difficult to follow. This frequently means a loss of effect in the voice-part. Many a simple vocal phrase is nothing in itself; it derives its significance largely from the harmonic background —some striking progression, an enharmonic change, &c. If we don't get this background, away goes a lot of the interest. All the recording companies need to look to this point.

H.M.V.

Debussy's 'Fêtes' (No. 2 of Three Nocturnes) makes a brilliant record. I know of few, if any, better in regard to vivid tone, colouring, and clarity of texture. It is a happy thought to record 'Fêtes,' for gramophonists appear to have little of this side of Debussy—a side that records better (and wears better) than his more elusive (I had almost said invertebrate) essays. The performance of 'Fêtes' is by the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald (12-in.).

Another excellent record is that of the Catterall Quartet's playing of Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 2, in G (three 12-in.). This is an early work, transparent and wholly delightful.

The only remaining instrumental record that has come up for review is also a first-rater—a 12-in. of Erika Morini playing Wieniawski's Capriccio Valse and Romance (from Concerto No. 2). This young violinist made a very successful London début recently, and hearing her playing of the first of these two pieces, with its extraordinary finish and delicacy, one can back up all the handsome things written of her. In the Romance, however, the vibrato is rather too pronounced.

On the vocal side, a good deal of interest attaches to a 12-in. of a couple of duets from 'Der Rosenkavalier,' sung by Eva Plaschke von der Östen and Minnie Nast. The voices are delightful, but the total effect is not entirely satisfactory, especially in the duet from Act 2, where the texture is confused. There is a batch of operatic records—Toti dal Monte in 'Una voce' (yet one more to add to the stack of records of this battle-horse!) and 'Caro Nome' (12-in.); Maria Jeritza in two excerpts from 'Fedora'—poor music, this, and not to be saved even by Jeritza (10-in.); and Dinh Gilly in the Prologue to 'Pagliacci' (12-in.). This last is a fine bit of singing, but Mr. Gilly's English, though clear enough to shame most of our own singers, is too quaint to allow us to be serious all the time. Even so, no doubt, does English singing of strange tongues sound to foreign ears!

A 10-in. gives us the Trinity Choir singing a 'Prayer of Thanksgiving' (an arrangement of a Netherlands folk-song) and the hymn, 'Hark, hark, my soul,' to Dykes's tune. I don't know where this Trinity Choir hails from; no indication is given. Its singing is raucous, and frequently out of tune. I marvel that H.M.V. should make and circulate this appalling record of feeble music badly sung. In the monthly list it appears on the page headed 'Vocal and Humorous.' It is courtesy to call it 'vocal,' and it certainly made me laugh, so perhaps . . .

VOCALION

There is always a welcome for Purcell, and here is one of his best works—the so-called 'Golden' Sonata, for two violins and pianoforte (arranged by Moffat), played by Adila Fachiri and Jelly d'Aranyi, with Ethel Hobday at the keyboard. A thoroughly enjoyable bit of work all round (two 12-in.).

A capital military band record is that of H.M. Life Guards, conducted by Lieut. H. Eldridge, in a selection from 'Carmen' (12-in.). Vladimir Rosing rivals Chaliapin, in a 12-in. of Moussorgsky's 'Death's Serenade' and 'Trepak,' both from the composer's 'Death Cycle.' If you can hear these, especially the first, without a thrill that is positively uncomfortable, it takes more to harrow you than me.

Horace Stevens sings vigorously in Elgar's 'Pipes of Pan' and 'Hiawatha's Vision,' both with orchestral accompaniment. But he is too consistently hard in tone, and the few quiet passages lack resonance. Some of his loud singing leads to the defective balance already mentioned: it temporarily wipes out the orchestra—a thing it would never do on the concert platform.

DIRECTORS OF MUSIC IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS

By the kind invitation of Sir Hugh Allen, the annual summer Conference of the Union of Directors of Music in Secondary Schools was held at Oxford on July 1 and 2. A representative gathering of about forty members assembled, by permission of the Provost and Fellows, in Worcester College, which with its beautiful gardens provides an ideal setting for such proceedings.

In opening the first meeting, Sir Hugh Allen emphasised the change which had taken place during the past twenty-five years in the standard of musicianship shown by those who came up to Oxford from the public schools. What would have taken two years to do at the beginning of this period could now be done in a term.

The Rev. A. Ramsbotham (Preacher of the Old Charterhouse) read a paper on 'Public School Music from the Point of View of a Parent and an Old Boy.' In his own school-days, he said, there was no office of musical director. The position was filled by a gentleman who was also house-master and form-master, but who was the only member of the school staff with any real knowledge or initiative with regard to music. In those days there was little or no recognition of music as an educational factor.

In dealing with present conditions the speaker referred, amongst other things, to the orchestra at St. Paul's Girls' School, where, under Mr. Holst, anyone, apparently, can be called upon to play any instrument without previous warning! The encouragement of concerted music of all kinds, instrumental as well as vocal, was warmly advocated. Enthusiasm was far more important than technique, for in the public schools there were few budding professionals. The gramophone, again, was valuable as setting ideals of performance, but the music should always be explained and followed from the score.

Dr. T. Wood (late of Tonbridge) said that the primary duty of a musical director was to foster discrimination amongst the rank and file of boys. A love of good music would be easy to foster if only good music were heard; but jazz had the fatal defect of being fashionable in boys' homes. How was it to be dealt with? If they, as teachers, did nothing, the music heard and played at school would be unfavourably contrasted with the music heard and played at home. An attitude of superiority was useless. The matter should be explained to the whole school; boys could not be trusted to draw their own inferences from merely hearing good music as well as bad.

The animated discussion which followed the papers covered a wide range of topics. Sir Hugh Allen protested against the identification made by some speakers of 'popular music' with jazz. Popular music, he said, was what we all enjoyed—Bach's Orchestral Suites, for example. The Rev. A. H. Peppin (late of Rugby) considered that a school orchestra was the ideal method of meeting the desire of educational psychologists for something which combined technical skill with team work. Dr. J. W. Ivimey (Marlborough) deprecated the use of vocal gramophone records. One of his singing pupils had modelled his style on Caruso records, but his successful imitation of them included the scratch. Mr. C. M. Spurling (Oundle) said that any boy could be made to like the best music if only he took a part in it. The question of jazz in schools was also discussed by several speakers.

At the second meeting, Sir Michael Sadler was in the chair, and Mr. H. C. Colles spoke on 'The Place of Taste in Education.' The training of taste, he said, originated in this generation. Aural training, though technical, was an absolute necessity. 'Appreciation'—a term he did not like—needed careful watching. The use of the gramophone had certain disadvantages. Its tone was not musical, and it was apt to make the worse music appear the better. The young had probably no power of making a mental translation into the tone-qualities of a real performance. The simple things—e.g., the distinction between pure and impure tone, between vigorous and feeble rhythm—should come first. Most people liked music, and a few needed it enough to pay for it. Those who needed it were only those who had the perception to distinguish its fundamental points.

After discussion, Mr. Cyril Bailey (Fellow of Balliol) spoke on 'The Needs of the Amateur.' He began with a delightful musical autobiography, and urged teachers not to treat amateurs as though they were professionals, but to tell them just enough technically to show how music worked—the elements of harmony; the functions of inner parts; the structure of Sonatas, Fugues, and Variations; the differences between the styles of different composers, and so forth. Music was now recognised in schools; the next step was to bring it into relation with other subjects of study.

Other guests of the Conference were the Provost of Worcester College (the Rev. F. J. Lys), Dr. Ernest Walker (Balliol), and Dr. C. B. Rootham (St. John's, Cambridge); while among the members attending were the Musical Directors of Ampleforth, Berkhamsted, Charterhouse, Cheltenham, Denstone, Eton, The Leys, Malvern, Marlborough, Mill Hill, Oundle, Rugby, and Wellington. The arrangements were in the hands of Mr. F. H. Shera (Malvern), this year's President, and Dr. R. S. Thatcher (Charterhouse), the hon. secretary.

Player-Piano Notes*

BY WILLIAM DELASAIRE

CLASSICAL

Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 10, No. 2, in F, is issued this month in straight-cut form (A.C. T24,640/2), but in my opinion is valuable more as a contribution to a complete library of the Sonatas than for any intrinsic merit. The Alberti bass is well to the fore, of course, but without the compensating advantages of strong themes or striking design. I am reminded of the remark of Mr. Deems Taylor recently quoted in these columns: 'With what reluctance no one will ever know, I am being driven to admit, after several seasons of enforced listening to Beethoven, that he has his points.' No doubt many of my readers would willingly engage a modern Torquemada to deal with such heretical implications, but I suggest that this work was not one which played a prominent part in Mr. Taylor's conversion. And with some trepidation I should couple with it the Minuet in G, played by Ethel Leginska (A.C. A799). It may be that I am merely tired of it, having heard violinists deal with it so frequently, but I can record only that I do not like it, the reason why I cannot exactly tell.

Two 'Animatic' rolls of outstanding merit are César Franck's Prelude, Chorale, et Fugue, played by Cortôt (A.N. 51,837/8). No player-pianist who takes his instrument at all seriously should be without this work, which will provide him with a never-ending source of interest — thematic, harmonic, constructional, and emotional. The climax, where the three themes are combined, is surely one of the great moments of pianism. And with any sort of attention to your playing, and with Cortôt's help, you should be able to rise superior to many performances of ambitious débutantes, for whom its technical difficulty is a fatal bar to the interpretation of its mystic beauty. Incidentally, in these, as in all 'Animatic' rolls, many notes which the recording pianist had perforce to 'clip' are lengthened to their full value, thus making it much easier to use the sustaining pedal properly. With many hand-played rolls it is difficult to catch short but essential bass notes with the pedal unless the automatic sustaining device is used—and this is notoriously unsatisfactory.

Chopin's Scherzo in B minor is finely played by Myrtle Elvyn (A.N. 56,366), and gives us the composer in a vigorous and dramatic mood, contrasting well with the Nocturne, Op. 55, No. 2, in E flat, played by Sapellnikov (A.N. 50,104). This, of course, is much more sophisticated than the too-popular one in the same key, and is remarkable for some beautiful long phrases and numerous little harmonic touches to which the player gives emphasis. These are all accented on the roll, and make it a fine example of the hand-played variety.

POPULAR

The majority of the 'Duo-Art' rolls are in this category, the biggest being Liszt's 'Hungarian Rhapsody' No. 14 (A.C. 6,808). I think I need do no more than merely record this, and add that Friedman's playing could not be surpassed. Paderewski's 'Polonaise,' Op. 9, No. 6 (A.C. 6,463) played by Harold Bauer, strikes me as rather commonplace. The harmony of the first subject is exceedingly irritating to me, and the subsequent treatment does nothing to remove this impression. Genevieve Pitot again provides three salon pieces, in which her playing is often worthy of better material. The best is quite a good arrangement of Wieniawski's 'Romance' from his Violin Concerto in D minor, Op. 22 (A.C. 6,801). The others are 'Eldorado,' by H. N. Bartlett (A.C. 6,688), which hardly lives up to the title, and Terschak's 'Murillo' (A.C. 6,746), which is pattern music at its emptiest. I had hoped that by this time the 'Dying Poet' was comfortably dead, but I find that his lingering end is once more prolonged by Josef Martin (A.C. 6,055). From merely dying we pass upwards to be greeted by the 'Angel's Serenade' (A.C. 6,723), in which the agnostic's gloomiest prognostications are confirmed.

George Gershwin plays the latter portion (Andantino and Finale) of his much-heralded 'Rhapsody in Blue' (A.C. 6,878). I have endeavoured to listen to it with an open ear, but am bound to say that it appears to me to be not much more than a collection of harmonic clichés done into syncopation. Despite the label, the composer has played only some of the notes, the roll being amplified to an alarming degree in places, at which points it becomes merely noisy, in my opinion. It is an interesting roll, but beyond saying this I prefer to sit on the fence a little longer.

I like Rachmaninov's Prelude in G minor, Op. 23, No. 5 (A.C. A.803), immensely. Hand-played by Hofmann with a fine, rhythmic impulse, it has a splendid opening theme, while the lyrical outburst of the second subject is an inspired example of the virtue of contrast. With equal intensity I dislike German's 'Torch Dance' from the 'Henry VIII.' Dances (A.C. A.805), but would not wish my personal prejudices to deter anyone from playing it, so will add that Robert Armbruster's playing is unexceptionable.

The best of the 'Animatic' rolls is Paderewski's Thème Varié, Op. 16, in A, magnificently played by Backhaus (A.N. 50,777). It is an excellent example of the variation form in which a simple theme is treated in a manner at once interesting and perfectly suited to the pianoforte. I most certainly recommend this roll. Margarete Isenberg plays Arensky's lovely Etude, Op. 41, No. 2, in F sharp (A.N. 5,007). It is much in the style of Chopin's Prelude in the same key, and I make bold to say that it might well have been signed by him. Bearing no traces of his impressionist style, but none the less a charming little piece, is Debussy's first Arabesque, in E, played by Michael V. Zadora (A.N. 51,802); it lends itself very well to the player-piano, and provides much opportunity for fine phrasing. I have had a pleasant surprise in Louis Brassin's Nocturne, 'Au Clair de la Lune' (A.N. 50,064). The composer is almost unknown to me, but assisted greatly by the player, Sally Liebling, one hears a delightful little tune accompanied by an excellent left-hand part; the second subject provides a fine solo in the tenor octave supported by right-hand arabesques—the whole making a splendid pianistic piece. Elgar's well-known 'Chanson de Matin' makes a very pleasing pianoforte solo, and exhibits unfailingly the marks of the musician—immature, of course, but none the less recognisable. The 'Animatic' batch is completed with an early indiscretion of Landon Ronald's, 'Sur le Lac' (A.N. 50,360), Thomé's 'Andante Religioso' (A.N. 51,280)—more spurious religiosity—and a pianoforte arrangement of Blumenthal's 'Evening Song' (A.N. 52,319), which doubtless will please many.

* A.C. = Æolian Co., Ltd.; A.S. = Sir Herbert Marshall & Sons, Ltd.; A.N. = Hupfeld, Ltd.

SONGS

Roger Quilter's setting of 'Come away, death' (A.C. 26,488; A.S. 72,523) is a song roll of exceptional merit, and in my opinion one of the finest ever issued. I suppose, however, that it is not likely to have too ready a sale, which makes the enterprise the more praiseworthy. I recommend every one to purchase this most distinguished roll. 'A Birthday,' by Cowen (A.C. 26,482; A.S. 72,522), makes a charming little fragment, in which the words of Christina Rossetti deserve much more than their usual share of honour; and the 'Toreador's Song' from 'Carmen' needs only a mention (A.C. 26,480). Eric Coates's 'I pitch my lonely Caravan at Night' (A.S. 72,376) is more in the conventional ballad style, but makes quite a pleasing roll.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

X.—Christopher Tye, Mus.D.

The musical career of Christopher Tye has been so fully treated by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright in the second edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' that I at first hesitated about including him in the present series; yet, at the suggestion of many correspondents, I have decided to summarise his biography, with a few additional facts, so that the interested reader may have the leading biographical data of this famous late Tudor composer.

Christopher Tye was born in $149\frac{8}{9}$, and was in the choir of King's College, Cambridge, from 1510 to 1515, becoming lay-clerk in 1527. He graduated Mus. Bac. in 1536, and on September 10, 1541, was appointed organist and Master of the Choristers of Ely Cathedral, proceeding to Mus. D. of Cambridge in 1545. Three years later (in 1548) he was incorporated at Oxford, and was soon after admitted a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal.

It is probable that on the recommendation of his friend, Dr. Richard Cox, Tye gave music-lessons to Prince Edward in the years 1544-47; but it is certain that he retained his post at Ely from 1541 to 1561, when he was succeeded by his son-in-law, Robert White. Numerous sacred compositions, including the Mass 'Euge bone,' the Mass 'Western Wynde,' and a Mass for five voices, as well as Latin Motets, by Tye, were in vogue during the years 1535 to 1548. It is of interest to note that a Motet for five voices, 'O splendor gloriæ,' is the joint effort of Tye and Taverner, the first part being by Taverner, and the second, commencing 'Et cum pro nobis,' by Tye (Christ Church Part-Books).

Under Edward VI., if not earlier, Tye embraced the reformed doctrines, and hence, on the accession of Queen Mary, he retired from the Chapel Royal. His best-known work, 'The Actes of the Apostles,' was compiled in 1552, and published in 1553, in the last months of Edward VI.'s reign, and yet, as Mr. Arkwright says, 'was not written for church use.' As a fact there were only fourteen chapters published, being, according to Bishop Frere, 'an incredibly bald translation of the early chapters of the Acts of the Apostles.' As is evident from the wording of the title-page, this fragmentary work was written 'to synge and also to play upon the Lute, very necessarye for studentes after their studye, to fyre theyr wyttes.' It is dedicated to the young King in a rhymed Preface, of which the following verse is typical:

> That such good thinges your grace might move
> Your lute when ye assaye;
> Instede of songes of wanton love
> These stories then to play.

It is no small testimony to the enduring popularity of Tye's music that three of his tunes in the 'Acts of the Apostles' have furnished the material for three hymn-melodies, namely, 'Go to dark Gethsemane,' 'Winchester Old,' and 'Windsor' or 'Eton.' These three adaptations of Tye, in Chapters 12, 8, and 3 respectively, are to be found in 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' as Nos. 126, 64, and 97 (Historical Edition, 1910).

Tye can have been for only a short time a member of the Chapel Royal, as there is good evidence that he was organist of Ely Cathedral from 1541 to 1561, and his name is not to be found in the list of Edward VI.'s Chapel, as printed by Burney and Hawkins. He was not a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal under Queen Mary, on account of his unorthodox views, but he continued at Ely during her reign, and until 1561. Ordained a deacon by Bishop Cox, in July, 1560, and promoted to priest's orders in the November following, he retained the benefice of Doddington-cum-Marche, in the Isle of Ely, till his death, obtaining two other benefices, Wilbraham and Newton, which he had to resign in 1567 and 1570 respectively.

Although Doddington was one of the richest rectories in England, Tye occasionally continued his musical labours, for one of his Motets, 'In quo corriget,' set to Latin words, is dated 1568. This has been interpreted as a likelihood that he had a leaning towards the old faith in his latter days, to which may be added that he 'did not contribute to the Prayer Books and Psalter published by Day in 1560-65,' as Davey writes. Moreover, he was friendly with John Lesley, Catholic Bishop of Ross (1566-96), who had been a prisoner in the custody of Bishop Cox, of Ely, in Holborn (London), from May 14 to August 19, 1571, and who gave Tye some verses to translate into English. On the other hand, Tye certainly subscribed some Articles of Doctrine as Rector of Doddington, with others of the clergy of Ely, on August 27, 1571, though, in the end, he probably 'verted to the ancient creed. The exact date of his death is not recorded, but it was probably during the Christmas of $157\frac{2}{3}$, as his successor was appointed on March 15, $157\frac{2}{3}$.

Tye has been called 'the father of the Edwardian Anthem,' but his principal title to musical fame rests on his Masses, the 'Western Wynde,' c. 1535, and his six-part 'Euge bone,' c. 1545, the latter 'having probably been written for his Doctor's degree,' as Mr. H. B. Collins writes. Mr. Collins also adds:

> His most important composition to Latin words . . . shows him to have been unquestionably the first English composer of his time, at least from the point of view of technique. The counterpoint is fluent and melodious to a remarkable degree.

Although Dr. Ernest Walker does not rate this Mass so eulogistically, he admits that it is 'very grandiose and finely built throughout,' and he praises very highly two Latin Motets by Tye, viz., his five-part 'Miserere mei, Deus,' and five-part 'Omnes gentes plaudite manibus,' with its jubilant trumpet-calls—both of which, in their very different ways, represent the highest level of Tye's pre-Reformation music.

Mr. Arkwright gives an almost complete list of Tye's Masses, Motets, Latin Services, Anthems, and English Services in the second edition of 'Grove,' to which the reader is referred. In the British Museum (Add. MSS. 29,246-7) is a setting of Tye's Motet, 'Crucifixus,' with lute accompaniment, while Add. MSS. 30,513 (Mulliner's Book) contains an organ arrangement of his, 'I lift my heart.' Some of his 'In Nomines' and other pieces arranged for viols are to be found in the Museum (Add. 31,390).

Wireless Notes

BY 'CALIBAN'

The B.B.C. deserves congratulations on its issue of the Radio Supplement. This detailed list of the Continental programmes for the week does more than tell us what's on—it appeals to the imagination as well. Inevitably one begins by comparing the foreign programmes with ours. I have not yet had time to do this in more than a general way; I may discuss the point in detail later. So far, however, I have an impression that Britain comes well out of the test. One result of the Supplement will no doubt be an increase in the number of subscribers eager to equip themselves and their sets for picking up Continental transmissions. Next winter ought to be a very interesting time for wireless enthusiasts. The setting-out of these foreign programmes has been well done on the whole. Improvements will no doubt suggest themselves from time to time. There are a few misprints, but I mention only a couple of candidates for 'Sharps and Flats': the Berlin programme for July 17 contained 'Symphony in D sharp (Haydn),' and 'Pianoforte Recital in C major (Mozart).'

Having said nice things about the Radio Supplement, I must say the other sort about the Radio Times. I do not forget that the journal has to cover all the interests of wireless users, and so cannot be expected to specialise on music or on any other art. But we have a right to ask that when the Radio Times does deal with an art, it should not do so in such a way as to suggest that the office-boy or a typing flapper has been left in charge. One of the weekly items for some time past has given that impression. I allude to the feature headed 'Songs you ought to know.' Now, the only songs qualified for appearance under such a caption are really good songs that are less familiar than they deserve to be. Run on these lines the feature would be of interest and value. But what are the songs the Editor of the Radio Times thinks that you and I ought to know? Here are one or two chosen at random: 'I hear you calling,' 'A perfect day,' 'My dreams,' 'Two eyes of grey,' and so forth.

No doubt we shall in due season be exhorted to learn 'A little grey home in the West,' 'Love brought a little gift of roses,' 'Because,' 'Mother o' mine,' 'Pal o' mine,' 'Baby o' mine,' 'Sweetheart o' mine,' and all the other o' mines. Why, bless the Editor's innocent heart, most of these songs have been only too well known for years. He should change the caption to 'Songs we should be glad to forget,' or 'Songs we wish had never been written.' Readers may object also to the touch of commercialism in the feature. The words are always printed 'by permission of Messrs. So-and-So,' who are no doubt highly delighted with a (presumably) free advertisement, which may revive the flickering sales of these faded futilities. Anyway, the whole thing is irritating to the many musical readers of the journal. A series of 'Books you ought to read' would not include novels of the Ethel M. Dell type. Even in music nobody would dream of suggesting that among 'Piano pieces we ought to play' are 'The Maiden's Prayer,' 'Warblings at Eve,' or 'In a Monastery Garden.' On a similar plane are the articles giving a full, true, and particular account of the composition of such 'famous songs' as 'When you passed by,' 'Come to the Fair,' &c. The Radio Times should put its musical department in the hands of a sub-editor with sufficient knowledge of the art to save the journal from making itself a laughing-stock among musicians.

Among last month's items were two of great interest to pianists. There was a tip-top recital by Pouishnov, whose playing came through remarkably well. (But the B.B.C. should be above the 'yellow press' trick of calling him 'the mystery pianist,' merely because he played a few items incognito a week or two before.) And Marcelle Meyer's performance of the transcription of a big slice of 'Petrouchka' was astounding. Much of the music has little significance when heard apart from the ballet, but one was genuinely interested in the skill of the transcriber, surprised at the resources of the keyboard, and amazed at the dexterity of the player. The wireless does good service to musicians in an item of this kind, inasmuch as it gives them an opportunity for making acquaintance with a work that they will hardly have a chance of hearing in the ordinary way.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

PRESENTATION TO DR. HARDING

An event of a private character, but of more than ordinary interest, took place at the R.C.O. on Friday afternoon, July 17, immediately preceding the Council meeting.

Dr. Richards (the President) opened by saying how delighted they all were to see the hon. secretary, Dr. Harding, restored to health after his recent severe illness. They had periodically to place on record, and to state in public, how greatly they appreciated the loyal and devoted services of their hon. secretary, and it was quite possible that Dr. Harding might sometimes think these were merely formal and official compliments. It had, therefore, occurred to some that his birthday, which was due in a few days' time, would give them an opportunity for showing that they really meant what they so often had to say, and they were taking that occasion of making him a small personal present accompanied by an illuminated address. He had received many letters from members of the Council, saying with what pleasure they sent the small amount to which the subscription had been limited, and their only complaint was that a larger sum had not been asked for; but those who had started the idea felt certain that Dr. Harding would prefer something of a small and personal character as a gift, rather than anything more elaborate. This little present consisted of a case of two silver-mounted pipes, and an address illuminated on vellum, and signed by the President on behalf of the Council, for whom he now handed these to Dr. Harding as a birthday gift from his old friends on the Council.

Dr. Harding in his reply said how genuinely surprised and delighted he was both with the Address and the gift. He had no idea that anything of this sort was even contemplated, and he greatly appreciated the very kindly feelings which had prompted it. He looked upon all present as very old and dear friends—especially the President—and hoped to have health and strength to serve them for some years to come.

The wording of the Address was as follows:

'THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

'To H. A. HARDING, Esq., Mus. Doc.

'July 25, 1925

'Your friends, the President and Council, wish to offer you their congratulations on your seventieth birthday. At the same time they desire to assure you of their gratitude for the whole-hearted way in which, since 1908, you have devoted yourself to the services of the College, as its Hon. Secretary, and it is their earnest hope that the happy relations which you have always fostered may continue for many years to come.

'On behalf of the Council

'(Signed) H. W. RICHARDS.
'President, 1925.'

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION

The President, Dr. H. W. Richards, presented the diplomas to the recently-elected Fellows and Associates, and to the successful candidates at the CHM. (choirmaster) examination, on Saturday, July 18. The following announcements were made by the hon. secretary (Dr. Harding): Forty-one candidates were examined for the Fellowship paper, and seventeen passed. Sixty-one candidates were examined for the Fellowship organ-work, and thirteen passed. For the Associateship paper work, a hundred and fourteen were examined, and thirty-six passed. For the Associateship organ work, a hundred and sixty-seven were examined, and sixty-one passed. Twelve Fellowship diplomas were awarded, and fifty-one Associateship. For the CHM. (choirmaster) examination there were two candidates, and both passed. The Fellowship Lafontaine Prize was awarded to H. Wardale, and the Fellowship Turpin Prize to C. L. Salmons. The Associateship Lafontaine Prize was awarded to G. H. Eldridge, and the Associateship Sawyer Prize to W. J. Emery. With regard to the Lafontaine Prizes, we do not forget that Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine very generously gives these prizes every half-year. We thoroughly appreciate his abiding kindness to the College.

The President then proceeded to address the meeting as follows:

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

DR. H. W. RICHARDS: I have chosen the subject of 'Organist as Teacher' since in all probability many who are present may adopt teaching as their profession. In the early stages, and before the teacher has gained his experience, he will, not unnaturally, be impressed by 'methods,' or by those who claim the invention of an up-to-date or infallible system. Youth is apt to be attracted by 'royal roads' and nostrums, and there are many unscrupulous and quick-witted people who possess the knack of writing cunningly-worded advertisements which succeed in entrapping the credulous. Occasionally one finds a modicum of truth in their claims, but they have to be stripped of all the flowery verbiage before the small kernel of truth is discovered. When the public is assured that by some original system a great Art—the Art of Music, and the study of a life-time—can be mastered in a few lessons or by reading a certain book, then such arrant and obvious humbug must be committed to the wastepaper basket. The primary duty of any honest teacher is to shield his pupil from falling a prey to the charlatan, and to state firmly and frankly that any method without the accompaniment of hard work is worthless. We need only turn to the life of any fine artist to learn that, although endowed with most of the musical gifts, he never wearied, but worked with indomitable will and ceaseless effort. I ought perhaps to say that to ensure the best results with the greatest economy of energy, one's work should be scientifically thought out and systematically arranged. I can never bring myself to believe that for the normal pupil education can be amusement or play; even little children are the better for tackling things which are not easy, and which will train them without strain of any sort in thoroughness and accuracy—facing difficulties will help to form their character and accustom them to concentrate. Education of the young surely is the laying of a secure foundation and the cultivation and gradual development of the mind—for it must be evident to all who think, that to sow seed on a soil not properly prepared is sheer waste. Those teachers who have passed our examinations may be satisfied that they have been well grounded, and such students ought now to be able to cope with more intricate work and to broaden their outlook. They can never remain where they are, so let it be impressed upon them in no measured terms that, although they have begun well, they are merely at the threshold of a complex and growing Art. In reviewing one's own work as a teacher, one can safely say that, instead of filling the pupil's mind with obsolete rules, it is far better to urge him to study and play the works of the great masters so that he can see and hear for himself what they have actually done—for theory must be founded upon practice. Gravitate from the text-book rather than towards it; dogmas and formulas which make no attempt to awaken the intelligence are practically valueless. Never try to reduce everything to rule; over-insistence on laws of the type of the Medes and Persians often, certainly with a clever pupil, leads to flights in an opposite direction as soon as he is left to himself and can flap his wings. Personally, I think it most wholesome to allow him the enjoyment of many 'flaps' during his studentship, for reasonable latitude inevitably brings about self-expression. All the recent changes in our paper work have been directed to this desirable end, and the examiners look and hope, not for mechanical exercises, but for ideas which emanate from the candidate himself. Be assured that there is a danger of the pupil thinking entirely in harmony and counterpoint exercises, in fact, getting them on the brain. Up to a point, such exercises may be useful as discipline, but it does not follow that they make for musicianship. With this in view, it is of much greater consequence to stimulate the pupil's imagination and æsthetic sense, for with such training there is more likelihood of his producing something from his own head and his own heart. Whatever course the teacher adopts, he is, after all, only a guide to action, and as, in the end, the pupil must educate himself, the sooner he begins the better. All the more reason, then, for the teacher to bring his authority and influence to bear to awaken enthusiasm and keep it alive. He will be wise never to repress any sign of vitality or to damp ideas, however crudely these may be expressed; on the other hand, he can be as adamant against smattering and mere veneer. Unfortunately there is a race of pupils—they seem to be on the increase—for whom the term 'hard work' has a terrifying sound, because they wish everything to be done for them. No friend will ever humour them in this respect, for such indulgence will create laziness, retard progress, and blunt initiative. The successful teacher is he who has the power to inspire his pupils to do their utmost, so that they will, out of respect for him, for themselves, and for their Art, be ashamed to bring work which is either unpractised or inadequately prepared. Problems which are solved, and obstacles which are overcome by one's own efforts, bring their own reward and make for self-reliance—and self-reliance will, in its turn, produce happiness, for enjoyment in work and real progress usually go hand in hand. The old conventional method

(Continued on page 726.)

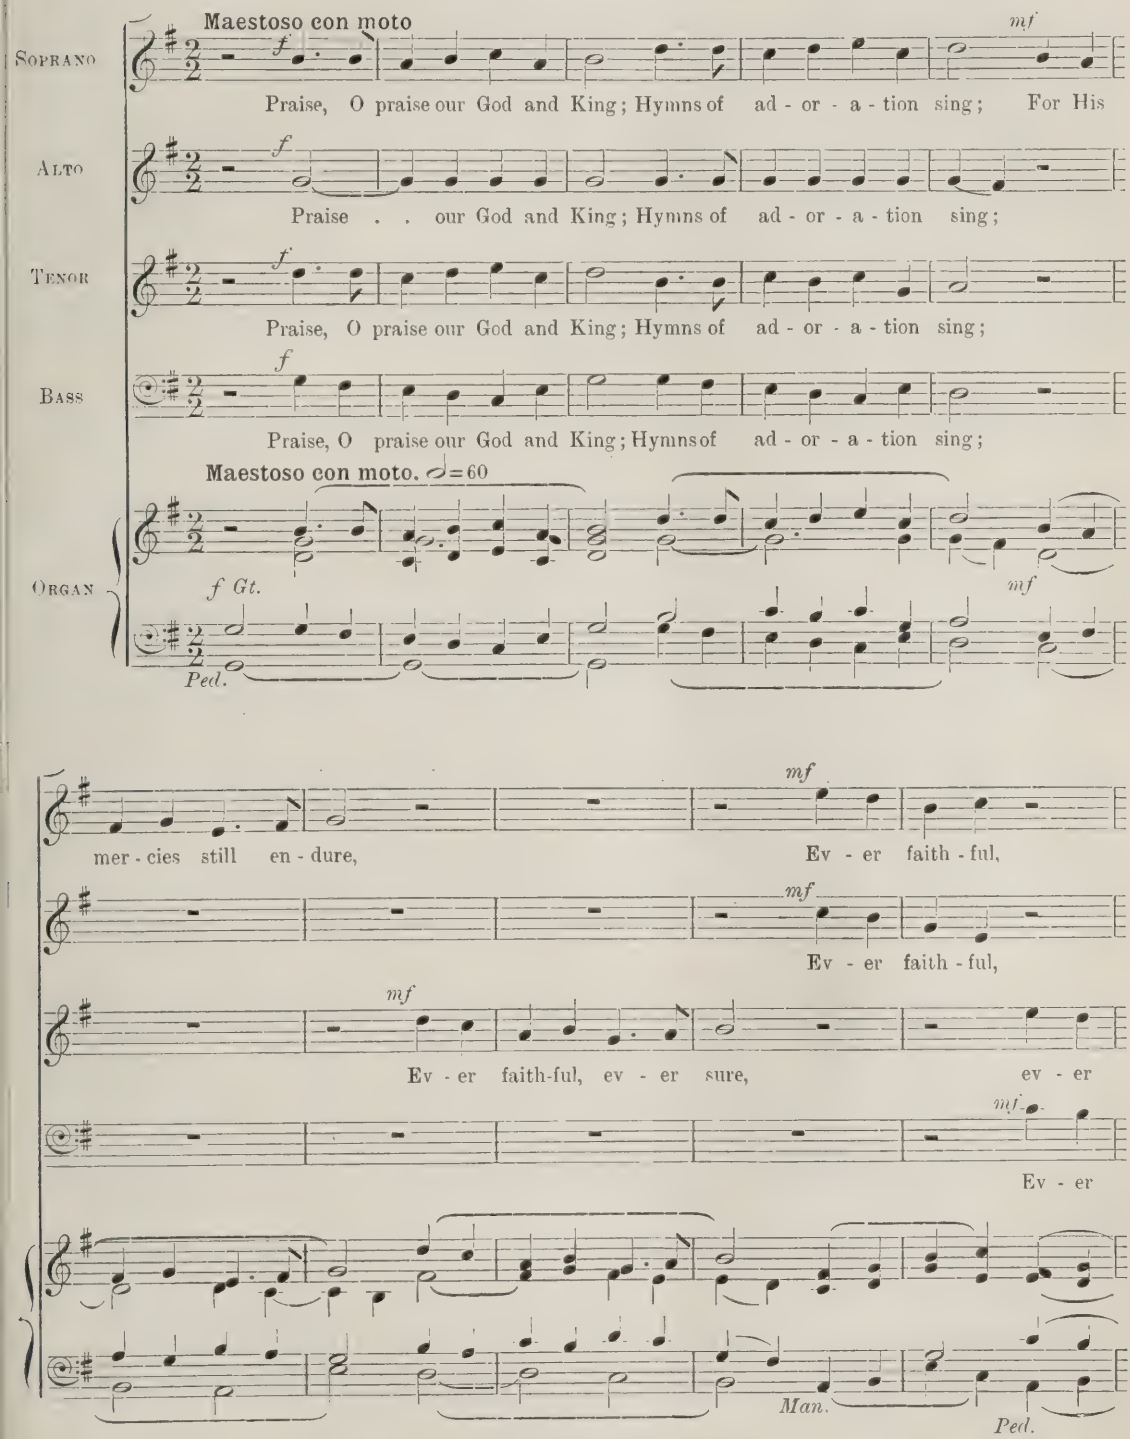
Praise, O praise our God and King

FULL ANTHEM FOR HARVEST

Words by Sir Henry Baker Music by F. W. Wadely

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Maestoso con moto
Soprano
Praise, O praise our God and King; Hymns of ad - or - a - tion sing; For His
Alto
Praise . . our God and King; Hymns of ad - or - a - tion sing;
Tenor
Praise, O praise our God and King; Hymns of ad - or - a - tion sing;
Bass
Praise, O praise our God and King; Hymns of ad - or - a - tion sing;
Maestoso con moto. ♩=60
Organ
f Gt.
Ped.
mer - cies still en - dure,
Ev - er faith - ful,
Ev - er faith - ful,
Ev - er faith-ful, ev - er sure, ev - er
Ev - er
Man.
Ped.

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

f ev - er faith - ful, ev - - - - - er sure. . . .
ev - er faith - ful, ev - - er faith - ful, ev - er . . sure. . . .
faith - ful, ev - er faith - ful, ev - - er faith - ful, ev - er . . sure.
faith - ful, ev - - er faith - ful, ev - - - - - er sure. . . .
dim.
mp
And the
mf
Day by day his course to run; . . .
Praise Him that He made the sun Day by day his course to run; And the Man.
Shi - ning with her gen - tle light; Praise . . Him that He sil - ver moon by night, . . . by . . night; Praise . . Him that He . . And the moon, . . the moon by . . night; Praise Him that He gave . .
sil - ver moon by night, the moon . . by night; Praise . . Him that He Ped.

mf cres.
gave the rain ; And hath bid the fruit - ful
mf cres.
gave the rain ; And hath bid the fruit - ful
. . . the rain To ma - ture the swell - ing grain ;
cres.
gave the rain To ma - ture the swell - ing grain ; And hath bid . . . the cres.
Man.
f field Crops of pre - cious in - crease yield ; Praise Him for our har - vest store, He hath
f field . . Crops of in - crease yield ; Praise . . . Him for our store, He hath mf cres.
f
Crops of pre - cious in - crease yield ; Praise Him for our har - vest store, He hath
f field Crops of in - crease yield ; Praise Him for our har - vest store, He hath
f
Ped.
mp sost.
filled the gar - ner - floor ; And for rich - er food than this, Pledge . . . of filled the gar - ner - floor ;
mp sost.
filled the gar - ner - floor ; Pledge of ev - er - last - ing
mp sost.
filled the gar - ner floor ; Pledge . . . . . of mp Sw.

cres. sempre
bliss; For His mer-cies en-dure, Ev-er faith-ful, ev - - - er
mp
cres. sempre
For His mer-cies still en-dure, Ev - - er, ev-er faith-ful, ev-er
cres. sempre
bliss; For His mer-cies still en-dure, Ev-er faith - ful, ev - er
cres. sempre
bliss; For His mer-cies still en-dure, Ev - - er, ev-er faith-ful, ev-er cres. sempre
mf Gt.
poco rit.
sure. . . .
f a tempo
Praise, O praise our God and King; Hymns of poco rit.
sure. . . .
f a tempo
Praise, . . our God and King; Hymns of poco rit.
sure. . . .
f a tempo
Praise, O praise our God and King; Hymns of poco rit.
sure. . . .
f a tempo
Praise, O praise our God and King; Hymns of poco rit.
a tempo
f Gt.
ad-or-a-tion sing; For His mer-cies still en-dure, Ev-er faith-ful, ev-er ad-or-a-tion sing;
Ev-er faith-ful, ev-er
ad-or-a-tion sing;
For His mer-cies still en-dure, Ev-er ad-or-a-tion sing; For His mer-cies still en-dure, Ev-er, ev - er sure, ev - er faith - ful, ev - - er faith - ful, ev - - - - sure, ev - er faith - ful, ev - er faith - ful, ev - - er faith - ful, sure, ev - er faith - ful, ev - er faith - ful, ev - - er faith - ful, sure, ev - er faith - ful, ev - - er faith - ful, ev - - - -

Man.
Ped.
Allargando al fine
ff
- - - - er sure. . . . Praise, O praise our God . . and ev - er . . sure. . . . Praise, . . O praise . . our God and ev - er . . sure. Praise, O praise our God, . . our God and
- - - - er sure. . . . Praise, O praise . . our God and Allargando al fine
ff
King; . . . Hymns of ad - or - a - - tion sing. . . . .
King; . . . Hymns of ad - or - a - tion sing. . . . .
King; . . . Hymns of ad - or - a - tion sing. . . . .
King; . . . Hymns of ad - or - a - - tion sing. . . . .
fff

(Continued from page 720.)

of treating pupils as if they could all be pressed into the same mould is happily dying out. Nowadays the teacher is expected to be observant, discerning, able to penetrate into the mind and diagnose character, so that he can judge between those who will and can't, and those who can and won't! Whether he possess these desirable gifts or not, there is no doubt that his influence often goes deeper than many imagine, and sympathy, encouragement, and co-operation with his pupil will have more enduring and telling effect than omniscience or rigidity. A heavy responsibility rests upon the teacher, and a good example is essential, because the weaker brethren are always prone to imitate. It is amusing, and sometimes sad, to notice how such imitation will extend to mannerisms, not only in playing, but even in walking, speaking, and worse! Individualities are needed, not replicas! To sum up: Self-discipline, well-directed effort, and individual thought, form the bases of sure advancement, and I would urge teachers to preach this doctrine to their pupils from the earliest moment. There are many things which are realised too late in life, therefore never delay in emphasising these truths. In all teaching be rational and reasonable—never pompous, prosy, or indistinct and confused in statement. Remember that pupils usually possess common-sense, and often a strong vein of humour—the most valuable assets in life. Apt analogies and a plentiful supply of apposite examples are vital, but the art of teaching is to draw out rather than to dictate—it isn't what a man takes in, but what he puts forth, that matters. Appeal to the pupil's ear, judgment, and taste; teach and convince him through these media; but, when all is said and done, the student is the architect of his future, and he will be obliged nolens volens to work out his own salvation. To quote a wise saying of Robert Louis Stevenson:

> 'To travel hopefully is better than to arrive, and the true success is to labour.'

To all, teachers and pupils alike, I wish my final words to take the form of a motto—which is—

WORK HARD AND BE SINCERE!

The distribution of diplomas then took place.

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP, JULY, 1925

Allison, Miss I. B., Brighton
Andrew, N., Ashton-under-Lyne
Ansell, G. E., London
Bancroft, H. H., Cleethorpes
Billington, F. G., Wakefield
Black, Miss E. G., Brading, I.W.
Bunney, A. W., London
Cannon, H., Oxford
Carter, F., Huddersfield
Chadwick, F., Huddersfield
Crute, F. G., London
Curtis, F. V., London
Davies, D. T., Dowlais
Eldridge, G. H., St. Leonards-on-Sea (Lafontaine Prize)
Emery, W. J., Malmesbury (Sawyer Prize)
Eyres, P. S., London
Forster, Miss C. F. B., Harrow
Gaunt, H. L., Ashford, Kent
Gedge, C. S., Hove
Glock, W. F., Horsham
Grant, W., Bolton
Haine, Miss M. T., Yeovil
Harries, M., Swansea
Hart, C. T., Bury St. Edmund's
Howarth, J. W., Stockport
Hughes, G. J., Swansea
Latham, H. F., Bristol
Lewis, G. F., Bristol
Lockhart, R. P., London
Macrae, J. D., Glasgow
May, H. C., London
McCallum, W. S., Glasgow
Milnes, W. H., London
Monteath, C. E., London
Parker, Miss H. J., London
Payne, W. L., York
Peasgood, O. H., London
Ramsey, C. E., Colchester
Reynolds, A. V., Hove
Roberts, T., Colwyn Bay
Sear, Miss C. H., Taunton, Somerset
Shields, A. M. C., Spennymoor, co. Durham
Smith, E. A., Harpenden
Smith, Miss M. G., Taunton
Spooner, Miss E. M., London
Strange, C. E., London
Thomas, W. F., Bangor, N. Wales
True, A., Preston
Uppington, F. W. A., London
Wagstaff, J. S., Nottingham
Williams, W., London

PASSED FELLOWSHIP, JULY, 1925

Allott, J. E., Liversedge
Balkham, A. E., St. Leonards-on-Sea
Davies, I. R., London
Fitch, Miss F. J., London
Forrester, L., Stoke-on-Trent
Joyce, H. V., Kingston-on-Thames
Neville, G. C. L., Ramsgate
Salmons, C. L., Rugby (Turpin Prize)
Smith, G. K., Narberth, Pem.
Taylor, R. W. K., London
Wardale, H., London (Lafontaine Prize)
Wardale, J. G., London

ALAN W. SHINDLER (Registrar).

After the presentation of the diplomas, Mr. E. T. Cook, organist of Southwark Cathedral, played the following organ pieces selected from the January examination, 1926:

FELLOWSHIP

Aria in F ... ... J. S. Bach
(Novello, Book 12, p. 112)
Prelude, Fugue, and Variation (Op. 18, No. 3) César Franck

ASSOCIATESHIP

Elegy in A flat major ... ...C. H. H. Parry
(Novello)
Meditation in F sharp minor ... ... Guilmant
(Book 6, Op. 20)
Prelude in G minor ... ... Stanford
No. 2 of First Set of Preludes, Op. 101
(Stainer & Bell)

Dr. HAROLD E. DARKE: I am sure you will gladly take the opportunity of giving Mr. Cook a very hearty vote of thanks for his delightful recital. In conjunction with two colleagues I have been listening to this organ for six hours a day for the last week, and during that time we have heard all sorts and conditions of playing. We have so often said to one another, 'What a splendid thing it would be if some of these candidates could have a standard set before them, and be shown what can be done on a rather limited organ like this. You have had that this afternoon, and I feel sure you will be very grateful indeed to Mr. Cook.

Mr. G. D. CUNNINGHAM: There is a real pleasure in seconding a vote of thanks to Mr. Cook. He has laid us under a great obligation, and we are indebted to him for his beautiful playing.

The resolution was carried with applause.

The PRESIDENT: Before we bring this meeting to a close, I should like to say how pleased we are to have amongst us to-day Sir Ernest Palmer. He is patron of a grand institution, and is doing a good work in helping our young executants and English composers. We cannot be too grateful to him for his munificence and help to the younger generation, thus enabling us to stand prominent as a musical nation. Then we are delighted and honoured by the presence of Sir Walford Davies, whose influence in the musical world is so well known and universally appreciated.

The meeting then terminated.

The reports of the Examining Board are appended:

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

The harmonization of the given bass as a Pastorale for the organ was worked in a style suited to the instrument, and in the large majority of instances was well done. The same, however, could not be said either of the string quartet or the setting of words for vocal solo with pianoforte accompaniment. Many candidates seem to have inadequate ideas both of the character of string quartet writing, and of the nature of pianoforte accompaniments. In the setting of the words, while the accentuation of these was generally good, the accompaniment was frequently crude and clumsy. The workings of the fugal stretto were often weak, and quite a number of candidates regarded the employment of the three parts over a lengthy pedal note as constituting four real parts. Candidates would be well advised if they made a special study of the endings of Bach's Pianoforte Fugues. In the orchestration, the allotting of the parts to string and wind instruments respectively frequently revealed a very limited knowledge of the special character and tone-qualities of the various instruments. The answers to the questions showed that these are not yet regarded in a sufficiently serious manner, or adequate preparation made to give full and intelligent answers. While the work as a whole revealed the possession of a fair amount of musicianship, the technical side was often weak.

FREDERICK G. SHINN (Chairman).
H. W. RICHARDS.
A. EAGLEFIELD-HULL.

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

The playing has been on a higher standard than usual, quite a number of candidates having shown really musical and artistic qualities as well as efficient technique.

The unsuccessful candidates may be roughly divided into three groups:

(1) The conscientious plodders who were quite accurate enough, but had no imagination or insight. They waded heavily through the Bach C major Fugue, played the Stanford Minuet without lilt or continuity, and never got near to the atmosphere of Vaughan Williams's Largo from the 'Sea' Symphony.

(2) Those who had fluency and speed, but without control. The rhythm was never gripped, consequently an unsafe and uncomfortable impression prevailed throughout.

(3) Those who were so palpably unprepared that it was difficult to understand why they ever presented themselves for examination.

It is scarcely necessary to remark that lack of rhythm was the cause of the downfall of the majority. Utterly needless rallentandos, which only held up the music and destroyed its vitality, were far too frequent. A very small minority maintained the same pace in Stanford's 'Tempo di Menuetto' when passing from the bars in triplets to those in ordinary quavers. On the other hand, when time variation was really wanted in the Arrangement, it was nearly always absent.

The sight-reading and other tests were well played on the whole. The most gratifying feature of the examination is the continued improvement of the extemporising, in form, harmony, and part progression.

A. HERBERT BREWER (Chairman).
W. G. ALCOCK.
EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW.

ASSOCIATESHIP PAPER-WORK

Strict Counterpoint.—The standard of work was only fair. Weak chord-progressions and unvocal parts were common, and the technique was in a large number of cases inaccurate.

Free Counterpoint.—There was a general tendency to make the parts instrumental rather than vocal. The join between the half-close in D major and the next entry of the figure in F sharp minor was badly managed, and there were many elementary blunders in technique.

Pianoforte Accompaniment.—With a few notable exceptions, this work was poorly done. Few grasped the harmonic basis of the given part, and many showed a great lack of foresight by beginning in C major, and not realising till near the end that the key was A minor. Many accompaniments were too thick in texture, while others lacked organic unity, and the writing was generally unpianistic.

Melody and Bass.—On the whole, the work was satisfactory, revealing better musicianship than in the other tests.

Harmonization of Melody.—A large proportion of the workings were poor. The parts lacked independence, melodic interest, and fluency. If there was any attempt to make the parts flow, it was generally of a somewhat clumsy description, and there was very little appreciation of what is meant by style.

On the whole, the paper work was not of so high a standard as we had hoped for.

C. H. KITSON (Chairman).
IVOR ATKINS.
P. C. BUCK.

ASSOCIATESHIP ORGAN-WORK

It is gratifying to be able to report a considerable advance in the technical ability of the candidates. Many faults, which hitherto have been only too prevalent, were to a large extent absent. But we wish to emphasise that the organ can, and should, be an expressive instrument.

Generally the performances were far too mechanical, and showed little imagination or understanding of musical interpretation. This was especially noticeable in Guilmant's 'Meditation' and Parry's 'Elegy'—both of which offered peculiar opportunities for artistic treatment. For instance, in the 'Meditation' a judicious use of the Swell Pedal in the L.-H. solo (quasi 'cello) and a slight rubato in the R.-H. semiquaver passage would have helped to make the performances more alive and appealing. There was also a lack of flow and continuity in the phrasing, and sometimes a lack of precision in the attack and release of chords. These faults were especially noticeable in the 'Elegy.'

On the whole the management of the organ was good, though sometimes there was a serious lack of judgment in the balance of the various parts. For example, in Bach's Variations on 'Himmel hoch,' the Canto fermo on 8-ft. pedal rarely stood out sufficiently. It might have been advisable to couple the pedals to an 8-ft. manual stop. A definite bass is most important, and it is noteworthy that there were still some instances of candidates playing with 16-ft. tone alone, the result, in a very low passage, being a vague murmur. Some 8-ft. tone should usually be combined with the 16-ft., just as the double-basses in the orchestra rarely play without the 'cellos.

We would again urge the importance of the tests. Several candidates played their pieces well, but failed because the tests were imperfectly done. The score-reading was generally good, but the transposition and accompaniment were weak: first, because candidates were too readily taken unawares by an unusual modulation; secondly, because they failed to read the key-signature before they started playing. It is important that the tests be played rhythmically and at the speed directed; a slow, halting pace of course reduces the difficulty. Moreover, the player must remember that in the transposition and accompaniment tests he is accompanying an imaginary performance. A reasonable tempo and a steady flow must therefore be attained, even at the cost of an occasional slip. Mere correctness at a pace too slow for singing, or with frequent halts, is useless.

HARVEY GRACE (Chairman).
HENRY C. LEY.
HAROLD E. DARKE.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

The sixty-first Annual General Meeting was held at the College, Kensington Gore, on Saturday, July 18, 1925, the President (Dr. H. W. Richards) being in the chair. Amongst the members present were: Sir Ernest Palmer, Sir Walford Davies, Mr. W. H. Cart de Lafontaine, Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., Mr. E. T. Cook, Mr. C. W. Cunningham, Dr. Harold E. Darke, Dr. Alan Gray, Dr. Eaglefield-Hull, Prof. C. H. Kitson, Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. A. H. Mann, Dr. F. G. Shinn, Dr. H. Davan Wettan, Mr. S. B. Allison, Dr. F. N. Abernethy, Mr. Allan Brown, Mr. F. W. Belchamber, Mr. G. Ceiley, Mr. C. H. Merrill, Mr. L. Regan, Mr. C. E. Ramsey, Mr. W. Ratliffe, Mr. E. R. Sutton, Mr. B. Vine Westbrook, Mr. W. G. Webber, &c.

The PRESIDENT: I would like first of all to say how rejoiced we are to see that Dr. Harding, our hon. secretary has been able to come to-day. He has been very ill, but I am glad to see him looking quite his old self again. I want to spare him as much as possible, so I will read the Minutes of the last meeting.

The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were read and confirmed.

The President read the hon. secretary's Annual Report, as follows:

Your Council has the gratification to report that during the past year the work of the College has been carried on steadily and satisfactorily.

The examination reformations recently instituted continue to justify themselves, and the concessions made to the modern spirit of freer treatment of the old rules of counterpoint and harmony have not proved dangerous to the fundamental principles of our art, but have encouraged musical ability and originality in the work of the candidates.

In the matter of the choir-training examination schemes (both diploma and certificate), for which there appeared to be so strong a demand, your Council regret that optimism is not possible, as the entries were ludicrously small and the expense heavy. Your Council has resolved, however, to continue its efforts in this direction for the present, in the hope that a wider knowledge of the advantages offered by the College may induce Church musicians to consider their attitude towards this very important branch of their profession.

Your Council has every reason to congratulate the College on the great success of the informal conversazione instituted at the diploma distribution in January last. It is hoped that this opportunity for the meeting of old friends and the interchange of ideas may become a regular feature of our diploma distributions.

Your Council has to report that during the past year free lectures were given at the College on 'The General Principles of Choir-training,' by Dr. H. W. Richards; 'The Choir in Church,' by Mr. G. Thalben-Ball; 'Country Choirs and Congregations,' by Mr. H. S. Middleton; and 'Mixed Choirs,' by Dr. Keighley.

The candidates for examination during the past year numbered 446, of whom 89 passed; and 143 new members were elected during the past year.

The Examiners appointed for 1924-25 were: Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., Sir Ivor Atkins, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Dr. A. H. Brewer, Dr. P. C. Buck, Dr. Harold Darke, Mr. Harvey Grace, Dr. Eaglefield-Hull, Dr. Keighley, Prof. Kitson, Mus. D., Dr. H. G. Ley, Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. H. W. Richards, and Dr. F. G. Shinn.

The hearty thanks of the Council are given to the hon. treasurer, Dr. C. W. Pearce, for his able management of the finances of the College.

The Council also wishes to place on record its appreciation of the indefatigable services of Dr. Harding, the hon. secretary, whose devotion to the work of the College cannot adequately be recognised. It also desires to express its great gratification that he has been restored to health after a severe illness.

Cordial thanks are offered to the hon. auditors, Mr. C. E. Ceiley and Mr. W. Glanvill Hopkins, and the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co., for their services.

The thanks of the Council are due to the excellent and much esteemed registrar, Mr. Alan Shindler, for the manner in which he has carried out his duties and responsibilities; and the staff continues to merit approbation for admirably discharged services.

Mr. Belchamber proposed the adoption of the Annual Report; this was seconded by Mr. Yarrow, and carried.

The Annual Financial Statement was adopted on the proposal of Mr. Ernest Kiver, seconded by Mr. Herbert Hodge.

THE HON. TREASURER

The PRESIDENT: We all know that Dr. Pearce has suffered for some years from a bad state of health, but in spite of that he still has a very keen interest in the College, and he looks upon his position here with much affection. It will be a great honour for us to retain his services if possible.

Dr. SHINN: I propose with pleasure that Dr. C. W. Pearce be elected hon. treasurer, and that a vote of thanks be passed to him for his work during the past year.

Dr. MACPHERSON: I have great pleasure in seconding this proposal that Dr. Pearce be re-elected.

The resolution was carried.

THE HON. SECRETARY

Dr. ALAN GRAY: The proposal I have to make really needs no words whatever in support of it; it is that Dr. Harding be re-elected hon. secretary. We all recognise how enormous is the work that Dr. Harding has done for a great number of years now, and we trust that he will be able to continue his exertions for many years longer.

Dr. EAGLEFIELD-HULL: I have great pleasure in seconding this resolution.

The resolution was carried.

THE AUDITORS

Mr. Frye proposed and Mr. Temple seconded the election of the hon. auditors, Mr. G. R. Ceiley and Mr. W. Glanvill Hopkins, and the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co., with hearty thanks for their past services. This was carried.

THE COUNCIL

The PRESIDENT: The scrutineers (Messrs. Bailey and Yarrow) have delivered their report. The voting for the London members of the Council was as follows: Sir Walford Davies, 573; Dr. Davan Wetton, 459; Mr. J. A. Meale, 151. I declare that Sir Walford Davies and Dr. Davan Wetton are elected members of the Council. With regard to the two vacant country seats, Dr. H. G. Ley and Dr. Sweeting were the only Fellows nominated, and they are of course duly elected.

With a vote of thanks to the President, proposed by Dr. Harding and seconded by Dr. Davan Wetton, the annual general meeting terminated.

THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL AT SALISBURY

Last year the Festival was in abeyance, owing to the fact that the Cathedral choirs concerned—Winchester, Chichester, and Salisbury—took part in the unique service at Westminster Abbey, whereat many of the Cathedral and Collegiate choirs throughout the country were present. On July 1 the gathering once more became local, Salisbury being the venue. Rightly the Festival became in part a Gibbons celebration, the composer being represented by the anthems, 'O Lord, increase my faith' (sung as a vestry prayer before the entry of the choirs), 'Almighty and Everlasting God,' 'Hosanna to the Son of David,' and a concluding Amen. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to Stanford in F, and the remaining anthem was Parry's 'I was glad.' The inclusion of such a large proportion of a cappella music (the Stanford service is an unaccompanied treatment of plainsong tones) was a move entirely justified by the fine and effective singing. Dr. W. G. Alcock conducted, his deputy, Mr. Cuthbert Osmond, being at the organ. The organists and deputies of Winchester and Chichester Cathedrals played voluntaries, as follows: Dr. Prendergast, Fantazia of Foure Parts, Gibbons; Miss Hilda Bird, 'Ye boundless realms of joy,' Parry; Dr. M. P. Conway, Trio, 'To God on high,' Bach; and Mr. A. E. Monk, Adagio in E, Frank Bridge.

THE GREGORIAN ASSOCIATION

The fifty-sixth anniversary was kept on June 25. A missa cantata began the day at St. George's, Hanover Square, a choir of men singing the Common and Proper from the 'English Gradual.' Evensong was sung at Westminster Abbey by a choir of five hundred voices. The faux-bourdons to the Magnificat were by Vittoria; those to the Nunc dimittis by Viadana. The anthem was Hasler's Motet, 'Sing unto the Lord.' The transference of the Festival from St. Paul's Cathedral to the Abbey, made necessary by the repairs at the former, proved to be advantageous in several important respects. The vast space of St. Paul's, with its echo, was against a light, free method of singing, and the massive dignity that resulted from a slower pace did not always compensate. The singing on this occasion was of a very high order in all respects. Capt. Francis Burgess conducted, and Mr. B. Herrick Edwards was at the organ.

The organ at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Eastbourne, was re-opened, after overhauling and enlargement, on July 8. Dr. M. P. Conway gave a recital, playing three Bach works, Franck's Pastorale, Best's Fantasia in F, the Minuet from Stanford's Sonata in F, &c. Mr. W. J. Read played a Bach Aria, Beethoven's Romance in G, and other violin solos. The reconstruction of the organ has been carried out by Messrs. Hunter & Sons, of Clapham, the instrument now being a three-manual of forty-four stops, fifteen of which are new.

The East Herts Musical Society gave a concert at All Saints' Church, Hertford, on July 7. The programme consisted of choruses by Handel, Mendelssohn, and Brahms, with Holst's Two Psalms. The orchestra played the Overture to 'The Messiah,' Handel's Organ Concerto in G minor (organ, Mr. A. N. Bulmer), and Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody.' Mr. W. J. Comley conducted, and Mr. Bulmer was at the organ. A collection was taken for the British Cancer Campaign.

The Standon and District Church Choirs Association annual Festival took place at Standon Parish Church on June 24. About three hundred singers took part. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to Lloyd in E flat, and the anthem was Hollins's 'O worship the Lord.' 'O Faith of England,' sung to the grand melody by Greiter, made a fine processional. Mr. E. E. Dennis, of Buntingford, conducted, and Mr. Harvey Grace accompanied and gave a short recital.

We read in the Church Times that 'the American Rose Society publishes the Order of Worship for "an undenominational rose service" which includes among its features the singing of "The Last Rose of Summer," and the distribution of roses to "each seated and reverent member of the congregation."' We should find it easier to be seated than to be reverent, so there would be no rose for us.

Dr. Gordon Slater gave a recital to eleven hundred children (many of whom brought parents), at Boston Parish Church, on June 25. He played a Bach Fugue, Chorale Preludes by Blow and Parry, MacDowell's 'A.D. 1620,' Debussy's 'Little Shepherd,' Boëllmann's 'French Rondo,' and the Prelude to Act 3 of 'Lohengrin.' And then the children asked for, and got, an extra piece. Good!

We remind readers of the annual congress of the National Union of Organists' Associations, which takes place at Exeter on August 31 and September 1-3. The programme holds out a prospect of very attractive events. Those who wish to attend should write to the hon. treasurer, Mr. John Hodgkinson, Raby, near Thornton Hough, Cheshire, not later than August 24.

The fine four-manual organ built in 1892 by Henry Willis & Sons for the Brisbane Exhibition is to be enlarged and reconstructed throughout. The instrument will then be placed in the City Hall, now being erected. The work is being carried out by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons and Lewis & Co.

At St. Luke's, Cheltenham, on the occasion of the twenty-sixth annual Choral Festival, Mendelssohn's 'O come, let us sing,' was performed by an augmented choir of a hundred voices, conducted by Mr. Ernest A. Dicks. Mr. Leslie Betteridge accompanied, and also gave a short recital.

Dr. Caradoc Roberts gave the opening recital on a new organ at Dodworth Wesleyan Church on June 27, playing works by Morandi, Karg-Elert, Wagner, Saint-Saëns, and Sibelius. The organ (by Messrs. Nelson, of Durham) is a two-manual of seventeen stops.

A Gibbons musical service took place at Jackson's Lane Wesleyan Church, Highgate, on June 14. The choir sang three anthems and three hymn-tunes by Gibbons, and Mr. Eric Brough played six of his keyboard pieces.

The twentieth annual Festival of church choirs in Harlow Deanery took place at Harlow Parish Church on July 1, the combined choirs numbering over two hundred voices. The Rev. C. Copland conducted.

Byrd's 'Great' Service has lately been sung twice at York Minster—an ideal building for such music. The performance, under Dr. Bairstow, was notable both for its rhythmic life and its expressive—even dramatic—quality.

RECITALS

Mr. Stanley Lucas, South Croydon Congregational Church—Offertoire in E flat, Dubois; Choral, Vierne; Variations on 'Our Father, which art in heaven,' Mendelssohn; Miserere (In Nomine), Byrd; Overture to 'Samson,' Handel; Toccatina on 'King's Lynn,' Harvey Grace; Voluntary in G, Worgan; Chorale Preludes, Bach.

Dr. Cyril B. Rootham, St. John's College, Cambridge—A Bach programme: Prelude in E flat, Fantasia in G, Fugue in G, second movement of Pastorale in F, Fugue in E flat, and Chorale Preludes.

Dr. Alan Gray, Trinity College Chapel—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Marche Religieuse, Boëllmann; Overtures to 'Saul' and 'Samson,' Handel; Pastorale, Franck; Fantasia in A, Alan Gray; Intermezzo and Fugue (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Minuet (Sonata No. 1), Stanford; and a Bach programme.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, Bridge Street Wesleyan Church, Mansfield—Toccata in F, Bach; Meditation, Harvey Grace; Allegro Maestoso (Sonata in G), Elgar; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. William Robson, St. George's Presbyterian Church of England, Stockton-on-Tees—Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Scherzo and Meditation, Bairstow; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Rev. A. M. Samson, St. Michael and All Angels, Scott Street, Leicester—Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Chorale Preludes on 'Old 104th' and 'Melcombe,' Parry.

Mr. George F. Brockless, St. Mary-le-Bow—Melody, Bairstow; Pastel No. 3, Karg-Elert; Prelude, Cantilène, and Scherzetto, Pierné.

Mr. F. Gostelow, Wesleyan Church, Bath Road, Swindon—Overture in C, Hollins; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; March in E flat, Wely; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Stephen's Bow—Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Sonata No. 20, Rheinberger; Final in B flat, Franck; Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Harvey Grace; Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue in E flat minor, Healey Willan; Chaconne and Fugue Trilogy with Choral, Karg-Elert; Symphony No. 3 (first movement), Vierne; and a Bach programme.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Overture to 'Otho,' Handel; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Sketches, Schumann; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn.

Dr. Harold E. Darke, Park Chapel, Crouch End—Toccata in F, Bach; Scherzo, Gigout; Caprice, Harvey Grace; Prière, Jongen; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke.

Dr. Gordon A. Slater, Boston Parish Church—Grande Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Ronde Française, Boëllmann; 100th Psalm-Tune, John Blow.

Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, Bank Street Wesleyan Church, Brierley Hill—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Concert Fantasia on a Welsh March, Best; Finale (Sonata No. 1), Guilmant.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey—Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach; Allegro in F, Gade; Marche de Procession in B flat, Tombelle; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; Sonata No. 12, Rheinberger.

Miss Lila M. Thornton, Circus Street Congregational Church, Nottingham—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Bridal Chorus, Guilmant.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Psalm-Postlude on 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace; Allegro Moderato (Sonata No. 1), Bach; Angelus, Norman Cocker; Marche Funèbre and Chant Séraphique, Guilmant; Minuet and Trio, Herbert Brewer; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Fugue in B minor, Bach; Imperial March, Elgar.

Mr. Alfred E. Dawes, St. George's Presbyterian Church, Blackburn—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; 'Elfes,' Bonnet; Passacaglia, John E. West; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

M. Marcel Dupré, School Hall, Eton College—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; 'Noël en Musette,' d'Aquin; Final in B flat, Franck; Cortège and Litany, Marcel Dupré.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury, E.C.—Coronation March, A. C. Mackenzie; Melody and Evensong, C. W. Pearce; Moto Perpetuo and Intermezzo, C. E. Ford; Festival Entry, Ferrari; Toccatina, Hugh Blair.

Mr. Ernest F. Mather, St. Mary-le-Bow—Sonata in G (first movement), Elgar; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Chorale Preludes, 'St. Peter,' Harold Darke; 'Dundee,' Parry; and a Bach programme.

Mr. Arthur E. Davies, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Andante (Sonata No. 4), Bach; Chorale Preludes, Parry; Two Sketches, Schumann; Postlude in D, Stanford.

Dr. Frank A. Chapple, Pontefract Parish Church—Study in G, Karg-Elert; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells. (Miss Fernandes sang recit., 'My Master and my Lord,' and aria, 'Grief for sin,' Bach.)

Mr. Leonard Castle, St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe—Fantasia in G, Bach; Cantabile, Franck; Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Largo from the 'New World' Symphony.

Rev. N. C. Woods, Andover Parish Church—Fugue in G minor, Bach; Larghetto in G minor, Dvořák; Finale in G minor, Piutti.

Mr. W. Hunt, St. James-the-Greater, Leicester—Sonata No. 20, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Variations on a Ground Bass, Farrar; Choral and Prayer, Jongen; Epilogue, Rêverie on 'University,' and Scherzo, Harvey Grace.

Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt, Parish Church, Linlithgow—Voluntary in G, John Stanley; Chorale Prelude, 'Wachet Auf' and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Pax Vobiscum, Karg-Elert; Preludes on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; and 'University,' Harvey Grace; Imperial March, Elgar.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Stanley H. Burton, choirmaster and organist, St. Mary's (Church of England), Preston.

Mr. C. Hastings Kirby, choirmaster and organist, St. James's, Clapham Park, S.W.

Mr. H. F. Latham, assistant-organist, All Saints', Clifton.

Mr. John A. Rowlands, choirmaster, St. Jude's, Bradford.

Letters to the Editor

CHANT SETTINGS OF THE TE DEUM, ETC.

SIR,—The old question of chants and pointing has once more been brought into the limelight in your columns. May I suggest that, in addition to the point raised by your correspondent in the June issue, there are three other points, simple enough in themselves, which are apparently not sufficiently realized? There is of course no royal road to good chanting except in patient study of our language, but attention to the details set out below (especially the first) would get rid of most of the worst abuses.

(1.) In the English language many of the smaller words, such as that, of, to, from, but, and, have, can, shall, &c., have two entirely different pronunciations, according as they are emphatic or not. E.g., and, rhymes with hand only when it is emphatic. Otherwise its vowel is the indeterminate a of *a*bout, *a*long, &c. Let me quote a line from Tobias Hume's beautiful song, 'Fancying that that harmed me.' This line is capable of two interpretations. The first that may be a demonstrative pronoun rhyming with cat, and the second a relative; or it may be the second that that rhymes with cat, in which case it is the second which is the demonstrative pronoun, the first being a conjunction and pronounced quite differently. In the same way the word to rhymes with shoe only when it is emphatic, as in the phrase 'to and fro.' Otherwise it has quite a different vowel sound, more like the u in put. Now in chanting, if these small words are pronounced with their correct vowel sounds, it becomes practically impossible to place a false accent on an unemphatic word, whatever the length of the note to which it is sung. We should at once be saved from such horrors as 'Glory be to the Father and too the Son.'

(2.) The so-called 'Reciting-Note,' though conventionally written as a semibreve, may be of any length, and it may even be resolved with advantage into a pair of quavers, e.g.:

In these three examples I have retained the conventional barring, and wish only to draw attention to the reciting-note.

(3.) Getting rid of bar-lines, the first half of each chant consists of four notes, the second of six, and these can be grouped in a variety of ways. To confine ourselves to second halves, we can have 1 + 4 + 1, or 3 + 2 + 1, or 2 + 3 + 1. The majority of verses lend themselves to the first of these combinations, but many are far better suited to one of the others, e.g.:

(There is surely no need to take exception, as many do, to the mere fact of a word like 'Praise' being spread over several notes, provided these notes are made to flow smoothly. It is exactly the kind of word that would be chosen for a run or ornamentation in any other type of composition.)

A remaining essential is that organists shall be content to accompany the Psalms, rather than to drag the choir and congregation through them by trying to make them instrumentally rhythmic.—Yours, &c.,

Oakhurst, Harrow-on-the-Hill. HUGH GARDNER.

SIR,—The singing of this great hymn to chants can never be more than making the best of a bad job. Do what you will with versification—a very daring process—and with pointing, you will still find that the tune 'rules the roost,' and not the words. So far as I know, no one has, as yet, got beyond the rulings of the late Walter Marshall in 'The Barless Psalter' (Novello). In verses 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 19, he omits one or two of the notes, as is done in plainsong; this helps to put words first and foremost, but it offends the congregation and strokes senior choristers the wrong way. So there you are, again! It is all very difficult. Why not read the Te Deum for a few years, then start afresh with plainsong?

One more point, Why do so many composers mark the words 'The Comforter' (verse 13) to be sung softly? Comforter means strengthener.—Yours, &c.,

Christchurch. JOHN NEWTON.

SIR,—I have long felt that in its present form, and in the pointing, of the Te Deum, there are serious defects which involve an undesirable method of 'chanting' which in its relation to sense, rhythm, and accent is quite contrary to what is similarly required in good, intelligent reading.

For example, the spasmodic and long drawn-out rendering of such passages as the triple 'praise Thee' in verses 7 to 9; and elsewhere: 'The Father—Only Son—the Comforter—O Christ—of the Father—Govern them,' which are all most undignified.

In vv. 10-13, both inclusive, the real significance of the statement that 'the Holy Church throughout all the world' does acknowledge the Three Persons in the ever-Blessed Trinity is overshadowed—if not frittered away—by a needless division of verses, which is unedifying.

The last verse—'in Thee have I trusted,' &c.— is so glaringly inconsistent with all the other parts of the Canticle, in which the first person plural is invariably used, that (in spite of its being contrary to the original) a change from the singular to the plural is desirable.

Objection may be made to the length of some of the recitation parts of my arrangement, but in many of the Psalms there are even longer passages, and it only needs proper care to give clear and emphatic enunciation (without drawl or irreverent scramble) to all the words which go to make up the free recitations in order to secure a reverent and intelligent rendering.

I may add that the reduction of the triple 'praise Thee' to a single phrase is strictly in accord with the original, although the Latin word itself is in the singular number and relates to 'the noble army of martyrs.'

Without claiming that my arrangement is free from blemish, I trust it may be regarded as an improvement on the old form of pointing, and as adding some dignity to this noble hymn.—Yours, &c.,

The Rectory, Kelso, Scotland. W. J. CLARKE.

[The Rev. W. J. Clarke's arrangement of the Te Deum is subjoined:

1. We praise Thee, O God : we ACKNOWLedge Thee to | be the | Lord. :
All the earth doth WORship Thee, the | Fa-ther | ever- | lasting.
To Thee all Angels cry aloud, the Heavens and all the Powers therein, to Thee Cherubin, and Seraphin continually do cry Ho-ly | Holy | Holy.
Lord God of Sabaoth ; Heaven and earth are FULL of the | Majesty | of Thy | Glory.
2. The glorious company of the Apostles; the goodly fellowship of the Prophets, the noble ARMy of | martyrs | praise Thee :
The Holy Church throughout all the world doth acknowledge Thee, the FATH-er of an | INfinite | Majes- | ty :
Thine Honourable, TRUE and | only | Son :
ALso the | Holy | Ghost the | Comforter.
3. Thou art the KING of | Glo-ry : O | Christ.
Thou art the EVER | lasting | Son of the | Father.
When Thou tookest upON Thee to de | liver | man,
Thou DIDST not ab- | hor the | Virgin's | womb.
4. When Thou hadst overCOME the | sharpness of | Death,
Thou didst open the KINGdom of | Heaven to | all be- | lievers.
Thou sittest AT the | Right Hand of | God,
IN the | Glory | of the | Father.
5. We believe that Thou shalt COME to | be our | Judge ;
we therefore pray Thee help Thy servants, whom Thou hast re-DEEMED | with Thy | Prec-ious | Blood :
Make them to be NUMB-ered | with Thy | saints,
IN | glory | ever- | lasting.
6. O Lord, save Thy PEOPle, and | bless Thine | heritage :
GOvern them, and | lift them | up for | ever.
Day by DAY we | magnify | Thee,
and we worship Thy Name ; EVER | world with- | out | end.
7. Vouchsafe, O Lord to keep us this day without sin,
O LORD have | mercy up- | on us :
Have mercy upon us, O Lord, let Thy mercy lighten upon us, AS our | trust is | in | Thee.
O Lord in THEE | have we | trusted,
MAY we | never | be con- | founded.]

SIR,—Reverting to your note about psalm-singing in 'Occasional Notes' and the correspondence about chants, may I be permitted to suggest that the secret of poor chanting lies not with the 'Cathedral Psalter,' but with the fact that so many organists and choirmasters consistently neglect the rehearsal of psalms and canticles, and do not study the choice of suitable chants sufficiently. Constant rehearsal is essential, but unless the director is a master of the art and has had experience of the correct method of doing this difficult and perhaps most important musical portion of the Church Service, it is obvious that the 'block system' of chanting will still be heard in the majority of the smaller churches.

What is needed is that he should constantly seek to listen to choirs and organists who are acknowledged as competent to do this work efficiently.

Even though Anglican chants are barred, and even though there are accents (an unfortunate term for use in this connection), these things are after all only intended as aids to smoothness if treated properly. Obviously the only dominating factor of perfect chanting is the ability to sing the Psalms as freely as they would be read by a good elocutionist. This may seem Utopian, but it is done in more or less degree in our Cathedrals and in many of the larger parish Churches. It should be the aim of every rector to help this work along, and the duty of every choirmaster and organist to use his intelligence and work hard with that desirable object in view.

So far as chants themselves are concerned it is necessary, if one is to make the best of the Psalms, and to make use of those chants written since the 'Cathedral Chant Book' was published, to make a careful and studied selection of all available good chants, giving first consideration to the suitability of the chant for any particular Psalm, then to study the interpretation and structure, the changes involved, and, last, but not least, the suitability of the chant for congregational use.

After thoroughly testing and pruning these selections they should be adhered to faithfully, only altering reluctantly; this enables the congregation and choir to give more thought to the words.

Should criticism be levelled at these suggestions, let it not be forgotten that in most churches the Psalms are only sung on Sundays, and that it would take a very considerable time for every one to become tired of the chants set permanently, provided that, of course, we are not satisfied to make one chant do duty for several totally different psalms. There are enough good chants if sought for to fit every Psalm many times over, and to leave a large number for use for Canticles.—Yours, &c.,

FREDERICK WILD
(Choirmaster and Organist, St. Paul's Church, Kersal, Manchester).

115, William Street, Heywood, Lancs.

THE LURE OF THE VIBRATO

SIR,—The letter of Mr. H. J. King in your June issue invites attention to a state of affairs in the singing world, which is of extreme importance at the present day. He writes:

> 'I beg to express my opinion of modern singing. I refer to the incessant tremolo upon every note and word. To my idea it is monotonous and unmusical.'

The writer might have gone further, and added that the vice alluded to was a positive danger, physically and spiritually, to the human voice.

It may prove an interesting coincidence to quote the words of the musical critic of the Sunday Pictorial of May 24:

> 'The size of the house [Covent Garden] necessitates a type of singing I rarely enjoy. I like the natural singing voice of man as I like the natural singing voice of birds. Imagine a bird's voice trained to reach the gallery. As its beauty in such circumstances would almost inevitably vanish, so vanishes the beauty of the human voice when subjected to the indignity of super-production.'

These are strong words, but, like those of your correspondent, just.

Personally, I do not see how the style of production alluded to in the Sunday Pictorial can fail to end in the vice of the vibrato censured by Mr. King. It is a purely forced production, radically wrong, and gradually weakens certain parts of the mechanism. The reason for the existence of this voice is not far to find. At the present day the tendency is to sacrifice everything to the achievement of quick results. Special openness and hardness of tone and an exaggeratedly clear pronunciation from the very beginning are striven for, to the utter neglect of any other consideration.

The gramophone and wireless bring this fact home to thousands daily. This practice, in the case of even the most gifted organisms, develops a kind of stridently 'open' quality, quite unsuitable for purely beautiful effect. I leave out of consideration that dark, dull kind of quality so imperatively necessary for the proper expression of deep sadness and hopeless grief. That voice is quite relegated ; the emission must be 'open' or nothing.

But it does not seem to be generally recognised that there are two descriptions of open voice, the declamatory and the cantabile. The former is used rightly for warlike, noisy, angry, violent, &c., modes of expression; the latter for passionate love, brightness, joyfulness, &c.

But to develop this cantabile open voice needs special knowledge, patience, and care. When attained, however, its power, solidity, and penetration are most marked, and its quality is exquisite. The singers of a past school possessed this voice to perfection. They could easily fill any house in the world and preserve beautiful quality, and their voices endured. These points are well worth consideration at the present day.—Yours, &c., H. TRAVERS ADAMS.

16, Warwick Avenue, W.2.

SIR,—A correspondent in your June issue deplores the incessant use of tremolo in modern singing. I am inclined to think the writer—whose opinion is backed up by expert professors, and therefore not lightly to be disregarded—holds a slightly exaggerated view of the situation.

It would seem to me—though my professional experience is very limited—that a line of demarcation should be drawn between that obviously manufactured 'wobble' which some singers affect (partly to cover up deficiencies in the sustaining of tone and partly to give an impression of strong emotion) and the natural, pleasant, oscillation or undulating vibration of the voice which is a sine quâ non of the finished singer. All good singers have this oscillation or wave in their voices, though in some it is more pronounced than in others. On the gramophone or wireless it is often so marked that it gives the impression of 'wobble' where none really exists.

Perhaps I may be forgiven for making a short personal digression. In listening to a gramophone record of my own voice, I was horrified to notice a distracting wobble in certain parts of the song. This mystified me, for although I am conscious of many faults as a singer, I don't think even my worst enemy would ever accuse me of 'wobble,' in ordinary circumstances. But one lives and learns !—Yours, &c., RONALD SWAFFIELD.

Rossall School, Fleetwood, Lancs.

A REVIVAL OF 'LES HUGUENOTS'?

SIR,—I have just read in one of the newspapers that there are more unlikely things than a revival of Meyerbeer's 'Les Huguenots.' Yes, indeed ! Why this world-famous opera, one of the most glorious ever written, has of late years fallen into disfavour is an absolute mystery to me. I know that Meyerbeer's detractors, in their stupid ignorance, are never tired of maintaining that this illustrious composer sacrificed his magnificent abilities for the sake of 'effect.' As if Wagner and, indeed, every other opera composer did not always strive after 'effect'! It was Berlioz who said that there was material for ten operas in Meyerbeer's 'Les Huguenots,' and, considering the endless wealth of delightful melodies which this work contains, the great French composer was not far wrong. It is years since I attended an opera performance, but if ever 'Les Huguenots' is given again, I shall certainly go and hear it.—Yours, &c.,

22A, Carlton Vale, N.W.6. ALGERNON ASHTON.

BIRD- AND INSECT-SONGS

SIR,—In your March issue is an article by Mr. Stanley H. Clarke, 'The Pipes of Pan,' in which he speaks of the music of bird- and insect-song. The study of these in the islands of New Zealand has been my pleasure for some years, and I am enclosing a prospectus of a book now in the press on this subject. In it will be included about two hundred songs and phrases of indigenous and imported birds. My opportunities for hearing the songs of both kinds have shown me that the great difference between the two is this: the songs of English birds may contain long phrases and suggestions of themes already invented by musicians, but when singing these phrases the birds do not connect them up in any way, and while they may repeat short phrases, they do not combine them in a motif ; the New Zealand birds do. The 'tui,' the bell-bird, the grey warbler, and the brown creeper all have quite long songs, many of them regularly divided into four-bar phrases. The birds are evidently conscious artists, for certain of their songs are sung many times, sometimes exactly the same, sometimes varied in a definite way. I have heard the brown creeper singing a song in triplets, first accenting the initial note of the triplet, then the third note; and as several birds sing together in unison, they must be conscious of the variation. I have heard a bell-bird sing a beautiful four-bar phrase, marking the bars with a curious, harsh, unmusical sound. This bird sang the phrase many times, then Beethoven-like commenced a series of variations on the theme. I have seen a 'tui' and a bell-bird seated on the same branch, almost side by side, singing a duet, and have known 'tuis' and bell-birds to sing in harmony, two, three, four, and five parts, for a quarter of an hour on end. I have heard this, but have not seen it, for it is the morning song of summer, sung before daylight, i.e., at about three o'clock. I have recorded a great many of these songs, and it is possible for anyone to check my records, for certain of the songs are sung every year. The 'tui' especially is an improvisatore. I have seen him sitting improvising. Sometimes the song pleases him, so that he sings it again and again; he sings it next day, and perhaps next season; he has included it in his répertoire. There are good singers and poor singers; when I say good, I should say exquisite.

Now as regards the imported birds, mostly English, I can hear no definiteness in their songs; that is, no orderly repetition of phrases. To take a concrete instance, the song of the skylark. I send a pamphlet in which I have noted all the notes and combination of notes occurring in one particular lark's song. The first surprise is the very narrow range of the melody, a narrowness I did not realise until I had recorded it. The second surprise is the extraordinary variation of a few notes by means of vocalisations, trills, and whistles. The third surprise is the wonderful power of the notes. But you may listen all day and never hear a song repeated. The bird may sing for a minute or two minutes, but you can never tell by any sequence of notes what sequence is to follow; he never sings the same song twice. This is where Browning is wrong when he says of the thrush:

> 'He sings each song twice over,
> Lest you should think he never could recapture
> That first fine careless rapture.'

He never does recapture it; he repeats a phrase, a few notes, but not a barred song. I have heard delightful phrases from the hedge-sparrow, from the common house-sparrow; I have heard the thrush sing a smooth, mellow chromatic scale, down, and up again four notes accelerato; have heard him repeat it—but not sing a song in definitely barred phrases.

In saying this I am far from belittling the song of any bird—all are a source of pure joy. I am only trying to show the great difference between the style of the song of the New Zealand birds and that of introduced birds. They differ in yet another respect; the songs of the indigenous birds more often fall within definite scales of sound; they use quarter-tones or less, but more sparingly than, say, the hedge-sparrow. I have heard a grey-warbler sing a certain phrase several times, then repeat it, varying a certain interval by a quarter-tone instead of a semitone rise, and repeat this variation and back again to the original; and the same on the day following.

Before concluding, I should like to say of one very voluble insect family, the Cicadidæ, that sing, in the heat of January and February, that I have seen twelve insects on one tree-stem, singing away with almost deafening vigour, and from the twelve I took down six different songs, all being sung at one time!—Yours, &c.,

JOHANNES C. ANDERSEN.

Alexander Turnbull Library,
Wellington, New Zealand.

A GOOD WORD FOR OUSELEY

SIR,—I recently came across a paragraph in a musical paper where reference was made to 'the sticky square-toedness' of Ouseley's edition of Gibbons's Church music. Surely this sort of comment on the work of a musician of Ouseley's distinction is not necessary to-day? Nobody pretends that Ouseley's edition of Gibbons's music is perfect; but it has been of the greatest use to Cathedral Choirs for many years, and is the work of a man who gave himself heart and soul to Church music for the whole of his life. This is the centenary year of Ouseley's birth as well as the tercentenary of Gibbons's death; and in view of this their names might well have been coupled together more often than they have been. The gratitude of Church musicians is certainly due to Ouseley for doing much to make the music of Gibbons better known.

There has been a splendid revival of Elizabethan Church music in recent years, and for this every musician is thankful. But let us neither forget nor depreciate the work of earlier editors. It is not generally known that Ouseley edited all the Services in the Barnard Books which are not contained in Boyce. His death prevented these being published; but his beautiful manuscripts remain (they make a bulky volume) as witnesses to his loving and, in many ways, scholarly work for Church music.

I enclose the paragraph referred to above.—Yours, &c.,

HEATHCOTE D. STATHAM.

St. Michael's College, Tenbury, Worcestershire.

THE NEGLECT OF LISZT'S MUSIC

SIR,—Will you allow me to express my grateful thanks to Mr. Calvocoressi for his admirable articles on Liszt? The lamentable ignorance of Liszt's works in this country is, of course, due to the fact that we never have any opportunities for hearing them. I remember only two performances of the 'Faust' Symphony during the last twenty years, and I think I am right in saying that the 'Dante' Symphony has never had a single performance in this country since about the end of the last century: and these two works contain some of the finest music ever written! Cannot our conductors be persuaded to give us more frequent performances of Liszt's works?—Yours, &c.,

L. H. OVENDEN.

St. Edward's School, Oxford.

'WAGNER'S LEADING MOTIVES'

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Scott's article in the July issue, I venture to differ from him on one or two points.

First: He claims that Wagner's 'use of the method [of leading motives] was so utterly and completely different from anything previously known as to be indistinguishable from an entirely new invention.' He quotes Mozart and Weber as having made 'tentative and rudimentary efforts' in this direction. I admit, of course, that Wagner developed the system to an unheard-of degree in his later works, but surely the idée fixe of Berlioz was something more than a 'rudimentary effort'?

Secondly: Surely neither Mr. Scott nor Mr. Hight seriously imagines that Wagner was rash enough to attempt the musical depiction of a sword qua sword? I think it is obvious that each of Wagner's motives is intended to convey an abstract conception. The circumstance that the motive in question is always associated with the sword is due to the fact that both symbolise the same idea: the power which, in the hands of a fearless one (Siegfried), will break the spell of the 'treaties' by which Wotan is bound—the 'treaties' being represented by (1) the spear, and (2) the descending figure which Mr. Scott quotes. I am no fervid admirer of Wagner's complicated symbolism (the outcome, apparently, of his vague and Schopenhauer-tinted philosophy), but I think he was above the absurdity of attempting the musical depiction of inanimate objects.

The great point, however, is that Wagner was able to create motives which, in themselves, are of vital interest; and as the musical fact is the criterion by which he—as a composer—must ultimately be judged, I entirely agree with Mr. Scott when he asks, 'What does it really matter?'—Yours, &c.,

J. H. ELLIOT.

Workington, Cumberland.

THE REGENT'S BUGLE

SIR,—I am much indebted to Dr. Grattan Flood for his valuable reply to my inquiry on this instrument, which completes the identification of Percival and Power. It does not, however, throw light on the construction and mechanism of the Regent's Bugle, which await what the lawyers call 'further and better particulars.' To state that it was a variant of the Royal Kent Bugle is tantamount to saying that it differed from that instrument, without mentioning in what the variation consisted.

My letter in the May issue contained a misprint, which may have misled Dr. Flood in one particular. The spring-box on Power's instrument is stamped 'Keat,' and not 'Kent,' as printed. Keat is a well-known name in the manufacture of brass instruments, and it was the fact of the spring-box bearing another maker's name that led me to suppose that Power was not genuinely a manufacturer. His instrument bears no relation to the Kent Bugle, which has no spring-box.

It is possible that the Regent's Bugle was but a variant of the Royal Kent Bugle, but this, I think, is unlikely. Halliday's model was made by numerous people, though to what extent this was done during the validity of his patent can hardly be ascertained, and was generally, if not universally, known by the name bestowed on it by the inventor, which does not seem to have received protection as an exclusive and proprietary trade name. Instruments so styled and marked were made by Turton and Pace, both of Dublin, and Clementi and Key, both of London, and probably many others. Percival's bugle was brought out during the life of Halliday's patent, and its deviser, who was a man of some reputation as a maker, was hardly likely to have committed the solecism of exchanging the name of the Duke of Kent for that of his elder brother, the Prince Regent, on a competing instrument that was a mere crib from Halliday's, and not a distinct model.

Although Halliday's invention was not very original, being merely an adaptation of Weidinger's key-trumpet, which I know to have reached and been manufactured in England, it was well thought out. Extant specimens vary little among themselves in size or construction, except in the number of keys. Halliday began with five, and soon added a sixth; and six or seven keys may be regarded as the standard number. A few have from eight to ten keys, the additions being to provide an alternative fingering for difficult passages, or to enable shakes to be made without cross-fingering.

The Kent Bugle was also much used on the Continent—in France and Belgium under the name of Bugle à clefs, and in Germany and Austria under those of Klappenhorn or Kenthorn—and foreign specimens follow the usual lines. I have a couple of seven-keyed instruments, one by Key, of Charing Cross, and the other by Moritz, of Berlin, which are alike in every essential feature, although the material and workmanship are dissimilar. It is impossible to say whether Sachs's authority, Joh. G. Schmidt, knew or described the Kent Bugle as well as the Regent's Bugle, because Dr. Sachs gives no reference to the source of his description.

As a rare exception to this rule of uniformity, I also possess what is in effect a duty-bugle furnished with six keys. This instrument is in C, with a crook for B flat, and being turned twice round, it stands only 8½-in. high, and measures 4½-in. across the bell. It has two rings for suspension by a cord, and is clearly intended to serve a double purpose, both as a military bugle and for use in the band, being thus the precursor of that clumsy device, the duty-bugle fitted with a 'chromatic attachment.'

The Kent Bugle did not go down before the cornet without a long struggle, for it had a vogue, in England or abroad, of some forty years or more. Its weak points were a want of brilliance in tone, and unevenness in the scale, caused by the bad quality of the notes produced by the keys farthest from the bell. Against these had to be reckoned very considerable powers of execution and great facility in scale-passages, shakes, and other ornaments, in which respect it was far superior to the cornet. A little practice on the instrument will afford proof that these claims are well founded.

Although there is no chance of its being generally revived, it is just possible that if some energetic cornet player were to make himself a really skilled executant on it, he might recover a measure of popularity for it as a solo instrument. Perhaps the idea may be commended to those dance orchestras which are always trying to break away from the orthodox in orchestration.

Lastly, may I record, as a curiosity merely, that in 1917 and 1918 I was in the habit of blowing the 'All Clear' on air-raid nights on a 'Royal Kent Bugle,' for which purpose its sonorous and far-reaching bellow was admirably fitted. And so it came to pass that, like many another 'dug-out,' Joseph Halliday, once band-master of the Cavan Militia, through his invention did his bit, albeit a posthumous and very minute one, in the Great War.—Yours, &c.,

W. F. H. BLANDFORD.

CHOIRBOYS AND SCOUTS

SIR,—I have read with much interest the letters on the above subject appearing in the Musical Times, and I feel that perhaps it is my duty to give my own experiences in order to help other choirmasters to a careful consideration of Mr. Nicholson's appeal.

I have the privilege of being organist, &c., at one of the well-known London churches; indeed, I doubt if any other church has such a wonderful service list. I merely mention this to show that our boys are well-employed, and, moreover, need all their faculties for choir work.

I am keenly interested in the Scout movement, and think it excellent if properly organized. Some years ago I made a rule that 'no member of the choir could also be a Scout,' and that rule always worked splendidly.

When, however, I commenced duties (nearly three years ago) at my present church, I found a very strong Scout element existing, practically the whole of the boys being Scouts or Cubs, with a very enthusiastic Scout-master. The Scouts overran the parochial headquarters; in fact, were in 'command'—one could never get away from them. So I decided, and was advised, to leave things as they were. I am on friendly terms with the Scout-master, and have tried hard to work with him. But unfortunately he knows little of musical matters, has a very raucous voice, and yet has been a member of the choir (a very irregular one, owing to Scout duties) for some years.

The results are as follows: Choir practices are looked upon as a great nuisance, the boys more or less as martyrs for having to leave games, cease drill, &c., in order to attend them, when the non-choir boys can have a good time. Football, cricket, gymnastics, are indulged in right up to the moment of rehearsal or service, the boys coming into the practice-room out of breath and bathed in perspiration. (A playground adjoins the church.) Discipline does not exist!

Practices cannot be arranged at certain times, as these are all Scout times.

As soon as services or rehearsals are over the boys are ready to continue with their Scout affairs, the officials often waiting to burst into the practice-room. Services for Scouts are held, and choir-boys sing with boys whose voices are broken, and older people who emit various kinds of horrible noises. Scouts indulge in the usual shouting about—it is part of their creed! Concerts are arranged, when the choir-boys have to do all the work, and also sing in unsuitable keys with these other terrible sounds.

Camps are planned for week-ends, and choir-boys are either forbidden to attend—a terrible hardship—or they do so, and are packed off on Sunday morning, arriving breathless a few minutes before service commences, to say nothing of the rehearsal which takes place first.

If a boy misbehaves in choir, or is dismissed, the Scouts take him to their bosom, and rejoice together because, as it were, they have 'found the sheep that was lost.'

I have had many conferences with the clergy and the Scout-master, but without avail, not because I am disinterested or that they really wish to be antagonistic, but because in my opinion the two organizations can never go together.

Choir-work in a well-organized choir is sufficient in itself, and Scout-work is also wholly absorbing. To try to do the two things is to do neither well, and it is easy to see which suffers more. How could one expect any ordinary boy to prefer a choir rehearsal to a Scout affair? It is unreasonable.

All our boys come from the neighbourhood of the church, and it is not possible to obtain boys from elsewhere.

When I first took over my duties the leading boy told me he was sick of the choir and wanted to resign. He has even tried to be dismissed in order to be free for Scout-work, and other boys are following suit.

Perhaps I ought to add that I do not speak as a failure. I have an enviable reputation for my work, and especially for my keen interest in boys and their recreation.

My present boys are most enthusiastic when at work and thoroughly enjoy their practices, and it is only when Scout affairs come along that the present state of things obtains.

What can be done? If any of your readers can offer a solution I shall be grateful. I enclose my card.—Yours, &c.,

PERPLEXED.

SIR,—To a choirmaster, like myself, who has the enthusiasm of his choirboys at heart, Mr. Bramall's letter in your last issue is far more 'one-sided' than that which he writes to criticise. He would have us believe that our boys have no initiative, and he mentions that he does not ask them to become scouts 'for the good of the troop.' I hasten to add that if that is so, they should not join at all, because of the lack of comradeship. A choirboy will be invaluable to all troops if only for his help in the 'sing-songs.' Some Scouts could not hit a first note within an octave. But Mr. Bramall's most lamentable misapprehension is, 'that if Scout-masters are to persuade Scouts to join choirs, it will obviously be for the choir's good, and not for the boys'.' I fail to see so 'obvious' an argument, and I also regard the spiritual benefit which a choirboy can derive from the church to be as valuable an asset as the undisputable good which is forthcoming from the Boy Scout organization. We must bear in mind that the modern parish church choirboy cannot be placed on the same footing as a Cathedral chorister. For the former singing is a hobby—and scouting too, no doubt—but for the latter it is a part of his daily routine. I sympathise with Mr. Pugh's letter on this subject, and I think that all Scout-masters should note Mr. Nicholson's admirable plea for co-operation. Meanwhile, if Mr. Bramall will come back to earth, he will find the prestige of the musical world to be as exalted as that of the scouting circles.—Yours, &c.,

HAROLD WILKINSON
(Formerly Chorister in Durham Cathedral).
Choirmaster and Organist,
St. Wilfrid's Church, Bradford.

SIR,—I am neither a Scout-master nor a choirmaster, but am closely connected with both activities.

I quite realise Mr. Pugh's reluctance in allowing three of his boys leave of absence on Whitsun-day to attend a Scout camp, for I expect he finds, as most of us do, his best boys are Scouts. But if his remaining boys were encouraged to do likewise, and a troop thus formed in the choir, the camps could be arranged so as not to clash with the great festivals.

With regard to the point as to Scouts' drill necessitating absence from choir practice, I dare to rush in where

Mr. Nicholson fears to tread, and say Mr. Pugh would probably get better results from his choir by the sacrifice of one night per week, to enable the boys to meet together in the jolly fellowship of the Scout club-room, there to receive character training and the true discipline which comes from within rather than without.—Yours, &c.,

ALFRED MORRIS
(Hon. Sec., Chester and Dist. Boy Scouts' Association).

9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

SIR,—My sins have found me out. Question 4 of the letter I wrote to you last month, re 'Choirboys and Scouts,' was intended to be of a humorous nature. Such, I am sure, Mr. Nicholson understood it to be, for, from the nature of his reply, he showed that he was not to be 'drawn.' Not so, however, many of your readers. During the last month I have been snowed under by letters of protest, classing my poor little joke as absurd, ridiculous, without balance, and other nice things. Some writers seem very cross about me asking Mr. Nicholson to sing. Well, I don't know. Perhaps they are right. Anyway, I have never heard him sing. Now, curiously enough, most of these letters came from Manchester and district. Can it be that they are from Mr. Nicholson's ex-Boy Scouts and Girl Guides? If so, he has certainly trained them well. One lady (at least, I think it is a lady, from the nature of the writing), who signs herself 'Bach,' is particularly annoyed. Now I seem to have heard the name of Bach before in music; but let us hope that in her case her Bach is worse . . . (What, again? Well, well!) Does 'Feste' get it 'in the neck' (what an expressive phrase) like this every time he makes a joke? If so, he must have a lively time.

Well, Sir, I am still unrepentant. Mr. Nicholson airily dismisses my objections with the assertion that it is all a matter of co-operation. But is it? The Scout camps are fixed when the schools are on holiday, and that is usually at the times of the great festivals. This arrangement would not, and could not, be altered for one company. He also says 'that even choirboys need a holiday sometimes.' Well, mine get one. The church at which I officiate is one of the very few where the authorities have the sense to grant the choir and organist the whole of August holiday, and carry on the services with a choir of ladies and a lady organist.—Yours, &c., W. J. FREDERICK PUGH.

34, Wilmington Avenue, W.4.

SIR,—May I be allowed to express my thanks to Mr. Nicholson for his courteous and full reply to my inquiry that appeared in your June issue?

The matter of school home-work appears to me to have an important bearing on the working of the proposed scheme. I submit that there is no reason whatever why church choirs should be regarded as the exclusive preserve of the elementary school-boy. When there is a good leavening of boys from secondary and other schools, as is frequently the case, the home-work question has to be faced. This already presents sufficient difficulties, but under the policy advocated, such boys would have to satisfy the schoolmaster (with home-work), the choirmaster, the Scout-master, and still find time for sports. This is a formidable proposition if their non-compulsory activities are to be properly conducted.

Whilst, therefore, good results, musically and otherwise, may doubtless accrue from co-operation when the local conditions are favourable, there is need for care, I venture to think, in any general pursuit of the line indicated, lest, with the best intentions, we succeed in making the position more difficult for many boys (assuming we could persuade them to adopt the suggested dual rôle). Any further complications would inevitably react unfavourably upon choir recruiting, already no easy task, owing mainly to the lack of organization and encouragement of choir-boys as a body.—Yours, &c., CHOIRMASTER.

THE MISUSE OF THE TROMBONE

SIR,—I am grateful to Mr. Wotton for his suggestion that Franck wrote for valve trombones. I am afraid that I was not in a position to be at Paris or anywhere else in 1886, but I am quite prepared to believe that valve trombones were in use at the Opéra-Comique. My object, of course, was not to attack Franck, but to provide an actual example of what is awkward for the slide trombone. Mr. Wotton's example from Bruneau, if played with the slide, would be more amusing to the spectator than to the performer, and certainly suggests the use of valve trombones at that time.

Mr. Dixon is a little unkind to the slide trombone. The glissando, which I presume is what he means by 'slithering up to the note,' is not entirely and always objectionable. There is a good example in 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which the curious may discover for themselves. The effect can be mildly exhilarating if the occasion is appropriate. In any case no particular glory attaches to any composer because he happens to write for valve trombones rather than for those with the slide. Trombone players are not in the habit of introducing the glissando where it is not indicated. The whole position was admirably summed up by Berlioz over half a century ago in his 'Treatise on Modern Orchestration and Instrumentation' (English translation, p. 173). Not every one, however, will agree with him that > '. . . the pianissimo of trombones, applied to harmonies belonging to the minor mode, is gloomy, lugubrious, I had almost said hideous. If, particularly, the chords be brief, and broken by rests, it has the effect of strange monsters giving utterance, in dim shadow, to howls of ill-repressed rage.'

Mr. Lawrence takes up the cudgels boldly on behalf of the clarinet, though there was little necessity for doing so. He also accuses me of a mixed metaphor. I do not see why pillars should not cut capers. Cannot Mr. (or is it Miss?) Lawrence imagine that had the caryatides of the Erectheum been fashioned by the hand of Pygmalion they would have cut many a classic caper—perhaps even the cordax? There is nothing to be ashamed of in cutting capers, and I should have thought that the clarinet cut as many as any other agile instrument. The point, however, is singularly unimportant and does not materially affect the main issue.—Yours, &c.,

J. A. WESTRUP.

SIR,—In my more abandoned moments I play the trombone, and having once made this damaging admission I claim to speak, if not ex cathedra, at least in extenso.

While fully agreeing with Mr. Westrup as to the technical difficulties of the passages he quoted, I must disagree with him as to the essential nature of the instrument itself. He claims, in effect, that it is 'noble and dignified.' I should say rather that it belongs to that class of objects which are, as Aristotle says, 'by nature ridiculous.' I speak only from personal experience. If I mention to a musical friend the fact that I play the trombone, a smile, half of pity, half of contempt, invariably comes over his features. If my friend is a non-musician he usually laughs outright, and says, 'Oh, is that the thing which goes like this?'—and makes extensive movements with his hands and curious noises through his nose. Is this the attitude that one would normally adopt towards a noble and dignified instrument? I hope not.

These little personal details may seem irrelevant, but (if Mr. Westrup will pardon the emendation) we live in an irrelevant age. The trombone, I venture to suggest, occupies among instruments a position analogous to that of the donkey among animals. It might be called > 'The devil's sliding parody

> Of all orchestral things.'

Of course, as a philosopher, Mr. Westrup might object that he was considering not the appearance of the instrument, but its reality, i.e., in this case its 'tone.' But in considering it use or misuse, he cannot afford to neglect the psychology of the player. There is a legend that Athena threw away the flute in disgust because it distorted her features. Imagine the feelings of the trombonist who happens to see himself in a mirror! All thought of dignity and nobility must leave him for ever.

Now it is obvious that if the player were allowed to brood on his humiliating appearance he would never be able to hold up his slide in public again. He feels that he must do something to compensate for the natural absurdity of his instrument. The only way he can do this is by displaying technical ability. The classic example is that of the player who so annoyed Mendelssohn by putting a 'turn' in the opening phrase of the 'Lobgesang.' The story may be apocryphal, but it illustrates the point in question. That player, I imagine, was suffering from an 'inferiority complex,' due to generations of composers having underestimated his ability. But for a full discussion of the subject I would refer Mr. Westrup, and any who are interested, to the article on 'Exhibition and Inhibition' in the Journal of Psychology and Scientific Method, vol. xvi., No. 3.

I suggest that all the examples cited by Mr. Westrup as cases of misuse, are really compliments, conscious or unconscious, from the composer to the performer, to encourage him in overcoming the inherent disabilities of his instrument. If composers never wrote passages which bordered on the unplayable, the standard of playing would automatically go down, and finally the trombonist and his instrument, like the mastodon and the brontosaurus, would become extinct. The rest of the orchestra, I suppose, would be rather glad if they did.

I do not, however, deny that there are cases of 'misuse,' but I think they are confined to the more popular types of 'band music,' and are hardly ever found in reputable orchestral works. For example, this:

for sixteen bars on end, is not exhilarating or even edifying to the listener, and the crowning irony of con tenerezza is most exasperating to the player. One feels that even the best of trombones (Excelsior Model No. 1, with silver mountings and improved water-key, suitable for presentation) would wilt before that con tenerezza.

On the other hand, there is plenty of fine trombone writing in military band music, and I have heard passages like this:

played staccato on a slide trombone without any apparent difficulty, and with perfect intonation.

The passage cited by Mr. Wotton from Franck in your July issue would, of course, be extremely awkward for a tenor slide trombone in B flat. But surely 'Trombone III.' indicates bass trombone (in G). The passage would then be quite playable, and a good performer could manage it at almost double the speed, though the result would be somewhat apoplectic.

To return to the analogy of the donkey: there is a saying that these animals go best when loaded, and the danger of the 'last straw' applies more to the camel than the donkey or trombonist. It is not so paradoxical as it sounds to say that the trombonist plays the unplayable best, and that the instrument will never be misused so long as there are players who know how to use it. And I am confident that there will be, so long as composers do not start 'writing down' to it. Sic itur ad astra—the last trump may be a trombone after all.—Yours, &c.,

L. N. C. BARNABY.

103, South Croxted Road, S.E.21.

SINGERS' JARGON AND THE TOWER OF BABEL

SIR,—'To noots of woo!' 'Mi-ee Wi-eefe!' 'His mighty grease!' 'Whur-y-ee dur-uz the Gur-od of Essrael sur-leep?'

These choice specimens of vocal diction (and others galore), heard some years ago at a performance of Handel's 'Samson,' still afflict my memory. We meet with such verbal distortions at almost every local performance. The destruction of vowel character, the 'india-rubber' vowels (one stretched into two), and the inert formation of consonants, initial and final, reduce our noble English language into a monotonous mumble, devoid of all clarity, beauty, and symbolism. The incessant use of portamento, and the almost universal failure to attack the middle of the note, are vicious habits that seem to be growing in every direction. The singers are only partly to blame; the fault lies mainly with the teachers.

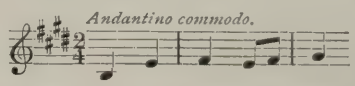
Before the Tower of Babel erected on the operatic stage, and at vocal recitals and other concerts, the common man is prostrate. A polyglot of languages he doesn't understand is hurled at his devoted head, and, should his native tongue put in a belated appearance, he gets a headache trying to understand what the singer is saying unless fortunately he has the words in front of him. With clear diction, books of words are unnecessary. Efforts are being made in many quarters to convince the auditor that the natural beauty of our language (not singers' jargon) as presented by the individualism of the numerous vowels and diphthongs, the clear-cut consonants and the significance of the text (of which significance words are only symbols) is as important as the music, and often more so. But the singer is in the limelight, and it is for him to put his house in order and present to his auditors the ideal of the singers' art—perfect music, text, technique, and interpretation.—Yours, &c.,

MUNRO DAVISON.

Guildhall School of Music, E.C.

A POINT IN RIMSKY-KORSAKOV

SIR,—In the Overture—and also at the beginning of the third Act—of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'A May Night' is found a phrase:



This, of course, is also the opening phrase of Brahms's song 'May Night' (Op. 43, No. 2). The Rimsky opera was produced in 1880, and the Brahms song was published in 1865. Finding himself engaged on a work with a similar title to Brahms's song, did Rimsky—'to gain some private ends'—indulge in the luxury of actual quotation—pleasant, though unauthorised—or is it merely another case of 'the man who plants cabbages imitates too'?

Perhaps one of your readers, better versed than I in Russian music, can throw some light on the matter.—Yours, &c.,

FELIX WHITE.

28, Hilldrop Crescent, N.7.

[We are obliged to hold over a large number of letters.—EDITOR.]

Sharps and Flats

One of the reasons why I am a great pianist is because I have patience and perseverance. I have played one piece of Godowsky thirteen thousand times, and I will play it more before I play it in public.—Pachmann.

America has no ear for the music of bells. It has for the little one on the cash register.—New York Telegram-Mail.

A woman's place is at the crib in the home, not at a piano in the concert-hall. The mother of the Gracchi did not play in public, neither did the mother of Beethoven! They gave us great men.—Otto Flügelmann, Paterson, N.J.

I have a partiality for the trombone, and desire nothing better than an epitaph, such as I have seen in this district, which reads: 'Here lies John Jones, who blew down a trombone and brought up a virtuous family.'—Dr. Frank Bates.

Perhaps the most over-rated position in the world is that of conductor. The outrageous price paid for 'star' conductors is ridiculous.—Henry T. Fleck.

Opera-singers are always in the public eye, and therein lies one of the hardships of our life.—Jeritza.

Wales has need of a Satie.—Leigh Henry.

If we could only wear red velvet or something else rather more colourful—and get rid of those awful collars!—Chaliapin.

I have always considered it absurd to have to sing, dressed like a tailor's dummy, half-choked by a stiff collar.—Peter Dawson.

Stiff collars are the bane of my existence.—Walter Hyde.

Contrary to despising evening dress, I like it. I consider it extremely comfortable and always suitable, and never experience any difficulty at all in singing with a stiff collar round my neck.—John McCormack.

It is not eccentricity, it is to me natural and necessary to talk and explain what it is, the music of Chopin, as I play. It is not fanfaronade. Last concert I did not talk to show them, and three hundred peoples wrote to Mr. Powell and said, 'Why did not M. Pachmann talk? That is what we love.' But if they are wicked about me again, I will punish them, and nevaire, nevaire speak.—Pachmann.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Soprano wishes to meet one who has studied the art of accompanying, one or two evenings a week, for mutual practice. Difficult accompaniments. Streatham Hill district.—VOX, c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist would be glad of vocal and instrumental practice. East Yorks.—L. M., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet vocalists for mutual practice. N. London district.—OPUS, c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet another young lady for duets.—P. S., 15, Mildmay Park, N.1.

Young lady pianist, wishing to make progress in sight-reading, would like to meet violinist (lady) for mutual practice. Nelson or Burnley districts, Lancashire.—PIANOFORTE, c/o Musical Times.

Young 'cellist wanted (medium ability) to complete trio for mutual practice. Northamptonshire district.—C. A. S., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (student) wishes to meet capable pianist student for mutual practice.—A. B., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur Dramatic Society. Two young gentlemen wanted. N.W.6 district. Also trumpets, trombones, and drums for sacred work.—O. C., c/o Musical Times.

South London Philharmonic Society has vacancies for instrumentalists, particularly wind; also for singers—all voices. Rehearsals on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Concerts at Goldsmiths' College, New Cross. Principal works: 'Faust' (Berlioz); Beethoven's Violin Concerto; 'From the New World'; 'Hymn of Jesus' (Holst); and a Bach Pianoforte Concerto.—Prospectus from hon. secretary, JOHN W. WATERER, 'The Limes,' 50c, Crooms Hill, S.E.10.

Lady 'cellist wanted to complete trio (earnest and advanced student preferred). S.E. London.—Mrs. WILLMORE, 83, Standard Road, Bexley Heath.

Soprano wishes to meet other singers, or would join quartet. N. London.—E. A. M., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur conductor, hard worker and enthusiast (several years' experience), would undertake conductorship of full and efficient orchestra rehearsing first-class music, during the coming season. (Not operatic society.)—BATON, c/o Musical Times.

Young gentleman pianist wishes to meet young violinist for mutual practice. Morning. S.W. or W. districts.—HARRY J. TROTT, 1A, Adeney Road, Hammersmith, W.6.

'Cellist wanted to complete trio at end of September, for winter season. Crofton Park, S.E., and district.—G. P., c/o Musical Times.

Young gentleman pianist (experienced in chamber music) wishes to meet first-rate violinist, for chamber music or solo playing.—A. V. H., 15, Hanover Park, S.E.15.

There are vacancies for good amateur instrumentalists in the orchestra of the West Middlesex Musical Society, and applications should be made at once to the hon. secretary, Mr. T. ARTHUR MORATH, Greystoke Cottage, Ealing, W.5. Rehearsals at Ealing, commencing on September 23.

West Middlesex Musical Society has vacancies in the chorus (all parts). Good voices and fair sight-reading. Apply at once to the hon. secretary, Mr. T. ARTHUR MORATH, Greystoke Cottage, Ealing, W.5. Rehearsals at Ealing, commencing September 21.

Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster, S.W., invites applications (strings and wind—new Philharmonic pitch) for membership for the season 1925-26. Prospectus post free on application. State instrument.—SECRETARY, 30, The Green, Twickenham.

Islington Choral Society has vacancies for viola, 'cello, flute, and clarinet.—Particulars from HON. SECRETARY, 273, Upper Street, N.1.

Alto wishes to meet three others with a view to forming a quartet. Birmingham or Wolverhampton districts.—A. E. H., c/o Musical Times.

'Cello and cornet players wish to join orchestra. Classical and popular music.—PUTNEY, c/o Musical Times.

Madrigals. The Elizabethan Singers require a bass to complete personnel. Must be a good sight-reader, and enthusiastic. Meetings, Queen's Park, on Saturday evenings.—R. TANSLEY, 10, Colville Gardens, Talbot Road, W.11.

Double-bass, experienced, requires ensemble practice where instrument is provided. S. London.—P. A. 1178, c/o Musical Times.

Young basso-cantante wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. Beckenham or district.—J. NAUNTON-RUSHEN, 55, Kendall Road, Beckenham, Kent.

Good instrumentalists (male), all parts, required for orchestra, Catford district. Rehearsals, Mondays.—C. W. S., 26, Balloch Road, Catford, S.E.6.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

Last month's happenings were overshadowed by the week of opera at the New Scala Theatre. The enterprise fully justified itself, and proved that the institution possesses a remarkable amount of good operatic material. Both 'The Magic Flute' and 'Falstaff' were distinguished in all the performances by two invaluable attributes: the ensemble, that bugbear of most operatic performances, amateur or professional, was exceptionally good; and there was an undefinable atmosphere of enjoyment on the stage that communicated itself across the footlights to the audience—always a sign of well-being and well-doing. To Mr. J. B. McEwen, the principal, who first suggested 'Falstaff' to Mr. Julius Harrison, is due a debt of gratitude, for this wonderfully attractive opera, so cleverly constructed both as regards music and libretto, is shamefully neglected in this country, and there were many in the large audiences who had never heard it. The outstanding feature of both productions was the orchestral playing; it was always musical and always intelligent. There was ample evidence that Mr. Harrison had spared neither time nor trouble in the rehearsals, and he had his reward in the excellent results. As regards the singers, two stood out head and shoulders above their colleagues, admirable and adequate all round as the company proved itself. The Ford of Mr. Roy Henderson was a first-class conception vocally and dramatically, and Mr. Arthur Fear's Falstaff was also a fine piece of work. A word is due, too, to Miss Rose Alper, who was a satisfactory and promising Pamina. The lack of good tenors is as noticeable among students as in the musical world generally.

After hearing these performances more than once, it seems a pity that the Academy has not a fully-equipped, modern theatre of its own, for undoubtedly here are the materials and making of a nursery that would go far to solve the problem, at least artistically speaking, of opera in England.

Very interesting was the students' chamber concert in the Duke's Hall on June 25. First-rate ensemble was displayed in the first movement of Brahms's Sextet in G, and a high standard of performance was attained in the Quartet in F minor, Op. 95, by Beethoven. The four young artists, Messrs. Jean Pougnet, Hugo Rignold, Harry Berly, and Douglas Cameron, deserve to be heard beyond the limits of the Academy. Of far more than passing interest, if only for its historical value, was the performance of a Quartet in G, by Rossini, the separate parts of which have been recently discovered in the R.A.M. Library. It is slender in structure, but melodious in quality, and full justice was done to its merits by the players. It is probable that this was the first public performance of the work. There was some beautiful accompanying by a string quartet and pianoforte of Chausson's 'Chanson perpetuelle,' sung by Miss Jessie Hewson.

The dramatic students had their turn on July 15 and 16, when Shakespeare's 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' was presented at the Duke's Hall, with incidental music by the Junior Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. Spencer Dyke. The stage players, under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond, had learned their parts with care, and the diction was noticeably good, but in many cases a sense of the dramatic seemed to be lacking. It was a smooth production, carefully done, but fell somewhat short of inspiration. The material is distinctly there, and requires only a little encouragement.

The Academy has received an interesting gift in the shape of a Broadwood pianoforte of historical value. It belonged to Cipriani Potter, who in 1822 became the second principal, succeeding Dr. Crotch. With its curiously prim-looking case and fluted silk front, it is reminiscent of the antimacassar and flowers in glass shades —features of parlour decoration at that period. The Academy keeps Mr. Potter's memory green by an annual Exhibition, the fund for which was raised by public subscription.

The following awards have been made:

Julia Leney Prize (harp) to Julia Wolfe, of Bridgnorth; Matthew Phillimore Prize (male pianists) to Clifford M. Curzon, of London; Piatti Prize (violoncello) to Joan Mulholland, of London; Cecil Martin Prize (elocution) to Eileen Woolfe, of London; Sir Edward Cooper Prize (string quartet) to Enid Bailey, Philip Burton, Harry Berly, and Doris Vevers; Cuthbert Nunn Prize (composition) to Frederick T. Durrant, of Beer, Devon; Frederick Westlake Memorial Prize (pianoforte) to Francis G. Britton, of London; Walter Macfarren Gold Medals (pianoforte) to Thomas Marshall and Sybil Barlow, both of London; Gilbert R. Betjemann Silver Medal (singing) to Vera Kneebone, of Plymouth; Mario Prize (tenors) to Eric Greene, of London; Swansea Eisteddfod Prize (soprano and mezzo-soprano) to Gladys M. Fisher, of Merthyr Tydvil; Parepa-Rosa Gold Medal (sopranos) to Adelaide Cardanelli, of Australia; Janet Duff Greet Prize (pianoforte) to Betty Humby, of London; Charlotte Walters Prizes (elocution) to Joan French and Gladys London; Albert Hunt Shakespearean Prize (elocution) to Joan French; Blakiston Memorial Prize (pianoforte) to Dorothy Manley; Henry R. Eyers Prize (sight-singing) to Freda Monk; Messrs. Challen & Son Gold Medal (pianoforte) to Kathleen Dunn-Davies; Messrs. Chappell & Co. Gold Medal (pianoforte) to Francis G. Britton; The Pianoforte Advisory Board Prize to Eric Brough; Alexander Roller Memorial Prize (pianoforte) to Doris Hibbert.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The last few weeks of the summer term are lively enough in all educational centres, as this term generally marks the end of a School or College year. In the case of a musical institution the excitement is increased by the fact that, besides countless lessons and examinations, a large number of concerts have to be taken into account. In the last fortnight of the Royal College term there were no less then ten performances of different kinds, affording a survey of the work of the College in chamber and orchestral music, and in opera and drama.

Of the operatic performances two—which were concerned with what may be termed répertoire operas, i.e., scenes from 'Il Trovatore' (with a small orchestra), with Miss Margaret Coates, Mr. Richard Hawkins, Miss Vera Gilman, Mr. Robert Poole, Mr. Charles Draper, and Mr. Robert Gwynne —were given on July 2, under the care of Mr. Grünebaum and Mr. Fairbairn; and scenes from 'Tosca' and 'The Flying Dutchman' (with full orchestra) were given on July 8. In 'Tosca,' Miss Odette de Foras and Mr. Gavin Gordon-Brown earned great distinction for their interpretation of the scene in Scarpia's apartment, Miss de Foras in particular showing a mastery of effect which one associates with the professional rather than with the student. Other parts were taken by Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Draper, and Mr. Gwynne. In 'The Flying Dutchman,' Miss de Foras made a great impression on quite different lines from those in 'Tosca.' Mr. John Andrews as the Dutchman and Mr. Draper as Daland were more than efficient, Mr. Andrews showing a fine sense of character. In the very small part of Mary, Miss Marion Williams was conspicuous, and was ably supported by an admirable chorus of girls at their spinning-wheels. The opportunities which the Operatic Class gives to student-conductors were once more in evidence, Mr. Claude Smith-Dodsworth taking charge of 'Il Trovatore,' and Mr. Guy Warrack conducting 'Tosca.'

The remaining opera performances at the end of the term demonstrated the other side of the policy adopted in the working of the opera class, that is to say, the production of new English operas. On this occasion the programme was devoted to the works of Dame Ethel Smyth, two short operas being given. One of these, 'Fête Galante,' had been heard in England and on the Continent; the other was an entirely new production, viz., 'Entente Cordiale,' a comedy with music founded on an incident in France during the War. These performances took place on July 22 and 23, too late, therefore, to receive more than mention in this issue.

The events at the close of the term included three orchestral concerts, two chamber concerts, a recital, an informal concert, an evening given by the Director to the conductors' class and third orchestra, and a performance of two plays by the dramatic class. The mere number of these events makes detailed reference quite impossible.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

By the death of Mr. J. W. Sidebotham (former M.P. for Bowden, Cheshire) the College has lost an enthusiastic supporter. A member and chairman of the College Corporation for many years, a trustee of the Pension Fund since its inception, as well as, in more recent years, a vice-president, he devoted his life to educational interests, more particularly, perhaps, to those advancing the cause of music in this country. The funeral was largely attended, the College being represented by the secretary.

A number of interesting lectures have been given during the term, those of distinctive interest being a course of three on poetry, by (a) Mr. A. Rutherston on 'Standard and Comparison in Art'; (b) Mr. Alfred Noyes on the 'Music of Poetry'; and (c) Mr. John Drinkwater on the 'Use of Poetry.' The course was well attended, and was heard with much attention. Indeed the success achieved has warranted arrangements for a similar course on architecture next term.

The numerous concerts and recitals given regularly by students and professors during the term reached their final expression in a chamber music concert at Æolian Hall, when there was established what is perhaps a new and wholly commendable precedent by opening with a Sextet for wood-wind instruments and pianoforte. The programme included an excellent performance of Schubert's String Quartet in E flat. Some choral works were also attractively sung by the College choir.

This was followed by an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. Joseph Ivimey, when a distinctly creditable performance of orchestral and accompanied solo works was given. The playing of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto by Miss D. G. Callender, and of Saint-Saëns's Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso for violin, with Miss D. S. Macpherson as the solo instrumentalist, was quite exceptional students' work. The singing of Mr. Pittham and Miss Fox proved very enjoyable.

Two able performances have taken place at the Scala Theatre of Offenbach's opera 'The Grand Duchess,' produced by Mr. Cairns James, and conducted by Mr. Joseph Ivimey.

It is gratifying to announce that an increased entry for the College examinations, particularly in the subject of Elocution, has necessitated the sending of an additional examiner to Australia, and that Mr. Ronald Chamberlain has accepted the office.

Successful Distributions of Certificates gained in the local examinations were held at Folkestone and Bournemouth.

The Grosvenor Gooch prizes for the current term have been awarded to Miss Kerkin and Miss Macpherson.

All friends of the College will regret to learn that, on account of ill-health, Dr. Charles Vincent has found it necessary to resign his active connection with the College. His long service, begun in the early days of the Institution, entitles him to a happy retirement. May it so prove! He did pioneer work for the College examinations, especially in South Africa, where, on one occasion, he had an interview with the late President Kruger.

It is pleasant to be able to record that Dr. Pearce, who a short while ago retired on a pension, is showing great improvement in health.

The following appointments to the teaching staff have been confirmed by the Board: Mr. W. H. Brereton and Miss Joan Cross (singing), and Mr. E. A. Smith (pianoforte).

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER

FACULTY OF MUSIC

In the examinations held in June for Mus. B., the following candidates were successful:

First Year: Kathleen Clough, Teasdale Griffiths, Reuben Taylor, W. Harold Wolfenden.

Second Year: Hannah Archer, George Parker.

Third Year: George A. Armstrong, Frederick W. Dickerson, Constance Harper.

Teasdale Griffiths was recommended for the Hargreaves Exhibition (£30 per annum) for a first year, and George Parker for a second year.

Examiners: DR. H. A. HARDING
DR. A. W. WILCOCK
DR. T. KEIGHLEY

CENTENARY OF THE REV. SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY

FOUNDER OF ST. MICHAEL'S, TENBURY

Inasmuch as August 12 marks the centenary of the birth of the Rev. Sir Frederick Ouseley, the founder of Tenbury College, it may be of interest to give a brief sketch of the career of this distinguished Irish composer and churchman. There is no need to labour the point that Tenbury College, ever since its foundation, in 1856, has amply fulfilled the object of its founder, namely, 'To prove a model for the choral service of the Church in these realms; and for the furtherance of this object, to receive, educate, and train boys in such religious, musical, and secular knowledge as shall be most conducive thereto.'

The Ouseley family has been for over two hundred years associated with literary and ecclesiastical activities in Ireland, and the father of the founder of Tenbury, was a brilliant Irish diplomat, the Rt.-hon. Sir Gore Ouseley, Bart. (created in 1808), Ambassador at the Courts of Persia and St. Petersburg. His son, Frederick Arthur Gore Ouseley, was born in London, on August 12, 1825, and had a precocious gift for music (somewhat like that recorded of the Earl of Mornington), so much so that at the age of eight he is said to have composed an opera, 'L'Isola disabitata.' Having entered Oxford in 1843, he graduated M.A. in 1849, and Mus.B. in 1850, proceeding to Mus.D. in 1854. Meantime, on the death of his father, in 1844, he succeeded to the baronetcy. He decided to enter the ministry, and was ordained in 1849, being appointed curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. For his musical doctor's degree, in 1854, his exercise, an oratorio, 'The Martyrdom of St. Polycarp,' was performed.

In 1853 Ouseley published a valuable 'Collection of Cathedral Services,' and in the following year laid the foundation-stone of St. Michael's Collegiate Church, Tenbury—his most enduring monument. In 1855 he was elected to the chair of Music at Oxford, in succession to Sir Henry Bishop, and, having been ordained priest, was made Precentor of Hereford Cathedral. Tenbury College was opened in 1856, with Mr. John Capel Hanbury as organist. In 1857, Sir (then Mr.) John Stainer was appointed, retaining the post till he went to Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1859.

As vicar of St. Michael's, Tenbury, as well as Warden of the College, Ouseley exercised considerable influence, and honours were showered on him. Thus, in 1856, he was admitted to the ad eundem degree of Mus. D. of Durham, and received the Hon. Mus. D. of Cambridge, in 1862, subsequently being made LL.D. of Cambridge and Edinburgh. His treatises on 'Harmony,' 'Counterpoint,' and 'Form and General Composition' were much appreciated, and he composed eleven Services, seventy anthems, numerous organ preludes and fugues, glees, part-songs, &c. In 1873 his oratorio 'Hagar' was included in the programme of the Hereford Festival, and was produced at the Crystal Palace in 1874. In conjunction with Dr. E. G. Monk, he edited the 'Anglican Psalter Chants' (1872), and also issued an edition of the sacred works of Orlando Gibbons.

Ouseley's work at Oxford made for progress. He raised the standard for musical degrees, and revived the office of Choragus, also inducing the Senate to grant honorary degrees in music. But of course his heart was centred in Tenbury, though he did not neglect his duties at Hereford. His death took place, suddenly, at Hereford on April 6, 1889; he was buried, two days later, at Tenbury. He bequeathed to Tenbury his fine library, of about two thousand volumes—described by Mr. W. Barclay Squire in 'Grove,' vol. ii., p. 710.

W. H. G. F.

ORLANDO GIBBONS AT THE ABBEY

The Westminster Abbey special service in commemoration of Orlando Gibbons, on the evening of June 29, was of outstanding beauty. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson had drawn up a model scheme, and his 'Special Choir' was worthy of its reputation. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were from the Short Service (F). The two verse anthems, 'Great Lord of Lords' and 'See, the Word is Incarnate,' were interesting, but were naturally overshadowed by the pure contrapuntal splendours of 'O clap your hands' and 'Hosanna.' The Psalm was chanted to a singularly effective setting of Gibbons, which seemed to solve a difficult problem, the music flowing without undue elaboration, nor yet with any monotonous rigidity. The hymn was sung to a very fine tune, in procession, and the impression was of great dignity. Dr. E. H. Fellowes's address was unfortunately inaudible to many of the very large congregation.

C.

COMPLIMENTARY DINNER AND PRESENTATION TO THE REV. E. H. FELLOWES, MUS. DOC.

Whosesoever may have been the happy thought of recognising in a public way the splendid work done by Dr. E. H. Fellowes in the field of Elizabethan music, it served to bring together in the banqueting hall of the Royal Automobile Club, on June 24, a very notable gathering of representative musicians.

Sir Henry Hadow presided, and was supported by the Dean of Windsor, Bishop Taylor, Dr. Arthur Somervell, Mr. W. H. Leslie, Mr. Geo. A. Macmillan, Mr. Gustav Holst, and Dr. Percy Buck. Mr. H. P. Chadwyck-Healey and Mr. Sidney H. Nicholson acted as croupiers.

There were also present Sir G. E. Chadwyck-Healey, H. Plunket Greene, H. C. Colles, Richard Aldrich, W. G. Whittaker, W. Barclay Squire, Rev. E. H. Swan, P. Napier Miles, C. Kennedy Scott, F. H. Bisset, Geo. Maxwell, Ellis R. Howard, H. C. Whitehead, Rev. L. H. Nixon, A. V. Barber, Rev. A. Ramsbotham, Richard Walthew, Capt. F. Burgess, Herbert Hankinson, A. J. Beamish, Norman Feasey, W. F. Macmillan, O. G. Peasegood, Major Benyon, Ernest Newman, Theodore Walrond, W. L. Luttman, W. A. Everington, Frederick Fellowes, Bernard Ramsey, Alan May, Rev. A. Warburton, James Brown, Gilbert Bailey, G. H. Powell, F. T. Arnold, E. J. Dent, Geoffrey Shaw, A. H. Fox-Strangways, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Dr. Cyril Rootham, A. Marshall, Dr. Harold Darke, Dr. George Dyson, E. T. Cook, Herbert Hunt, Steuart Wilson, Lionel Portman, Bruce Richmond, George Riley, Arnold Goldsbrough, C. Hylton Stewart, Kenneth Swan, Basil Johnson, and the English Singers.

Sir Henry Hadow, who is never happier than when glorifying the spacious times of great Elizabeth, set Dr. Fellowes's work in admirable perspective for us. Sane, eloquent, discriminative, Sir Henry cloaked a characteristically wide range of erudition and culture under the lightest and airiest of garbs, and indulged to the full his amusing penchant for disposing of Barbarian and Philistine alike with a neat casualness which is none the less final. Dr. Fellowes, having first allowed us to deflate some of our exuberance with a spirited massed performance of 'For he's a jolly good Fellowes,' charmed us with a reply, largely autobiographical, always modest, often ingenuous. We liked particularly his generous tribute to other workers—earlier and contemporary—in the same field.

The English Singers sang, in their inimitable, intimate way, madrigals by Orlando Gibbons, Weelkes, Wilbye, and Morley, and 'the company' restored an Elizabethan practice by singing together Gibbons's 'The silver swan,' Weelkes's 'Whilst youthful sport,' and Benet's 'All creatures now are merry-minded.' As the copies were handed round, we speculated as to how the soprano difficulty was to be surmounted, but this solved itself when Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson led in a long string of boys from the Abbey, and blandly announced that those of 'the company' who thought they could do so were to sing tenor, all Cathedral organists and such were to take the alto part, and the negligible remnant might sing bass.

One hopes the Elizabethans made a better shape at it than we did, but we encored ourselves with great heartiness, and things went so much better the second time that we felt with a little more rehearsal the works might really have begun to assume some recognisable shape. But, watching the vocal efforts of some highly respected musicians (certain of them eminent adjudicators), we were consumed with curiosity to hear what sounds, if any, they were actually emitting.

It was quite a jolly evening, and so free from the blight of 'organization' that apparently it never occurred to anyone to propose the health of the chairman, or of the hon. secretary, Mr. Chadwyck Healey. And doubtless these two gentlemen minded that less than anybody else.

F. H. B.

COVENT GARDEN OPERA

THE ITALIAN SEASON

An apologia sent out by the new London Opera Syndicate, in the course of the month of Italian Opera which followed the German season at Covent Garden, was disarming.

Of course it had not paid, and only a few times had the house been really full—so we were told.

Opera, even at its very best, must always offer openings for criticism, and it is to be feared that the scribes fall to with all the more zest since during the rest of the year they are toiling amid the intangibilities of 'pure' music. Well, when we hear that, after all, the organizers of the Covent Garden season were disinterested philanthropists we must feel inclined to blush for the expression of our little grievances. Who so uncouth as to look a gift horse in the mouth?

Covent Garden seemed pretty full most nights, and frequently quite brilliant. But opera is getting to be a more and more expensive diversion. Apparently, nowhere in the world does it pay its way, and when we are presented with shows as handsome as those of this season the graceful thing to do is first to thank the unseen hand that makes good the deficit, and secondly to acknowledge the benefits before admitting the shortcomings. Colonel Blois was very gentle in the expression of his grievance against those who had rather unnecessarily expended their verve in jibing at some makeshift scenery. He admitted that the season had been hastily organized, and that consequently some operas had been performed for the sake of certain singers. It was not choice, but necessity. If we were to hear Madame Jeritza, we must have the operas Madame Jeritza knew and liked.

Well, if it was a question between this and nothing, we accept 'this' heartily. We have heard a number of good, and a few supremely good, singers, and so much is not to be despised. Only it was a pity that the Italian season was not helped out by some of the musical conviction of the Germans. It lacked a head. The Germans had had Bruno Walter, and also a more corporate spirit among the singers. Every one was aware that Wagner and Strauss were persons of importance, and to be treated as such. It is strange that the Italians—who are a people not in general by any means lacking a sense of self-importance—should have made an impression of under-rating their composers, who, after all, included such men as Rossini and Verdi.

VERDI'S DUE

Of course the singers were not all Italian. They were as mixed and unassimilable an assembly as any Peace Conference. But the genuine Italians were not noticeable for any particular piety towards the composers. They were, indeed, especially inclined to make the opera a peg for their personal display, and to draw attention by singing with exaggerated loudness in and out of season. I refer particularly to the baritone, Benvenuto Franci, and the tenor, Lauri-Volpi. The three best artists were, as it happened, not Italian—I mean Madame Rethberg (Dresden), Madame Norena (Norway), and the baritone, Joseph Schwarz (Riga).

What if some of the pains expended over a Wagner opera were to be diverted to Verdi? We do not properly know Verdi, in spite of innumerable Rigolettos and Aïdas. The operas of that great and spirited genius are flung on the stage with a nonchalance that would nearly extinguish Wagner. And still they live!

Are we to gather that the conductor of 'Aïda' at Covent Garden last month (Failoni) esteemed little that work of the magnificent old master? He certainly had a very fine cast of singers, but a German conductor of any name would hardly have countenanced such a 'pot luck' ensemble in any German masterpiece. As for his colleague (Votto), he made the impression, in 'Lucia di Lammermoor,' of being heartily ashamed of the graceful Donizetti.

That was the first night of the Italian season, and it was the worst. And still one has the impression that a very pretty thing could be made of 'Lucia.' Only it wants taste and style and spirit, and not that shamefaced muddling which would have ruined any opera in the world. The singers need not be mentioned, as they did better later on.

THE BRILLIANT 'BARBER'

'The Barber of Seville' was a much better effort. What a dazzling thing it is! The truth is that after having sat down for a full magnificent month to slow-speaking German music, we were craving for Italian rapidity and fire. The pleasure of it was more than usually anticipated, and hence, if the effect was missed, the disappointment was the keener. Is it not curious how rapidity of movement is lacking in the German music of the 19th century, Mendelssohn excepted? Wagner is, of course, the slowest of all composers, but Strauss, too, is prodigiously deliberate. Those great men seem to be always clad in the heaviest of mediæval armour. Impossible to skip in it! Rossini's skipping must be a pure fascination to all except the ultra-proper.

The performance was graced by a young, well-trained, and spritely Rosina—Madame Toti dal Monte—whose singing had been the one bright spot in 'Lucia.' She looked girlish enough to be in the picture, and at the same time she was self-assured. Her singing was not only very neat and clever, it was also charmingly true and pure in all but the higher reaches. If Madame dal Monte cannot yet be set down as a first-rate London favourite, it is because her high notes hurt. When she soars she throws caution to the winds and simply emits a piercing tone which we cannot admit to be good singing.

Her tenor that night, and on other nights, was Dino Borgioli—a light and elegant tenor, with enough 'body' for Almaviva, if not quite enough for the Duke in 'Rigoletto.' Then the Bartolo and Basilio of MM. Malatesta and Cotreuil were priceless. No praise could be too warm for these faultless artists. One of the pleasures of the evening was to hear the Italian of the recitativo secco so deliciously glib. All singers sing Italian—of a sort; but the genuine Italians can fear no rivals in this particular field.

FRANCI

We come to the Figaro of Benvenuto Franci. He had a far bigger voice than anyone else, and was anxious that the obvious fact should not escape attention. No one in the house can have been more surprised than the conductor at his tempi in the 'Largo al Factotum.' In the ensembles he clean upset the balance without the smallest sign of compunction. It was a pity, for he is a gifted young man. He sang in several operas with great success, and is a baritone who may be really famous one day. His voice is immense in power, and enormously effective in the later 'veristic' operas where discretion counts for nothing. He was extremely good, too, as Amonasro—a part, of course, in which fiery energy can hardly be exaggerated. But his tastelessness in 'The Barber' was a sad sign—and a common one—of the effect of Puccini-ism on the younger Italian singers. We should like to know the opinion of one of the 'old hands'—say, Battistini—of this ranting and vulgarity.

RETHBERG

'Aïda' brought out a perfect singer. Madame Elisabeth Rethberg gave us such singing of 'Ritorna Vincitor' and the rest as we had not heard since Destinn's best time. A few days later she sang with the same loveliness of tone—warm, equable, without weakness or flaw—in another of Destinn's great parts, Madame Butterfly. The aspiring soprano who is seeking for a good model, should sit at Madame Rethberg's feet.

It was curious that the same performance contained also a warning of a good voice put to wrong uses. Or (if that sounds too pontifical), perhaps we should say that the Amneris of Madame Georgette Caro pleased all eyes—and possibly some ears, but not those of an old habitué of Covent Garden. While the Aïda's tone remained well rounded wherever the music led, the Amneris as she rose became invariably nasal, thin, and piercing. It may be held that such censure has a cruel effect. But this was, after all, a 'grand, international' season, and all the distinguished foreigners available had come together to show us islanders how the thing ought to be done. And the words 'grand, international' seem to cast a spell over some listeners who have not had much operatic experience, so that it is quite possible in these confused days for a false standard to be accepted.

The tenor on that night was a Scandinavian, called Aroldo Lindi, with an uncommonly fine, big voice, which we also heard as Cavaradossi. He went astray in 'Celeste Aïda,' and made no attempt at pp or even mp on the B flat at the end. We think he has not yet reached his best stage. He has the force for the biggest robust tenor parts. Can he refine his singing, can he enliven his sense of rhythm, make his gesture easier, and get curves for angles in his phrasing?

Mr. Murray Davey was the King and M. Cotreuil the Ramfis. It was naturally not M. Cotreuil's best effort of the season, for his beautiful voice is not very weighty. But in whatever he did he was a good—often a surpassing—artist, and his vocal technique was exemplary.

JERITZA

'Tosca' excited more than ordinary interest because of the American renown of the Viennese soprano, Madame Jeritza. Such a renown must be a perilous possession. So much had been heard about her upbringing, her wardrobe, her hairdressing, and her theatrical squabbles, that it was a surprise to discover that there was a very fine singer behind it all. Her renown has made it almost impossible for her to sing in any opera where she is not the main figure, and where she may not display all her golden hair. She is very pretty, in a 'Nordic' way. The general opinion seems to be that she lent a new interest to the part of Tosca. Personally one inclines to the belief that that would be quite impossible.

She certainly sang the part beautifully. She also looked beautiful, if not at all Toscaesque. Her stage performance was almost painfully self-conscious, and without a shred of disguise over its elaborateness. Needless to say, she did not move one in the slightest. And more than that: the deadly sophistication of her playing drew attention away from her singing, which really was of a more spontaneous art. It would be nice to hear her in an opera with more music in it.

The next in which she sang—Giordano's 'Fedora'—had much less. In fact, it is long since such a poverty-stricken work was heard at Covent Garden. Madame Jeritza desperately strove to make this up by covering herself in jewellery (guaranteed genuine). We could have believed in her Fedora—an erotic Russian Princess—better than in her Tosca, if there had been anything at all in Fedora in which to believe.

'ANDREA CHÉNIER'

'Fedora' was not the only Giordano opera of the season. We had also 'Andrea Chénier,' a much more lively affair. But the chief effect of hearing much Giordano is to exalt one's opinion of the sometimes disparaged Puccini. By comparison, Puccini positively is, we may vulgarly say, a 'swell.' At his best, Giordano is heard trying to do things which Puccini was to do with a flourish.

The first Act of 'Fedora' was jejune to a degree that damped the spirits even of those who had come to make a fuss of Madame Jeritza. The second Act wound up with some rich singing from her and her partner, the Greek tenor, Ulysses Lappas. The third Act was nothing to speak of. Fedora, happily united with the man who had in Act I killed ('off') her previous lover, was due to have a death scene. Few understood how the catastrophe was brought about, and fewer were interested. The scene was Switzerland, and Giordano's local colour (a small helping of 'Ranz des Vaches') was winningly naïf.

'Andrea Chénier,' of course, plunges us into the French Revolution, and there is more animation. There are luscious parts for the tenor, the doomed poet Chénier, and for the baritone, a laquey turned Jacobin. These parts were sung by Franci (the Jacobin), who did nothing better, being free to rant as he pleased, and having a part of action, bluffness, and sentiment, in which his very likeable personality told; and by the new tenor, Giacomo Lauri-Volpi.

The latter was not to be put into the shade by the volume of Franci's voice. He could and would sing as loud—though he had less finesse. Lauri-Volpi may turn out one day to be a great singer, but not until he makes up his mind to flatter the gallery rather less.

The unhappy heroine of the revolutionary drama was Miss Margaret Sheridan, who had also sung as Madame Butterfly a week or two before. This Irish soprano, who is a favourite at Milan, had been heard here in 1919. In the meantime rather exaggerated accounts of her exploits had had currency, and so there was some disappointment when it appeared that she was certainly a capable, but not an entrancing, singer—a disappointment that was hardly the fault of Miss Sheridan, who made a very sympathetic Butterfly, and was entirely competent and pleasing as Chénier's Madeleine. Her voice had many beautiful notes in it; only it was not even. Many of her vowels were too forward and whitish. She did not eschew the vibrato—an effect which always suggests that the singer is aware of the insufficiency of her voice to the task in hand.

A NEW RIGOLETTO

'Rigoletto' was the last revival of the season. It brought back a Gilda of last year, Madame Norena, who pleased as much as before. One or two little flaws in her lovely singing of 'Caro nome' were probably to be put down to nervousness.

Towards the end of the evening she was singing enchantingly, her voice soaring without any loss of warm and pure quality. She is an artist, too, and one had to have a long memory to recall a more dramatic couple in 'Rigoletto' than this Norwegian Gilda, and, as her father, Joseph Schwarz.

Here was a great singer. His voice had the deep richness (deep in quality, not pitch) which is a sheer gift of nature. And he used it with a conscientiousness and imagination which Verdi rarely gets. Possibly Rigoletto's music calls for more brilliance on the higher notes. M. Schwarz's tone remained always richly veiled. He also took the part very slowly—with a slowness which was necessary for the significance he was putting into it, but which took some of the gallant spirit out of one or two pages, as well as disconcerting the conductor. M. Schwarz used no ad captandum effects, but every discriminating listener was aware that a fine artist was before him, and indeed it was impossible to miss a suggestion of the vividness of Chaliapin. The colloquy between this Rigoletto and the Sparafucile of M. Cotreuil in Act 2 was subdued and unforced, but its effect was sinister and telling beyond any performance of 'Rigoletto' the present writer has known. The Duke of Signor Borgioli was rather overshadowed. His acting was reasonably good, but conventional, and while he sang pleasantly and with good technics the quality was rather dry. The Maddalena was Madame Bourguignon, who in the course of the season sang a number of secondary parts (notably two in 'Andrea Chénier') with a good, smooth voice and sense of character.

C.

RUSSIAN BALLET SEASON

POULENC AND AURIC

M. Diaghilev and his clever dancers have been on one of their longest visits to London. They have been performing at the Coliseum since the middle of May.

This choice of a house represents a certain declension from the Russian Ballet's old status. Once upon a time they would perform three or perhaps four times a week—not twelve. And wherever they were—Covent Garden or Drury Lane—the dancers monopolised the programme, leaving long intervals in which the revelations of their surprising art could be assimilated. The best of London orchestras were not too good for them.

All that is a long way off. The Russian dancers are now cheek by jowl with jugglers, 'comédiennes,' and ventriloquists, and the modern scores they bring with them are committed to the mercies of an orchestra which is—well, no doubt well-meaning. In justice to this summer season be it said that the troupe itself has been better than last winter—stronger in its principals and better drilled. And the orchestra, while imperfect, was rather nearer the mark, thanks largely, no doubt, to the happy engagement of Mr. Eugène Goossens as conductor. Sometimes he brought off most surprisingly good performances of tricky scores, such as 'The Three-Cornered Hat' of de Falla. Then another day there would be a depressing, scrambled performance, as that of Rossini's gay, enlivening music for 'La Boutique Fantasque.'

These two ballets remain among the best M. Diaghilev has brought us. And we are always grateful for 'Sylphides,' 'Carnival,' 'Prince Igor,' and 'Cimarosiana.' How is it that gratitude fails to pour itself forth as gushingly for the new pieces? Is it because the enthusiast of 1911 is naturally subject to the atrophy of increasing years, and that the charms of the new Milhaud-Poulenc-Auric ballets are really, if one only had the ears of youth, the modern equivalent of the pre-bellicose delights of Rimsky, Tcherepnin, and Stravinsky? Gratitude of a sort one can never fail to have for a Diaghilev. His failures are more interesting than most other people's successes. We infinitely prefer having him wrong-headed to not having him at all.

Having said that, we go on to admit that Milhaud's 'Blue Train' ballet of last winter was a chilly disappointment, and that the first two of the new pieces this summer helped us no more to win back the raptures of Iadis. Francis Poulenc's new piece, 'The House-Party' (called at Paris 'Les Biches,' i.e., 'the pretty dears'—or rather more), was much in the same street as 'The Blue Train,' that is, it represented the holiday 'carryings-on' of the very latest sort of young men and maidens.

Only in 'The Blue Train' the motives of the seaside gambolling were clear enough. The indoor amusements of 'The House Party' (during which the mannerless youths wore running shorts) were said to be elucidatable by a perusal of Marcel Proust's novel of French Society at Balbec. But without such second sight it appeared pointless and indeed inept. If it had not been for the beautiful, natural grace of the fit, lithe young dancers, both the Poulenc and the Milhaud ballets would have run uncommonly close to mere vulgarity. Now the Russian Ballet in the old days may have sometimes been madly sensuous; it was not vulgar.

BORES AND SAILORS

A third young French composer was put on a pedestal by M. Diaghilev in the next ballet, 'Les Fâcheux' ('The Bores')—namely, one Georges Auric. This was a Louis XIV. piece, very consciously 'precious,' a ballet of Louis XIV. dolls or china ornaments. The jerkiness and the inhumanity of marionettes are the suggestion behind a good deal of the recent Russian dancing. Auric was the composer, too, of the latest ballet, 'Les Matelots' ('The Sailors'). This piece rather cheered up one's drooping spirits. It had its disconcerting points. The dances allotted to the delightful Madame Nemtchinova imposed on her a simply displeasing gracelessness. And again the music was of a rare insignificance. It hardly counted. The fun of the evening lay in the clever, original scenery, and in the buoyant and droll acrobatics of the three dancing sailors, MM. Woizikovsky, Slavinsky, and Lifar. The English dancer, Madame Sokolova (who is as able as any of the Muscovites), was, too, extraordinarily good in a grotesque part.

What of the music of these latter-day ballets? Is it ever likely to get a foothold in the concert-room when the dancers are far away, as the music of 'The Fire Bird' and 'The Three-Cornered Hat' has done?

On the difficult subject of this new Parisian music the first obvious thing to say is that one never feels the slightest inclination to hear a bar of it twice. Music that thus seems meant for use once only, like a Japanese paper serviette—is it not renouncing the very crown of music's prerogatives? All three of these young men indulge in the same sort of self-contemptuous flippancy. The music of all four ballets seemed to set itself out to be slightly insolent. The authors may despise themselves, they also make it clear they have no sort of tenderness for the listener. Well, one now and then tolerates a piece of impertinence for social reasons, but makes up his mind that the offender is to be cut in future. This music which is continually 'cocking snooks'—does it count on a brilliant social success?

All three are certainly rather clever young men. It would be interesting to know if their ballets are mere relaxations, 'rags,' between more self-respecting work. The common source of their pranks is Stravinsky's 'Petrouchka.' But Stravinsky's play with hurdy-gurdy tunes is, after all, only one element of 'Petrouchka.' These young Parisians, like other undergraduates, go to the circus, the music-hall, and the fair-ground. 'Petrouchka' showed how a musical mind can collect hints from the noises at such resorts. But do our Parisian ballet-makers know of nowhere else? You can run a hobby-horse to death. The new ballets, one and all, go in for street-tunes, and the authors seem to be enslaved to the notion of treating them like a wheezy hurdy-gurdy ('Les Fâcheux'), like a raucous dance-hall band, or like an out-of-tune steam organ at a fair. The jest at first was not at all bad, but now these people are bound hand and foot by their own facetiousness.

There are shades to be observed, no doubt. Poulenc had his moments of real drollery. (Only his music-hall songs behind the scenes were a bore.) Milhaud seems to have rather a bigger fist than the others, and ought surely to manage to do something we could like to hear twice. Auric is mostly negative, apparently. He has eliminated warmth, curves, consonance. We are left with street-tunes and a rather desolate dryness and stridency of sound, and there appears no reason why anyone should not compose such music at any length. What is the young prophet leading us out in the desert for to see? All this calls rather sadly to mind the days when one went again and again to hear the wonderful new spells of such things as 'The Fire Bird' and 'Petrouchka.' What a prince Stravinsky then was, compared with the new ballet-makers!

To be fair, it must be said that the scenery of the new pieces is very much better than the music. Pruna's 'Matelots' was droll and 'popular,' with much more freedom and naturalness than Auric. Georges Braque's 'Fâcheux' was delightful in its original sobriety of colour. Madame Tchernicheva had a very jolly little arch part in this last ballet. How admirable all these executants are! How wonderfully they obey the behests of those who tell them one day to be nymphs as lissom as the dancers of a Grecian urn, and the next that they are to be no more human than a Dutch doll! C.

ABERYSTWYTH FESTIVAL

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS IN WALES

The sixth Aberystwyth Musical Festival was held in the hall of the University, during June 26-29. It comprised five concerts and, on the Sunday evening, a 'Cymanfa Ganu,' otherwise a hymn-singing meeting of the peculiarly Welsh sort.

The new Welsh Symphony Orchestra played, with Mr. W. H. Reed as the special 'guest-leader' of the occasion. Different choirs of University College sang. There was a great array of visiting conductors—Dr. R. Vaughan Williams, Mr. Gustav Holst, Sir Hugh Allen, and Mr. Adrian C. Boult. The soloists included Miss Jelly d'Aranyi and Mr. Harold Samuel. The programmes ranged from Palestrina to Ravel. They included six symphonies, and one programme alone contained three works of symphonic proportions, not to speak of many smaller things. Symphony concerts of two and a half hours are always rather excessive in effect, but Aberystwyth followed the English tradition, which ordains that the word 'festival' justifies such excess.

Anyhow, the week-end was a goodly feast of music. It brought new laurels to the Music Faculty of the Welsh University, and in particular to the moving spirit of the whole enterprise, who, of course, was Sir Walford Davies. At the outset, Sir Walford reminded us that this Festival, although it admits and welcomes the public, on whom, indeed, it depends for existence in its present important form, is essentially part of the musical curriculum of the University—in fact, a sort of grandiose speech day, or days. The choice made among the classics and the moderns was directed towards the educational advantage of the students. Well, on those terms let us all be students—for the choice was extraordinarily attractive from first to last, and one would not willingly have missed a single item. If this is musical education, how much more pleasant to be educated than to be amused in the ordinary way!

Without any hostile prejudice against competitive festivals, be it said that it was a distinct relief, once in a way, to go into Wales for music-making other than competitive. The Aberystwyth students had learnt to sing Vaughan Williams's a cappella Mass in G minor not for a material trophy, but for the music's sake, and that is a motive for which there is much to be said. They could not have sung it better if a whole sideboard array of golden challenge cups had depended on the performance. Democracy has a big say in ordinary Welsh music-making, and it is a good thing if one at least of the year's functions is allowed to show us what a measure of enlightened autocracy can do in art.

THE G MINOR MASS

Some forty students (the 'Palestrina Choir' of Aberystwyth) at the first concert sang Dr. Vaughan Williams's twelve-part Mass, which the composer conducted. This must have been—for all the outsiders present, at all events—the greatly memorable achievement of the Festival. To say so much is not to be severe on the orchestra, which worked very earnestly at an enormous range of music. Obviously it would be absurd to measure these players by the standard of London or Manchester. But one has no hesitation in saying that the Palestrina Choir was absolutely first-rate, and that there is no musical centre in the world where its performance of Vaughan Williams's masterwork would not have been an event of mark.

Welsh choral singing has a great name, based on many fine exploits, and also on others which have been over-rated. But this was an achievement of quite a new distinction. Vaughan Williams's music was written for a purely liturgical end, and, moreover, in a spirit—a spirit of intense and austere humility, self-forgetting—rarely indeed possessed even by professedly liturgical composers. There is no room in it for the ordinary brave showiness and enthusiasm. Indeed the treatment is wrong if there is a suggestion that the singing is a conscious performance. Not only had the work never before been sung in Wales, but, furthermore, the polyphonic school of which this is a development is seldom heard of there. (The Tudor madrigalists are ignored by the National Eisteddfod.) Nevertheless, an ideal beauty was touched that evening. One gained a conviction that there is some one at Aberystwyth with very sound views on the teaching of singing. The admirable tone of this small choir could have been due only to the command of a pure, unforced quality by all the individuals. Not even the tenors were throaty. Many beautiful details remain with the hearer—particularly, perhaps, the magical effect of the very soft and widespread G major chord at the beginning of 'Et in terra pax.'

The whole of the 'Kyrie'—that affecting movement—was of a sustained beauty. But then that applies to the whole work down to the last wonderful contrasting cadence on 'Dona nobis pacem.' Only a Beckmesser might have remarked that in two fortissimos the tone deteriorated a little—the feeling being that the singers were taken a trifle by surprise at the conductor's rousing vigour just there. The accuracy of the singing was matched by the properly simple and deep expression. The solo quartet was anonymous.

Dr. Vaughan Williams also conducted, the next night, his 'Pastoral' Symphony, which Sir Walford Davies had previously made known to Aberystwyth. After an unpromising start the players worked well, but the ideal moments in the performance were those of the soprano solo in the Finale (singer, Miss Kate Griffiths). Here again was a charming voice with an unusual, sweet naturalness and unsophistication—the very tone for that strangely lovely and poetic song. It is uncommon for a singer to be pointing the right way to a band of instrumentalists; but if all the Welsh strings and wood-wind had had the command of that soprano's perfectly just expression the performance of the Symphony would indeed have been penetrating.

GUSTAV HOLST

Mr. Gustav Holst did not play so significant a part in the scheme. He conducted his Algerian suite, 'Beni-Mora,' which, for lack of a flavouring of virtuosity, did not make all its right brilliant effect; and also two small and early, but decidedly Holstian, 'Songs without Words,' Op. 22—pieces which many a small orchestral society should be glad to know of. Haydn's ninety-ninth Symphony—music as fresh as the flowers of May—was, too, conducted by Mr. Holst.

A very distinguished feature of the Festival was Mr. Harold Samuel's recital of the 'Goldberg' Variations of Bach, complete, on the Sunday afternoon. Once again, in this immense undertaking, the pianist's adroitness of execution was surpassed only by his richly sympathetic feeling. What a musician!

Miss d'Aranyi made a complete conquest, as well she might. At the fourth concert she played Ravel's 'Tzigane,' of which she makes a thing of extraordinary, exciting life and splendour. The pianist, Mr. Charles Clements, distinguished himself. At the last concert Miss d'Aranyi played in a Mozart Concerto and also in Bach's string arrangement of the Double Concerto in C minor, which was also played in the usual form with pianofortes. The arrangement, by the way, was given to violin and oboe (Mr. D. F. Griffiths).

In Mozart's Violin and Viola Concerto the soloists were Miss Sybil Eaton and Mr. Raymond Jeremy, who played well, but were handicapped by the rather uninteresting orchestral playing, and by the excessive length of that particular concert. This was conducted by Mr. Boult, who did capital service in many other things, notably in enlivening the worthy but rather jog-trot E minor Symphonic Variations of Parry.

Sir Hugh Allen conducted the G minor Symphony of Mozart (Mozart and Bach were the classic pillars of the Festival), and also the first part of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha.' We also had two of Parry's noble 'Songs of Farewell,' and at different times a good deal of Welsh choral music, some of which Dr. Lloyd Williams conducted. Sir Walford Davies, of course, had much to conduct, including on the last evening the 'Stabat Mater' of Palestrina, in which (of this I can speak only by hearsay) the choir's singing matched that in the G minor Mass.

To those who may be able to go to Aberystwyth for a future Festival be it said that University Hall—a kind of monster wooden hut—is one of the most useful concert-rooms in the whole country, and that the Festival is, on its present lines, quite extraordinarily stimulating and likeable.

C.

London Concerts

MISS ETHEL LEGINSKA

Miss Ethel Leginska, at Queen's Hall, on June 23, with the London Symphony Orchestra, was once again not content to wield one weapon in the musical fray. She must needs—such is the vaulting ambition in this exceptional little person—try pianoforte playing, conducting, and composing, all at once. That is, she played a Concerto (Weber's in C) and at the same time conducted (with hands, when disengaged, and otherwise with head), and she conducted her own new orchestral suite.

This musician of homely Yorkshire, who has Slavonicised her name, chose French for her 'Four Exotic Pieces'—'Quatre Sujets Barbares.' It is to be feared that this feminine exoticism induced yawning. It affected a modern manner, but really the matter was too thin for anything. There was simply nothing to keep it going.

There was more in Miss Leginska's conducting. The chief test-piece was nothing less than 'Till Eulenspiegel.' Detail went hang, as the saying is, but she had got hold of the main outline. We came back to it, however, that in pianoforte playing is her real strength. But the afternoon's varied little exhibition went at least to show that Miss Leginska has a range of interests and an enterprising ambition beyond most pianists.

C.

MANUEL DE FALLA

A concert of the works of Manuel de Falla was given at Wigmore Hall, on July 13, by an orchestra led by Mr. John Pennington, and containing a number of musicians of the 'Betica' Orchestra of Seville. These musicians had, a few days before, played at the inauguration of a new series of chamber concerts, at the Ritz Hotel, patronised by Lady Carisbrooke and advertised in ungrammatical French—'Internationales (sic) Concerts Intimes.' The conductor was M. Ernesto Halffter Escriche.

The concert began with four pieces from de Falla's best-known work, the fascinating ballet-music of 'The Three-Cornered Hat.' The conducting was not calculated to give the music its full due, and was no better in a performance of Rossini's 'Barber of Seville' Overture, newly scored by de Falla. While possibly this version may be an improvement on the original, a clumsy performance of such a masterpiece of gaiety, whether improved or unimproved, is an irritation. Madame Alvar sang four arranged folk-songs, one of which, 'Duermete, niño,' was encored. Don Quixote's harangue from the chamber opera, 'Master Peter's Puppet Show,' was sung by Mr. Arthur Cranmer. It was new to London, though the whole opera was performed last year at Bristol. Mr. Cranmer has a sturdy voice, but it was as much as he could do to let us know he was using it, so unbridled was the orchestral brass. Evidently there was some misunderstanding or miscalculation here. The concert ended with the ballet-music of 'Love the Wizard' ('El Amor Brujo'), which contains some richly Iberian movements, quite in de Falla's best vein. Here we had occasion to admire the Sevillian 'cellist, and to wonder at the strange and uncouth tone of the horn. In sum, no new light was shed on this deservedly favourite composer, who has often been much better conducted here.

C.

LADY PHILLIDA SHIRLEY

At her pianoforte recital on June 24, Lady Phillida Shirley reversed the usual order of things by placing modern music at the commencement of her programme and working backwards to Mozart by way of Schumann's 'Carneval.' 'La Plaine aux Corbeaux' (MS.), by G. L. Garnier, with whom she has been studying at Paris, is an effective and somewhat macabre piece of music, evoking an atmosphere similar to Ravel's 'Le Gibet.' It suited the pianist's technique and style better than any other piece in her programme. Lady Phillida's touch is occasionally harsh and metallic, and this was sometimes heard to disadvantage in Debussy's 'Les Cottines d'Anacapri' and 'Poissons d'or.' At other times it possesses a charming singing quality which was noticeable in many parts of Schumann's 'Carneval,' especially in his 'Chopin' portrait. The romantic spirit of the whole composition was well sustained throughout, but a clearer grasp of the essential rhythmic qualities of Schumann's music, as well as that of all the other excerpts in her programme, would have given greater vitality to the performance, and made her presentment of Mozart's charming little Sonata in F major less monotonous.

L. L.

Competition Festival Record

CLEETHORPES.—With eighty-eight classes, nine hundred entries, and five days (June 30-July 4) of competitions, the Cleethorpes Festival surpassed its own records this year. The interest of each department was well sustained. The adult solo singers were given a good class of song to sing. There were keen competitions among the children's choirs, some of the most conspicuous of these being Elliston Street Girls, Cleethorpes (Miss M. E. Jenner); Frodingham Girls' School Choir, which won ninety-eight marks for sight-reading; and Grimsby Junior Choral (Miss G. Hunter). Grimsby Choral Society (Mr. P. Wilson) won the mixed-voice contest, and Scunthorpe (Mr. D. Leeman) that for male-voices. The class for mixed-voice choirs from Lincolnshire, Nottingham, Derbyshire, and Yorkshire was won by Grimsby. Mr. Hugh Roberton judged, and 'dropped on' the soprano soloists for their tremolo—'Marcel waving of the voice,' he called it.

GIRLS' FRIENDLY SOCIETY. — The Annual Choir Competitions were held in London on July 3. There was a very large entry, sixty-three choirs (double last year's number) coming from all parts of the country. The standard showed an appreciable advance, the pick of the choirs being excellent. The winners were: Elementary, Chester; Intermediate, Peterborough; Advanced, Worthing. Mr. Harvey Grace judged.

MAIDSTONE.—Thirty choirs took part in the first Festival of the West Kent Federation of Women's Institutes, held at the Corn Exchange, Maidstone, on June 13. They all competed in Cecil Sharp's 'The lark in the morn,' and in Stanford's 'Cradle Song,' and twenty-six competed in madrigal singing. The proceedings lasted from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., and finished with a concert, at which the competitors made a massed choir of four hundred voices, conducted by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw.

PETERBOROUGH. — The first Peterborough Festival was held here on June 19 and 20, under the chairmanship of Dr. Henry Coleman, the hon. secretary being Mrs. Stuart Thompson. Except at the final concert the public attendance was poor, a common phenomenon at new festivals. The list of choral entries was not representative—the villagers being particularly backward—but for a first attempt it was by no means unsatisfactory. The chief successes went to Queen's Works, Bedford, whose singing won high praise from Mr. Geoffrey Shaw; an Uppingham Male-Voice Choir; and Great Easton Women's Institute. Mr. Geoffrey Shaw and Mr. Rowsby Woof judged.

STOCKSBRIDGE.—This three-day Festival (June 18-20) was organized by the South Yorkshire Musical Festival Society. Children played a great part in it, the second day being given up to their competitions, and the first evening being largely a demonstration by Dr. W. M. Robertshaw's Stocksbridge Junior Festival Choir, which sang Sydney H. Nicholson's 'The Luck of Edenhall.' Dr. J. Frederic Staton gave warm praise to the school choirs, and spoke of the importance of the pianoforte duet: 'It introduced young players to a class of music which they could not attempt as soloists.' The principal success in the adult competition was won by Mr. H. Shepley's Greetland Vocal Union, which stood at the head of male-voice choirs.

PENTREFOELAS EISTEDDFOD drew a crowd of twenty thousand to hear a day of choral work, judged by Sir Richard Terry, Prof. Granville Bantock, and Dr. Vaughan Thomas. The contests went on till the small hours of Sunday morning, the final class of eight male-voice choirs competing at 1 a.m., with the adjudicators writing their notes by the light of a candle, and ten thousand listeners in the darkness.

At the MABE Festival, held at Penryn, a notable feature was the work of the male-voice choirs, Mr. W. P. Weekes, who judged, remarking that he had never heard a finer lot.

A SECONDARY SCHOOL FESTIVAL

A Festival of a type full of interest and promise was that held at Isleworth, when five secondary schools of the district met at Spring Grove Polytechnic to compete and combine in singing, folk-dancing, and instrumental music. Very attractive were the folk-singing and dancing in the open air. The orchestra, drawn from the schools, included four wood-wind and three brass players and the usual percussion; it played a movement from Haydn's 'London' Symphony and a Bach Gavotte. In the choral contests Chiswick County School took two awards, and Isleworth County School one. Mr. Steuart Wilson was the judge.

A County Festival for Forfarshire is likely to come into being shortly, with Forfar, Brechin, Montrose, and Arbroath as successive venues.

Under the auspices of the Educational Department of the Royal Arsenal Co-operative Society, nine choirs and orchestras have been formed. They competed at Bostall Heath on June 19, contests and combined performances pleasing a large crowd from 3 till 10.

Steps are being taken in the founding of a Festival for the suburbs of North-West London, the area to be covered including Golders Green, Cricklewood, Hampstead, Hendon, and the Garden Suburb. The event will probably take place in February. Mr. C. O. Larkin, Whitebank, Southway, is the hon. secretary.

Music in the Provinces

ALNWICK.—The Newcastle Bach Choir gave a recital of unaccompanied music in Alnwick Parish Church on July 11, including the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis from Byrd's 'Great' Service, J. S. Bach's eight-part Motet, 'Be not afraid,' and selections from Taverner's 'Western Wynde' Mass, all of which were finely sung under Dr. W. G. Whittaker's direction. In addition, Mr. George C. Gray played organ music by Bach, Howells, Stanford, and César Franck. The recital was largely attended.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—Mr. G. D. Cunningham has completed his first year's recitals on the Town Hall organ. Forty-three concerts have been given, each programme beginning with a Bach work. He has also performed serially the whole of Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas. The attendances have been well sustained, reaching an average figure never before attained at these concerts. ——The programme of the City Orchestra's coming season is to hand, and already it has been criticised on account of the absence of modern works. Nevertheless, the scheme includes the production of a new Symphony by Granville Bantock, and the first Birmingham performance of the new Symphony by Sibelius, to be produced at the forthcoming Gloucester Festival. The guest-conductors are Sibelius, who is to conduct his own Symphony, in addition to other works of his own, and Vaclav Talich, the Prague conductor, who will conduct a programme of Bohemian music. Only instrumental soloists are to be heard at these concerts, the list for the forthcoming season including Messrs. Pouishnov and Harold Samuel among the pianists, and Messrs. Arthur Catterall and Paul Beard among the violinists. The Misses May and Beatrice Harrison are to play the Delius and Brahms Double Concertos at the last concert of the season. Mr. Adrian Boult's scheme includes a series of twenty-five Sunday and twenty concerts for school-children. ——The Thursday Mid-day concerts, established by Miss Marjorie Sotham three years ago, are to be taken over by Mr. Johan Hock. They will be known as the 'Philharmonic' Mid-day concerts, the programmes being given chiefly by the pianoforte and string quartets bearing that name. The programmes in future will consist entirely of instrumental music.——Dr. Darby, conductor of the Wolverhampton Choral Society, has been appointed conductor of the Midland Musical Society, Mr. A. J. Cotton having resigned.

BURY ST. EDMUND'S.—The East Anglian Association of Musical Societies held its third annual meeting at Bury on June 13, under the chairmanship of Dr. Haydon Hare. The hon. secretary, Mr. Aldrich, announced that forty-three societies were affiliated to the Association, and that the total of active members was over two thousand five hundred. An attempt had been made on a national scale, by a memorial from the leading choral societies, to secure exemption from Entertainment Tax for choral concerts, but the answer of the Financial Secretary to the Treasurer had been unsatisfactory.

EASTBOURNE.—It is proposed to form a special choir in connection with the musical festival in November. The number of voices aimed at is two hundred. If the scheme comes to fruition, the choir will be heard in the 'Dream of Gerontius,' conducted by the composer. Mr. James R. Dean will be in charge of the rehearsals.

HARROGATE.—There are no better holiday programmes than those which Mr. Basil Cameron is giving with his Harrogate Municipal Orchestra. At the third, fourth, and fifth symphony concerts, the Symphonies were Brahms's in D, Mozart's 'Jupiter,' and the first of Kallinnikov. At each concert a Concerto was played, and the smaller works were all well chosen.——On July 1, Maurice Besly's Suite, 'Chelsea China,' was included.

HORSHAM.—A very successful chamber concert was given on June 25, by Miss Lena Sykes, the programme comprising Schumann's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Miss Eveline Petherick, Miss Doris Chart, Mrs. Dyson Cooper, and Miss Sykes), Grieg's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in C minor (Miss Petherick and Miss Sykes), and songs (Miss Christine Beck).

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—An interesting children's concert by about seventy or eighty children belonging to school stringed instrument classes set on foot by the National Council of Music, took place on July 15, when the March from Handel's 'Scipio,' the Allegro from Bach's 'Brandenburg' Concerto in G, and two movements from Haydn's Symphony in D were among the items included in a long programme. The performers were divided into three groups, the more difficult items being allotted to the most advanced players. Several solo numbers were also played, and some boys from the Town Band assisted with wind instruments in the Haydn movements. Marked improvement over previous efforts was shown in regard to unanimity of tuning, and the rhythm was remarkably crisp and well-defined. Miss B. J. Langley, the initiator of the classes, conducted; Miss Katie Griffiths directed the Rheidol Juvenile Choir, which gave some vocal items; and Miss Violet White accompanied at the pianoforte. Some pleasing dances were also given by girls from the County School.

HARLECH.—The annual Festival was held on June 24, in the Castle. The morning session and the first half of the afternoon session were confined to vocal items without orchestra, and some very delicate part-singing was heard from selected choirs. As is usual at Welsh meetings of the kind, a large number of hymns were sung by both choir and audience with a rich, round volume of tone. These were conducted by Mr. J. Charles McLean and Mr. T. T. Powell. Some promising young local singers were given a public hearing, and Miss Elsie Suddaby and Mr. Gwynne Davies contributed more important solo items, the last-named giving three of Dr. Vaughan Thomas's fine settings of Welsh 'cywyddau'—'Music,' 'The Night,' and 'Two Greyhounds.' Orchestral items at the afternoon and evening sessions consisted of the Overture to Schubert's Rosamunde, César Franck's Symphony in D, and two novelties—a tone-poem, 'Bronwen' (the prize composition at the Pontypool Eisteddfod last year), by Franklin Sparks, and a Scherzo for orchestra by Kenneth Harding, a promising young student at Aberystwyth. A third novelty was a setting of the 93rd Psalm for chorus and orchestra, by Dr. Heath, of Barmouth, some of whose work has been heard at the London 'Promenade' concerts. The choral works chosen for the evening session were Bach's 'God's time is the best,' sung in Welsh, the soloists being Miss Elsie Suddaby, Mr. Gwynne Davies, and Mr. Edward Davies, and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' in which the two first-named singers were the soloists, Miss Nellie Jones joining Miss Suddaby in the duet, 'I waited for the Lord.' Both works were conducted by Sir Hugh Allen, who, at a very short rehearsal, almost entirely confined to running through the principal leads, had speedily established confidence between himself and his forces, and who secured wonderful results at the evening performance. When thanking the singers at the close of the Festival, he advised that one session should be given to a full three hours' rehearsal, when the results would be almost perfect. Mr. Charles Clements accompanied at the pianoforte during the greater part of the day, and Sir Walford Davies and he gave valuable support to the conductor in bridging over the danger spots due to the absence of full rehearsal.

WREXHAM. — The East Denbighshire Educational Demonstration was held at Wrexham, during June 21-27. A special feature of the occasion was the singing and dancing of the elementary school children of the district. A choir of no less than seven hundred and fifty children, drawn from the various schools, sang 'I know a bank' (C. E. Thorn), 'Clychau Aberdyfi' and 'Tros y Garreg' (Welsh airs), 'Good-morrow, pretty maid' (English air), 'Ye banks and braes' (Scotch air), and a cantata, 'The Walrus and the Carpenter,' by Percy E. Fletcher. The children were conducted by Mr. Ernest Jones, of Johnstown. The following were the dances: English Country Dances (Cecil Sharp), 'Morris Dances,' 'Scandinavian Dances,' together with Welsh, English, Scotch, and Irish dances. A small orchestra provided accompaniments.

Music in Ireland

A delightful and varied Celtic concert was given at the Mansion House, Dublin, on July 3, when Welsh, Scotch, Irish, Breton, and Manx melodies were sung, while an International Celtic concert, on July 5, at the Theatre Royal, had as attractions the Army Band No. 1, with Madame Leila Megane, Miss Joan Burke, Messrs. Neil McClean, Arthur Darley, and Denis Cox.

At the annual conferring of degrees at Trinity College, Dublin, on June 26, in addition to the Mus. Doc. given to Sir Hamilton Harty, the degrees of Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. were conferred (ad eund. Oxon.) on the Rev. Thomas H. Ross. Sir Hamilton was presented with his Doctor's robes by a number of friends, and was entertained at a reception in the Royal Irish Academy of Music, the guests being received by the Governor-General, on June 25. A choice musical programme of pieces by the new knight was performed, with songs by Miss J. Curran and Mr. P. Kirwan.

Maestro A. G. Viani's pupils' concert took place at the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, on June 22, and afforded ample evidence of a high standard of teaching. On June 29, the Abbey Theatre was again the scene of an interesting concert, this time of the pupils of the Read Pianoforte School, including Miss Rhoda Coghill.

An unfortunate trade dispute has been in operation at Dublin since July 4 between the managers of the Dublin theatres and picture-houses and the members of the orchestras, in regard to wages and holidays.

A new memorial organ, the gift of the Harpur family, was opened, at a special service, in the Ormean Road Methodist Church, Belfast, on June 19, by Dr. Alfred Hollins, organist of St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh, who gave a delightful recital after the dedication ceremony and a second recital on June 22.

The Ferns Diocesan Choral Festival was held on June 25, at Christ Church, Gorey, co. Wexford, twelve choirs taking part, under the baton of Mr. F. G. Edwards, Enniscorthy.

Successful choral Festivals were held at Tyrone and Donegal on June 26.

Mr. Frank Muspratt, who has been organist of Limerick Cathedral for forty years, has been presented with an address and testimonial by the Dean and Chapter, in recognition of his long and valuable service. It is interesting to record that there have been only two organists of Limerick Cathedral since 1835—a period of ninety years.

On July 13 Mrs. J. H. Cousins, who is a Mus. Bac and who is home for a holiday from Tokio, gave a very interesting lecture at Dublin, before the Theosophical Society, on 'Internationalism in Music.'

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

YOUNG GERMAN COMPOSERS AT KIEL

As in earlier years, so also to-day, the recent Festival of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein was inaugurated with a view to furthering native music production. But strangely enough, the Tonkünstler had chosen for the venue the seaport town of Kiel, in Schleswig, on the Baltic. The choice seems the more curious when it is remembered that Kiel appears to have no traditions in any field of art. Music, indeed, had never resided there. Hamburg, which is only some fifty miles distant, has often worthily upheld the best interests of creative music in North Germany. Under such circumstances it proved very difficult for Kiel to find performing musicians able to give effective interpretations of the works standing on the programme. A general impression was, however, obtained.

The Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein, which was founded by Liszt in 1861, has shed some of its former prestige. How can a number of new works worthy of performance be gathered every year, if we confine ourselves to the output of a single country? The difficulties of choice were frequently increased by the fact that a vil media had to be found, to the exclusion of all that smacked of too much modernism. So it fell that the characteristic feature of the Festival inclined more and more to the academic. Some elderly composers appeared in this year's programme—e.g., Robert Kahn, who is still writing music standing between Mendelssohn and Brahms, and Walter Courvoisier, who is swimming in the Brahms current. Prof. Fritz Stein, a friend of Max Reger, who had been appointed by the town of Kiel to conduct the choir of the Church at the Festival, secured a worthy performance of a new Mass by Ernst Thomas, which deserves to be recorded. It is strange to find a young man, only twenty years old, giving expression to his musical ideas in a Mass, his Op. 1. In doing so he stands aside from the young composers of to-day, all of whom are devoted to secular productions. But it is not the conception of the work alone that makes him an outstanding figure, for his Mass, although rooted in tradition, is modern in the best sense of the word. Thomas speaks the language of our time in showing a certain predilection for short phrases and movements. Harmonic and contrapuntal devices of no little originality are everywhere to be found. The work is, however, unequal; the artistic standing of its opening pages is not sustained. Yet on the whole it affords a sure proof of latent talent.

Among the chamber works performed at the Festival there was one striking example of how a decidedly modern composer can make his hearers, modernist and reactionary alike, despair of his faculties. The musician who thus succeeded in annoying and tiring a very numerous audience was Frank Wohlfahrt. In his case this is the more to be regretted, as, in several magazine articles from his pen, he has revealed a very clear perception of some outstanding musical problems. His Quartet, of too generous length, seemed to be wholly uninspired. Its counterpoint is perhaps coherent enough, but even so, the work lacks the power of convincing the hearer that it has anything to say. When after it we heard a duet for violin and pianoforte by Heinz Tiessen, the shortness of the piece, its conciseness of musical diction, and its rhythmic vigour obtained a greater effect than would have been the case after a less tiring work than Wohlfahrt's. On the same evening the Havemann Quartet (Fritz Uzkulenkampff-Post, violin, and Josef Strauss, pianoforte) was heartily applauded, and a new 'Cello Concerto by Ernst Toch, as played by that excellent exponent, Josef Feuermann, proved very effective, except that it revealed a certain onesidedness of mood. Some songs by Manfred Gurlitt were impressive for their delicacy of feeling.

The opera-house of Kiel provided the occasion for presenting two operas as a feature of the Festival—'Juana,' in one Act, by Max Ettinger, of Munich; and 'At night all the cats are grey,' in two Acts, by Pierre Maurice, a French Swiss composer educated at Munich. Max Ettinger may be considered a fervent disciple of Puccini. His work revealed much immature sense for theatrical effect; but at present he falls short of realising his intentions. Pierre Maurice, on the other hand, is a clever composer, but he lacks any scenic temperament. He certainly possesses the faculty of expressing different moods, but his ideas halt behind the times, and move too dully for his spectators. To this may be added that neither work received adequate performance. Thus these composers were not seen at their best.

An interesting feature of the Festival could well have been the presentation of colour music by Alexander Laszlo. This was not, of course, the first time that colour harmonies had been made to accompany music. The only difference between Laszlo and his predecessors, at least in his own opinion, lay in his claim that musico-pictorial conception should be identical. This was not proved by the performance itself, which failed simultaneously to juxtapose the music and colour schemes. Besides, musicians are apt to look askance at one of their guild availing himself of other than musical means for obtaining his effects. But it cannot be denied that Laszlo is an excellent pianist. His compositions do not move in a very wide range, standing between Chopin, Liszt, and Scriabin.

STATE REGULATIONS FOR PRIVATE MUSIC LESSONS

The Republican Government aims no doubt at subordinating the artistic life of the community to the power of the State. Another step in this direction is revealed in the regulations recently issued concerning private music lessons, which have aroused no little excitement among professional musicians. The Government, recognising the harmful effects that have flowed from unqualified exponents of the teaching art, desires that all who are practising as musical educationists shall submit themselves to a qualifying examination, and so prove their capacity. Of course, this regulation may be fatal to many who have made a livelihood by private music lessons without ever possessing a certificate of their attainments. And who shall say that the proposed examination introduced by the State will ensure the desired change in musical education which depends not only on knowledge, but on pedagogic skill based on psychological understanding of the person to be educated? Maybe some of the worst evils will be eradicated by the new regulation, but even so much cannot be achieved solely by dictatorial regulations. Probably the Government will invoke the assistance of some representative members of the profession, and soften the harshness of its commands by modifications yet to be announced. Anyhow, never has the State seemed so desirous of taking the whole population under its artistic protection as now.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

HOLLAND

The first complete public performance of Dr. Johan Wagenaar's humorous opera-cantata, 'Jupiter Amans,' given by the Hague section of the Maatschappij tot Bevordering der Toonkunst in the Kurzaal at Scheveningen, took place with great éclat for the work and its composer. The combination of skill with a keen sense of humour is exceptional in a high degree. That there is some lack of originality is a detail that matters little, for much of the humorous effect is the result of a subtle and refined use of musical parody. In many respects 'Jupiter Amans' recalled Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan,' though Dr. Wagenaar's melodies are more Mozartian, and his piquant orchestration quite modern. He is clearly a master of word-painting, and he uses it to excellent effect. He is also a conductor of no mean ability, chorus and orchestra (the Residentie-Orkest) alike being well under his control. The soloists were not all equally successful, but in Jan Dekker we had a fine singer and a perceptive humorist.

The concerts in the regular series at the Kurzaal are of quite a high standard, and there have been several of more than ordinary importance, one of these being the visit of the Apollo Choir from Amsterdam, which was heard in an admirable performance of Haydn's 'Heiligmesse.' The occasion inspired an interesting article in De Nieuwe Gids, from the pen of J. J. A. Zuidweg, pleading for a fuller recognition of this Mass. Another programme at the Kurzaal contained a delightful Concertstück for oboe and small orchestra, by Mozart, in which the solo part was played by J. H. Stotijn—first oboist of the Residentie-Orkest, and himself a Haagenaar—with such perfection of tone and technique, along with depth of feeling and grace of manner as I had scarcely thought to find among Dutch orchestral players. Other soloists have been Anna Case and Myra Hess, the last-named already a frequent and popular visitor here. The orchestral items at the various concerts are generally well-chosen, and, as is the case in London, there is very little difference between the symphony concerts, the soloist concerts, and the popular concerts, all of which take into account the improved standard of taste among the people. Richard Strauss is popular here, and already two of his works, 'Don Juan' and 'Tod und Verklärung,' have been played. Wagner selections figure fairly often, and a wide scope is shown in the inclusion of less-known items such as Kallinnikov's first Symphony and Weingartner's 'The Fields of the Blessed.' Prof. Schnéevoigt seems to me to have broadened and deepened the character of many of his readings since I heard him here last year. He has lost none of his virtuosity, but quite a large proportion of his violence.

At Amsterdam, Adrian Boult introduced a number of British works when, as guest-conductor, he directed one of the popular concerts in the Concertgebouw. Mr. Boult's conducting made a deeper impression than did the works performed, Elgar's Violin Concerto—the solo part very creditably played by Alex. Schmuller—being voted much too long and too sentimental, and Holst's 'Planets' as lacking variety and spontaneity. Parry's Symphonic Variations found favour for their quality of tranquil nobility, and were regarded as typically English; Vaughan Williams's 'The Wasps' Overture pleased for the richness of its modern harmonies. One well-known critic, however, discerned in all the works a latent manifestation of the same romantic spirit idealised by Tchaikovsky, Schumann, and Brahms, who he found had dictated the sentiment which the respective composers endeavoured only to dissemble—Holst with seemingly new orchestral colours, Vaughan Williams with harmonies of French flavour and idiom. In Parry and Elgar the same critic saw convinced followers of Tchaikovsky. In spite of this, and other probably quite unconscious prejudice on the part of some of the critics, the cause of British music here is progressing. Some important works will be played in Holland during the coming autumn season, and there are even prospects of bigger things of which I hope to have more to say later. Another interesting item at one of the Concertgebouw popular concerts was the first production at Amsterdam of Schubert's early B major Symphony, a charming work, though by no means an 'Unfinished' or a C major. It was directed by Theo. van der Bijl, a guest-conductor from Haarlem.

There was considerable music, formal and informal, during the Lustrum feast at Leyden University, some of which had been specially written for the occasion. The most serious contributions were of a solid, massive character, well suited to the outdoor performances for which they were intended, the biggest item being incidental music by Leo Smit to a play entitled 'A to Z.' It is a musico-historical survey of some incidents concerning Alva and 'Zwijger,' or William the Silent. An indoor concert by the students' orchestra, Sempre Crescendo, afforded some surprisingly good performances, including Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' Symphony, and introduced two native works, 'Zoone-weg' and 'Zots-Kap,' by F. E. A. Koeberg, the conductor. Koeberg is a master of big orchestral effects, and his melodies have the broad character of the national airs of the country. From 'Zoone-weg' the principal melody has been selected for reproduction on the hourly carillons at Leyden and Middelburg, which may be taken both as a tribute to its straightforward character, and also to the developed rhythmic sense of the Dutch people, for it is written in 11-4 measure.

Wouter Hutschenruyter, the second of his name to win distinction in various ways as a musician, is retiring from the position of director of the Rotterdam Conservatoire. An effort was made to persuade him to withdraw his resignation, but on account of ill-health he has, I understand, decided not to reconsider his decision. During its eight and a half years under his régime the Conservatoire has done exceedingly well, the orchestral class, which he personally directed, making particularly good progress. A violinist, a conductor, and a composer of distinction, Hutschenruyter is also the author of several small but effective critical works in the Dutch language.

Organ recitals form a not unimportant part of the musical life of Holland, and although the fame of the St. Bavon organ has given Haarlem a reputation outside this country that is not equalled by any other town, there are other organs and other recitals that deserve to be known. An interesting Tuesday series is that of J. A. de Zwaan in the Great Church at The Hague. De Zwaan (he has a son who is also a well-known organist) is progressive and unconventional in the selection of his programmes, consequently they afford examples of the best music of classical, pre-classical, and modern schools. De Zwaan is frequently heard in collaboration with others besides vocalists and violinists. One of his most recent programmes contained duets for flute and organ; and another, Hubert Cuypers's fine Te Deum, sung by The Hague Singers, under the composer's direction.

Herbert Antcliffe.

LENINGRAD

The Exhibition organized under the title 'Musical Education of the Leningrad Children,' is the first musical exhibition to take place in Russia since the days of the Revolution. Its importance, from the point of view of culture, is considerable.

It opened with a public sitting at the Marinsky Theatre of the Exhibition committee, after which a choral performance was given by a choir of fifteen hundred citizens of Leningrad, V. Samsonenko conducting. The singing was remarkably harmonious. The programme included, among other things, a choral song by Schumann, to the music of which a new text, entitled 'Ahead, pioneers!' had been adapted.

The Exhibition is taking place in a Soviet school building in Kazan Street, and occupies two big halls and several small ones. The exhibits include part of a collection of instruments from various countries, lent by the Music Museum of the Philharmonia; a collection of examples showing the evolution of musical writing and printing in various countries, lent by the present writer; and a collection of Russian folk-tunes. The Government Department of Public Education shows plant for music printing, and for manufacturing pianofortes and orchestral instruments.

All this constitutes, so to speak, the decorative side of the Exhibition, which visitors, especially school-children, eagerly patronise. In the other hall are exhibited some interesting statistical tables, maps, and diagrams. It is seen that between 1918 and 1925 musical education of children made great headway at Leningrad. Certain schools, besides their choirs, have small orchestras; some of them are even capable of producing operas. Courses in musical appreciation—a new thing here—are given in many of these schools, brief concerts with æsthetic and at times technical explanations taking place. Now and then the children are requested to express the contents of the music as it strikes them, by motions or by means of drawings.

The originator of the scheme is Mrs. Nadejda Grodzenskaya, who has taken great pains to ensure its successful carrying out.

The evenings are devoted to demonstration-concerts by school orchestras and choirs, and to lectures. Unfortunately, no catalogue of the Exhibition has appeared.

N. Findeisen.

VIENNA

OPERATIC EVENTS

The report that plans have materialised for re-opening the Volksoper early next season, after an interval of more than six months, comes as welcome news. September 1 is the date announced, and the directorship will be in the hands of Hugo Gruder-Guntram, who acted as co-director of the Volksoper several years ago. Leo Blech, formerly of the Berlin Staatsoper, is to be first conductor. The Volksoper will be conducted jointly with the Carltheater, Vienna's historically famous but now bankrupt comic-opera house. By this combination it should be possible to reduce expenses and so make the first-named a self-supporting playhouse once more. Gruder-Guntram is known as a versatile business man, and with Blech as artistic adviser it is hoped that the Volksoper, which is a vital necessity for the middle-class, will enter upon a promising career.

The one operatic première of the early summer was the first presentation anywhere of the Chinese opera, 'Sang Po,' at the Grosser Konzerthaus-Saal. It is the joint work of two Viennese—R. E. Burgssun, as librettist, and Rudolf Tlascal, conductor of the State Burgtheater—and was written, under stress of starvation and hardship, during the world war, when the collaborators were prisoners of war in Eastern Russia. It must have demanded immense enthusiasm to embark upon an artistic venture under such circumstances, and it would be surprising if the outcome had been fully satisfactory. Original Chinese themes, we are told, are interwoven in the score, but as a fact the music sounds at times suspiciously Japanese, i.e., reminiscent of 'Madame Butterfly.' The plot deals with an adventure in the life of Sang Po, a Chinese Don Juan, and rather lacks dramatic tension. Elements of Wagner and Tchaikovsky are also apparent in the plot, and the sacred dances of Act 3, which take place in a Chinese temple, are an offspring of 'Aïda.' The production, on the makeshift stage of a concert-hall, achieved only a moderate success.

CLASSIC COMIC-OPERA MODERNIZED

The outstanding musical event of the late season was the presentation of Charles Lecoq's comic-opera 'Giroflé-Girofla' by the troupe of Alexander Tairoff's famous chamber theatre, of Moscow. The fifty years' old music had preserved much of its charm, and though the libretto had faded, Tairoff's genius as stage manager succeeded in finding virtue in its very weakness. The pseudo-romantic elements of the book and the quasi-grand-opera stage effects are to-day no longer palatable. Fantastic pirates who accompany a gruesome kidnapping scene with a loud and bombastic chorus are apt to appear ludicrous rather than awe-inspiring. In a moment of inspiration, Tairoff infuses the scene—indeed the entire rather sentimental book—with a burlesque idea worthy to rank with the operatic parodies of an Offenbach. His is a stage almost devoid of scenery and properties. The play is the thing, and, next to the author's invention, the personality of the actors. These are singers, dancers, actors, and clowns all in one person (Alexander Rumneff is the most versatile and captivating among them). What Tairoff offers is comic-opera of the 20th century, with all the speed of our times, and with a splendid impromptu spirit which renders the production a modern revival of the Italian Commedia dell' arte. Comic-opera of the type associated with Lecoq and Johann Strauss is not written in our day. Our operetta composers waver between pseudo-psychological grand-opera imitations on the one hand, and camouflaged vaudeville on the other. Tairoff points the way to a new form of opera—i.e., parody, with a deeper significance.

POPULAR MUSIC

To become familiar with the works of the masters, the best way is not only to hear them frequently at concerts, but to study them at home with the aid of a pianoforte. Since, however, the number of those who can afford the luxury of such an instrument is rather limited—in Central Europe, at least—an instrument of lesser scope, but still of sufficiently 'orchestral' character, the mandolin, has gradually come to hold an important place as a home instrument with the poorer and middle-class of this country. An outcome has been the organization of no less than eighteen mandolin orchestras at Vienna, which have presented public performances of no mean quality. The first joint concert enlisted the services of some three hundred and sixty players, and afforded a memorable sight. Wood-wind, guitars, double-basses, and percussion have been added to reinforce the four groups of mandolins—mandolin, mandola, mandoloncello, and berd—which correspond to the four sections of the ordinary stringed orchestra, and which disclosed a startling wealth of sonorities and nuance. The chief shortcoming of the enterprise so far lies in the rather limited number of original compositions for mandolin orchestra, those of A. Liprandi, Graziani Walter, Anvarani, and Salvetti being, after all, little better than drawing-room pieces. But since a master like Schönberg has already employed the mandolin and guitar in the chamber-music ensemble to his 'Serenade,' it seems quite possible that other modern composers will sooner or later avail themselves of the colouristic possibilities of the mandolin orchestra.

More interesting and more strictly national was the popular music offered at a recent concert of the Vienna Jewish Choral Society, which has attained a high standard of excellence under its conductor, G. Braslavsky. Choruses of Mendelssohn and Rubinstein, which opened the programme, were Jewish music only in the sense of their origin, and not in their idiom. Braslavsky's chorus, 'Friday Evening,' is, however, built on the chants and cadences of the Jewish ritual, and involves a predominance of minor keys.

MODERN CHAMBER MUSIC AND SOLOISTS

Alban Berg's Sonata, Op. 1, and a pianoforte solo arrangement of Schönberg's Chamber Symphony, figured on the programme of Olga Novakovic, a pianist from the Schönberg circle. The arrangement of the Symphony is the work of Eduard Steuermann, the eminent pianist. Its purpose is solely by way of preparatory study. If performed as a recital piece, the arrangement calls for as 'orchestral' an interpretation as possible. Mlle. Novakovic, however, played it in purely pianistic style; but she revealed excellent insight in Berg's Sonata, which is particularly interesting now that the composer's development has gone far beyond this early example. The Sonata reveals the strong and eloquent temperament which places Berg so far above many of his colleagues of the Schönberg school, but it is still Wagnerian to such a degree as to cause wonder over the fierce opposition which it once encountered.

Paul A. Pisk, also a former disciple of Schönberg, was recently heard on two occasions with several pieces from his song-cycle, 'Songs of a Wandering Minstrel.' Pisk's music is at times esoteric, even romantic, but never devoid of distinct form and rhythm. The songs are melodious, though in a free sense of tonality, splendid in workmanship, and very singable. Sophia Munteano, the vocalist, proved a notable discovery. PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

GUSTAVE GARCIA, the well-known teacher of singing, on June 12, at the age of eighty-eight. Gustave Garcia was the son of Manuel Garcia, who died a centenarian in 1906. His career was two-fold. Twenty years as a cosmopolitan opera singer brought him invariable success. His chief part was Don Giovanni, with which he made his début at His Majesty's Theatre in 1860. He afterwards produced 'Don Giovanni' at Milan, where it had not been performed for thirty-two years. The second stage of his career was marked by his appointment in 1880 as professor of singing at the Royal Academy of Music, where he remained for ten years. He also taught at the Guildhall School of Music from 1883 to 1910, and at the Royal College of Music from 1884 until his last illness. His last public appearance occurred this year at a pupils' concert given by his son Albert. He came without previous announcement, and sang the 'Noel' of Adolphe Adam, to everybody's delight.

GEORGE ASHDOWN AUDSLEY, at Bloomfield, New Jersey, on June 21, in his eighty-seventh year. He was a native of Scotland, having been born at Elgin on September 6, 1838. Educated for the profession of an architect, he early became interested in organs and organ-building, and did much experimental work. He went to the United States in 1892, and spent the remainder of his life there. He wrote much on a variety of subjects, mainly artistic. His twenty-seven books include three on the organ—'The art of organ-building,' 'The organ of the 20th century,' and 'Organ stops and their artistic registration.' As architect he designed some well-known English buildings, among others Manchester City Hall, and some public buildings at Liverpool.

NEWTON LAYCOCK, at Sunderland, aged sixty-four. He was a native of Halifax. In 1895 he was appointed superintendent of singing in the schools at Gateshead, and later held a similar post at Sunderland, a task he was well-fitted for, owing to his genial nature and his attractive power with children. Himself a fine bass singer, he did excellent work as a choir-trainer, being honorary chorus-master of the Gateshead Choral Society during his stay in that town, and holding a similar office later with the Sunderland Philharmonic Society. He was also choirmaster for many years at St. John's Wesleyan Church, Sunderland, and, more recently, at Christ Church.

ERIK SATIE, in his sixtieth year. He was born at Honfleur, on May 17, 1866, the son of an English mother, his baptismal names being Eric Leslie Satie. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire and the Schola Cantorum. An eccentric composer, with a curiously limited sense of humour which showed itself in such titles as 'Morceaux en forme de poires,' and in the use of red ink and other peculiarities in the printing of his music, he wrote little of real importance in itself. But his influence on modern French music was considerable, apart from his having been the senior member of the group known as 'Le Six.'

ALBERT J. CROSS, at Southport. He studied at Leipsic Conservatoire, and at the Royal Academy of Music, distinguishing himself at both institutions, and being elected an Associate of the R.A.M. He was principal of the Manchester School of Music (founded by his father in 1892), and was actively engaged there until a few months ago. A versatile and well-equipped all-round musician, he did much valuable work for music at Manchester, not only through the School, but also in the organization of a famous series of popular concerts at the old Y.M.C.A. Hall.

Frederick Kirkby, at Nottingham, aged ninety-three. Despite a defect in hearing, he became a competent violinist, and appeared on the concert platform at times with the late Henry Farmer, whose pupil he was. Seventy-two years ago he accompanied the choir practices at Beeston Parish Church on his violin, the vicar joining him with the flute.

George Martin, choirmaster of Staveley Parish Church, and a well-known singer. His death was the result of a motor-cycle accident.

George Staton, at Chesterfield, aged seventy-three. He devoted much of his early life to the making of violins and 'cellos.

Fred G. Bowles, at Stockton-on-Tees, on June 25. He was a very successful writer of words for songs.

Miscellaneous

A class for the study of stage work, both operatic and dramatic, will be opened at the Guildhall School of Music in September. The School is well able to make a successful feature of such a class, as it has a capital little theatre, seating five hundred, and an accomplished staff of stage teachers.

At the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School the Chappell Gold Medal has been awarded to Eunice Norton, of Minneapolis; Marie Erdtsieck, Netherlands Government Scholar, being highly commended.

Mr. Baguley Waters, a well-known North of England choral and orchestral conductor, has been appointed musical director of the Manchester Hippodrome, in succession to the late Mr. Alfred Haines.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

Glengowan.—As you complain of stiffening of the muscles of the hand and arm during pianoforte playing, it is clear that there is something radically wrong with your methods. Your first business should be to set this right if you hope to make any satisfactory progress, particularly as you are now working without a teacher. Get Matthay's 'The Child's First Steps in Pianoforte Playing' and 'The First Principles of Pianoforte Playing' (Longmans, Green & Co.). Study these carefully, and you will doubtless discover where you are at fault. We would advise you to confine yourself for some time to studies and pieces well within your capabilities. Your main object should be the formation of correct keyboard habits, and this object can easily be defeated by attempting music which makes too severe demands upon your technique. It is, of course, impossible definitely to 'grade' you without hearing you play. From what you say, however, it is probable that your standard is somewhere in the neighbourhood of that of the Lower Division of the Associated Board Examinations. As regards Bach's Preludes and Fugues, you may find some of the simpler ones within your powers. We would recommend you, however, to work first at some of his Two-part and Three-part Inventions (Augener). You would also get some delightfully varied practice from his 'French' Suites. For studies, you would be on safe ground if you went step by step through Thümer's 'New School of Studies' (Augener), commencing with Book 4. These are carefully graded, and are drawn from a variety of sources. Do not work at studies mechanically; every good study has some definite purpose, and when you have discovered what this is you will be in a position to work at it intelligently and profitably. As regards pieces, several publishers issue graded catalogues. Write for such to the Anglo-French Music Co., Murdoch, Augener, Hawkes (all of London). You might also work at some of the easier Preludes and Mazurkas of Chopin (Augener). Much interesting material may be found in the keyboard music of some of our early English composers—e.g., Albums of Selected Pieces, by John Bull, Byrd, and Farnaby, and the 'Old English Suite,' all arranged by Granville Bantock (Novello); 'Contemporaries of Purcell,' edited by J. A. Fuller-Maitland (Chester).

M. C. S.—Your question is not clear. You ask us to procure 'a suitable setting for a Norwegian carol opening with the lines:

> "Over the hills and over the dales,
> Over the fields of snow."'

Are you hunting for an existing setting, or do you want us to find a composer for the carol? If a reader knows of a published setting, perhaps he will kindly send word to 'M. C. S.,' at this office.

Alpha.—(1.) We should describe the form of Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque' as binary, because it is founded on two main themes, used thus: a-b-a-b. The Scherzo of Widor's fourth Symphony is similar—a-b-a, with a Coda founded on b. But the terminology of form is vague, and we are prepared to be told that another classification is possible. For example, the chordal theme that appears at the end of line 3, page 2, of the Franck piece might be regarded as a new subject, but it is more logical to think of it as a derivative of bars 4-6 of the opening theme. But does it matter? (2.) Mailly was a Belgian, born at Brussels in 1833. (3.) The sign // in Karg-Elert's music means, we suppose, a break of a more pronounced type than is expressed by a comma at the end of a phrase. (4.) In the simultaneous performance of the figures and the third quaver should come as you have written it—a little before the demisemiquaver. But whether the exact proportions can be observed by the player, or, if observed, appreciated by the hearer, depends on the pace.

F.R.A.M.—If you wish to give up your church organistship for cinema work, you must fit yourself for the change. Books you may find useful are 'Playing to Pictures,' by George (Cinema Picture Co.); 'Musical Accompaniment to Moving Pictures,' by Lang and West (Rogers); and 'The Orchestral and Cinema Organist,' by P. Kevin Buckley (Hawkes). The need is not so much for special training as for resourcefulness, ability to improvise, to register quickly and neatly, and to be generally 'quick in the uptake.' There are, we believe, some good cinema organs and organists in your town. Listen to the best of them, and if you can get to know a player or two, do so. We know of no centre where cinema organ playing may be studied. But on this and other points write to the Controller, British Screen Music Society, Westville, Babbacombe, Torquay.

L. G.—(1.) The tune 'Lilliburlero' is by Purcell. It appears in the second part of 'Music's Handmaid,' where it is called 'A New Irish Tune.' Purcell used it later as a ground-bass in 'The Gordian Knot Untied.' (2.) 'Cherry Ripe' was composed by C. E. Horn (1786-1849). (3.) A modern song use of 'Lilliburlero' is that of Martin Shaw, in 'Green and Gold,' words by C. L. Graves (Curwen). 'Cherry Ripe' is published by Novello in a medium key (C) in their School Music Review Series.

N. R. B.—'I have hit on a method whereby viola players can easily overcome the difficulty of reading from the tenor clef; can I protect the idea?'—If the idea is a mere matter of notation we doubt whether you can secure any rights. You had better get legal opinion, or seek advice from a Patent Agent. We can express no idea of the value of your invention without knowing more about it; and naturally you are not handing out information. But, on the face of it, we should say that, the tenor clef being easily mastered, a labour-saving device would have no chance of being widely adopted unless it is capable of being produced at a trifling cost. If the scheme involves any kind of change in notation it will be ruled out by the fact that publishers are not likely to scrap their existing plates to save unintelligent or lazy players trouble. Players who use a new notation will thus be cut off from the standard editions.

GRUMPY.—For Mozart, try Sonata No. 14, in C minor; for Haydn, that in E minor. As your time is limited, and popular appeal a consideration, we advise playing detached and attractive movements, say the Minuet and Trio from Mozart's No. 11, in A, or the Finale from his No. 5, in G; or the Tempo di minuetto and Presto from Haydn's No. 16, in B minor, or the Presto from his No. 12, in E flat. Haydn's Sonatas abound in delightful and sparkling things, but we should not recommend the performance of many sonatas as wholes.

J. A. M. P.—For obvious reasons, we prefer not to recommend teachers or correspondence colleges. There are plenty of good ones, and you must choose for yourself from our advertisement columns, or (better still) from personal experience of some local musicians who have prepared from the examinations you have in view. We don't give you a list of books for study: here you will be guided by your teacher. The R.A.M. issues such a list for its examinations.

SCOTIA.—The A.R.C.O. Diploma is not accepted as a qualification by the Teachers' Registration Council. The Fellowship Diploma is accepted in regard to the section concerning knowledge of music, but not in regard to teaching. For particulars of the requirements of the Council, write to the Secretary, 47, Bedford Square, W.C.1.

CANADIAN.—Your suggested metronome rate of ♩=88 seems right for Liszt's 'St. Francis preaching to the birds.' But in a lengthy, imaginative work of this kind the less you think in terms of the metronome the better. When you have got well inside the music, the pace will pretty well settle itself.

A. P.—We cannot discover where 'Wickins's Voluntaries for American Organ' are to be obtained. Apparently they were published long ago by a firm that no longer exists. Can a reader help our correspondent?

SUNSHINE. — For the elements of music try Traill (Novello). For harmony, Stainer's 'Harmony Primer' (Novello).

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than THURSDAY, AUGUST 20 (FIRST POST).

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Gresham Essays.—II. Seven Notes and Six Chords. By Walford Davies	689
Objectivity in Contemporary Criticism. By Edwin Evans	692
Debussy and the Leitmotive. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	695
The Bankruptcy of Opera	697
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	698
A New Psalter	702
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	703
New Music	704
The Musician's Bookshelf	708
Some Varieties of Operatic Experience. By Frank Howes	713
Occasional Notes	714
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	715
Directors of Music in Secondary Schools	716
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	717
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—X. Christopher Tye, Mus. D. By W. H. Grattan Flood	718
Wireless Notes. By 'Caliban'	719
Church and Organ Music	719
Royal College of Organists	719
Letters to the Editor	730
Sharps and Flats	736
The Amateurs' Exchange	737
Royal Academy of Music	737
Royal College of Music	738
Trinity College of Music	738
University of Manchester	739
Centenary of the Rev. Sir Frederick Gore Ouseley	739
Orlando Gibbons at the Abbey	739
Complimentary Dinner and Presentation to the Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mus. Doc.	739
Covent Garden Opera	740
Russian Ballet Season	742
Aberystwyth Festival	743
London Concerts	744
Competition Festival Record	744
Music in the Provinces	745
Music in Wales	745
Music in Ireland	746
Musical Notes from Abroad	746
Obituary	749
Miscellaneous	750
Answers to Correspondents	750

MUSIC:

'Praise, O praise our God and King.' Full Anthem for Harvest. By F. W. WADELY	721

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT is given with this Number:
'Hoyda, Hoyda, Jolly Rutterkin.' Four-part Song. By Alan Palmer.

SECOND TENOR desires Appointment in Church Choir. Box "B. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ALCOCK, W. G.—Twelve Short Introductory Voluntaries. (No. 103, Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series.) 3s.

CAMPBELL, C. M.—Nocturne. For Violoncello (or Violin) and Pianoforte. 2s.

—— Nocturne. For Small Orchestra: Pianoforte Conductor, 1s. 6d.; 1st Violin, 8d.; 2nd Violin, 8d.; Viola, 4d.; Violoncello, 8d.; Bass, 4d.; Harmonium, 8d.; Harp, 8d.; Wind parts, &c., 3s. 4d.

CAROLS, Six, by various composers. National Institute for the Blind Carol Booklet No. 3. 4d.

CHAMBERLAIN, MABEL.—"Ear-Training." Part I. For children from five to nine years of age. (No. 101, Novello's Music Primers.) 6s. Or in Two Books: Book I., Letterpress (Music Primers, No. 101A). 4s. Book II., Music (Music Primers, No. 101B). 3s.

CHERITON, W. W.—"The Bilton Song." 6d.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—"How calmly the evening." Arranged for S.S.A. (No. 504, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

FLETCHER, P. E.—"Now once again." Carol-Anthem for Christmas. Arranged for S.S.A. (No. 506, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

—— "Ring out, wild bells." Festival Carol. Arranged for S.S.A. (No. 506, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 4d.

GEBRUERS, STAF.—"Salutation to the Celts." Song. 2s.

GIBBONS, ORLANDO.—"Amen." From the Anthem, "Behold, the hour cometh." Edited by John E. West. (No. 1142, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

HARWOOD, B.—"O how plentiful is Thy goodness" (Op. 41). Harvest Anthem. 6d.

HULBERT, H. H.—"Pronunciation for Voice Production." Thought in Action." (No. 100, Novello's Music Primers.) 1s. 6d.

ROWLEY, A.—"A-maying, a-playing." (No. 1425, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 398, contains the following music in both notations.—"Ducks." A Syncopation for Children. Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY. "Manners." Unison Song. H. A. CHAMBERS. "The Merry Peasant." Arranged as a Vocal Study. R. SCHUMANN. 2d.

SHAW, GEOFFREY.—Six Sea Songs. Arranged for Pianoforte Duet. 2s. 6d.

SMITH, W.—"The Burial of Moses." Sacred Song. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2473. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in B flat. J. STAINER 6d.

No. 2485. "Hear, O my people." Festival Anthem for Quartet and Chorus. J. HOLBROOKE 3d.

TWELVE INTROITS or SHORT ANTHEMS, by various composers. 1s.

WADELY, F. W.—"Praise, O praise our God and King." Harvest Anthem. (No. 990, The Musical Times.) 2d.

MOST WONDERFUL VOCAL DISCOVERY of Modern Times.

All in trouble with their voices or contemplating Vocal Study should consult

WILLIAM WOLLER,

School of Voice Culture and Solo Singing,

61, GUNTERSTONE ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.14.

ALL TEACHERS of SINGING and CHOIRMASTERS seeking higher efficiency should avail themselves of the extensive SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS for WEEK-END and HOLIDAY COURSES during Summer months at London Studios and various Summer resorts.

25 YEARS' UNBROKEN SUCCESS.

Hundreds of Singers, professional and amateur, owe their success and continued freshness of voice to the study of this method, in many cases after having given up hope of using their voices again.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY

FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SUITE

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA (OR QUARTET)

TRANSCRIBED FROM THE CLAVICHORD WORKS OF

DOMENICO SCARLATTI

BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

SCORE.

Price ... Three Shillings.

String Parts, 3*s.* 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS.

No.
1.	LET THE WORDS OF MY MOUTH	Hugh Blair
2.	GRANT, O LORD	Josiah Booth
3.	LORD, WE PRAY THEE	H. A. Chambers
4.	HIDE NOT THOU THY FACE	Richard Farrant
5.	I WILL GO UNTO THE ALTAR	H. J. Gauntlett
6.	O LORD, INCREASE MY FAITH	Orlando Gibbons
7.	ONE THING HAVE I DESIRED OF THE LORD	G. A. Macfarren
8.	LET MY PRAYER COME UP	Henry Purcell
9.	GOD BE IN MY HEAD	R. Walker Robson
10.	LEAD ME, LORD	S. S. Wesley
11.	HIDE ME UNDER THE SHADOW	John E. West
12.	BLESSED LORD	C. Lee Williams

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC
BY
J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
HARVEST ANTHEMS.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

F London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEARLY EIGHT MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS, Etc.
COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*LORD OF THE HARVEST. Just Published... 4d.
Very effective Solos and irresistible Choruses.
*REJOICE WITH THANKSGIVING ... 8th Edit. 4d.
Interesting, attractive, and inspiring.
*RENDER THANKS AND PRAISE ... 10th Edit. 4d.
*REJOICE IN ALL THE GOOD THINGS ... 11th Edit. 4d.
Contains imitative parts and rich modulations.
*SING FORTH HIS PRAISE ... 10th Edit. 4d.
*BE THANKFUL UNTO HIM ... 8th Edit. 5d.
*A BOUNTEOUS HARVEST ... 5th 1000 4d.
*LET EVERY THING PRAISE THE LORD ... 6th Edit, 4d.
THY BOUNTEOUS GIFTS ... 4th Edit. 8d.
Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
NEW NO. 11 VOLUNTARY BOOK ... 6th Edit. 2s.
NEW NO. 12 VOLUNTARY BOOK ... 4th Edit. 2s.
Seventeen pieces in each on Two Staves with Pedal part indicated.
*Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.*
London: A. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY CO., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

These Compositions are exceptionally Melodious, Interesting, and effective. Have attained world-wide appreciation.

POPULAR HARVEST ANTHEMS.
COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

*Thou Crownest the Year ... 30th 1000 4d.
*Sing unto God with Thanksgiving ... 35th 1000 6d.
*How great is His Goodness ... 26th 1000 4d.
*The Fruit of Thy Works ... 23rd 1000 6d.
*He gives us Fruitful Seasons ... 11th 1000 6d.
*The Eyes of all wait upon Thee ... 72nd 1000 4d.
Sung at a Festival of 1,500 voices at Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Fear not, O Land ... 11th 1000 4d.
*Sing Praises to His Name ... 15th 1000 4d.
O Lord, how manifold are Thy Works ... 10th 1000 6d.
Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem ... 49th 1000 4d.
Sung at Choral Festivals, Wem and Downpatrick Cathedral.
*All Thy works shall praise Thee ... 5th 1000 4d.
*The blessings of Peace ... 5th 1000 4d.
Favourite MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in D ... 31st 1000 6d.
Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choir Festival.
*Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*
London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

A GOLDEN HARVEST
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION
THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
H. KNIGHT
THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN
THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA
THE MUSIC BY
HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA
FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN.
THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
J. F. WALLER
THE MUSIC BY
G. M. GARRETT.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH
FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
THE WORDS BY
E. OXENFORD
THE MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three Shillings; Paper boards, Four Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA
FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS
THE WORDS BY
R. D. BETJEMANN
THE MUSIC BY
JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING
FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS.
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION
THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
S. WENSLEY
THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Paper boards, Three Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;
String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.; Full Score, MS.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA
FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE MUSIC BY
C. M. WEBER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.; Full Score on hire.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST
FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS
THE MUSIC BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Three Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A HARVEST SONG
FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS
THE WORDS BY
J. BENNETT.
THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS AND CAROLS.

BARNBY, J.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
Harvest-tide thanksgiving, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 2s.
Let all our brethren join in one ... ... 1½d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (Two Versions) each 3d.
O Lord of heaven and earth and sea ... ... 1½d.
Praise, O praise, our God and King ... ... 3d.
Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 3d.
Sower went forth sowing, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
BUNNETT, ED.—Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 1½d.
CRAMENT, J. M.—Sowing and reaping (Carol) ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 2s.
DYKES, J. B.—Holy is the seed-time ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
GILBERT, B.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
HARVEY, W. C.—We thank Thee Lord for this fair earth (Children's voices) (Staff and Sol-fa Notations) ... ... 1½d.
HERVEY, F. A. J.—Make melody within your hearts (Carol) 2d.
KETÈLBEY, A. W.—God with plenty fills the hours ... ... 4d.
LEE, T.—King and Ruler of Creation ... ... 4d.
LOWE, A.—Holy is the seed-time (Carol) ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
MAUNDER, J. H.—Harvest Hymn of praise, A. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Joy of Harvest, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
STIRLING, E.—Now Autumn strews on every plain ... ... 2d.
TOZER, F.—Lord of the rich and golden grain ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
TWELVE HYMNS selected from The Hymnary ... ... 1½d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS

SELECTED LIST.

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE. By PERCY E. FLETCHER.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THOMAS ADAMS

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE
Price Fourpence.

J. BARNBY

THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HUGH BLAIR

OH, BRING TO THE LORD
Price Fourpence.

A. HERBERT BREWER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Twopence.

EDWARD BUNNETT

BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O CLAP YOUR HANDS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PERCY C. BUCK

GOD BE MERCIFUL UNTO US
For Boys' Voices.
Price Fourpence.

H. A. CHAMBERS

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

EDWARD ELGAR

FEAR NOT, O LAND
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

MYLES B. FOSTER

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED R. GAUL

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. M. GOODHART

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

CUTHBERT HARRIS

AND GOD SAID
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED HOLLINS

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ALBERT LOWE

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE C. MARTIN

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

E. W. NAYLOR

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence.

BRUCE STEANE

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HERBERT W. WAREING

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HAROLD E. WATTS

THE GOD OF ABRAHAM PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JOHN E. WEST

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE
Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

W. WOLSTENHOLME

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS

	No.
*BIDE WITH US	6	Bleib' bei uns
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON	4	Christ lag in Todesbanden
CHRISTIANS GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY	63	Christen, ätzet diesen Tag
COME, REDEEMER OF OUR RACE	61	Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland
FROM DEPTHS OF WOE I CALL ON THEE	38	Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu dir
GIVE THE HUNGRY MAN THY BREAD	39	Brich dem Hungrigen dein Brod
GOD GOETH UP WITH SHOUTING	43	Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen
GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD	68	Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt
*GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST	106	Gottes Zeit ist die allerbeste Zeit
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
†HOW BRIGHTLY SHINES	1	Wie schön leuchtet
IF THOU BUT SUFFEREST GOD TO GUIDE THEE	93	Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten
JESUS, NOW WILL WE PRAISE THEE	41	Jesu, nun sei gepreiset
JESUS SLEEPS, WHAT HOPE REMAINETH?	81	Jesus schläft, was soll ich hoffen?
LET SONGS OF REJOICING BE RAISED	149	Man singet mit Freuden
LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD, THE	79	Gott der Herr ist Sonn' und Schild
†LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, THE	112	Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt
LORD, REBUKE ME NOT (Funeral Ode)	198	Lass, Fürstin (Trauerode)
*MY SPIRIT WAS IN HEAVINESS	21	Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss
O CHRIST, MY ALL IN LIVING	95	Christus der ist mein Leben
O JESU CHRIST, THOU PRINCE OF PEACE	116	Du Friedensfürst, Herr Jesu Christ
*O LIGHT EVERLASTING	34	O ewiges Feuer
O PRAISE THE LORD FOR ALL HIS MERCIES	28	Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende
O TEACH ME, LORD, MY DAYS TO NUMBER	27	Wer weiss, wie nahe mir mein Ende?
PRAISE OUR GOD WHO REIGNS IN HEAVEN	11	Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen
PRAISE THOU THE LORD, JERUSALEM	119	Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn
SAGES OF SHEBA, THE	65	Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen
*SLEEPERS, WAKE!	140	Wachet auf
†STRONGHOLD SURE, A	80	Ein' feste Burg
THERE IS NOUGHT OF SOUNDNESS IN ALL MY BODY	25	Es ist nichts Gesundes an meinem Leibe
THOU GUIDE OF ISRAEL	104	Du Hirte Israel, höre
WAILING, CRYING, MOURNING, SIGHING	12	Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen
WATCH YE, PRAY YE	70	Wachet, betet
WHEN WILL GOD RECALL MY SPIRIT?	8	Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?
WHOSO DOTH OFFER THANKS	17	Wer Dank opfert

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

THE SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS

IN TWELVE BOOKS (THREE BOOKS FOR EACH VOICE)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

BACH'S MOTETS

*BE NOT AFRAID	Fürchte dich nicht. 8*d.*
Ditto. (Edited by G. R. SINCLAIR)	1*s.*
*BLESSING, GLORY, AND WISDOM	Lob und Ehre und Weisheit und Dank. 8*d.*
*COME, JESU, COME	Komm, Jesu, komm. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*I WRESTLE AND PRAY (J. C. BACH)	Ich lasse dich nicht. 6*d.*
*JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE	Jesu, meine Freude. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*Ditto. (Welsh Words)	1*s.* 6*d.*
*NOW SHALL THE GRACE	Nun ist das Heil. 8*d.*
*SING YE TO THE LORD	Singet dem Herrn. 1*s.* 6*d.* [1*s.* 6*d.*
SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH US, THE	Der Geist hilft unserer Schwachheit auf.

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa, complete. † May be had in Tonic Sol-fa (Choruses only).

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Ye Holy Angels Bright

ANTHEM.

THE WORDS BY

R. BAXTER.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR THE 271st FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY

BY

STANLEY MARCHANT.

Price One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Music and Books

at Great Reductions.

Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.

New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.

Music and Books Purchased.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

TWO NEW ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

"O HOW PLENTIFUL IS THY GOODNESS" (Harvest Thanksgiving).

"GREAT GOD, WHO, HID FROM MORTAL SIGHT" (General Use).

Price Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"THE CHOIR AND MUSICAL JOURNAL."

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS FOR AUGUST.

ROYAL MUSICIANS.
BELL CHIMES AND RHYMES (Illustrated).
A MUSICIAN'S WANDERINGS IN GLOUCESTERSHIRE (continued).
THE NEW TRANSEPT ORGAN IN WORCESTER CATHEDRAL. (Illustrated).
A WONDERFUL ORGAN (Humorous).
ANTHEM, "O WORSHIP THE KING." (R. A. South).

Monthly, Fourpence. Annual Subscription, 5*s*.

"The Choir" Office, 25-35, City Road, London, E.C.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOCTURNE

FOR VIOLONCELLO (OR VIOLIN) AND PIANOFORTE.

BY

COLIN MACLEOD CAMPBELL.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
Piano Conductor	1	6
String Parts	2	8
Wind Parts, &c.	4	0
Harmonium	0	8

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX SEA SONGS

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET.

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE

ORGAN.

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR SALE.—FULL SCORES.

GOUNOD.—"FAUST."
The rare original French edition (No. 254), half-morocco, with Ballet bound to match £15

HAYDN.—"ORFEO E EURIDICE" (*c.*1800).
O.P. Loose sheets in original wrapper; good condition ... £2

RAMEAU.—COMPLETE WORKS.
First 17 bound in 18 handsome vols., half-morocco, with separate parts to Vol. II. (Concerts), in case to match £21

For particulars of these and some other works of interest, apply to T. S. WOTTON, 6, STOCKLEIGH ROAD, ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, SUSSEX.

JUST PUBLISHED

Produced by the British National Opera Company, at Manchester, April 3

AT THE BOAR'S HEAD

A MUSICAL INTERLUDE IN ONE ACT

THE LIBRETTO TAKEN FROM

SHAKESPEARE'S KING HENRY IV

THE MUSIC, FOUNDED ON OLD ENGLISH MELODIES, BY

GUSTAV HOLST

(Op. 42).

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENT BY VALLY LASKER.

Vocal Score, Price Six Shillings Libretto, One Shilling

SOME PRESS OPINIONS

THE TIMES—April 4, 1925

". . . . The dialogue moves almost at speaking pace; the tunes appear so easily that not one in ten of them would be recognised as a quotation (Holst owns to about forty borrowed tunes) if he had not shown his hand in a printed preface. The orchestration is another point of subtle interest. It is generally inconspicuous, almost always light enough to let the voice come through without effort. It never distracts attention from the play, yet Holst's skill appears in the way he clothes the thinnest harmonic outline with apt colour."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH—April 4, 1925

". . . . The generous use Mr. Holst has made of Old English melodies garnered from the Playford, Chappell, and Cecil Sharp collections. . . . Whatever its constituents this music adds zest and momentum to the comic scenes; it rises to dignity and eloquence in the noble monologue of Prince Henry; it sets in relief every element of the last episode where the love passages of Falstaff and Doll are broken off by war alarms. . . . . The individuality of the composer emerges clear and distinct, binding together firmly the action. It is a personality compounded of great daring and great simplicity; of a modern love for sharp, slick combination of harmony and an innate bias for the song that is the people's heritage. One might almost think of Holst as a master of the Tudor period who during the eras of German hegemony in music has lain in enchanted sleep, and awakened again in the twentieth century to resume his song making with modern tools."

DAILY MAIL—April 4, 1925

". . . . This original and exquisite little score . . . . It was no foolhardiness but a sound instinct that prompted the addition of this music to the richest and wittiest comedy scenes that ever came from pen of man. Mr. Holst's music is woven on material from the Old English country dance book. The small orchestra keeps these slight and blithe tunes chattering or murmuring, and above it the words are fitted in a rare new manner. The fine ingeniousness of it all can be judged from the score."

THE MORNING POST—April 4, 1925

". . . . More than half of the problem which Mr. Holst has set himself has been the mating of a certain text with a certain body of tune without doing violence to either. He has succeeded, and now that the job has been done one sees how inevitable is his solution of a difficult problem, and with what extraordinary skill it has been accomplished. . . . . The real feat of the composer has been the apparent ease with which he has brought words and music together, and has allowed free play to the Shakespearean text, while adding a covering of music as delightful as it is pertinent. . . . . The curtain is Shakespeare's, but it is also Mr. Holst's in an admirably effective page of his score. In his new opera he shows again his sense of theatrical effect, both in the ingenuity with which he has arranged this episode, and in the use he makes of his orchestra."

DAILY NEWS—April 4, 1925

". . . . Mr. Holst's method of composition is decidedly new. He has taken over forty English folk-songs, and used them as the principal element of the score, besides tunes of his own. The folk-songs are developed, combined, and transformed with surprising ingenuity."

THE SUNDAY TIMES—April 5, 1925

". . . . The melody that Mr. Holst has invented for them [the Sonnets], beautifully free in rhythm, and remote in style yet without a suspicion of archaism, seems a natural emanation from them. His technical skill is shown in the masterly combination of this song ['Devouring Time'], later with the 'King Arthur' ballad, in a little ensemble that comes just at the right moment. One is astonished at the general congruity between Shakespeare's words and the traditional tunes."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN—April 4, 1925

". . . . 'At the Boar's Head' is a work of genius, if only for its cleverness and the masterly way in which the words of Shakespeare are made to run in with the old and strongly rhythmical melodies of Shakespeare's own time. It is a work of genius also because it answers to the geniality of Shakespeare. . . . Mr. Holst should in this work have made friends with the man in the street."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at Covent Garden, May 14, 1923

THE PERFECT FOOL

OPERA IN ONE ACT

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

GUSTAV HOLST

OP. 39

PRICE ... ... SIX SHILLINGS

Libretto One Shilling

THE BALLET FROM "THE PERFECT FOOL"

Full Score, 15s.; Pianoforte Solo, 3s.; Pianoforte Duet, 4s.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS

THE TIMES

The ballet music . . . is the most brilliant thing in a work glittering with brilliant moments. . . . There is one delicious musical moment, an almost Purcellian "round" for three voices. . . . and it is not an isolated moment.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

It is a safe and a proud thing to say that in the whole history of opera no composer has produced a more perfectly fitting score and libretto than Gustav Holst has produced in this opera. . . . In very truth this is a perfect little opera, a veritable masterpiece after its kind, of wit and humour. . . . Brilliantly clever and amusing.

THE MORNING POST

The Perfect Joke would be a better title for Mr. Holst's opera. . . . Mr. Holst shows the rare and precious ability to make a musical joke that everyone can see—or hear. . . . The whole thing is something entirely fresh, and follows a well-defined line of its own. . . . Actually there is not a weak page in the score, and though story and music differ from the expected, the way they are handled with originality and power constitute the opera a little masterpiece.

THE DAILY MAIL

The Perfect Fool . . . ought to have a sweeping success if musical people can command enough sense of humour and if people of humour have ears open to the splendour of the music. . . . Splendid music, and playfully mocking, allusive, fantastic libretto. . . . And there are numbers of first-rate tunes—for Holst is a prime melodist.

DAILY NEWS

It will appeal strongly to musicians all over the world who are familiar with operatic literature.

DAILY EXPRESS

His rhythmical capacity serves him extremely well in the ballet music, which is, indeed, some of the best that has been written in opera for a long time.

REFEREE

A ballet of such originality and interest, accompanied by such masterly music, that interest was excited and admiration aroused. . . . Musically this ballet is the finest portion of the work. . . . The instrumentation is a marvel of suggestion and humour.

PALL MALL GAZETTE

Holst has provided excellent entertainment in company with some remarkably good music. The latter is rich in the two essentials of tune and rhythm. . . . There are many tunes—the Wizard's "Wooing Song," for example—which are so simple and accessible that one is unconsciously whistling them after a single hearing. . . . There are many gems. The ballet-music, of course, is fairly well known by now, but the "Round" of the three girls fetching water was a charming moment, and the unaccompanied chorus towards the end a piece of real virtuosity.

DAILY CHRONICLE

A brilliant little fantasy. . . . The ballet music is most effective, particularly the exquisite Dance of the Spirit of Water.

BIRMINGHAM POST

Highly diverting in a vein entirely its own. . . . Plain, pure, unbending Holst from beginning to end, the writing masterly in its directness, and the scoring amazingly pointed and suggestive.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS

We may reasonably hope that Mr. Holst's all too short opera will take its place permanently in that small but brilliant constellation of comic-operas on the grand scale of which The Mastersingers and The Marriage of Figaro are the bright particular stars.

MUSICAL NEWS AND HERALD

The Perfect Fool is the finest piece of real musical humour that has appeared for a long time.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD

The Perfect Fool is the best thing Holst has given us. . . . Themes of quite extraordinary beauty, arresting to the ear, and haunting the memory even after a first hearing.

SUNDAY TIMES

Indeed, he has performed a notable feat of alchemy. He has taken of the common objects of opera, grown hoary and wearisome in service, and accomplished, with enharmonic subtlety, their transmutation and combination into something new and significant.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SMALL

	Full Orchestra.	Small Orchestra.	Full Score.	Piano Conductor.	Violin Conductor.	Piano Solo.	Violin and Piano.	Violin 1mo.	Violin 2do.	Viola.	Cello and Basso.	Cello.	Basso.	Piccolo.
AUSTIN, E., Sweet Night	...	2/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	4d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	.
BENDALL, Pas Seul	...	7/4	...	...	...	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
BENNETT, Eventide Melody	...	4/4	4/-	...	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	.
BLAIR, Serenata	...	5/4	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	.
BREWER, Auf Wiedersehen	...	4/4	...	...	8d.	3/-	3/-	8d.	...	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	.
CARSE, Barbara Allen Variations ...	...	6/-	...	2/3	...	...	...	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	...	.
,, Gavotte in G	...	5/4	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, Waltzes, Four ...	...	19/5	...	...	...	4/-	4/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	...	.
,, Hiawatha (Selection from Wedding-Feast) ...	...	23/9	...	2/3	...	...	...	2/3	1/6	1/6	...	1/6	1/6	.
,, §Nero Music (Prelude, 2nd Entr'acte ...	17/-	...	...	3/-	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
,, §Nero Music (Intermezzo	7/4	...	...	8d.	...	2/3	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	.
,, §Nero Music (Finale, 1st Entr'acte ...	18/2	...	...	2/3	...	3/-	3/-	1/6	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	1/
,, §Nero Music (Eastern Dance	11/8	...	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
,, Novelletten, Nos. 1, 2, & 3 ea.	...	3/8	4/-	...	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
,, ,, No. 4	...	6/2	4/-	...	...	...	3/-	1/6	1/6	1/6	...	8d.	8d.	.
COWEN, English Dances, Four ...	...	22/2	...	...	...	4/-	4/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	...	.
,, February (Months, No. 2)...	...	6/4	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	.
,, May (,, ,, 5)...	4/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	8d.	4d.	.
,, June (,, ,, 6)...	4/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	...	4
,, September (,, ,, 9)...	10/-	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
,, December (,, ,,12)...	7/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	.
,, Menuet d'Amour	5/8	...	5/6	...	...	2/3	3/-	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
DAVIES, Solemn Melody (str. & org.)	...	2/4	3/-	...	...	2/3	2/3	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	.
DUNHILL, Chiddingfold Suite ...	...	9/9	7/6	...	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	1/6	1/6	.
ELGAR, Chanson de Matin	...	4/-	4/-	8d.	...	2/3	3/-	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	4d.	4d.	.
,, Chanson de Nuit	...	3/8	4/-	8d.	...	2/3	2/3	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	.
,, Pleading	...	3/8	...	...	4d.	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	.
,, Serenade (Wand of Youth) ...	...	2/4	...	1/6A	...	2/3	3/-	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
,, Canto Popolare	...	6/4	4/6	...	...	3/-	3/-	4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
FLETCHER, Bagatelles (strings only)	...	3/6	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	1/6	...	...	.
,, The Toy Soldiers' March	...	8/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8
,, Valse Lyrique	...	9/6	...	...	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
HAYNES, Westwood Gavotte ...	...	6/4	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
HOLBROOKE, Souvenir de Printemps...	...	4/4	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
IRELAND, Bagatelle	...	7/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
JOHNSON, Elves (Faerie Suite, No. 1)	...	8/-	...	1/6	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
,, Pavane in A...	...	6/8	...	8d.	...	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
KREUZ, Conversation Amoureuse ...	...	6/10	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	1/6	...	...	.
LEMARE, Andantino	...	5/8	...	1/6	...	...	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
,, Chant sans Paroles ...	...	5/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	3/-	4d.	8d.	8d.	...	4d.	4d.	.
,, Menuet Nuptiale	...	4/4	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
MACKENZIE, Benedictus	4/8	...	7/6	...	...	...	3/-	8d.A	A	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
PURCELL, Gordian Knot Untied, 1st and 2nd Suites ... each	...	2/8	4/-	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
,, Suite	...	2/8	1/6	...	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
RAMEAU, Gavotte	6/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
RAWLINSON, Serenade	...	3/8	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
,, Aubade	...	6/-	...	...	8d.	2/3	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
REED, Serenade (Suite Venitienne) ...	...	4/8	...	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	.
ROËCKEL, Graceful Dance	6/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
WADDINGTON, Intermezzo	...	7/4	...	1/6	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
WAREING, Summergold Gavotte ...	7/4	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
WENDT, Air de Ballet...	7/4	...	...	1/6	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
WEST, Intermezzo	...	5/-	...	8d.	...	...	2/3	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
,, Marjorie Gavotte	5/8	...	...	...	...	3/-	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.
,, Maypole Dance	14/-	...	...	2/3	...	3/-	3/-	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	.
WOLSTENHOLME, Allegretto in E♭ ...	6/-	...	...	...	...	2/3	2/3	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	.

N.B.—Parts marked A are printed together. Parts marked B are printed together. Parts marked C are print ORCHESTRAS. SUITABLE FOR CINEMAS, &c.

Oboi.	Clarinetti.	Fagotti.	Corni 1 & 2.	Corni 3 & 4.	Trombe.	Cornetti.	Tromboni 1 and 2	Trombone 3.	Euphonium.	Tuba.	Timpani.	Cassa.	Piatti.	Side Drum.	Triangle.	Tambourine.	Harp.	Solo-Cornet.	Organ.	Harp or Piano.	Bells.
...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	2/3	1/6	1/6	...	1/6	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	2/3	2/3	2/3	...	1/6	...	...	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	1/6	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.A	A	A	A	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.	8d.B	B	4d.	B	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
†8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	8d.A	8d.B	B	A	4d.C	...	8d.	...	...	...	C
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	3/-	1/6	1/6	...	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...		...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	4d.
4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...
...	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...
...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.B	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	B	...	...	...	...	8d.C	C	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	1/6	...
8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	4d.A	A	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	4d.	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	8d.	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	8d.	...	...	8d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	8d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	4d.	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	8d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	4d.	4d.	4d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
4d.	8d.	4d.	8d.	...	...	4d.	...	...	...	...	4d.A	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3 1/6	1/6	1/6	8d.	...	...	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	8d.	8d.A	...	...	...	A	8d.	...	...	...	...	...
8d.	8d.	8d.	8d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...		...	...	...	...	...	...	...

gether. † Oboe has the Melody. X Flute has the Melody. § May be had as a complete Suite.

SONGS
BY ROBERT SCHUMANN
ENGLISH AND GERMAN WORDS.

THIRTY SONGS

Price 4*s*. Cloth, 7*s*.

1. Blondel's song — Blondel's Lied.
2. The walnut tree—Der Nussbaum.
3. Moonlight—Mond Nacht.
4. A holiday on the Rhine—Sonntags am Rhein.
5. The hat of green — Volksliedchen.
6. The joys of home—Ich wand're nicht.
7. Poor Peter—Der arme Peter.
8. A flow'ret thou resemblest—Du bist wie eine Blume.
9. O sunny beam—An den Sonnenschein.
10. A poet's love—Ich grolle nicht.
11. Devotion—Widmung.
12. Wanderer's song — Wanderlied.
13. A spring night — Frühlingsnacht.
14. Since mine eyes beheld him—Seit ich ihn geseh'n.
15. The noblest—Er der Herrlichste.
16. A vision—Ein Traum.
17. One only—Nur Eine!
18. Love—Liebe.
19. In May—Im Mai.
20. The two Grenadiers — Die beiden Grenadiere.
21. Thy lovely face—Dein Angesicht.
22. Beauteous cradle — Schöne Wiege.
23. Emotion—Die Stille.
24. A red, red rose—Rothes Röslein.
25. Deep-treasured in my heart—Intermezzo.
26. A ride in the wood—Waldesgespräch.
27. Evening song—Abendlied.
28. Drinking song—Trinklied.
29. The lotus flower—Die Lotos blume.
30. My cottage—Die Hütte.

SONGS

EDITED, AND IN PART TRANSLATED, BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.
Price, cloth, folio, 16*s*.

OP. 24.

When the morning breaks—Morgens steh' ich auf.
Now hopes and fears—Es treibt mich hin.
Where sunlight thro' branches—Ich wandelte unter den Bäumen.
My darling, oh, list—Lieb' Liebchen, leg's Händchen.
Fair abode of all my sorrows—Schöne Wiege meiner Leiden.
Stay thy oar, thou rugged boatman—Warte, Warte, wilder Schiffmann.
On the Rhine—Berg' und Burgen.
First I felt near broken-hearted—Anfangs wollt ich fast verzagen.
With myrtles and roses—Mit Myrthen und Rosen.

MYRTLES.
OP. 25.

Dedication—Widmung.
The free mind—Freisinn.
The walnut tree—Der Nussbaum.
Some one—Jemand.
To sit alone—Sitz ich allein.
Bump not the flask—Setze mir nicht.
The lotus flower—Die Lotosblume.
Talismans—Talismane.
Suleika's song—Lied der Suleika.
The Highland widow's lament—Die Hochländer Wittwe.
Song of the bride—Lied der Braut.
Chide me not—Lass mich ihm.
My heart 's in the Highlands—Hochländer's Abschied.
Hey baloo—Hochländisches Wiegenlied.
My soul is sad—Mein Herz ist schwer.
Enigma—Räthsel.
Row gently here—Leis' rudern hier.
When thro' the Piazetta—Wenn durch die Piazzetta.
The captain's lady—Hauptmann's Weib.
O how can I be blithe—Weit, weit.
What would'st thou, lonely tear drop?—Was will die einsame Thräne?
No one—Niemand.
Out over the Forth—Im Westen.
Thou'rt like unto a flower—Du bist wie eine Blume.
A message sweet as roses—Aus den östlichen Rosen.
Conclusion—Zum Schluss.

OP. 27.

The passage bird—Sag' an, o lieber Vogel mein.
My love is like the red, red rose—Dem rothen Röslein gleicht mein Lieb.
The Jasmine—Jasminenstrauch.
When thy eye's starry beam—Nur ein lächelnder Blick.

OP. 30.

The rover—Der Knabe mit dem Wunderhorn.
The hidalgo—Der Hidalgo.

MYRTLES.

OP. 25.
Price 2*s*. 6*d*.
(For contents, see above.)

TWELVE SONGS

OP. 35.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.
Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Joy in tempest—Lust der Sturmnacht.
"Love, be thou dead?"—"Stirb, Lieb' und Freud'?"
The joy of wandering—Wanderlust.
The first verdure—Erstes Grün.
Longing for the woodland—Sehnsucht nach der Waldgegend.
On the drinking glass of a departed friend—Au das Trinkglas eines verstorbenen Freundes.
Wandering—Wanderung.
Silent love—Stille Liebe.
Questionings—Frage.
Silent tears—Stille Thränen.
Yea, thou art sore and weary—Wer machte Dich so krank?
Remembered sounds—Alte Laute.

TWELVE SONGS
(LIEDERKREIS)

OP. 39.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.
Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Homeless—In der Fremde.
Intermezzo—Intermezzo.
The Loreley—Waldesgespräch.
Maiden thoughts—Die Stille.
Moonlight—Mondnacht.
The fair, far land—Schöne Fremd.
In a ruin—Auf eine Burg.
Far from home—In der Fremde.
Sadness—Wehmuth.
Twilight—Zwielicht
In the wood—Im Walde.
Night in Spring—Frühlingsnacht.

WOMAN'S LOVE AND LIFE
(FRAUENLIEBE)

OP. 42.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.
Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Since I looked upon him—Seit ich ihn gesehen.
He, of all the best—Er der Herrlichste von Allen.
I cannot, dare not believe it—Ich kann's nicht fassen, nicht glauben.
Thou ring upon my finger—Du Ring an meinem Finger.
Help me, ye sisters—Helft mir, ihr Schwestern.
Friend beloved, thou look'st at me—Süsser Freund, du blickest.
Come to my heart—An meinem Herzen, an meiner Brust.
Now hast thou for the first time hurt me sore—Nun hast du mir den ersten Schmerz gethan.

A POET'S LOVE
(DICHTERLIEBE)

OP. 48.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.
Price 2*s*. 6*d*.

When May shed loveliness around—Im wunderschönen Monat Mai.
Where'er my tears have fallen—Aus meinen Thränen spriessen.
The rose and the lily—Die Rose, Die Lilie.
Ah, sweet, when in thine eyes I look—Wenn ich in deine Augen seh'.
My soul I will steep with longing—Ich will meine Seele tauchen.
Beside the Rhine's sacred waters—Im Rhein im heiligen Strome.
I am not wroth—Ich grolle nicht.
Sweet violets, did ye but know it—Und wüssten's die Blumen.
Hark! flutes and viols are sounding—Das ist ein Flöten und Geigen.
When on mine ear resoundeth—Hör' ich das Liedchen klingen.
A youth once loved a maiden—Ein Jüngling liebt ein Mädchen.
On radiant summer mornings—Am leuchtenden Sommermorgen.
In sleep my tears were flowing—Ich hab' im Traume geweinet.
At midnight—Allnächtlich im Traume.
From legends quaint and olden—Aus alten Märchen winkt es.
My songs so wild and troubled—Die alten bösen Lieder.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS

FIRST SET.

1. *My true love hath my heart ... Sir Philip Sidney
2. Good-night ... ...Shelley
3. Where shall the lover rest ... ... Scott
4. Willow, Willow, Willow ... ... Shakespeare

SECOND SET.

1. O Mistress Mine ... ... Shakespeare
2. Take, O take those lips away ... ... Shakespeare
3. No longer mourn for me ... ... Shakespeare
4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... ... Shakespeare
5. When icicles hang by the wall ... Shakespeare

THIRD SET.

1. *To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... Lovelace
2. If thou would'st ease thine heart ... Beddoes
3. *To Althea, from prison ... ... Lovelace
4. *Why so pale and wan ... ... Suckling
5. Through the ivory gate ... ... Julian Sturgis
6. Of all the torments ... ... William Walsh

FOURTH SET.

1. *Thine eyes still shined for me ... ... Emerson
2. *When lovers meet again ... Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
3. *When we two parted ... ... Byron
4. Weep you no more ... ... Anon.
5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... ... Byron
6. Bright star ... ... Keats

FIFTH SET.

1. *A stray nymph of Dian ... ... Julian Sturgis
2. *Proud Maisie ... ... Scott
3. *Crabbed age and youth ... . Shakespeare
4. Lay a garland on my hearse Beaumont & Fletcher
5. Love and laughter... ... ... Arthur Butler
6. A girl to her glass ... ... Julian Sturgis
7. A Lullaby ... ... E. O. Jones

SIXTH SET.

1. *When comes my Gwen ... ... E. O. Jones
2. *And yet I love her till I die ... ... Anon.
3. *Love is a bable ... ... Anon.
4. *A lover's garland ... ... Alfred P. Graves
5. At the hour the long day ends ... Alfred P. Graves
6. Under the greenwood tree ... ... Shakespeare

SEVENTH SET.

1. On a time the amorous Silvy ... ... Anon.
2. Follow a shadow ... ... Ben Jonson
3. Ye little birds that sit and sing ... Thomas Heywood
4. O never say that I was false of heart ... Shakespeare
5. Julia ... ... Herrick
6. *Sleep ... ... Julian Sturgis

EIGHTH SET.

1. Whence ... ... Julian Sturgis
2. Nightfall in winter ... Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
3. Marian ... ... George Meredith
4. Dirge in woods ... ... George Meredith
5. Looking backward ... ... Julian Sturgis
6. Grapes ... ... Julian Sturgis

NINTH SET.

1. Three aspects ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
2. A fairy town (St. Andrew's) ... Mary E. Coleridge
3. The witches' wood ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
4. Whether I live ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
5. Armida's garden ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
6. *The maiden ... ... Mary E. Coleridge
7. There ... ... Mary E. Coleridge

TENTH SET.

1. My heart is like a singing bird ... Christina Rossetti
2. Gone were but the winter cold ... Allan Cunningham
3. A moment of farewell ... ... Julian Sturgis
4. The child and the twilight Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
5. From a city window ... Langdon Elwyn Mitchell
6. One silent night of late ... ... Herrick

ELEVENTH SET.

1. One golden thread... ... ... Julia Chatterton
2. The spirit of the Spring ... Alfred Perceval Graves
3. What part of dread eternity ... Author unknown
4. The blackbird ... ... Alfred Perceval Graves
5. The faithful lover ... ... Alfred Perceval Graves
6. If I might ride on puissant wing... Julian Sturgis
7. Why art thou slow ... ... Massinger
8. She is my love beyond all thought Alfred P. Graves

TWELFTH SET.

1. When the dew is falling ... ... Julia Chatterton
2. To Blossoms ... ... Herrick
3. Rosaline ... ... Lodge
4. When the sun's great orb... ... ... H. Warner
5. Dream pedlary ... ... Beddoes
6. O World, O Life, O Time ... ...Shelley
7. The sound of hidden music ... Julia Chatterton

* Published separately, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S
PIANOFORTE ALBUMS.

In Numbers, each 1s. 6d., except Nos. 26, 27, and 28; or, Cloth Volumes, each 6s.

VOLUME I.

No. 1.—BACH. Twenty pieces from Petits Préludes, Suites Anglaises. Partita Nos. 1 to 3, &c.
No. 2.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Suites Anglaises, Suites Françaises. Partita Nos. 4 and 5, &c.
No. 3.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Petits Préludes, Concertos, Suites Anglaises, &c.

VOLUME II.

No. 4.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 1 to 7, Sonatas, "Harmonious Blacksmith," &c.
No. 5.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 8 to 12, Gavottes, &c.
No. 6.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 13 to 16, Water Music, &c.

VOLUME III.

No. 7.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Hero's March, Rakoczy March, Bridal March ("Lohengrin"), &c.
No. 8.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Meyerbeer's Coronation March, Cornelius March, Pilgrims' March, &c.
No. 9.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Wedding March, March "Tannhäuser," &c.

VOLUME IV.

No. 10.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Rameau's Gavotte, Zimmermann's Gavotte, Calkin's Minuet, Silas's Bourrée, &c.
No. 11.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Gluck's Gavotte, W. Macfarren's Bourrée, Bach's Bourrée, &c.
No. 12.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including W. Macfarren's 2nd Gavotte, Benedict's Gavotte, Mozart's Minuet, &c.

VOLUME V.

No. 13.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including Marche Hongroise, Scherzo Brillant, &c.
No. 14.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "La Gazelle," "Mazeppa Galop," &c.
No. 15.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "Les Clochettes," "Feu Follet," &c.

No. 16.—SCHWEIZER, OTTO. Eight Scottish Airs (arranged for four hands).

VOLUME VI.

No. 17.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "Murmuring Rivulet," The Pilgrims' Chorus ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 18.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "L'Oisillon," "Le Carillon," "The Evening Star" ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 19.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Ten Pieces, including "Jeu des Ondes," Valse Mélodieuse, Spinning Song, ("Flying Dutchman"), &c.

VOLUME VII.

No. 20.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Five Compositions.
No. 21.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Four Compositions.
No. 22.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Six Compositions.

VOLUME VIII.

No. 23.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.
No. 24.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Eleven Compositions.
No. 25.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.

No. 26.—TOURS, BERTHOLD. Juvenile Album, Eight Characteristic Pieces (Duets), 3s.

VOLUME IX.

Nos. 27 and 28.—MOSCHELES, I. "Domestic Life." Twelve Characteristic Duets, Two Books, each, 3s.

VOLUME X.

No. 29.—KJERULF, HALFDAN, Nine Pieces. Op. 4, Nos. 1 to 3; Op. 12, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 30.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Ten Pieces. Op. 24, Nos. 1 to 4; Op 27, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 28, Nos. 1 to 4.
No. 31.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Op. 28, Nos. 5 and 6; Op. 29; and Twenty Songs arranged.

VOLUME XI.

Nos. 32, 33, and 34. The National Dance Music of Scotland. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Alexander Mackenzie; with additions by his son, A. C. Mackenzie.

VOLUME XII.

No. 35.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Eight Pieces. Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 5; Op. 15, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 36.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Nine Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 6; Op. 23, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 37.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Six Songs. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Giuseppe Buonamici.

No. 38.—ALTSCHUL, RUDOLF. Fifty Hungarian National Songs.

VOLUME XIV.

No. 41.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Twenty-one Pieces. Op. 2, Nos. 1 to 14; Op. 3, Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 6; Op. 6; Op. 15, Nos. 1 and 2.
No. 42—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Seven Pieces. Op. 4. Nos. 1 to 4; Op. 7, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 11.
No. 43.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Ten Pieces. Op. 8; Op. 9, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 10, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 4.

VOLUME XV.

No. 44.—CUI, CÉSAR. Thirteen Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 12; Op. 21, No. 3.
No. 45.—CUI, CÉSAR. Eleven Pieces. Op. 21, No. 4; Op. 22, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 31, No. 2; Op. 39, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 46.—CUI, CÉSAR. Seven Pieces. Op. 22, No. 4; Op. 29, No. 1; Op. 30, No. 1; Op. 35, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 40, Nos. 2 and 4.

VOLUME XVI.

No. 47.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 90.
No. 48.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 142.
No. 49.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Moments Musicals. (Op. 94), and Adagio and Rondo (Op. 145).

VOLUME XVII.

No. 50.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Three Sets of Variations, Andante, and Klavierstück.
No. 51.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Adagio, Allegretto, and March in E major, &c.
No. 52.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Five Klavierstücke and Two Scherzi.

VOLUME XVIII.

No. 53.—HOFMANN, H. "The Trumpeter of Säkkingen" (Op. 52) and Two Valses Caprices (Op. 2).
No. 54.—HOFMANN, H. "Italian Love Tale" (Op. 19) and Five other Pieces.
No. 55.—HOFMANN, H. Fourteen Pieces.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A VALUABLE BOOK FOR TEACHERS AND STUDENTS.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cætera.

WITH NUMEROUS MUSICAL EXAMPLES FROM THE WORKS OF THE GREAT MASTERS.

PRICE, CLOTH GILT, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

E. A. D.

Price, cloth, Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE QUESTIONS (separately),
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the 18th century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

ALFRED MOFFAT.

			s.	d.
No. 1.	SONATA in G major	JAMES LATES	3	0
,, 2.	SONATA in D minor	HENRY ECCLES	3	0
,, 3.	SONATA in B flat major	WILLIAM BABELL	3	0
,, 4.	SONATA in G minor	JOHN STANLEY	3	0
,, 5.	SONATA in A major	JOHN COLLETT	3	0
,, 6.	TRIO-SONATA in E minor	THOMAS AUGUSTINE ARNE	4	6
,, 7.	SONATA in D major	RICHARD JONES	3	0
,, 8.	TRIO-SONATA in D minor	WILLIAM BOYCE	4	6
,, 9.	THREE PIECES	WILLIAM BOYCE	3	0
,, 10.	SONATA in E major	CHARLES MACKLEAN	3	0
,, 11.	SONATA in G minor	WILLIAM CROFT	3	0
,, 12.	SONATA in D minor	JOSEPH GIBBS	3	0
,, 13.	SONATA in D minor	JOHN HUMPHRIES	3	0
,, 14.	SONATA in A minor	THOMAS VINCENT	3	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Rewritten and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price ... Three Shillings.
Paper Boards, 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS, No. 100.

PRONUNCIATION FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings net.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.

No.			No.
1.	Andante	Alfred H. Allen	11.	Allegro. Op. 21	Gustav Merkel
2.	Spring Song	W. H. Bell	12.	Andante. Op. 162	Gustav Merkel
3.	Andante con Moto	G. J. Bennett	13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn	J. T. Pye
4.	Song of Thanksgiving	Josiah Booth	14.	Prelude No. 2	A. Redhead
5.	Church Preludes No. 5	R. E. Bryson	15.	Larghetto and Allegro	J. Varley Roberts
6.	Postlude	H. Elliot Button	16.	Allegretto Pastorale	C. Steggall
7.	Postlude	G. Calkin	17.	Contemplation	John E. West
8.	Prelude	Percy E. Fletcher	18.	Postlude	John E. West
9.	Andante	J. W. Gritton	19.	Moderato Maestoso	Kate Westrop
10.	Allegro Moderato	Kate Loder	20.	Andante Pastorale	W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.			No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso	G. J. Bennett	11.	Andante quasi Allegretto	Gustav Merkel
2.	Church Prelude	R. E. Bryson	12.	Cavatina in G	Ernest Newton
3.	Andante Tranquillo	George Calkin	13.	Epilogue	J. Rheinberger
4.	For Holy Communion	J. Baptiste Calkin	14.	Andante in A	J. Varley Roberts
5.	Postlude	Percy E. Fletcher	15.	Andante in G	C. Steggall
6.	Largo	G. F. Handel	16.	March in G	Henry Smart
7.	Berceuse	Oliver King	17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funèbre")	John E. West
8.	Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2	Kuhlau	18.	Pastoral Melody	John E. West
9.	Allegretto	Kate Loder	19.	Andante	Kate Westrop
10.	Andante in G	G. F. Wesley Martin	20.	Allegretto Grazioso	W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.			No.
1.	Melody	A. Herbert Brewer	11.	Cavatina	Joachim Raff
2.	Maestoso	George Calkin	12.	Monologue No. 5	J. Rheinberger
3.	Ave Maria	Edward T. Chipp	13.	Melody in F	Anton Rubinstein
4.	Interlude	Percy E. Fletcher	14.	Dreaming	R. Schumann
5.	Intermezzo	Alan Gray	15.	The Poet Speaks	R. Schumann
6.	Postlude	Alex. Guilmant	16.	Soft Voluntary	B. Luard-Selby
7.	Sursum Corda	John Ireland	17.	Menuetto	Berthold Tours
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	18.	Aspiration	John E. West
9.	Andante	Gustav Merkel	19.	Sketch in C minor	John E. West
10.	Duettino in G	Ernest Newton	20.	Andante con Moto	W. G. Wood

SET IV.

No.			No.
1.	Romance	W. H. Bell	11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor)	W. Sterndale Bennett	12.	Trio	J. Rheinberger
3.	Canzonetta	César Cui	13.	Short Postlude	B. Luard-Selby
4.	Interlude	Th. Dubois	14.	Andante Maestoso	B. Luard-Selby
5.	Elegy	Edward Elgar	15.	Prelude	Henry Smart
6.	Allegretto	Niels W. Gade	16.	Fughetta	Henry Smart
7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita")	Ch. Gounod	17.	Choral Song	S. S. Wesley
8.	Intermezzo No. 3	Alan Gray	18.	Lamentation	John E. West
9.	Chanson de Joie	R. G. Hailing	19.	Allegretto Pastorale	John E. West
10.	Hymnus	A. C. Mackenzie	20.	Andante	W. G. Wood

SET V.

No.			No.
1.	Chorale Prelude—Erbarm' Dich mein, O Herre Gott	J. S. Bach	10.	Prelude	J. Rheinberger
2.	Allegro Maestoso e Vivace	W. T. Best	11.	Monologue No. 9	J. Rheinberger
3.	Meditation	Hugh Blair	12.	Chanson Orientale	Schumann
4.	Cantilène Religieuse	Th. Dubois	13.	Four Sketches, No. 1	Schumann
5.	Intermezzo No. 1	Alan Gray	14.	Larghetto from Sonata in D	B. Luard-Selby
6.	Then round about the Starry Throne ("Samson")	G. F. Handel	15.	Andante	E. Silas
7.	Lieder Ohne Worte, No. 4	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	16.	Six Short and Easy Pieces, No. 6	Henry Smart
8.	Moderato	Gustav Merkel	17.	Intermezzo founded on an Irish Air	C. V. Stanford
9.	Ave Verum	Mozart	18.	Andante in G	S. S. Wesley
			19.	Lament	John E. West
			20.	Canzona	W. Wolstenholme

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FOUR SHILLINGS EACH SET. CLOTH, SIX SHILLINGS EACH SET

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S LATEST SONG SUCCESSES

GUY D'HARDELOT.
"The Quiet Country Places"
"The Curtain Falls"
"Wings"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.
"The Fairy Laundry"
"The Dance on the Lawn"
"Among the Willows"

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE.
"The Barque of Dreams"
"The Lazy Seas of Devon"

RICHARD KOUNTZ.
"Sleepy Hollow Tune"

RAYMOND LOUGHBOROUGH.
"A Retreat"

GEORGE H. GARTLAN.
"The Lilac Tree"

CECIL BAUMER.
"Spring, the Fiddler"

HERMANN LÖHR.
"Oh, for the Wings of a Swallow"
"Immortality"
"Summer"
"What a Wonderful World it would be"

HAYDN WOOD.
"I Look into Your Garden"
"The Valley of Roses"
"Devotion"
"A Brown Bird Singing"

ERIC COATES.
"The Little Green Balcony"
"Summer Afternoon"
"I Heard You Singing"

MOLLY CAREW.
"Canterbury Bells"
"Somewhere in this Summer Night"
"The Piper of Love"

H. LYALL PHILLIPS.
"If all the World"

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.
NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

MINIATURE SCORES OF WORKS
BY IGOR STRAVINSKY.

"BERCEUSES DU CHAT" - - - 1s. 6d. net.
"HISTOIRE DU SOLDAT" - - - 4s. od. net.
"PRIBAOUTKI" - - - - - - 2s. od. net.
"RAGTIME" - - - - - - 2s. od. net.
"OISEAU DE FEU" SUITE - - - 6s. od. net.

However much critics may differ in their view of Stravinsky they are all agreed that he is one of the greatest masters of orchestration of all times and that he has a truly marvellous gift of writing for each instrument according to its character. Nowhere are these qualities more apparent than in the composer's more recent works, where he uses small orchestral combinations akin to chamber music. Students who wish to know how the wonderful transparency of Stravinsky's scoring is achieved, and how his extraordinary instrumental effects are contrived, will surely welcome the publication of the above miniature scores at very reasonable prices.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Gt. Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London: Printed by NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Saturday, August 1, 1925.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

No.
614	Absence	H. Goetz	3d.
217	* Do. (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	3d.
181	* Do.	,,	2d.
67	Adieu love, adieu	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
312	Adieu, my native shore	Pearsall	3d.
943	Adieu, sweet Amaryllis	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1227	Do. ...	C. Macpherson	4d.
390	Adieu to the woods	Egerton	4d.
658	Advice to lovers ...	P. W. Pilcher	3d.
1398	*After many a dusty mile	E. Elgar	4d.
913	After the battle	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	3d.
674	Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ...		4d.
1375	Ah! what is love ...	W. McNaught	4d.
515	Ah! woe is me (6 V.)	H. Lahee	6d.
648	Airley Beacon	C. V. Stanford	3d.
568	Airs of Summer ...	J. L. Roeckel	3d.
17	All among the barley	E. Stirling	3d.
971	*All for my true love	H. D. Wetton	4d.
81	All is not gold that shineth bright in snow (5 V.)	W. J. Westbrook	4d.
394	*All is still ...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
802	All Souls' Day	J. Rheinberger	4d.
59	All ye woods and trees and bow'rs	J. L. Hatton	2d.
83	* Do. (5 V.)	H. Lahee	2d.
940	Do. ...	H. W. Wareing	4d.
1037	*Allan Water	arr. H. E. Button	3d.
478	*Allen-a-Dale ...	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
1020	* Do.	J. B. McEwen	4d.
334	Already snow has fallen	R. Franz	2d.
113	Alton Locke's Song	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1011	*Amaryllis I did woo	J. E. West	3d.
1322	*American National Songs (Three)		2d.
972	Amintor's well-a-day	J. E. West	4d.
1364	An address to the nightingale	W. W. Pearson	4d.
175	An Autumn song ...	C. Pinsuti	4d.
20	An emigrant's song	W. Macfarren	3d.
1074	*An Empire song	A. C. Mackenzie	4d.
1053	An end will I bring	Schubert	4d.
1387	*An old Song resung	H. B. Gardiner	6d.
485	And then no more ...	R. Raff	3d.
1103	*Angelic hunter, The	arr. J. Brahms	4d.
1091	Angel's call, The	I. I. Viotta	2d.
960	*Angel's greeting, The	J. Brahms	4d.
1167	*Angelus (Tuscany)	E. Elgar	6d.
1340	*Anglers, The	W. W. Pearson	3d.
30	Angler's Trysting-tree, The	C. W. Corfe	4d.
1039	*Annie Laurie	arr. H. E. Button	3d.
108	Annie Lee	J. Barnby	2d.
182	April showers ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
218	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
1318	*Arethusa, The ...	W. Shield	4d.
137	Arise, sweet love ...	H. Leslie	2d.
97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	F. Berger	4d.
520	Around the maypole tripping	J. L. Hatton	2d.
859	*Arranmore Boat Song	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	6d.
457	*Arrow and the song, The	W. Hay	4d.
973	As Amoret with Phillis sat	John E. West	3d.
1054	As dewdrops at morn	Schubert	4d.
525	As I saw fair Clora	F. Corder	4d.
146	As it fell upon a day ...	S. Reay	4d.
619	As the ripples flow	E. A. Sydenham	3d.
1052	As the watcher longs	Schubert	4d.
900	As through the land	J. Pullein	3d.
796	*As torrents in summer	E. Elgar	3d.
1180	As when the sun renews his strength (Madrigal)	C. E. Miller	4d.
1257	*Ash Grove, The	arr. Dunhill	4d.
1105	At Andernach in Rhineland	Abt	4d.
393	At first the mountain rill	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
981	At her fair hands ...	J. Elliott	3d.
788	Do. ...	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
335	At parting	R. Franz	2d.
358	*At the coming of the Spring	J. L. Hatton	4d.
195	Auburn	,,	4d.
582	*Auld Lang Syne	arr. E. Land	2d.
71	Autolycus' Song	C. A. Macirone	2d.
1006	* Do. ...	C. Lee Williams	4d.
158	Autumn	W. Macfarren	4d
274	Do. (T.T.B.B.)	,,	4d.
353	Do. ...	A. C. Mackenzie	2d.
1162	Autumn fields, The	N. W. Gade	4d.
464	Autumn is come again (5 V.)	F. Corder	4d.
403	Autumn song ...	S. Reay	4d.
683	Do. ...	J. Rheinberger	3d.
484	Ave Maria	J. Raff	4d.
241	* Do.	H. Smart	2d.
968	*Awake, awake ...	G. Bantock	4d.
76	*Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold	H. Leslie	2d.
25	Awake the starry midnight hour	Mendelssohn	3d.
923	*Away to the woodlands	H. W. Warner	4d.
978	*Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
225	Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	4d.
193	Bait, The (Come live with me)	J. L. Hatton	2d.
996	*Ballad, A (8 V.) ...	T. Wendt	4d.
1016	Ballade of Midsummer	,,	4d.
1017	Ballade of Spring	,,	6d.
1044	*Battle of the Baltic, The	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
861	*Battle song, A	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	4d.
578	Do. ...	E. A. Sydenham	4d.
1334	*Beacon, The ...	A. Carse	4d.
689	Beauty, arise ...	K. J. Pye	4d.
841	Before me careless lying (5 V.)	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
1238	*Beleaguered, The	A. S. Sullivan	3d.
56	*Belfry Tower, The	J. L. Hatton	2d.
1311	*Belgian National song	F. Campenhout	2d.
572	Bells across the snow	Ch. Gounod	4d.
432	*Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The	W. Knyvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart	6d.
1271	*Ben Bowlegs (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	4d.
984	Bendemeer's Stream	J. Pointer	4d.
1216	Beside the river ...	A. Jensen	3d.
793	Better music ne'er was known	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
184	*Beware	J. L. Hatton	2d.
220	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
111	*Bird of the Wilderness	J. Barnby	4d.
196	Do.	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1157	Birds are singing, The	Hans Sitt	3d.
798	Birthday serenade, A	G. J. Elvey	4d.
1308	Birthright, The ...	E. Elgar	4d.
300	*Bishop of Mentz, The	Pearsall	2d.
1107	*Black Monk, The (Welsh folk-song)	arr. R. Boughton	4d.
55	*Blow, blow thou winter wind	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1254	Blow, breeze, from the North	G. Elvey	4d.
1369	Blow, western wind	Pearson	4d.
661	*Blue-bottle's fate, The (humorous)	A. H. Ashworth	4d.
544	Blue-eyed lassie, The	F. Brandeis	3d.
933	*Blwyddyn Bywyd	D. Protheroe	4d.
187	Blythe is the Bird	J. L. Hatton	3d.
399	*Boat Song ...	H. Leslie	2d.
357	* Do.	E. Prout	6d.
1088	Do.	F. Schubert	3d.
385	Boat, The	R. Schumann	4d.
3	Boating Song ...	E. G. Monk	3d.
521	*Boatman's Good-night, The	F. Schira	2d.
545	*Bonnie Bell	A. C. Mackenzie	3d.
1310	*Boy, The (humorous)	Brewer	4d.
63	*Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
99	Breathe soft, ye winds	J. B. Calkin	2d.
1307	* Do.	W. Paxton	2d.
878	Bridal Song ...	H. Leslie	6d.
639	Bright be thy dreams	Oliver King	3d.
402	*Bright-hair'd morn, The	S. Reay	4d.
584	Bright Moon ...	John E. West	3d.
1222	*Bring me a golden pen	F. H. Cowen	4d.
601	Broken Flower, The	Oliver King	3d.
447	Brook, The	C. G. Reissiger	4d.
1015	*Brownies, The	Moellendorff	4d.
1416	Bushes and Briars ...	(arr.)	3d.
223	Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	3d.
743	*Butterfly, The	J. Blumenthal	6d.
1095	*By a gentle river laid	John E. West	4d.
1002	*By the waters of Babylon	P. Cornelius	3d.
1141	By woodland and wayside	E. Franz	3d.
1272	Call John (humorous)	arr. W. W. Pearson	4d.
1122	Calm is the lake	F. Abt	4d
359	Calm night	J. L. Hatton	4d
380	Calm of the sea, The	H. Hiles	6d
911	*Capture of Cremona, The	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	4d
314	Caput apri defero...	...Pearsall	4d
178	*Caravan, The ...	C. Pinsuti	2d.
1251	*Cargoes ...	H. B. Gardiner	4d.
1273	Carrion Crow, The (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	4d
607	Cavalier, The ...	C. Goodall	4d.
529	Cavalry song	C. A. Macirone	4d.
635	Cephalus and Procris	A. W. Batson	4d.
482	Chafer's Wedding, A (humorous)	Lewandowski	8d
1087	Chapel, The ...	C. Kreutzer	4d
427	*Charge of the Light Brigade, The	E. Hecht	6d.
85	*Charm me asleep (6 V.)	H. Leslie	4d.
906	Do. ...	J. B. McEwen	4d.
847	*Chase, The ...	E. German	4d.
757	Cherry ripe ...	A. H. Brewer	3d
583	Do.	arr. E. Land	2d
1255	* Do.	W. G. Ross	3d
731	Do. (6 V.)	S. P. Waddington	4d.
1212	Cheshire cheese, The	arr. J. C. Bridge	4d.
734	Chi la Gagliarda ...	B. Donato	4d.
315	Chieftain to the Highland bound, A	Pearsall	3d.
466	* Do.	O. Prescott	6d.
94	Childhood's melody	F. Berger	2d.
101	Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.)	J. B. Calkin	6d.
1145	Chloe, that dear bewitching prude	H. Willan	3d.
1147	*Chorus of Empire	C. A. E. Harriss	4d.
66	*Christmas...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1109	*Christmas greeting, A	E. Elgar	8d.
314	Christmas song, A ...	Pearsall	4d.
967	Do.	M. Prætorius	3d.
845	Close to my heart...	W. Davies	4d.
677	*Clouds, The	J. Rheinberger	4d.
823	*Come again, sweet days	J. Dowland	3d.
726	*Come away ...	E. German	4d.
873	* Do.	H. Parker	6d.
1169	Come away, come away, death	arr. Arne	3d.
36	Do. (5 V.)	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
51	* Do. (5 V.)	,,	4d.
58	Come celebrate the May	Hatton	2d
668	Come, fairies, trip it ...	F. Iliffe	4d
102	Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)	J. B. Calkin	4d.
118	*Come follow me	A. Zimmermann	2d.
1143	Come forth, the summer's murmur hear ...	E. Franz	3d.
14	Come, heavy sleep	J. Dowland	3d.
745	Come if you dare... ...	Purcell	6d.
1210	Come, lasses and lads	arr. J. C. Bridge	4d.
899	Come let me take thee	J. Pullein	3d.
317	Come let us be merry	Pearsall	2d.
507	*Come live with me	W. S. Bennett	2d.
360	Do. ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
193	Do. (The Bait) ...	,,	2d.
497	Come, May, with all thy flowers	J. L. Gregory	3d.
1052	Come, O come, dearest, come	Schubert	4d.
671	Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.)		3d.
1214	Come out across the heather	A. Jensen	4d.
791	*Come, pretty wag, and sing	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
38	Come sleep... ...	J. Benedict	4d.
1060	Do. ...	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1110	* Do. ...	R. H. Walthew	2d.
945	Do. ...	A. G. Wathall	4d.
1007	*Come to me, gentle sleep	Cowen	4d.
701	Do. ...	H. W. Schartau	4d.
713	Come, tuneful friends (humorous)	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1032	Come with me, fairest	J. Brahms	4d.
615	Comfort	H. Goetz	3d.
999	*Comfort in tears...	P. Cornelius	6d.
1422	Coming through the Craigs o' Kyle	A. Rowley	4d.
1182	*Comrades' song of hope, The	arr. A. Adam	3d.
383	Confidence (8 V.) ...	R. Schumann	4d.

MADE IN ENGLAND

No. 1423 NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK Price (4*d.*)
(SECOND SERIES)

HOYDA, HOYDA, JOLLY RUTTERKIN

FOUR-PART SONG

WORDS BY WILLIAM CORNISH, JUNR. (early 16th century)

MUSIC BY

ALAN PALMER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

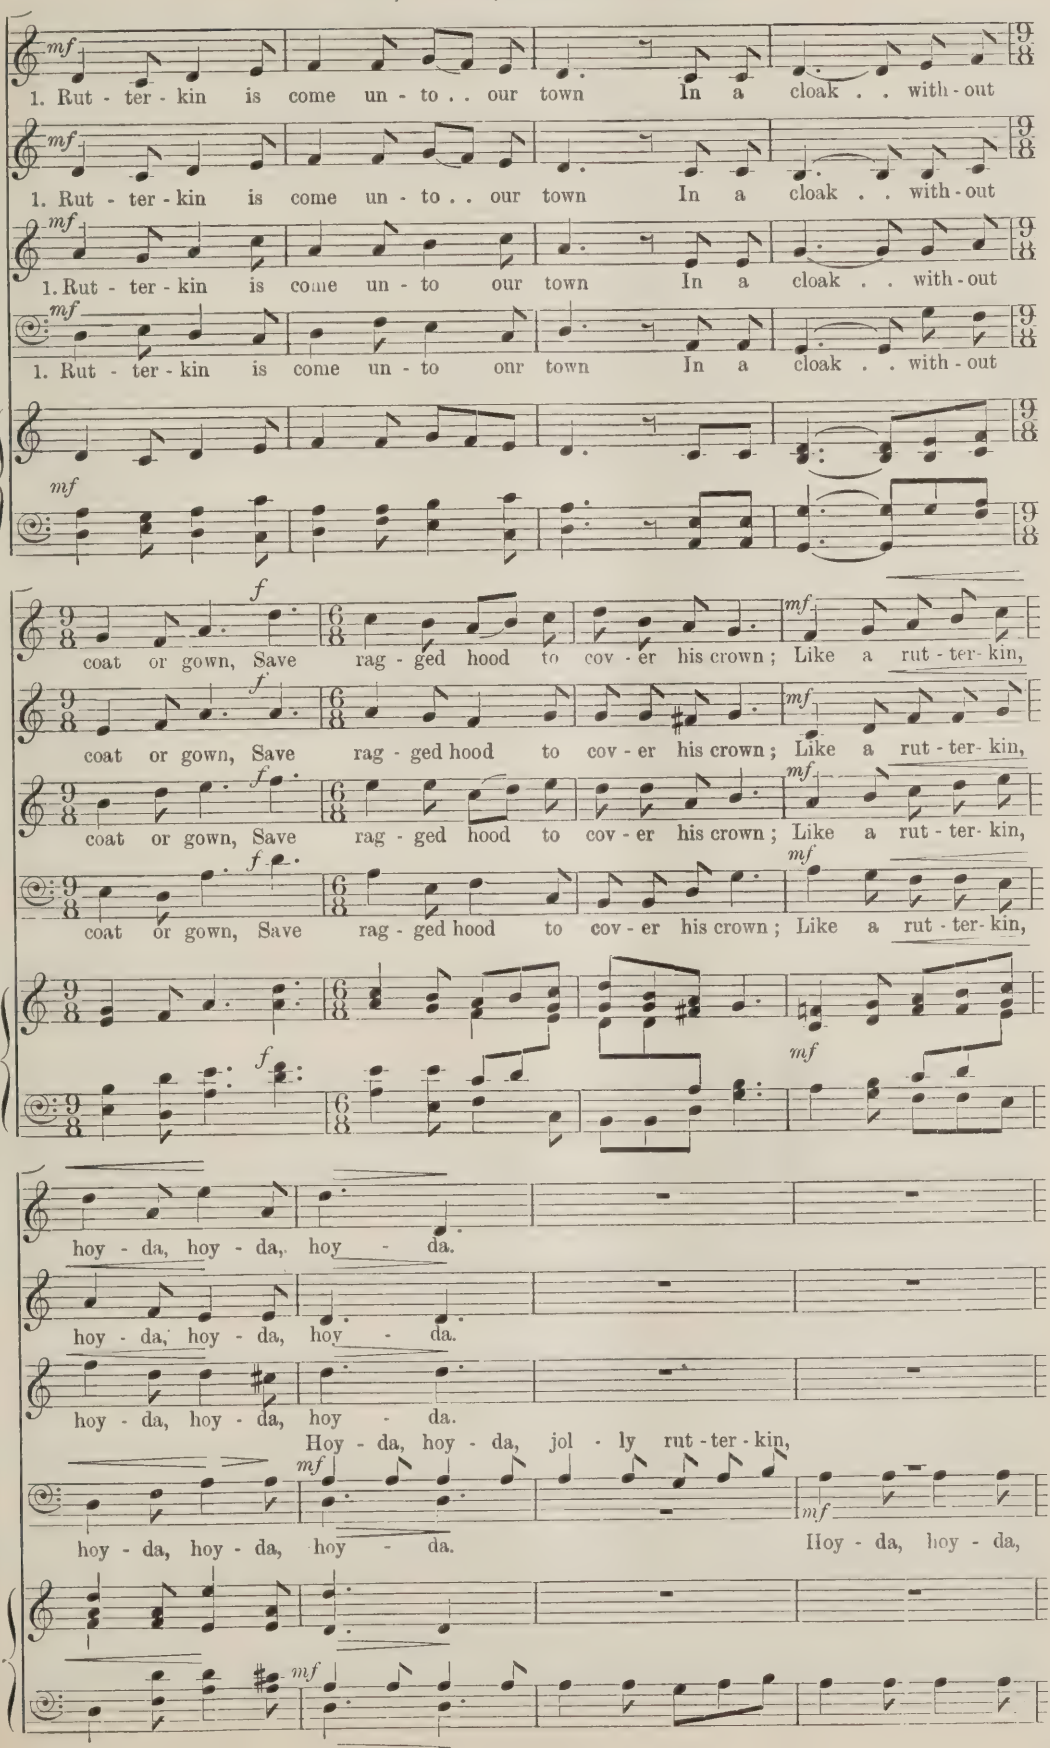
HOYDA, HOYDA, JOLLY RUTTERKIN



1. Rut - ter - kin is come un - to . . our town In a cloak . . with - out
1. Rut - ter - kin is come un - to . . our town In a cloak . . with - out
1. Rut - ter - kin is come un - to our town In a cloak . . with - out
1. Rut - ter - kin is come un - to our town In a cloak . . with - out coat or gown, Save rag - ged hood to cov - er his crown; Like a rut - ter - kin, coat or gown, Save rag - ged hood to cov - er his crown; Like a rut - ter - kin, coat or gown, Save rag - ged hood to cov - er his crown; Like a rut - ter - kin, coat or gown, Save rag - ged hood to cov - er his crown; Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
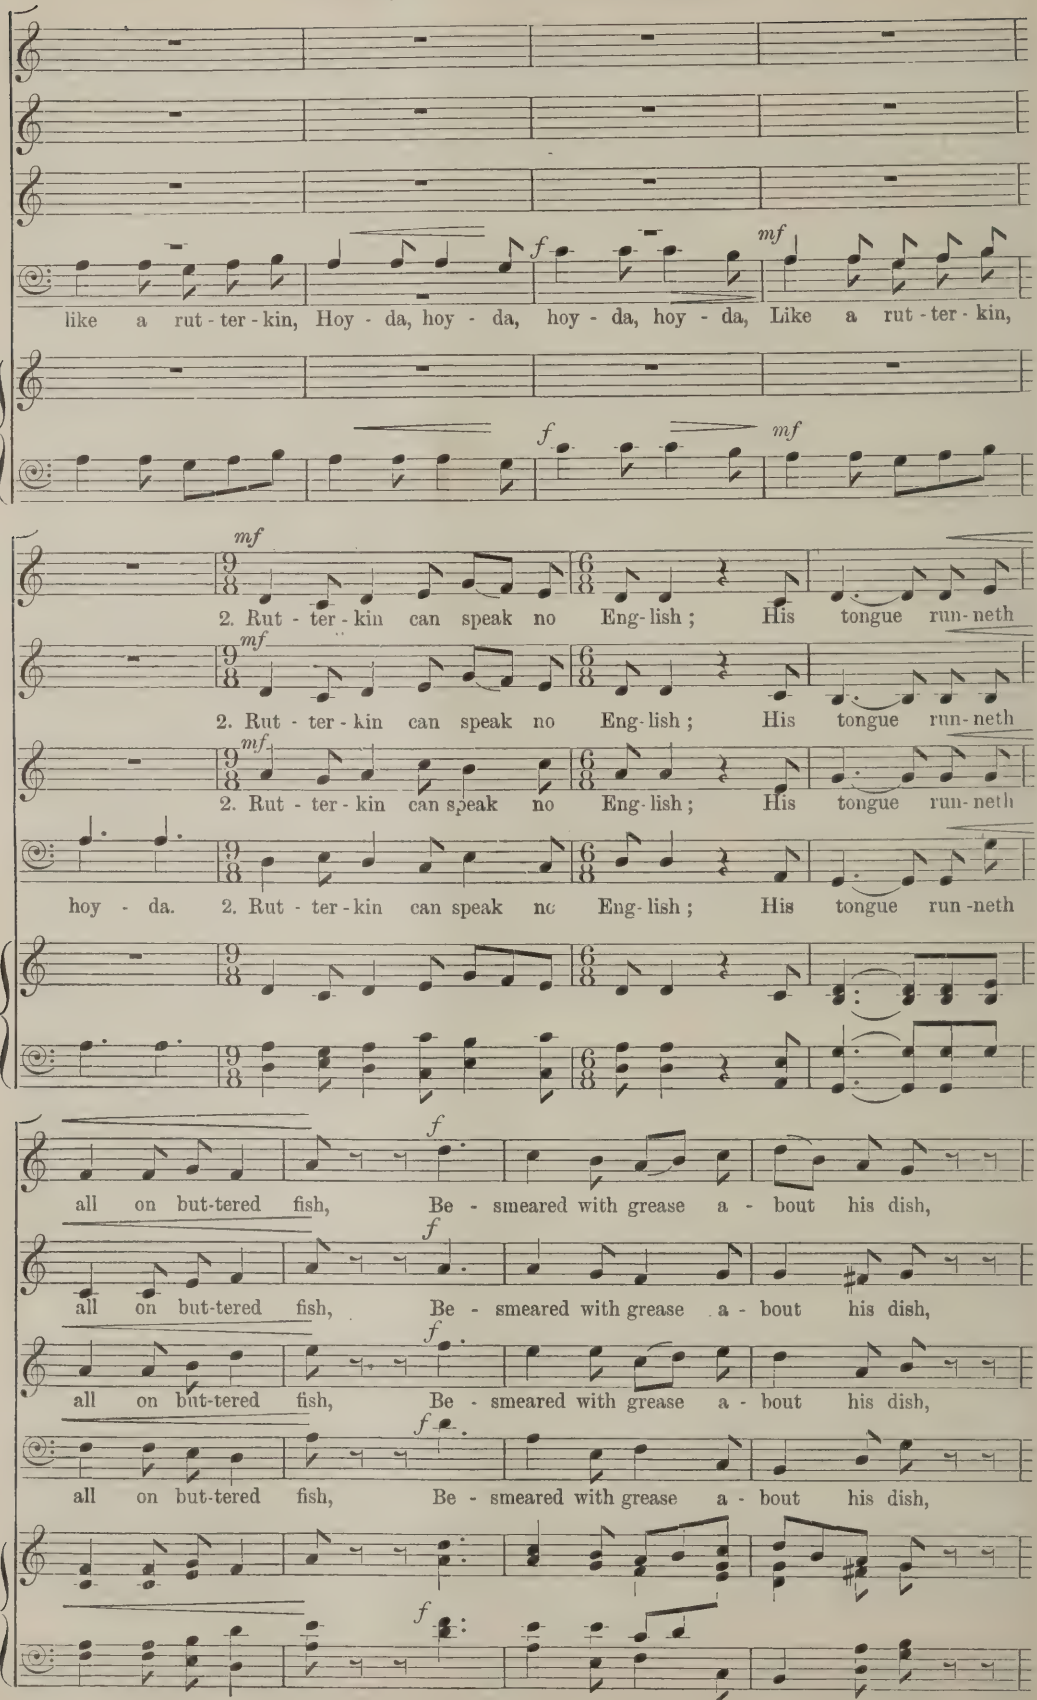
Hoy - da, hoy - da, jol - ly rut - ter - kin,
hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
Hoy - da, hoy - da,



like a rut - ter - kin, Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, Like a rut - ter - kin,
2. Rut - ter - kin can speak no Eng - lish; His tongue run - neth
2. Rut - ter - kin can speak no Eng - lish; His tongue run - neth
2. Rut - ter - kin can speak no Eng - lish; His tongue run - neth hoy - da. 2. Rut - ter - kin can speak no Eng - lish; His tongue run - neth all on but-tered fish, Be - smeared with grease a - bout his dish, all on but-tered fish, Be - smeared with grease a - bout his dish,
all on but-tered fish, Be - smeared with grease a - bout his dish, all on but-tered fish, Be - smeared with grease a - bout his dish,

mf
Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
Hoy - da, hoy - da, jol - ly rut - ter - kin,
Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
Hoy - da, hoy - da, like a rut - ter - kin, Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da,
f
3. Rut - ter - kin shall bring you all good -
3. Rut - ter - kin shall bring you all . . good -
3. Rut - ter - kin shall bring you all . . good - marcato
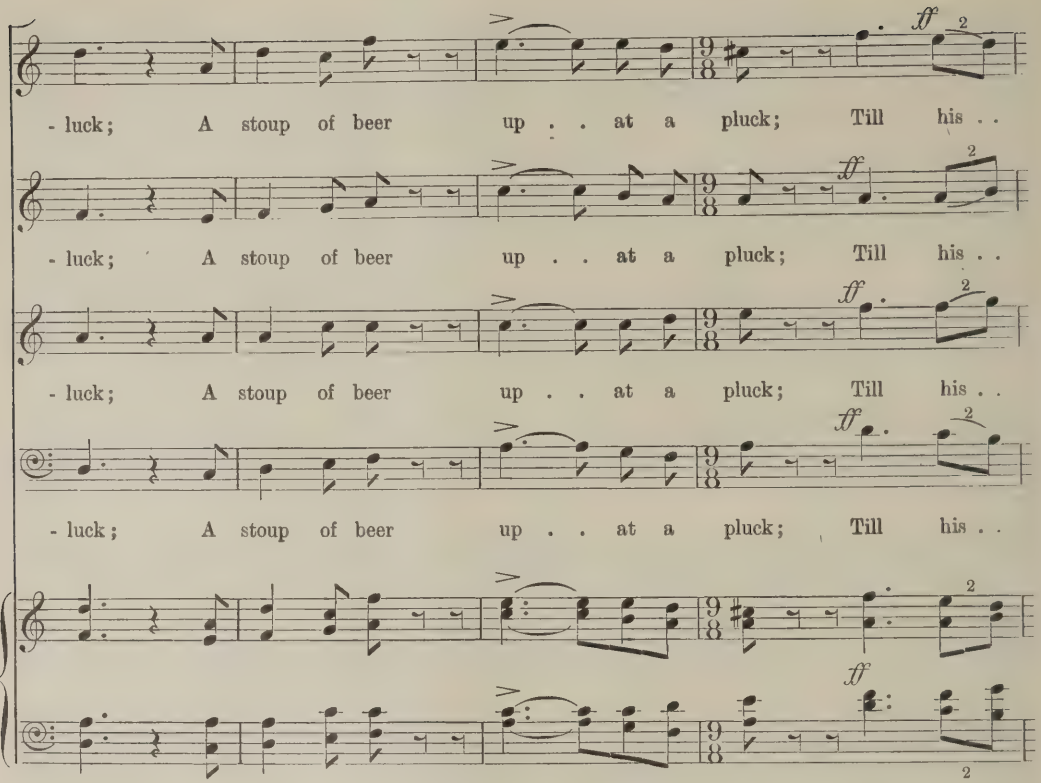
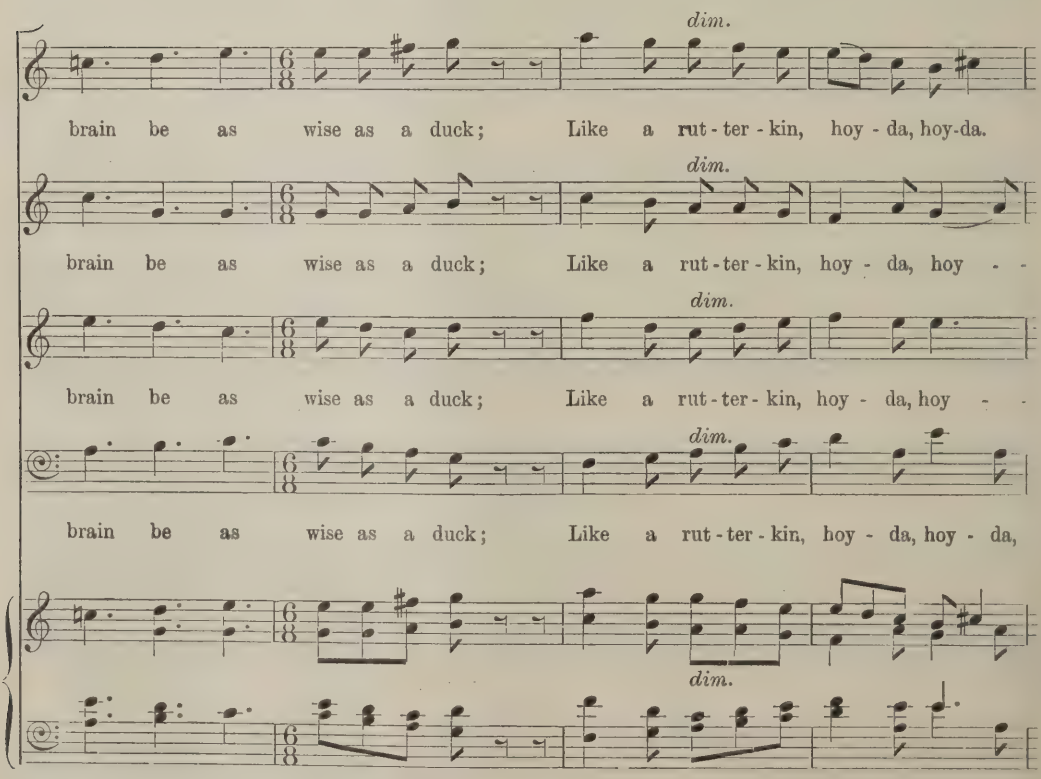
Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da. 3. Rut - ter - kin shall bring you all . . good -



- luck; A stoup of beer up . . at a pluck; Till his . .
- luck; A stoup of beer up . . at a pluck; Till his . .
- luck; A stoup of beer up . . at a pluck; Till his . .
- luck; A stoup of beer up . . at a pluck; Till his . .
ff
2



brain be as wise as a duck; Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy-da.
brain be as wise as a duck; Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - - brain be as wise as a duck; Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - - brain be as wise as a duck; Like a rut - ter - kin, hoy - da, hoy - da, dim.

mp
morendo
Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da; Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, mp
morendo
- da. Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da; Hoy - da, hoy - da, mp
morendo
- da. Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da; Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da.
mf
morendo
p senza rall.
pp
ff ten.
hoy. Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da; Hoy!
senza rall.
pp
ff ten.
hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy. Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da; Hoy!
p senza rall.
pp
ff ten.
hoy - da, hoy. Hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da, hoy - da; Hoy!
p senza rall.
pp
ff ten.
hoy - da, hoy. Hoy - da, hoy; Hoy!
ten.
p senza rall.
pp
ff
ten.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

No.
1062	*On Himalay ...	G. Bantock	4d.
1402	*On May morning	E. Boyce	4d.
450	On the water ...	R. De Cuvry	4d.
752	Onaway	G. Pringle	4d.
480	*Once a maiden ...	F. Champneys	4d.
133	One morning sweet in May	Leslie	4d.
171	Only thou	H. Smart	2d.
1393	*Orpheus with his lute (4-pt.)	E. German	4d.
1394	Do. (8-pt.)	,,	6d.
12	Do. (S.S.T.B.)	G. A. Macfarren	6d.
49	* Do.	,,	2d.
1225	*Our island home	E. Faning	4d.
1	Our native land ...	G. Reichardt	3d.
1226	*Our sailor king ...	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1234	Out of a silence (8 V.)	G. Rathbone	8d
1129	Out of the darkness (8 V.)	G. Bantock	8d.
1190	*Out upon it	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
1414	Over hill, over dale	Ed.Bunnett	4d.
209	Do.	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1368	Over the mountain side	Pearson	4d.
1059	*Owls, The ...	...E. Elgar	6d.
1354	Oyster dredgers, The	Pearson	3d.
481	Pack, clouds, away	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1266	Do. ...	W. W. Starmer	4d.
123	Do. ...	A. Zimmermann	4d.
202	Parting and meeting	J. L. Hatton	3d.
154	Parting gleams	A. S. Sullivan	2d.
675	Pastime with good company (A.T.B.) ...	King Henry VIII.	4d.
1379	Peace ...	C. Lee Williams	3d.
1315	Peace (A fable) (humorous)	J. F. Bridge	6d.
546	Peace be around thee	R. F. Ellicott	4d.
659	Peace, come away	C. V. Stanford	3d.
808	Peace of God, The	Rheinberger	3d.
61	Pearl divers, The	J. L. Hatton	6d.
22	Pedlar's song ...	J. Douland	3d.
1285	Perfection (6 V.)	A. C. Mackenzie	8d.
612	*Persevere... ...	H. Goetz	3d.
1201	*Phillida flouts me	Williams	4d.
588	Phillis	...W. Hay	4d.
655	*Phœbe ...	...C. V. Stanford	4d.
104	Phœbus	J. Barnby	2d.
1114	Phyllis is my only joy ...	West	4d.
275	Pibroch of Donuil Dhu (T.T.B.B.)	W. Macfarren	4d.
1339	Do. ...	W. W. Pearson	4d.
1420	Pilgrim Fathers, The	P. E. Fletcher	4d.
74	*Pilgrims, The ...	H. Leslie	2d.
927	*Poet's complaint, The ...	West	4d.
329	Praise of good wine, The (T.T.B.B.)	Pearsall	3d.
706	*Praised be Diana	C. V. Stanford	3d.
964	*Prayer to Mary, A	J. Brahms	3d.
536	Present, The, or The bag of the bee ...	...C. C. Moseley	4d.
1115	Pride of youth, The	John E. West	4d.
136	Primrose, The ...	H. Leslie	2d.
1010	* Do. ...	...John E. West	3d.
1133	Prithee, why?	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
997	Do. (6 V.) ...	J. Stainer	4d.
1073	Promise	... J. Lyon	4d.
1344	Promised land, The	M. B. Foster	4d.
1115	Proud Maisie is in the wood	John E. West	4d.
170	Psalm of life, A ...	H. Smart	2d.
1229	*Puck is King ...	... F. Idle	4d.
313	*Purple glow the forest mountains	Pearsall	3d.
446	Queen and huntress	J. Booth	6d.
244	Do.	H. Smart	2d.
1264	Do. ...	W. W. Starmer	3d.
473	Do.	B. Tours	4d.
700	Queen of fresh flowers	King Hall	4d.
1022	Queen of May, The (6 V.)	J. Stainer	4d.
1199	*Qui vive ...	A. C. Mackenzie	4d.
542	Radiant sister of the day	Ellicott	6d.
882	Rainbow, The ...	H. Leslie	4d.
150	*Rainy day, The	A. S. Sullivan	2d.
561	Rattlin', roaring, Willie	Schumann	3d.
559	Recruit, The ...	,,	3d.
403	Red o'er the forest	S. Reay	4d.
183	*Red, red rose ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
219	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	4d.
738	Do.	J. V. Roberts	3d
512	Do.	Schumann	3d.
1175	*Red sun is sinking, The	Leslie	6d.
308	Red wine flows, The (T.T.B.B.)	Pearsall	3d.
1260	Remembrance ...	A. Robins	4d.
371	Reproach, The ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
696	Resignation ...	L. Spohr	4d.
1172	Rest (12 V.)	J. W. G. Hathaway	6d.
589	Do.	R. Mähllig	3d.
1124	Rest, dearest, rest	F. Kücken	4d.
445	Rest hath come	F. A. Marshall	3d.
774	*Rest thee, my little one T. Facer		4d.
598	*Resting	F. H. Cowen	4d.
879	Resurgam	H. Leslie	6d.
806	Rhapsody ...	J. Rheinberger	4d.
807	Rhineland ...	,,	4d.
460	*Rhine-raft song, The	C. Pinsuti	4d.
618	Ring the joybells	E. A. Sydenham	4d.
518	Rise, fair goddess of the dawn	H. Smart	2d.
95	Rise, rise, for the day is passing	F. Berger	4d.
205	Rivals, The ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1042	*River floweth strong, my love, The	R. Rogers	6d.
291	River spirit's song, The (A.T.T.B.)	Pearsall	4d.
1370	River, The ...	W. W. Pearson	4d.
62	Robin Goodfellow	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
1327	*Rolling down to Rio	E. German	6d.
389	Rose and the soul, The	S. Egerton	2d.
555	Rose in October, The	W. Robinson	3d.
876	Rose of the garden, A	H. Leslie	6d.
860	Roses, ah! how fair ye be (6 V.)	H. Keeton	6d.
204	*Roses, The ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
540	*Rosy dawn, The (8 V.)...	Lloyd	6d.
1406	Rough wind that moanest loud	John Pointer	3d.
552	Rover's joy, The	F. Abt	3d.
599	*Rowing homewards	F. H. Cowen	4d.
833	Rule, Britannia	arr. V. Novello	4d.
1332	* Do. (in G) ...	arr. Arne	3d.
480	*Rustic coquettes	F. Champneys	4d.
1270	Ryghte merrie geste, A (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	6d.
1090	Sabbath call, The	C. Kreutzer	2d.
657	Sad hearts	A. H. Brewer	4d.
185	*Sailor's song, The	J. L. Hatton	2d.
222	* Do. (A.T.T.B.)...	,,	4d.
804	St. Mary's chapel	J. Rheinberger	3d.
1071	Saint Raphael ...	arr. J. Brahms	4d.
993	*Sands o' Dee, The	Oliver King	6d.
112	* Do. ...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
830	Saw ye not the pallid angels	Mendelssohn	4d.
1296	*Say, what shall we dance	F. H. Cowen	6d.
1076	*Sea drift (8 V.)	Coleridge-Taylor	8d.
503	*Sea hath its pearls, The	C. Pinsuti	2d.
775	*Sea hath many a thousand sands, The	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
48	*Sea King, The ...	H. Smart	2d.
272	Sea song, A (T.T.B.B.)	W. Macfarren	4d.
448	Secret, The	C. G. Reissiger	4d.
302	See how smoothly glides our bark	Pearsall	3d
212	See the rooks are homeward flying	J. L. Hatton	4d.
411	*See where with rapid bound (6 V.)	L. Marenzio	4d.
522	Serenade (6 V.) ...	J. Brahms	3d.
1063	* Do. (8 V.) ...	H. Brian	8d.
1301	* Do.	...E. Elgar	6d.
595	* Do. (humorous) ...	Haydn	4d.
629	Do. ...	C. A. Macirone	3d.
25	Do.	Mendelssohn	3d
1368	Do. ...	W. W. Pearson	4d.
502	* Do.	C. Pinsuti	2d.
740	Shadows of the evening hours, The	J. Blumenthal	4d.
593	Shall I compare thee	J. H. Parry	4d.
712	Shall I tell you whom I love	A. Thomson	4d.
421	Do.	S. S. Wesley	4d.
751	Shall I wasting in despair	Elvey	3d.
235	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1261	*She is not fair to outward view	F. Idle	4d.
1094	Sheep shearing, The	arr. C. J. Sharp	4d.
709	*Shepherd Doron's Jig, The	C. V. Stanford	3d.
280	*Shepherds all and maidens fair	W. Macfarren	2d.
844	* Do.	P. Pitt	3d.
712	Shepherd's choice, The	A. Thomson	4d.
720	Shepherd's elegy, The ...	,,	4d.
239	*Shepherd's farewell, The	Smart	2d.
409	Shepherd's pipes, The (5 V.)	L. Marenzio	4d
21	Shepherd's song, The	T. Brewer	4d.
1014	Do. ...	H. W. Wareing	4d.
730	*Shepherd's waking, The	Faning	4d.
990	She 's up and gone	J. Holbrooke	4d.
414	Shoot, false love, I care not (5 V.)	T. Morley	4d.
309	* Do.	... Pearsall	2d.
276	Shortest and longest (T.T.B.B.)	W. Macfarren	4d.
1297	*Shower, The ...	...E. Elgar	6d
124	*Sigh no more, ladies	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
1380	Do. ...	J. A. Sowerbutts	4d.
489	Silent happiness ...	... J. Raff	3d.
746	*Silent land, The...	E. Faning	8d.
1355	* Do.	A. R. Gaul	4d.
669	* Do.	John E. West	4d.
818	Do.	H. R. White	4d.
797	*Silent, O Moyle	arr. J. Seymour	3d
461	*Silent tide, The ...	C. Pinsuti	2d,
573	Simple flowers	F. Abt	3d.
765	*Since thou, O fondest	Parry	3d.
1285	Sinfonia domestica choralis (Perfection) (8 V.) (humorous)	A. C. Mackenzie	8d.
854	Sing a song of sixpence	Horsley	6d
117	Sing heigh ho	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
647	* Do. ...	C. V. Stanford	3d.
306	Sing we and chaunt it (8 V.)	Pearsall	3d
307	* Do. (4 V.)	,,	3d.
870	*Singers, The	A. C. Mackenzie	6d
1321	*Sir Eglamore (Old English)	arr. H. B. Gardiner	4d.
950	*Sir Harold the hunter ...	West	6d.
68	*Sir Knight, Sir Knight, oh whither away	C. A. Macirone	2d.
929	*Sir Patrick Spens (8 V.)	Pearsall	6d.
333	* Do. (10 V.)... ...	,,	6d.
1160	Sir Spring doth ride	N. W. Gade	4d.
1372	Skaters, The	W. W. Pearson	4d.
111	*Skylark, The ...	J. Barnby	2d.
1060	Sleep ...	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1110	* Do. ...	R. H. Walthew	2d.
539	Sleep, darling baby	R. Mähllig	4d.
1215	*Sleep, my little one	J. Brahms	2d.
395	*Sleep, the bird is in its nest (5 V.)	J. Barnby	4d.
267	* Do.	W. Macfarren	4d.
1240	*Sleeping	E. German	4d.
467	*Slow, slow, fresh fount (5 V.)	T. A. Walmisley	4d.
477	Slumber on, baby dear	Oliver King	4d.
1411	Sly thief ...	...M. Cavendish	2d.
939	Smith, The... ...	R. Schumann	3d.
1149	*Snow, The ...	...E. Elgar	8d.
490	Snowdrops, The ...	... J. Raff	3d.
1275	Snow-white doe, The (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	6d.
897	*So saith my fair (6 V.)	Marenzio	4d.
702	So sweet a kiss ...	G. Sampson	4d.
735	Soft, soft wind ...	J. R. Dear	3d.
646	* Do. ...	C. V. Stanford	3d.
194	*Softly fall the shades of evening	J. L. Hatton	4d.
837	Softly, softly blow, ye breezes	G. Elvey	4d.
419	Do.	...E. Silas	3d.
1338	Soldier, rest	W. W. Pearson	4d.
1294	* Do.	D. Stephen	4d.
1078	Solemnly, mournfully	J. W. Elliott	4d.
470	Do. ...	... Oliver King	3d.
262	* Do. ...	W. Macfarren	4d.
142	* Do.	H. Smart	2d.
623	Song and summer	A. H. Brewer	4d.
248	*Song for the seasons, A	H. Smart	4d.
1200	*Song of love's coming, A	A. C. Mackenzie	4d.
725	Song of night ...	Mendelssohn	3d.
1230	*Song of Proserpine	S. Coleridge-Taylor	3d.
925	Song of summer	A. Moellendorff	4d.
433	*Song of the Battle-eve ...	Stewart	4d.
877	*Song of the flax-spinners	H. Leslie	2d.
297	Song of the Frank companies, The	Pearsall	4d.
1405	*Song of the gale ...	M. B Foster	4d.
207	Song of the gipsy maiden, The	J. L. Hatton	2d.
1314	*Song of the grey seas ...	Fletcher	8d.
1006	*Song of the pedlar	C. Lee Williams	4d.

THEMATIC LIST OF ORGAN PIECES

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

DIFFICULT

FANTASIA

Lento John E. West

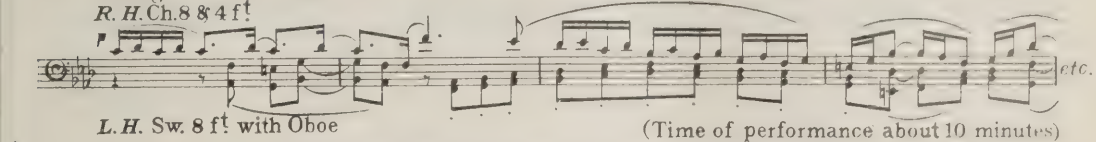
2nd Subject

Andante con moto ♩ = 76

3rd Subject

Allegretto scherzando

R.H. Ch. 8 8 4 f.t.



L.H. Sw. 8 f.t. with Oboe

(Time of performance about 10 minutes)

Copyright, 1900, by Novello & Company, Limited

Recital Series, Edited by Lemare, No 19. Price 3/6

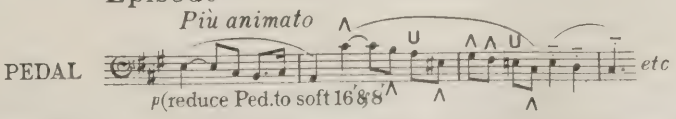
DIFFICULT

EPILOGUE

Maestoso. about ♩ = 84 Harvey Grace

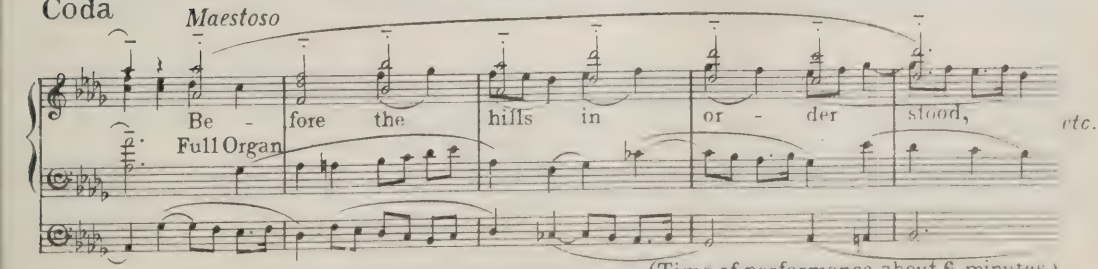
Episode

Più animato



Coda

Maestoso



(Time of performance about 6 minutes)

Copyright, 1914, by Novello & Company, Limited

Recital Series, Edited by Lemare, No 46. Price 3/-

MODERATELY DIFFICULT

SEVEN CHORAL PRELUDES

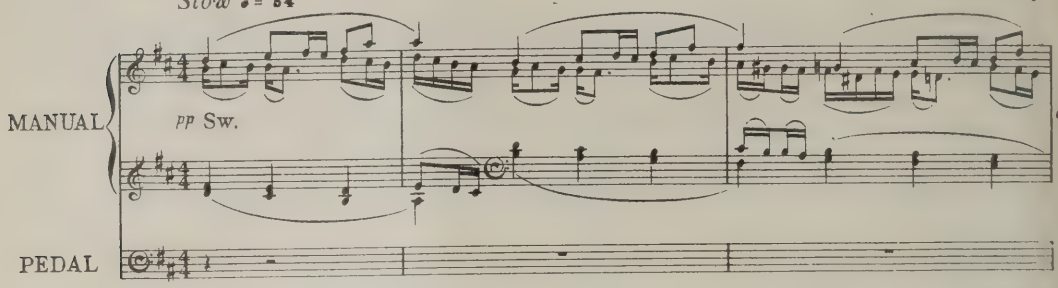
1st Set

No. 7. "Christe, Redemptor omnium"

"Jesu, the very thought is sweet"

C. H. H. Parry

Slow ♩ = 54



Melody, 1st line

(Time of performance about 3 minutes)

Copyright, 1912, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No. 1. Price 5/6 the Set

MODERATELY DIFFICULT

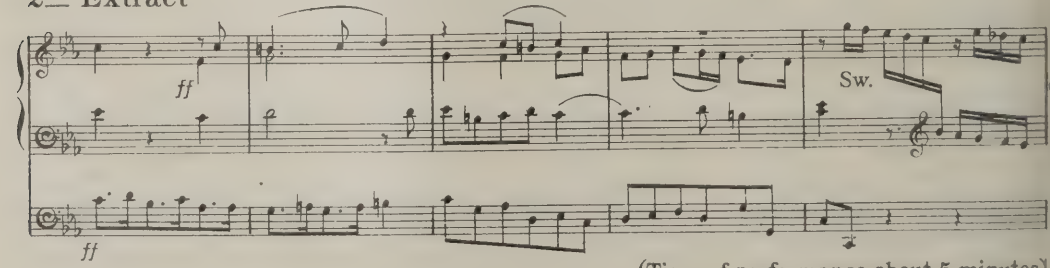
CHACONNE

(Edited by John E. West)

Dietrich Buxtehude

Maestoso ♩ = 72

2nd Extract



(Time of performance about 5 minutes)

Copyright, 1903, by Novello & Company, Limited

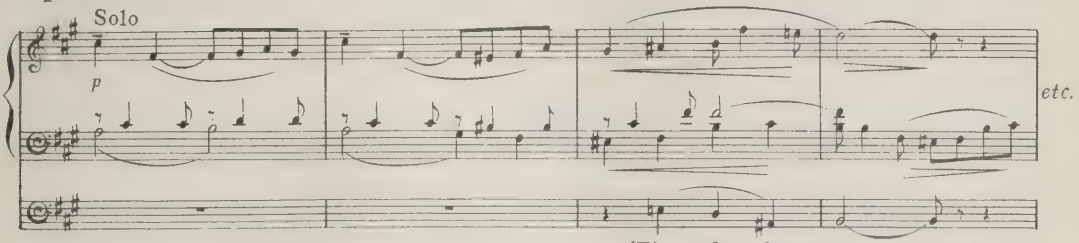
Original Compositions for the Organ No. 309. Price 2/3

MODERATELY EASY

INTERMEZZO

Hugh Blair

Episode



(Time of performance about 5 minutes)

Copyright, 1920, by Novello & Company, Limited

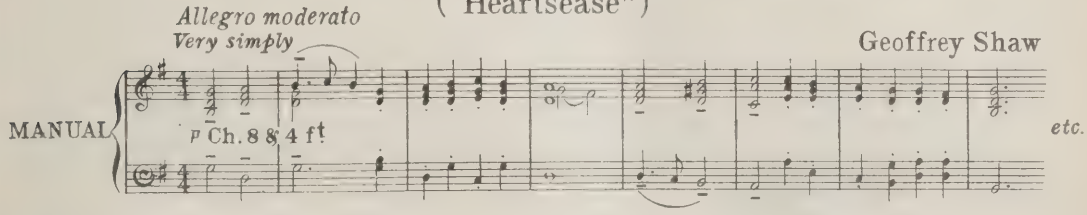
Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No 62. Price 1/6

MODERATELY EASY

VARIATIONS ON AN OLD ENGLISH MELODY

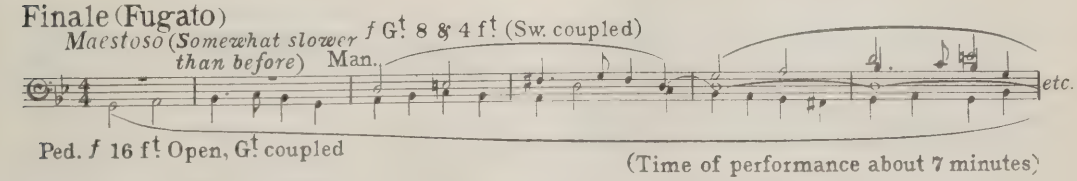
("Heartsease")

Geoffrey Shaw



Var. 3

Finale (Fugato)



(Time of performance about 7 minutes)

Copyright, 1924, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) No 101. Price 2/-

EASY

TWELVE SHORT and EASY PIECES

Nº 10.

Evening Prayer

Andante solennelle Henry Smart

Episode

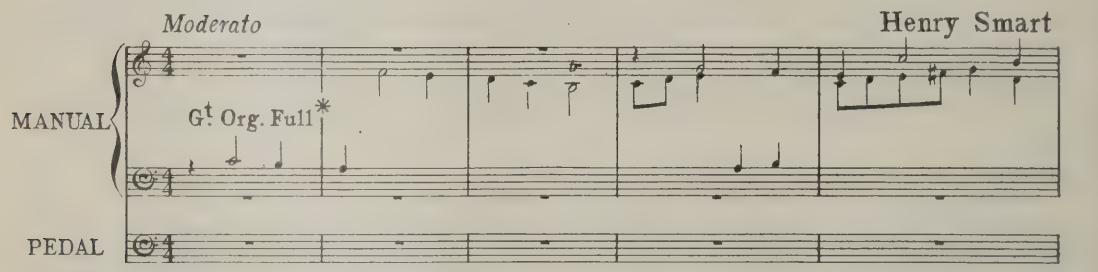
(Time of performance about 4 minutes)

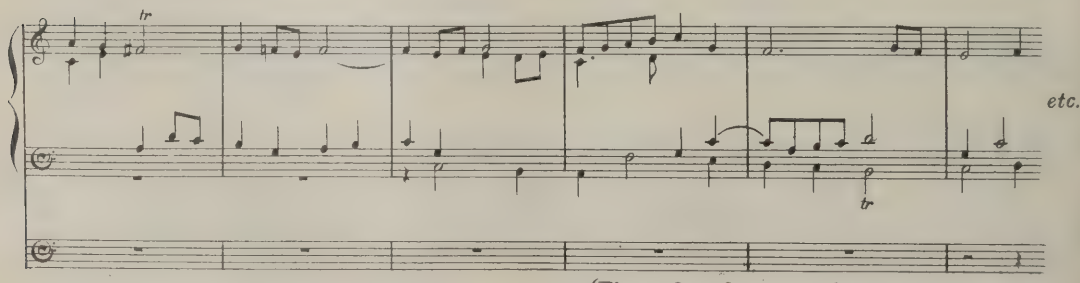
EASY

Nº 12.

Fughetta

Moderato Henry Smart





(Time of performance from 2 to 3 minutes)

* This is the printed indication, but the registering is open to considerably more variety.

Original Compositions for the Organ by Henry Smart Nº 13. (Four Pieces) Price 3/6

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 991.—Vol. 66
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

SEPTEMBER 1 1925

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
General Conductor: MR. H. L. BALFOUR, MUS. BAC.

(Season 1925—1926.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES OF GOOD QUALITY, and must be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM will begin on Monday, September 21st.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Thursday, September 17th.

SPECIAL COURSES for the TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS and also for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS, the latter to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, have been arranged. A Junior Department is now open.

First Fortnightly Concert, Saturday, October 10, at 3 p.m.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING. HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., MUS. DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, ESQ., D.Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, ESQ., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in September, December, and April. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE.
Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The Principal has great pleasure in announcing that he has secured the services of the well-known Solo Pianist and Professor of the Pianoforte,

MR. ROBERT GREGORY,

who will open a NEW CLASS.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Since taking up his residence anew, in this, his native city, he has appeared in Manchester alone ten times in the course of three years with entirely different programmes.

Mr. Gregory may be consulted at the School by appointment.

All communications should be addressed to The Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Aria in F, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, p. 112; Augener, p. 1178; Peters, Vol. 9, No. 8, page 34.)

Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Op. 18, César Franck. No. 3 of Six Pièces d'Orgue. (Durand.)

Bridal March and Finale, "The Birds," C. H. H. Parry. Arranged by W. G. Alcock. Organ Arrangements edited by John E. West. No. 14. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1925.

The Choir-Training Certificate Examination will begin on November 4th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, October 5th. Application for Membership (or re-election) must be made on a proposal form to be obtained on application. This form must be duly filled up and returned to the Registrar, with the Membership Subscription, not later than Monday, October 5th.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College.

Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d.* each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. Claud Biggs.

New Professor of Singing, Miss Marguerite Swale.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1924-1925.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20): WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11): SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
SESSION 1924-25.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 8 to November 1, December 1 to March 7, and March 9 to June 5.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.
Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

THE SOUTH WESTERN COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Principal:
ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L.Mus.T.C.L.
296 298, BALHAM HIGH ROAD, LONDON, S.W.17.
Telephone: BATTERSEA 916.

LARGE STAFF of WELL-KNOWN PROFESSORS.

SPECIALISTS prepare for the Diplomas of F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., and A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, and Organ).

PRACTICAL WORK. Single Lessons if desired.

PAPER WORK. Private or Correspondence Lessons.

MANY RECENT SUCCESSES.

Address, The Secretary.

Battersea Polytechnic, London, S.W.11.
Principal: ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.
Head of Music Department: H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus. D., F.R.C.O.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, AND COUNTERPOINT.
UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC, L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. and R.C.M.
Class and Private Lessons in MUSICAL APPRECIATION and AURAL TRAINING, SOLO- and SIGHT-SINGING, PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN and VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO and DOUBLE-BASS.
CHORAL SOCIETY. ORCHESTRA AND ORCHESTRAL CLASS.
LESSONS ON CONCERT ORGAN (Reconstructed and Modernized).
PREPARATION FOR R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.
SPECIAL CLASSES FOR TEACHERS (Recognised by the L.C.C.).

Next Session begins Wednesday, September 16.
Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.
FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1925: WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, Mus. B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS,
6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT PADDINGTON, W.2.
Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.
TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.
20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal ... ... WARD COWDERY.
Acting Principal ... ... DAVID GODELL.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art for both Professional and Amateur. Latent talent successfully developed. Public appearances arranged. Students' Concerts monthly. Auditions free.
Particulars from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

LECTURE-RECITALS.
MR. A. M. HENDERSON
(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.),
PIANIST AND LECTURER
(Pupil of Cortôt, Pugno, Scharwenka, and Widor)

Organist to the University of Glasgow. One of His Majesty's Examiners in Music.

MR. A. M. HENDERSON specialises in PIANOFORTE LECTURE-RECITALS with Illustrative Programmes.

Also, assisted by MRS. A. M. HENDERSON, as Singer.

Prospectus and terms on application.

67, ANN STREET, GLASGOW, W.2.

CHURCHMEN'S CHORAL UNION.

The Committee will be glad if any Choirmaster who desires to hold office as a Ruri-Decanal, or Section Conductor, will make an application by letter for an appointment either in London, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, Liverpool, to meet one of the Divisional Conductors. A stamped envelope should be enclosed for reply.

Organists holding Church appointments in or near London, are invited to attend one of three Special Meetings, which will be held by kind permission of the Rector, in St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street, E.C. (near Ludgate Circus) at 4 p.m., on September 7, 14, 18.

For all particulars apply by letter to—

B. FULLER, Assistant-Secretary,
Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.1.

Leeds Triennial Musical Festival

OCTOBER 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, 1925.

CONDUCTORS:
MR. ALBERT COATES and SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., D.Mus.
CHORUS MASTER: DR. A. C. TYSOE.
FESTIVAL ORGANIST: MR. H. PERCY RICHARDSON.
CHORUS PIANIST: MR. NORMAN STRAFFORD.

PRINCIPALS:
MISS FLORENCE AUSTRAL, MISS DOROTHY SILK,
MISS ELSIE SUDDABY, MISS MARGARET BALFOUR,
MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL.
MR. WALTER HYDE, MR. WALTER WIDDOP, MR. RAYMOND HARTLEY, MR. STEUART WILSON, MR. NORMAN ALLIN, MR. ROBERT RADFORD,
MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

SOLO PIANIST ... ... MISS MYRA HESS.
SOLO VIOLONCELLO ... MADAME GUILHERMINA SUGGIA.

THE LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Chorus of 300 Voices chosen from singers in Leeds and the West Riding of the County of York.

Applications for all classes of seats should be made as early as possible.

For further detailed particulars see programme, which can be had free on application to the Chief Music Sellers, or to
CHARLES F. HAIGH, FESTIVAL OFFICES, TOWN HALL, LEEDS.

CARMARTHEN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

SEPTEMBER 24th and 25th, 1925.

President ... THE LORD BISHOP OF ST. DAVID'S.

St. Peter's, Carmarthen:

THURSDAY, 2.30.—"HYMN OF PRAISE," ETC.
" 7 p.m.—"ELIJAH."
FRIDAY, 8 p.m.—ORCHESTRAL CONCERT.

Conductor ... J. CHARLES WILLIAMS, A.R.C.M.

For programmes (1s.), tickets, &c., apply, COLBY EVANS, Carmarthen.

SOUTHEND MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

NOVEMBER 5th to 14th, 1925.

OPEN GOLD MEDAL CLASSES
(Amateurs and Professionals).

SINGING.
PIANOFORTE PLAYING.
VIOLIN PLAYING.
ELOCUTION.

ALSO OPEN CLASSES.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION.
DANCING (SWORD).

Send stamp for SYLLABUS to Hon. Secretary,
HORACE BAYLISS,
63, Alexandra Road, Southend-on-Sea, Essex.

HALIFAX
COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

VICTORIA HALL,
Friday and Saturday,
NOVEMBER 27th and 28th, 1925.

SYLLABUS now ready. Price 3*d*. Post free, 4*d*.
Obtainable at Music Dealers, or,
J. E. HOYLE, Hon. Sec., 14A, Crossley Street, Halifax.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2*s*. 6*d*. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MENTAL - HEARING

AN UNSOLICITED TESTIMONIAL.

11*th June*, 1925.

"DEAR MR. WATSON,

"I thank you for the remainder of the Exercises in Mental Hearing.

"The Course has been most useful to me, and I feel very grateful to you for your kind assistance.

"My Exercises in Counterpoint and Harmony are now written without hesitation. I can carry a Canto Fermo in my mind with the greatest ease, at the same time as I write the Counterpoint. What a pleasure it is! I find my sense of pitch quite accurate too.

"May I refer to you if I have any musical difficulties?

"Yours sincerely,
"_____."

Particulars of Correspondence Course of seven lessons from

WALTER H. WATSON, F.R.C.O.,
GORDON COTTAGE, ELGIN.

REFRESHER LESSONS

AND

CONSULTATIONS FOR PIANISTS.

THERE are times when every pianist, Amateur and Professional, feels that a short course of REFRESHER LESSONS personally conducted by a SPECIALIST in modern pianoforte teaching would be of inestimable value, giving new life and inspiration to their work.

The "GILLETT" method of WEIGHT TOUCH, ITS PRINCIPLES and APPLICATION will give you

JUST THE HELP YOU NEED.

This method can be successfully acquired by means of a course of

TWELVE CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS WITH FREE POSTAL CONSULTATIONS.

Every pianist — Amateur, Professional, Student and Teacher, will find this course full of valuable ideas which cannot be obtained through any other source.

PERSONAL LESSONS AND CONSULTATIONS DAILY.

For further particulars and testimonials, write:

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
Pianoforte School,
11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

YOU

CAN

GET

TO THE

TOP

ONE FEE

for the

WHOLE

SERIES.

LABOR OMNIA VINCIT.

Final Mus. Bac.

Exercise.

1st Mus. Bac.

Matric.

F.R.C.O.

A.R.C.O.

Special Concessions If you have passed A.R.C.O. or F.R.C.O.

F.R.C.O. and Mus. Bac.:

What would they be worth to YOU?

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

MATRIC. - - - - - 125

JULY, 1925 - - - - - 6

ALL AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

1ST M.B. - MARCH, 1925 - 50%

of the ENTIRE PASS LIST.

F.T.C.L.

A Student of the M.C.C. passes L. Mus. T.C.L. and L.T.C.L., and gains the F.T.C.L.

—LESS than 2 YEARS—

"Up to the present, less than two years' coaching with you has obtained for me:

A.R.C.O. (Paper Work) 1st attempt.

F.R.C.O. ,, ,, 2nd ,,

MATRIC. (Durham) - 1st ,,

"I hope the 1st Mus. Bac. will be also a 'first go.'"

A.R.C.O. 23

F.R.C.O. 8

A.R.C.M. 11

L.R.A.M. 15

A.Mus.T.C.L.

Art of Teaching 85%
Counterpoint - 94%
Rudiments - - 89%

A.R.C.M.

XIII.

Musical Appreciation.

April, 1925.

Entries - - 2
SUCCESSES 2

— FREE —

GUIDE TO MATRIC., MUS. BAC., ETC.

STATE EXAM. INTERESTED IN.

Single Subjects.

HARMONY.
COUNTERPOINT.
COMPOSITION.
FORM.
ORCHESTRATION.
ETC.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

IF YOU CAN PLAY WITH MUSIC YOU CAN PLAY WITHOUT.

Thousands of promising musicians have failed to achieve the success they deserved through their inability to trust their memory.

If you can play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ at all from the music, I guarantee by the

MASTER-METHOD
OF MEMORY-PLAYING

to teach you in a short correspondence course to play your instrument from memory with ease, certainty, and accuracy. Your memory need no longer be a handicap to your progress.

My booklet, which is sent free and post free, deals with the fascinating subject of memorising music, and tells you how in a remarkably short time you can master this dreaded weakness. Send a post card to-day, stating which instrument you play.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

Candidates for these examinations cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard" System, to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

"One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."
"Worth twenty times the fee charged."
"I have passed my examination with honours."
"The technical rules are alone worth the fee."
"I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."
"The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."
"The effect sometimes seems supernatural."
"To me it has been a veritable godsend."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

SPECIAL LANTERN LECTURE
Entitled "From Brain to Keyboard," at Æolian Hall,
BY MACDONALD SMITH,
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 8th, at 3 p.m. Tickets 2*s.* 4*d.*

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in my System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

SIGHT READING.

POSTAL LESSONS based on Mr. Denham's system, as enunciated in his book, "Mastery of the Keyboard." CECIL PALMER.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX LESSONS ... THREE GUINEAS.
Personal Lessons if desired, 32, Wigmore Street, W.1.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical. . . . Every piano player, and especially the player whose sight-reading is weak, will benefit from a study of the book."

Musical Times: "The idea is so simple and practical that we wonder it has not been dealt with systematically long ago. All keyboard players will benefit from this thorough little work."

Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint, and deals with it in clear and informant fashion. It is somewhat difficult to point to any one chapter as more interesting than any other, for each is full of valuable hints and suggestions. Cannot fail to be of service to the earnest seeker after improvement in pianoforte playing."

East Anglian Daily Times: "The Author sets forth his argument in convincing fashion, and he furnishes various musical illustrations in establishing his case. The mode of presentation is skilful, and pianoforte players and students generally would be well advised to study the work."

Teachers' World: ". . . . The method advocated is very ingenious. The rules laid down should be of real benefit to pianists."

Musical Opinion: "To the thinking student the book can be a great help."

Sheffield Daily Telegraph: "Those in particular who are studying without the help of a teacher may well find in the plan put forward in this book some assistance."

Bookman: "Players of varying ability, no matter what their age, should find this book helpful."

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., 41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

For Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

THIS MONTH.

1. Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc., London, Dublin, and Durham.
   Numerous Successes.
2. R.C.O. and T.C.L. Courses for January Exams.
   Numerous Successes.
3. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
   Full Preparation begins for next December, and Easter, 1926.
   Numerous Successes.

"SUCCESS IS THE GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS."

These Postal Courses enable you to study at home, in your own time, and at your own convenience. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for diplomas and degrees.

PERSONAL LESSONS in BRISTOL and LONDON.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

BY ARRANGEMENT WITH THE
BOGUE-LABERGE CONCERT MANAGEMENT
OF NEW YORK.

THE FAMOUS AMERICAN ORGANIST

CHARLES COURBOIN

(Formerly Organist of Antwerp Cathedral),

ON HIS GREAT EUROPEAN TOUR

WILL VISIT ENGLAND

OCTOBER—NOVEMBER, 1925.

Sole Agent for Great Britain and Ireland—
MR. JOHN VERNE,
BRATHAY HOUSE,
9, THORNTON ROAD, LONDON, S.W.12.

1925 TOUR.

MARCEL DUPRÉ

ORGAN RECITALS

NOVEMBER 10th—DECEMBER 6th.

For vacant dates, &c., apply to—
MR. JOHN VERNE,
BRATHAY HOUSE,
9, THORNTON ROAD, LONDON, S.W.12.

Highly Efficient
Organ Blowing.

AN INTERESTING BOOKLET WHICH HAS BEEN WRITTEN BY EXPERTS IS AVAILABLE POST FREE UPON APPLICATION TO

WATKINS & WATSON,
DISCUS WORKS,
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

TELEPHONE:
NORTH
2039.

MR. CHARLES TREE

NEW EDITION "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES.
12 EXTRA PAGES. NOW READY. 3/7 post free.
"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION."
5/2 post free. (If difficult to obtain, write direct to author).

MR. JOHN HARDMAN, Hackney, June 23, 1925: "Your masterly treatise on voice is a safe guide, and should profit all who study it carefully."

Concerts, &c., address, Bolton Mansions Hotel, S.W.5, Kensington 816.

ALBERT GARCIA'S

VOCAL STUDIO.

59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.
PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices, so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone, from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"

has recently been edited and revised from the original edition by ALBERT GARCIA.

Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland Street, W.1. Price 6*s.*

"A work that should be of interest to all singers, young or old, is Albert Garcia's newly-published edition of his grandfather's 'Art of Singing.' There are many famous cases of inherited talents in the arts, but not many where the same branch of the profession has been followed by successive generations, and the case of the Garcias is probably unique."—Daily Telegraph.

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),

undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.

8, THE RIDGWAY, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

MISS MARJORIE GULLAN'S VERSE-SPEAKING CHOIR.

TWO POETRY RECITALS.

City Temple ... ... October 15, 8 p.m.
Æolian Hall, Bond Street ... ... October 17, 8 p.m.

TWO DEMONSTRATIONS OF RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS TO SPOKEN POETRY.

Birkbeck College, Fetter Lane ... ... October 16, 5.30 p.m.
Godolphin and Latimer School, Hammersmith October 17, 11 a.m.

Tickets from the Hon. Sec., 11, Tavistock Square, W.C.1, and at door. (City Temple—collection only.)

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, and many other eminent musicians. The Techniquer is now being extensively used for the treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis, and Hand Paralysis. See The Morning Post of August 7.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Full particulars from the Secretary—
MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA" Pocket Finger Trainer

(Registered No. 692810).

INCREASES STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH.

Editor Musical Times says: "Have no hesitation in recommending."

Improved Model, 2*s.* 6*d.* post free.

"SIMPLEXA," 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

TO MUSIC TEACHERS.

MR. EDWARD BRANSCOMBE, who is shortly visiting SOUTH AFRICA, AUSTRALIA, and NEW ZEALAND, will be glad to get into communication with Music Teachers, especially singers of experience, who would be prepared to establish themselves in either of the above-named countries.

15, RODNEY COURT, MAIDA VALE,
LONDON, W.9.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING. SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION. ACCOMPANIMENT.
ESSAY. (With list of 75 Solos.)

3*s.* each. 10*s.* 6*d.* the set.

These papers will help to secure for you the few extra marks often necessary to turn failure into success.

Send stamped addressed envelope for fuller particulars.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO SINGING STUDENTS, CHOIRMASTERS, CHORAL CONDUCTORS, ETC.

Large Music Library for Sale.

COMPRISING:

Oratorios, Cantatas, Operas, Vocal Albums by Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, Liszt, &c.

Song-Cycles for Quartet, Anthems, Madrigals, Glees, Part-Songs (all for Mixed and Male Voices), Singing Tutors, Vocal Duets.

List may be had on application to
HARRY COLLIER,
London College for Choristers,
7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, LONDON, W.2.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

FACULTY OF MUSIC.

The Prospectus, containing information as to the Courses of Study for the Mus. B. and Mus. D. degrees, will be forwarded on application to the Internal Registrar. The Hargreaves Scholarship of the value of £30 per annum, renewable for a second year, is awarded on the results of the first Mus. B. examination.

The Session commences on October 8th.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—The Senate invite applications for the King Edward Chair of Music. Part-time appointment, Honorarium, £200. Applications (12 copies) must be received not later than first post on 21st September, 1925, by the Academic Registrar, University of London, South Kensington, London, S.W.7, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE.

VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA.

ORMOND CHAIR OF MUSIC.

Salary, £1,100.

Term of appointment, Five years.

Duties commence about March, 1926.

Applications are invited for this Chair, and should be lodged with the Agent-General for Victoria, Melbourne Place, Strand, W.C.2. (from whom conditions of appointment may be obtained) not later than October 15.

MANCHESTER SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION FESTIVAL HYMNS.

Will composers accustomed to writing hymn tunes for Sunday School Anniversaries, &c., please send specimens of their unpublished music, with suitable words, stating terms for purchase, &c., to Mr. M. Bolton, Manchester Sunday School Union, 244, Deansgate, Manchester, not later than September 14. Enclose addressed envelope for returned MSS. not accepted.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EVELYNE KING
(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.). CONTRALTO
Concerts, Recitals, At Homes, &c.
Oratorio. BACH a speciality.
All Modern and Standard Works.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
WEST-END STUDIOS.
For Lessons or Vacant Dates, apply,
117, Hampstead Way, Golders Green, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

PERCY BILSBURY
TENOR.
Parepa-Rosa Gold Medallist, R.A.M.
CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, RECITALS.
For terms, vacant dates, and Press Notices,
94, St. Helen's Road, Leigh, Lancs.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR.
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

J. CHALLONER HEATON
BASS-BARITONE.
of the Chief Northern Provincial Concerts.
Now booking for Concerts, Oratorio, &c.
Terms and Press Notices:
49, The Terrace, New Barn Lane, Rochdale: or Principal Agents.

ARTHUR LEES
BASS.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
58, Marmion Road, Hove, Sussex.

EDMUND TELFER (BARITONE)
For vacant dates, and Experts' criticisms,
Apply, Ibbs & Tillett, 124, Wigmore Street, London, W.1.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).
The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.
Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.
Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.
Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing.
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1., and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MR. HÄNDEL TAYLOR
Diplômé of Royal Conservatoire of Music, Brussels,
and Conservatoire of Music, Mons,
HAS SEVERAL VACANCIES FOR PUPILS IN VIOLONCELLO PLAYING.
Next Term commences September 4th.
Communications to:
WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

EVERARD C. VAN-ESSEN,
OBOE AND COR ANGLAIS (High and Low Pitch).
Oratorios, Choral and Orchestral Concerts, Opera, &c.
10, The Avenue, Grove Park, Lee, London, S.E.12.

DR. REGINALD H. HUNT
MUS. DOC. (LOND.), F.R.C.O.
CORRESPONDENCE TUITION FOR DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS.
ORGAN LESSONS ON THREE-MANUAL HARRISON & HARRISON (1922).
Address: ST. MARY'S, BRYANSTON SQUARE, W.1.; and
7, WOODGRANGE AVENUE, N. FINCHLEY, N.12.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING.
See Page 775.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London.
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT, MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus. 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

MADAME ALBA, Dramatic Soprano (Italian Bel Canto), receives pupils. Perfect breath control. Clear enunciation. Italian, French, English. Cramer's Studios, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and Mus. D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. — Studio 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES :—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-25 ... 270 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-25 ... 72 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES :

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple, London, E.C.).

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Organ Examinations.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK :

1 L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
1 A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
1 L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	1 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	1 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.

" Hints for R.C.O. Candidates " (Published by Reid Bros.), 2*s.* 8*d.* post free.
298, Balham High Road, London, S.W.17.
Telephone : Battersea 916.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O. Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes; 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L Address : The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. ; CORRESPONDENCE COACH. Pupils' latest passes (A.R.C.M. and A.T.C.L. Exams.) all at first attempt. " Zelgart," Harborough Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone : Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes : Durham, Sept., 1924—Both Mus. Doc. passes and 3 out of the 5 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 2 in 1st Mus. Bac., 2 Mus. Doc., and 5 Mus. Bac. Exercises, all in 1924, after prelim. course in composition. Over 160 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab. ; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address : 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata : Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L. R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O. ; L.R.A.M. ; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES, R.C.O., T.C.L., R.A.M.—Special Hints for Essay, Aural Tests, Art of Teaching, &c. H. Taylor, A.R.C.O., A. Mus. T.C.L., 10, South St., Manchester.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte) ; A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas ; also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

£100 SINGING, PIANO, and £50 ELOCUTION Free Scholarships, Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition, Oct. 24 and 31, and Nov. 7. Entries close, Elocution, Oct. 20 ; Singing, Oct. 27 ; Pianoforte, Nov. 3. Adjudicators, Mr. Claude Landi, late Conductor Royal Carl Rosa Opera Co. ; Mr. C. E. de M. Leathes, M.A. Cantab., Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O. ; and Mr. Douglas Pack, A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M. (Elocution). Results at Lecture-Recital, "Practical Singing," King George's Hall, Wednesday evening, November 11. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MUSIC STUDIOS, Streatham Common.—Teaching or practice. 1*s.* 6*d.* per hour. Brinsmead Gough, The Piano House, 456/8, High Road, S.W.16. Phone 2085 Streatham.

CIVIL SERVICE ORCHESTRA.

GOOD AMATEUR OBOE and BASSOON PLAYERS NEEDED. Rehearsals at Law Courts on Thursdays, 5.30 to 7.20. Particulars from the Hon. Secretary (Ernest J. Stevens, 50, High Road, Chiswick W.4). Preference given to Civil Servants.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

273 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
169 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
8 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the JANUARY, 1926, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations is now commencing. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work, which is often the result of training on wrong lines. Now in this system of tuition pupils are trained to produce work which is above the standard required by the examiners.

Special attention given to the Pianoforte Accompaniment Test, as most organ students fail to utilize the distinctive idioms of pianoforte writing, and make their work look like an organ accompaniment.

F.R.C.O. pupils are trained to work on a definite plan in such tests as Episode and Middle Entries, Stretto, and Song Writing, so as to acquire speed, which is a most vital factor, especially in the afternoon when so many candidates come to grief.

A complete analysis of the Brahms Sextet was sent to all pupils in June, and this anticipated the question on the Rondo set by the examiners, and supplied a detailed answer with musical illustrations.

Hints on how to study the score selected for the January examination as well as a complete analysis (which will give answers to likely questions) will be sent to all pupils.

All the new tests will be covered in these lessons, and complete musical illustrations will be sent to each candidate showing exactly what the examiners require.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

ALL SAINTS', Margaret Street, W.1.—Vacancies in Choir School. Boys, 9 to 11 years; pure voice and good musical ear. Apply by letter to the Rev. The Precentor, 84, Margaret Street, W.1. Bursaries to Public Schools.

TENOR REQUIRED for St. Stephen's, East Putney. Good reader, light duties. £12 per annum. Apply, F.R.C.O., 14, Geraldine Road, Wandsworth, S.W.18.

TENOR REQUIRED.—St. Thomas's Church, Regent Street, W. £20. Write, Clifford Smith, 56, Red Post Hill, S.E.24.

TENOR WANTED for Christ Church, Down St., W.1. Duties light. £15 per annum. Write, Organist, 13, Church Crescent, E.9.

TENOR (Solo) VACANCY.—Good reader. Commencing Salary, £30 per annum. S. G. P. Stubbs, Holy Trinity Church, Prince Consort Road, S.W.7.

HOLY TRINITY, Paddington, W.2.— Wanted at Michaelmas: Solo Tenor, £25; Chorus Tenor, £16; Solo Bass, £18; Chorus Bass, £14; Alto, £20. Apply, S. W. Chuckerbutty, Flat 2, 3, Maida Hill West, W.2.

TWO TENORS. £15 to £18. Ordinary duties. Commencing first week October. West Acton Parish Church. Write, A. Henry, 36, Marquess Road, Canonbury, N.1.

CHRIST CHURCH, Lee, S.E.—TENOR REQUIRED. £15. Full details to the Organist.

TENOR WANTED.—Argyle Square Church, King's Cross. Light duties. Salary. A. Curtis, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., 105, Southwood Lane, Highgate, N.6.

ETON COLLEGE.

The Post of Precentor and Senior Music Master will be vacant at Easter, 1926. Information as to duties, stipend, &c., may be obtained from the Bursar, The Bursary, Eton College, Windsor.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED at St. Luke's, Hampstead, N.W.3. Skilled accompanist. Thorough in Choir-training and voice production. Congregational singing. Communicant of the C. of E. Reside near Church. Stipend, £100. Applications by letter only, with testimonials, to the Vicar.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Parish Church, St. Mary's, Taunton. Willis (3-manual). F.R.C.O., or Graduate. Communicant; successful choir-trainer; good disciplinarian. Applications, with copy of recent testimonials, in envelope endorsed "Application," to be forwarded to the Vicar, Prebendary Corfield, Taunton. State salary required.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED by the end of October. £90. St. John's, Richmond, Surrey. Apply by letter to Norman Maple, Esq., 6, Sussex Street, S.W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER requires appointment. Country Town, Anglican Music. Good Choir-trainer. Recitalist. Diplomas. Good testimonials and references. Organist, 71, Doxey, Stafford.

ORGANIST DESIRES POST.—Experience and References. Apply, "E. J. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST (lady) SEEKS OPENING, assistant or deputy, London "B. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—In perfect condition, suitable for small chapel. £50. A. Brice, Avenue Road, Witham.

CINEMA ORGAN WANTED, Mustel or other, Particulars, J. P. Byatt, New Canadian Cinema, Springburn, Glasgow.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour, or 6*s.* a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6.

PIPE ORGANS RESTORED, ENLARGED, RE-VOICED, REPAIRED, and TUNED. Attractive Terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Established 1896.

FOR SALE.—PEDAL PIANO, Norman & Beard, Pneumatic, Concave, Radiating. Pianoforte by Eavestaff. Complete with adjustable stool. Seen by appointment, London. Write for particulars, "D. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

TWO-MANUAL ROGERS PIANO with R.C.O. Pedal Attachment, in splendid condition. Mahogany case with bench. £90. Apply "H. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, Pneumatic (Norman & Beard), Walnut Bench, perfect, 9½ guineas. Another good set; Bench, 3 guineas. Offers entertained. Brownsword, Halford Street, Smethwick.

FOR SALE.—Good toned VIOLIN by Charles Harris, 1819. In good condition. Apply, Miss G. R. Salter, Attleboro' Hall, Norfolk.

A Gentleman (Solo Violinist) and his wife (Vocalist and Pianist) receive Boarder Pupils at their Home in Kent, near London. Apply by letter, 99, Albemarle Road, Beckenham, Kent.

PIANOFORTE—Postal Tuning Lessons Given. Write for Prospectus, Terms and Testimonials. W. Cawson, Tuner, Bankfield House, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

WANTED.—PIANOFORTE TEACHING CONNECTION by Pianist, L.R.A.M. C/o "K.," Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC LIBRARY of late Mr. Jeboult FOR SALE.—Catalogues for (a) Piano, (b) Oratorios, &c., (c) Anthems, &c., (d) Organ, (e) Full Scores, (f) Theoretical Works, (g) Songs, (h) Own Compositions. Prices moderate. 900 lots. Send stamps early for catalogue, stating which desired, to Revell, 3 Fons George Road, Taunton.

FULL SCORES FOR SALE to various Oratorios, Cantatas, Symphonies, &c. Good condition. List on application. Buckley, Cremona House, Swadlincote.

FINANCIAL and TEACHING INTEREST WANTED in Musical College. Successful teacher and organizer. Apply, "E. E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC BY MAIL.

EVERYTHING IN MUSIC.—Vocal, Instrumental, Educational, British and Foreign. Largest Stock in London. Murdochs, 23, Princes Street, Oxford Circus: and 463, Oxford Street, W.1.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new Setting of "The Erl King" (Oakley). Compass C to E♭ (F optional); also new Song "Love For Ever Lost" (Oakley). Compass B to D (F optional). Price 2*s.* each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1. All music sellers.

"GOD'S HARVEST MERCIES." A Carol. Price One Penny, and "God's Harvest Love." Price Twopence. By Cecilia Havergal. London: NOVELLO AND CO., Limited.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

"A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING" (12,000 words). 1/8. Illustrated. Invaluable to Members of any Orchestra, Band, Church Choir, or Singing Class. Bandmaster M. T. Cooper, R.M.S.M., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool, Lancashire.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1926), on the book "WILLIAM BYRD." Excellent Series of 6 MODEL ESSAYS. Valuable Hints. ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL to Candidates. Send P.O. 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS,
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN, BORD,
SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE.

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
Phone: MUSEUM 439.

The "APOLLO" PEDAL REED ORGAN

STANDS PRE-EMINENT FOR Durability of Construction, Artistic, Pipe-like Quality of Tone, Low Maintenance Costs and all-round Excellence.

Built in one Standard Model to R.C.O. Scale and Voiced for the Requirements of CHURCH OR HOME USE.

Write for Illustrated Booklet and Specification to RUSHWORTH & DREAPER, LTD.

(DESIGNERS AND BUILDERS)
11–17, ISLINGTON - - - - - - LIVERPOOL

London Showrooms: The Chappell Piano Co., Ltd., 50, New Bond Street, W.1.

GLOUCESTER FESTIVAL MUSIC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LOVE INCARNATE
A SETTING OF LINES
BY ROBERT BROWNING.
With a Verse of the Hymn, "JESU, DULCIS MEMORIA."
BY
ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.
Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.
Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ
BY BASIL HARWOOD.
Op. 37.
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK
FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.
FOR SOPRANO OR TENOR VOICE, WITH STRING QUARTET OR PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.
POEMS BY F. W. HARVEY.
MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY
A. HERBERT BREWER.
Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

THE APOSTLES
AN ORATORIO.
BY EDWARD ELGAR.
Op. 49.
Price Seven Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, Choruses only, 4s.

JOB
AN ORATORIO.
BY C. HUBERT H. PARRY.
Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, Choruses only, 1s. 6d.

MASS IN D
BY ETHEL SMYTH.
Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

SUMMER SPORTS
SUITE FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA.
BY A. HERBERT BREWER.
Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Nos. 4 and 5 may be played as Orchestral Pieces without voices.

FOR THE FALLEN
FOR TENOR OR SOPRANO SOLO, AND CHORUS.
BY EDWARD ELGAR.
Op. 89.
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.

SYMPHONY IN A FLAT.
BY EDWARD ELGAR.
Op. 55.
FULL SCORE.
Price £3 3s.
Miniature Score, 11s. 6d.; Cloth, 16s.:
Pianoforte Solo, 11s. 6d.; Pianoforte Duet, 16s.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS
FOR ORCHESTRA.
BY EDWARD GERMAN.
Full Score, 26s. 6d.; String Parts, 13s. 6d.
Wind Parts, 34s. 3d.
Pianoforte Solo, 5s. 6d.; Pianoforte Duet, 7s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and at certain centres in April and July last.

FELLOWSHIP (F.T.C.L.).—Constance Edinborough, Sadie Irwin, Lilian M. A. James, Francis C. R. Sealey, Vera Snare, Maisie E. Thompson.

LICENTIATES IN MUSIC (L. Mus. T.C.L.).—Raymond G. Angel, Harold C. Hind.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Doris Allen, Margaret I. Armstrong, Minnie Bearman, Minnie Barlow, Freda Broadhead, Marjorie A. Bromwitch, Gertrude S. P. Burrows, Thomas Carpenter, Louisa D. Cobb, Mary A. McF. Coulter, James B. Docherty, Jessie Earney, Elsie L. Edwards, Eva V. M. Ewers, Winifred Firth, Grace E. R. Fountain, Florence I. Galley, Jane Goorwitch, Dorothy Greenhalgh, Hubert Hamer, Aileen E. Hartley, Marie Hartley, Theresa R. Hartley, Kathleen E. Hicks, Elsie Hough, Allen D. Jackson, Cissie Jewell, Edward Keane, Rose V. Kemp, Ethel Kneen, Muriel H. Lloyd, Ella M. McRae, Daisy Manley, Mildred C. Measures, Mary Michelbacher, Constance E. Middleton, Horace V. Newton, Arthur Nicholson, Wilfred H. Parry, Madeleine Perret, Clifford J. Phillips, Constance E. B. Pope, Phyllis Proctor, Dora M. Pullon, William G. Seal, Grace G. Sharp, John F. Shorthouse, Bertha Silvester, Clarice G. Smith, Grace E. Sowerbutts, Marion Stott, Annie Taylor, Lily E. Taylor, Hilda Tomlinson, Horace Townsend, Francis Unsworth, Alfred A. W. Waller, Joseph G. Wardale, Arthur C. Waters, John T. Watson, Florence M. Whittaker, Edna Wilkinson, Madge Williams, Julia M. Wilson, Percy Wright.

VIOLIN.—Reginald Leopold, Gladys McAuslane, May Nesbitt, Gladys B. Noon, Gladys N. Synyer.

SINGING.—Winifred E. Brightman, Minnie Clarke, John Mactaggart.

ORGAN.—William R. Davey, Benjamin Powell.

ELOCUTION.—Mina C. Key, Gertrude Maddock, Ida Mortimer, Maud G. E. Pays, Dorothy A. Robinson, Hilda Stow, May Walker.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A. Mus. T.C.L.).—Ellen L. Arslett, John W. Browning, Dorothy R. Crampton, Norah Head, Norman C. Hill, Phyllis A. Ivermee, Ruth M. Johnson, William F. Lunn, James Parsons, Hilda Schumm, Charles H. Wakefield.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Lilian A. J. Abraham, Bessie Aldcroft, Hilda M. Alford, Winifred E. Alker, Bertha J. Allender, Daphne L. Bailey-Dellar, Marjorie L. Ball, Winifred R. Barnes, Edna E. V. Belton, Daisy M. Berry, Ethel A. S. Best, Dorothy M. Bishop, Mary M. Bolton, Lucy Bott, Alice Brightman, Dorothy Brown, Marjorie E. Brown, Marjorie H. Brown, Harold Cottam, Agnes Campbell, Richard W. Castle, Marjorie Cator, Eliza McC. Crawford, Josephine C. Cape, Marguerite A. Caseau, Kathleen Chettle, Victoria F. Cotton, Elizabeth L. Clarke, Claudia H. Coleridge, Katherine A. Connolly, Kathleen M. Cosgrove, Margaret K. Dixon, Kathleen E. R. Drew, Dorothy Dale, Katie Davies, Maurice Dearnaley, May Dixon, John H. Erskine, James Espley, Joyce V. Ellis, Maud Emery, Gladys Fern, Margaret F. C. Fitchett, Edith K. Fox, Marjorie Francis, Hilda L. Foster, Inez F. Fullbrook, Violet French, Freda M. Good, Margaret Gilshenan, Constance H. Gill, Mary A. Godson, Florence L. Halburt, Robert M. Hoyle, Margaret D. Hogg, Elsie M. Heywood, Dorothy E. Hughes, Kathleen M. Harman, Martha Henderson, Mary Hickman, Marion R. Hey, Frederick Hughes, Harold M. Jones, Kathleen M. Jaques, Mary L. J. James, Idris Jones, Rosa M. Jenkins, Alice M. Jones, Katherine M. Jones, Stanley Kenworthy, Edward V. Knowles, Aubrey J. Kime, Marjorie Lobb, Isabel M. Landells, Herman F. Ling, Marjory Littlejohn, Freda Meredith, Queenie Moses, Kathleen J. Messervy, Isabella R. M. Morrison, Doris E. Meakings, Isabella P. Meredith, Dorothy H. Morris, Mary D. Mycock, Bertha Musgrave, Aubrey Norman, Kathleen A. Noakes, Kitty O'Rourke, Nora B. O'Brien, Ena P. Peggs, Vera S. Povey, Nora Polkinghorne, Dora M. Perkins, Edith M. Paton, Sybil J. Puttock, Ruby M. Page, Mary Purrett, Elsie Plant, Horace Ridge, Madge Ridler, Bertram V. Raven, Gladys M. Roe, Marion Ryan, Emily G. Rees, Alice Richards, Doris Rushforth, Sarah Ramsin, Edna Simpson, Bertie Slee, Doris K. Serrell, Lillian M. P. Smallwood, Cicely M. Smith, Kathleen E. Snell, Ena D. Stebbings, Olive M. Skinner, Emily D. Scott, Rose E. Smith, Dorothy A. Stone, Marjorie L. Strange, Alma M. Sargeant, Henry Schofield, Vera J. Sinnott, Frank Stansfield, Dan Thomas, Gwladys E. Thomas, Clarence R. Thorpe, Muriel A. Townsend, Daisy E. Tucker, Rubie Tyrer, Florence Tilbury, Joan Treadgold, Amy P. Taylor, Iris M. Thornhill, Dorothy E. Taylor, Ena G. Thomas, Eric L. Tudor, William Townsend, Chitra Varasiri, Arthur A. Wallace, Madge Williams, Winifred M. Wale, Lily D. Waddington, Ethel Walters, Sydney Weekley, Ada S. M. Wells, Curtis White, Irene M. White, Harold Whittle, Ethel Wikeley, Agnes Winstanley, Bernardene Woode, Francis E. Woodhouse, Edna M. Wells, Gwendoline M. White, Dorothy M. A. Willocks, Violet R. Watts, Stanley Wilkinson, Doris Woodward, Mabel A. F. Wright, Eileen F. M. Weller, Eva Williams, Irene C. Young, Maurice Young, Katie E. Youngman.

(Continued on page 784.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC—contd.

VIOLONCELLO.—Evelyn Hennessy.

VIOLIN.—Teresa J. Ahern, Gladys Fountain, Helen E. McKenzie, Josine A. Moore.

SINGING.—Gweneth E. Bean, May Brownridge, Lucy Clements, Minnie Clarke, Lorna D. F. Clark, Irene M. Gibson, Elsie G. Kettle, Phyllis Mason, Dorothy Roberts, Margaret Usher, Florence L. Windebank, Hilda Worsley.

ELOCUTION.—Hilda E. Brewer, Olive Dando, Hilda M. Hindle, Charles Margerison.

ORGAN.—Cecil C. Arnold, Joseph E. Arnold, William H. B Harrison, Lesfie M. Hunt, Thomas A. Payne, Agnes M. Yole.

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Eirene M. Wright.

PIANOFORTE.—Ethel Ashton (Hons.), Hilda H. Bradley, Constance E. M. Breach, Nuel M. Clark (Hons.), John Davies, Phyllis N. Davies, Phyllis V. Day, Edith K. Dibble (Hons.), Harold Eckersall, Norman Edmonds, Herbert Evans, Maurice Garrod, Violet H. Garner, Muriel E. Green (Hons.), Rosie Green (Hons.), Ella Gromett, Phyllis P. Harrison, Harold Knight, Emily M. Langley, Edith M. Lawson, Herman F. Ling, Sadie Michaels, Othick L. Morris, Eileen M. Mackreth (Hons.), Henrietta E. M. Nickels, Joan U. Newth, Susie M. Parkinson, Alice Pedder, Olga V. Sendall, Haydn C. Smallwood, Wilfred L. Southwell, Florence Taylor, Irene A. Vallet, Eva Walpole, Linda Wheeler, Lucy A. Whiteway, Arthur C. Waters.

SINGING.—Lottie Turnbull.

ORGAN.—Andrew Forrester, John Irvine, Edward S. Whitehead.

EXAMINERS.—Prof. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., Prof. Granville Bantock, M.A., Mus. D., J. E. Borland, Mus. D., W. H. Brereton, Sir Frederic Cowen, Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Edric Cundell, Ronald Chamberlain, B.A., Mus. B., Avalon Collard, Edward d'Evry, Harry Duxbury, Paul Edmonds, Rev. W. J. Foxell, M.A., Mus. B., Dawson Freer, Fred. G. Gostelow, H. A. Harding, Mus. D., E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, C. Egerton Lowe, Albert Mallinson, S. Myerscough, Mus. B., E. J. Moeran, Adolph Mann, Miss E. Medd-Hall, G. O'Connor Morris, Tivadar Nachez, G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., C. Palmer, Mus. D., A. W. Pollitt, Louis Pecskai, W. H. Phelps, Alec Rowley, E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Wilfrid E. Sanderson, Mus. B., Joseph Speaight, Anderson Tyrer, D. V. Thomas, Mus. D., Charles Vincent, Mus. D., Miss M. A. Winter, Gerrard Williams, and J. Warriner, Mus. D.

Next Higher Examinations will take place in January, 1926: last day of entry, December 7th next.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

A new feature of the Elkin Catalogue.

MESSRS. ELKIN & CO., LTD., have pleasure in announcing

THE ELKIN CHORAL SERIES,

A NEW SERIES OF PART-SONGS AND UNISON SONGS,

UNDER THE GENERAL EDITORSHIP OF

DR. JOHN BORLAND.

The first issues include:

PART-SONGS for Female Voices, Male Voices, and Mixed Voices by

ELGAR, MACDOWELL, CYRIL SCOTT, EDGAR BAINTON and CHARLES WATERS

UNISON SONGS by

GRANVILLE BANTOCK, ERNEST AUSTIN, ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH, and CHARLES WATERS.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval to Teachers, Conductors, Festival Committees, &c.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

NEW EDITION.—JUST PUBLISHED.

CHURCH CHOIRS AND HOW TO TEACH THEM

With full explanations for breathing, voice production, and the correct rendering of the chants, hymn tunes, and other parts of the choral services of the church, together with hints for training mixed choirs, and useful exercises for the cultivation of the voice, and for the training of choirs in general.

BY ARTHUR W. MARCHANT,

Mus. D. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE NET.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

MUSIC PUBLISHERS,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF RHEINBERGER

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

Cloth Gilt, xii. + 130 pages.

WITH 127 MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Five Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

SEPTEMBER 1 1925

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 847.)

GLINKA'S 'RUSSLAN AND LUDMILA'

BY M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

A few weeks ago, orchestral excerpts from Glinka's 'Russlan and Ludmila,' arranged as a Suite by Mr. Constant Lambert, were given at the Royal College of Music. Thus was a London audience afforded a fresh glimpse of a work that teems with lovely music, and is very little known outside Russia.

It has been often said that Russian music's indebtedness to Glinka's works, and to 'Russlan and Ludmila' in particular, equals that of western music to 'Tristan and Isolda.' It would be truer to say that it exceeds it considerably. The better we know 'Russlan and Ludmila,' the better we realise how direct, how great, how decisive its influence has been on all Russian composers of the second half of the 19th century—Moussorgsky standing as a partial exception.

It is not, however, from the historical point of view alone that I recommend acquaintanceship with 'Russlan and Ludmila'; for there is much in this work which should delight all music-lovers, besides interesting all students. It played an all-important part in creating the idiom and style which characterise most of the later masterpieces of the Russian school; but it gives us actualities, not mere potentialities.

This fact being acknowledged (and I hope the few quotations given below may serve as a bait), there remains, of course, the other amazing fact that the work was finished in the early part of 1842. It is exactly at the time when western grand opera had reached the level of Meyerbeer's 'Le Prophète' and Halévy's 'La Reine de Chypre,' whereas Wagner had proceeded no further than 'The Flying Dutchman,' that Glinka—a practically self-taught composer, with no national art-tradition to fall back upon—followed up his first wonderful achievement ('A Life for the Csar,' 1836) with the sudden revelation which stood embodied in the music of 'Russlan.' From that moment a vast new field was thrown open, and its first-fruit proved how rich it was. Let it be clearly understood—lest some day the claim here made be twisted out of recognition—that it is not because others found Glinka's innovations profitable that Glinka's music should be admired. It is worthy of being enjoyed just for what it is; its seminal value is but an additional proof of its own vitality.

It will be noticed that I speak of the music of 'Russlan,' not of 'Russlan' as an opera. As an opera it is one of the dullest and most incoherent I know. The libretto was written piecemeal by four of Glinka's friends, with his co-operation, and is barely good enough to serve as a prop for the music—a good deal of which, by the way, was written in anticipation of the words. And even the music is not all good. 'Russlan' is a score from which it is advisable to pick and choose; the best in it will be found very lovely.

There is little likelihood that the work will ever be given here; and even less likelihood that, if given, it would take root. Often I think of the possibility of grouping the most beautiful parts of it together into a kind of anthology for concert purposes, and possibly in view of a stage production intended for music-lovers rather than for the average opera-goer—a kind of concert-opera with stage settings, pageants, and dances.

That the first Act, with a few cuts, can hold its own, was proved by its production at Paris in 1909. It contains a number of admirable choruses (indeed, the whole choral part of 'Russlan' is first class), from which the following samples may be culled:

Ex. 1. Vivace assai.

Ex. 2. Allegretto.

Ex. 3. Allegro.

(The orchestra likewise in octaves.)

The last-quoted chorus begins in octaves as shown, but afterwards the arrangement is interestingly varied. It occurs immediately before the episode of Ludmila's abduction—in which appears the whole-tone scale that is the only thing in which most western writers on 'Russlan' seem to be interested. After this episode begins the famous canon for four male voices and accompanying choir, which is one of the finest things in the whole opera.

Of Ludmila's part, the utmost that can be said is that it is, musically, far more interesting than the stuff usually written for coloratura soprano. It becomes more attractive in the fourth Act, although even then it remains overladen with ornaments and runs. Such as it is, it might serve to provide much-needed changes in the diet which coloratura sopranos, when they give a concert, provide for their public.

In the second Act two things stand apart: the opening ballad sung by Finn, the kind wizard, which is altogether delightful and instinct with originality (it is rather long-drawn), and the scene between Russlan and the Giant's Head, to whose fantastic character the music does full justice. It constitutes a big step in the direction shown by Weber's Wolfsschlucht music in 'Freyschütz,' and in anticipation of the Fafner music in 'The Ring.'

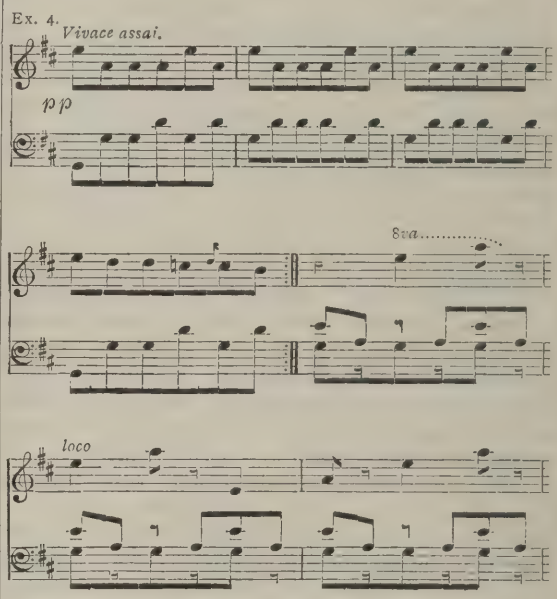
In the third Act, the Persian chorus, with its subtle, ingeniously carried-out colour variations (the kind of variation already used in some of the choruses in the first Act, and a favourite kind with Liszt and the later Russians), and Ratmir's recitative introduce Eastern elements as definitely and as effectively as the first Act had introduced archaic Slavonic elements. There is also a fine Cavatina sung by Gorislava (I name the characters without troubling to specify the part they play in the slender, puerile plot), and a lovely chorus of Naïna's maidens.

It is chiefly in the instinct which prompted Glinka to select and adapt the hitherto ignored Slavonic and Oriental elements that the signs of his originality are to be found, but not altogether. Over and above, there existed in him a strikingly individual sense of purity and simplicity in workmanship, coupled with a rare sense of effectiveness. He was not conspicuous for his critical sense, and would pour out indifferent music as freely as capital music. Yet in that music of his which is fine, there is absolutely no flaw from the technical or from the æsthetic points of view. His orchestration especially is always splendid.

To the student of the history of orchestration two things remain marvellous: Glinka's orchestration, and that of Liszt. Both composers, evidently, were born orchestrators, like Mozart, Weber, and Berlioz. But how and where they acquired their practical experience—that practical experience which other composers of genius acquired so slowly and often far less thoroughly—is an unanswerable question. There exists no instance of indifferent scoring from the pen of Glinka or of Liszt. All they have written is perfectly in keeping, technically faultless, and 'comes off.' Their technique seems to have sprung, fully-equipped, from the brain of the orchestral Jupiter. And Glinka did not even have the chances of hearing, studying, or conducting music which Liszt had. He was acquainted with a certain portion of the classical repertory, he played the violin a little, and he had received a few lessons from Dehn at Berlin. His inborn musicianship did the rest.

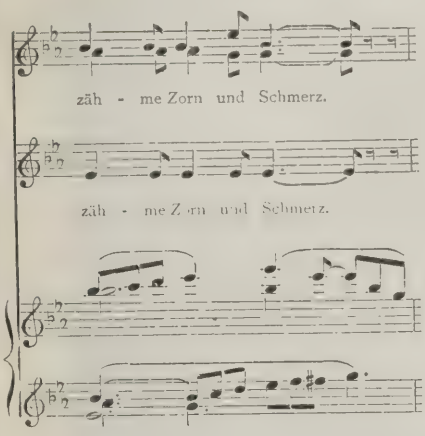
Both the height to which his musical invention could rise and the ingenuity and dexterity of his scoring are admirably evinced in the fairy music and the scenes in the fourth Act. The Turkish Dance, and especially the 'Lesghinka,' are worthy of close study. The latter is one of the most original things in Russian music. Here is one instance of the new and effective devices with which it teems:

Ex. 4.

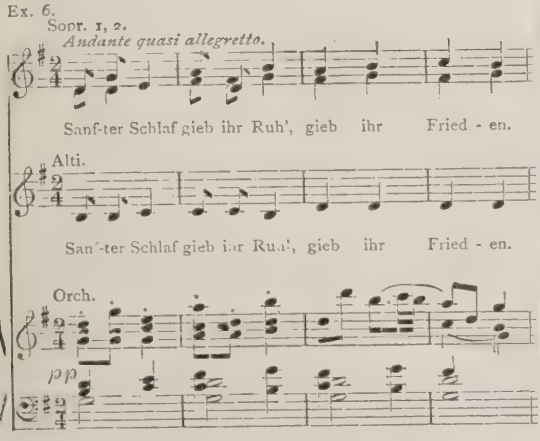


Again the temptation is strong to quote freely from the choral music, which is as simple as it is telling; and again it must be resisted. Two short excerpts may be given:

Ex. 5.



Ex. 6.



Sopr. 1, 2.
Andante quasi allegretto.
Sanf-ter Schlaf gieb ihr Ruh', gieb ihr Fried - en.
Alti.
Sanf-ter Schlaf gieb ihr Ruh', gieb ihr Fried - en.
Orch.
pp

Here we are at the very fount-head of all that is newest and most significant in Russian music of the 19th century. Even these brief excerpts will show how near the music of 'Russlan' brings us to the music of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sadko' and Borodin's 'Polovtsian Dances,' exactly as other quotations would show its nearness to Balakirev's 'Tamara' or to other works of the same period and after.

I shall wind up by quoting the beautiful recitative for the clarinet which occurs when Russlan grasps the hand of the sleeping Ludmila (Act 5):

Ex. 7.

Compare this with the instrumental recitatives in Liszt's 'Dante' Symphony (first movement, middle section), in the third Act of 'Siegfried' (heralding Brünnhilde's awakening)), and in Rimsky - Korsakov's 'Mlada' (Cleopatra's appearance).

It will be found, I am sure, that when speaking of the beauty of 'Russlan and Ludmila,' I have understated rather than overstated. I aimed at appraising it from a particular point of view. I contented myself with noting a few of the things in it which I consider of paramount musical significance, without taking into account all in it that is effective, tuneful, or otherwise acceptable, but not essentially characteristic of Glinka's own genius. For aught I know, I may be under-rating the chances of success which the work might have here if properly produced. I am, I fear, utterly incapable of understanding what it is that, here or there, makes or mars the success of an opera. The Russian public of the 'forties did not take kindly to 'Russlan,' and it is only much later that the beauties of the work carried the day in Russia. These beauties may still do so elsewhere.

In advocating what I have called an anthology, I may seem to be advocating the very kind of thing against which I sometimes protest excitedly. But I do not suggest that this anthology should be offered under a misleading label. The case of 'Russlan' is exceptional, and calls, I believe, for exceptional measures. There is no reason, after all, why these measures should not be only temporary.

P.S.—Referring to my comments on the revised edition of Borodin's first Symphony (see Musical Times, December, 1924), M. Andrei Rimsky-Korsakov, the composer's son, writes to me that the changes are Borodin's own, and that both versions were published during Borodin's life-time. He informs me that M. Dianin (the son of a pupil of Borodin) is preparing an article in which he will set forth the facts and, I understand, condemn my 'unscientific rashness.' Pending the time when this article will come forth, all I wish to do is to make M. A. Rimsky-Korsakov's statements known to my readers. I shall be glad—though certainly not for my own sake—if the evidence proves these statements true.—M.-D. C.

To the kind friends of Self Dieu

Karl Klindworth

KLINDWORTH'S INTERPRETATION OF 'LEONORA' No. 3

By FREDERICK DAWSON

In looking through some old papers of mine a short time ago I came upon this wonderful essay, which I felt I ought to make public as a valuable contribution to the understanding of Beethoven's 'Leonora' No. 3, from the pen of one who in his own day ranked with the highest of those who were privileged to hold aloft the lamp of tradition and to reinforce their own conceptions with the light of unquestionable authority. Klindworth wrote it for me during the early part of 1909, in response to my request for his helpful comments at a time when I was about to conduct the Overture in England.

Incidentally, this cherished document brings back vividly to my mind the most curious and wonderful performance of the 'Eroica' Symphony which it has ever been my lot to hear. It took place in a cab, when Klindworth and I were crossing London to St. James's Hall for the rehearsal of one of my orchestral concerts, on June 15, 1898. Klindworth was conductor, commentator, and orchestra in one! He made the Symphony to live by sounds, words, and gestures, and I shall never forget the rapt and inspired look in his eyes as he unfolded all the beauties of this imperishable work. The verbal commentary was quite in the manner of the analysis of the 'Leonora' Overture which he sent me at a later date; a particular form of interpretative criticism which we are accustomed to associate chiefly with the names of Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner, but for which—if Schindler is to be occasionally believed—we have the high sanction of Beethoven himself.

According to this 'friend of Beethoven' the composer of the 'Eroica,' so far back as 1816, seriously considered the idea of a new edition of all his pianoforte sonatas, for the express purpose of indicating the poetic ideas which form their groundwork, whereby the music's meaning might be comprehended more clearly, and the style of its performance more exactly determined. Chiefly, however, the composer's purpose in this projected new edition was 'to define the nature of musical declamation.' Beethoven contended that poetical and musical declamation were subject to the same laws. 'Though the Poet' (he used to say) 'carries on his monologue or dialogue in a progressive marked rhythm, yet the speaker (for the more accurate elucidation of the sense) must make cæsuras and pauses in places where the poet would not venture on any interpunctuation.' To such extent, then, is this declamatory style applicable to the executive interpretation of music. We have the authority of Ries for the fact that, in composing, Beethoven frequently imagined for himself a definite subject, and sustained his musical inspiration on clearly visualised imaginative groundwork.

I have preferred to give Klindworth's word-picture in his own characteristic English, just as he sent it to me (note, for instance, his quaint relapse into the German 'Der'!), save only for the introduction of an explanatory word or two, in order to obviate possible misunderstanding on the reader's part. Also I have substituted quotations from the musical text for Klindworth's original pagination, based on an edition of the score which may not be in every reader's library.

'The Adagio very slow (the correct tempo will be found in the brilliant but at the same time well-controlled musical performance of the demi-demisemiquavers in the twenty-eighth bar). Strong diminuendo only from second bar to the pianissimo in bar 5:

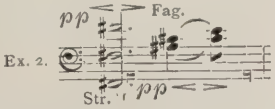
Ex. 1.

'Here very pianissimo in the strings with very slight < > to assist the sighs of the bassoons (rather pressed out, the concluding quavers not shortened):

Ex. 2.



'The A flat section (bars 9-13) still very pianissimo in the strings so that the melody of the clarinets and bassoons in its soft, tender expression is distinctly heard:

Ex. 3.

the sforzando for violins and violas (in bar 11) not violently, only pianissimo sfz. Bars 14-19 in the strings completely without nuances, almost inanimate.

'These groups

Ex. 4.

very detached, always pianissimo.

'Bar 27 strongly crescendo without accelerando, and the fff bar fully to the end fff, the brass not overpowering the violin scales (moderate the trumpets), the trombones to hold out with equal force until the end of the bar. The following quaver (forte) chords (bars 30 and 31) very sforzando and broad, fully kept.

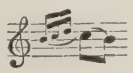
'The comforting little bits in flutes and oboes sweet and tender:

Ex. 5.

'Give time for

Ex. 6.

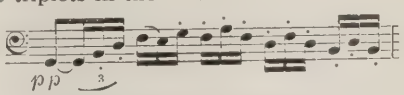


best played so:

Ex. 7.

'The triplets in the Basses

Ex. 8.



very quietly, always mysteriously.

'The last bar before the Allegro, no crescendo, long suspense on b, which very softly make slide into the c:

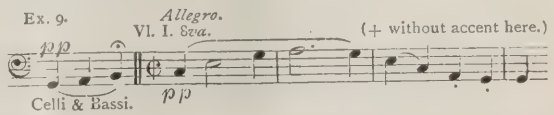
Ex. 9.



and now "a new world"! Not too quick, gently, like the dawn of a new life after desolation.

'The crescendo (at bar 13) very gradually, moderate impatience, same strength, even the four bars of fortissimo (bars 29-32) must still allow of enlarging, swelling—then full, glorious sun!

Ex. 10.

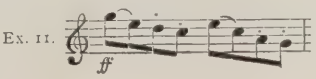
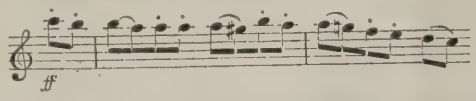
'Make the strings play

Ex. 11.



clearly, particularly also the Basses, not only a rude accent on the first and the rest a tumble-down in heedless hurry!

Ex. 12.



Melody! All clear!!

Ex. 13.

second bar piano ascending < towards forte in violin 1.

Ex. 14.

'Here the first f sharp piano is, in my opinion, only possible with a short pause before, and that seems not natural—I feel that the wind should end with the f sharp forte, also the 2nd violins and violas forte on this first quaver, and then let the 1st violins render the bar piano < with rather a vehement accent on the forte, passionate expression.

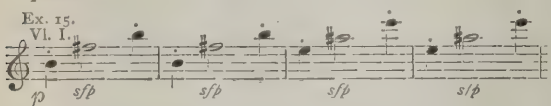
Ex. 15.

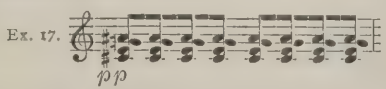


Not too quick, and the modulation to E major calming, violin 1 expressive:

Ex. 16.

and the modulations through F major, G minor, and A minor and the entering of the vibrating diminished seventh chord:

Ex. 17.



—all these wonders you will make impressive; and the imitations between violoncellos and violins:

Ex. 18.

then the sudden crescendo:

Ex. 19.

(The basses, make them work up, gigantic, and the syncopes—always observe the rests, don't shorten them.)

'Now the violins in descending, recede again towards uncertainty, strife, to conquest or to despair.

Ex. 20.

'The contrasts: the fortissimo four bars always contrasting, the stormy quavers in the strings with the utmost <, the plaintive, imploring melodious wind, quieter—always somewhat rinforzando when in double thirds.

'Observe the ascending 'cellos:

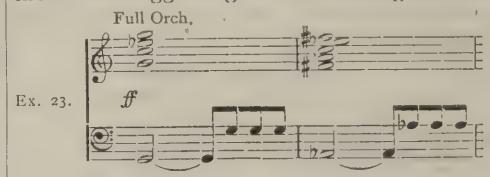
Ex. 21.

and again fourteen bars later; and always more passionate, more imploring, until at:

Ex. 22.

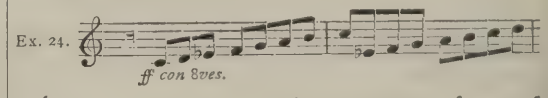
the final struggle begins. Basses against violins:

Ex. 23.



'Now the catastrophe! The scales with a real savageness:

Ex. 24.



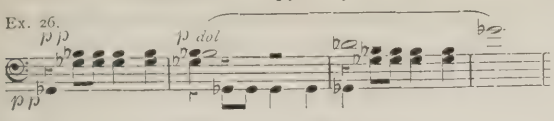
'Help! Rescue! The trumpet from far distance

Ex. 25.

the minims well held, afterwards accelerando (not too much), the pause (𝄐) long and disappearing. The re-beginning in orchestra, very soft and quietly, like in suspense, listening—the trumpet second time nearer, more firm.

'Der G flat bars very, very soft and tender:

Ex. 26.



gradually growing gay, but then sliding into a sort of vision; the dominant of G major:

Ex. 27.

almost inaudible—the crescendo rends the veil, Leonora is before us as representative of female faithfulness in love!

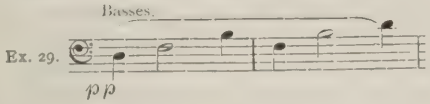
'Give the flute time to execute clearly the quavers with playfulness:

Ex. 28.

(flute and bassoon almost feelingly, with grace).

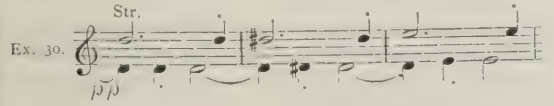
'When the basses begin:

Ex. 29.



still keep the time very quietly, but then with the ascending syncopes back to the reality and assurance of victory:

Ex. 30.



'The rest requires no further details. Make the suspense before the Presto very impressive:

Ex. 31.

'The drama is at an end, the husband liberated, the victory won—now only remains the summing-up: the whole Universe to decree the apotheosis of the woman, the faith and the pity of all mankind for each other, with all the joy and jubilation possible. Hurra, hurra! hurra!! The ff's and fff's with a thundering flourish of trumpets and hearts!

'(Don't laugh!) 'KARL KLINDWORTH.'

In conclusion, I might perhaps be permitted to call the attention of serious students to the punctilious care with which Klindworth—himself one of the greatest of the world's musicians—observes and respects every indication which the composer has given of his own wishes, and how, in fact, this wonderful interpreter keeps his eyes and his ears open all the time for the faintest hint of what the composer has in mind, and what it was that his music sought to express. (How many lessons one gives of which the sum total is: Look at this, listen to that!) Klindworth dots the i's and crosses the t's of many of the cardinal principles of interpretation, he shows us that all inflections of 'nuance' (of time and tone) are relative—relative to each other as well as to the character of the piece; that all gradations must be carefully prepared—that is, crescendos and diminuendos do not become suddenly loud or soft, accelerandos and ritenutos not suddenly quick or slow, but they are to be most carefully proportioned. (Schindler has told us that Beethoven's playing was distinguished by the beautiful way in which he prepared his gradations.) Further, Klindworth shows us how necessary it is to seek out the melodies, and also the harmonic and rhythmic groundwork of what we are interpreting. For a composer to try to indicate his wishes on these points at every turn is to convert the score into a perfect maze—to bewilder, rather than direct us. There is nothing revolutionary here; these are simple truths we all know, but often forget! That Beethoven himself had all these points in mind we have documentary proof in the notes to some of the Cramer Studies which he prepared for his nephew's use. And Wagner was only fitting literary phrases to these well-known (if neglected) principles when he said: 'Look out for the Melody in every bar—and then sing it!'; 'The choice of tempo will show whether the performer understands the piece or not,' &c.

'NERVES'

By ERIK BREWERTON

Nervousness in music is an interesting affliction because its symptoms and developments are so varied. It would certainly be worth while to collect the different experiences of it that musicians have had, and it would probably transpire that very few would confess to being quite immune from them.

Nervousness is, indeed, almost an inseparable part of the artistic temperament, and it is extremely doubtful whether those who congratulate themselves on never suffering from it will ever transmit the thrill their art provides at quite its finest intensity. They may, however, make better public performers in the long run, as they will have a solid power of endurance their nervous colleagues will lack; and in these days of arduous undertakings it is of paramount importance to be able to rely on a good standard of accomplishment. Neither agents nor public can tolerate being 'let down'. 'You must be a good animal' is Emersonian advice which might very well be passed on to artists of all kinds.

Nervousness is so widespread and can be so devastating in its effects that some sort of practical analysis of it should be made for the benefit of society. It should neither be left quite loosely comprehended and defined, nor handed over root and branch to that sphere of specialism which lies outside the interest of the lay mind. Though musicians looked at from a strictly scientific point of view are queer creatures, there are enough of them, and their social value is great enough, to justify a serious and intelligible consideration of a malady which so often affects them.

It is often implied, somewhat slightingly, that nervousness is a momentary bashfulness or timidity which people allow to come over them, a sort of stammer or blush. To conquer this feeling a sudden effort of will must be made, it is said. The patient must collect himself, take deep breaths, be leisurely in his movements, and behold, he is cured! Or, as Max Heinrich maintains in a foreword to his edition of selected songs by Schubert, nervousness in a large majority of cases is due to 'lack of absolute knowledge,' and the obvious cure is to gain absolute knowledge. There are others who believe that a good shaking, a few sharp words or a strong drink will suffice to brace up the sinking spirit and stiffen the trembling knees. No doubt there is a certain efficacy in all these remedies, but the diagnosis they represent is confined to a comparatively mild form of the ailment, to something which bears only a meagre proportion to an affliction which is too often deep seated and malignant.

Nervousness proper is a sickness. In fact, the phrase 'losing one's nerve' brings a more vivid and truthful picture to the mind than any the weak abstract noun can inspire. Losing one's nerve is a loss of 'moral' which may bring the will entirely into the power of the imagination, as with Lady Macbeth. It cannot be compared with any sudden sense of bashfulness at the sight of an audience, but is, rather, wave after wave of self-distrust drenching the sufferer finally in abject misery. This the imagination can bring about at any moment, and can prolong until complete exhaustion occurs. The audience as a concrete reality—a number of people in a particular place at a particular time—has little or nothing to do with such a state of mind.

'Think of them as a field of cabbages,' a teacher once said. 'Remember they are just the sort of people who pass you the salt,' admonished another. Not very useful remarks, because there is nothing the imagination cannot turn into something irritating or alarming, even a field of cabbages and the passing of salt! This sense of self-distrust culminating in misery—admirably demonstrated by a dejected undergraduate of my time who gained first-class honours in an examination which he asked his tutor to allow him to abandon half-way through—may turn to panic as in the case of a Liverpool pianist, who on the day of his recital fled into the adjoining country. But though such a deplorable catastrophe is rare, nervousness of this kind can quite easily drain away the vitality of the performer and leave him hardly capable of speaking or of eating, much less of singing or of playing.

Like certain forms of madness which the victim can struggle against, nervousness can be combated, and the pathetic side of the drama enacted in the performer's mind lies precisely in this struggle to discover what is the matter and to overcome it. Such warfare may be waged throughout a whole recital, and the audience be conscious of nothing save of a sense of disappointment more or less acute.

To tell musicians who 'lose their nerve' to this extent that they are obviously unfitted to appear in public is a hard saying which the courageous soul would rightly resent—for the same reason might be employed for debarring such people from performing in private. Numbers do not necessarily cause nervousness. A single person can cause it, a father, mother, or teacher; and the unhinged imagination can seize on a trifle, a fidgeting or a whispering, and convert it to vast and dreadful uses. Though there is often a distinctly chilling sensation in approaching a miscellaneous crowd of unsympathetic people, scattered about a dreary hall and eyeing the platform with a bovine stare, the artist may experience a positive antipathy of disastrous dimensions emerging from the amiable inhabitants of a drawing-room.

Every entertainer knows that it is more difficult to excite the mirth of a few in a room than that of the many in a hall. Certainly Chopin was at his best in a 'salon,' but then his company was select and largely composed of ladies of rank. Liszt, on the other hand, liked to conquer the crowd, and ignored those delicacies which engage the attention of equals and friends. He who introduced himself to the publisher Ricordi, at Milan, by walking into his shop and performing on one of his pianofortes—his way, as he said, of presenting his credentials—had a confidence which was quite incompatible with 'nerves.'

This popular complaint may be removed by the inculcation of conceit in the performer, or by the sympathy of others. Morally speaking, it is obvious which is the better remedy, but one or the other is necessary, for the nervous musician suffers from his own modesty, a modesty misplaced if you like, but none the less genuine and often concurrent with great talent. Music in spite of the pomp of the theatre and the circumstance of the concert hall remains still an inevitably intimate thing bound up with a man's soul. How many hours is the musician alone with his art compared with the hours he shares it with others! In these unnumbered hours a delicacy, a secrecy, a reserve arise such as are observed in the lover. With both the lover and the musician a certain respect and discretion should temper their attitude towards the objects of their devotion. Vehemence finds no way in these strange countries. For a musician to make a parade of his inspiration, to celebrate in public on a certain night at a certain hour beauties revealed to him in precious moments of the past, requires a bluntness of sensibility both in the asking and in the granting, and has a strong similarity to the action of those poets who can see no bad taste in commercialising their private feelings by the sale of their love-poems. Is is said that Chopin was a reserved player, and it is not surprising to find a 'coldness' in the attitude of great executants, such coldness being a means of defence, a veil which it does them infinite credit to assume.

It is therefore advisable that the excitable musician whose highly strung temperament particularly disposes him to nervousness should be encouraged to curb his emotions, to neglect, it may be, music that naturally appeals to him, and to devote himself for a long time to works of sobriety and reticence. As a singer he should avoid those romantic effusions which reflect a highly exalted state of mind. Thus, by not exciting himself often and unduly, he may almost grow out of his weakness. Music has many mansions, a consoling word to those who have tasted failure. Meanwhile nervousness will diminish as the influence of that romantic music of 'Sturm und Drang' which fostered so much of it, declines.

It will diminish, but never disappear. The musician must pay his tax. He deals in something more sensitive than ledgers, and he must respond accordingly. If such apparently calm pianists as Godowsky can sit feverishly tearing up bits of paper before 'going on' there is probably something in the malady congenital to the musician. In spite of society's unwritten laws there remains a wildness, native of the god Pan, about him, and his long hair is symbolical of it. Leave him in his sylvan state and he will pipe and sing and startle nature, but drag him in the leading strings of fashion to minister to a curious and idle throng, and his song will falter and his pipe sound harsh.

Nervousness the most susceptible musician must face, and by sheer pertinacity and the blessed fruits of experience he will be enabled gradually to draw its sting. But the serpent will rear a fierce head and hiss spitefully at times; and it is well that it should so happen, for a grain of fear is a wholesome stimulant. It will stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood, brighten the eye, and kindle a communicating fire.

THE NATURE OF HARMONY

By Matthew Shirlaw

(Continued from July number, page 600.)

II.

How, then, does harmony arise? What is the nature of those tonal relationships that are perceived to exist not only in harmony, but also in melody? Do they arise arbitrarily; are they invented, created by man for his particular æsthetic needs? Or do they arise from some principle which, while it leaves human freedom unfettered, nevertheless guides the ear, and leads it from one stage to another of musical development? Such a principle, Rameau declared, undoubtedly existed. It was 'the invisible guide of the musician.' This, indeed, is true of more than tonal relationships, and no matter how spiritually, how ideally, our art is conceived—for what composer of genius, as he scales the untrodden heights of the ideal, does not become conscious of some mysterious, lovely presence, that leads him onward, and makes him forgetful of the roughness of the way? It is the real 'immortal beloved' of Beethoven. The same idea we find expressed in the Euridice myth of the Greeks—Euridice follows her guide, but she is not permitted to see his face.

All theorists—and their name is legion—who have explained harmony as arising from the sounds of the harmonic series, have doubtless been influenced by the fact that they were conscious, more or less vaguely—as, indeed, the majority of musicians are conscious—that these tonal relationships are not arbitrary, but are, as Tartini said, 'independent of the human will.' What is more remarkable, however, is that not a few of those who have expressly rejected the harmonic series as a principle of harmony and of tonal relationship, have held a similar view. The most brilliant of these writers, Moritz Hauptmann, says:

> The notion of an artificial system of notes is a thoroughly worthless one. Musicians were not able to determine intervals and invent a system of notes, any more than grammarians to invent the words of the language in which they speak. . . . Of conventional determinations for chords . . . of arbitrary alterations, raisings and lowerings of the naturally-given degrees, although such phrases are often employed by otherwise intelligent people, there can be no mention when we proceed rationally.

Hauptmann, certainly, is not prepared to go quite so far as Tartini.

Not even Hauptmann, however, would claim that man created, or invented, the close tonal relationship existing between the two sounds that form the interval of the octave. Such a relationship was perceived by ancient peoples; it has been familiar for more than two thousand years; it remains unaltered at the present day. Our system of equal temperament leaves it severely alone. It retains the tonal purity it has received from Nature. How custom, however, dulls our perception of truth! So familiar to us is the consonance of the octave, that we forget the part it plays, and has always played, in musical practice. We speak of the mere repetition of a note an octave higher or lower, of mere octave doublings, and so forth. And yet this humble servant of the art of music, seldom accorded even a nod of recognition in high places, is really a wonderful acoustical phenomenon. Were it non-existent, the mind utterly fails to conceive any means whereby the multitude of different sounds in music—which is very considerably less than the number of possible musical sounds—could be, not merely classified, but utilised to any practical purpose, so that, by the use of only seven letters of the alphabet, each sound may be accurately named and distinguished.

That it is possible to comprise all these sounds, in so far as their tonal meaning or significance is concerned, within the limits of a single octave, is indeed a remarkable circumstance. If such a tonal relationship could be destroyed, then practically the whole world of musical art would inevitably perish along with it. And if such a relationship was not invented, but discovered, if it represents something not artificial, but in a real sense natural, so with other tonal relationships —the fifth, the fourth, the major and minor thirds and sixths—on which harmony is based.

These consonances, far from being of human invention, were actually present in Nature long before man was aware of their existence. The human ear had first to be educated in order to perceive, appreciate, and understand them. And for this process long periods of time, stretching over many centuries, were necessary. How the ear was thus guided, how and whence the consonances had their origin, must have constituted a considerable mystery for these early musicians. Even in that remote time, however, certain important facts relating to them were discovered. Considerably before the beginning of the Christian era, certain Greek investigators discovered that the consonances of the octave, fifth, and fourth, which formed the basis of Greek music, corresponded with, or were determined by, certain simple numerical ratios or proportions. Thus the octave was determined by the ratio 1 : 2, the fifth by 2 : 3, and the fourth by 3 : 4. So that the consonances that formed the basis of the music of the ancient world were all determined by proportions arising from the numerical series, 1, 2, 3, 4. This seems to be a rather striking circumstance, and for those early investigators doubtless a somewhat unexpected result of their endeavours to ascertain the nature of consonance. It may have suggested, and did actually suggest to them that some connection existed between musical intervals and the order that exists in Nature. According to the famous Pythagorean theory of 'the harmony of the spheres'—that idea expressed by Shakespeare in his magnificent tribute to music in 'The Merchant of Venice'—it is harmonious numerical arrangement that makes the universe a cosmos. The soul itself is a harmony. Plato deals with this question in his 'Timæus.' We may deny, of course, that either the ear or the soul is concerned with numbers, and insist that man freely chooses, from out a multitude of possible intervals, those best adapted to his æsthetic requirements. The curious fact remains, however, that when man has finally discovered the intervals best adapted to his needs, when he has freely chosen, without any conscious dependence on natural law, the consonances he requires, it is found that they are all determined by a definite numerical series. All this, it may be objected, is a mere coincidence. Other coincidences of a similar kind are known to exist. We may waive the point for a moment, and proceed.

The diatonic scales of the Greeks passed into the service of the early Church, and were in use, at least as respects their Pythagorean intonation, up to the time of the first rude beginnings of polyphonic music, about the end of the 9th century. During the course of the development of polyphony, the correctness of intonation of the Pythagorean thirds and sixths began to be called in question. Eventually these intervals—which were not consonances, and never have been apprehended as such—had to give way to what we now know as the 'natural' thirds and sixths. Here is an interesting and awkward fact for those who hold that harmony has its origin in the scale. This new harmony could not have been derived from any scale, for there was no scale in existence in which such a harmony was to be found. The direct result of the introduction of the natural thirds was that the time-honoured Pythagorean scales (scales that had been in existence for over a thousand years) had perforce to give way, and were succeeded by new scales derived from the new harmony.

The major third, it was found, was accurately determined by the proportion 4 : 5, and the minor third by the proportion 5 : 6. The sixths arise from these intervals by inversion. All the intervals that were employed in the polyphonic music of the time were derived from the perfect and imperfect consonances. In addition to the ancient whole-tone of the proportion 8 : 9, there now came into existence the lesser whole-tone, of the proportion 9 : 10. The former, as the Greeks themselves affirmed, arose as the difference of the perfect fourth and fifth, as at (a) ; the latter was now determined as the difference between the perfect fourth and minor third (b) ; while the diatonic semitone arose as the difference between the perfect fourth and major third (c). That is, the dissonant intervals were determined by the consonances, and arose from them. All the consonances then, that formed the basis of European music considerably earlier than the time of Palestrina, viz., the perfect, expressed by the series 1 : 2 : 3 : 4, and the imperfect, expressed by the series 4 : 5 : 6—all arose from the proportions expressed in the continued series 1 : 2 : 3 : 4 : 5 : 6. The sixths, as already mentioned, arise as the inversions of the thirds. Thus we have another coincidence similar to the above.

But it is more remarkable; for this principle of the consonances not merely determines their proportions and their respective degrees of 'smoothness,' it coincides with the order in which they arise in Nature, as well as the order in which the human ear was educated to appreciate them. It accords also with the development of harmony and harmonic music. In ancient Greek music the octave was frequently used to double a melody. Not so the fourth or fifth. Aristotle, in his 'Musical Problems,' asks why the octave alone is employed in magadising, as well as in vocal music, and answers that these antiphonal degrees (octave sounds) appear to produce the effect, not of two separate sounds, but of a single sound. This, however, is not so in the case of the fourth and fifth. These consonances are not used in a continued series, because the added melody is not the same as its companion. In the diaphony of the octave the added sound is, so to speak, unperceived. But at the distance of the fifth or fourth this is not the case, for the interval is not identical. Throughout his 'Problems' Aristotle makes it clear that he considers the fifth and fourth, although consonant, to be much less consonant than the octave. The reason, he infers, is that in those intervals a duality exists for sensation (Prob. 39). So that the first kind of diaphony, or may we say polyphony, was that at the octave. The consonant nature of the fourth and fifth was understood, but still in a vague fashion. Many hundreds of years had still to elapse before their consonance was appreciated to such a degree as permitted of their inclusion in a new kind of diaphony.

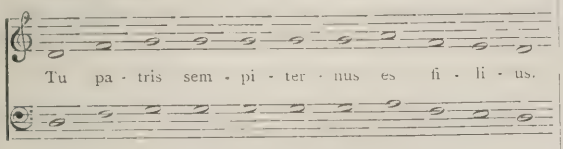
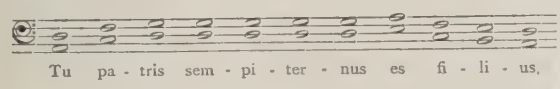
Up to the end of the 9th century the octave diaphony of the Greeks:

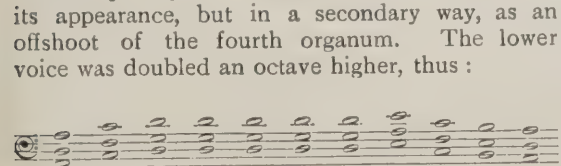


was constantly in use, and necessarily so whenever boys and men sang together the plainsong of the Church. But now there arose a new kind of diaphony, the essential feature of which was the employment of those intervals that Aristotle had considered to be unsuitable for diaphony—the fourth and fifth. If in the Greek diaphony we find a parallel succession of octaves, in the new diaphony, the so-called Organum, we find a parallel succession of fourths:



The oldest kind of organum, of which examples are given in the treatise 'Musica Euchiriadis,' ascribed to Hucbald, is a fourth organum. Of an independent fifth organum the treatise makes no mention. This importance assigned to the fourth, rather than to the fifth, in the ancient world, is a somewhat extraordinary, and, to us, a puzzling circumstance. Descartes, in his little treatise 'Compendium Musicae' (1618), described the fourth as the 'shadow' of the fifth, and it was this shadow, or reflection, that appears to have impressed itself on early peoples. The matter is of some consequence for the proper understanding of harmony—even of modern harmony. It confirms what has been already said as to the vague manner in which the consonances were first understood.

Subsequently a fifth organum actually did make its appearance, but in a secondary way, as an offshoot of the fourth organum. The lower voice was doubled an octave higher, thus:



And so we find the ancient antiphony of the octave combined with the new, for here are present the intervals of the octave, fifth, and fourth. Some historians have dwelt on the 'horrible effect' produced by such a parallel succession of perfect consonances, and speculated as to whether it was actually employed in practice. There is no reason, however, to doubt it, nor to doubt Hucbald's assurance that he found these consecutive fifths and octaves to be most sweet and pleasant to the ear.

There now begins a new epoch in musical history. It was on this frail bark of the organum that early adventurers set out to explore the unknown world of polyphonic music. Before long the rigid parallelism gave way to other kinds of motion. Other intervals were introduced. An old French treatise, 'Quiconques veut deschanter,' dating from about the 12th century, gives various directions for obtaining a good descant. It begins: 'Whoever wishes to descant must first of all understand what is a fifth, and what is an octave.' And one of its directions is as follows: 'Whenever the cantus descends (by step), we must proceed in fifths with the cantus, until the final is reached, above which we must place the octave':

It should be observed that the fifth has now displaced the fourth in the esteem of musicians. The fifth, however, is not yet considered to be a suitable interval for the final, and must give way to the octave at the close. The process is in all respects the same as that which obtained later when thirds and sixths were used in polyphonic music. The third was not admitted at the final cadence, but had to give way to the fifth.

This, however, is not the end of the strange and eventful history of the gradual appreciation of the consonances, of the manner in which the ear was slowly educated to perceive and understand the tonal relationships that define them. The next step, and this was brought about before many more centuries had elapsed, was the introduction of the natural thirds. And the appreciation of these consonances was signalled, strangely enough, by another kind of parallel succession similar to that of the ancient antiphony of the octave, and of the old organum. This was the so-called faux-bourdon, which appeared thus:

although it was not so performed, the lower note, as every one knows, being sung an octave higher, resulting in a series of parallel thirds and sixths.

(To be continued.)

The centenary of Ouseley's birth was celebrated at St. Bees Priory Church on August 12. Mr. F. J. Livesey gave a recital of Ouseley's organ music, and on the following Sunday all the music at morning and evening services (with the exception of the Tallis Responses) was by Ouseley, three of his anthems being sung, including the eight-part 'Great is the Lord.'

IS BROADCASTING A DISASTER?

By ARTHUR L. SALMON

Any attempt at this time to stem the progress and the popularity of broadcasting would be as futile as Dame Partington's attempt to keep back the ocean with her broom. Broadcasting has come to stay; it will stay, let us hope, to be vastly improved. Any suggestion that improvement is possible must not be taken as unfriendliness or even as unduly critical. But it has to be admitted that in some definitely musical circles there is a great deal of distinct unfriendliness towards the process, and a greater amount of unsparing criticism. Quite recently, a composer of recognised artistic gift expressed to me his opinion that 'Wireless is one of the most disastrous innovations of our time, used as it now is as a means of recreation.' This opinion, though extreme, is not an isolated one; but attention must be paid to the qualification, 'used as it now is.' This suggests that wireless might be a boon, but is not. Some little consideration of this point may be worth while.

There are two especial aspects of wireless to be remembered; first, the medium of conveyance, and secondly the choice of programme. At present broadcasting has to depend on the comparatively limited resources of a science still in its infancy; it is here that we may hopefully and justifiably look for continual definite improvement. Experience will widen knowledge and develop skill; mechanism and method will advance. Some partial if not complete remedy will be found for the frequent annoyance of atmospheric and other interferences. We have all at times had to lay aside the head-phones in disgust or in despair, because of the hoots and shrieks, groanings, hisses, and gurglings that proceeded from them. We have had to close our ears or fly in horror from discordances of the loud-speaker. We have been told that a thunder-laden atmosphere was interfering—that the Morse messages of constant telegraphic communications were intruding—that novices or perverse persons were juggling with their instruments to the detriment of our own results. All this, while not greatly comforting, was an explanation; and it is an explanation that should become less needful as time goes on. We may escape both from the atmospherics and from the mad manipulations of the unskilful or experimental operator. Such an escape is not merely possible; it is almost certain.

But apart from these, which we may consider the temporary accidents of the process, wireless is far from perfect in its conveyance of music. It is often admirable with lectures and speeches; and it can transmit the applause at the conclusion of a performance tolerably distinctly. Its time-signals enable us to set our watches correctly; and its news-bulletins give us overnight information for which we should otherwise have to wait till the morning newspaper. To do this is a service of undoubted usefulness, and we are suitably grateful. But when we listen to music, have we equal cause for gratitude? Whatever may be the result with songs and light pieces, do we find the rich fullness of an orchestra well conveyed? Do we get the balance, the proportion? To speak candidly, is not the result often less satisfying than that of a good gramophone record?

Differing answers may be given to these questions. Some listeners appear to be quite satisfied; and in any case it is possible that deficiencies of which some of us complain may be among those shortcomings that time and experience will remove. We may nurse this as a consoling and not too fanciful hope.

There remains the choice of programmes. Here, if there is any fault to be found, an immediate remedy is possible. But we have to remember that broadcasting is a financial concern, and its operations are largely influenced by the tastes of subscribers. On the general and non-musical side the provision appears sensible and satisfactory. Lectures, addresses, entertainments, are usually excellent—pithy, concise, of wide and immediate appeal. The religious programmes of Sunday night deserve the warmest approval, and are very widely appreciated. Popular desire seems here almost unanimous, and it is a very healthy, gratifying sign. But a large portion of all the programmes is entirely musical; and it is here that we may feel more doubtful of results. Jazz-tunes and ragtime are overdone; what we may call 'picture-house music' (of the lower sort) very largely prevails; and the few good pieces that are given come in juxtaposition with trash. An hour or so of continuous classical music is not popular; listeners are bored, and remembering their general lack of musical culture we cannot be surprised. It would not be fair to expect anything else. It would also not be fair to enforce the best music on those who do not want it; it would disgust rather than educate them. Education in musical taste is a very gradual affair, and a majority will never be susceptible to it. These points must be recognised, together with the dominant factor, which is simply financial. The larger number of subscribers have to be considered; the few must rigidly and discreetly select their listenings-in, or wireless can have no value for them.

To say that wireless as now practised is an actual disaster is no doubt an assertion that needs much qualifying. That it is exercising a disastrous effect on some aspects of the music-trade, that it is giving a bad time to many composers and performers, cannot be denied. Concerts are notably fewer, the once fashionable musical evening is almost a thing of the past. Those who once bought songs and pieces, and listened tolerantly to their friends because they knew their own time would come, now sit with the headphones or listen to the loud-speaker. It is probable that they hear something better than their own performances would be; but in the meantime music-publishers are bewailing that there is no demand; concerts are badly attended; the professional is no longer wanted for at-homes and garden parties: the amateur finds no one to listen. The few who are called on by the broadcasting stations find their reward; but the profession generally is very hard hit. Its bitter resentment of wireless popularity is very similar to the feeling of stage-professionals when cinemas began to be in vogue. On the highest artistic ground we need have no fear; true art lives, and is its own reward. But in the matter of those who must make a livelihood, there has undoubtedly been disaster. It was inevitable. Things find their level in time; we must take wireless as an established fact, be thankful for the some really good things that it gives us, trusting that ultimately it may stimulate instead of killing performance, elevate instead of vitiating popular taste.

SOME REFLECTIONS ON PIANOFORTE INSTRUCTION

By I. PHILIPP

(Professor at the Conservatoire, Paris.)

I.

Almost every day we are brought face to face with some new system of pianoforte instruction, with ever more complex modes of practising and playing. One teacher insists on extended arms, another approves of rolling the shoulders to and fro, a third of contortions of various kinds, while a fourth supplies a mathematical solution for every difficulty—all being explained at length in big volumes, with examples given to support each method in turn. These examples, however, are generally chosen from the great artists, who had never had the faintest knowledge of the more or less irregular and strange systems that have been invented. Such names are mentioned as those of Liszt, Rubinstein, Tausig, Busoni, Rosenthal, Paderewski. Reproductions of their hands and arms are given; critics vie with each other in discussing their muscular strength.

And yet these very masters have worked in accordance with the oldest and simplest of principles, rejecting quite naturally whatsoever they found to be false in any method. Besides, these old systems—despised though they may be—have invariably given the most interesting results, for there is but one way of playing the pianoforte, i.e., to play well. Are past systems opposed to those of the present-day if we include all the best elements of these latter? If so, how are we to explain the marvellous execution of, e.g., a Chopin, a Rubinstein, or a Planté, who knew nothing of modern inventions? Were not Liszt and Rubinstein, Tausig and Delaborde, in possession of the requisite qualities of strength, rapidity, and lightness of touch? What could be more amazing than the suppleness, the freedom of movement, of a Busoni? Did they acquire their art by so-called novel methods? Where are the adepts of our modern systems who can vie with these masters?

Again, is it imagined that modern music is more exacting than the music of bygone times? Here, too, the examples quoted are always taken from instruction books more than half a century old. The technique of the most complicated modern works does not necessarily call for new pianistic systems, in spite of new forms and new harmonic research work. A Chopin and a Liszt also had to invent and re-form everything, to find means of solving quite new technical problems. Can it really be imagined that tonal scales or polytonal compositions offer insurmountable difficulties to those pianists who master the studies and transcriptions of Chopin, Liszt, or Busoni?

That which is new is the method of work, which is more concise, more deliberate and practical. Pure technique is nothing but a means. Life is short, and the pianist's répertoire is of vast range. Consequently a fine technique must be acquired, one that will enable him to overcome every difficulty in the shortest time possible. After reading the hundreds of pages of such books as those mentioned above, one has made no more progress than at the start.

The art of pianoforte playing is not made up of more or less ridiculous gestures. Any ordinarily intelligent and gifted pianist will always, and without any help, make the right movement for playing freely and obtaining just the effect he desires to produce.

Insistence should be laid on effort that is intelligent, slow, and painstaking. The student should work with concentrated will. Every day some little detail of technique must be improved; every day, some slight progress must be felt. Suddenly this accumulation of slight improvements is found to be a big leap ahead. Tone is developed and strengthened, execution becomes more musical because the player is more capable of solving the technical problems ever appearing in the works of the great masters. We must listen to ourselves, judge ourselves, make incessant correction. This is the secret, and certainly there is nothing new in it. Georges Mathias, my own eminent professor, whose technique was truly miraculous, was wont to add this piece of advice: 'Listen to yourself with another's ears.'

II.

The quality most appreciated in a player is expression, a precious faculty inherent in our very organism. Unless we are naturally sensitive, no one can ever teach us to interpret feelings and emotions with the right expression. Nor must expression be confused with sentimentality or with mannerism. Nature and simplicity invariably prove more effective than affectation, the parody of feeling.

There exists a mysterious link between the performer and the listening public. Possibly some uneducated audiences will appreciate a virtuoso who, under the deplorable pretext of producing a greater effect, indulges in eccentricities of style, parodying, as above stated, genuine and noble expression by frequently grotesque exaggerations and gestures. But when those who really love music listen to such an interpretation, the performer will find that he can no longer make his effect. Take an artist with a truly musical soul, who is obedient to his own impressions, and can be tender or simple, naïve or passionate, animated or pathetic—such an artist as Anton Rubinstein in the past and Paderewski at the present — and any public, whether cultured or uncultured, will come under the spell.

But indeed my examples are badly chosen, for we do not find a Rubinstein or a Paderewski seated at every pianoforte, and genius divines everything. Fortunately certain other artists, capable of earnest reflection, can fathom a composer's intentions and interpret him simply and naturally. There are but few of them, whereas the number of those who delight in distorting everything by their bad taste is legion.

In these days, it is an insult to offer advice. The youngest pianists are great innovators, creators of schools! Talent may be acquired by work; but talent is not in question. They think they possess genius, and that work can but thwart it.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

In a letter which appears on page 833 of this issue, Mr. E. W. Organ lumps me with those who judge music chiefly by the name on the title-page. He says:

> When I think of some of the dreary classics, which only misplaced worship to great names keeps alive, then I say, 'Poor "Feste"!' and my sympathy goes out to him in his warped imagination.

If Mr. Organ had found sufficient patience to read this monthly article of mine fairly regularly during the past few years, he would know that my attitude is exactly opposite. Time and again I have groused at the over-frequent performance of the feebler works of the classical composers. I have even got into hot water as a result, some of my best friends calling me 'Philistine,' and one peeved reader in Ireland going so far as to threaten me with assault and battery because of my views on some of Beethoven's worst lapses. An enthusiastic Bachite, I have incurred similar disgrace by trying to show that certain of John Sebastian's organ works might well be dropped from the repertory in favour of better and neglected music by other composers. And I was accused of a terrible fall from grace when, instead of joining in the cheers over the feat of a recitalist who played all Bach's organ works from memory, I pointed out that in doing so he had wasted his own and his hearers' time over some that were not worth playing. So I can assure Mr. Organ that my withers are unwrung.

But I welcome his letter, because it gives me a peg on which to hang a few more remarks on snobbery in music. At the beginning of the post-war period (in my absent-minded way I had almost called it peace) there were signs that musicians intended to think for themselves, and to judge music strictly on its merits, refusing to be nose-led by cults, booms, and propaganda. But time has shown that in the mass they are as bad as ever. Only the directions have changed. Many of us are as snobbish over Holst and Vaughan Williams as our fathers were over a German classic; as sheep-like over Byrd as the Victorians were over Handel and Mendelssohn. And the same holds good all round. What pianoforte recitalist would dare to drop one of the usual names in his programme (Bach-Liszt, Brahms, Chopin, Schumann, Debussy) in favour of, say, Mendelssohn, Henselt, Dvorák, Raff, or Grieg? Yet it would not be difficult to make several groups of delightful pieces by these neglected composers. The recital audience knows nothing of Henselt, for instance, beyond his 'Si ois[eau] j'étais.' His Studies can hold their own beside all but the very pick of Chopin's, yet is there a pianist bold enough to play a group of the best of them in preference to a group of the least striking of Chopin's? Vocal recitalists are as bad. Grieg, for example, wrote many beautiful songs, but how often do we hear them? The fact is, these composers are not in fashion at the moment. When their turn comes we shall probably have a surfeit of them, just as we have long had a good deal too much of certain works by Liszt and Chopin, and of the Tausig-Liszt-Busoni arrangements of a few of Bach's organ works.

Similarly, Elizabethan music is being fatally overdone. In saying this, I risk being accused of lacking in appreciation of that splendid school, so I hasten to add that over a long period during which various choral societies kindly allowed me to conduct them, madrigals by Gibbons, Morley, Weelkes, and others had a due share in our programmes. That is to say, we did a few, mixing them with modern music in such a way that both types gained by the contrast; and we made our selection critically, choosing them because they were fine things, not because they were Elizabethan or Tudor. Well do I remember the impression made on a little Kennington choral society by Gibbons's 'What is our life?'—so much so that we had to include it in our list for the following season. As that was about twenty years ago, readers can understand our smiling at the fuss being made over this work in some exalted quarters to-day. If a little choir of middle-class and working folk in South-East London could easily obtain copies in those far-off days, and sing it to their own and their audience's enjoyment, what hindered the big-wigs in choralism from doing the same thing? Nothing but the fact that the fashion of the moment lay in other directions. (I fancy our crack a cappella choirs were just then very busy with Cornelius, Hegar, and Reger.) Of course we are all grateful to those who are making the whole of the Elizabethan output accessible, but there are plenty of signs that owing to the lack of discrimination in the choice of items for public performance (and especially as test-pieces in competition festivals) the revival will be followed by a bad slump. I have heard and seen small country choirs and audiences at competitions bored beyond disguise by madrigals and motets that obviously owed their choice to their having been written in the time of Eliza. It would have been easy to find better works by (hold tight!) some early Victorian composers, but the composers' names were of course a fatal bar. Such a perfect little piece of simple a cappella music as Ouseley's 'How goodly are thy tents,' for example, would be taboo among the musical élite of to-day. One could readily make a list of similar good things that are sniffed at merely because their composers were born in the wrong reign. The fact is, we have reached a stage when an Elizabethan crudity (or even dullness) is preferred to the beauty of a later and less fashionable period. (Apropos of Ouseley, we saw in last month's Musical Times correspondence columns how that fine musician and benefactor to the art was recently dismissed as a 'sticky square-toes' by a writer who, as musician and scholar, was not fit to black his boots.)

There is a similarly blind worship of Mozart to-day. Recently a devotee told us that Mozart was the most inspired of all the composers, and that every note he wrote was pure gold—a lyrical flight that seems to have overlooked the tinkling pianoforte sonatas (only a few of which are worth playing to-day) and the boring cadenzas and repetitions and complacent padding of the weaker of the concertos. We are told, too, that all his brighter works are 'the champagne of music.' This is true of the best of it, but some of us are so carried away by the name on the bottle that we fail to distinguish whether the brew is champagne or merely aerated water. Had it been labelled Sussmayer or Dittersdorf. . . . There is a stack of music by Mozart—choral, operatic, orchestral, and pianoforte—that would have been shelved long ago had it been signed by a third-rate composer of his day. When it is shelved, Mozart's reputation will be the more secure. We can hardly have too many hearings of the works written in his inspired moments, whereas repeated performances of those that were merely the glib jottings of his 'off' days can only be given at the cost of his fame in the long run, and by neglecting better work by other composers. I honestly believe that we should do much to popularise good music if for a few years we merely marked time with our propaganda on behalf of the great composers, and made a point of giving a show to the best of that mass of excellent and attractive music that lies between the classics and the frankly popular. There must be hosts of good things that are at present killed from above and below—from above by the classics, from below by the 'Monastery Garden' type of thing. And killed they will remain until we shed our snobbishness, and realise that a second-grade composer at his best may easily rise a good bit above a first-grade composer at his worst.

What is snobbery, by the way? I find myself wondering when 'Sinjon Wood,' in Musical Opinion, discussing Mr. Holbrooke's recent book, says, 'To criticise it for alleged slack grammar, like a writer in the Musical Times does, is useless snobbery.' Why alleged? Surely the examples given were proof enough. And why should not a book be criticised on its literary style? Does 'Sinjon Wood' think it snobbish to criticise a musical work or performance on its technical side? Similarly, Mr. Sydney Grew, in The Musical Standard, is very much shocked at Mr. Ernest Newman's Sunday Times article on the book. But surely both these Holbrookians miss the point. If Josef (or does it happen to be Joseph just now?) writes a book and leads off by asserting in so many words that the writers on music don't know their job, he must not be pained, or even surprised, if they retaliate by pointing out that Joseph (or Josef) is even less qualified than themselves. There is nothing snobbish or unfair in their doing so. I believe Mr. Holbrooke is so fond of fighting that he is not likely to complain if his opponents refuse to turn the other cheek. In which case, Messrs. 'Sinjon Wood' and Grew needn't be pained on his behalf.

Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake' - - J. S. Bach

Arranjed for the organ by the composer himself from a movement in 1 of the church cantatas. It is supposed that Bach had in mind the parable of the foolish virjins, and that the beautiful melody given to the ryt hand, described by Walford Davies as one of the most spacius melodies in music, is intended to typify worldly pleasures which allured the virjins from watching for the bridegroom. In sterner tones, the frases of the chorale 'Sleepers, awake; a voice is calling' ar herd, sometimes interrupting, sometimes blending with the more seductiv theme.

When I read the above on a recital programme sent me from a correspondent in America, I gave the compositor the chief credit. A second glance, however, showed in the top corner the words: 'Simpler Spelling.' So I was not surprised to read that another work was ful of caracter and orijinality, that Boëllmann died at a very erly aje, that a certain work was of an effectiv tipe, and so forth. But why call the spelling 'simple'? There can be no real simplicity without consistency, so this reformer shud have the curij of his opinyuns, and go the hole hog with 'parabul,' 'butiful,' 'plezures,' 'theem,' &c. However, he wil probibly hav no more than 1 or 2 disipuls, for it is rely a trubil to spel in his cranky way. It may be Nu Speling, but it is not simpul.

Apropos of organ music, what was Dr. Macpherson's Bach solo on the opening night of the 'Proms'? One paper gave the Passacaglia and Fugue; another 'the monumental Fugue in B minor'; and a third credited the player with 'a stately and vigorous performance of the Fugue in D.' On the face of things, it doesn't seem very hard to distinguish between a Passacaglia, a Fugue in B minor, and one of a totally different character in D.

The following advertisements, which appeared in an American journal, The Bill-board, are quoted here for the benefit of readers who may wish for models:

A Real Dance Drummer, now with fast resort band, wishes change. Can read and fake. Play hot rhythm at all times. Do a little singing and can take red hot chorus on kazoo. Box XX.

College Trombonist.—Aug. 7 to Labor Day. Sweet, sock breaks and choruses. Young, Tuxedo. N. L., Bloomington, Ind.

Dance Drummer at Liberty—Six years' experience. Have good outfit. Only reliable orchestras considered. Young, single, tuxedo. Cut the stuff. C. T., Caddo Gap, Ark.

Drummer, Tymps, Xylophone, Double trumpet and sing blues plenty. Read anything, fake plenty sock; age 23; union; go anywhere. Have run own vaudeville band. I don't misrepresent. L. B., Calmar, Iowa.

I began to make a translation, but fell badly at 'sock breaks,' and gave it up.

We have lately heard so much concerning America's wonderful orchestras and huge audiences that we are apt to be misled as to America's real position in the musical world. Mr. Henry T. Finck utters some home truths in an interview headed 'American Music Approaches its Waterloo.' Here are a few of them:

Musically, America is still an infant. . . . It is humiliating to admit that for a nation of a hundred million persons, spending more for music than any other nation on the face of the earth, we have only one noted composer for the pianoforte [MacDowell]. And yet we make the best pianofortes in the world—but not decent music for them.

Mr. Finck holds that radio and 'jazz' are the 'last straws' in music's undoing:

The radio is ushering in a new musical age—the destruction of music in America. It is degrading and disgracing music. The better music is impossible on the radio. The phenomenal growth of the radio is due to the fact that a great many European artists are being driven to our shores on account of economic pressure, and also because the radio enables people to listen to music at home without paying for it. Heaven only knows where we are being led by this radio craze! And as for jazz, it makes me sick to think of it. We have very few creators here—and the cacophonists are doing their worst to destroy what little interest there is in serious music.

He ranges from gloom to hope:

Jazz is doomed to die, so I do not worry about it, except in the damage it does before it dies.

Music as we know it is a dying art. It has lived for less than four hundred years. It is now dying out at the top.

But we need not feel badly about the future of music in this country. . . . So let us be optimistic, and hope that the present slump is only temporary, and will be followed by a tidal wave of musical renaissance in America. With all the financial resources at our command we can make America the greatest musical country in the world in the near future.

But this hopeful reference to America's 'financial resources' doesn't square with his statement elsewhere:

Yet why this poverty of music in the richest country in the world? The question itself contains its own answer. We are too rich, and it is our very prosperity that stands in the way of our musical development.

Well, that is a form of trouble that may easily be put right. If a little more consideration for this country in the matter of War debts will help on America's music by reducing those impeding riches we on this side are ready to co-operate.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XI.—Thomas Tallis

So much has been written of Tallis, and so ample are the biographical data, that it would appear superfluous to include him in the present series. Nevertheless, for the sake of those who are interested in later Tudor composers, and would wish that a short sketch of this 'Father of English Cathedral Music' should not be omitted, I have yielded to the suggestion of many valued friends, as in the case of the preceding article on Tye, merely premising that excellent accounts of Tallis will be found in Dr. Ernest Walker's 'History of Music in England,' and in Mr. Henry Davey's 'History of English Music,' as well as in the second edition of the indispensable 'Grove.'

Thomas Tallis was born about the year 1510, and was probably a chorister of St. Paul's or of the Chapel Royal. He was organist of Waltham Abbey from 1532 to 1540, and at the dissolution of the monasteries was given a solatium of '20*s.* for wages, and 20*s.* for reward.' Almost immediately his services were secured for the Chapel Royal, of which he was a Gentleman from 1540 till his death, and it is fortunate that he brought with him from Waltham Abbey the valuable theoretical treatises now known in the British Museum as the Lansdowne MS. 763, bearing his autograph, 'Thomas Tallys.' We are safe in dating some of Tallis's finest works to the years 1540-59, and he had many brilliant pupils, including Byrd and Preston.

Mr. Henry Davey tells us that 'we hear no more of Tallis [after 1540] till 1557, when Queen Mary granted him, together with Thomas [an error for Richard] Bowyer, Master of the Children, a lease for twenty-one years of the Manor of Minster-in-Thanet,' but we find his name in the list of those who received livery at the Funeral of Henry VIII. (February 16, 1547) and at the Coronation of Edward VI. (February 10, 1547). He received his fee as Gentleman of the Chapel in 1552 (Stowe 571), and he was seventh in seniority among the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal (Thomas Byrd being fourth) at the Coronation of Queen Mary, on September 17, 1554.

Had Tallis written nothing but his 'Lamentations of Jeremias' (especially that for Holy Thursday) he would deserve immortal praise; and Dr. Ernest Walker alludes to his 'astonishing seven-part 'Miserere' canon, and his wonderful tour de force, the forty-part Motet, 'Spem in aliam non habui' (first published by my friend Dr. A. H. Mann, of King's College, Cambridge, in 1888).

From 1570 to 1585 Tallis was conjoint organist, with Byrd, of the Chapel Royal, and in 1575 the two 'parents of British music' published their 'Cantiones Sacrae,' sixteen compositions being by Tallis, and eighteen by Byrd. In a MS. copy of these Motets at Christ Church, Oxford, the following entries appear: 'Talis es et tantus Tallisi musicus, ut si fata sene auferrent, musica muta foret'; and also 'Tallisius magno dignus honore senex.' It is remarkable that the best of Tallis's 'Cantiones' were afterwards adapted to English words, and hence a wrong opinion has been perpetuated that Tallis belonged to the Anglican Church. In reality, as Sir Richard Terry writes:

> So far from Tallis being considered the founder of the Anglican School of Music, he would be more properly described as one of the last of the Catholic composers . . . . the bulk of his music was written for the Catholic Liturgy; and the greater part of his English compositions are adaptations by other and later hands of the Catholic works, a meagre residuum being all that he ever contributed specifically to the Anglican service. ('Catholic Church Music,' p. 187.)

Briefly, the preponderance of Tallis's Latin services over the few English examples can only connote that he adhered to the ancient faith, like his collaborator Byrd, while most of his 'English' Anthems are later adaptations. As to the latter, Sir Richard follows the oft-quoted statement that Tallis's 'All people that on earth do dwell' was written for Anglican use; but the tune is of pre-Reformation origin (it was not composed by Bourgeois, as Bishop Frere would have us believe), and is an adaptation of an old French air of the 15th century ('Chansons du XV^e^ Siècle,' Paris, 1875). It is well to add that Tallis's 'Ordinal' is an adaptation of an English Christmas Carol of the 14th or 15th century, 'Thys ender nygth,' as admitted by Bishop Frere.

In particular the following fine English anthems are but adaptations from Tallis's Latin Motets: 'I call and cry' (O sacrum convivium), 'Blessed be Thy Name' and 'Great and marvellous' (Mihi autem nimis), 'With all our hearts' (Salvator mundi), 'Discomfit them, O Lord' and 'Wipe away' (Absterge Domine), 'Come, Holy Ghost' (Veni Creator).

It has been repeated ad nauseam that Tallis composed no secular music. Doubtless this error arose from Hawkins's statement, but we have at least two specimens of his songs, viz., the four-part songs, 'Like as the doleful dove' and 'Fond youth is a bubble.' He also wrote for the organ and virginals, as well as for the lute. His two figured plainsongs, 'Felix namque,' for the virginals, written in 1562 and 1564, are goodly specimens of the advanced state of virginal technique, and are supposed to have inspired Cabezon (who visited London in 1584) in that direction.

C

Five anthems by Tallis were included in Day's 'Certaine Notes' in 1560, two of them being reprinted in Day's 'Whole Book of Psalmes,' in 1563, and the whole five included in 'Morning and Evening Prayer' (1565). Nine of his tunes are included in Archbishop Parker's Psalter (1567), while ten of his Motets are in 'Cantiones Sacrae' (1575). But it is also well to note that among composers in the Bodleian Library MS., Mus. Sch. e 420-2, as pointed out by the Rev. Dr. Fellowes ('William Byrd,' Oxford University Press, 1923), are services by Tallis, Causton, Heath, Shepherd, Johnson, and Ockland. The date of this MS., which is in the autograph of Taverner—according to the Rev. Anselm Hughes—is almost certainly 1548, and it contains ten anonymous Masses (English), four Settings of Magnificat, three of Nunc Dimittis, and a Prayer for King Edward VI. Prefixed to the printed copy of 'Cantiones Sacrae' (1575) are commendatory Latin verses by Richard Mulcaster and Ferdinando Richardson, and a short anonymous one, with a short Latin poem, by Tallis and Byrd.

In 1577 Tallis described himself as 'aged,' and as 'having served the Queen and her ancestors almost forty years'; and on June 27, 1577, Elizabeth ordered that lands to the value of £30 a year should be bestowed on Tallis and Byrd (Hatfield MSS., vol. ii.). Eight years later the great composer passed away, on November 23, 1585, and was buried in Greenwich Parish Church. There was an epitaph engraved on a brass plate in a monument before the altar rails of the church, and, though the church was pulled down in the 18th century and all trace of the brass plate lost, the wording was printed in Strype's continuation of Stowe's 'Survey of London,' and is here reproduced:

> Enterred here doth ly a worthy wight,
> Who for long tyme in musick bore the bell;
> His name to shew was Thomas Tallis hyght,
> In honest vertuous lyff he dyd excell.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> He served long tyme in Chappel with grete prayse,
> Fouer sovereygnes reignes (a thing not often seene),
> I mean King Henry and Prince Edward's dayes,
> Queen Marie and Elizabeth our Quene.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> He maryed was, though children he had none,
> And lyv'd in love full three and thirty yeres.
> With loyal spouse, whose name yclept was Jone,
> Who here entomb'd, him company now bears.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> As he dyd lyve, so also dyd he dy,
> In myld and quyet sort, O happy man,
> To God ful oft for mercy dyd he cry,
> Wherefore he lyves, let Death do what he can.

The well-known portrait of Tallis was engraved by G. van der Gucht for Nicholas Haym, who had intended to include it as an illustration in a projected 'History of Music,' in 1726.

Music in the Foreign Press

SCHUMANN'S INNER LIFE

Reviewing a French book published under this title (its author is Robert Pitrou), Jean Chantavoine writes in the Courrier Musical, July 1:

> M. Pitrou's plan is interesting, but only partly carried out. The main point—the close relationship between Schumann's life and his music, and more especially between his nature and his musical style—remains almost untouched. When an attempt is made to study Schumann's psychology, a first problem will be to determine the nature of Schumann's disease: not merely to label it, but in order to study its chief symptom, the dual personality which Schumann developed under its influence. This duality, although it asserted itself chiefly during periods of crisis, is an almost constant feature of Schumann's life. We see Schumann, as a youth, balancing between music and poetry; and later between composition and criticism. And almost always we see him hesitating, uncertain, divided within himself. His inner life is not a meditation, but a dialogue. It is also a drama; not the robust, well-contrasted drama of Beethoven's soul, but a stealthy drama, governed by dark powers. This leads to a third problem, Which was the machinery of his inspiration? In connection with this, it should be noted that it is never the case with him of poetic data suggesting music, but, on the contrary, of music already written suggesting images or reminiscences. His music seems to teem with 'inner voices'—the voices that haunted him to obsession. It is indeed obsession that his style reveals at times; and here and there it reveals paramnesia in the reappearances—in fragmentary, elusive forms—of favourite motives, which seem to be asking themselves whether they are part of the original inspiration of the moment or of some obscure dream from which they loom a while. All these problems call for study, if Schumann's inner life is indeed to be disclosed.

STRAVINSKY'S PIANOFORTE SONATA

In the August Revue Musicale, Arthur Lourié examines Stravinsky's new Pianoforte Sonata, which he describes as instinct with significance. His conclusion is:

> This work will soon be known throughout the world. Let no one be deceived by its simplicity and perspicuity; let all realise the extraordinary power of its dialectics. Despite its fragile appearance, this Sonata is truly monumental by virtue of the vigour and accuracy of its definition.

CACCINI

In the same issue appears the second part of Robert Marchal's very instructive essay on Giulio Caccini.

JANACEK'S 'THE WILY FOX'

Also in the same issue, Henry Prunières writes in praise of 'The Wily Fox,' an opera by Janacek, recently produced at Prague, in which animal scenes and scenes of country life, realistic or burlesque, alternate felicitously. It is especially Janacek's melodic invention, he says, that is wonderful. The work is one of the most live and attractive of this period.

SIC VOS NON VOBIS

In L'Orgue et les Organistes (June 15), referring to the new bow instruments devised by Leo and Léon Sir (these instruments, grouped under the collective designation 'Nouveau Dixtuor à Cordes,' are well worthy of attention; several composers, including Honegger and Milhaud, have composed for them), André Laurent writes:

> In 1922 I acquired a complete set of these instruments, which were successfully used by us on various occasions. Meanwhile one heard of a certain Emilien Perotti, who was giving concerts in Germany and in Italy, at which he introduced new instruments of his own invention. It eventually transpired—and it was proved by the maker's bills and by letters from Perotti himself—that these instruments had been bought from Sir. And the strings used were of the types determined by my own experiments.

AN UNKNOWN PORTRAIT OF GLUCK

In the Revue de Musicologie (August), Ch. van den Borren describes a pastel, presumably by Duplessis (and belonging to M. Maurice Despret, of Brussels), which obviously is a portrait of Gluck.

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

In Melos (July) appear essays by Siegfried Gunther on 'Form-Problems of New Instrumental Music,' with special reference to examples by Alban Berg, Jarnach, and Stravinsky; by H. H. Stuckenschmidt on 'Twelve-tone Music'; and by Hermann Erpf on 'New Problems of Instrumentation.' Heinrich Strobel writes on Hindemith's latest chamber works.

The second July issue of the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik contains notices on the composers represented at the Donaueschingen Music Festival. Krenek, W. Weismann, Aare Merikanto (the son of Oscar Merikanto), Kaminski, H. Eisler, Max Butting, E. Ermatinger, P. Dessau, and Otto Siegl are the least known of these in this country.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

Occasional Notes

A reader sends us the following advertisement from a provincial paper:

> S. James . . . . . ORGANIST WANTED—plenty of vigour and vim. Nov. 1. Duties—to play hymns and chants correctly and C.E. Service, etc., etc., and assist Mr. —— ——, choirmaster. New Chancel organ being subscribed. Two simple services on Sunday and one weekly choir practice, and a few extra services only. Salary, £25 per annum. No blunderbores need apply.—Rev. —— ——.

The Vicar himself is by way of being a musician, judging from an advertisement which appears in another part of the same paper. Nor is he lacking in the vigour and vim—not to say pep—that he demands of his organist:

> QUESTION—Why can't you make your pianoforte sing like the artists do on the wireless? Answer—Because of the tub-thumping methods of teaching that leaves the grey matter in your head undeveloped and prevents musical brain waves. Give your melodic soul a chance. Pianoforte groups taught free of charge for three months, and then passed for examination to Prof. —— ——, Trinity Coll., London. Note: this advt. concerns the intelligentia [sic]. Spencer grand pianoforte.—Apply Rev. —— ——, M.A., the Vicarage, —— ——.

We suggest that the Trinity College authorities should ask this clerical humorist to refrain from such questionable use of the name of one of its professors. We suppress the Vicar's name and address, as we have no wish to give him a free advertisement. But we will supply the particulars to any of our readers who feel that three months' free development of their grey matter will give their melodic soul a chance. They must, however, satisfy us that they belong to the 'intelligentia.'

The sonority of Yorkshire voices has been ascribed to a variety of causes—broad vowels, climate, moors, and what not. Here is another reason to add to the collection:

> Yorkshire folk are better vocalists than instrumentalists, and I attribute their wonderful voices to the fact that when they sing in the factories they have to use their full powers to make themselves heard above the noise of machinery—

a method that seems likely to develop quantity at the expense of quality. Moreover, the explanation does not cover the very considerable number of Yorkshire singers who work in offices and other places devoid of this stimulating uproar. But the speaker, Miss H. Claiborne Dixon, is a native of the county, and so may be presumed to know the facts. Like a true daughter of the North, she went on to add, 'Voices in the South are pinched and thin in comparison.' For Miss Dixon's information we point out that Southern folk are better instrumentalists than vocalists, and we attribute their ludicrously feeble voices to the fact that when they sing in the bathroom they have to use the minimum of power in order not to drown the noise of the waste-pipe.

On page 830 appears a letter from Mr. Norman Stone, in which he sets out to put us right concerning one or two points in our July 'Occasional Note' on the Gibbons celebrations. As a member of the delightful 'English Singers' Mr. Stone is, of course, to be listened to with respect when speaking of madrigals. His letter, however, is merely one more example of the kind of thing we protested against in our Note, namely, the assumption in certain quarters that nothing was known of Elizabethan and Tudor music or of its interpretation until the last year or two. We have no desire to belittle the splendid work Dr. Fellowes has done in this connection: our review columns have frequently borne testimony to the admiration that we share with musicians in general. But we fancy he must sometimes ask to be saved from his over-enthusiastic friends. Mr. Stone, for example, speaking of Elizabethan choral music, says that Dr. Fellowes has 'rediscovered the secret of its performance.' It is quite conceivable that if there was ever a 'secret,' it has never been entirely lost, and, therefore, needed no rediscovery. The type of Elizabethan music chiefly concerned (because it is the most widely known and performed) is the madrigal. Now it happens that the Oriana Madrigal Choir has lately celebrated its twenty-first year. Was this admirable Choir unable to sing madrigals as they ought to be sung until Dr. Fellowes 'rediscovered' that secret some years after the Choir was formed? Mr. Stone implies that the Doctor's book, 'The English Madrigal Composers,' was the first to treat of the 'interplay of rhythms . . . based solely on the metre of the verbal phrase.' But this volume was published as recently as 1921. If Mr. Stone will turn to a book entitled 'Madrigal Singing,' by Charles Kennedy Scott, published by Breitkopf & Härtel in 1907 (fourteen years before 'The English Madrigal Composers'), he will find this question of rhythm discussed, together with other points concerning the madrigal and its performance. Mr. Scott wrote this work mainly with a view to putting it in the hands of his singers in order to save time at rehearsals, so both in its inception and carrying-out it is, above all, practical. In the face of these facts, it is absurd to speak of the 'secret' being rediscovered in 1921. Nor do we suppose that Mr. Kennedy Scott claims to have rediscovered it in 1907. His Oriana Choir was (we believe) a successor to the Magpie Madrigal Choir, an excellent body for which Stanford and Parry, among other composers, wrote some of their best small choral works. There must be many of our readers who will agree that the concerts given at St. James's Hall by this Choir over a long period were (like those of the 'Oriana') among the most delightful of London musical events. Were the singers, their conductor (Lionel Benson), and their regular audiences (which included perhaps a larger percentage of distinguished musicians than any other concerts of the time) all ignorant of the principles of madrigal singing? And, after all, what are these principles in the main but those governing all choral music, whether by Byrd, Bach, or Bax? A free, live rhythm, attention to the interplay of the various voices, and regard for the verbal accent—these qualities are demanded by all fine choral music, past and present, and we may be sure that they have always been present when the conductor has known his job. There was never any 'secret' in it; like other branches of interpretation, it was open as day to the performer of imagination.

The last paragraph of Mr. Stone's letter contains an implication that must not go unchallenged. He says, in effect, that the spirit of the Elizabethan madrigal writers will be recaptured only by such choralists as use Dr. Fellowes's edition of the works. This slighting of the labours of all other editors, among them being such scholarly and practical workers as G. E. P. Arkwright, Lionel Benson, Barclay Squire, Kennedy Scott, Elliot Button, John E. West, Philip Heseltine, R. R. Terry, and others, is an example of the length to which some of the revivalists will go. Mr. Stone, as a public singer of madrigals, ought to be aware of the fact that long before the Carnegie Trust and Stainer & Bell were heard of, excellent editions of madrigals had been published by Novello, Joseph Williams, Breitkopf & Härtel, and, no doubt, other firms as well. And, in fairness to these publishers, it should be borne in mind that their early issues carried little prospect of anything but loss. The demand was small, and the producers had no millionaire at their back. Let it be admitted that some of these early editions were not free from error. There was at least a desire to keep the works alive, and both editors and publishers deserve credit for doing their best under conditions that were always difficult and rarely lucrative. But so far from receiving credit, they suffer the usual fate of pioneers: critics point to the mistakes that are inevitable in the early stages of a revival, and forget the enterprise, while later workers profit by the slips. Moreover, so far as the editions of at least one firm—Novello—are concerned, the early errors have always been corrected as soon as possible, with the result that the new editions put forth by the house will hold their own with any so far as textual accuracy is concerned; and on the score of convenience of lay-out and print, we believe they have no equal.

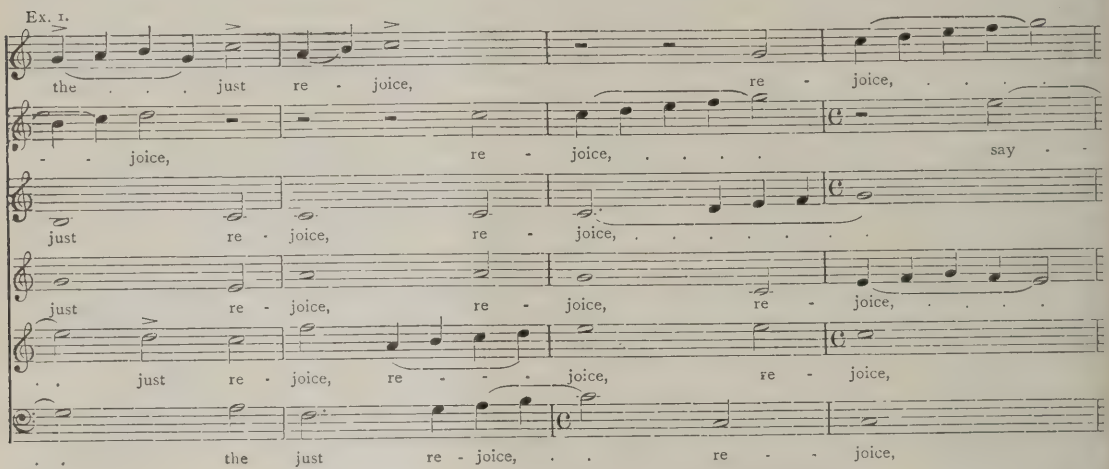
During the past few years other publishers have produced capital editions of Elizabethan choral works, e.g., Curwen, Chester, the Oxford Press, Enochs, &c. Is Mr. Stone honestly of opinion that all their enterprise must be damned in favour of the subsidised edition of Dr. Fellowes? If his words don't mean that, they mean nothing.

However, since Mr. Stone lays such stress on the value, from the performers' point of view, of Dr. Fellowes's edition, neither he nor Dr. Fellowes can reasonably complain if we venture on a criticism.

It is an unpleasant task thus to criticise the work of one who has done so much for English music as Dr. Fellowes. We do it in as impersonal a manner as possible, and with no other motive than that of obtaining fair play for editors and publishers who have done and are doing their share in the revival of early English music. If Mr. Stone's letter were a solitary example of the injustice against which our protest is made, we should ignore it. But it is only one of a good many signs that the musical public generally is badly in need of information concerning some aspects of the Elizabethan revival.

So far as textual accuracy is concerned, the edition is no doubt above reproach. But much more is required of a performing version than fidelity to the original, and we feel that Dr. Fellowes and his publishers fall short where the practical needs of the average choir are concerned. The paper is generally poor, and the pianoforte part is printed in type that is not only uncomfortably small, but far from clear. In regard to the setting-out of the music, the edition suffers from some unpractical and pedantic touches. We have space for only one or two examples. In Byrd's 'This day Christ was born' occurs the following passage :

Ex. 1.



the . . . just re - joice, re - joice, ...
- - joice, re - joice, ... say - - just re - joice, re - joice, ...
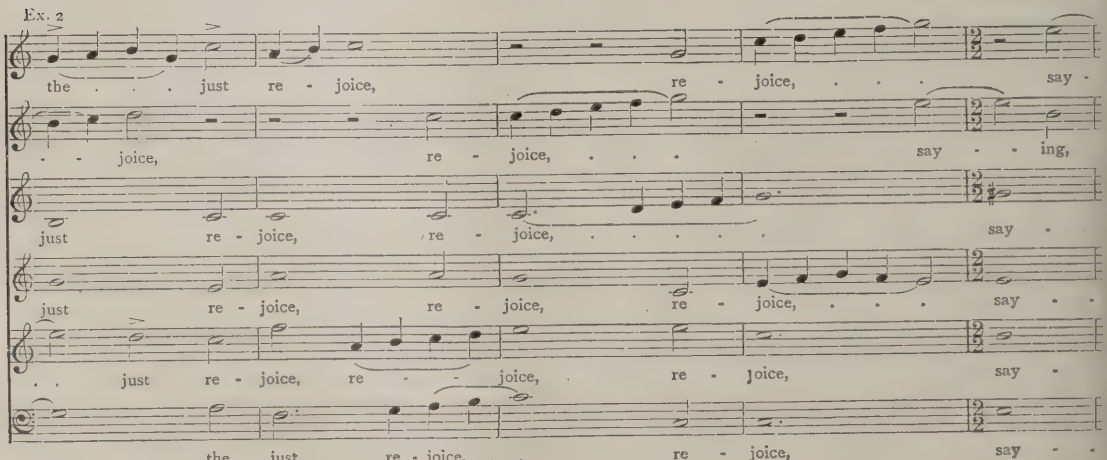
just re - joice, re - joice, re - joice, ...
. . just re - joice, re - - - joice, re - joice,
. . the just re - joice, . . re - - joice,

A foot-note, referring to bar 3 of this quotation, says :

> The note values and time-signatures are here exactly transcribed from the original edition. The bass and cantus secundus return to the rhythm of two minims in a bar in anticipation of the other vocal parts, but undoubtedly the 2nd minim beat in these two bars was sung coincidently with the 3rd beat in the other bars.

Undoubtedly. Then why not print the passage as it ought to be sung? What point is there in "exactly transcribing' the original notation when such notation merely obscures the composer's intention? Had Dr. Fellowes been a practical chorus-master, as well as an expert in Elizabethan music, he would have seen the advisability of writing the passage as follows :

Ex. 2



the . . . just re - joice, re - joice, . . . say -
- - joice, re - joice, . . . say - - ing, just re - joice, re - joice, ... say -
just re - joice, re - joice, re - joice, . . . say - -
. . just re - joice, re - - joice, re - joice, say -
. . the just re - joice, . . re - joice, say - -

In fact, a choral conductor of our acquaintance has painfully altered his copies to read as in Ex. 2, in order to avoid waste of time and labour at rehearsals.

This Byrd work contains many examples of changes of time-signatures notified in an inconvenient manner, as in Ex. 1. Surely such changes should be shown in all the parts at once. Again, at the beginning of the work the unit is the same in voice and pianoforte parts, but on p. 5 the minim is used in the former and the crotchet in the latter. Why not use the crotchet in the voice parts as well, and so make the direction 𝅗𝅥=𝅗𝅥 unnecessary? With the consistent use of the crotchet as the unit, the singer needs to be told no more than that ♩=♩ throughout. A similar lack of consistency in the treatment of the vocal and pianoforte parts is seen in Dr. Fellowes's edition of Gibbons's 'What is our life?' where the alternations of 2-2 and 3-2 time are notified in the pianoforte part only. If (owing to a natural doubt as to whether 𝅗𝅥=𝅗𝅥 or 𝅗𝅥=𝅗𝅥.) some singers don't constantly trip at the time changes on p. 10 (which, to make matters worse, occur at a turn-over), they will be lucky. Up to this point the time has been 2-2, and only the pianist is clearly apprised of the changes to 3-4 and 3-2. (The pianist happens to be the performer who matters least, as he is on the scene in the preliminary rehearsals only, if at all.) We can see much valuable time being wasted, and tempers frayed, by Dr. Fellowes's method of laying-out this passage:

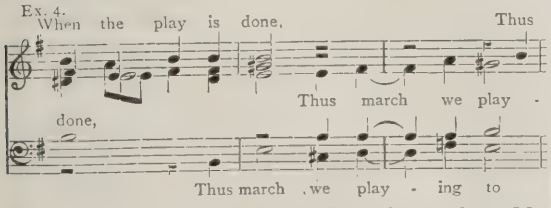
Ex. 3.

Compare this with the simple plan adopted by Mr. Barclay Squire:

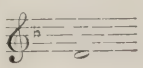
Ex. 4.



(Mr. Stone may be surprised to hear that Mr. Barclay Squire edited a long series of madrigals, including some of the finest of the Elizabethan examples, over twenty years ago.)

Here is another practical point: Mr. Barclay Squire puts the music in E minor, and sets it out for S.S.A.T.B. Dr. Fellowes's version is for S.S.A.(or T.)T.B., and so asks choirs to divide in their weakest part. Moreover, the middle part is noted as if for tenors: if it is taken by altos they will be in the uncomfortable position of having to sing an octave lower than written. Furthermore, the part lies awkwardly for them. At one point they will be called on to sing:

Ex. 5.



This is comfortable enough—on paper; but the actual note will be:

Ex. 6.

Yet all this inconvenience—division of the weakest part, re-arrangement of voices for such a contingency as this very low alto, &c.—may be easily avoided (as it was by Mr. Barclay Squire) by simply refusing to be a slave to the original copy.

It is true that the reasons for the adoption of the methods of which we complain are set forth by Dr. Fellowes in the introduction of the first volume of his edition, and issued also in pamphlet form. But why should conductors and singers be handicapped by snags that call for explanations issued apart from the copy they are using? Nor are the explanations convincing. We give a couple of examples, choosing the two that are most easily and briefly discussed: Most musicians know that during the gradual change from the modal system to the major and minor scales, the key-signatures were frequently short of a flat or sharp. Thus, a piece in D minor showed its connection with the Dorian mode by having no flat in its signature; in G minor, it often had only one flat, and so on. Is any useful purpose served by retaining the old signature for the voice-parts, and using the modern form for the pianoforte accompaniment, as Dr. Fellowes has done?

The other point is concerned with the use of accidentals:

> It may be thought [says Dr. Fellowes] that corrective accidentals should have been printed when such corrections occur in the same bar but in another part; for instance, if B♮ is sung in one voice on the first beat of a bar, and B♭ occurs on the next beat in another part, no flat has been printed against the second note; but this plan is in accordance with the original copies, and as it is consistently followed, it ought not to cause any real difficulty to singers.

Those of our readers who are accustomed to choral work will see at once that the case of B♮ and B♭ cited by Dr. Fellowes might cause a good deal of inconvenience and waste of time. Such passages must of course be judged in relation to context, but there can be no doubt that corrective accidentals should be inserted in the majority of cases. Dr. Fellowes has naturally inserted them in the pianoforte part; singers in doubt as to accidentals will have to cast a hurried glance in that direction. (In the final page of his Introduction, Dr. Fellowes implies that difficulties arising from such anomalies of time-signature as those in Exx. 1 and 3 above may be solved in this way.)

We do not ask that choralists should be spoon-fed, nor do we believe that a 'fool-proof' edition would be possible—or even desirable. But the performance of choral music is the concern of more people than that of any other branch of the art; and many of its votaries are among the least expert of musicians so far as matters of harmony, notation, and scholarship are concerned. This being so, a performing edition should be set forth in the most convenient and understandable of ways, so far as is consistent with fidelity to the composers' intentions.

Mr. Stone's letter has been discussed at such length that no space remains for further examples. We are prepared to produce many more, if challenged to do so. For the present we sum up this part of the question by saying that, Dr. Fellowes having done a work of national importance in transcribing these works for library use, the need now is for a performing edition of the best and most practicable numbers, prepared by one who is expert in all matters regarding notation and laying-out for clearness and convenience in performance.

Finally, we remind Mr. Stone that such points as the choice of edition, and the use of bar-lines, accents, &c., are of little importance compared with a knowledge of general principles, some literary feeling, and a sense of rhythm. Some of the finest and most flexible madrigal singing we have heard during recent years was from editions prepared long ago by Lionel Benson; and we have sat through some stiff, crude, and unmadrigalian performances by competition festival choirs who were strictly enjoined, per syllabus, to use the 'Fellowes edition only.' So it is clear that the 're-capturing of the spirit of the madrigal writers' and the 'rediscovery of the secret' of madrigal singing depend on factors quite other than those set forth by Mr. Stone.

The Musical Fund Society of Philadelphia announces a competition for composers of chamber music. The prospectus states that 'every effort will be made to induce the greatest composers of to-day to enter,' and it goes on to express the view that > . . . since the death of Brahms the contributions to the chamber music literature which show any signs of permanence or more than usual excellence, have been fewer than in any other form of the art.

This seems a sweeping statement, but we do not think that many readers will, on reflection, dispute it. The modern orchestra, with its easily-achieved effects of variety and brilliance (which too often serve as substitutes for originality of thought and material), has not only hindered many composers from giving due attention to the claims of chamber music; it has also had an unfortunate influence on most of the chamber music that has been written during the past few years. Too many composers have, for example, written for string quartet with an orchestra at the back of their minds. The loss of the intimacy and finish that constitute two of the chief beauties of chamber music is not atoned for by novel effects of colour and rhythm. Probably this accounts for the fact that, although there appears to be unprecedented activity in the performance of chamber music among amateurs, and a growing appreciation of it on the part of the public, outstanding new works are few.

Let us hope that the Philadelphia competition will produce a handful of masterpieces of genuine chamber music. The prizes are unusually lavish—three, of 5,000, 3,000, and 2,000 dollars respectively. Works should be written for combinations of from three to six instruments. One of these may be the pianoforte, but the voice will not be admitted. A composer may send in several efforts, and may receive more than one prize. An unusual rule is that a composer who has no desire for any prize but the first may submit a work on those terms, stating that if his entry fails to gain first place he does not wish it to be considered further. This rule is apparently designed to meet the case of such of 'the greatest composers of to-day,' who might be deterred from entering by the prospect of figuring below some (presumably) lesser light. Ample time is allowed, the entries not closing until December 31, 1927, by which date there may be some considerable shuffling of positions among composers. The 'greatest' of two years hence may be almost unknown to-day.

Our obituary column recently contained a notice of W. B. Reynolds, music critic of the Belfast Telegraph. A representative committee has been formed with a view to expressing in a substantial way the public appreciation of Mr. Reynolds's work for art in general and music in particular. It has been decided that the most fitting form of memorial would be a fund on behalf of his widow and children. The hon. secretary of the fund is Sir Charles Brett, and subscriptions will be received by Prof. W. B. Morton, Queen's University, Belfast.

A good opening for anyone wishing to undertake a valuable piece of social and musical work (honorary) occurs in connection with the St. Cecilia Festival (a biennial concert given by a massed choir drawn from London Working Girls' Clubs). The Festival was started by the late Dr. W. G. McNaught, about fourteen years ago, and has been a flourishing event since. The post of hon. secretary has lately become vacant through the retirement, for reasons of health, of Miss Lawrence Jones. The work is mainly organization, efficient help (paid) being provided for the secretarial part of the duty. Any enthusiastic lady (preferably but not necessarily musical) who feels disposed to fill this office is asked to write to Mrs. R. Lousada, 4, Clifton Place, W.2.

Readers interested in Church choir work are reminded that in connection with the choir-training examination to be held at the R.C.O. on November 4, two lectures will be given at the College—on November 3, at 3.30, by Sir Walford Davies, and at 6.30 by Mr. Stanley Roper. Admission is free.

The National Eisteddfod each year supplies a joke which becomes historic. This year's joke was made by 'Llew Tegid,' one of the masters of ceremonies, who was conducting the rite of welcoming overseas visitors. He had gone through a list of all the countries in the world he could think of, and the guests had duly stood up to be cheered by the crowd. Everybody thought the ceremony was over, but 'Llew Tegid' said he spied a gentleman who should be called to the platform, for he was a visitor from Bardsey Island, whereat the house rocked with laughter. The point of the joke is that Bardsey is a little island about four miles distant from Pwllheli, where the Eisteddfod was held. The gentleman in question was terrified, and fled; and no one laughed more loudly than Mr. Lloyd George, who was on the platform.

An incident which gives rise to more serious reflection was that when 'Llew Tegid' invited visitors from overseas who had taken part in the Eisteddfod at Pwllheli in 1875 to stand up, four persons replied. It shows what a hold the Eisteddfod has on the imaginations of Welshmen in different parts of the world, that four elderly people—for those who were present in 1875 cannot be spring chickens now—should face a journey of many thousands of miles in order to revive old recollections.

We regret being obliged to hold over the specimen pages of the new Psalter mentioned recently in our columns. They will appear, with the Editors' Preface in the October number. The title of the work will be 'The English Psalter.'

SOME MYSTERIES AND QUERIES CONCERNING MUZIO CLEMENTI

By Orlando A. Mansfield

In one respect at least Clementi may be said to have been fortunate. He had not only an interesting personality, but he left behind him the records of a highly remarkable career. Further, it must not be forgotten that although he was born when Handel was alive, he survived Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, and Weber. As J. C. Fillmore once expressed it, he lived 'into the very sunrise of the Romantic period.' Notwithstanding this he maintained his artistic individuality both with reference to composition in general and pianoforte playing in particular. In the latter direction, as Ernst Pauer declares, he 'invented new effects, technical passages, figures, and combinations, and, like Columbus, discovered a new world'; while his Sonatas, says E. Dannreuther, were productions for which Beethoven 'had a marked predilection'—compositions which he 'placed in the front rank of works fit to engender an artistic treatment of the pianoforte.' As might reasonably be expected from such facts as these, Clementi has never lacked biographers or biographical notices. But in all these memoirs or monographs one or two facts have been omitted: there are 'missing pages' in his history. At the same time, one or two important points bearing upon Clementi as a man or as a musician have never been determined. To supply the former, and to discuss the latter, is the proposed object of this article.

As is fairly well known, after studying under such Roman masters as Buroni, Cordicelli, Carpani, and Santarelli, Clementi, in 1766, at the age of fourteen, attracted the attention of Mr. Peter Beckford, M.P., who arranged with Clementi's father, a maker of 'embossed vases and figures employed in the Catholic worship,' to take the lad to England and to bear the cost of his youthful education and maintenance. Just here occurs an important omission in the biographical narratives, not one of them, so far as our memory serves, mentioning the place of Peter Beckford's residence. This was at the little village of Stapleton, Dorsetshire, not far from the market and manufacturing town of Yeovil, Somersetshire. Ignorance on the part of some biographers has caused the person and property of Peter Beckford to be confused with that of his cousin William, the son of Alderman Beckford, of London, the wealthy West Indian merchant—the Crœsus of his time. William Beckford built the Fonthill Abbey of his day — since destroyed — and wrote the Arabian romance 'Vathek.' But although Clementi probably visited Fonthill Abbey, he never lived there, nor was William Beckford his patron. Peter Beckford, however, possessed considerable wealth and the advantages arising from 'desirable' social, literary, and artistic connections, all of which Clementi undoubtedly enjoyed to the fullest extent. Personally, Peter Beckford was noted for his writings on fox-hunting, and for his exploits in the hunting field. On his return from Italy he wrote a book entitled, 'Familiar Letters from Italy to a Friend in England,' which was published at Salisbury in 1805.

Another gap in Clementi's biography is caused by the absence of any reliable information showing how he spent his time during the five years passed under his benefactor's roof. One thing, however, is absolutely certain, namely, that Peter Beckford must have faithfully performed all his undertakings with reference to the lonely Italian lad, otherwise the latter would never have been able, at the age of eighteen, to appear in London as 'a thoroughly equipped pianist and musician,' carrying everything before him, and meeting with 'a most brilliant and hardly precedented success.' Very probably, as Stapleton was but a hundred and twenty miles from London, Clementi rode or otherwise journeyed thither during each or several of the London seasons, enjoying in the metropolis the best tuition there obtainable. At that time Johann Christian Bach, the youngest of the surviving sons of the great Sebastian, was established as the fashionable music-master in London. It is, therefore, possible that Clementi may have taken lessons from him—a supposition strengthened by the approval Bach and his elder and more honourable brother, Carl Philip Emmanuel, bestowed upon Clementi's first set of Pianoforte Sonatas, Op. 2, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, although Johann Christian declined to attempt their public performance. 'The Dictionary of Musicians,' 1824, quoting from the Quarterly Musical Review, vol. ii., asserts upon 'good authority' that Clementi's musical studies at Stapleton 'were principally employed on the works of Corelli, Alessandro Scarlatti, Handel's organ and harpsichord music, and on the Sonatas of Paradies.' The same authority further states that 'by the aid of a good library and the conversation of the family, Clementi quickly obtained a competent knowledge of the English language,' acquiring at the same time 'a proficiency in the dead and living languages, and in the whole circle of belles-lettres, which would furnish a highly instructive lesson to the rising generation.' Unfortunately our authority fails us just at this point by regretting that 'it is not in our power to communicate any particulars on so interesting a subject.' This is the more remarkable because the article was written when Clementi was in the hey-day of his powers and popularity.

But whether acquired on his own initiative or otherwise, there can be no doubt about the master's proficiency in the English language. Abraham Rainbach, in his 'Memoirs and Recollections,' issued privately in 1843, declared that Pleyel once told him that Clementi, in addition to being 'well-informed and intelligent,' spoke English 'almost like a native.' Again, in 1784, when Clementi moved to Switzerland to escape the trouble caused by his attempted elopement with the young daughter of Imbert Colomes, of Lyons, a Berne correspondent, after describing Clementi as eruditas, on account of the learnèd discussions he was able to conduct, stated that for three weeks the celebrated musician went to the Berne Library daily, 'working all day at mathematics,' and 'giving his whole time to study.' This Berne incident is but another inadequately or incorrectly reported episode in Clementi's life, and one which gave rise to the statement in Grove's 'Dictionary' that the master had actually been married no less than three times.

Another doubtful point with all Clementi's biographers is the question of his Symphonies. These—to which he was very partial—were more or less the productions of his maturer years. Commenced about 1787, continued during Haydn's visits to London in 1791 and 1794, and carried on at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society, of which Clementi was one of the founders and the first conductor, and in every case performed with remarkable success, the extraordinary fact in this connection is that only two of these Symphonies were ever published, and these by Clementi himself, under the number of Op. 18, and only an autograph sketch of another is to be found in the British Museum. Yet, between 1785 and 1832, more than twenty of his Symphonies were performed in London alone. These were received with 'the most rapturous and unqualified approbation,' and declared to lose nothing by comparison with the greatest works of the Viennese masters. Performances at Paris, and at some of the principal German musical centres, met with similar appreciation. But in spite of all this the manuscript copies of these works have absolutely and entirely disappeared, leaving scarcely 'a rack behind.' No library, private or public, can supply a copy; no information can be obtained from the Rev. Percival Clementi Smith, Clementi's surviving grandson (to whose kindness and courtesy the writer of this article is deeply indebted), nor from the descendants of William Horsley, the glee writer, to whom Clementi bequeathed the task of classifying his MSS.—the property of his widow. That the composer should have destroyed the MSS. of his Symphonies is unthinkable, although we have it upon the authority of his pupil, Ludwig Berger, that the fine Pianoforte Sonata in G minor, Op. 34, was derived in whole or part from one of these symphonies—a statement the more credible when we become acquainted with the contents of this magnificent number. Similarly, it has been thought that the splendid Sonatas in B minor and D major, forming Op. 40—the former a favourite with Madame Schumann, the latter one of the most brilliant and effective of Clementi's pianoforte writings—were but 'transcriptions or re-arrangements of works originally conceived and probably carried out for full orchestra.' At least this is the opinion of the distinguished writers of an appeal which appeared in the Musical Times of May, 1914, soliciting aid in discovering the whereabouts of the missing MSS. To this request no reply, so far as my knowledge extends, has ever been received—a matter for regret.

The life of Clementi opens with mystery—the exact day of his birth in 1752 never having been ascertained. His career closes in like manner, with the slight difference that in the latter case it is not the time or place of his passing but the accompanying circumstances that are called in question. Dr. Max Unger, Clementi's German biographer, states that the great master lived in Staffordshire before he purchased a property at Evesham, in Worcestershire. But, as a matter of fact, the Staffordshire story is an invention; the Evesham estate a tradition. Yet, strange to say, all Clementi's biographers allude to his Evesham property, and mention Elm Lodge as his particular possession. Thus The Times correspondent of March 13, 1832, writes: 'Muzio Clementi died on Friday night last, at his residence, Elm Lodge, near Worcester.' At Evesham still resides Miss Myra Taylor, a professional musician who, as quoted in the Evesham Journal and Four Shires Advertiser of August 1, 1908, is made to say:

> It really was at The Elm that Clementi died. I remember that in course of conversation with an old laundress employed by us, I found that she was living at The Elm in 1832, as a young housemaid, so I questioned her about Clementi. Her reply was that she could not remember the name, but quite well remembered 'an old Italian' suddenly dropping down dead in the laundry there, and that his body was afterwards taken to London. From what she said I gathered that he was staying at the house as a visitor, so I do not think that he even rented it himself.

In a communication to the writer's artist friend, Miss Marriott, of Winchcombe, Gloucestershire, Mr. J. Wythen Roberts, of Messrs. Smith & Roberts, the well-known Evesham legal firm, says that the foregoing paragraph first appeared in a book called 'Evesham Jottings,' collected and published by A. E. B. Barnard, an enthusiastic antiquarian of the little Worcestershire town. Mr. Roberts relates that he understands from Miss Taylor that Mr. Barnard made inquiries for the laundress, Mary Webmore by name, and discovered that she was a Roman Catholic, and in her old age had been taken to a Roman Catholic home or sanctuary at Birmingham. This information Mr. Barnard followed up by calling at the home, but found the old laundress in such a weak mental and physical condition that he was unable to get any information from her. Although admitting that from this quarter

> . . . it now seems impossible to augment what few historical facts are on record . . . to say . . . that Clementi lived in retirement on his country estate at Evesham seems to be a pure fabrication. I have made [says Mr. Roberts] considerable inquiries in other places, without any result whatever, and I am perfectly sure that if Clementi had at any time owned Elm Lodge, Mr. Barnard would have discovered that fact, because he was ceaselessly probing matters of this character and examining title deeds and ancient documents, and I favour the impression which Miss Taylor got from Mary Webmore, that Clementi was merely a visitor and died in the house of his host, but whether the host was owner or merely occupier I am not at present able to say.

Such then, so far as they are at present obtainable, are the facts concerning some of the numerous mysteries connected with Clementi's remarkable career. Those relating to his first residence in this country, his English benefactor, and the Berne incident, I have been able to explain in whole or part. On the other hand the queries concerning the disappearance of Clementi's Symphonies, the exact date of his birth, and the precise conditions attending his passing will, I fear, never be fully answered. This is the more to be regretted because in Clementi we have an outstanding figure in the world of musical composition and mechanism. As the father of modern pianoforte playing, the founder of the modern pianoforte itself, as well as the composer of sonatas and symphonies, the former of which, at least, as Milton says of books, 'are not absolutely dead things, but do contain a potency of life in them,' Clementi commands our most respectful consideration, and almost every circumstance in the career of such a personality should be of public and musical interest. It is unfortunate that concerning many of the mysteries in Clementi's career my task has been one of tabulation rather than elucidation. Although it has been possible to clear up several doubtful points, and to collect a few not altogether unimportant certainties, for the rest one can only say with Pliny the Elder, 'In these matters the only certainty is that there is nothing certain.'

PROGRAMMES

By R. W. S. MENDL

My friend and I started off from Lynmouth up the Countisbury Hill one morning. Right over the neck of the great Foreland we went, across the downs, until we reached the County Gate, and then turned seaward through green fields and farm lands to the woods that clamber up the cliff-sides round the tiny village of Culbone. There we paused, visited the Lilliputian church, had our lunch of sandwiches, and afterwards ascended the hillside, striking inland until we crossed the main road that runs from Lynmouth to Minehead, and found a track which ran above the lovely valley where is Oareford, the site of Plover Barrow's Farm, in 'Lorna Doone.' From here it was not far to the village of Oare, and between this and Malmsmead we drank tea and ate thick slices of bread-and-butter with clotted cream and home-made plum jam, in the kitchen of a wayside cottage. Thence we passed down the East Lyn valley through Brendon and by the side of the rushing stream to Watersmeet, and so between the steep, richly-wooded hills that towered high above us, we tramped in the falling darkness back to Lynmouth. Never in one day's walk have I met such variety of beautiful scenery. Vast stretches of rugged coast, open downs, quiet farms and pastureland, wooded cliffs, views across the sea to the Welsh coast, distant sweeps of brown and purple moor, luxuriant valleys, here a roaring waterfall, there a great inland precipice—all succeeded one another in endless changes. Yet, in spite of the multifarious character of this glorious pageantry of beauty, Nature seems to have preserved a unity of design. We felt almost as though the diverse scenes that encountered our enraptured gaze at every turn were set deliberately side by side, that by their very contrasts they might delight us the more. However different they all might be, they seemed suited to one another—friendly associates in a vast concourse of divergent characters.

This is surely the ideal for a programme of music. We want to start up the hill and travel through varied experiences which, however contrasted they may be, never seem incongruous. We do not want a mawkish ballad by the side of a Bach Suite, any more than we care for the ugly red-brick villas that deface the fair hillside at Church Stretton. We do not want Rachmaninov's C sharp minor Prelude played as a voluntary on the organ after the 'St. Matthew' Passion, nor the banalities of Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' sandwiched between Rimsky-Korsakov and Mozart.

Yet we do need variety. It was almost a stroke of genius that at the last moment inserted Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' between Holst's 'Mars' and the eighth Symphony of Beethoven at the concert of the Royal Philharmonic Society conducted by Weingartner on March 19, 1925, thus bringing just the peaceful mood that was required after the restless terrors of the Bringer of War, and before the vigorous happiness of Beethoven's opening Allegro. An 18th-century minuet would have been out of place, and even such a gem as the 'Ballet Air' from Schubert's 'Rosamunde' would have been unsuitable here. Debussy was so precisely the right man in the right place, a complete contrast in mood, and in style, too, between his neighbours on either side. Yet the subtle, poignant harmonies, and the delicate colouring, were a link between the rich textures, the strong splashes of red and purple, the brilliantly appropriate discords, of Holst's battle music, and the exquisite modelling, the perfect poise of line and curve, the clean, yet not exclusively diatonic, simplicity of that supremely characteristic example of the genius of Beethoven's later maturity.

The great art in programme-making is to present contrasts without striking a note that jars. To place a string of sickly ballads between a 'Brandenburg' Concerto and a Mendelssohn Overture is merely absurd—not because all ballads are necessarily bad of their kind, but because sickly ballads are wholly unsuited to the atmosphere created by the surrounding music. You might as well hang a poorly-executed picture on the lid of a chocolate box, representing a lady with a mawkish expression on her face, in a gallery of masterpieces by Raffaele and Titian. Such treatment would hardly be fair on the lid of the chocolate box, which might, however, be perfectly adequate for its own purposes. Most of the productions which are sung to the 'Promenade' concert audiences in the second half of the programme would be perfectly harmless as a background to conversation and a drink with one's friends. They do not, however, as a rule, deserve to be listened to attentively by an audience which has just been enjoying Bach and Debussy, Beethoven and Holst.

The excuse which would be given for the presence of the shop ballad in a concert of first-rate music would presumably be that the idea is to suit all tastes. But surely this argument is unsound. It is a very poor compliment to an audience which has been listening to a programme, seven-eighths of which, perhaps, has consisted of some of the greatest musical masterpieces in the world, to suggest that those very people on that same occasion prefer to hear anæmic doggerel rather than a good English song. And see what happens: a large and enthusiastic audience; one and three-quarter hours of first-rate music; a quarter of an hour's interval, during which a few people usually depart; a very big majority, however, remains to hear the first item of the second part, which is generally something that they would be unwilling to miss, such as a 'Brandenburg' Concerto, two Nocturnes of Debussy, or Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite for strings; after that an enormous exodus takes place. Why? The reason is illustrated by the following comments which I have overheard on those occasions when I, too, have fled before art gives place to commercialism: 'These programmes are badly-arranged, the interval comes too late, then there is one good thing, and after that a lot of rubbish which most people could do without.' Or, again, 'I should have liked to hear the last thing on the programme, but it would have meant sitting through those awful ballads, and that is more than I could bear.'

Is it worth the management's while to send away at least a very large minority of the audience in that mood? And what of those who remain, even if they are a bare majority? Do they want the ballads really? I venture to doubt it. They are, I suggest, actuated by a variety of motives: (1) they want to hear the singer, rather than the song; (2) they hope that by encoring the singer they will get something worth hearing—and this hope is not infrequently fulfilled, because the singers are in many cases only too delighted to escape from banality to better things, and know that the audience agrees with them; (3) they want to hear the final orchestral piece; (4) they feel that having waited through a long interval they may as well wait to the end and 'have their money's worth.' Can it be doubted that they would prefer good songs, or that the number of people who would wait to the end of the concert would be larger if good songs were to be sung in the second part? Experientia docet! When for once in a way some real music by Arne or Walford Davies, for instance, is sung after the interval, the difference in the size and enthusiasm of the audience that has stayed to hear it is most noticeable.

Artistically the question seems to me hardly to admit of argument. So far as I know, it has not yet been suggested that a first-rate jazz band should be engaged to play selections from the latest dance music after Sir Henry Wood has finished conducting the 'Eroica.' Yet many modern dance tunes have far more life and character—are more estimable music in every way—than some of the miserable, sloppy, balderdash which too often disfigures the second part of these concerts. The retention of an element before which about forty per cent. of the audience usually flees in haste and which is, I believe, really only tolerated by the remainder, seems to me hard to justify.

But the opposite extreme is also to be avoided. I do not mean that we should avoid maintaining a high level of creative excellence in one programme, but that while maintaining that level we should avoid monotony of mood and style. For this reason one-composer programmes are, I think, on the whole a mistake. There are few composers who can stand the test. In fact, I suggest that there are only three —Bach, Beethoven, and Wagner. Let us elaborate this a little.

Just because we want to avoid monotony, the only way in which we can successfully frame a one-composer programme is by selecting a master whose art presents the widest variety of human moods and feelings. Now many will say that Wagner's music ought not to be performed outside the opera-house. If, however, we assume that it is justifiable to present his work in the form of excerpts in the concert-room at all, it is possible with Wagner, as with few other composers, to produce a varied scheme. There are of course many music-lovers to whom Wagner makes no appeal at all, or to whom (as to myself) he is positively distasteful. But the astonishing variety of his moods and of his methods is a thing which no fair-minded person can deny. I dislike Wagner's music and I love Mozart. But I think that a complete concert programme can be made more successfully by selections from Wagner's music alone, provided you like Wagner at all, than by devoting the whole evening to works of Mozart.

Bach has not quite the same variety of mood as Beethoven, but an entire concert of Bach's compositions is as refreshing to most lovers of music as any experience in the world. The reason for this lies not only in the depth of his humanity, but in the harmonic variety in which he surpassed most of his successors for the next hundred years, the bracing quality of his rhythms, and the richness of his contrapuntal methods. There is no music in the world that makes the pulse beat and the blood tingle more vigorously than the quick movements in Bach's concertos and overtures; nor is there any chance of becoming bored for one instant as we follow out the gorgeous patterns of his great fugal movements.

There is no composer, however, from whose instrumental works a whole programme can be more successfully built up than Beethoven, the scope of whose imagination was inferior only to that of Shakespeare. But even here the selection must be made with care. Just because we are relying upon one composer, it is unwise to choose works which have an affinity to each other or even, as a rule, those belonging to the same period of his life. With the wide range of his orchestral compositions before us, it is better not to place the Violin Concerto and the fourth Symphony side by side, or to concentrate exclusively on works of the First Period, or to play the seventh and eighth Symphonies at the same concert. Similarly I think that the London String Quartet's idea of playing the seventeen Quartets in chronological order is on the whole a mistake. The scheme has, it is true, a certain instructive advantage for the few who are able to attend six concerts in one week. For the rest, who are the majority of the audience, would it not be better to have an example from each of the three periods of the composer's career presented to them in one evening? To start off on the Monday, for instance, with Op. 18, No. 1, the first 'Rasoumovsky,' and Op. 127, in E flat—and to follow out the week on those lines? One of the best arrangements which I have ever found was at a concert at Frankfort, under Mengelberg, where the programme consisted of the first and ninth Symphonies of Beethoven. When all is said, are there any composers other than Bach and Beethoven who can successfully stand the test of a one-composer pianoforte recital? Chopin, do you say? I am afraid I cannot agree. Exquisite poet that he was, do we not become increasingly conscious, the longer we live and the more music we hear, that there is a certain limitation in his outlook? He was a master at expressing moods and fancies within a certain sphere as delicately or as strongly as the occasion demands. But in the course of a whole afternoon or evening of his music, we miss the wide range, the breadth of outlook of the greater composers. It is not a question here of monotony: Chopin is never dull, and within its own world his music has a rich variety. But a whole concert of his works brings home to some of us that this world is a somewhat restricted one: we long for a change even from such beautiful poems as those. Chopin could not stride the world like a colossus, as Brahms, even in his pianoforte works, was able to do: he did not touch the exalted heights or sound the profound depths of Beethoven. After Chopin it is welcome to breathe the pure, bracing air of Bach's pulsing rhythms, to turn to the reserved manner of Mozart or of Debussy, or the warm, often quaint, pictures that Schumann painted for us.

How do we reconcile the idea that there are only about three masters who triumphantly come through the ordeal of a whole concert devoted to their works, with the fact that we can listen attentively to an opera or an oratorio by many other composers, each of which takes two or three hours to perform? The two cases are quite different, and the difference, if anything, lends support to the view now put forward. An opera or an oratorio is, or should be, a unity. At a concert, we are presented with a selection of different works, and, so long as there is no incongruity, the more contrasted the works are, from and to which we have to switch our minds, the better it is. If we are to have a change at all, let us have a complete change, and not merely cross to the other side of the street! But with an oratorio or a cantata or an opera, although we require contrasts in the work, its unity rivets our attention. It is just when an opera or oratorio is a mere pot-pourri of incongruous airs and concerted numbers that we become bored and restless before the evening is over. That is one of the reasons why the works of Donizetti and Bellini have relaxed their hold on popular affection, whereas the operas of Mozart, for instance, are immortal. It is not necessary for a leit-motif system to be employed in order to weld a long work into one whole. It is Mozart's singleness of purpose, his unerring instinct for expressing musically the situations of the plot and the moods of the characters, that distinguish his operas so fundamentally from the jumbles of pretty tunes that were too often called 'an opera' in Italy before the advent of one of the greatest musical geniuses of all time, Giuseppe Verdi.

At a concert, on the other hand, we have to transfer our attention from one musical work to another. For that very reason, when, say, a quarter or a third of the time is over, and the performance of a sonata or a set of variations has been completed, it is so often tiresome, when one composer has said his say in one work and is no longer saying it—as he is (or should be) in the case of an opera or a oratorio—to expect us to turn our attention to another work by the same man. It is one thing to listen to 'Don Giovanni' for three hours with one interval: it is quite another thing to listen for two hours (to say nothing of three) to a succession of Mozart's Pianoforte Sonatas! 'The Messiah'—without cuts—is an eternal delight: but we do not want a concert consisting entirely of Handel's instrumental works. It is a mistake to play 'Papillons' and 'Carnival' in the same programme, or to plunge straight from Franck's 'Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue' into the 'Prelude, Aria, and Finale,' yet it is no effort to enjoy a whole evening of his 'Beatitudes.'

The ideal programme is neither classical nor modern exclusively, but both. To many a professional critic, whose life consists largely of a weekly round of concerts and who perforce bathes daily in the vast ocean of standard musical masterpieces, an afternoon or evening of nothing but new works is a refreshing experience. To the man who only recently has discovered that he enjoys listening to music, the accepted works of the great masters are often enough to satisfy his appetite. But the ordinary music-lover likes a judicious blend. He belongs to no camp; he does not hold a brief for new music just because it is new, nor does he blindly adhere to the established classics. Ancient and modern are alike welcome, so long as he can enjoy them on their merits. But he does demand enterprise. And this implies not only the presentation of contemporary works of interest, but of the unduly neglected works of the past. What has become of Berlioz's 'Harold in Italy' and his 'Symphonie funèbre et triomphale'; of Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony; of the works of C. Ph. E. Bach; of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in E minor, Op. 90; of the less familiar Symphonies of Mozart and Dvorák? Sir Henry Wood has recently shown us that an old man called Haydn wrote some Symphonies—just one or two!—which are as alive and as fresh to-day as when the ink was wet upon the page. There is room for more such revivals.

It is possible to spoil our enjoyment of a selection of music, all of which is to our taste, by bad arrangement or by giving us too much. We can listen to an opera or an oratorio for three hours, with only one interval, just because it is, or should be, in either case a unity. But a concert programme consisting of a group of different works should not exceed two hours, and should always have a ten minutes' interval in the middle (not near the end, as at the 'Promenade' concerts). Even if the players do not get tired after two hours, the audience does. A new work or one which is likely to be unfamiliar or strange in idiom to the majority of those present, should be placed near the beginning of the programme. It is often the custom abroad to play the one symphony in the programme at the beginning. Late arrival at any entertainment usually betokens lack of enthusiasm, and therefore those who indulge in it are, as a rule, not strictly entitled to any sympathy whatever! But it is perhaps kinder to make a slight concession to human frailty or the possibility of a broken down taxi or a late train, and therefore I think it is better not to start with a symphony: for those who miss the first movement or two get an imperfect notion of the subsequent movements. Moreover, if the symphony is by Beethoven, put it at the end of the concert; it is not fair on the other composers represented to play their works after a Beethoven Symphony. The allegation, made in certain quarters, that Beethoven's art has lost, or is losing, its hold on the affections of music-lovers, is not merely an exaggeration—it is a complete and hopeless falsehood. Beethoven is as popular to-day with the vast majority of lovers of music as he ever was. All that has happened is that the blind worship of him that existed in the 19th century has gone to the wall. Those who seek to belittle Beethoven to-day, succeed only in belittling themselves. It all sounds very clever, no doubt, on the surface—this depreciation of the greatest of all instrumental composers; but it is the kind of cleverness which anybody who wishes to attract attention and is seeking the bubble reputation can achieve by the exercise of the very slightest ingenuity. The real Beethoven lover to-day is usually the man or woman who most truly appreciates all that is best in contemporary music too—the work of such men as Holst and de Falla, of Delius and Dohnànyi, of Vaughan Williams and Bliss—all of them composers who, in however divergent ways, are artistic descendants of Beethoven.

The end of my walk in Devon was like the concert that finishes with one of Beeehoven's great orchestral masterpieces—for in spite of all the scenes that I had gazed upon that day for the first time, the rich variety of moor and vale, the vast seascapes which I had not seen before, the fresh woods and pastures new, nothing could compare in beauty and simple grandeur with the last few miles along the East Lyn Valley which I had traversed so many times previously yet loved the more with each successive visit.

HORN CHORDS: AN ACOUSTICAL PROBLEM

By Percival R. Kirby*

There is a curious phenomenon connected with the French horn, which, so far as I am aware, has not received the attention it deserves. I refer to the fact that it is possible for an individual player to produce chords upon his instrument. The phenomenon has been known for many years, but I have been unable to find any satisfactory explanation of it in works on music or acoustics; nor do I know any examples of its use which show that the user really understood the nature of the notes produced, or their actual pitch. The locus classicus of the employment of chords to be played by a single performer is the Cadenza to the Concertino in E, Op. 45, of Carl Maria von Weber. Before the final Polacca, the following passage occurs (I quote from Oscar Franz's 'School for the Horn,' since I have not access to the score here in South Africa):

* Professor of Music, University of Witwatersrand.

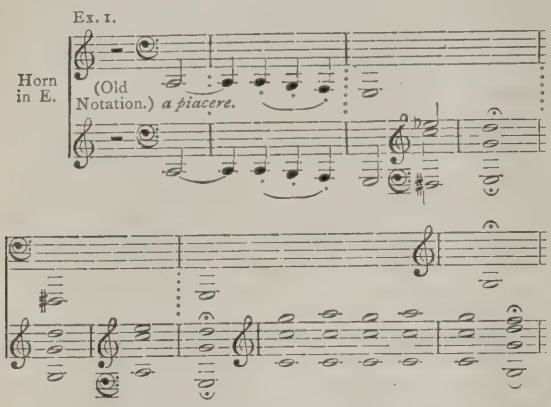
Ex. 1.



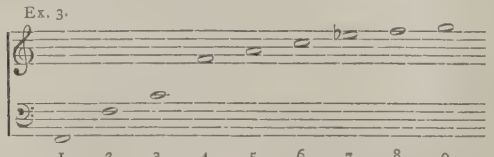
I do not know whether any explanation of the method required to produce these chords has been given in any published score of the work, but it seems quite certain that all the chords cannot have been played as written. Chords can be sounded, and have been sounded in this very Cadenza, but they were not the chords as written. I suggest that Weber simply put into his score an approximate notation, leaving the rest to the traditional knowledge of the horn-player. The reason for this suggestion will shortly appear.

Every one knows that a perfectly pure musical note is practically non-existent; that partial tones are almost always present in varying degrees of strength; and, further, that horn notes are particularly rich in partials. Now if a horn-player, using the customary instrument in F, sounds the note F (in all the examples except the first, the real sounds are here given):

Ex. 2.

the ear of the listener hears that note, coloured as it is by its upper partials. But if the player sounds the same F, and at the same time sings the C a perfect fifth above (with a tone-colour as near to that of the horn as possible), the listener hears not only the two notes F and C, but also the combination tones produced by the sum and difference of their frequencies. A reference to the harmonic series will make this perfectly clear:

Ex. 3.



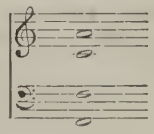
The lowest note in Ex. 3 is the fundamental note of the series, and is represented by the ratio 1. The remaining notes of the series are represented by the ratios 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, &c. The two notes sounded by our player are therefore represented by the ratios 2 and 3, 2 being played, and 3 sung. These two notes generate:

(1) A differential tone, represented by the ratio 1; and

(2) A summational tone, represented by the ratio 5.

Both these sounds are quite prominent, and consequently what the listener actually hears is this four-part chord:

Ex. 4.

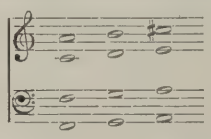


The low F is the differential tone, and the A the summational tone. It is obvious that the generators must form a true fifth, as the slightest deviation from perfect intonation alters the whole nature of the chord. I would particularly emphasise this point, in view of what follows.

Theoretically, any two sounds, one played and the other sung in the manner I have described, should generate differential and summational tones, but practically there are limits. The chord in Ex. 4 can be produced from any pair of generators a true fifth apart, the only limitations being the difficulty of steadying the lower horn notes, and the compass of the human voice. Naturally, a good deal of adjustment is necessary in some cases, but, with a little practice, remarkable results are obtainable. Further, it is possible to produce these chords with the horn taking the upper notes, and the voice the lower, though this is more difficult than the converse method.

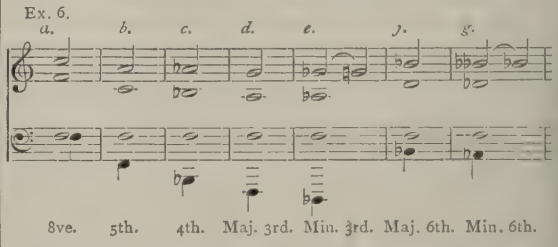
Hucbaldian progressions such as the following are quite easy, provided the player has a good ear:

Ex. 5.



If we next experiment with other intervals we shall produce new chords. For convenience, I shall tabulate these as Helmholtz has done in his 'Sensations of Tone,' when dealing with combination tones. The notation is, of course, only approximate:

Ex. 6.



The generators are shown as semibreves, the lower being played, the upper sung; the summational tones as minims; the differentials as crotchets. The chords are constituted as follows:

FREQUENCY RATIOS

Chord No.	Note Played.	Note Sung.	Diff. Tone.	Summ. Tone.
(a.)	1	2	1	3
(b.)	2	3	1	5
(c.)	3	4	1	7
(d.)	4	5	1	9
(e.)	5	6	1	11
(f.)	3	5	2	8
(g.)	5	8	3	13

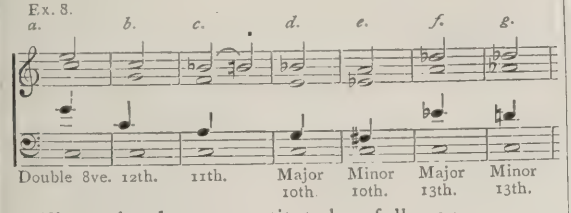
The summational tone in the fifth chord is between G flat and G natural, and that of the seventh chord between B double-flat and B flat. I have not thought it necessary to analyse the seconds and sevenths; the resultant chords are extremely cacophonous.

From Ex. 6 it will be seen that passages of the following type can be played, always remembering that these chords are not in accordance with equal temperament:

Ex. 7.

If we raise the sung notes one octave, leaving the played notes at their original pitch, we shall produce a fresh series of chords. For reasons of vocal range, we shall transpose the whole series down a fourth (although the first, sixth, and seventh chords will be more easily produced from still lower fundamentals):

Ex. 8.



These chords are constituted as follows:

FREQUENCY RATIOS

Chord No.	Note Played.	Note Sung.	Diff. Tone.	Summ. Tone.
(a.)	1	4	3	5
(b.)	1	3	2	4
(c.)	3	8	5	11
(d.)	2	5	3	7
(e.)	5	12	7	17
(f.)	3	10	7	13
(g.)	5	16	11	21

It will be seen that considerable variety may be obtained by combining the best chords of each series in various keys. In order that this may be done successfully, a very keen ear and a very steady lip are required.

Returning, now, to Weber's Cadenza, it is difficult to see from the notation employed what notes the composer actually desired to hear. The third, sixth, eighth, and tenth chords can be produced in the positions in which they appear (cf. Fig. 6*a*), but the remainder cannot. Nor does Oscar Franz help us much, for his explanation of the method of chord-production is far from lucid, since he contents himself with saying: 'The lower notes are played, the highest notes are sung, the middle notes are produced from natural acoustic causes,' and he appends these lists of chords:

Ex. 9.

A glance at Exx. 6 and 8 will readily show how faulty and inconsistent are the above lists in Ex. 9.

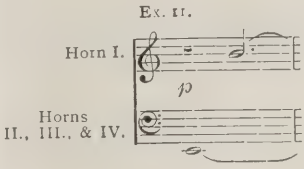
Fortunato Sordillo, the author of a curious treatise entitled, 'The Art of Jazzing for the Slide Trombone' (Oliver Ditson Co.), comes nearer the mark. He recognises the possibility of producing similar chords on the tenor trombone, and introduces some into a solo which is printed in the book, but he employs only the chord in Ex. 4. His notation is:

Ex. 10.

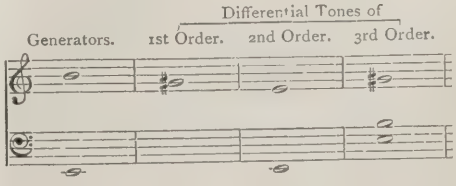
He does not seem to realise that the lower B flat is also present. Moreover, he is unwilling to give away his secret, as he states that his book is not the place for explaining such an effect.

From a practical musician's point of view, such chords as we have been discussing are perhaps not of much use, but they would appear to throw some light upon a very curious passage in the score of Verdi's 'Falstaff.' On page 22 of the miniature edition appears the following chord for four horns:

Ex. 11.



I was present at the performance of 'Falstaff,' given by the students of the Royal College of Music at His Majesty's Theatre in 1913, and was forcibly struck by this passage, both at the rehearsals and the performance. What I heard was not a bare two-note chord as printed in the score, but the complete chord of E major, of a tone-quality indescribably delicate and beautiful. In 1924 I heard the same work at the Paris Opéra, and on this occasion the effect did not 'come off.' The building may have had something to do with it, but I believe the real explanation is that in the latter case the twelfth was not quite true. When true, the two notes, E and B, should call into existence not only the differential tone of the first order, but also those of the second and third orders. This can only occur when the first horn makes with the second, third, and fourth, a true twelfth. Ex. 12 shows what should happen:



or, expressed in frequency ratios:

Generators.	1st Order Diff.	2nd Order Diff.	3rd Order Diff.
1 and 6	5	1 and 4	2, 3, and 5

It is worth noting that under these special circumstances, the higher the partial the greater the strength; with the partials generated by a fundamental only the reverse is the case.

But the question as to whether Verdi knew these facts either before or after he wrote the score, I leave for others to answer.

HANDEL'S EARLY LIFE AND MAINWARING

By P. ROBINSON

The merits of Dr. Chrysander's edition of Handel, and those of his unfinished biography, are so great that there has been a natural tendency in subsequent writers to reproduce his accounts, except where they have been certainly shown to be wrong. His statements may sometimes have been unsupported by evidence; they may sometimes have been avowedly conjectures; none the less they pass boldly as unchallenged facts. Not the least blame attaches, on that account, to the biographers, some of whom were, or are, very able men. The fact is, narratives lavishly sprinkled with 'quite possibly's,' or 'not inconceivably's' are far from attractive. Readers like positive statements. They prefer confidence, even though it may merely have grown like that of Dr. Asterias in Peacock's 'Nightmare Abbey':

> 'Might it not be a mermaid? It was possibly a mermaid. It was probably a mermaid. It was very probably a mermaid. Nay, what else could it be but a mermaid? It was certainly a mermaid.

In the present article, however, it will be more convenient to distinguish carefully between that which Chrysander definitely established, and that other portion, not inconsiderable, where evidence is lacking. Through the discoveries of Ademollo, Streatfeild, Newman Flower, and others, we know that many of Chrysander's conjectures were wrong; while it is difficult to recall any instance of a conjecture of his having been proved to be right, though some, no doubt, there may be.

On the other hand, the earliest biographer, the youthful Mainwaring, who published his book in 1760, the year after Handel's death, is frequently treated with scant ceremony—as to which I must confess previous guilt myself. His chronology is discredited, and his tales are sometimes pulled this way and that, till they resemble the body of the hapless cleric in the 'Ingoldsby Legends':

> His legs lie here, and his arms lie there,
> And his head lies—I can't tell your Holiness where!

The point of the tale sometimes completely vanishes.

But a re-reading of Mainwaring's narrative has inclined me to think that, if sympathetically considered, it may still give valuable help on doubtful points—for, after all, in the earlier portion, the bulk of it must have come substantially from Handel himself; there are a number of details which he alone could have supplied. And we have no reason to believe that Mainwaring, or the younger Smith, Handel's amanuensis, who furnished a good deal of the information, consciously romanced. Some blunders we must expect, some conjectural amplifications, some dislocation, some chronological weakness. But since the substance of the tales must go back to Handel, it should not be rejected light-heartedly; and it is proposed here to see how much can be saved in some important sections.

Let it be noted first, however, that Mainwaring is not responsible for some errors, small or large, which have been credited to him by various writers. He is not responsible, for instance, for the absolutely baseless tale (really originated by Chrysander) that Handel heard Steffani sing at Rome in his old age, and described the effect to Hawkins. The words used by Hawkins were; 'Some, whose good fortune it has been to be present' [in 1729]. Now, in 1729 Steffani was dead. In 1727, when Steffani was at Rome, Handel was certainly in England. In fact, the only year in which the two could possibly have been at Rome together, was 1709; and clearly there could then have been nothing remarkable in a man of fifty-five still singing well. Some people no doubt did hear Steffani sing in 1727, but the tale never had anything to do with Handel.

It might be thought, again, that Mainwaring was responsible for the mistake, really made by Burney, which assigned a departure of Handel for Italy to the autumn of 1728. Recently it was shown by Newman Flower, from a contemporary newspaper notice, that the date was January 27, 1729. Shortly before Mr. Newman Flower's book appeared, as it chanced, I had felt sure, from a consideration of Chrysander ii., 221, note 4, and ii., 225, that the departure was about the end of January. It is worth while to mention this confirmation, because in the next section a newspaper report will be rejected as clearly erroneous.

WHY HANDEL AND BACH NEVER MET IN 1719

The usual account is that Handel left England for Germany about the middle of February, 1719, was in Dresden in September, and returned about the end of November. Neglecting, that is, all his pupils, and being absent when his principal patron was created a Duke, he did practically nothing in Germany for six months—a most un-Handelian procedure. The November is admittedly conjectural, but for the beginning a newspaper report of February 21 is cited, according to which Handel had already gone overseas to find singers. Now, it can be demonstrated that on February 24 he was still in England, for on that date he wrote from London to his old acquaintance and opponent, Mattheson. This date cannot possibly mean February 24, new style (equivalent to February 13, old style), because this letter was a reply to one of Mattheson's from Hamburg, dated February 21; and in those days no post, except by miracle, could have reached London, in winter too, quickly enough to allow of Handel's replying on the third day. (Up to 1784 the mail from London on Monday did not reach Bath till Wednesday.) We know, besides, that this reply only reached Mattheson on March 14 (n.s.), which is what we should have expected if Handel wrote on February 24 (o.s.), equivalent to March 7 (n.s.). The newspaper, then, was wrong. No doubt Handel wished to start in February; he hoped to start in March (see his letter to his brother-in-law). But, presumably, matters dragged on till it was too late to catch the Italian singers in the spring, before they dispersed for the summer, as their custom was. So he had to wait till the autumn.

Mainwaring, we find, says nothing about a long idle time in Germany. He tells us that at the end of his employment at Cannons, Handel 'was advised to go over to Dresden in search of singers.' It is in September, 1719, that Handel is known to have been at Dresden. He then discovered that the principal singers could not come to England before the autumn of 1720.

He may reasonably be supposed to have reported this, with the terms demanded, to the Royal Academy in London, and then to have busied himself with procuring temporary substitutes, including Baldasarri. He may have visited Munich, viâ Anspach. About the end of the year, having received authority, he would be back at Dresden to sign the contracts. He would play before the King about the end of January (o.s.); the payment of a hundred ducats to Handel was, in fact, noted in the royal accounts for February, 1720 (n.s.), and there is no need to explain this entry away by highly unlikely suppositions. Handel would not reach England much before the end of February (o.s.); and thus we understand why his 'Radamisto' was not, as we should have expected it to be, the work to open the season on April 2; there had not been time to complete it.

Both Handel and Bach, then, may be honourably acquitted of the charges of having made insufficient efforts to meet each other. The stays at Halle would be for quite short periods.

THE 'WATER-MUSIC'

It has been shown that in all probability the 'Water-Music' was written for a royal excursion on July 17, 1717, and the conclusion has been drawn that Mainwaring's well-known story must be a myth. But is this conclusion really necessary?* Mainwaring, who does not himself use the expression 'water-music,' gives no date, and is not responsible for those who have selected August 22, 1715. It is not doubted that for a time Handel was out of favour, nor that on some occasion his pension was restored and increased; and what occasion can be imagined more likely than this of 1717, on which King George's pleasure was so strikingly manifested? Mainwaring represents the pension as the result of the water-party. But 'Coxe's Anecdotes' (1799) insert a 'Geminiani' incident between the 'Water-Music' and the pension—an insertion which quite spoils Mainwaring's story—for if Handel had been already forgiven, what possible objection could King George have had to his accompanying Geminiani at Court? The Geminiani incident, usually assigned to 1716, should really come first. This might have led to some improvement in Handel's position: there is no reason to suppose that his title of Kapellmeister had ever been taken away, but it might still require the 'Water-Music' to gain the renewal and increase of pension. Some years later, continues Mainwaring, Handel was appointed music-master to the princesses, and for this appointment, as Chrysander showed (ii., 175), 1720 is the earliest possible date. Mainwaring's story, then, may be substantially true.

But, it may be objected, unless Handel had been completely restored to favour, how could King George have taken him to Hanover in 1716? The answer is, that there is not a scrap of evidence that the King did so take him. In fact George, intent on some extremely important negotiations, left on July 7 or 9; and the last performance of Handel's 'Amadigi' was on July 12. And George never required Handel's presence, so far as we know, on any other visit to Hanover. So that there is no force in this objection.

True, Handel may have been in Germany in 1716, but that is quite another matter. And even for this the evidence is extremely weak. If Handel visited Anspach in 1716 (probably really a mere misprint for 1719), as 'Coxe' states in the section devoted to Smith junior, it is strange that Mainwaring knew nothing of a visit of such extreme importance in Smith's life. Handel's letter of June 29, 1716, to the South Sea Company, merely proves that he very sensibly preferred a dividend to be paid to a banker or agent. And as for the Brockes 'Passion' setting, he might have written this at any place and at any time after Easter, 1712—when, in fact, he was at Hanover, within a hundred miles of Hamburg. He might have acquired the celebrated Hamburg poem at once, and set it at once, all the more if there be anything in Chrysander's view that Handel wished to surpass Keiser's setting of Easter, 1712. The 'Passion' versions of music, which it has in common with other works of 1713-15, might, quite conceivably, have been the earlier. It might have been written for the Court, either at Hanover or in England, for George was a supporter of official religion.* In any case, Brockes's work could reach London as easily as the Spectator and other English works which Mattheson translated reached Hamburg. This supposed visit to Germany, then, of which Mainwaring knew nothing, should not at present be treated as more than a bare possibility.

With Lord Burlington, one of the principals in the water party story, Handel stayed three years, beginning 1715, according to Mainwaring, Burney, and 'Coxe.' Why, then, have the biographers preferred the vague account of Hawkins, and assigned the beginning to 1713, or 1712, in spite of the great difficulties which Streatfeild pointed out ('Handel,' pp. 68-69), though he still clung to the earlier dating? Perhaps he and others overlooked Mainwaring's precise statement, which avoids all the difficulties.

EARLY CHRONOLOGY

It is noteworthy that Mainwaring gives us only one definite date between Handel's birth (1684, apparently the old style equivalent of 1685) and the year of his first reaching England (1710). This is 1698, the occasion of a visit to Berlin. Very probably this certainly wrong date arose from a misunderstanding. Between the account of the Halle years and that of the Berlin visit 'Coxe' inserts a description of a sketch-book of Handel's, which bore the date 1698. Smith's communications to Mainwaring might very naturally have observed the same order; and Mainwaring, looking at his notes, might easily misunderstand them, and suppose that 1698 marked the end of the Halle period. In any case, this 1698 is clearly his sheet-anchor. As he observes, apparently with some surprise, Handel at this time 'could not exceed thirteen, as may easily be seen by comparing dates.' So he proceeds quite consistently. Handel goes to Hamburg soon after his return from Berlin, and before long writes 'Almira.' Consequently 'Almira' was written at fourteen After four or five years at Hamburg, Handel arrived in Italy at eighteen, as Mainwaring tells us, thus reaching (mentally) 1703. But Handel came to England in 1710; consequently he left Italy, as Mainwaring would reckon, in 1709; so the whole Italian stay must have been no less than six years, which statement Mainwaring quite consistently gives us. It is this unlucky 1698 which has misled him into dating events in general about four years too early. Rectify this error, and we shall get a sufficiently credible account.

Handel would be eleven, not seven, when he overtook a coach and astonished the Duke of Weissenfels by his organ-playing. He is then placed under Zachow, and at thirteen, not nine, begins composing weekly cantatas. Some four years later, either on a holiday during his Halle engagement, or at its conclusion on 'Reminiscere,' March 4, 1703, he visits Berlin in quest of employment; meets Bononcini

* Cf. W. Barclay Squire, Musical Times, December, 1922. Mr. Barclay Squire's kindness has supplied some of the information contained in this article.

* 'Dictionary of National Biography,' vol. xxi., p. 156.

and Ariosti ; and is offered a post and a visit to Italy by the King (who in 1698 was only an Elector). After returning to Halle, and declining the King's offer, Handel arrives at Hamburg, where he meets Mattheson on July 9, 1703. The story, in truth, up to this point, may be substantially correct, but there is one unfortunate error right at the end of the Berlin section. Mainwaring supposed, wrongly, that Handel's father died just before the departure for Hamburg. Consequently, though only hearing that some excuse was made for declining the King's invitation, he would think he knew what the excuse was. So he tells us that 'the answer was that the Doctor would retain, &c.,' but at his advanced age did not wish to part with his son. Observe that before this there had not been a word in the Berlin tale about the father. It was always 'his friends'—'his friends.' It is justifiable, therefore, simply to eliminate the Doctor, who died in 1697 ; then there will be no need to trouble about a quite motiveless visit to Berlin in 1696. The two Italians were at Berlin, 1702-03, but not in 1696.

STAY IN ITALY

After Hamburg, Mainwaring gives us full accounts of successive visits to Florence, Venice, Rome, and Naples ; and then, having exhausted all his material, he adds curtly that Handel paid a second visit to Florence, Rome, and Venice, before leaving Italy. Now, we find one glaring sign of dislocation. At a masquerade at Venice, 'Scarlatti' discovers Handel, and this leads to the writing of 'Agrippina.' Yet, after Venice, Handel at Rome first makes the acquaintance of both the Scarlattis ! A clear illustration, this, of Mainwaring's bonafides. Evidently he has reproduced the tales as they were told to him ; and, having adopted what seemed to him a likely arrangement, has left unremoved a striking discrepancy. Unfortunately, Handel was at Rome in 1707, as we know, while 'Agrippina' was produced in 1709-10. How is the error to be explained ? The simplest way is to suppose that Mainwaring had before him two blocks of narrative, one dealing with Florence and Venice, and the other with Rome and Naples ; that he had to make a choice as to the priority ; and that, misled by a specious plausibility, unluckily he made the wrong choice. Observe that he does not profess actually to know the order, but says only 'it is natural to suppose' that Florence was first visited [Note A]. Let us see how a different order, for important events—Rome, Naples, Florence, Venice—would work out.

Handel was at Rome from January to September, 1707, as we know. Then, it may be conjectured, Pratolino was visited in the autumn, probably at the invitation of Prince Ferdinand—a short interlude which the tale would not distinguish from the rest of the Florence stay. [The appeal to Handel's testimony regarding the merits of the young lute player, in Merlini's letter of September 24, 1707, to Ferdinand, has little point unless Handel also were going to Florence] [Note B]. Success there leads to an invitation to write an opera. But Handel has engagements at Rome, and Salvi, the regular Florentine poet, cannot write a new libretto quickly enough. An old one, therefore, 'Rodrigo,' has to be used. For this Handel writes, or partly writes, the music, and arranges to return next autumn (1708) for the production. Perhaps he returns to Rome in time to hear the Pifferari at Christmas. Early in May, after writing the 'Pope,' cantata 'O, come chiare,' he escapes from Rome, and finishes 'Aci' at Naples on June 16. His writing no opera, or other large work, at Naples, though Lotti produced an opera there on November 19, 1708, in the presence of the viceroy, Cardinal Grimani,* is well explained by a departure for Florence about September.

At Florence, Prince Gaston, who had returned to Italy in the spring of 1708, entertains Handel. At the production of 'Rodrigo' (perhaps at Pratolino [Note C]) some embarrassment is caused by a singer. This singer leaves to fulfil an engagement at Venice, and Handel arrives there a little later, during the carnival of 1709. At a masquerade he is discovered by Domenico Scarlatti [Note D], and pressed to write an opera. But he, though never reluctant before, or afterwards, is reluctant now ; he could see 'little prospect of either honour or advantage' says Mainwaring. Naturally. Rome was still in a state of siege ; there was no chance of a permanent post anywhere, so Handel was proposing to return to Germany. If he should write an opera, only for a night or two, at most, could it be staged during the carnival of 1709, which ended on February 12 ; and this would bring him no credit, while to wait till next season would entail expense. However, his reluctance overcome partly by the promise of further commissions, he writes 'Agrippina' in three weeks. The libretto, by Cardinal Grimani, may have been written in the hope that Handel might be persuaded to set it when he should reach Venice ; but also it may have been originally intended for Lotti [Note E]. On trial, the opera is thought likely to be very successful ; so a strong cast of singers is engaged for the end of the year. The singers at the other houses would be anxious to be engaged ; and this gives a meaning to Mainwaring's otherwise rather cryptic statement that the opera 'drew over all the best singers from the other houses' ; how could singers, during a season, throw up their engagements and try to oust the successful performers ? The Florentine singer, if her name was Vittoria, did not sing, unless possibly as an understudy, at the end of 1709. However, she may have taken part in the rehearsals. Mainwaring, by the way, does not say that she sang as, but at Agrippina.

Between the seasons Handel would be partly at Venice, where about the middle of May he might have met Steffani. Mainwaring, however, makes this statement only casually when writing of Hanover, and is not supported by Hawkins's reproduction of Handel's own words. Or the two might have previously met at Florence, where Steffani stayed a few days at the end of October, 1708, on his way to Rome. His mission was to mediate between the Pope and the Emperor, on behalf of the Elector Palatine, in conjunction with the Grand Duke of Tuscany. Possibly also Handel was at Rome in the spring of 1709 ; yet his never having been elected an 'Arcadian'—although, being now twenty-four, he was quite eligible—makes another visit to Rome rather improbable.

Milan was pretty certainly visited by Handel. To say nothing of the 'Urio' Te Deum, the text of the peace cantata, 'Io languisco,' strongly suggests this, while its unfinished state might be due to the news of the definite breakdown (June 15, 1709) of The Hague negotiations reaching the Milanese towards the end of the month. The existence of this cantata, it may

(Continued on page 820.)

* E. J. Dent, Musical Antiquary, July, 1913, p. 193.

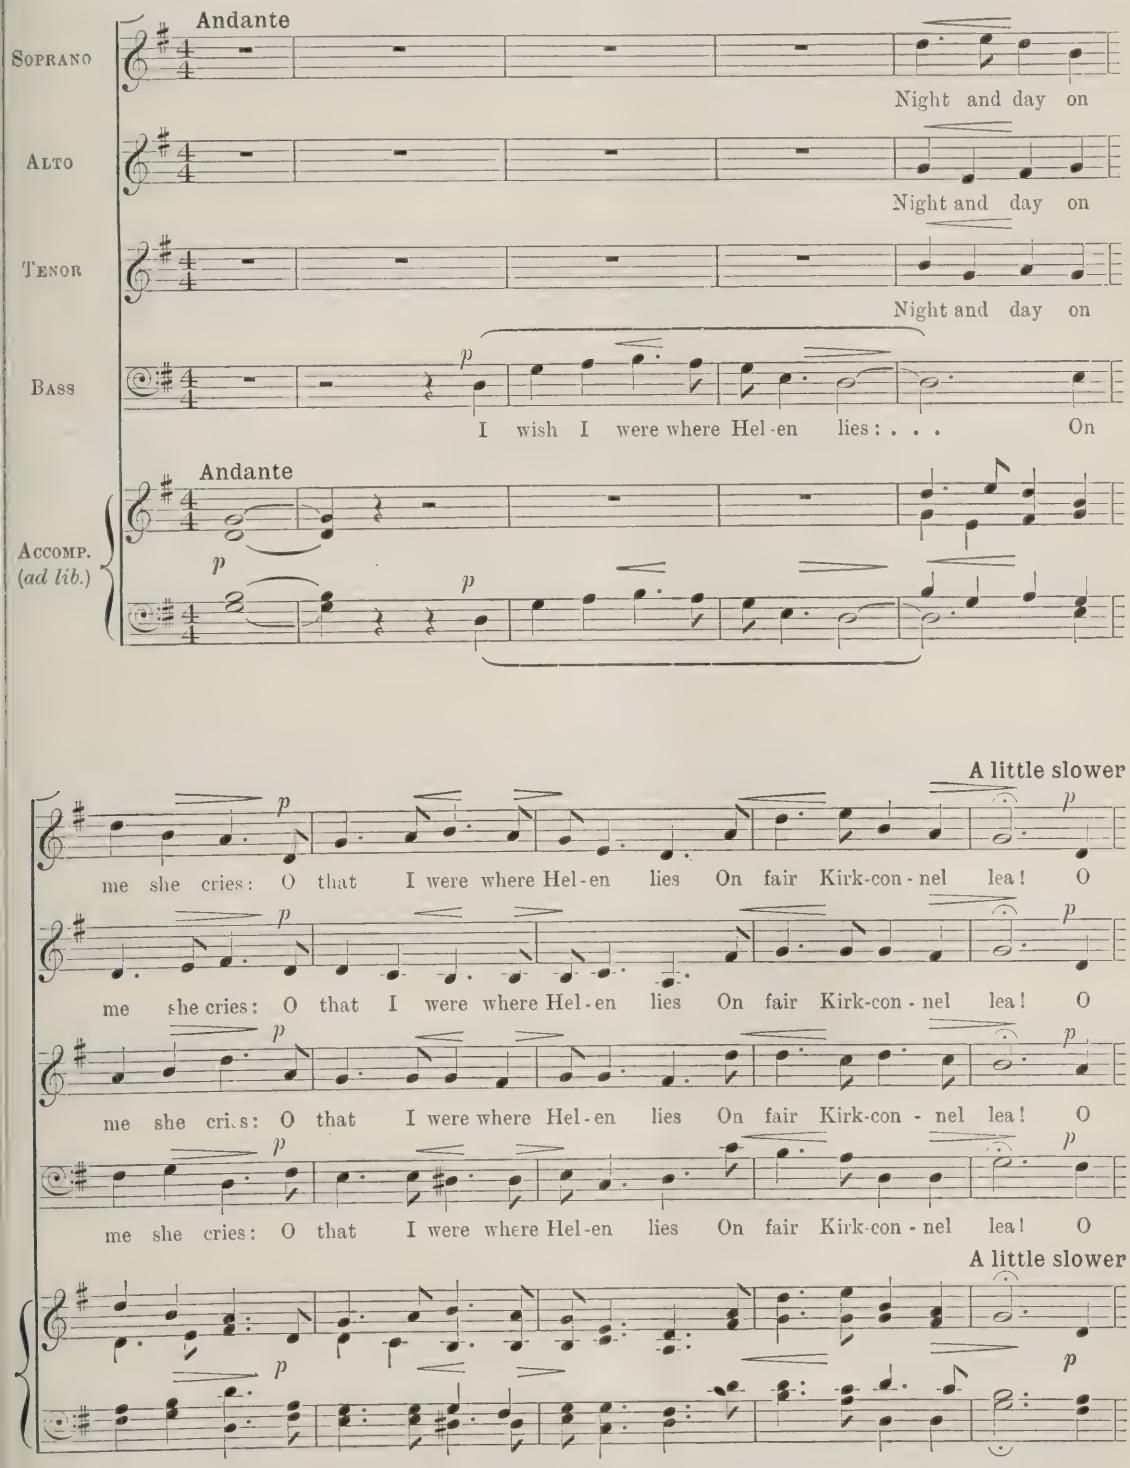
Helen of Kirkconnel

PART-SONG OR QUARTET FOR S.A.T.B.

Words from Herd's Collection of Scotch Poems

Old Scottish Melody
Arranged by C. Lee Williams

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Andante
Soprano
Night and day on
Alto
Night and day on
Tenor
Night and day on
Bass
I wish I were where Hel-en lies: . . . On Andante
Accomp. (ad lib.)
A little slower
me she cries: O that I were where Hel-en lies On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! O me she cries: O that I were where Hel-en lies On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! O me she cries: O that I were where Hel-en lies On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! O me she cries: O that I were where Hel-en lies On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! O
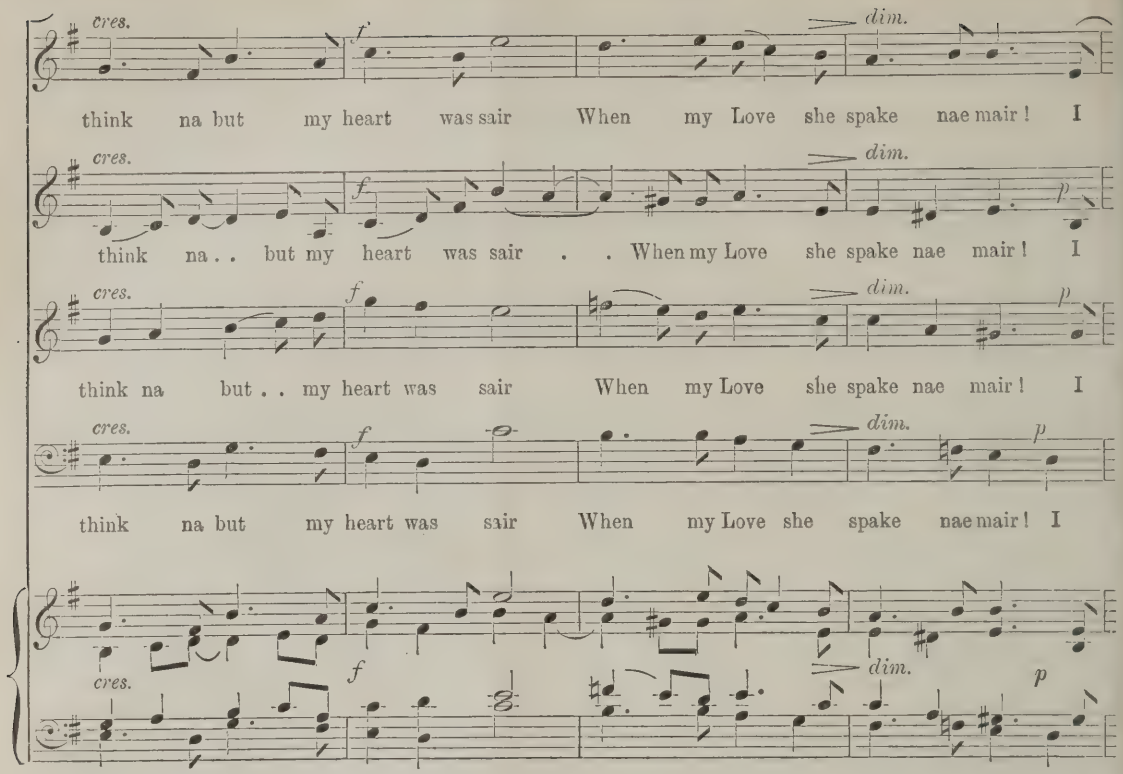
A little slower

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited



cres.
f dim.
p think na but my heart was sair When my Love she spake nae mair! I think na . . but my heart was sair . . When my Love she spake nae mair! I think na but . . my heart was sair When my Love she spake nae mair! I think na but my heart was sair When my Love she spake nae mair! I

Slower
pp
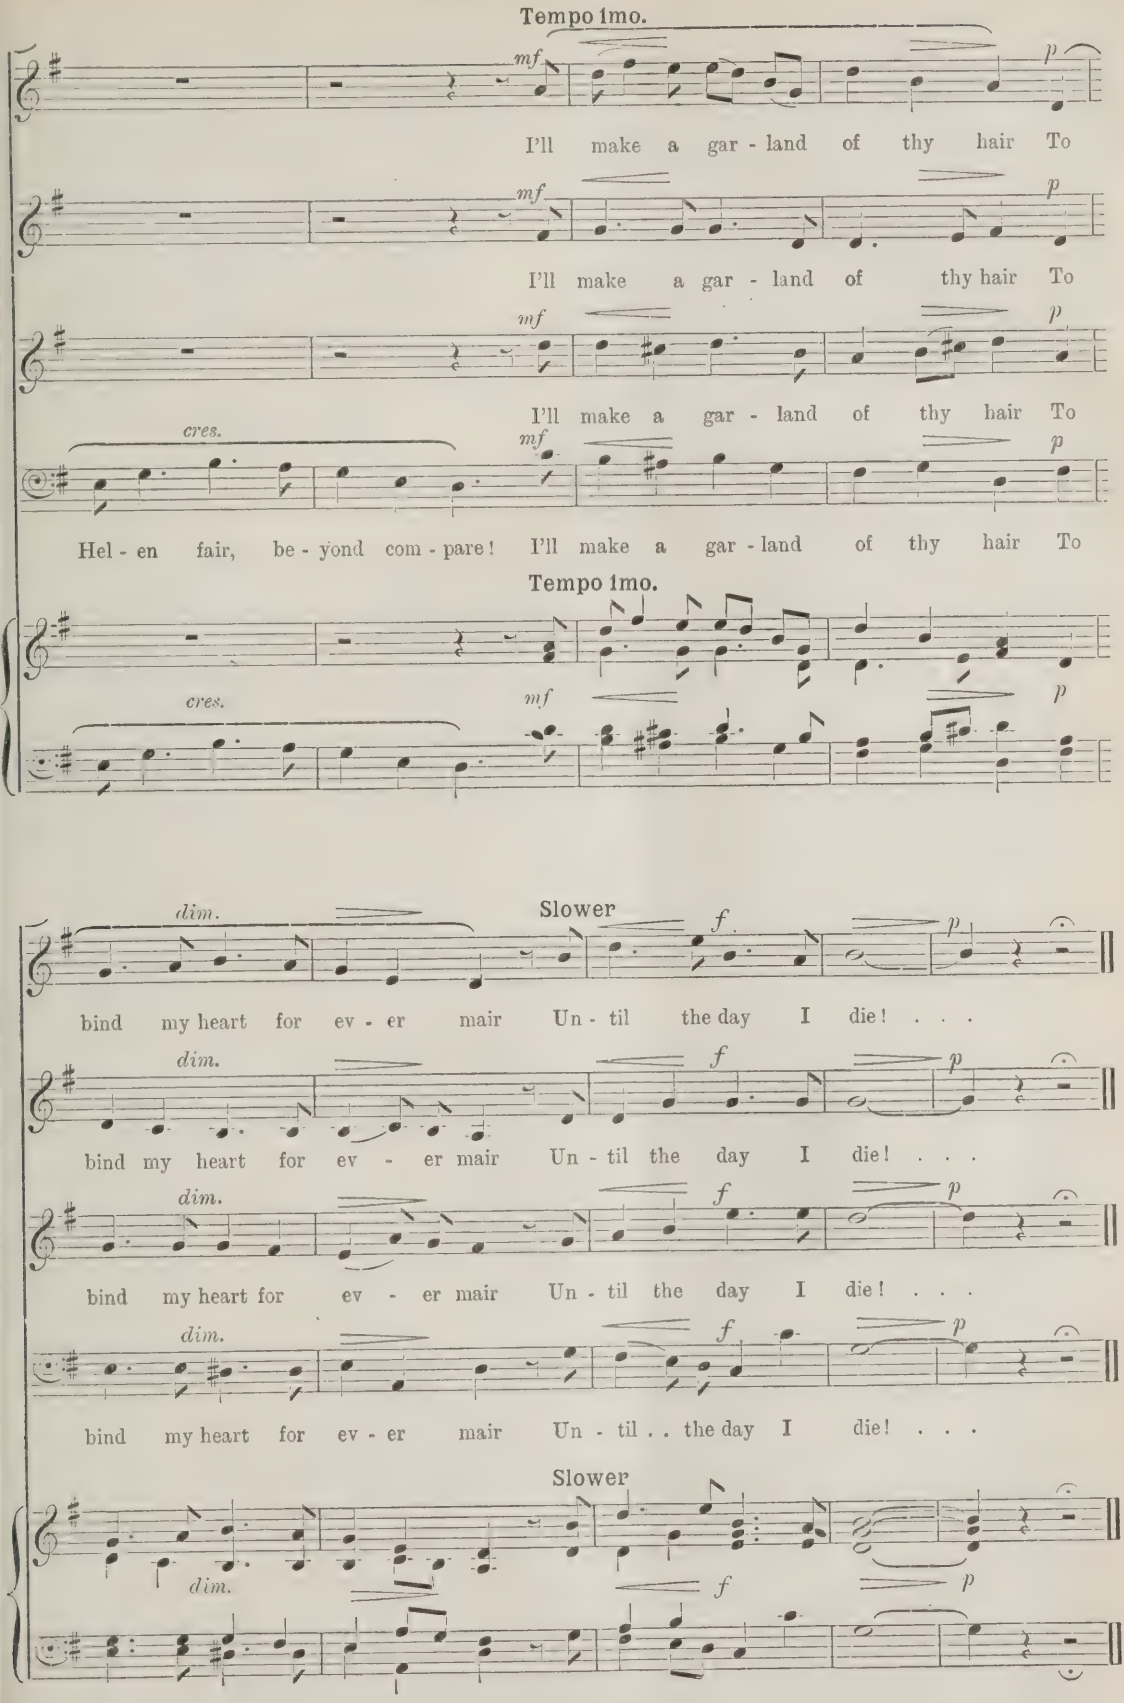
p laid her down with mei-kle care On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! . . .
laid her down with mei-kle care On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! . . .
laid her down with mei-kle care On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! . . .
ad lib.
laid her down with mei-kle care On fair Kirk-con-nel lea! . . . O . .



Tempo 1mo.
mf
p
I'll make a gar - land of thy hair To
I'll make a gar - land of thy hair To I'll make a gar - land of thy hair To
cres.
Hel - en fair, be - yond com - pare! I'll make a gar - land of thy hair To Tempo 1mo.
cres.
dim.
Slower
f bind my heart for ev - er mair Un - til the day I die! . . .
bind my heart for ev - er mair Un - til the day I die! . . .
bind my heart for ev - er mair Un - til the day I die! . . .
bind my heart for ev - er mair Un - til . . the day I die! . . .
Slower

(Continued from page 816.)

be remarked, together with other indications, proves that Handel began to use his favourite L.V.G. paper in Italy. The older paper, however, is used for 'Agrippina,' and this agrees well with the view that the opera was written some little time before it was produced.

At Venice the success of 'Agrippina' leads to an invitation to Handel and to the principal singers to visit England. Possibly the Duke of Manchester urged the acceptance by letters which reached Handel at Venice or at Hanover. The Elector Palatine at Düsseldorf gave Handel a service of plate (query, for 'Silla').

No stress, it may be added, need be laid on Mainwaring's bare mention of second visits to Florence, Rome, and Venice. It was such an obvious supposition that Handel would visit these places again on his way north. The proposed arrangement, it may be noticed, allows for two visits to each place. However, the desire is not to justify Mainwaring's minutiæ, but to show how his broad outlines, with their spirit, connection, and really significant details, may be largely preserved, in perfect agreement with all known facts.

Note A.—Yet, as Handel, according to the tale, had rejected Prince Gaston's offer, it might really be more natural to suppose that he would avoid Florence, until after he had made a name for himself in Italy.

Note B.—A motiveless journey to Venice is generally inserted here to make Handel meet Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover between September 30 and the end of November, 1707. But Chrysander quoted no evidence for such a meeting, and obviously had none; otherwise it would have saved him from assigning the meeting to the Carnival of 1708, when neither was 'Agrippina' produced, nor was the Prince in Italy.

Note C.—In his catalogue of yearly autumn Pratolino operas, Puliti (1874) gives us: 'Dionisio,' 1707; 'Ginevra,' 1708; 'Berenice,' 1709; 'Rodelinda,' 1710—all with poetry by Salvi, and music by Perti. Yet the compilers of Allacci's 'Drammaturgia' (2nd edition, 1755) give: 'Dionisio' (Salvi), 1707; 'Ginevra' (Salvi), 1709; 'Berenice' (Salvi), 1710; 'Rodelinda' (Anon.), 1710—naming no composer in any case, an omission very frequent, as the work is rather a catalogue of libretti. Apparently it was from the libretti themselves that Allacci's dates (never later than those of the performances) were derived. Now, it seems highly unlikely that two blunders in printing or transcription should have been made. On the other hand, there is always a temptation to rectify an apparent irregularity. If a gap were found in 1708, and two operas in 1710, Puliti's authorities might be tempted to regularise the sequence. A performance of 'Rodrigo' in 1708—the libretto's being old accounts for Allacci not mentioning Handel's setting—would explain the irregularity. Ferdinand might think it inadvisable to let Handel deprive Salvi and Perti of a commission: 'Ginevra,' in fact, might have been commissioned before 'Rodrigo'; and a later intention to produce 'Berenice' as well as 'Ginevra' in 1709 might have been abandoned owing to Ferdinand's dangerous illness in September, 1709, 'Berenice' being consequently postponed till 1710. There is, therefore, certainly a possibility that 'Rodrigo' was performed at the Villa di Pratolino.

Note D.—Domenico Scarlatti might have been at Venice at this time, perhaps on a quest of employment, which resulted in his engagement by Queen Marie Casimire of Poland in 1709.

Note E.—Apparently Lotti, who had previously, like Gasparini, written for rival houses, had been won over by Grimani in the autumn of 1708. At any rate, for a few years afterwards he wrote regularly for Grimani's theatre.

New Music

CHORAL MUSIC

Bach's cantata, 'Schmücke dich, O Liebe Seele' ('Rise, O soul, this happy morning'), has just been added to the lengthy list of these works now available for English choirs (Novello).

The chorale melody on which this cantata is based is now familiar to organists and congregations, so one of the difficulties in the way of performance is removed. There is no doubt that the cantatas, like the chorale preludes, were formerly handicapped in this country by the general lack of familiarity with the textual and musical bases. When this drawback disappears, much that was obscure becomes plain. 'Schmücke dich' consists of seven numbers—a long opening chorus in which the sopranos sing the chorale melody while the remaining three voices embellish it with a flowing pastoral theme; a jubilant air for tenor; a recitative and arioso for soprano; a recitative for alto; an air for soprano; a bass recitative; and a final choral statement of the hymn-tune. The soprano arioso is one of Bach's most beautiful numbers, the voice being given an ornamented version of the chorale, with continuo accompaniment and an obbligato for violoncello piccolo, after the manner of the familiar example in 'My heart ever faithful.' This number is a striking instance of Bach's merging a recitative into an arioso—a way in which he 'was wont to express things which moved him very deeply,' says Parry, speaking of this solo. The bass number gives us a shorter example of the juxtaposition of recitative and aria. The soprano is highly favoured in this cantata, the air, 'Sion, sing thy Saviour's glory,' being a worthy companion to the arioso mentioned above. A useful and interesting feature in this edition is the page giving full particulars of the orchestration, and a prefatory note by John E. West. The very singable English version is by A. H. Fox-Strangways, and to Mr. West has been entrusted the editing of the music. This involves an amount of work and responsibility that is scarcely realised until we remember that in certain of the numbers Bach left no more than a figured bass. The reader who plays the cantata through with no previous knowledge of the subject will find it difficult to say where Bach leaves off and his editor begins.

It should be added that the plainly harmonized version of the chorale which closes the cantata is issued separately as a communion hymn, 'Sion, sing thy Saviour's glory,' with three verses of 'Lauda Sion,' translated by Mr. Fox-Strangways.

Among the new works to be performed at the Gloucester Festival is one for chorus and orchestra, 'Love Incarnate,' by Basil Harwood (Novello). The text consists of some lines from Browning and a verse of 'Jesu, dulcis memoria.' The Browning lines are probably unfamiliar, so they are given here:

> The very God! think; dost thou think?
> So, the All-Great, were the All-Loving too—
> So, through the thunder comes a human voice,
> Saying, 'O heart I made, a heart beats here!
> Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself!
> Thou hast no power nor mayst conceive of mine,
> But love I gave thee, with myself to love,
> And thou must love me who have died for thee!'

A verse of the hymn is interpolated after the second line of the above, and a brief quotation from it is used at the end of the work. Naturally the plainsong hymn-melody plays an important part. Its opening phrase is used as a bass in the introduction and subsequently; the tune is twice delivered in full, first by the orchestra, then by the chorus (a beautiful arrangement, this); and the score contains frequent references to it. The music throughout admirably expresses the note of mysticism and awe in the text. No solo voices are required, but there are a few passages for semi-chorus. The choral writing is free, but not exacting, even at points where the parts divide. There are several fine climaxes and some vivid moments in the orchestral part. The quiet ending, with a few voices singing ('as if in the distance') a line of the hymn, is very impressive. The work is well adapted for Church use on special occasions, or as an extended form of anthem when an orchestra is available. H. G.

ORGAN

Handel's Concertos have so often suffered from improvements' on the part of editors—cadenzas, additional parts, and a general 'fattening' process—that it is refreshing to meet with one of them in its original, simple form. For, after all, these works are essentially slight in material, and although a movement here and there may be made to sound Handelian in the popular sense of the term—that is, massive and pompous—the style generally has a flavour of chamber music. Here is Concerto No. 5, in G minor, from the second set, edited by Henry G. Ley (Stainer & Bell). It is in four movements—Allegro ma non troppo, Basso ostinato, Minuet, and Gavotte. The Basso ostinato is one of Handel's finest essays in the ground-bass form. Hitherto it appears to have been available only in the very elaborate and difficult version of Best. The Minuet is a charming movement. This has also been over-elaborated by Best, and appears in F sharp minor in the set of Concertos he compiled from various sources. The Gavotte makes a vigorous Finale. Dr. Ley wisely refrains from anything more than very general registration marks. These movements are admirable for study purposes, owing to their strongly-rhythmical character and their frequently high pedal part. In regard to the pedal part, by the way, I hope Dr. Ley will consider the advisability of adding a few footing marks in future issues of these or other Handelian works. Also, in passages where the L.-H. and pedals are in unison (as in the opening phrase of this Concerto) it would surely be better to omit the L.-H. part, couplers now being always available. Most students would benefit from a course of Handel, in order to develop qualities that continuous study of Bach's Fugues and Chorale Preludes is apt to leave untouched. Indeed, an overdose of polyphonic work may even lead to some faults of style. Handelian music of this rather light, tuneful, and rhythmical type and slight texture, should play pretty much the rôle in organ technique that Mozart does in that of the pianoforte.

Handel is well represented in the 'Orange Album,' just issued by Schott, Charles Quef having arranged four attractive movements from the Violin and Violoncello Sonatas, and Ambrose Porter contributing a version of the Minuet from 'Berenice' that, effective as it is, would perhaps have been even more so, and certainly more in keeping, had its contrasts of power been less extreme. The Album contains also a good transcription by Henry Coleman of the well-known Minuet in D from Mozart's Divertimento, and several other tuneful examples of old string music—altogether a capital mixed bag of twenty pieces, mostly good.

From Cramers comes the first batch of their 'Library of Organ Music by British Composers,' edited by Martin Shaw. The eleven works so far issued are by Alan Gray, Cyril Rootham, C. H. Kitson (two), Harry Farjeon (two), E. Markham Lee (two), Godfrey Sceats, and Geoffrey Shaw (two). It is impossible to discuss all these items. So far I am most favourably impressed by Alan Gray's Fantasy in D, a tuneful and moderately difficult work, Geoffrey Shaw's jolly variations on the carol tune, 'Puer Nobis,' and his naïve Prelude on the Trinity Office Hymn. Godfrey Sceats's Versets on 'Salve, Festa Dies,' have already been reviewed in this journal. Cyril Rootham's Rhapsody on an old English tune is very long, clever, and difficult, but one feels that the theme itself (the folk-tune 'Lazarus,' used in the 'E. H.' for the hymn, 'I heard the Voice') is given too big a contrapuntal load. The other pieces are mainly rather light in character, and the whole series, with the exception of the Rhapsody, is so moderate in difficulty that it should be well within the power of the average player.

From Paxtons come a Postlude in E flat by H. Davan Wetton; Bagatelle by Reginald H. Hunt; 'Sonata di Camera' by Bernard Johnson; and the Ballet Music from Gounod's 'Faust,' arranged by Herbert F. Ellingford. Obviously the three last-named are on the light side, and even Dr. Wetton's Postlude is more suitable for recital purposes than for use in connection with a service. The Bagatelle is effectively written, but its main theme is too suggestive of pianoforte dance music. The Sonata (which dates from the composer's youth) also suffers from some thematic triviality and over-luscious harmony. For example, the progression which 'made' Nevin's 'The Rosary' appears over and over again. But the work contains a good deal of attractive material that should ensure its success as a concert piece.

Rheinberger's Sonatas suffer so much from lack of phrasing and other helps to performance that there should be a warm welcome for the Album, edited by Karl Heynsen, just issued by Forberg (Novello), in two books. The first contains four of the Trios, the Intermezzo and Fugue from Sonata No. 4, the Skandinavisch from No. 16, the Idyll from No. 14, and the Pastorale from No. 12; in the second book are the Intermezzo from No. 8, the Provençalish from No. 19, the Idyll from No. 18, the Cantilène from No. 11, and the fine Toccata. The editor has added many helpful signs of all kinds. Particularly useful are those showing the division between the hands of certain difficult or widespread manual passages. These books, published as they are at a very low cost (a mere half-crown), should make this admirable organ music known to an even wider circle than it has so far reached. This edition is particularly useful to students and players of moderate ability.

Too little provision has been made for the organist of slender technique, who is unable to improvise and whose instrument is small. In the past he was usually driven to feeble harmonium music or to snippets of transcription. The need is felt especially in the matter of short, quiet pieces suitable for use before a service. With this requirement in view, Dr. W. G. Alcock has written a set of 'Twelve Short Introductory Voluntaries' (Novello). He has performed the rare feat of keeping the music simple and devotional, and at the same time free from the twin faults of banality and sloppiness that too often characterise easy organ music. Hardly a page is without its touches of interesting harmony, and the pieces as a whole have much of the effect of good, quiet improvisation. The music is printed on two staves. All the pieces may be played on one manual, and in Nos. 6 to 12 the pedal part is easily negotiable by the left hand. Here and there opportunities for a little soloing present themselves, though it is not indicated, the object being to provide for the limitations of one keyboard. The pieces are timed, and take from one to two-and-a-quarter minutes. Apart from their value as voluntaries, these pieces make admirable studies in legato and simple polyphonic playing, and so may be used in the early stages of organ study.

Some time ago a striking little Folk-Song Suite, by Rupert Erlebach, was reviewed in these columns. A successor has been received in the shape of a Folk-Carol Suite (Stainer & Bell). Mr. Erlebach has taken six carol tunes—'The Little Room,' 'The Cherry Tree,' 'The Moon Shines Bright,' 'On Christmas Night,' 'The Twelve Apostles,' and 'Down in yon Forest'—and treated them with a good deal of originality, though we are too often reminded that he is a pupil of Vaughan Williams. Modal influence is appropriately strong, but the composer is over-partial to consecutives of the fashionable type, and at times he seems to ignore some of the limitations of the organ. For example, the rapid dissonant chords in 'Down in yon Forest' would usually be far from clear in effect, and the quaver chords for tuba would surely be noisy. Moreover, Mr. Erlebach appears to have overlooked the fact that many harmonic roughnesses that are effective in the orchestra, the string quartet, or on the pianoforte, become merely ugly and confused on the organ owing to its limited range of nuance, and its inability to separate the constituent parts in a fortissimo. But there are many striking moments in the Suite, and I hope Mr. Erlebach will go ahead and add himself to the small but growing number of native composers who have something to say, and contrive to say it effectively on the organ.

ORGAN AND STRINGS

There is a growing demand for short works for organ in combination with small bodies of other instruments. Alec Rowley's 'Andante Religioso in $\frac{7}{4}$ time,' for violoncello solo, strings, organ, and drums, should therefore speedily make a place for itself at recitals and church festivals, and at concerts where it is desired to combine organ and orchestra. The piece is broadly conceived, opening and closing quietly, with an imposing climax midway. There is a genuinely religious atmosphere, due not to harmonies of the conventional 'devotional' flavour, but to the texture and rhythm, in both of which are the freedom and gravity that we associate with the purer types of Church music. The work is not difficult, the chief demands being for breadth and good phrasing.

H. G.

STRINGS

Mr. F. Louis Taylor has written a set of six progressive pieces for violin and pianoforte accompaniment (Joseph Williams), the first of which implies only the use of the first and second fingers. This must surely be something of a record. And with all sympathy for the efforts that are being made to make the training of violinists smooth and interesting, we may doubt the wisdom of such experiments as Mr. Taylor has attempted in his 'Valse Lente.' The musical worth of such work is nil, for the composer is tied to few notes and to the simplest rhythms. The student, accordingly, has nothing to learn; he is not asked to make an effort, or to achieve something worth an effort; he can find no stimulus to further study. Education after all means discipline—discipline accepted willingly for the sake of an ideal, but discipline nevertheless. Are we not going too far in supposing that any potential violinist will need the relaxation of a little piece before he has learnt how to place properly his four fingers on the strings of his instrument? In fairness to Mr. Taylor it must be said that the interest of his music grows as the standard progresses, and the sixth piece of the series is neither better nor worse than any other work of its class.

The same publishers have also issued a Chopin Violoncello Album arranged and edited by Cedric Sharpe. The album consists of a mazurka, a nocturne, a valse, two preludes, and a study—well chosen and arranged for the 'cello with the skill of an expert. The printing, which has been done in England, is quite equal to the best work of the Continent. But how came the printers' readers to mistake the alto for the tenor key in the pianoforte part of the Mazurka in C major? When we first read the piece we thought Cedric Sharpe bent on giving a Schönbergian touch to Chopin. Such mistakes would have been too obvious to be noted thirty or forty years ago, but just now there is no saying what composers or editors à la Stravinsky may do.

Nos. 7 and 8 of the Cramer Library of String Music, edited by Geoffrey Shaw, consist of a 'Fantaisie' String Quartet by Alec Rowley and 'Phantasy' String Quartet by Leslie Woodgate. Both are easy, unambitious, pleasant enough compositions, well adapted for young students eager to taste the first joys of quartet playing. And this seems to be what the composers had in mind—otherwise their limitations could not be easily explained. Quartet literature, however, is so vast that we fancy somehow a well-made selection of classical works would hit the mark with surer aim. Of the two new Quartets we prefer by far the 'Phantasy,' for Leslie Woodgate appears to have a clearer conception of the structure and the nature of quartet music.

B. V.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Jacques Durand : Quelques Souvenirs d'un Editeur de Musique.'

[Paris : Durand, 2 fr. 50 c.]

M. Durand is the head of the Paris publishing house of that name—a justly famous house. At the age of sixty he feels he has memories enough of interesting people to justify this modest booklet.

M. Durand's grandfather was musical. He sent his son to the Paris Conservatoire, where César Franck and Saint-Saëns were fellow-students. This son became a composer and organist of repute, and then launched on music-publishing in 1870. M. Durand had a musical childhood. He knew his sol-fa before his letters, and took naturally to the pianoforte. The father was publishing the works of Bizet, Saint-Saëns, Massenet, Lalo, Guiraud, and Godard, and the son knew these and most of the other French musicians of the time. He entered the Conservatoire, as his father had done before him. He was under Dubois, and later under Guiraud (Debussy's master) for composition. It was an understood thing that his destiny was to carry on his father's business, and happily he took to it wholeheartedly.

These memories are all happy. The Durands seem to have been on the closest social terms with the composers they published. Parties of them went off on holidays together. No sort of business disagreement or disappointment ever seems to have arisen to ruffle these relationships. Did Debussy, after having had his first works published by Durand's, go elsewhere with his 'Faun' and 'Nocturnes'? M. Durand explains that > . . . he had noticed that no result came of all the efforts we had made on behalf of his works—the String Quartet last of all—and out of a feeling of delicacy he refrained from resorting to us with his heavy weights, such as orchestral compositions. Hartmann happened to be there, and Debussy yielded.

He returned to Durand's, however, with 'Pelléas.'

The effect of 'Pelléas' was to bring back to light such earlier works as the Quartet, which, a few years before, Durand's had vainly tried to establish. After Ysaÿe's Quartet had played it magnificently and with success :

> . . . we offered it gratuitously to a number of chamber-music parties, but in vain. Later on some of these very same musicians wrote asking it of us, and declaring that they had never known of it.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> At the pianoforte, whether in his own music or in that of others, Debussy was a charmer with a most delicate touch. He had been taught by Marmontel, but had not kept up practice. Still, what a finish in his interpretation! When he turned to Chopin, it verged on the prodigious. . . . To pianists who came to him for advice on the playing of his compositions, Debussy used to say, 'Above all, let me forget when I hear you, that the pianoforte has hammers!'

Saint-Saëns naturally figures large in the book. Here is a story illustrative of his mother's influence on his art. Saint-Saëns once invited a party of friends to hear some new works, including the first 'Cello Sonata. The performance was good, the party a success, the congratulations general. But when the guests had gone, Madame Saint-Saëns with her characteristic bluntness told her son that the Finale of the Sonata was wretchedly bad, and that it depreciated the whole work.

> Saint-Saëns in a fury tore up the Finale. For a week he shut himself up in his study ; he appeared only at meal-times, and then said nothing. At last, having completed the admirable Finale we all know, he showed it to his mother, who approved.

The death of this beloved mother caused a crisis in Saint-Saëns's mind. He disappeared, none of his friends knew where. Meanwhile a chance of producing his opera 'Ascanio' on the stage occurred —a chance too precious to be missed, only it involved transposing upwards the whole of one part. The task was entrusted by the publishers to Guiraud —a well-nigh forgotten composer, but one who seems the more likeable the more one hears of him.

Saint-Saëns, it afterwards turned out, had been hiding from the world under an assumed name at Las Palmas. Not that he completely concealed his musical gifts from the natives. One night the baritone of the local operatic troupe fell suddenly ill, and Saint-Saëns stepped into the breach and sang the part of Rigoletto.

Later on the book tells us a good deal of the big undertaking of publishing Rameau complete, an undertaking of which M. Durand is pardonably proud. But his whole career, for that matter, has been that of a very good servant of art. C.

'The Musical Pilgrim' Series. Edited by Arthur Somervell.

'Bach's B minor Mass.' By C. Sanford Terry.

'The Mastersingers of Wagner.' By Cyril Winn.

'Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas.' By A. Forbes Milne.

'The "48": Bach's Wohltemperirtes Clavier.' Book 1. By J. A. Fuller-Maitland.

'The "48": Bach's Wohltemperirtes Clavier.' Book 2. By J. A. Fuller-Maitland.

'Bach's Keyboard Suites.' By J. A. Fuller-Maitland.

[Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.* each.]

'Musical Taste and How to Form It.' By M.-D. Calvocoressi.

[Oxford University Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*]

'The Appreciation of Music by means of the "Pianola" and "Duo-Art."' By Percy A. Scholes.

[Oxford University Press, 5*s.*]

If the wayfaring man does not speedily become a musical enthusiast it will not be for want of help. Here is a batch of guides, all good in their different ways. The 'Pilgrim' series consists of little booklets, handy for the pocket, attractive in style, and catering for the musician as well as for the neophyte. Prof. Sanford Terry's study of the B minor Mass, for example, seems to contain all the facts concerning that monumental work, and so is valuable to the lecturer and writer as well as to the student, the choralist, and the member of the audience. Mr. Fuller-Maitland discusses very happily all the '48' and the Suites, and compares various editions on textual points. Mr. Forbes Milne's title is a little misleading, as he deals only with five of the Sonatas—the E flat, Op. 7 ; D major, Op. 28 ; D minor, Op. 31 ; the 'Appassionata' ; and the E major, Op. 109. His careful analyses should help the young player. This delightful series is a venture full of promise.

Mr. Calvocoressi adopts a friendly, colloquial method that makes the reader's progress easy. No sounder judge need be asked for. 'Feste' will be interested to note that his remark in the August Musical Times as to opera being a bad starting-point for the musical beginner is emphatically confirmed by Mr. Calvocoressi:

> For many reasons, but chiefly because I want you to learn to enjoy music for its own sake, apart from the associations and other clues that words may suggest . . . I urge you to begin with instrumental music, not with songs or operas. I do not mean that you are to avoid listening to songs or operas, but that you should, for the time being, base your scheme of taste-education upon instrumental works only. You will thereby learn to appreciate song and opera all the better, whereas you might (as happens to many people) devote a whole life-time to song and opera without ever coming any nearer the power to enjoy a string quartet, or a symphony, or even lovely choral works such as the Tudor madrigals and the church music of Palestrina, whose scheme and appeal, broadly speaking, are altogether those of pure music.

And it is significant that he mentions as exceptions the works of Wagner's maturity—which are really symphonic rather than operatic.

I feel disposed to part company with Mr. Calvocoressi in his disparagement of the gramophone and wireless. Both, especially the former, give us so nearly a perfect representation of chamber music that they cannot be neglected by anybody, amateur or professional. The adverse opinions Mr. Calvocoressi quotes become less and less true every few months, thanks to improvements in transmission and recording. Mr. Calvocoressi lays too much stress, I think, on the importance of the reproduction of the exact tone-colour and balance of the original—a point that arises very little in the case of most classical works, and, in fact, rarely in any work that is thematically and rhythmically vital. But this controversial detail does not affect the value of an admirable little book.

With Mr. Scholes we return to that overdone and not too happy word 'appreciation.' His book consists of a verbatim report of a series of lectures delivered recently at Æolian Hall. Sir Alexander Mackenzie writes a Foreword, and there is also a chapter on 'How to get the best from the Pianola,' by Reginald Reynolds, who manipulated the instrument for the illustrations. Here, as in Mr. Calvocoressi's book, there is nothing pedantic or high horse. Everything is plain and simply put, with a good many touches of humour—some rather too elementary to bear the ordeal of print. Thanks to this easy-going style, and to the numerous and sometimes quite lengthy music-type examples, the reader is almost as well off as were those who sat at Mr. Scholes's feet. If they have a pianola and the right rolls they will, of course, be able to reproduce the lectures entire. The move towards the recognition of the player-piano as an educational force is strongly backed by an honorary advisory committee of great weight, but many of us will feel that the contrivance is badly handicapped in two ways. First, it reduces everything to terms of the pianoforte—an instrument which, with all its attractive powers, fails badly in such vital points as sostenuto, cantabile, and nuance, whereas the gramophone gives us wonderful reproductions of string tone, and scarcely less good ones of wood-wind instruments and of some voices. Second, we may buy a good gramophone for a few pounds, but even the cheapest player-piano costs an amount that simply puts it outside the reach of the average amateur. The time will come when every school will have its gramophone, its wireless installation, its pianoforte, and its player-piano. But the last to be provided will be the player-piano, unless the cost is very substantially reduced. Let us hope that this will soon be the case, for after all there is a place which it alone can fill. Both wireless and gramophone are still comparative failures in the matter of pianoforte tone, so there is need for an instrument able to pass on to us great players' actual performances of the best pianoforte music, as well as the very considerable amount of effective transcription. The attention now being directed to the instrument by the formation of the committee, and by this series of lectures, will perhaps lead the manufacturers to take steps towards catering for the thousands of us that want a player-piano, but cannot afford one at the present figure. H. G.

A booklet of great interest to all Bach-lovers, especially to choral conductors, is the 'Selected List of the Works of John Sebastian Bach,' just issued by Novello. It gives a brief description and particulars (time of performance, the orchestration, soloists required, &c.) concerning the choral works published by the firm (about sixty in number, including forty-six of the cantatas and motets); a list of choruses taken from those works; details of twelve books of vocal solos; a complete table of the organ works; a list of orchestral, organ, harmonium, and pianoforte arrangements; Bach literature, &c. A note on the orchestration of the cantatas gives practical suggestions as to the substitution of modern instruments for such as are obsolete, &c.

Another list that has just been revised and brought up to date is one of 'Albums of Sacred Songs from the Oratorios and Cantatas of Bach, Handel, Mendelssohn, &c.'

These handy little works of reference may be had free on application to the publishers.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Mozart.' By Dr. F. Gehring. Pp. 131. Sampson, Low, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.' By W. S. Rockstro. Pp. 147. Sampson, Low, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Class-Singing.' By W. G. Whittaker. Pp. 136. Oxford University Press, 6*s.*

'The Organist and his Choir.' By Augustus Toop. Pp. 64. Musical Opinion Office, 2*s.*

'Haydn.' By Pauline D. Townsend. Pp. 124. Sampson, Low, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Beethoven.' By H. A. Rudall. Pp. 165. Sampson, Low, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Frédéric Smetana.' By Zdeněk Nejedlý. Pp. 88. Paris: Edition Bossard; Prague: Edition Orbis. [An English translation of this book was reviewed in our issue of September, 1924.]

'Income-Tax Simplified, 1925-26.' By Arthur Fieldhouse. Pp. 98. Simpkin, Marshall, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Patersons, of Glasgow (who will celebrate their centenary in 1927), have recently formed a new company known as Patersons' Publications, Limited, for the special development of their educational music department. They have also come to an arrangement with the Oxford University Press (with which is incorporated the Anglo-French Music Company), under which the O.U.P. will represent Patersons in England and Wales, and Patersons will act as agents for the O.U.P. in Scotland and Ireland.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

COLUMBIA

The three orchestral records received for review this month raise an interesting point in regard to clearness of texture and the reproduction of tone-colour. In a 12-in. of the 'Liebestod' from 'Tristan and Isolda,' played by the Philharmonic Orchestra, under Bruno Walter, the general effect is on the vague side; far more clearness and variety are obtained in the Overture to 'Hansel and Gretel' (12-in., New Queen's Hall Light Orchestra, conducted by Frank Bridge); best of all is the record of a selection from 'Tell me more,' played by the '1925' Orchestra. Even when allowance is made for the very different character of the music and scoring, the disparity is far wider than it ought to be. I discussed this point a few months ago, but no apology is needed for a few more words on the subject. Some hard things are said from time to time concerning the gramophone (Mr. Calvocoressi quotes some in a new book reviewed on p. 823 of this issue), and the chief complaint is on the score of the texture and colour of orchestral records. Yet the reproduction of this revue music of Gershwin is astounding in both respects. There is no trace of muzziness; every detail stands out clearly, and the instrumental colours are sharply defined. More; we complain constantly, and with reason, of the banjo-like tone of the pianoforte in most records. But in this 'Tell me more' selection there are two longish sections for pianoforte solo in which the tone is delightfully pure. (The pianist, Mr. Percival Mackay, deserves mention for his crisp playing of these passages.)

Is it too much to hope that very soon fine orchestral and pianoforte music shall be as faithfully reproduced as is 'jazz' at present? I add that the Gershwin record is not unworthy the attention of musicians. It very well bears transplanting from the theatre. Indeed (dare I whisper the fact?) I find it more enjoyable than the average Gilbert and Sullivan 'selection.' On the other hand, the 'jazz' composer fails where the English pair scored, for the records of vocal numbers from 'Tell me more' are banal as to words (when they can be heard) and melody. Clearly Gershwin, like other jazz composers, is lost without his spicy array of instruments and his hiccuping rhythm.

The record of the Grenadier Guards' playing of a selection of Wilfrid Sanderson's songs is another example of the clearness which we grudge to such poor music so long as important orchestral works are comparatively foggy (12-in.).

Vocal records calling for mention are of Harold Williams in Hedgcock's 'On the road to Mandalay' and Dix's 'The Trumpeter' (12-in.), both well sung with manly voice and with good variety of colour; Miriam Licette and Frank Mullings in 'One fine day' and 'Give me your darling hands' from 'Madame Butterfly,' with orchestra conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty—well above the average of operatic records (12-in.); Elsa Stralia in Rice's 'By my Fireside' and Eric Coates's 'I heard you singing'—an improvement on the records of Miss Stralia mentioned last month, but still not worthy of her, either in performance or material, the Rice song touching rock-bottom of banality (10-in.); and John Payne and Lawrence Brown in three negro 'spirituals'—'Nobody knows the trouble I've seen,' 'Every time I feel de spirit,' and 'It's me, O Lord.' Here we can imagine a couple of devout darkies singing until the close of 'It's me,' at which point a conventional long-drawn treatment of the last line suggests a very poor sentimental song, and away goes our pleasure. Some juicy chords in the accompaniment are similarly out of the picture.

H.M.V.

The August list shows that the Company believes its clients want good music, and plenty of it, in the summer as well as in the winter. A few years ago it would not have sent out in August such a work as the Franck Quartet. I hope that all the gramophone enthusiasts who are holidaying will not overlook this splendid recording of one of the greatest things in chamber music. The work has been asked for by gramophonists for some time past—I fancy the National Gramophonic Society, despairing of its issue by any of the recording companies, had it down for consideration. Here it is, and H.M.V. should have no cause to regret the enterprise.

The players are the Virtuoso String Quartet, and the work fills six 12-in., the first movement being on sides 1-4, the Scherzo on 5-6, the Larghetto on 7-9, and the Finale on 10-12. The playing is notable in many respects. I cannot recall in any records such a wide range of power as we get here, from a delicate whisper to an astonishing sonority. No less vivid are the contrasts in colour and mood. Owing to its great length, complexity, and variety, the work makes exceptional demands on the players. After several delighted hearings of these records I can only say that there is scarcely a spot where an improvement can be suggested. My hat is off to all concerned! And if this achievement does not lead to an early demand for Franck's other great chamber work, the Quintet, I shall be surprised.

The Albert Hall Orchestra's performance of the 'Figaro' Overture, and the popular Minuet and Trio in D of Mozart is good, without being among the best examples of orchestral records. Sir Landon Ronald conducts (12-in.). From a recording point of view I prefer that of the New Light Symphony Orchestra in a Spanish Dance of Moszkowski and the Intermezzo from Goldmark's 'Rustic Wedding' Symphony. The former is really brilliant (12-in.).

A great deal of popular interest attaches to a Pachmann record—the first he has made. He plays Chopin's Nocturne in B and Impromptu in F sharp. It would be pleasant to be able to fall down and worship with the crowd, but candour compels me to say that the pianoforte tone is often hard (indeed, sometimes the effect suggests the smiting of steel bars), and that the Impromptu strikes me as falling short on the expressive side—the last defect one expects to find in Pachmann's playing of Chopin. But perhaps he was ill at ease in thus making his début in the recording room—an ordeal to anybody, but really severe in the case of one hard on eighty years of age. We read in the H.M.V. Bulletin that an audience had to be provided, and that 'no restraint whatever was put upon the mannerisms of the famous pianist, who played and interjected his little dissertations on the music (just as he does at recitals), oblivious of the fact that his remarks were also being recorded.' (Was he oblivious, I wonder?) As one who hates this chattering habit of Pachmann's, I am glad he confines himself to a few remarks at the end of the Nocturne. What those remarks were I could not make out until I referred to the Bulletin, when I learned that he says (at the point where the chords interrupt the music so dramatically), 'Chopin is crying; but don't be frightened . . . . they are only friends who are knocking . . . . they will knock again, and go away.' There be those who like this sort of thing, and so this will be the sort of thing they will like. For my part, I object to people talking during music, and the fact that the talker happens to be the performer merely makes the offence worse. If he doesn't know better than to interrupt Chopin, we can hardly complain of that confounded flapper in the row behind (12-in.).

Two vocal quartet records show that there is still a good deal to be done before this branch of singing and recording is level with the best in other forms. The Peerless Quartet (male-voice) sings two very poor effusions—E. Stanley's 'When my golden hair has turned to silver grey' and Tonzo Sauvage's 'Heaven is my Home,' in a way that shows that these singers have a long way to go before they can be said to live up to their title. 'Peerless': what a label to tie on to oneself! (10-in.).

The Gresham Singers are much better, with a spirited performance of German's 'London Town.' Their other choice is Reger's 'Heartache'—a very laboured affair, which sounds like a poor chorale over-harmonized rather than a part-song (10-in.).

Only two vocal solo records have been received—a 10-in. of John McCormack in Brahms's 'Komm bald' and 'Feldeinsamkeit,' both sung in German; and a 12-in. of Tina Poli-Randacio and Maartje Offers in a couple of duets from 'Aïda.' I am not an enthusiast so far as McCormack's voice is concerned, but his singing of these Brahms songs is a welcome and restful change from the too-frequent tenor operatic record. The 'Aïda' duets suffer from a persistent wobble on the part of both singers, especially the soprano.

VOCALION

For some inscrutable reason this month's parcel omits most of the records that would interest readers of this journal, and the fox-trot examples are a poor substitute.

The playing of the Life Guards Band in a selection from 'La Bohème' is unequal, the ensemble being shaky at times. The recording is good (12-in.).

The only other instrumental record calling for notice is a 10-in. of John Amadio in Büchner's 'Hungarian Fantasia' and Terschak's 'Remembrance.' Neither piece is worth much musically, but the records are of interest because of the masterly playing.

Happily the only vocal record received is exceptionally good. It gives us Watcyn Watcyns in German's 'West Country Lad' (from 'Tom Jones'), and a fine song by Stanford, 'The Pibroch.' Here are a first-rate voice and style, the one fault being that only a portion of the words come through. I recently commented on the excellence of the Vocalion pianoforte recording. These songs give us further evidence of this, the tone being without a trace of harshness. The playing of Stanley Chapple is delightfully clear, and the balance with the voice just right.

Mr. W. Barclay Squire has been appointed honorary curator of the Royal Music Library, which is now on permanent loan to the British Museum.

Player-Piano Notes

By William Delasaire

PACHMANN

Pachmann's recent recitals in this country, after his comparatively lengthy absence, appear to have greatly stimulated interest in the records of his playing which he has made for the 'Duo-Art' reproducing piano. The Æolian Company has very kindly sent me a collection of these rolls, which are naturally mostly of Chopin's music. This of itself makes them a supreme test for the instrument, added to which is the difficulty of catching the more than ordinarily elusive charm of the pianist's presence and manner. The chatter is absent, for example, and to some people a voiceless Pachmann is no Pachmann at all! However, these rolls remain an extraordinarily interesting record of his playing, whether one likes them or not. Personally, I find much in them which I think is supreme artistry, and much which I find merely irritating. This applies especially in the matter of tempo, in which respect, of course, the records are faultless. Every subtlety of rubato is infallibly caught and reproduced—sometimes to the extent of an inch of paper between the hands in one chord! Mr. McEwen, principal of the Royal Academy of Music, has recently been discussing the question of Tempo Rubato in the Music Teacher, his analysis being based largely on an examination of these rolls. Those who wish to inquire into the subject further could hardly do better than obtain them—indeed, no complete study of the matter could be made without these rolls.

In regard to dynamic effects, they are perhaps less successful. I noticed that during the greater part of Pachmann's Chopin recital the una corda pedal of the pianoforte (apparently the instrument which he thinks divine at the moment) was depressed. Of course, he was using a concert grand, and many of us have to be content with an upright pianoforte, but we might try the experiment of assisting the Duo-Art piano by depressing its half-blow pedal, and so in this way perhaps approach a little nearer to the unique delicacy of the Pachmann touch. Frequently, this seems to escape the recording and reproducing instruments.

The roll which strikes me as being exceptionally good is the Etude, Op. 25, No. 5, in E minor (056). Here the scherzo-like treatment comes out beautifully; and the repetition of the second subject is a perfect example of rubato—the left hand is so aptly matched by the right, but without exaggeration. This is a most distinguished roll, and comes as near as possible to giving us the essence of Pachmann's style.

Almost its equal is the Impromptu in A flat, Op. 29 (044). His interpretation of the piece is so well-known and so unvarying that one could recognise it 'blindfolded.' The rubato is distinctly 'sticky' in places, however, and either delights or annoys according to one's tastes, but the rhythmic urge of it is splendid. The pulse is felt from the first bar to the last, despite all the hills and valleys. Playing it through a number of times I find the style most infectious—it seems to breathe the very spirit of spring.

The Ballade in A flat, Op. 47 (025), is another piece which unmistakably bears the pianist's imprimatur. I am inclined to think that it is good only in parts: at times the tempo seems to be wilfully interfered with to no artistic effect—none that is apparent to me, at any rate. But this is really the crux of the whole matter. It is so difficult to listen to such playing objectively. The hypnotic effect of the great name, the conscious and sub-conscious recollections of his style and personality, all tend to render one's opinions more than usually temperamental and subjective. Certainly this roll exhibits every one of his tricks and mannerisms—the excessively spread chord, the inverted spread, the broken octave, the delayed melody note, the agogic accent—all are evident in abundance. Some of them seem to be inspired, others—dare I say it?—the result of carelessness or of failing technique, though it is difficult to differentiate. This is the sort of roll which, in the hand-played version, to attempt to control with the tempo lever is simply disastrous. It must be Pachmann or nothing. Any imposition of one's own ideas upon it merely produces a hiatus of the most terrible kind.

The 'Raindrop' Prelude, Op. 28, No. 15, in D flat (015), is similarly distinguished. The disparity between the right- and left-hand parts is in places truly remarkable, and surely is pianistic license in excelsis. Whether Chopin would bless or curse I cannot say, but while I think it a trifle over-sentimentalized—as, indeed, I believe much of Pachmann's playing to be—I regard it as a very fine performance, worthy of much attention, though not necessarily of emulation. The climax of the second subject is magnificently dealt with, contrasting finely with the placidity of the opening phrases.

There are three Nocturnes, of which the best, in my opinion, is that in E minor, Op. 72, No. 1 (016). The pianist's style seems to fit this exactly, producing a serene, unhurried interpretation that I feel is almost perfect. I can imagine no finer playing of it than this.

Equally good is the Nocturne in D flat, Op. 27, No. 2 (047), in which composer and pianist combine to produce an exquisitely beautiful pattern of sound. The playing is a model of restraint and refinement that defies detailed analysis and disarms criticism.

The Nocturne, Op. 15, No. 2, in F sharp (013), is played in too lingering and emotionalised a fashion for my liking, and is therefore more interesting than attractive. Neither do I care much for the Polonaise, Op. 26, No. 1, in C sharp minor (045). The music is hardly Chopin at his best, I think, and the playing is in places most erratic, so that one receives a series of little mental shocks as the continuity of it is momentarily held up; and the meno mosso section is really too sugary.

The remaining two rolls are excellent—the Mazurka, Op. 33, No. 4, in B minor (021), most delightfully played, and the Valse, Op. 64, No. 2, in C sharp minor (018). I tried this roll immediately on returning from the recital at which it was played, and can testify to its wonderful re-creation of Pachmann's spirit.

In conclusion I think it is true to say that the defects of these rolls are in some measure their virtues. After all, they do enable us to appraise the playing of a great artist dispassionately, reduced more or less to its essentials and freed from all the glamour of his personality and accompanying antics. I have confessed that I find such judgment rather difficult of accomplishment, but the opportunity for continued and earnest study of Pachmann's playing, even though the rolls be not entirely perfect reproductions in every respect, is one for which we ought to be grateful. I certainly am, and so also, I think, will be my readers.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The Certificate Choir-Training Examination will be held on Wednesday, November 4. Last day of entry, Monday, October 5.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Tuesday, November 3, at 3.30 p.m., by Sir Walford Davies, and at 6.30 p.m. by Mr. Stanley Roper.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

THE PRÆTORIUS ORGAN

BY E. VAN DER STRAETEN

In order to understand and appreciate any musical composition to the fullest possible extent, it is necessary to hear it reproduced by the same medium for which it was originally conceived. An orchestral work cannot be judged by a pianoforte arrangement, nor can the latter instrument, notwithstanding its many and great advantages, give us a correct idea of Domenico Scarlatti's Sonatas, or the French clavecinists' pieces for the harpsichord, with their delicate shadings of colour, and effects to be obtained from the two manuals and various stops.

A number of musicians and amateurs of various countries have for that reason devoted themselves to the study of some of the now obsolete instruments. Prof. Dr. W. Gurlitt, of Freiburg University, was, however, the first to point out that, like the harpsichord, lute, viol, &c., compositions the works of the great organ masters of the 16th and early 17th centuries were likewise written for an instrument differing widely in many essential features from the organ of to-day. The latter responds to the modern demand for very full harmonies, a large volume of sound, produced by the combination of numerous registers, as well as the cantabile element, and great dynamic variety, whereas the juxtaposition of individual registers of well-defined character was the chief device of the older organ, in which mixtures were possible only to a limited extent. As the music of the Renaissance and Baroque times was constructed on horizontal, and not on perpendicular lines, it was essential that the parts should be well contrasted by clearly defined tone-colours. The works of all good composers being written with a view to the intrinsic characteristics of the instrument for which they are intended, it was evident to Prof. Gurlitt that to obtain a clear comprehension of old organ music, one would have to reconstruct an instrument similar to those for which that music was designed. To this end he had recourse to Michael Prætorius's 'Organographia,' which forms part of the second volume of his 'Syntagma Musicum,' published in 1618-20, containing exact and full data of the organ-builder's art of his time, together with dispositions of various organs, and descriptions, illustrations, and measurements of pipes, &c. These formed the basis of his plans, which were elaborated in conjunction with Dr. Oskar Walcker, head of the firm of E. F. Walcker, the eminent organ-builders of Ludwigsburg (Würtemberg).

All available works dealing with the organ of that period were consulted, some of the original registers still to be found here and there in old organs were carefully examined, and where such were lacking the tone-qualities of the original instruments—e.g., the rancket, the recorder, and the cromorne, which were represented in some of the old registers—were studied. Dr. Walcker personally supervised the construction of the organ, in which he was keenly interested, and which presented a formidable task, as the builders had to free themselves from all conceptions and principles of modern organ-building in order to produce a replica of the older instrument that would be historically truthful in all essential features. The disposition of the organ is as follows :

Upper Work (Oberwerk)

1. Principal (8-ft.).
2. Octave (4-ft.).
3. Mixture Quadruple, including Octave (2-ft.), and 'Quint' (fifth) (1⅓-ft.).
4. Grobgedackt, reed flute (8-ft.).
5. Nachthorn (horn-like labial) (4-ft.).
6. Schwegelpipe (1-ft.).
7. Rancket (racket) or soft (stille) trombone (16-ft.)

Back-positive

8. Quintadeena, fundamental note with 12th (8-ft.).
9. Recorder (4-ft.).
10. Gemshorn (2-ft.).
11. Cymbel, double, small and acute.
12. Spitzflöte (4-ft.).
13. Cromorne (8-ft.).

In the Prospect

14. Klein lieblech gedackt flute, reed flute (2-ft.).
15. Bearpipe (8-ft.).
16. Geigend regal (viol toned) (4-ft.).

Pedal

17. Untersatz stark (sub-bass) (16-ft.).
18. Trombone bass (16-ft.).
19. Cornet (2-ft.).
(20.) Dolcian bass (8-ft.).

Tremolo to the whole work.
Coupling to both Manuals.
Coupling of Pedal to back positive.
Star to Cymbel (little bells or metal rods, struck by the arms of a revolving star).

No. 20 is an addition to Prætorius's disposition, and is given in parentheses. After eighteen months' strenuous work the organ was finished in 1921, and placed in the hall of the Musical Seminary of Freiburg University. In commemoration of the Tercentenary of the death of the famous master (February 15, 1621), to whom in a great measure it owed its origin, it received the name of the Prætorius Organ. The cantor of St. Thomas at Leipsic, Prof. Karl Straube, one of the greatest living German organists, inaugurated the instrument, after having in the short space of a week familiarised himself completely with its individual characteristics. This was no mean task, for he had first to divest himself of all ideas of modern organ-playing. But he soon became enthusiastic about its possibilities. With regard to tone, the instrument realised the keenest expectations, and from the musical point of view it even surpassed them. In the same manner as the builder and player had to free themselves from all ideas they had hitherto formed with regard to their art, so had the listener to free his mind from all impressions he had previously received from the organ, and to apply to it a new criterion. The metallic, vibrating sound of the prevalent reed stops gives a transparency and clearness in polyphonic movements which is unattainable on the modern organ. The middle parts stand out in clear plastic lines in a manner hitherto quite unknown. The strong contrasts of the registers are particularly calculated to produce clearness in the performance of all horizontally conceived music, from its earliest beginnings to its zenith, decadence, and transition period. The organ is therefore an ideal instrument for pedagogic purposes, and it is not surprising that its origin is connected with Prof. Gurlitt's institute, where great stress is laid upon illustrative methods ; and for all to whom the study of musical science means more than analysis and the registering of rigid forms, who look for actual experience and an awakening of the genius of past ages, the instrument will be of incalculable value. From what has been said about the character of the instrument it will be comprehensible that the 8-ft. registers do not occupy the predominating position which they now hold, but that the 16-ft., 4-ft., and even 2-ft. and 1-ft. registers are equally important. In one stop, however, the modern development announces itself, and that is in the tremolo, the beat of which is given by Prætorius as 0.7 sec., which of course is very slow, but it shows the first attempt to break the rigidity of the tone. In 1627 already Sam. Scheidt calls the 'Tremulant' the 'Prinzipalstück,' and it foreshadows the advent of the register- and tone-mixtures. It is interesting to note that in the Prætorius organ, as in all those whose period it represents, the pedal is not allotted merely to the fundamental bass, which is mostly played on the manual. The pedal is in the first instance intended for the part of the Cantus firmus, and is in tone-colour very little, if at all, darker than the manuals, but is of wider range, as it serves for their accompaniment, and for that reason we find even a 2-ft. register on the pedal.

For the inaugural concert, on December 4, 1921, Prof. Straube chose works by G. Muffat, Mich. Prætorius, J. Pachelbel, J. N. Hanff, J. S. Bach, Sam. Scheidt, D. Buxtehude, and J. K. Kerll. In July, 1922, he gave three more recitals on the same organ, repeating the former programme at the second concert, the first comprising works by Vincent Lübeck, Jean Titelouze, F. Couperin, J. Boyvin, N. Lebègue, Pachelbel, Sweelinck, and Buxtehude. The third recital brought some repetitions of, as well as different works by, the same masters.

Several eminent critics, in writing about these recitals, agree that the works of the older masters reveal themselves in an entirely new light on the Prætorius organ, especially in the fine performances of an artist like Prof. Straube. They all express the opinion that the instrument offers great possibilities which may exercise considerable influence upon the future development of organ playing and organ music, especially as new paths are opening, and the ideals of the 19th century in all arts are gradually undergoing a complete transformation.

A Byrd recital was given at St. Mary Magdalene's, Upton, Torquay (Mr. W. W. Trotman, organist), on August 9, when the choir sang the four-part 'Agnus Dei,' the carols, 'An Earthly Tree' and 'Cast off all doubtful care,' and the anthems, 'O Lord, my God,' 'Make ye joy,' and the 'Lullaby.' The programme closed with Stanford's arrangement of 'St. Patrick's Breastplate.'

At the hundred and fourteenth Anthem and Organ recital at Brighton Parish Church, on August 4, the choir sang Elgar's 'The Fourth of August,' and short works by Gounod and Clarke-Whitfeld. Dr. Chastey Hector played Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Pierné's 'Scherzando,' an Air varied, by Arne, and Lemmens's 'Storm.'

THE LATE DR. F. R. GREENISH

A memorial to the late Dr. F. R. Greenish has been placed in St. Mary's Church, Haverfordwest, where he had served as honorary organist for forty-three years, and had also been church-warden. The memorial, erected by Mrs. Greenish, is an oak screen, designed by Mr. W. D. Caroe. There are four oaken panels and a door, treated effectively with ornaments of roses, fleurs-de-lis, and pomegranates, the door of the central panel bearing a floral Latin cross with halo, where the arms intersect, and a tabernacle at the foot. The upper part of the early English arch which the screen fills, has glass panels, bearing the inscription:

Give Thanks Unto God
For the Dear Memory of
FREDERICK ROBERT GREENISH,
Mus. Doc., Oxon., Justice of the Peace for the County and Town of Haverfordwest; High Sheriff, 1899; Church-warden, 1901-1909, and Honorary Organist and Director of Music, 1886-1909. Entered into Rest, November 11, 1923, Aged 68.

Choirmasters who have not yet decided on their anthem for harvest festival should consider Basil Harwood's 'O how plentiful is Thy goodness,' which has just been issued by Novello. It is fairly long—fourteen pages of octavo—and calls for a good choir (including a treble able to sing a rather difficult solo) and a first-rate organist and organ. We like especially the capital tune set for a portion of a hymn by George Wither. This, sung in unison with an elaborate organ part, makes an effective finale.

Here is a good recital programme by a fifteen-year-old boy, Godfrey Hewitt, organist at Cudworth Parish Church: Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Two Preludes on Irish Church Melodies, Stanford; Preludes on 'Melcombe' and 'Old 104th,' Parry; Fantasia in D, Willan; Variations de Concert; Berceuse and Carillon, Vierne; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach. If the playing was up to the programme, Cudworth's young organist will go far.

Under the auspices of the Nelson Clef Club, a Gibbons Tercentenary Service was held at St. Mary's Church, Nelson, on August 16, when the choirs of St. Paul's, St. John's, St. Mary's, and St. Philip's Churches sang the Evening Service in F, and the anthems, 'This is the record of John,' 'God is gone up,' 'Why art thou so heavy?' and 'O Lord, increase my faith.' Three of Gibbons's hymn-tunes were also sung.

At Bangor, on July 30, there was a reunion of old choristers who served during the regime of Mr. T. Westlake Morgan (1892-1906). The proceedings included a recital on the Cathedral organ and a dinner at the Castle Hotel.

A series of recitals by blind organists will be given at St. Clement Danes, Strand, on Wednesdays at 1.10. The players for September will be Mr. Sinclair Logan, Mr. Leonard A. Marsh, Mr. W. J. Avery, and Mr. H. W. Greenhill, in the order named.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have received an order for the reconstruction of the organ at New College, Oxford. It is of interest to note that parts of the present instrument are of great antiquity, being the work of William Dallam (1602-65).

RECITALS

Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. Michael-at-the-North Gate, Oxford—Prelude in D minor, Clérambault; Aria in F, Toccata and Fugue in D minor, and Pastorale in F, Bach; Triumphal March, 'Now thank we all our God,' Karg-Elert; Legend, Harvey Grace; Fantasia (Sonata No. 12), Rheinberger; Bourrée in B flat and Introduction and Allegro in G, John Stanley.

Miss Lilian Coombes, St. Magnus-the-Martyr, London Bridge—'Aylesford Bridge,' 'Orchard Blossom,' and 'Allington Lock,' W. H. Wood; Scherzo in G minor, Bossi; Concert Overture in D, Faulkes; Preludes on 'By the Waters of Babylon' and 'Alone to God in the Highest be Honour,' Bach.

Mr. Richard B. Hamilton, All Saints', Hoole, Chester—Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; Postlude in G minor, Stanford; Finale in the form of an Overture, Hollins; Preludes on 'Rockingham,' 'Old 104th,' and 'Melcombe,' Parry.

Dr. A. E. Whitehead, St. Cyprian's, Maisonneuve, Montreal—Finale (Sonata No. 5), Mendelssohn; Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake,' Bach; Fantasia in A minor, Lemmens; Cradle Song, Harvey Grace; Suite Gothique, Boëllmann.

M. Louis Vierne, St. Michael's, Tenbury—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Pastorale and Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in B, Saint-Saëns; Légende, Berceuse, Carillon, and Canzona, Vierne; Cantabile, Adagio, and Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Mr. Andrew Hutton, St. Margaret's, Bloemfontein—Allegro Vivace (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Passacaglia in E minor, Rheinberger; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Sonata No. 5 (first movement), Guilmant; Toccata and Fugue in D minor and Chorale Preludes, Bach. (Mozart's Pianoforte Trio in E flat was played by Mrs. J. R. Heath, Dr. J. R. Heath, and Mr. Robinson.)

Dr. G. J. Bennett, Lincoln Cathedral—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Moderato Cantabile in E (Symphony No. 8), Intermezzo in G minor (Symphony No. 6), Adagio in A (Symphony No. 3), and Finale in D (Symphony No. 2), Widor; Introduction and Fugue from Sonata, Reubke.

Mr. D. E. Roberts, St. Andrew's Cathedral, Inverness—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Berceuse, Emil Kronke; Legend and Final Symphonique, Guilmant; Prelude in D minor, Mendelssohn; 'Chiddingfold Pieces'—'The Vision' and 'Canticum Fidei,' Dunhill; Concert Overture in C minor, Hollins; Fantasia, Stanford; Rêverie from Folk-Song Suite, Erlebach; Variations on an Old Easter Melody, John E. West.

Mr. W. G. Webber, St. Stephen's Walbrook—'The Pilgrim's Progress,' Parts 1, 2, & 3, Ernest Austin.

Miss Doris Fenner, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East, E.C.3—Le Carillon, Wolstenholme; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Postlude in D minor, Stanford.

Mr. Guy Michell, Parish Church of the Holy Trinity, Ventnor—Concert Overture in D, Michell; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Marche Solennelle, Lemare; Canzone, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Andrew's-by-the-Wardrobe, E.C.—A Bach programme: Prelude and Fugue in C minor; Sonata in E flat; Chorale Prelude, 'Come, Saviour of the Gentiles'; Fugue in E flat; Three Preludes from the 'Little Organ Book'; 'Jig' Fugue.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, Manchester Cathedral—Three movements from the 'Water Music,' Handel; Echo, Pietro Yon; Prelude and Fugue on the name B A C H, Liszt; Two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Fugue (No. 1) on the name B A C H, Schumann.

Mr. Alban Hamer, St. George's Cathedral, Cape Town—Fugue in C minor, Reubke; Rhapsody No. 1, Herbert Howells; Elegy, Bairstow; Toccata, Boëllmann.

Mr. Wallace Thompson, St. Margaret Pattens, E.C.—Hymn-Tune Studies, Charlton-Palmer; Fugue in B minor, Bach; Preludio and Monologue in D flat, Rheinberger; Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Preludes, 'Duke Street,' R. Barrett-Watson; 'University,' Harvey Grace; 'Martyrs,' Charles Wood; Elégie, Boëllmann; Toccata, Augustin Barié.

Mr. H. Stubington, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach; Cantilène (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Fantasia in D flat, Saint-Saëns; Minuet in B minor, Gigout; Offertoire, Communion, and Sortie ('Messe Basse'), Vierne.

Mr. A. W. Standidge, All Souls', Eastbourne—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Voluntary, Orlando Gibbons; Preludes on 'Old 104th' and 'Christe Redemptor Omnium,' Parry.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, Bishopsgate Institute—Sonata in E flat minor, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Air with Variations and Finale Fugato, Smart.

Mr. Frederick W. Carlick, St. John's, Highbury Vale—Prelude in C minor, Bach; Chorus, 'Hosannah,' Dubois; Evening Song, Bairstow; Intermezzo and Finale (Sonata No. 2), Rheinberger.

Mr. Archibald Farmer, St. Lawrence Jewry—Concerto No. 4, Stanley; Six Catechism Preludes, Bach; Moderato and Allegro deciso, Dallier.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch, Sherborne Lane, E.C. — Cantilène, Ch. Quef; Processional March, C. W. Pearce; March of the Crusaders, Liszt; Prelude and Variation on a Ground Bass, Bristow Farrar; Allegretto Scherzando, Wolstenholme; Air with Variations, F. E. Gladstone.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. William Cooke, choirmaster and organist, the Parish Church, St. Helen's, Lancashire.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, choirmaster and organist, Derby Road Baptist Church, Nottingham, and choirmaster, Christ Church, Peas Hill Road, Nottingham.

Mr. John Nelson, choirmaster and organist, St. John's, Radcliffe, near Manchester.

Mr. Haydn Sail, choirmaster and organist, Bunyan Meeting Church, Bedford.

Mr. Eldred E. Webster, choirmaster and organist, the Parish Church, Overstrand.

Letters to the Editor

THE GIBBONS TERCENTENARY CELEBRATIONS

SIR,—In 'Occasional Notes,' in your July issue, is the query, 'Is Orlando quite so much of a discovery as some of the enthusiasts would have us think?' In order to answer this question it is necessary, first of all, to consider the nature of the music of the Elizabethan and Tudor periods.

To appreciate this music we must concern ourselves exclusively with the choral works—the anthems and madrigals—and not with the instrumental music, which latter may have only an antiquarian interest, owing to the comparative infancy of the instrumental art at that time, and the elementary nature of the harmonic sense.

To Dr. E. H. Fellowes all lovers and students of the music of that era owe a great debt of gratitude, for he has rediscovered the secret of its performance. In his book, 'The English Madrigal Composers' (Oxford University Press), which is a corollary to his edition of 'The English Madrigal School,' running into many volumes of madrigals, Dr. Fellowes shows how subtle was the interplay of its rhythms—which rhythms are based solely upon the metre of the verbal phrase.

The development of the harmonic sense and the introduction of arbitrary bar-lines which followed this prolific period of polyphonic writing, have obscured in us moderns the free rhythmic melodic sense which the composers of the Tudor period had par excellence, and which was the only means of musical expression at their disposal.

The reason of the oblivion into which the Tudor music passed is surely none other than the loss of this rhythmic flexibility, consequent on the introduction of bar-lines, which obscured the natural flow of the speech-rhythms by unconsciously substituting an arbitrary first beat of the bar throughout.

Dr. Fellowes, while keeping the modern bar-line, has, by a system of marks placed over the initial beats of what one may call the 'natural' bar (which is none other than the natural accents of the verbal phrase), restored in the parts the varied and vital rhythmic flow without which this old music is insufferably dull.

In Orlando Gibbons and William Byrd we have perhaps the finest examples of this subtle interweaving of speech-rhythm with speech-rhythm, both in their anthems and madrigals; and it is in their faithful adherence to the wonderful subtleties of the poetic metre that their greatness lies.

As soon as choral bodies have recaptured the spirit of the madrigal writers—which will surely happen when Dr. Fellowes's book has got into the hands of conductors of madrigal and choral societies throughout the Empire, and his edition of the madrigals is being universally and intelligently used—there is no doubt we shall see a wonderful revival of interest in a school of choral-writing which is not only peculiarly British, but in which we have a heritage second to none, for we led the world in that department of musical activities towards the end of the 16th century.—

Yours, &c., NORMAN STONE.

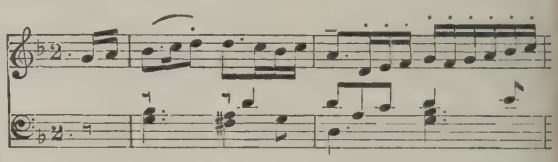
[We comment on this letter in 'Occasional Notes.'—EDITOR.]

'THE COMPLETE KEYBOARD WORKS OF ORLANDO GIBBONS'

SIR,—I wish to thank your critic for his detailed and interesting review of my Gibbons edition, and also to say that the following remarks do not in any way detract from my appreciation of it, but are intended as explanatory of the questions raised.

The reason why certain corrections appear in a reference list and not in the text is that they are intended not for the player but for scholars and students in scholarship. Of these there are few at present, but, as has been the case with our old literary texts, such scholarship is bound to come. No detail is too small for the scholar, and the labour of tracking out references is trifling compared with that of study of the original MSS. Some of these are almost inaccessible, and my object is to give the precise MS. reading to those who need it, without confusing the average player with details which to him are merely meticulous.

In the following example from the French Coranto quoted by your reviewer:



he asks, 'Can there be much doubt that in the second bar the F's should be sharpened?'

This concerns one of the most characteristic features of virginal music, the inflection of the seventh. Used melodically, the seventh is subject in a general way to be sharpened in rising and flattened in falling, but the earlier virginal composers used the minor seventh nearly always in scale-passages whether rising or falling against the tonic chord. Occasionally even the dominant triad might be accompanied by its own minor third in a rapid scale. Such cases are found in the writing of so trustworthy a transcriber as Cosyn, who was extremely accurate compared with other copyists, and it cannot be assumed that he forgot the sharps. In Gibbons's time, this inflectional use of the seventh appears to have been gradually giving way to the uniform leading-note, and I have dealt with this point on page 2 of my Preface. There is but one copy of this Coranto, and my opinion was, and is, that the evidence afforded by virginal MSS. as a whole does not permit the assumption that the copyist here intended sharps which he did not write. Their omission from my edition is therefore due neither to carelessness nor cowardice on my part. Personally, I prefer the passage as it stands.

The example from the 'Fantazia of foure parts,' quoted in July by your reviewer, is on somewhat the same lines. The complete passage is as follows:

The D♯ in the treble is the harmonic seventh (as is the F♯ in bar 1 of the previous example), and the bass D is the melodic seventh. This is, I admit, an unusual example, but its justification lies in the imitation of the bass by the tenor, and imitation as we all know covers much. The Parthenia version (which I also give in a foot-note, B bass throughout the bar) is an ordinary full close, which was generally avoided in the course of a fantasy. Perhaps Mr. 'W. H.,' of Parthenia fame, may have taken fright at the original.

I am obliged to your reviewer for his suggested correction of the engraver's omission at bar 13, page 5 (vol. 5); the first F should be sharp, and will be corrected in the next edition.

My statement that Gibbons's 'Fancies' 'open a new door in the fugal line' is based firstly on his part-writing and secondly on his subject-matter.

It seems to have been tacitly assumed ever since Gibbons's time that the part-writing in a fugue for keyboard must be in parts each one of which remains in the same position in relation to the rest—i.e., bass is always bass, tenor remains tenor, &c. This is a vocal custom (due to the necessarily confined vocal compass) transferred to the keyboard where the necessity does not exist.

The title 'Fantazia in foure parts' refers to the fact that this particular Fantasy does proceed practically in four parts in the usual manner. That Gibbons thought it necessary to emphasise the fact shows that his custom was frequently otherwise, as we find. A case in point occurs in vol. 4, page 7, line 2, in which the bass within the space of four bars ascends by easy stages through tenor and alto into the treble, only to have its triumphant career cut short by an alto, also risen in like manner from the ranks. So the play goes on, and I referred to this 'blending of parts into one another' as 'an art since completely lost.' If anyone can send me an example of this style of keyboard writing from elsewhere, I shall be most interested. To my thinking it will be found only in orchestral writing.

The greatness of the Bach fugue has in a sense checked the further evolution of the fugue. We are unable to think of the fugue except as a one-subject movement, although even Bach did not disdain the use of counter-subject and episode. The Tudor fantasy was a fugue based on several successive subjects. This conception of a fugue has so completely disappeared that it is now known merely as a primitive forerunner of the real thing, as your reviewer remarks. But why, one may ask, should not a fugue be based on several inter-related subjects instead of on one subject with episodes? Does the unity of any fine movement depend solely on literal development of one theme only? If so, symphony and sonata must lack this unity, and we know that they do not. A unity of expression can underlie several related subjects, and I submit that this in the hands of genius may be a greater thing than the easier matter of developing one subject on technical lines well understood. In the case of the fugue, we have here undoubtedly an idea new to us.

On the above grounds I described Gibbons as being 'still in the van of development.' We have something to learn from him. He was without disciples in his higher instrumental work, which can scarcely have been understood by his contemporaries, and is not fully understood now.

Is it altogether fair to 'the memory and achievements of a great man' to say of his work that 'occasionally amidst the puerilities we come across a page too good to lose'? Is the work of a great man always as simple as it may look to be? And should not the mind of greatness be discoverable in simple utterance? But if great only in occasional patches— It is perhaps wiser to leave Gibbons to the judgment of posterity.—Yours, &c.,

MARGARET H. GLYN.

CHANT SETTINGS OF THE 'TE DEUM,' ETC.

SIR,—I notice several interesting letters from correspondents in your August number around the above subject.

I wonder whether any of your readers, or organists, can introduce me to some good and musicianly settings of the 'Te Deum' for Unitarian Services.

I know of one—Jackson's—but I should like to give it a rest.—Yours, &c., W. A. HAMER.

1, Joshua Road,
Nether Edge, Sheffield.

THE MALADY OF CHOPIN

SIR,—I read with much interest Mr. Brewerton's article on 'The Malady of Chopin' in your June number, and the letter it drew from Mr. Manson in July. With all respect to these gentlemen, I consider that the point they have stressed is of a kind that should not be allowed to go unanswered. Mr. Brewerton's idea that one should qualify himself to receive the highest messages by being bourgeois and drinking beer is bad enough; but Mr. Manson makes matters worse by resting his case on a petitio principii. He requires the artist to 'touch the human soul with fire as from the altar' and 'speak to humanity in a language it understands and feels,' ignoring the fact that that language has not yet been invented, nor the message discovered, to which the whole of humanity can respond. He expects the composer to be 'in personal touch with his fellows,' and omits the all-important corollary, namely, the question—With which of his fellows? What his argument really goes to prove is that Chopin consorted with the right fellows, and Schubert too often with the wrong ones—with the æsthetically barren; and to 'take hard knocks' from these latter will no more add to the artist's store of musical invention than the critical companionship of a butcher would improve the craft of a goldsmith. Neither is the composer any more likely to attain musical beauty by means of Mr. Manson's pet faculty of 'letting himself go,' than is the goldsmith to attain sculptural beauty through the headlong abandonment induced by borrowing the butcher's cleaver.

It is not aloofness but ultra-communicativeness which is a sign of morbidity (we have only to think of Rousseau). There are certain things of the inmost soul which no one who was not a morbid subject ever yet revealed, even to his parents or his intimates. On the other hand I am not aware that, apart from these limits, Chopin was perpetually engaged in hiding himself from those of his own circle. Certainly I do not believe that by so describing it Mr. Manson has given the correct idea of the aristocratic spirit.

His real quarrel with the aristocrats is that they have realised a great truth which he denies, namely, that 'the whole of life rather than a small part of it' is no fit material for the artist, and that 'common' humanity is the most barren of all possible sources for his material. 'Great art' (as Prof. Gilbert Murray once wrote in explanation of Aristotle) 'must have for its subject the great way of living.' Mr. Manson would apparently have the artist a merely mechanical being, that should react to each and every stimulus from the outside world; whereas in reality the artist's business is to select, not to reproduce his experience. In this light I am sure that 'all history' has proved no part of Mr. Manson's indictment against the aristocratic spirit. Great composers from Palestrina to Delius (and later still) have shown us that entrance into the realm of great art is a high privilege; and it is exactly therein lies their superiority over other composers whose chief recommendation is what Mr. Leigh Henry so felicitously called 'bulbous humanitarianism.' This is essentially why Chopin is a greater composer than Schubert; and Bach and Mozart stand above Beethoven; and Franck above Wagner and Brahms, for similar reasons.

Not that I am holding a brief for Chopin. I regard him as a type neither of the complete artist nor of the complete aristocrat; but I do object to seeing him ranked below the most shallow Teuton who ever covered up a painful poverty of musical ideas by providing factitious opportunities to be soulful.—Yours, &c., NORMAN C. SUCKLING.

84, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, Essex.

THE ENGLISH PRESS AND RICHARD WAGNER

SIR,—May I ask for space to correct a misunderstanding into which your reviewer, in common with others, has fallen—partly, I fear, through my own fault—with regard to my Biography of Richard Wagner? It was not my purpose to pass judgment on Wagner's moral character; for that I do not feel competent. It is a rule of English law—and of common sense—that no man can be judged except by his peers. I am rather concerned with the attitude of the English press. Is it a right procedure, or one which will further the cause either of truth or of art, to treat a great creative artist as if he were a criminal on trial? For a journalist to assume the rôle of judge and prosecutor at once, to 'try' him in his own self-constituted 'court,' to ransack ancient records in search of snippets of long-forgotten tittle-tattle from thoroughly tainted sources, bare statements of personal enemies, discredited documents (such as the alleged Autobiography), or sheer gossip, and to dish them up as serious 'evidence,' while sedulously ignoring or slurring over everything that tells in favour of the assumed culprit, and finally to condemn him in such terms as 'cad,' 'liar,' 'dirty little cad,' 'erotic little monkey,' and more of the kind?—Is this the language which should be used of a Richard Wagner?

I think the above is a fair description of the methods adopted by the English press for the last twenty-five years. Some of the points raised are dealt with in my article in Music and Letters for January, 1925, which may be read as a prolegomenon to the Biography, and was so intended. Mr. Newman, I note, assumes for himself the whole responsibility; but he is not the only offender, and he draws his material from the notoriously scandalous Jewish press of Germany, where the English tradition has not, so far as I can learn, been accepted by the more cultured classes. What am I to reply to my German friends when they point to the way in which English poets and men of letters have been honoured in their country and ask how their Wagner has been met in England? So far scarcely a single voice has been raised to retrieve the fair name of the English press.—Yours, &c.,

G. AINSLIE HIGHT.

Oxford.

A HYMN-TUNE POSER

SIR,—Possibly some of your readers who are organists might care to give the result of their experience on two points:

(a) GATHERING NOTES

Here's a hoary tradition which sticks in my gullet. If the words of a hymn are of greater importance (as I believe) than the music, how can those who follow this practice put up with the false accents which it generates? E.g., 'A. & M.,' No. 516, opening phrase.

(b) GERMAN CHORALES

These, if taken at a measured pace, and the pause observed on the last note of each line, are apt at times to land organists in a dreadful slough.

If one studies the sense of the words, the lung capacity of the congregation, a steady rhythm, and the frantic signals of the parson to 'get on with it,' then in, say, 'A. & M.,' No. 678, second verse, something has got to 'go west.'

Text-books seem very reticent on such points, and perhaps wisely.—Yours, &c.,

COUNTRY MOUSE.

ST. MICHAEL'S, TENBURY

SIR,—In a short account of Sir Frederick Ouseley in your August issue there appears this sentence referring to St. Michael's College, Tenbury: 'There is no need to labour the point that Tenbury College, ever since its foundation, in 1856, has amply fulfilled the object of its founder, namely, "To prove a model for the choral service of the Church in these realms."' May an old St. Michael's boy, and one who has been (but is no longer) organist at the College for a good many years, say a word about the musical position there? I have no wish to contradict the sentence quoted above, but there seems no reason why certain facts should not be clearly stated. Ouseley, in drawing up the Statutes of his College, wisely did so in such a way as to allow of the training of the choir being either in the hands of the Precentor or the organist. At the present time the training of the choir and the direction of the music generally are in the hands of a clergyman, and the organist can have no claim to have any voice in the administration of the music, though, by courtesy, he may be allowed to co-operate in it to some extent. Personally I feel that in the long run this policy is likely to militate against the College providing 'a model for the choral service in these realms'; but a resolution was recently passed by the governing body which means, in effect, that this is to be the policy of the College for the future. (For the information of those who may know St. Michael's, it is only fair to add that the distinguished musicians who are on the governing body were not at the meeting at which this resolution was adopted.)

There has been some talk of late of the usefulness of St. Michael's being increased by using the College as a training school for young organists. Though one realises the difficulties in the way of carrying out this scheme, it seems a pity that the idea should be dropped altogether. In many ways, and not least because of its magnificent library of Church music, Ouseley's College is well suited to be such a training school.—Yours, &c.,

Belstone, Dartmoor.

HEATHCOTE D. STATHAM.

'CHORDING'

SIR,—May I, as one interested in musical terms, and in a spirit of humble inquiry, ask for an explanation of a word without which no judgment at a competition festival seems complete? 'Chording' is apparently a recent coinage, and as long as it is confined to competition festivals—where it is fair to assume that some meaning or other attaches to it—no outsider has a right to interfere; but when a newspaper in which I have taken a special interest for many years employs the word, then I think that some definition of its meaning may not unsuitably be asked.

Until its appearance in the Musical Times I had regarded its constant use by festival judges as due to the familiar anxiety they often feel in adjusting the marks they give to the general opinion they form. Many judges know that after the most careful marking for various points of excellence in a choral performance the total amount gained by one choir is not seldom larger than that of some choir appreciably better than the former. It is no doubt useful to have a convenient pigeon-hole into which extra marks can be shoved, so as to bring the final result into conformity with the opinion of the judge. 'Chording,' to which few of those present can attach any definite meaning, will serve as well as any other abracadabra. But I am now led to suppose that there may be some meaning in the curious word itself, and it seems as though it must be intended to refer to one or more of the following points:

(1.) Pitch.—Does 'chording' mean that the intonation of the parts is true? If so, why not 'In tune'?

(2.) Time.—Does 'good chording' imply that all the notes have been sounded exactly together? Why not 'simultaneously attacked,' if the good old word 'concent' is supposed to be too Miltonic to be understood?

(3.) Quality.—Is 'chording' used of the tone of the combined voices? If so, why not 'blend'?

Is there a verb 'to chord'?

The favour of a definition, together with a statement as to how many of the above are covered by the word, will oblige—Yours, &c.,

J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND.

['H. G.' deals with this question on p. 839.—EDITOR.]

IN DEFENCE OF THE GRAMOPHONE

SIR,—I read in your August issue that at the meeting of Directors of Music in Secondary Schools, 'Dr. Ivimey deprecated the use of vocal gramophone records. One of his singing pupils had modelled his style on Caruso's records, but his successful imitation of them included the scratch'! Is this merely a jeu d'esprit calculated to enliven the proceedings? If not, may I remind Dr. Ivimey that apart from the fact that Caruso was not responsible for the scratch, and that there should be no scratch on undamaged records, there are other vocal records worthy of his and his pupils' attention. Again, Mr. Colles is reported to have said that the tone of the gramophone is not musical. How comprehensive is Mr. Colles's knowledge of the use of the gramophone and the various technical means available to secure the best results? Has he, for instance, ever listened to records of chamber music played with a fibre needle? Do these convey to him no idea of beautiful tone?—Yours, &c.,

The Gramophone Company, Ltd., 363-367, Oxford Street, W.1.

ALEC ROBERTSON.

THE MISUSE OF THE TROMBONE

SIR,—I have been much interested in the correspondence on this subject, and find myself in agreement with Mr. J. A. Westrup. In matters of orchestration it is surely a sound principle that it is not so much what is playable on an instrument as what is suitable to that instrument, especially in regard to its place and function in the balance and colour scheme. I take it that Mr. Westrup was not thinking of the trombone in terms of a solo instrument as of an orchestral instrument, two vastly different things. It is once again the old truth of St. Paul, 'All things are lawful but not expedient.' There are many passages that a skilful organist could easily play on an organ, and the person with a depraved taste would admire them and the player, but an organist having taste and refinement would leave such things alone, not because he could not, so much as because he would not, play them, in justice to the dignity and genius of his instrument and his own self-respect. The greater the artificiality and superficiality of the means employed, the farther we get from true musical feeling and expression, and I agree with Mr. Westrup that the misuse of the trombone by the young modern composer especially is a practice to be severely condemned and deplored. Whatever may be the foreign use, I always feel it is best for English students to think of and write for the slide trombone, and generally to follow the broad lines laid down by the classical masters—soft, sustained chords, crescendo passages, and phrases of stately dignity, &c. It is also better, I am sure, for the student to think of the trombone not as a solo instrument, but as a harmonic member of a family of three, and to write accordingly. There are many other points that suggest themselves with which one cannot deal in a short letter, but the young student would do well to put aside the free, agile, 'stunt' treatment of this dignified instrument, as exemplified in much modern instrumentation (including the hybrid known as the 'jazz' band), and follow the practice of the 'wise men of old.'—Yours, &c.,

Sheringham. HAROLD E. WATTS.

SIR,—If a composer writes a fine work that is musically fine, but without due regard to the limitations and aptitudes of the instruments to be used, he usually reaps what he deserves, namely, a good deal of neglect.

Although only a fiddler, I have been extremely interested in Mr. Westrup's letters, and far more impressed by his remarks than by another correspondent's efforts, which seem to be chiefly prompted by a desire to be funny, without any sincere intent to help things along in a practical way.

Undoubtedly the giants of old (not even excepting Beethoven, for whom I have the deepest reverence) were only too apt to write passages which would have been written differently had they known their instruments better. It cannot be denied that they, their memory, and the musical world at large have suffered in consequence.

I do not suggest that any composer, unless he is engaged upon an instruction book, should 'write down' to poor players or beginners. But it would pay any composer to know what he is doing, and the golden rule should be: 'Before committing yourself to any passage not obviously within reasonable technical limits, consult an expert.' It must be worth while also for any composer, before going to print, to have his compositions played over, and not only by exceptionally gifted players. If he can suppress his own conceit so far as to discuss and perhaps rewrite reasonably all the awkward portions of the work, so much the better for him. I use the word 'reasonably' advisedly, and I mean it. I do not mean that composers should avoid difficulties which stimulate endeavour and add to the beauty of a composition, but I do mean that motiveless, needless, and arbitrary difficulties, resulting from ignorance of instrumentation, should be cut out, in the interest of composers, performers, and audiences alike. Referring to chamber music, for instance, why is it that Mendelssohn's Trios were and are so frequently played? They are brilliant, clever, and written with some regard to the instruments used. (Yes, I know their faults—'orchestral whirlwinds,' &c.) Why are Schumann's second and third Trios so little used? Any 'cellist can answer this query, however clever he may be, to say nothing of the other instrumentalists.

Undoubtedly there are many glorious compositions of all classes, lying in comparative oblivion simply because they contain unsuitable passages, born of ignorance, or possibly 'cussedness.'—Yours, &c.,

Boundary House, T. W. WOODHOUSE.
Ditchling Road, Brighton.

P.S.—Is it not futile to poke fun at the trombonist for lack of dignity? What of most of the other members of the orchestra—for instance, the double-bass and clarinet?

MODERN MUSIC

SIR,—I notice from your July issue that 'Feste has again something to say re the above.

I had intended replying to your contributor some few months ago, but through negligence did not do so. As we can visualise the smirk on his countenance when writing the introduction to his article, it is well to remind him that he cannot dismiss the subject so airily.

As one representing a sect definitely opposed to his views, let me say at the outset, that for too long have we been silent—probably from apathy—but I trust that my adherents will rally round me, and so demonstrate that mine is not a 'voice crying in the wilderness.'

First, his cheap gibe at Milhaud: why this composer should be signalled out for the critics' spleen—the plural sense is intentional—is beyond me.

Perhaps I may be permitted to write with chamber music in mind, for I am on the most familiar ground here. None of Milhaud's orchestral works have penetrated to the Midlands, but I do not hesitate in placing his chamber music little short of the accepted masterpieces of our time.

I name his first Violin Sonata, the one for two violins and pianoforte, and his String Quartets, No. 1 being a particularly fine example. Other works that come to mind are the Pianoforte Sonatina and first String Quartet by Bartók, the Violin and 'Cello Duos by Ravel and Kodály, the Violin Sonata and String Quartet by Pizzetti, the two String Quartets by Malipiero, and also the wonderful music by Weiner, Szymanowski, Hindemith (works quite in a class of their own), Cyril Scott, &c., &c. But need I continue?

When I think of some of the dreary classics, which only misplaced worship to great names keeps alive, then I say, 'Poor "Feste"!' and my sympathy goes out to him in his warped imagination.

At the risk of being dubbed egotistical, surely mine is the better homage, the appreciation of the classics, yet with an open mind for modern music, and a distinct partiality for it.—Yours, &c., E. W. ORGAN.

8, Mayfield Road, Birmingham.

CHOIRBOYS AND SCOUTS

SIR,—I am much interested in the correspondence re Scouts and Choirboys, and as one who has run Scouts and choir together for about sixteen years, but has now given up the choir, my opinion may be worth hearing.

I think that if the choirmaster is also Scout-master, then things will go well, and Scouts and choristers will benefit greatly. My advice to choirmasters is to take up Scouting and, if possible, form a troop in connection with their choirs. The choristers will not suffer—experience has proved that. (I can adduce evidence, if anyone wishes for it, to show that choristers do not lose from a musical point of view by being Scouts, so long as the Scout-master is choirmaster as well.)

When the two (Scout troop and choir) are separate there will often be friction and trouble from both sides; and and in many cases it may be wise to drop Scouts out of the choir, unless individual Scouts promise loyally to keep all choir regulations.—Yours, &c.,

Maidstone. E. A. CLARKE SMITH.

SIR,—After reading the letters of Mr. Nicholson and others in your July issue, I inquired among my eighteen choirboys only to find that four are Scouts.

Unfortunately for the Scout movement, I have to say that these four are just the boys whose behaviour requires close attention, and are certainly the first to absent themselves from practice if not kept up to the scratch.

I should mention that of the smaller boys two are 'Cubs,' but I am hoping that by the time they arrive at the Scout age they will not be similarly led away from their choir-work, which they at present enjoy and follow with interest.

I cannot help thinking that Scouting, like other counter-attractions, does not help the ordinary parish church choirmaster in overcoming the many difficulties which he has constantly to contend with.—Yours, &c.,

3, Hatfield Road,
Watford, Herts.

GORDON E. SHARMAN
(Organist, Rickmansworth Parish Church).

SIR,—As head of a boarding school, choirmaster of the school choir, and chaplain of the Scouts, I have been interested in the correspondence on the above matter.

Scouting is rightly popular with the boys, and a good Scout troop is capable of doing an immense amount of good. But there is often a tendency among keen scouters to express contempt for other agencies which are doing good work among boys—e.g., choirs, schools, cadet corps, &c. This tendency leads to a disregard of other people's convenience, which, I am sure, is not of the true spirit of Scouting, and which should be all the more scrupulously avoided, just because Scouting holds such a strong place in the affection of the boys.

An amusing instance of this is given by the letter of Mr. Bramall, when he says:

> 'We do not ask this favour [i.e., persuading choristers to become Scouts] for the good of the Scout-master, nor yet for the good of the troop, but for the good of the boy. On the other hand, if we Scout-masters are to persuade our Scouts to join choirs, it will obviously be for the choir's good, and not for the boys'.'

Judging from the singing one sometimes hears at Scout concerts, I should imagine that it would be very good for the boys if they belonged to a choir. But a choir not only teaches a boy to sing, it also teaches him to offer his best gifts to God, to love and appreciate good music, to acquire culture, and by chorus-work to be unselfish to labour not for his own credit, but for the good of all.

I have often noticed that ex-choristers are among the most faithful churchmen, and they often look back with gratitude to their choir-training as having given them an interest which has been of immense practical value throughout their lives.

No, Mr. Bramall, you are 'illogical and one-sided.' The grand Scout movement for which you are doubtless working so keenly, will not be helped by letters like yours. Remember that Scouting, which is still in its infancy, has not yet brought into the world a tithe of the happiness and comfort that choirs have brought.—Yours, &c.,

St. Paul's School,
Jalapahar, Darjeeling.

F. V. DAWKINS.

SIR,—I cannot ask for sufficient space to answer in detail the various letters in your August issue on the above subject. I should however, like, to make a few observations.

(1.) It is not fair to judge the Scout movement as a whole, nor its applicability to choirboys, solely by individual experiences. If, for instance, a Scout troop interferes with choir work by lack of discipline, by virtually encouraging misbehaviour in the choir, or by conniving at boys neglecting their obvious duty, then there is something amiss with the Scout troop. These things do not belong to Scouting as such, and are entirely contrary to its true spirit. Your correspondent 'Choirmaster' is quite right in his contention that it is only where local conditions are favourable that good results can be expected. Scouting is in many places not what it should be, but the same applies to choirs: the ideals are high, but the attainment often falls short. The aim of those interested in the welfare of boys should be to get the standard raised rather than to disparage what has been achieved.

(2.) Judging from the points brought forward I cannot help thinking that some of your correspondents do not know very much about Scouting, except as they see it in particular troops, and that possibly from a somewhat one-sided view. May I ask them to read through General Baden Powell's 'Scouting for Boys' (which is the 'text-book' of the movement) before they rush to a hasty conclusion as to what Scouting does or does not involve? If they can find anything in that book which is incompatible with the work of a thoroughly efficient choirboy, I shall be interested to know what it is. The only exception I can find is that 'a Scout smiles and whistles under all difficulties': a literal application of this Law might lead to complications if directed towards negotiating the difficulties, say, of the runs in Wesley's 'The Wilderness,' or of keeping awake in a long sermon!

(3.) The advice I should like to offer is this: Encourage all your choirboys to be Scouts, and if possible become their Scout-master, or at any rate keep closely in touch with their Scouting. The difficulties as to camps, clashing of engagements, and so on, arise chiefly when a few only of the choirboys are Scouts: where all or the great majority are, they must be catered for separately, and satisfactory arrangements can be made. In some parishes the choirboy patrols work almost independently of the general body of Scouts, only uniting with them on such occasions as are mutually convenient. This seems a very good plan, especially if boys are taught that doing their best in the choir is in itself 'good Scouting,' and takes them a long way towards fulfilling their Scout promise. But the working out of details must be governed by local conditions. The main thing to realise is that not only is good Scouting not incompatible with good choir-work, but that the general attitude of choirboys is greatly to be helped if the ideals of Scouting (the real ideals, that is, not a mere local interpretation) can be instilled into them.

I fully admit that some Scout troops are run on lines that would make it undesirable for choirboys to join them: it must also be admitted that some choirs are run on lines which are not compatible with the principles of good Scouting. In such cases, if there is to be co-operation there must first be reform. But there are hundreds of well-run choirs, and hundreds of well-run Scout troops, and where this is so co-operation is certainly possible.

It so often happens that different agencies are at work for the welfare of boys, and yet the total energy expended is largely dissipated and fails of its full effect through lack of co-ordination, resulting in rivalry, jealousy, and kindred evils. It is because I believe that most choirmasters and Scout-masters have the real welfare of their boys at heart that I appeal to them to 'pull together,' believing that in this way much more can be accomplished than by mere individual effort.—Yours, &c.,

Westminster Abbey.

SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON
(Commissioner for Music, Boy Scouts' Association).

[This correspondence is now closed. It has shown unmistakably that the claims of Scouting and choir-work frequently bring about a state of things detrimental to both organizations. Believing that a tactful Order from headquarters would go far to solve the difficulty, we are sending a complete file of the letters to Mr. Nicholson, in the hope that, as Commissioner for Music, he will kindly bring the matter before the authorities of the Boy Scouts' Association.—EDITOR.]

ORGAN AND CHOIR SALARIES

SIR,—From time to time I have noticed the advertisements of vacancies for men choristers in the different churches, but what I have been most struck with is the smallness of the stipend offered. This kind of thing is very much out of order, considering what is expected of the applicants. Surely the worthy hire of a chorister to-day stands at least 50 per cent. more than pre-war? I contend that the Church should pay a fair stipend for the services received, especially when one considers that three or four Sundays out of the year are all the holidays a chorister seems to be entitled to. Appeals are made for the increase of poor clergy stipends—why not also for the chorister? If value is given by the voice, the least one can expect in return is fair remuneration—especially if the chorister has a fine voice, is a first-rate reader, and attends regularly on Sundays.—Yours, &c.,

Hampstead, N.W.

'A READER.'

SIR,—An annual report that has just come into my hands gives the scale of payments as follows: Vicar, £580 and house; curate, £250; deaconesses (two) at £100 each; gardener, £88; verger, £70; organist, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., £60. My comment on this would not be printed, so I leave it out. Much has been said about this very vexed question, but nothing has ever been done. Is there no real remedy? What is the use of training, if an organist (qualified) cannot get the salary of a verger? Some time ago many letters appeared in the Church Times in reference to the Clergy Pension Scheme (a selfish one). I addressed a letter to the Editor of that paper, asking why pensions for clergy only? Why not let all workers share who were willing to contribute? Needless to say, my letter did not appear; the reason being, I take it, that the Editor is himself 'one of 'em.' I apologise if I am wrong. Your paper, Sir, should not accept advertisements from those gentlemen who want a qualified organist who is also a disciplinarian for from £30 to £80 a year, plus the usual bait, which is a curse, 'plenty of scope for pupils.' And your opinion on the matter would be useful for our clergy to read.

I see that Christ Church, Oxford, wants an alto singer—£130 per annum and pension at sixty. Clergy readers, please note.—Yours, &c.,

F.R.C.O.

SIR,—In a leader devoted to the mining dispute, the Church Times says 'that the Episcopate as a whole is pledged to the principle that wages should be the first charge upon industry,' and, further, that 'there is a minimum living wage,' and that this should cover 'decent housing accommodation, necessary food and clothing, and a margin for simple pleasures.'

Nothing is said about doctors' or dentists' bills, or other 'rainy days' (possibly covered by insurance). The least that a single man can get decent lodgings for nowadays is two guineas a week: and yet we see in the Church Times and Musical Times advertisements for qualified and experienced choirmasters and organists, men of ability and personality, good leaders and disciplinarians, sound churchmen, &c., at salaries ranging from £40 to £100, when the bare cost of living (without clothing!) is £109 4s., as shown above. And, if this is the case for the single man, what about the married man? His salary often barely pays his rent and rates. The clause about 'scope for a competent teacher' should be left out nowadays, for private teaching always fluctuates.

The R.C.O. deplores the lack of candidates for the choir-training diploma, but most organists cannot afford to go in for it; and who is going to qualify when the large majority of the clergy are bent on ousting the professional organist, and appointing the more or less incompetent or untrained amateur? Many of the clergy are blind and deaf to the appeal of really good music and to efficient choir-training. They simply don't want it. All that they want is their own preaching and reading (I am not decrying these), and a few hackneyed hymns and chants, as I frequently have been told; and they say that the church cannot afford to maintain the professional organist.

There is no doubt that the salary of a properly qualified professional organist (F.R.C.O. should be insisted upon, even where there is the degree of B.Mus or D.Mus.) should be not less than £110 for a single man, and in common decency £140 or £150 for a married man (and the Church, of all organizations, should support the institution of marriage). Consider what is paid to the frequently childishly incompetent curate, who shows no compunction for ruining every service in which he takes part. Most town churches could afford to do what is suggested. Fair play begins at home, and while the church has to meet its claims for home and foreign missions and general expenses, it should take a stand for fair remuneration of its staff, as an example to the world.

Fortunately the Revenue Report of the Archbishops' Committee stated that 'in our opinion the salaries paid to organists are inadequate'; and this, combined with the statements in my opening paragraph, should give anybody who would take the matter up a strong footing. Would not the R.C.O. do so? It is of no use to adopt the attitude of 'You come and qualify with us, and we will do nothing for you afterwards!' As the R.C.O. has at heart 'the provision of competent organists for the service of the church,' it is not too much to ask that it continually prosecutes its efforts for the provision of adequate remuneration and security of tenure for those who are qualified, at least; and I do not think my suggested minimum salaries exorbitant or mercenary.—Yours, &c.,

'OXONIAN.'

[We have received other letters bearing on this subject. No one can accuse us of lack of sympathy with the parish church organist, but we cannot refrain from pointing out to 'F.R.C.O.' that neither the vicar, curate, deaconesses, gardener, nor verger can do much, if anything at all, to augment their salaries. Theirs are full-time jobs. On the other hand, an organist who is both F.R.C.O. and L.R.A.M. can surely obtain a competence as a teacher. The comparison between his salary (£60) and that of the verger (£70) disregards the fact that the verger is at the church all day and every day, whereas a parish church organist is rarely on duty for more than an average of an hour a day on week-days, and often much less. He has thus ample time for other work, and so far as our experience goes, he has little difficulty in obtaining as much as he wants. But we hasten to add that this work is not necessarily musical. There are many excellent organists whose main occupation is in business; their church work is a hobby which pleasantly fills their Sundays and a couple of week-nights, and brings in a sum which, though small in itself, is a valuable addition to their main income. So many churches are in economic straits that they must cut their coat according to their cloth, and be content with a semi-professional of this type. 'F.R.C.O.' asks clergy readers to note the Christ Church, Oxford, vacancy for an alto singer at £130 per annum and a pension, but all their noting will not alter hard facts. The Cathedral has endowments and other funds wherewith to pay choirmen, whereas the average parish church has to live from hand to mouth. We should like to see every fully qualified organist receiving a salary of not less than £120, but in most cases the money is simply not there, and mere abuse of the parson (who is often in the long run little better off than the organist) and comparisons between full-time and part-time jobs, will not mend matters. Our correspondent regards 'plenty of scope for pupils' as a 'bait' and a 'curse.' In our own long experience as a parish church organist, we always regarded scope for work as an inducement and a blessing.—EDITOR.]

DECORATIVE DESIGN IN MUSICAL NOTATION

SIR,—With reference to 'Feste's' examples of the grouping of notes in modern music, and the resulting appearance to the eye, the following further example is, I should imagine, as far as we can get:

It comes in a Fox-trot for pianola, composed by Alfredo Casella in 1918.

So that there shall be no mistake, Casella writes on his score: 'Entres ces deux intervalles toutes les notes chromatiques frappées à la fois.'—Yours, &c.,

SYDNEY GREW.

CHATTERING AT THE 'PROMS'

SIR,—May I venture to raise a protest through your columns at the increasing objectionable custom of speaking through the items at the Promenade concerts? On the opening night the chattering in the corridors was such that it prevented one from enjoying such a delicate item as the 'Figaro' Overture of Mozart—only a dull, confused muttering being distinguishable during the exposition. Could not something be done to reveal to a certain class of people that the average frequenter of the 'Proms' goes there to listen to the music, and not to other people's idle chatter? Unfortunately, women are the chief offenders. Surely they could endeavour to save their comments (musical or otherwise) to the interval, or, at least, until the conclusion of the item?—Yours, &c.,

A PROMENADER.

SINGERS' JARGON!

SIR,—In my letter appearing in your August issue the word 'local' instead of 'vocal' is used in the sentence, 'We meet with such verbal distortion at almost every local performance.'

Would that 'Singers' Jargon' were a matter of local importance only! It is, unfortunately (both in the original and modern meaning of the term), 'Broadcasted o'er the land!' And the word 'local' deprives the sentence of its comprehensive meaning.—Yours, &c.,

MUNRO DAVISON.

Sharps and Flats

The good old stagers among the popular classics are as welcome to-day as ever they were. We played 'Two eyes of grey' and Liddle's 'Abide with me' to an audience of twenty-eight thousand people at Southsea, and you could have heard a pin drop.—J. H. Squire.

The 114th Psalm was chanted to music by Tonus Peregrinus.—Weekly Paper.

Music is rather like measles. It is less taught than caught.—Miss Claiborne Dixon.

Jazz is more health-giving than the quadrille and the lancers because it gives people thrills, pep, and punch.—Layton and Johnstone.

I once said that Sir Landon Ronald conducted the Fifth Symphony as if it was an omnibus. Well, Weingartner's Finale is like an elderly lady trying to catch that omnibus.—Compton Mackenzie.

Scotson Clark is a name we conjure with in the musical world. He had a genius for discovering the wedding of most beautiful tonal modulations with a statement which was and remains to even modern minds as heroic.—'Jubal' in the Guernsey Press.

I'm going to retire definitely at fifty. There'll be no farewell tours or any of the usual mechanics of exit. I'll just be through. I'd sooner have them saying 'Why did he quit?' than 'Why doesn't he quit?'—John McCormack.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Violinists and 'cellists wanted for mutual practice.—PIANIST, 110, Little Ilford Lane, Manor Park, E.12.

Baritone vocalist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Advanced pianist.—B. D., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (male) wishes to form trio with violinist and 'cellist.—L. G. P., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (male) wishes to meet another for duet sight-reading practice. Student preferred.—A. GOULDSMITH, 4, Belmont Park, Lee, S.E.13.

Old Music. The Tudor Singers require a light soprano, a tenor, and a bass. Good readers. Victoria, on Fridays, at 6.30.—C. J. BATES, 16, Arterberry Road, Wimbledon, S.W.20.

Young lady, keen pianoforte student, wishes to meet another for duet practice; also other good instrumentalist or vocalist for accompanying. Kingston or Richmond districts.—D. H., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady wishes to meet lady singer for practice of accompaniments. North London district.—A. C., c/o Musical Times.

Soprano wishes to meet an accompanist, once or twice weekly, for mutual practice. High-class songs. W. London district.—I. W., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wishes to meet good pianist for mutual practice. London district.—E. H., c/o Musical Times.

Bass-baritone wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice.—ARION, c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet one or two violinists for mutual practice.—Miss A. HUMPHREY, 25, Mortlake Road, Ilford.

[We have received so many announcements—some very lengthy—concerning choral societies and orchestras that we are unable to include them. This column was originally designed to meet the needs of chamber music players. When, in a weak moment, we enlarged its scope so as to include orchestras and choirs, we anticipated no more than an occasional request from some humble society. But this autumn has brought us a flood, many of them from large and affluent organizations, and we feel that, on the score of space alone, we must call a halt, and in future limit the Exchange to chamber music parties, individual singers and players wishing to meet for mutual study, and small groups of singers whose aim is the study of madrigals, &c., i.e., vocal chamber music.—EDITOR.]

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The summer term came to a close on July 24, when the president, H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught, presented the awards and prizes at Queen's Hall. A selection of music was given by the students, an organ solo, César Franck's Choral in A minor, played by Mr. Eric Brough, being a notable performance. The Principal's address, the first since his appointment, was listened to with the greatest attention, and its conclusion marked by vociferous applause. The programmes of the Academy functions are rendered additionally interesting by reason that the names of any ex-students appearing therein are invariably asterisked. The fact that Mr. McEwen's name was so distinguished should be of the utmost encouragement to every student, proof positive that the baton of the field-marshal may still be hidden in a private's equipment.

On the previous Wednesday the Academy was visited by the Union of Graduates of Music, and the members, with Dr. Percy Buck, who is their President, were conducted over the building by the Principal. Afterwards a short programme of chamber music was given by the students in the Duke's Hall, the playing of the Academy Quartet—Messrs. Jean Pougnet, Hugo Rignold, Harry Berly, and Douglas Cameron—giving evident pleasure to the audience. Dr. Buck expressed the thanks of the U.G.M. to the Principal and the performers for their kindness.

The annual dinner of the R.A.M. Club was held at the Trocadero Restaurant on July 23, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the President, being in the chair. The after-dinner speeches were particularly interesting, and Mr. Frederick Chester contributed some very amusing short stories.

It is satisfactory to announce that, all arrangements having been completed with the ground landlords, the new buildings of the School are at once to be begun. When completed they will prove an invaluable addition to the existing accommodation; the new practice-hall will be especially welcome.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS

Reaction has set in at the Promenade concerts. The accusation can be brought without fear, for reaction is nowadays a word of good omen. A musical critic on his holiday has told us that it stands for health, sanity, proportion. The new order changeth, yielding place to old. We read somewhere that a great number—was it seventy?—of works by classical composers were to be given at the Promenade concerts for the first time. Modern music retreats before the Hindenburg line of Bach, Handel, Haydn, and Mozart. The defeated battalions and their standard-bearers will complain, but let them not complain of Henry Wood and Robert Newman, who have been a strength to both causes. They have done all that was possible and judicious in helping modern music to win a footing. It is the impregnable fortress of public opinion—the opinion of the musical world—that stands against the onset of modern music and opposes it with seventy new classics at the Promenades.

The reaction can be detected in almost every programme. What, at a guess, are the new works in the first week? Bach's C minor Passacagalia for organ, Haydn's Overture, 'L'Isola disabitata' (good stuff, this, as we observed on the first Tuesday), Mozart's Concert Aria, 'Ah! lo previdi,' the Bach Suite in G (No. 5), for strings, oboe, and organ, Bach's Aria, 'Jesus sleeps,' from Cantata No. 81; perhaps the Haydn Symphony, or the Handel Concerto Grosso, or the Mozart Divertimento, or all of them. One cannot remember what has been done at thirty Promenade seasons.

Bach naturally plays the largest part in this strengthening. He shares with Handel the freedom of alternate Wednesdays; he has an organ work every Saturday; and eight of his Concertos, 'Brandenburg' and otherwise, crop up on other evenings. Handel, too, sits solidly on the programmes with his six Concertos, two organ works, an Overture, three Suites, and a dozen vocal Arias. Haydn and Mozart now have a Symphony each every Tuesday evening.

MODERN NOVELTIES

Eight British and nine foreign musicians are down to represent the living world. These are their works:

Suite—'Saint Joan'...	...John Foulds
Tone-poem—'Dunluce'	Norman Hay
Prelude—'The Shrine in the Wood' } Symphonic March—'The Sun-God' }	Howard Carr
Orchestral Suite	George Dyson
'Harlequin and Columbine'	Philip Sainton
Concert Overture—'Twelfth Night'	Hubert Hales
Idyll for strings and orchestra ... } Romantic Piece for flute and strings }	Susan Spain-Dunk
Prelude	I. B. McEwen

Suite—'Through the Looking-Glass'	Deems Taylor
'The Ballad of Reading Gaol' ...	Jacques Ibert
Dance Suite	Bartók
'The Birthday of the Infanta'	Schreker
Three Preludes—'Palestrina'	Pfitzner
Variations on a Russian Folk-Song	Paul Graener
Suite—'The Romance of a Mummy' ...	Tcherepnin
Suite—'Aschenputtel'	d'Albert
Poème Symphonique—'Mirages' ...	Camille Kufferath

Modern music that is not new is fairly represented, with very little of the type that is known, for some reason, as 'ultra-modern.' Among the British works the most considerable are the two Concertos and the 'Enigma' Variations of Elgar; five of Holst's 'Planets' and the Fugal Concerto for flute and oboe; Vaughan Williams's Overture to 'The Wasps' (and nothing more; surely this is inadequate); the 'Dance Rhapsody' of Delius; Bax's 'The Happy Forest'; Frank Bridge's 'The Sea'; two of Ethel Smyth's operatic preludes; Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad'; Holbrooke's 'Bronwen.' The foreign list includes the names of Granados, Dohnànyi, Enesco, Strauss ('Till Eulenspiegel' and 'Don Juan'), Gudenian, Respighi, Stravinsky (the whole of 'Petrouchka'), de Falla, Debussy (only 'L'Après-midi' and a song), Honegger ('Pacific 231'), and Scriabin ('Poème de l'Extase').

THE FIRST FORTNIGHT

The orchestra shaped well from the start. It is in the main Sir Henry Wood's orchestra, that has played for him through many a season of Promenades and Symphony concerts, and as most of the music is familiar or easily assimilated the orchestra yields efficient performances, graced with every-day effects of expression, as a cow yields milk. When it comes to music for which the finest orchestral players in the world would expect plenty of rehearsal this six-concerts-a-week orchestra cannot always keep up its standard. A little raggedness is bound to appear now and then, as it did on August 14 in the Mozart Divertimento for oboes, English horns, clarinets, French horns, and bassoons. This is chamber music of a kind which no chamber music party would willingly put on at short notice. On the other hand the orchestra can rise to great heights. The second Symphony of Brahms was magnificently played on August 19. There was noble tone for Brahms's fine brass music, superb horn playing for that inspired solo.

Soloists too numerous to mention crowd into the scheme. One must spare a word of admiration, however, for Mr. Keith Falkner's lucid and gracious singing of 'Droop not, young lover,' and of sympathy for Miss Isolde Menges in having to deal with two such unhappy Violin Concertos as Glazounov's in A minor (on the first night of the season) and Dvorák's in A major. Mr. Aubrey Brain, on whom the genius of Borsdorf and Paersch has descended, stepped from the ranks on August 18 to play the Mozart E flat Horn Concerto.

The first novelties of the season have produced no masterpiece. The Suite, 'Through the Looking-Glass,' by the American, Deems Taylor (August 11), is pleasant, well-scored, and long-drawn music that lags far behind the nimble nonchalant wit of Lewis Carroll. The 'Saint Joan' music of John Foulds, made into a Suite (August 13), straggles for want of ideas. M. Jacques Ibert, a young Parisian, uses the orchestra with exceptional effect, and has relied on this faculty alone in his 'Ballad of Reading Gaol.' His episode in the life of a murderer contains excellent local colour, but it is not a companion work to Oscar Wilde's. The first English performance of Bartók's 'Danse Suite' occurred too late for attention in this issue.

M.

OXFORD SUMMER COURSE IN MUSIC TEACHING

For the fourth successive year an August course of lectures on music and the teaching of music has been organized and conducted by the Federation of British Music Industries, with the co-operation of the British Music Society. A large number of students attended, the majority of them school teachers, whose duties include the teaching of music. The course was inaugurated by a dinner in New College Hall, at which Sir Hugh Allen presided, and among those in attendance were the Rector of Exeter (Dr. Farnell) and Mrs. Farnell, Miss Venables, Dr. Somervell, Sir Richard Terry, Mr. J. B. McEwen, Dr. Henry Ley, Dr. Cyril Rootham, Dr. Ernest Walker, Dr. Adrian Boult, Mr. Herbert Wiseman, Dr. H. C. Perrin, Mr. Robert McLeod, Mr. H. J. Cullum, &c.

The course was directed by Major J. T. Bavin. With him, as lecturers, were Messrs. Malcolm Sargent, Adrian Boult, George Dyson, W. G. Whittaker, Herbert Wiseman (with Warren Wynne, vocalist), Frank Roscoe, John A.

Masterson (headmaster, Biggar High School), A. Rawlinson-Wood, and Capt. S. C. Smith (officer in charge of libraries, R.A.F.). The subjects of the lectures were: Opera (Dr. Sargent); School Singing, the Choral Society, and Madrigal Singing (Dr. Whittaker); Chapters in the History of Music (Dr. Dyson); Art-Songs and Folk-Songs (Mr. Wiseman and Mr. Wynne); Conducting and Score-reading (Dr. Boult); Music and Education (Mr. Roscoe); Music in Schools, Clubs, and Institutes (Major Bavin); Music in Schools from a Headmaster's Point of View (Mr. Masterson); Early Work at the Pianoforte (Mr. Rawlinson-Wood); and the Formation and Use of a Library (Capt. Smith).

GLOUCESTER FESTIVAL

Gloucester is neither to see M. Sibelius nor to hear his new Symphony, which he has been unable to finish in time. This year's Three Choirs Festival (September 6-11) therefore loses its only connection with modern music of the Continent. The new works in the programme are now as follows:

Two Preludes for orchestra	James Lyon
Motet, 'Love Incarnate' ...	Basil Harwood
Choral Suite, 'Men and Angels'	Walford Davies
Unaccompanied Motet, 'The Evening Watch'	Holst
'Paradise Rondel' for orchestra ...	Howells
Unaccompanied Motet, 'Glory and Honour'	Charles Wood
Prelude for orchestra	McEwen
Song-Cycle, 'A Sprig of Shamrock' Adapted and arranged by	A. H. Brewer and a work for organ and strings by Thomas F. Dunhill. The major choral works are 'The Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'The Apostles,' 'Job,' Stanford's 'Stabat Mater,' Bach's 'Give the hungry man thy bread,' 'For the Fallen,' and Verdi's 'Requiem'; and the Symphonies, Bantock's 'Hebridean' and Elgar's in A flat.

PALESTRINA'S QUATER-CENTENARY

CELEBRATION IN HIS NATIVE TOWN

The picturesque town of Palestrina, built on a spur of the Sabina Hills, was no doubt en fête on August 26, as a municipal holiday, to celebrate the fourth centenary of the birth of the 'Prince of Music.' Here, in ancient Prænestе, he received the name by which he is known all over the world. True it is that the exact date of his birth has not been ascertained, although many hold that it was on June 24, 1525, surmising that the name John was given him in honour of St. John the Baptist, whose feast falls on that date. This surmise, however, will not stand, inasmuch as the great composer's patron saint was St. John the Evangelist, and it is not at all unlikely that he was really born on December 27, 1525. But be that as it may—and it is only a matter of a few months—the good people of Palestrina resolved to keep August 26 as the four-hundredth anniversary of the birth of their distinguished townsman. Among the arrangements were Solemn High Mass sung in the presence of Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli, Bishop of Palestrina, Dean of the Sacred College, now in his eighty-ninth year, who, it will be remembered, came over as the representative of the Holy Father at the Consecration of Armagh Cathedral (at which, by the way, John McCormack sang as a member of the Palestrina Choir); placing, by the Mayor of Palestrina, of a bronze wreath on the monument of the composer, in the principal piazza; and a grand sacred concert of the master's works in the Cathedral in the afternoon, followed by various festivities in the evening.

Giovanni Pierluigi Sante was born at Palestrina, in 1525 (most probably on December 27), and having been accidentally 'discovered' as a boy-soprano in 1537, was placed in St. Mary Major, Rome, under Rubino Malapert (a Fleming) and Firmini le Bel (a Frenchman), studying music there for seven years. On October 23, 1544, he was appointed organist of the Cathedral of Palestrina, and on June 12, 1547, he married Lucretia de Goris.

Chosen choirmaster of St. Peter's, Rome, by Pope Julius III. (who had been Bishop of Palestrina), in September, 1551, the young Palestrina soon showed a taste of his quality by the publication of his first Book of Masses, in 1554—four of the Masses being for four voices, and one for five—dedicated to Pope Julius III. This work at once proclaimed him to be a master of polyphonic writing, and in January, 1555, he was admitted a member of the Pontifical Choir, the mandate being in the Pope's own handwriting. Less than a year later he was appointed choirmaster of St. John Lateran, a period of his life associated with his immortal 'Improperia' and a set of 'Lamentations,' but, in the autumn of 1560 he returned to St. Mary Major as choirmaster.

A vast amount of legend and fiction has accreted regarding the composition of the famous Mass of Pope Marcellus, which was in reality not published till 1567. It is by no means unlikely that Palestrina wrote, or at least sketched out, his Mass under the inspiration of Pope Marcellus, whose short reign extended to three weeks—April 9-30, 1555—and though only issued to the public in 1567, in his 'Leber Secundus,' the work existed in manuscript several years previously, almost a decade before Pope Pius IV. ordered a reform of Church music. It was sung in the Sistine Chapel on June 19, 1565, and was afterwards commended by a Papal brief as a model of what Church music should be.

In 1570, on the death of Animuccia, Palestrina resumed his old post as Master of the Julian Chapel in St. Peter's, and for twenty-two years continued to astonish the musical world by his numerous compositions. In the words of Asola (1592), 'he is the ocean towards which all streams flow.' He suffered much domestic affliction, yet laboured on incessantly at his art. As late as 1590 appeared his Mass, 'Æterna Christi Munera.' He passed away on February 2, 1594, being interred the same day, according to custom, his body being consigned to the tomb to the strains of his own beautiful setting of 'Libera me, Domine,' a five-part Psalm for three choirs. His coffin bore a leaden plate with the inscription, 'John Peter Aloysius Palestrina, Prince of Music.'

W. H. G. F.

BARTHOLOMEO ALBRICI

'WHO WAS ALBERRIX'?

In a recent issue of The Times Literary Supplement, Mr. Barclay Squire had a letter inquiring as to 'Who was Alberrix'?—evidently a famous musician—and requesting information as to his identity. A succeeding issue of the paper contained a brief reply of mine equating the said 'Alberrix' with Signor Albrici, otherwise the famous Bartolomeo, eulogised by Evelyn in his 'Diary.' I gave no details, and therefore it may be of interest to readers of the Musical Times to place before them the biographical notes I have pieced together concerning this remarkable Italian harpsichordist, whose surname variously appears as 'Albreis,' 'Albreic,' and 'Albrigi,' as well as 'Alberrix.'

Bartholomeo Albrici was born at Rome circa 1634, and joined his brother Vincenzo at Dresden, where he was appointed organist at the Chapel of the Prince Elector in 1654. His elder brother was born on June 26, 1631, at Rome, and was in the service of Queen Christine of Sweden, in 1654, when he was appointed to Dresden. Bartholomeo remained with his brother for ten years, but a tempting offer from King Charles II. induced the two brothers and their sister Leonora to come to London. Vincenzo was appointed 'Master of the Italian Musick' to the English Court in 1664; and on March 25, 1665, we find a passport issued for Signor Albrici, his family, and his luggage 'to go and come freely in any part of the Kingdom.'

Pepys, in his 'Diary,' under date of February 12, 166⅞, has a reference to Vincenzo Albrici, but unfortunately gives his name as 'Vinnecotio.' Here is the pertinent reference: 'He [Giovanni Baptiste Draghi] tells me that Giacomo Charissimi [Carissimi] is still alive at Rome, who was master to Vinnecotio, who is one of the Italians that the King hath here, and the chief composer of them.' Four days later Pepys alludes to him as 'Signior Vincentio, who is the master composer' (February 16, 166⅞).

On May 5, 1668, a warrant was issued by King Charles II. 'to prepare and deliver three chains and medals of gold, of the value of £30 a piece, to be presented unto Signor Vincenzo Albrigi, Don Bartholomeo Albrigi, and Leonora Albrigi, three Italian musicians, as gifts from his Majesty' (Lord Chamberlain's Accounts, vol. 743, p. 215).

Vincenzo and Leonora Albrici apparently left London in June, 1668, and we find Vincenzo at his old post at Dresden in 1669. Bartholomeo may have left at the same time, but it cannot have been for long, as he was in London in 1673. On referring to Mr. Cart de Lafontaine's 'The King's Musick' (Novello, 1909), we find 'Mr. Bartleme,' that is, Signor Bartholomeo Albrici, as one of the harpsichord players at the Mask of 'Calisto,' in 1674, and, on May 27, 1675, a warrant was issued for payment to 'Mr. Bartholomew' and Mr. Marsh for their services as harpsicall and lute.

From Evelyn's 'Diary' we learn that 'Bartholomeo' was in great request as a teacher of the harpsichord between the years 1678-85. The three following entries from Evelyn bear ample testimony to Albrici:

> '1679. Nov. 20. I din'd with Mr. Slingsby, Master of the Mint, with my wife, to hear music, which was exquisitely performed by four of the most renowned masters—Du Prue, a Frenchman, on the lute; Signor Bartholomeo, an Italian, on the harpsichord; Nicolao on the violin, and a German on the viol d'amore.'
>
> '1681. Oct. 7. My daughter Mary began to learn music of Signor Bartholomeo, and dancing of Monsieur Isaac, reputed the best masters.'
>
> '1685. March 14. [Evelyn's daughter Mary died, of whom he writes as follows]: She had an excellent voice, to which she played a thorough bass on the harpischord, in both which she arrived to that perfection that of the scholars of these two famous masters Signors Pietro [Riggio] and Bartholomeo [Albrici] she was esteemed the best.'

From 1685 to 1689 Bartholomeo was a member of Queen Katherine's Chapel under Signor Fede, but his name in the Lord Chamberlain's Accounts appears as Signor 'Albreis.' Under King William, of course, Albrici, as a Roman Catholic, lost his Court appointments, but found employment in noble families. The interesting letter in the Rutland MSS., under date of October 14, 1693, quoted by Mr. Barclay Squire, reveals the fact that he was highly appreciated by Henry Purcell, Dr. Blow, and 'other great masters of musick.' Mr. Roger Herbert, the writer of the letter says: 'I heard him play of a Spinnet, and do think him an extraordinary master.'

Albrici must have died soon after; anyhow, I cannot trace him after October, 1693. His elder brother, Vincenzo, died at Prague on August 8, 1696. W. H. G. F.

Competition Festival Record

WHAT IS 'CHORDING'?

The term 'chording' is so generally used in festival adjudications that one had supposed its meaning to be as clear to audiences as to judges. When, however, we find a musician of Mr. Fuller-Maitland's standing mystified by it (see his letter on page 839), we may assume that he is only one of many who would welcome a discussion on the point.

First, however, is Mr. Fuller-Maitland right in describing the word as 'a recent coinage'? I believe its appearance in The Times was the immediate cause of his letter. The word may be new, or almost new, to the readers of daily papers, because its use is practically confined to adjudicators' reports, which rarely appear elsewhere than in the local press and musical journals. But in the Musical Times it has been used for many years, being a favourite term with the late Dr. McNaught.

So far as respectability is conferred by long usage on the part of experts, the word may thus pass muster. As for its meaning and value, Mr. Fuller-Maitland may be assured that judges do not regard the term as 'a convenient pigeon-hole into which extra marks can be shoved, so as to bring the final result into conformity with the opinion of the judge.' On the contrary, the word has a definite meaning, and has to do with one of the fundamental qualities of choralism. Mr. Fuller-Maitland asks if 'good chording' means that the intonation of the parts is true. The answer is 'Yes.' But to his further question, 'If so, why not "In tune"?' the answer is that most judges feel the need for distinction between (a) a general loss of pitch, and (b) a slight and occasional lapse in isolated (and usually difficult) chords. For example, a choir may flatten or sharpen, either as a body or in one or more of its parts. This would be called 'singing out of tune.' On the other hand, it may keep the pitch generally, but fail (as is said above) in the tuning of occasional chords. This, of course, may also be described as 'singing out of tune.' But it is another variety of the defect, and as its cause and cure are also different, judges do well to make the distinction clear.

Bad chording is a fault that shows itself most (as may be expected) in passages consisting of blocks of sustained harmony. For example, it is no uncommon thing to hear a choir sing the florid parts of a madrigal perfectly in tune, and fail in a simple chordal passage because one of the parts (or even a stray singer or so) is slightly off pitch. On the other hand, a choir may give us the chords perfectly in tune, and yet lose pitch in the work as a whole. This general and unanimous flattening or sharpening may be due to various causes—fatigue, slackness, over-eagerness, or (most commonly) to a lack of listening and tuning on the part of all concerned. The cause is generally apparent, and if so, the cure is obvious. The kind of out-of-tune singing which judges define as 'bad chording' is owing to other causes. The failure may be due (as has been said) to a few careless or inefficient singers. If the fault shows itself in passages of a markedly dissonant character, it indicates also a lack of musicianship, or an absence of familiarity with the harmonic idiom of to-day. Many otherwise good choirs are beaten by, e.g., a passage based on the harmony of the whole-tone scale, or by a series of augmented triads, though they can easily manage a string of familiar discords of the diminished seventh type.

That these two types of out-of-tune singing are distinct, that they have a different origin, and that they are cured by different means, has been proved over and over again at festivals. I have heard a judge gradually induce one set of combined choirs to cease flattening, and by a few minutes' demonstration and exercises, secure from another group 'chording' that was true instead of being slightly 'out.' And many a time, in the case of an intelligent choir which failed to tune perfectly a series of simple, sustained chords merely because the members had never been made to realise the importance of such tuning, or had glossed over a passage of the kind because it looked and sounded easy, I have known the matter put right by the simple expedient of playing the chords on the pianoforte, the singers listening intently, and being urged to remain dissatisfied until they could reproduce the firmness and clearness of the instrument. An alert choir will succeed almost at once. When the trouble is due to the extreme dissonance of a passage, the cure can of course be effected only after much pains in the practice-room.

This, then, is what adjudicators mean by 'chording,' so far as my pretty wide experience goes. If it be so, I think Mr. Fuller-Maitland will agree that although 'bad chording' is 'singing out of tune,' it is a distinct form of the defect (with causes and cures peculiar to itself), and so calls for a term which shall differentiate between it and ordinary bad intonation. Indeed, some of us feel so strongly on the point, that we should like to see the term included among those at the head of marking sheets. It might appear thus, 'Intonation, (a) general, (b) chording.' The judge would then be able to underline (a) or (b) as 'needing attention,' and spare himself further comment.

The matter has been dealt with at some length, (1) because the fault is a very frequent blemish in performances otherwise good, and (2) because the pains devoted to its cure cannot but have the best of results in other technical departments as well—e.g., sostenuto, blend, balance, and ensemble.

Mr. Fuller-Maitland's second and third questions are answered above by implication. But I add that the term 'simultaneously attacked' is clumsy, and that 'unanimity' and 'ensemble' meet the case far better. The Miltonic 'concent' is rather 'precious,' and moreover would usually call for explanation. 'Blend' is always used in connection with homogeneity of tone.

Finally, Mr. Fuller-Maitland asks, 'Is there a verb "to chord"?' to which I reply,' If there isn't, there ought to be.' Words are tools, and if a tool is clumsy or inadequate we make one to suit our needs. Many of us held out for a long while against vocalists' use of the word 'diction,' as applied to enunciation, but convenience and custom have been too strong for us, and the word is now generally accepted as a handy term to cover the part of singing that has to do with the text.

And, after all, isn't the verb 'to accord' sufficiently near to give us warrant for 'to chord,' if we need it?

H. G.

THE WELSH NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD

By Alfred Kalisch

Although the non-musical part of the National Eisteddfod is growing in importance year by year, it is not within my scope to discuss anything here but the music.

It is difficult to sum up the impressions of the whole week at Pwllheli in a short sentence, but it may be said that the chief musical feature of the Eisteddfod has been the fact that all the principal choral prizes went beyond the borders. The patriotic Welsh are comforting themselves with the reflection that the biggest and best choirs of South Wales could not be tempted as far afield as Pwllheli, which is a long way off. When Mr. Lloyd George said in his presidential address on one of the afternoons that visits from English choirs were good for Wales, which had been too prone to rely on its own traditions and genius for a long time past, the patriotic audience did not exactly like him better for saying so, but had the good sense to realise that he was not unjust.

This year none of the adjudications have been in any way sensational, or even of outstanding interest, which is partly due to the fact that in the characteristic Welsh manner time was always allowed to slip away so that the principal adjudications took place at a moment when the evening audiences were already knocking at the gates, so that on that account it was necessary to avoid all general reflections. But it is only just to Wales, which has so often had unkind things said to it on this point, to place on record Sir Walford Davies's expression of satisfaction at the growing love of the country for Bach, and its keener understanding of his art. Sir Walford has good reason to congratulate himself, for this welcome result is due largely to his untiring efforts.

There was, however, one presidential address to which attention should be called. Dr. Thellwall Thomas, the well-known Liverpool surgeon, expressed a doubt whether the great multiplication of small Eisteddfodau was altogether an advantage to Welsh music. He advocated a system of grading Eisteddfodau, which would possibly obviate the constant appearances of the same winners at the smaller functions. But only one with minute local knowledge can form an opinion. He also spoke sensibly of the danger which Wales runs in keeping itself too much apart from cosmopolitan culture.

In spite of much that has happened, and in spite of such sane warnings from the highest quarters, there are still a good number of Welsh musicians who think that a great superstructure of national music can be based on a foundation of ignorance of all the great music of the past. They advocate almost exclusive devotion to the music of Wales, which, after all, has never yet produced a great musical genius, although there are good grounds for saying that most of the English musicians of note have had Welsh blood in them somewhere. It is a commonplace of Welsh orators to refer to the noble monuments of Welsh music of the past, but they do not find it so easy to point to one when asked where these monuments are to be found.

The ultra-nationalists made their influence felt very strongly in the programmes of the week, in which there were an unusual number of pieces by Welsh composers, but it was difficult to discover among them any remarkable characteristics to which one could point as certainly indicating Welsh origin. A truly Welsh idiom will perhaps emerge sooner or later, possibly even sooner than most of us expect, but the best way of hastening that hour will certainly not be to discourage all students from attaining knowledge of music beyond the border. Some of the extreme patriots when accused of this are at great pains to deny it, and complain that they are misunderstood. Others will admit that what they particularly fear and dislike are English influences. They were not as much in evidence on the platform as usual, and it is only just to say that the really important leaders of the patriotic chauvinist section are showing welcome moderation as compared with the things they have said within the last ten, or even five years; but the very extreme section is still furiously raging together and imagining many vain things. The air was full of rumours of more or less secret meetings at which the hated foreigner was threatened with terrible penalties and condign punishment for violating the sacred shrine of Welsh music.

Healthy national aspirations deserve encouragement, but no good purpose is served by indiscriminate flattery, or by tempting a small nation of about three millions to believe that it can compete in any sense with the great musical peoples of the world. Consciousness of one's own limitations is after all the first step forward to realisation of legitimate ambitions.

The most important piece of Welsh music heard during the week was Dr. D. de Lloyd's opera, 'Gwenllian,' which was produced in cantata form with the aid of the Welsh Symphony Orchestra and the Eisteddfod Choir at one of the evening concerts. The libretto deals with the story of a Crusader who returns home just in time to prevent his wife from marrying again. It does not strike the hearer that the action moves swiftly enough, or that the dramatic situations are skilfully handled. The idea of want of movement is heightened by the fact that the composer interrupts his solos with longish interludes—a habit noticeable also in his chorus, 'Beyond the Veil,' which was one of the test-pieces in the chief choral competition. The composer, I understand, was trained in Germany, and German influences are noticeable in his music, but it is a good thing for any Welsh composer to open his mind to the music of other countries. Dr. de Lloyd has a happy touch in scoring which would have had more effect had it been possible to have more rehearsals. The way in which plainsong—'Jerusalem mirabilis' and 'Christe Redemptor'—is woven into the musical texture is adroit. The happiest passages are those in which recourse is had to the popular Welsh idiom; these have an agreeable nimbleness and lightness. The opera wants overhauling by somebody with a good practical knowledge of the needs of the operatic stage; but even so, it is doubtful whether it would really have a chance of being effective in the theatre. When all deductions have been made, the work deserves praise for its sincerity and vitality. Miss Mair Jones, Mr. David Brazell, and Mr. David Ellis were effective in the principal parts. Paradoxically enough, the most telling solos are entrusted to minor characters and were well sung by Miss Elsie Jones and Miss Nellie Jones. They are the most effective because they are of the lightest texture. It would have been better for the composer if he himself had not conducted his own work.

The performance of 'The Messiah,' which Sir Walford Davies conducted, was noticeable for the splendidly artistic singing of Dr. Ben Davies—he is Doctor now—and the other soloists were Miss Laura Evans-Williams, Miss Dilys Jones, and Mr. David Evans.

THE CHIEF COMPETITIONS

In the chief choral competition for choirs not under a hundred and fifty voices there were six competitors. The test-pieces were 'Lady Oriana' (Wilbye); 'Beyond the Veil' (D. de Lloyd); and 'Snowflakes' (E. T. Davies). The adjudicators were Dr. David Evans, Sir Walford Davies, Dr. Vaughan Thomas, Dr. Caradoc Roberts, and Mr. Hopkins Evans—all Welshmen—who without hesitation awarded the prize to Huddersfield Vocal Union, conducted by Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes. The audience whole-heartedly applauded the victory of the only English choir that competed. The second prize was won by Llangefni Choir. The performances of the Huddersfield singers were as good as any heard for a long time; in fact, their performance of 'Lady Oriana' was one of the finest things I remember. The success attained by Llangefni Choir, which has a lovely, sweet quality, was astonishing, considering that Llangefni is a small village in Anglesey, where after all it is not so easy to hear good choral music as it is at Huddersfield. Dr. de Lloyd's chorus is thoughtful but somewhat aimless, and Mr. Davies's work is naïvely cheerful. The result was as follows:

					TOTAL.
Huddersfield	93	95	99		292
Llangefni	93	95	94		282
Port Talbot	85	91	88		264
Pontycymer	88	84	86		258
North Gwent	84	82	90		256
Llandilo	82	85	88		255

The second choral competition attracted only four competitors. The test-pieces were 'Abide with me' (Bach) and 'Vale of Clwyd' (arranged by J. H. Roberts). A very good level of excellence was reached, but there was no great singing. In his adjudication—which had to be brief because time was getting on and the evening audience had already assembled—Sir Walford Davies expressed special gratification at the way in which the love of Bach and insight into his art was growing in Wales. He did not say so, but he might have added that this was largely due to his own efforts. The first prize went to Birkenhead Welsh Choral Society, conducted by Mr. D. R. Jones, and the second to Heli Glee Choir, conducted by Mr. R. O. Jones.

The male-voice competition was another victory for England, the prize being won by Hadley Choir, from Staffordshire, conducted by Mr. R. Lewis, with 180 marks, and Crossley Motor Works Choir from Manchester (the conductor was not named on the programme) was second with 174 marks. The test-pieces were Leigh Henry's 'Cry from the Twilight' and Sir Walford Davies's 'Storm Joy.' The first piece is meditative, and it was generally suggested that it showed the influence of Bantock, and Sir Walford Davies's chorus was straightforward and dramatic in expression. In his adjudication, Sir Walford said that the winning choir had done exceptionally well in the second piece because of the happy combination of 'recklessness and liberty' in its singing. To the choirs which did not win, he addressed very serious words of warning on the urgent need for the study of chording.

There were some very good performances in the competition for ladies' choirs of thirty-five to fifty voices, which sang Dr. de Lloyd's 'The Lord is my Shepherd' and the 'Bells of Aberdovey,' arranged by Emlyn Evans. The winners were the Gitana Ladies' Choir from Birkenhead, conducted by Miss Maggie Evans, with 187 marks, the second prize being won by the Rhondda Ladies' Choir. The Rhondda Ladies' Choir had spent the night in a railway carriage, and Mr. Sykes's Huddersfield Ladies' Choir did not arrive in time for the competition. Perhaps these facts had an effect on the result.

The test-pieces for the second male-voice choir competition (forty to sixty voices) were 'Sons of the Mighty' (W. T. David) and Harry Evans's arrangement of 'All through the night.' Five choirs competed, and the prize went to the Llaithfean Choir, conducted by Mr. R. O. Jones, with 191 marks, Trevor Choir being second with 189.

The singing of the children's choirs was well up to the standard. The Eisteddfod Children's Choir, of about seven hundred voices, was remarkable for discipline. It is a pity that operatic arrangements were employed. The Welsh children have great dramatic aptitude, of which we saw a good many examples during the course of the week. Taking it all round, it may be said that while children's choirs on the whole sing more musically than of old, the teachers do not seem to be paying the same attention to beauty of tone. A good deal of the singing was needlessly shrill.

The solo-singing generally was of average merit, except in the case of the baritone soloist, Mr. Emlyn Jones, of Dyffrin, who is an exceptional singer. It was said by the adjudicator that his was the best solo-work heard at an Eisteddfod for a long time.

The sopranos had to sing a song in Welsh by Haydn Morris and Holbrooke's 'Let us make love deathless,' the mood of which is not very easily grasped; and it is unvocal. The prize was won by Miss Ceinwin Rowlands, of Holyhead.

One of the test-pieces for tenor soloists was Bridge's 'My love went a-riding.' The prize was won by Mr. Ernest Williams, of Treffillon, whose singing was sound, rather than remarkable. The second prize went to 'Joan,' who is a Mr. Jones, of Swansea. An interesting fact with regard to him is that he has eight times been among the elected competitors, but has never yet won.

With regard to instrumental music Wales is at a transitional stage. The number of entries was disappointingly small, but at the same time the improvement in quality from year to year is very noticeable, and has never been more marked than it was this year. For instance, only the Deeside Orchestra from Connah's Quay came to play the 'New World' Symphony, but it obtained very high marks. The same holds good with regard to the various chamber music competitions.

The competition for the open violin prize, in which the test-pieces were the first and second movements of Elgar's Violin Sonata, produced an unusual incident which bears out what was said above about the rising standard of instrumental music in Wales. There were five competitors, of whom four were called to the platform, and the contest was very close. Mr. H. J. Jenkins, of Bridgend, won with ninety-two marks; Mr. Gwynne Edwards, of Pontycymmer, was second, with eighty-nine marks; and consolation prizes were given to both the others.

Two very interesting young ladies were among the competitors for the violin solo under eighteen. This event was won by Miss Leyshon, of Bridgend, who, it may be recalled, was the winner both among the pianists and violinists at Pontypool last year. The other aspirant was a very tiny girl, Miss Marion Davies, of Swansea, who played with a stormy temperament which seemed strange in one so small. She well deserved the consolation prize. The adjudicator said of both girls—a thing seldom said—that they were obviously born to be violinists.

It is good to be able to say that the adjudicator spoke very highly of the way in which one of the Fugues from Bach's 'Forty-eight' was played by a large number of the pianists.

It was a bold venture to put one of Brahms's Violoncello Sonatas down as a test-piece for a soloist, and it is not wonderful that the competitors could not grapple with it, although Sir Walford Davies pointed out that the winning player was 'a born phraser,' which from him is high praise indeed. The chief trouble here was the accompanist, but the question of Eisteddfod accompaniment is a thorny one, and requires more time and space for its discussion than is available now.

Next year's Eisteddfod takes place at Swansea, and that of 1927 at Holyhead, when several Irish choirs have already promised to compete. It would be interesting if a choir or two from Scotland could also come, so that all four peoples could be represented.

A West Indian correspondent has kindly copied the following from a Demerara newspaper:

'NOTICE

'In connection with the paragraph headed "East Indian Singing Contest," which appeared in the Daily Argosy, I beg to state that some time ago I was declared the best harmonium player in the colony by such competent men as Messrs. M. Panday and Sooknanan Singh, who sat as judges. Mr. Rajunauth Ramphul was defeated by me, so how can he be declared champion when I was declared his superior? Do the judges who proclaimed him a champion possess any knowledge in that direction? Mr. Rajunauth Ramphul cannot be elevated without defeating his superior. I and my party can give a full display of Indian music in the playing of the Harmonium, Gitaar, Israaj, Soorbakar, Beenak, and in singing and playing of the Drum, Tablah, and Majeera. Rajunauth knows that I am his superior. Should he deny this, let him challenge me as a man.

'M. SINGH ('Songster').

The annual general meeting and the annual conference of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals will take place at York on Saturday, September 26. Sir Henry Hadow will be chairman. In addition to the official proceedings, a number of interesting musical and social events are promised for the week-end, including a performance of the Vaughan Williams Mass in the Minster, a reception by the Mayor, a luncheon, and a visit to Messrs. Rowntree's chocolate factory. Members and friends who wish to attend should notify the secretary (3, Central Buildings, Westminster) not later than September 14. The railway company has promised to issue return tickets at a single fare and a third on presentation of a voucher which may be had from the Secretary of the Federation. But they stipulate that the number shall be not less than two hundred.

WIND INSTRUMENTS: AN INTERESTING COLLECTION

Wigan Public Library has received a very valuable and unique gift of twenty-two wind instruments of the 18th and 19th centuries, from Mr. William Rimmer, the well-known musician, of Southport.

The instruments include an oboe, by Garrett, which formerly belonged to Johann Christian Fischer (1733-1800), a famous oboeist of the 18th century, whose portrait, painted by Gainsborough, is now in Buckingham Palace. The sitter is portrayed holding the oboe, which is a faithful representation of the instrument now presented to Wigan. There are three flutes, one by Cahusac, of the late 18th century, another by Proser, of the same period, and the third, by Monzani, dated 1847. A double flageolet, of the early 19th century, is by Bainbridge & Wood, and was presented to the present donor by Mr. Charles Reynolds.

A slide-trumpet of the late 18th century is a very handsome instrument in copper and brass, heavily silver-mounted; made by William Harris, of London. It is said to be the equal of the one in the Galpin Collection at South Kensington. Of two clarinets by Goulding & Co., one has silver keys with hall-mark of 1807; the other is, perhaps, a little later.

Other specially interesting items are two serpents, the now obsolete bass instrument of the cornet family, and in some favour with George III. owing to the excellent playing of it by the Yorkshireman Hurworth; both are of the 18th century—one early, and the other towards the end. Two keyed bugles are included, both by Charles Pace, of the early 19th century; one in silvered brass, E flat, with six keys, the other in copper with seven keys. The other instruments are a fife in A, by Wood, early 19th century; a flageolet, by Bainbridge, early 19th century; Musette, modern; Chaunter (Highland bagpipes), modern; bassoon, by Milhouse, of the 18th century; bassoon, by Distin, of the middle 19th century; cornopean, by Roe, of 1840; ophicleide, middle 19th century; hand horn, stamped Alphonse Cary; and a 'cudgel flute,' modern French (a weapon of offence in the form of a flute, brought by a soldier from France).

Mr. William Rimmer, the donor, is the well-known Lancashire bandmaster, who is widely known through the large number of compositions he has arranged for brass bands. The collection he has now presented to the Wigan Corporation has been carefully selected over his long career.

Music in the Provinces

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.—The skeleton programme of the Hallé concerts issued in mid-August shows reliance on the main principles which governed the very successful scheme of last winter. Four out of the twenty evenings will be purely orchestral, when Beethoven, Strauss, Berlioz, and Mozart Symphonies will form the backbone of the programmes. The choral concerts are well distributed, so as to permit of adequate rehearsal—Berlioz's 'Messe des Morts' being the outstanding novelty, the extra brass bands being found from the men of the famous Besses o' the Barn organization. Elgar's 'The Apostles' and the Beethoven Mass in D, with 'The Messiah,' fill the choral nights. Backhaus, Cortôt, Suggia, Casals, Catterall, Clara Haskil (the Rumanian pianist), Mila Wellerson, Jelly d'Aranyi, Yolanda Mero, and Arthur Rubinstein are the solo instrumentalists engaged; the complete list of vocalists cannot yet be stated. Brahms Symphonies come on October 22 and January 21; Ravel's 'Daphnis and Chloe' on October 29; Berlioz's 'Messe des Morts' (November 12) and 'Symphonie Fantastique' (January 28); Vaughan Williams's 'Pastoral' Symphony on December 3—the same evening as Casals; Elgar's Symphony No. 2 (January 7) and 'The Apostles' (March 11); César Franck's D minor (January 14); the first performance of Moeran's new Symphony is allotted to March 4, and the Pension Fund concert to March 25.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—About thirty boys from Romilly Road School, Barry, gave a concert in University Hall on August 12, under the baton of their master, Mr. W. M. Williams. The string band gave a surprisingly good performance of the first movement from Haydn's second Symphony, and small parties accompanied their schoolfellows in the 'Market Chorus' from 'Masaniello' and 'The Cachuca' from 'The Gondoliers.' The boys' choir sang a number of English and Welsh songs and part-songs with fine discipline, though one or two numbers were marred by exaggerated effects. Two of the elder scholars played violin and 'cello solos; the 'cellist, however, showed a tendency to overdo portamenti and pauses. With a third as pianist they gave a good account of the first movement of Mozart's Trio in G, for a performance of which they divided the prize with a trio from Bangor at the recent Pwllheli Eisteddfod. Miss Myfanwy Ellis, a local contralto, sang a number of solos.

BRYN TANAT.—Arrangements for the fifth annual Festival under the auspices of the North Montgomeryshire Musical Association, which is to be held on September 18, have now been completed. Portions of Bach's 'Passion' will be included in a first-class programme, a rehearsal of which took place on July 16, under Mr. Arthur Fagge, conductor of the London Choral Society. Mr. Adrian C. Boult will have his own players (the Birmingham Municipal Orchestra) under his baton at the Festival. Mr. E. T.

Davies, of Bangor, will also take part. As last year, about a hundred school-children will sing. A record event seems to be assured.

CARNARVON.—The committee of the Eryri annual Festival has decided to perform Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' at the 1926 event, on May 15. Choirs from the various towns and villages of Arfon will take part.

NEWTOWN.—Under the auspices of the Montgomeryshire Recreation Association, a concert was given at the Pavilion on July 22, when a choir of about a thousand school-children sang Welsh patriotic airs under the conductorship of Sir Walford Davies and Mr. Bumford Griffiths. Several groups of children sang Welsh folk-songs, and maypole and other dances were represented. One of the most successful items was Bach's Bourrée in G, by the orchestra, which was chiefly drawn from the violin classes taught in the elementary schools of the county.

Music in Ireland

It is well known that the Dublin Horse Show is the great social function of the year. This year's show (August 3-6) eclipsed all previous records in every department, and of course music was not forgotten among the attractions. 'Our John,' meaning John McCormack, was a host in himself, and his two concerts (on August 2 and 9) were highly appreciated, not alone by his own countrymen, but also by the hosts of visitors who thronged the Irish capital for the week. He was in glorious voice, and gave us of his best. As to his singing, çà va sans dire, and the advance of years is mellowing his beautiful organ, though he is still comparatively young—only forty-one. Another musical feature of the Show was the Cossack Choir. According to a cross-channel visitor, one of the best items given by these singers was 'The Vulgar Boot Song'!

The John McCormack banquet at the National University, Dublin, on August 5, was an enormous success. It was presided over by Mr. J. J. Walsh, Minister for Posts and Telegraphs. President Congreve made a fine speech, in which he referred to the many generous gifts of our great Irish singer towards the city's charities for the past ten years. In responding, Mr. McCormack humorously alluded to the forthcoming elections for Senators in the Free State, and regretted that no musicians names appeared among the candidates. Aside, however, from drollery, he advocated the founding of a great school of Irish music.

The strike of musicians in Dublin theatres and cinemas ended on August 8. Members of the various orchestras have intimated their willingness to resume work on the old terms.

Belfast music-lovers had an enjoyable treat in the open, at Bellevue Park, during the week August 3-8, when the band of the Royal Air Force performed twice daily. Under Flight-Lieut. John Amers, these players presented some really delightful programmes of classical and popular music. A resolution from the Tramways Committee in favour of Sunday band performances was submitted at the monthly meeting of the Belfast Corporation on August 4. It found only twelve supporters, and was defeated by a majority of thirty. Among its supporters was Lord Londonderry, Minister of Education, who urged the need for a wider dissemination of music. But alas! Belfast's dour Corporation would have none of it. It is said that the Labour party intends taking a plébiscite on the question.

At the fiftieth anniversary of the Federation of the Belgian Archæological and Historical Society, at Bruges, during the week August 2-8 (under the patronage of H.M. The King of the Belgians, and the presidency of Prince Leopold), an interesting section was devoted to Musicology, in which many valuable papers were read by various savants, including Mr. Gerald M. Cooper, and Chevalier Grattan Flood, Mus. D.

Musical Notes from Abroad

HOLLAND

While there is much music of a high artistic quality being performed in Holland during the summer months, only a comparatively small proportion of it is in the form of concerts. The hundredth anniversary of the birth of Richard Hol was observed in various ways and various places, the principal celebration being before his monument at The Hague. This was not a musical event, but speakers representing the leading societies with which Hol had been connected in his life-time paid their tributes, and a wreath was placed at the foot of the monument. At the moment of writing, the second international exhibition of carillon art has just been opened at 's-Hertogenbosch. I have not yet had an opportunity for inspecting it myself, but the reports that have come to hand all suggest that it is of the highest interest. Included in the collection are examples of ancient and modern mechanisms, books of pieces and studies of various periods, pictures and other representations of various towers, carillons, and clocks. There are also carillons and bell-instruments from Java dating from several centuries ago, and the latest electrical adaptations to facilitate bell-playing. Much interest has centred in the exhibits relating to the new carillon in course of erection in St. Jan's Cathedral, which it is hoped will be completed in time for recitals to be given before the close of the exhibition. Well-known carillonneurs will take part, including Messrs. Jef Denijn, Gust. Nees, Antoon Brees, senr., Joh. Meyll, Fr. Hasselaar, and Ferd. Timmermans. The installation is being carried out by Messrs. Gillet & Johnson, of Croydon, England.

A Roman Catholic Congress (the third Dutch Catholic Day) at The Hague had many points of musical interest, and a striking paper on 'The Significance of Catholicism for Dutch Music' was read by Mgr. J. A. S. van Schaik, rector of a seminary at Culembourg, and himself a popular composer of Church music. His demonstration of the certainty that Charlemagne gave a great new impulse to music, and that practically all folk-song derives from Christianity, deserved fuller treatment than was possible on this occasion. The three days of the Congress comprised some thirty general and sectional meetings. There were numerous musical performances at services and other functions in connection with this event. Much of the music, apart from the plainsong, was by Netherlands composers of the 'golden period,' and of to-day. Among the latter were works by van Schaik, Diepenbrock, Jansen, Cuijpers, Philip Loots, and Giesen. By a coincidence the 'Domine Salvum fac' of Giesen was sung almost simultaneously at the Catholic meeting and at J. A. de Zwaan's recital in the great Protestant Church. The last-named was arranged in honour of the Queen Mother's birthday, and is memorable for the admirable singing of a double quartet in a number of a cappella works, and for the organist's playing of classical and modern items, including a small and very pleasant composition of his own.

The concerts at the Scheveningen Kurhaus have continued successfully, and have provided some interesting standards both of selection and performance. Ernest Schelling's 'A Victory Ball,' given under the composer's direction, aroused more enthusiasm than did Malipiero's 'Impressioni dal Vero.' Schelling, however, had just given a brilliant and thoroughly sentimental performance of Chopin's F minor Concerto. A pleasant but quite unoriginal Symphonic Overture by E. Bohnke suggested that the composer was trying to be a 'brighter' Brahms. Arthur Rubinstein, Thibaud, and Judith Boker have been the most notable soloists in recent weeks. Mejn. Boker, who is now resident at The Hague, is one of the best among women 'cellists of to-day, although, like other exponents of this instrument, she errs on the side of sentimentality. Mahler's fifth Symphony, a portentous work that appeals to the Teutonic mind much more than I imagine it is ever likely to do to that of the Anglo-Saxon, was made the subject of a special evening, and we had a really good performance, under Schneevoigt, of 'Also sprach Zarathustra.' A mild storm was created recently by a criticism in a local paper of a performance of a Violin Concerto, in which a misunderstanding occurred between soloist and conductor. The critic praised the soloist for the manner in which he had held things together; but the conductor (not Schneevoigt) demurred, and claimed all the credit for himself, assigning the mishap to the soloist's loss of nerve. I was not present at the concert, and so am unable to proffer an opinion on the dispute. HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

THE DONAUESCHINGEN FESTIVAL

BY PAUL BECHERT

THE PROGRAMMES

1st Concert, July 25

String Quintet, Op. 2 ... ... Erhart Ermatinger
'The Seasons,' for chamber choir ... Ernst Krenek
Six Songs, Op. 2, for voice and pianoforte Hanns Eisler
Italian Madrigals for five- and six-part choir Wilhelm Weismann
Concerto for violin, clarinet, horn, and string sextet Aarre Merikanto

2nd Concert, July 26 (Matinée)

Quintet for clarinet, horn, violin, viola, and 'cello Heinrich Kaminski
Sonatina (Romancero) for pianoforte solo Philipp Jarnach
Two mixed-voice choruses for four and eight parts Max Butting
Concerto for string quartet ... ... Alfredo Casella

3rd Concert, July 26

Concertino for violin, flute, clarinet, and horn Paul Dessau
Four Fugues for pianoforte solo ... Felix Petyrek
Three Joyous Sacred Madrigals for female chorus ,, Sonata for violin and pianoforte, Op. 39 Otto Siegl
Four Madrigals for mixed choir ... Paul Hindemith
Sonata for pianoforte solo ... ... Igor Stravinsky
Concerto for flute and violin, with accompaniment for small orchestra Alexander Tcherepnin

The Donaueschingen Festival is—or, should one say, has been, in view of certain features connected with this year's concerts?—a beautiful and anachronistic dream, a bit of romance amid an otherwise sober and materialistic world. The annual series of modern chamber music concerts initiated in 1921 by Prince Fürstenberg and his musical adjutant, Heinrich Burkard, seemed to many an idealistic vision realised. A princely Mæcenas had appeared, plainly coveting the laurels of a new Prince Esterhazy of the rococo era, a patron of music and fine arts eager to revive the idyll of Josef Haydn's times, when music was fully dependent upon the support not of a broad public but of a small circle of privileged aristocratic art-lovers. It even seemed as though this small provincial town of Southern Germany were determined to vie with the fame of its neighbour Mannheim in an effort to create what was expected by many to develop into a distinct Donaueschingen School in contemporary music, with Paul Hindemith as its spiritual leader. (It is well known that the famous Amar-Hindemith Quartet, in which the much-discussed young composer takes the part of the viola player, owes its foundation to the 1921 Donaueschingen Festival. It was the modern equivalent, as it were, of the Court orchestras once maintained by Austrian and German aristocrats for their private concerts.)

All those who had cherished such untimely and roseate dreams must have been somewhat disillusioned by the nature of this year's event. No longer is Prince Fürstenberg the sole patron and backer of the Donaueschingen Festival. Instead, what was once a more or less private affair has grown into an official enterprise, sponsored and largely supported by the authorities of the Baden Provincial Government. In the measure in which the Donaueschingen scheme has developed into an event of nation-wide importance, so has it broadened its programmes internationally, and it may now be regarded as an event to rival in significance the festivals held annually by the International Society for Contemporary Music. And, let it be stated from the outset, the jury entrusted with the task of selecting the Donaueschingen programmes has shown more all-round judgment and less national bias (though composed solely of three German musicians—Paul Hindemith, Heinrich Burkard, and Josef Haas) than the illustrious cosmopolitan body chosen to compile the programmes of the International Society.

The important feature of this year's programmes was the broad space allotted to choral music of chamber style. By emphasising this species of music it was hoped to 'widen the boundaries' of the comparatively limited possibilities of chamber music which virtually all instrumental combinations seem to have exhausted, and thus to benefit not only the cause of modern music but also a realm of choral singing which heretofore had been unduly neglected by modernist composers. It cannot be said that the experiment was a full success, for what we heard in this field was neither modern nor, indeed, real chamber music at all. The conclusion that may be drawn is that a cappella singing is not —for the moment, at least—to be regarded as a suitable medium for the radical composer wherein to express his ideas and inventions. At present even an acknowledged revolutionary like Hindemith succumbs to the lure of 'cuteness,' of the obvious 'cuckoo' romanticism so long abused by 'Männerchor' societies in every German provincial town. The success and vociferous approval which fell to Hindemith's choruses was indeed a Pyrrhic victory not to be envied save by the all too many routine manufacturers of this sort of obvious poetry, whom Germany produces by the score year in and year out. Krenek's choruses were at least legitimate and serious music which steered clear from cheap popular effects; to say that they gave even a hint of the personality of this composer—one of the most gifted and volcanic among all young Germans—would be misleading. Felix Petyrek's talent was, happily, more clearly visible in his four Fugues, which reveal him as an excellent craftsman and a serious-minded musician, than do the Madrigals, which moved more or less along conventional lines. The unaccompanied part-song is a realm of music yet to be conquered by this radical young composer, and is accessible only to a man like Max Butting, who, in his choruses, reverts to the device of writing purely instrumentally for the voice. These mixed-voice choruses by their very nature and dynamic outlines seem hardly calculated for chamber music. Of Wilhelm Weismann it may be said that he adopts the simple subterfuge of hiding the lack of a suitable modern idiom behind an affected archaism, and that he writes music so innocently naïve as to place it on the level of the products which any graduate from a musical conservatoire would be able to bring forth.

Originality is a quality amply possessed by Hanns Eisler, the young pupil of Schönberg who came into sudden prominence last season with his Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 1, and who remains interesting even where it is not quite easy to follow his ideas. His Songs—which suffered from a completely inadequate interpretation that barely gave the melodic contours of the music without in the least responding to the mental requirements of the occasion—are not convincing in their lyrical aspects. They ring true only where Eisler, a true product of his time, abandons himself to satirical, even self-ironical utterance, where coherence and constructive elements may rightly be sacrificed to the grim atmosphere of the text. Apart from their interpretative difficulties, Eisler's songs place demands upon the range and vocal powers of the soloist which few singers will be able to fulfil. These songs, and Dessau's Concertino, alone attempted to follow the lines of Schönbergian principles; but in the case of Dessau it was an attempt doomed to failure. The ghost of the moonstruck Pierrot walks through this poorly scored piece, which is in itself an imitation of the inimitable. Schönberg's experiments are singular and without parallel, and convincing only when born of inner necessity and formed by a master hand. Dessau's music is distorted Schönberg, immensely taxing for the solo violin without rewarding the player by gratefulness. And it is futile as an attempt to create the 'new' type of Concerto, of which Prokofiev's Violin Concerto still stands as the supreme example in our time—the Concerto purified from useless and time-honoured bywork of a mere incidental nature.

Stravinsky's new Pianoforte Sonata had been anticipated as the 'clou' of the Festival, but, contrary to expectation, the palm went not to this piece but to Stravinsky's young and heretofore almost unknown connational, Alexander Tcherepin. Stravinsky's Sonata marks the last word of the 'mechanization' and complete 'abstraction' recently preached by the Russian wizard. It is a sort of vivisection of music; the very skeleton of the composition is, as it were, laid bare, before the hearer's inner eye. No pedal is allowed, shading and nuances are 'strictly prohibited,' and nothing is called for but cold, metronomic reproduction minus any semblance of expression or feeling. In style, the Sonata is Bach and Beethoven (not to forget occasional lapses into Clementi) trimmed with little ironical mordents and parodistic figures. It is cerebral throughout, and nothing in this cold and marionette-like piece recalls Stravinsky's old-time fire, the electrifying rhythm, the pagan vitality of yore. All these qualities, however, seem to have passed on to young Tcherepnin, who appears to have stepped into the boots of his composer-father (Serge Tcherepnin), and who has certainly made tremendous forward strides since I heard him play his earlier pianoforte compositions at Vienna some months ago. They were largely derivative, and reminiscent of Rachmaninov's style; the Concerto, however, shows him as a talent of the first order. It is brisk, full of original themes and powerful rhythms, and brilliantly scored. The second movement is thrilling in its barbaric force, alternating with an ironical little waltz, and again winding up with the rhythmically exuberant beginning which springs directly from the 'Danse Sacrale' of Stravinsky's 'Le Sacre du Printemps.' Stravinskyian in its hilarity, too, is Alfredo Casella's Concerto, of which I have previously spoken in these columns. It is witty and spirited from beginning to end; and if it lacks the subtler qualities of sentiment, is not sentiment the very thing which one searches for in vain even in Stravinsky's greatest music?

The very antipodes of Casella's light and brilliant Concerto was Philipp Jarnach's Sonatina, which the composer himself performed on the pianoforte. Jarnach is a Spaniard by birth, a German by training, and was one of Busoni's favourite disciples. Busoni's seriousness and depth, and a truly Teutonic rigidity and sternness (even a certain dryness and didactic tendency), bespeak the country of his adoption, while his cosmopolitan origin reveals itself in French impressionistic colouristic effects and harmonies. The romanticism indicated by the sub-title of the Sonatina is rarely in evidence. All the more romantic, however, and surprisingly so, was the Quintet by Heinrich Kaminski, who had heretofore been labelled as a Bach apostle on the strength chiefly of his widely-known Concerto Grosso. In the Quintet, Kaminski strikes a brighter and more sensuous note than has ever been known in him, an almost romantic melodiousness and a rhapsodic exuberance which extend even to the formal scheme of his piece, but which never stoop to cheap effects. To his Quintet fell one of the great and deserved successes of the Festival.

Romanticism, but of the all too innocent and sentimental variety, is the fundamental note of Otto Siegl's Sonata, in which Straussian and César Franckian patches barely hide the total absence of genuine inspiration, and the lack of polyphonic and thematic workmanship; and eclecticism to a degree spoke from the opening work of the first programme, the String Quartet from Erhart Ermatinger, the sole Swiss exponent at Donaueschingen. Perhaps the last movement, if played, would have banished the atmosphere of monotony and lack of contrast shed by the remaining two, but it would hardly have reimbursed the absence of individual utterance. Largely derivative, too, was the Concerto by Aarre Merikanto, who shares with Yrjö Kilpinen the platform of contemporary Finnish music, but is clearly rooted in neo-classical influences, chiefly in the examples of Wagner and Strauss. Merikanto's piece was one of the prize-winners in the contest promoted by the German publishing firm of Schott, the other winners being the above-mentioned works by Dessau and Tcherepnin. Of the three compositions, only that of the young Russian has escaped the danger of confirming the deeply-rooted prejudice against such prize contests in general which Hans von Bülow so eloquently proclaimed in his famous pun: 'Je preiser ein Werk gekrönt wird, desto durcher fällt es.'

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

HENRY ELLIOT BUTTON, at Hampstead, on August 1. He was born in 1861, at Clevedon, Somerset, where his father was schoolmaster, and organist of the Congregational Church. From his earliest days he showed marked aptitude for music, being able to sing at sight from tonic sol-fa long before he could read. For a short time after his school days he was in a business at Bristol, going thence to become a master in a school at Hastings. Before he was of age, however, he found more congenial work in the experimental department of the Globe Telephone Company in London, science and mathematics having been favourite studies in his school-days. The failure of the Company threw him on his own resources, and he entered the musical profession, studying harmony under Windeyer Clark, who was amanuensis to G. A. Macfarren—an office in which Mr. Button himself shared at times. He was a good violinist and a capital singer, filling posts as alto soloist at Holy Trinity, Sloane Square, and other churches. For a time he was choirmaster at St. Mary Abbot's. His chief work, however, was in the publishing department of Messrs. Novello, which he entered about forty years ago. Here his knowledge, skill, and judgment in all matters concerning notation, &c., had full scope. The fruits of his study of this important subject are shown in his Primer, 'System in Musical Notation,' published in 1920. His encyclopædic knowledge of hymn-tunes stood him in good stead as Editor of the 'Bristol Tune Book,' and was shown in another direction in his scholarly collection of 'Chorales Harmonized by Johann Sebastian Bach' (1924). For many years he was an assiduous reader at the British Museum, and his wide knowledge of the music manuscripts there led to some admirable transcriptions of madrigals. A man of many interests outside his work, a keen sportsman, and a genial companion, he will be missed by a wide circle of friends.

LUCIE JOHNSTONE, a well-known singer and teacher. A daughter of the Rev. Edward Johnstone, she commenced singing in the choir at University Church, Belfast, and later matriculated at the Royal University of Ireland. Afterwards coming to England, she studied at the Royal College of Music, under Anna Williams and Randegger. Equipped with a contralto voice of rich quality, Miss Johnstone sang in oratorio at the Royal Albert Hall, Queen's Hall, Steinway Hall, and throughout the provinces, and also at the Crystal Palace in the days of Sir August Manns. Other distinguished conductors under whom she sang are Sir Henry Wood, and the late Sir Charles Hallé, Sir Joseph Barnby, and Sir Frederick Bridge. For some years she occupied the position of contralto soloist at the City Temple during the ministry of Dr. Parker—a period that she regarded as the happiest of her life. Under the nom de plume of Lewis Carey she wrote many popular songs, mostly of a religious type. Miss Johnstone retired from public singing at the zenith of her career, and afterwards concentrated on composition, voice development, and illustrated vocal lectures. She was one of the founders of the Society of Women Musicians, an Associate of the Royal Philharmonic Society, and a member of the Council of Incorporated Society of Musicians and of the Folk-Song Society.

MAGGIE DAVIES, an accomplished singer. Trained at the Royal College of Music, Miss Davies first became famous as a member of the Carl Rosa Opera Company. Later she was introduced to the concert platform by Manns, and for the remainder of her career was successful as concert and oratorio singer. She was a member of the original cast in 'Shamus O'Brien,' her colleagues including Charles McGrath, Kirkby Lunn, Denis O'Sullivan, and Joseph O'Mara, with Sir (then Mr.) Henry Wood as conductor.

HAROLD ARTHUR JEBOULT, at Taunton, on July 16, aged about fifty-four. He came of a musical stock, one of his ancestors having been Robert Creyghton; his maternal grandfather was a military bandmaster, and four of his uncles, one great-uncle, and his grandfather were all well-known Somerset organists—a family record that is probably unique. Mr. Jeboult did excellent work at Taunton for thirty-six years—at Holy Trinity from 1889 to 1897, and at St. Mary's from that date till his death. For ten years he conducted the Taunton Madrigal Society. His booklet 'Somerset Composers, Musicians, and Music' (one of the 'Somerset Folk Series') was reviewed in this journal in May, 1924.

ELIAS POIRÉE, at Paris, May 25, aged seventy-five. This distinguished French musicologist was born at Villeneuve Saint George, on October 9, 1850. In 1906 he was elected president of the French section of the International Society of Music, in succession to M. Dauriac, and in 1917 he was one of the founders of the French Society of Musicology, being made vice-president. As librarian of St. Geneviève Library he was courteous and capable, and he published many important works, including admirable memoirs of Chopin and Wagner for the series of 'Musiciens Célèbres,' of which he was managing editor.

REV. JOHN M. E. ROSS, on August 3, at Chiavenna, Italy. He was editor of the British Weekly, and an enthusiastic and well-informed musician who did his utmost for the improvement of the musical side of the services in congregational churches.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

E. B. P.—(1.) As we pointed out in a recent answer, the titles of organ stops are very unsafe guides as to their effect. The differences are due to more causes than those you mention—e.g., the different voicing and scales of various builders. We have not space for discussion of this point. (2.) You will find much of interest and value in Eaglefield-Hull's 'Organ Playing: its Technique and Expression' (Augener). A good many points concerning phrasing, registration, &c., are treated incidentally in Harvey Grace's 'The Organ Works of Bach' and 'The Organ Works of Rheinberger' (both published by Novello). (3.) For harmonizing unfigured basses take Buck's 'Unfigured Harmony' (Clarendon Press). Almost any good harmony tutor provides abundance of exercises for harmonizing melodies and basses. If you need still more, try your hand at harmonizing folk-songs, or, better still, write your own melodies and basses for exercise purposes. (4.) No public organ recitals are given at the Royal College of Music, but organ solos are frequently included in students' concerts, admission to which is free. (5.) The salicional is an organ flue stop of 8-, 4-, or 2-ft. pitch, with a delicate and somewhat stringy tone.

CONDUCTOR.—(1.) You can take a course in conducting at any of our principal schools of music. We do not, however, hold out any great hopes of your finding many opportunities for performance with a professional orchestra, at Queen's Hall or elsewhere. There are many young musicians, like yourself, intensely keen about conducting, and prepared to make themselves efficient, but there are very few posts for them, even when they have qualified. (2.) Much the same thing applies to your pupil who is anxious to play a concerto in public with orchestra. There are lots of such players, and not enough chances to go round.

MERUS HIBERNICUS.—(1.) We know of no settings of Thackeray's verses 'The White Squall,' 'The Cristal Palace,' and 'Peg of Limavaddy.' (2.) We cannot get hold of a copy of Kurt Thomas's Mass in A minor for double choir. Can any reader advise our correspondent as to whether the work is for a cappella performance, its degree of difficulty, and its musical value. (3.) You ask, 'Is it tradition which demands that oratorio soloists should always sing from the score, or is it the desire to perform their allotted tasks with the minimum expenditure of mental effort? If tradition, can the origin be traced?' You must ask us another. (4.) Does your inquiry refer to Bach's solo cantatas for bass or to the cantatas in which the only soloist required is a bass? So far as we can ascertain, the only example of the former is 'Amor Traditore'; of the latter, 'Ich habe genug.' The only edition of 'Amor Traditore' known to us is that of Breitkopf & Härtel, in which the text is in German and Italian. Apparently 'Ich habe genug' is to be had only in the B. & H. edition, with German words.

JOHN THORNDYKE.—(1.) You must not expect us to decide between the various oboe manufacturers you mention. All are firms of repute, and you cannot very well go wrong in choosing any one of them. Nor can we give any information about the instruments used by the players in orchestras. No doubt a note to any prominent oboe player (enclosing stamped, addressed envelope) would bring you information. (2.) Among instruction books, we have heard that of Brod well spoken of (Hawkes, 20*s.*). Other tutors that are no doubt excellent are by Kappey (Boosey, 4*s.*); Hinke, an elementary tutor (Augener, 6*s.*); and an instruction book is also issued by Metzler (2*s.*).

W. E. R.—Novellos issue two albums of German songs, for bass or baritone, by various composers. The English text is by several hands. They publish also albums by Schubert, Liszt, Schumann, and Brahms, in which you would probably find some songs to suit your compass. The Oxford University Press has recently issued many of Schubert's songs, with excellent translations by Fox-Strangways, Steuart Wilson, and others.

JAMES.—Thanks for cuttings. For vocal score reading we know only the following: Daymond (two books, Novello); Peppin (Novello); James Lyon (Stainer & Bell); and Beck-Slinn's 'One Hundred Graded Exercises' (Weekes) (we do not know the degree of difficulty reached in the last-named). If you want something still more difficult, you might try the Fugues from the '48,' put in score by Vincent, published by Hawkes.

H. E. FENTON.—So far as we know, no English organ-builder makes a glockenspiel. The John Compton Organ Co., Turnham Green, would no doubt be able to give you some information, as they have (we believe) incorporated the glockenspiel in several of the instruments they have built for cinemas.

REGULAR READER.—Work at Sawyer's 'Extemporisation' (Novello). Also, write out themes suitable for the purpose, and use for extemporisation before your Sunday service. You might help yourself considerably, too, by extemporising short movements mentally when walking or travelling.

L.—We cannot give you the particulars you ask for concerning Gounod's 'The Redemption.' Nor could the advertisement you enclose be inserted free—or indeed, at all, for a performance from second-hand or hired copies would be an infringement of the publisher's rights.

MABEL LEE.—Why not obtain the more recent examination papers of the R.C.O., and work from these? We are not certain from your question whether you are speaking of working out harmony exercises or reading from score. Write to us again, making the matter clear.

M. G. M.—(1.) We know of no book of analyses of Beethoven's later Quartets. Can a reader help? (2.) Berlioz's 'Instrumentation' is published by Novello (11*s.* 6*d.*). (3.) William Reeves, of Charing Cross Road, issues translations of some of Berlioz's critical and other works.

H. B.—The articles on Franck's Organ Music, by Harvey Grace, appeared in February, March, and April, 1923, the last-named treating of the 'Three Chorals.' Copies of these numbers may still be obtained.

VIOL.—Little reliance can be placed on names and dates in fiddles. Your best plan would be to write to Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, 140, New Bond Street, W.1, who will gladly give you advice.

GUIDA.—The form of the turn, like that of other ornaments, depends upon the pace and style of the work in which it occurs. The treatment you suggest for the turn in Paderewski's 'Minuet' is, we believe, that usually adopted—five semiquavers, beginning with the C.

SCORE-READING.—The most difficult set of two-part exercises in Curwen's 'Simplex Music Reader' would probably meet your needs.

In our July number, 'S. V. S.' inquired for volumes of concert programme annotations. We have since received a letter from Mr. Morrison C. Boyd, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, giving a list of works that would suit the purpose of 'S. V. S.' For the sake of other readers who may be interested, we mention the names of the likeliest:

George P. Upton: 'The Standard Symphonies' (Chicago, McClurg; first edition, 1888). 321 pp. Notes on all the older Symphonies, including those of Brahms.

Philip H. Goepp: 'Symphonies and their Meaning' (Philadelphia, Lippincott, 1905). Three vols., each containing about 400 pp. Many music-type examples.

Lawrence Gilman: 'Stories of Symphonic Music' (Harpers, 1907). 359 pp. Deals mostly with programme music, over a hundred works being briefly discussed.

In this connection, Niecks's fine work on 'Programme Music' (Novello) should be noted. If 'S. V. S.' will let us have his address we will send him a copy of Mr. Boyd's letter, in which there are many details for which we have not space. We thank Mr. Boyd for kindly taking so much trouble.

In reference to the inquiry from 'A. P.' in our last issue concerning Wickins's 'Voluntaries,' Messrs. Bosworth kindly write saying that these works were at one time published by them, and were subsequently disposed of to the following firms: Nos. 1-5 and 21-25, the London Music Stores, London Street, E.C.3; Nos. 6-15, Mr. A. Linwood, Eastwood, Notts; Nos. 16-20, Messrs. Pitman, Hart & Co., E.C.; Nos. 26-29, Messrs. Oliver & Co., Newman Street, W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 21 (FIRST POST).

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Glinka's 'Russlan and Ludmila.' By M.-D. Calvocoressi	785
Klindworth's Interpretation of 'Leonora' No. 3. By Frederick Dawson (with Portrait)	788
Nerves. By Erik Brewerton	791
The Nature of Harmony.—II. By Matthew Shirlaw	793
Is Broadcasting a Disaster? By Arthur L. Salmon	796
Some Reflections on Pianoforte Instruction. By I. Philipp	797
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	798
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XI. Thomas Tallis. By W. H. Grattan Flood	800
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	801
Occasional Notes	802
Some Mysteries and Queries concerning Muzio Clementi. By Orlando A. Mansfield	807
Programmes. By R. W. S. Mendl	809
Horn Chords: An Acoustical Problem. By Percival R. Kirby	811
Handel's Early Life and Mainwaring. By F. Robinson	814
New Music	820
The Musician's Bookshelf	823
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	825
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	826
Church and Organ Music	827
Royal College of Organists	827
The Prætorius Organ. By E. van der Straeten	827
Letters to the Editor	830
Sharps and Flats	836
The Amateurs' Exchange	836
Royal Academy of Music	836
The Promenade Concerts	837
Oxford Summer Course in Music Teaching	837
Gloucester Festival	838
Palestrina's Quater-Centenary	838
Bartholomeo Albrici. By W. H. Grattan Flood	838
Competition Festival Record	839
What is Chording?	839
The Welsh National Eisteddfod. By Alfred Kalisch	840
Wind Instruments: An Interesting Collection	842
Music in the Provinces	842
Music in Wales	842
Music in Ireland	843
Musical Notes from Abroad	843
The Donaueschingen Festival. By Paul Bechert	844
Obituary	845
Answers to Correspondents	846

MUSIC:

'Helen of Kirkconnel.' Part-Song or Quartet for S.A.T.B. Arr. by C. LEE WILLIAMS	817

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. 'The trees they grow high.' Folk-Song. Arr. for Mixed Voices by E. T. Sweeting.
2. 'Sion, Sing thy Saviour's glory.' Communion Hymn. By Johann Crüger. Arr. by J. S. Bach.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—"Rise, O soul, this happy morning." Cantata No. 180. For four Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra. Edited by John E. West. The English translation by A. H. Fox-Strangways. 1s. 6d.

—— "Sion, sing Thy Saviour's glory." Hymn. The music from "Rise, O soul, this happy morning." (No. 1143, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

—— "The Passion of our Lord according to St. Matthew." Edited by Edward Elgar and Ivor Atkins. Book of Words, with the Music of the Chorales. 1s.

BREWER, A. HERBERT.—"A Sprig of Shamrock." Four Old Irish Airs. For Soprano or Tenor Music adapted and arranged for String Quartet or Pianoforte accompaniment. 3s. 6d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"Ring out, wild bells." Arranged as a Two-part Song by the Composer. (No. 217, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

GRACE, HARVEY.—"The Organ Works of Joseph Rheinberger." With Music Examples. Cloth, gilt. 5s. net.

GUPPY, SEPTIMA ROBINSON.—Two Songs: "Peace," and "In Life's Service." 2s. 6d.

HARWOOD, BASIL.—"Love Incarnate" (Op. 37). A setting of lines by Robert Browning, with a verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria." For Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ. 1s. 6d.

—— "Author of Life Divine." Communion Hymn. 2d.

JONES, J. J.—"Jesu, meek and gentle" (Hymn), and Final Amen. 2d.

NOVELLO'S ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN, No. 9. Twelve Selected Pieces (Wedding Music). 5s. 6d.; Cloth, 7s. 6d.

ROWLEY, ALEC.—"Andante Religioso in $\frac{7}{4}$ time." Arranged for Violoncello Solo, Strings, Organ, and Drums. String parts, 1s. 8d.; Timpani, 4d.; Organ, 8d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 399, contains the following music in both notations.—"The Robin" and "Lady Daffadowndilly." Two Unison Songs by EDGAR L. BAINTON. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
Book 273.	Thirty Songs. FRANZ SCHUBERT	2s.	—
No. 1238.	"Oh, the summer night." Two-part Song. PERCY E. FLETCHER	—	3d.
No. 1401.	"The Swallows." Two-part Song. ETHEL BOYCE	—	3d.

SMITH, B. M. BRYAN.—"Best of all—you." Song. 1s. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2486. "By Thy glorious Death and Passion." Chorus from "At the Foot of the Cross." ANTON DVORÁK 4d.

WILLIAMS, C. LEE.—"Helen of Kirkconnel." Old Scottish Melody, arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 991, The Musical Times.) 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

TAYLOR, JEAN.—Six Spirituals. $1.50 (6s.).

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW

SET TO MUSIC BY

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

EDITED BY

EDWARD ELGAR AND IVOR ATKINS.

BOOK OF WORDS,
with the Music of the Chorales.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

RARE OPPORTUNITY—BARGAIN PRICE. Holt Three-Manual Pedal ORGAN. 33 Stops, Church Organ Console. Seen London. "L. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MARGARET COLEMAN

(SOPRANO).

"MESSIAH."—"To say that Miss Coleman's voice is MAGNIFICENT is brief, but adequate. . . . Her breathing and diction are excellent. She gives every word its full value, singing with a most tender feeling and emotion which found full expression in 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and she achieved a notable and fully deserved success."—Derby Daily Express, January 28, 1925.

For terms, apply, POOL HOUSE, LICHFIELD. Tel.: 42 Lichfield.

JAMES COLEMAN

(THE ORATORIO BASS-BARITONE).

"THE APOSTLES."—"Both Mr. James Coleman (Jesus) and Mr. Norman Allin (Judas) scored a VERITABLE TRIUMPH."—Daily Telegraph, March 31, 1925.

"Mr. James Coleman sang the part of Jesus with ALL THE ARTISTRY of which he is capable, and gave MORE PROOF OF HIS TREMENDOUS ABILITY in the handling of this type of solo work."—Derbyshire Advertiser, April 9, 1925.

"SAMSON."—"Mr. James Coleman is a great favourite, and sang his parts in the manner expected of him. The aria, 'Honour and Arms" was a great triumph, and the audience insisted on a repetition."—Shrewsbury News, February 21, 1925.

"ELIJAH."—"The rôle of the Prophet was in the hands of Mr. James Coleman, who has been described as ENGLAND'S GREATEST 'ELIJAH,' and he lived up to his reputation, and was a host in himself. . . . His singing will LONG BE REMEMBERED."—Crewe Chronicle.

Applications re Concerts, Lectures, Lessons, &c., address,

POOL HOUSE, LICHFIELD. Tel.: 42 Lichfield.

OLIVER ORCHARD

BARITONE.
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
'Cowley Bank," Thetford Road, New Malden, Surrey.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

OXFORD PRELIMINARY ARTS AND RESPONSIONS.

DURHAM MATRICULATION.

Preparation by Correspondence on a thoroughly individual system, ensuring to each Student the closest care and attention.

The following are a few extracts from successful pupils' letters:

"The way you anticipated the form which the questions asked at the examination would take (and in some cases the actual questions themselves) is wonderful."

"This agreeable result is due to your skilful tuition, and to the skill and patience of yourself and staff I owe very much."

"I much appreciated all the papers you set me, and all the interesting notes without which I should most probably have failed."

For terms, testimonials, &c., address:

MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A.,
(Honours Oxon. and London),
14, ELSHAM ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.14.

ALFRED MORRIS, L.Mus. T.C.L. Specialises in Postal Tuition for all Diplomas, Assoc. Board Examinations, &c. Harmony, counterpoint, form, &c. Interesting courses. Model lessons. Moderate terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

WELL-KNOWN CHOIRMASTER who supplies Solo Boys of his own training to Churches all round London, and in the Provinces, is willing to impart his system of training boys' voices to others, for a nominal fee. It is extremely simple, and never fails. Highest personal testimonials from Bishops, Clergy, and eminent Church Musicians, which will be forwarded. Write "Choirmaster," c/o Willings, 119, Moorgate, E.C.2.

ALTO SOLOIST (Male) REQUIRED for important West-End Church. Excellent opportunities. Very good sight-readers only need apply. Full particulars and salary desired to "T. R.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC TEACHING CONNECTION for DISPOSAL. Apply, Clef, Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO ATTACHMENT with Stool, FOR SALE. Radiating, concave. Good condition. £7. J. A. Hunt, 5, Moffatt Road, Purewell, Christchurch, Hants.

FOR SALE.—Musical Times, Nov. 1902 to Sept. 1906 (except Oct. 1903). 15*s.* the lot. Charleton, 5, Cambridge Street, Sale, Cheshire.

COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—SONGS, LYRICS, and MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS WANTED for Publication. We set Lyrics to Music if desired. Send MSS. (words or music) to The Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

TRIUMPH AUTO PIANO (Saffell Mignon) FOR SALE. Nearly New. Apply, Dewhirst, 46, Clarendon Road, Norwich.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,

Or,

In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s*.; Music only, 3*s*.

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Rewritten and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price ... Three Shillings.

Paper Boards, 4*s*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SEND A P.C. NOW FOR THIS FREE BOOKLET

OF THE CELEBRATED

NEGRO SPIRITUALS

BY

H. T. BURLEIGH

Over thirty published—free booklet gives thematic extracts of twelve of them, which you can try over on your piano, and a complete list including those arranged for Vocal Trios and Quartets. (Staff and Sol-fa Notations.)

G. RICORDI & CO.,

271, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

The Largest Music Publishers in the World.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

A GOLDEN HARVEST
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION
THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
H. KNIGHT
THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN
THE MUSIC BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA
THE MUSIC BY
HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA
FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN.
THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY
J. F. WALLER
THE MUSIC BY
G. M. GARRETT.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns. Full Score and Orchestral Parts can be hired.

RUTH
FOR SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
THE WORDS BY
E. OXENFORD
THE MUSIC BY
ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three Shillings; Paper boards, Four Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d. Book of Words, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Full Score and Orchestral parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA
FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS
THE WORDS BY
R. D. BETJEMANN
THE MUSIC BY
JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING
FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS.
WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION
THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
S. WENSLEY
THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Paper boards, Three Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100;
String Parts, price 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 21s. 5d.; Full Score, MS.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA
FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
THE MUSIC BY
C. M. WEBER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 12s.; Wind Parts, 9s. 8d.; Full Score on hire.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST
FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS
THE MUSIC BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Three Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100; or 3d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A HARVEST SONG
FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS
THE WORDS BY
J. BENNETT.
THE MUSIC BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 9s. 9d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS AND CAROLS.

BARNBY, J.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
Harvest-tide thanksgiving, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 2s.
Let all our brethren join in one ... ... 1½d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Lord of the harvest, Thee we hail (Two Versions) each 3d.
O Lord of heaven and earth and sea ... ... 1½d.
Praise, O praise, our God and King ... ... 3d.
Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 3d.
Sower went forth sowing, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... 2d.
BUNNETT, ED.—Sing to the Lord a joyful song ... ... 1½d.
CRAMENT, J. M.—Sowing and reaping (Carol) ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 2s.
DYKES, J. B.—Holy is the seed-time ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
GILBERT, B.—Come, ye thankful people, come ... ... 1½d.
HARVEY, W. C.—We thank Thee Lord for this fair earth (Children's voices) (Staff and Sol-fa Notations) ... ... 1½d.
HERVEY, F. A. J.—Make melody within your hearts (Carol) 2d.
KETÈLBEY, A. W.—God with plenty fills the hours ... ... 4d.
LEE, T.—King and Ruler of Creation ... ... 4d.
LOWE, A.—Holy is the seed-time (Carol) ... ... 2d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
MAUNDER, J. H.—Harvest Hymn of praise, A. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
Joy of Harvest, The. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s
STIRLING, E.—Now Autumn strews on every plain ... ... 2d.
TOZER, F.—Lord of the rich and golden grain ... ... 3d.
Words only, per 100 3s.
TWELVE HYMNS selected from The Hymnary ... ... 1½d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS

SELECTED LIST.

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE. By PERCY E. FLETCHER.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THOMAS ADAMS

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE
Price Fourpence.

J. BARNBY

THE EYES OF ALL WAIT UPON THEE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence

HUGH BLAIR

OH, BRING TO THE LORD
Price Fourpence.

A. HERBERT BREWER

LET THE PEOPLE PRAISE THEE
Price Twopence.

EDWARD BUNNETT

BLESSED BE THOU, LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

O CLAP YOUR HANDS
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

PERCY C. BUCK

GOD BE MERCIFUL UNTO US
For Boys' Voices.
Price Fourpence.

H. A. CHAMBERS

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

EDWARD ELGAR

FEAR NOT, O LAND
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

MYLES B. FOSTER

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED R. GAUL

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. M. GOODHART

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence

CUTHBERT HARRIS

AND GOD SAID
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

ALFRED HOLLINS

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

ALBERT LOWE

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

GEORGE C. MARTIN

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

E. W. NAYLOR

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. VARLEY ROBERTS

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE
Price Fourpence.

BRUCE STEANE

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HERBERT W. WAREING

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

HAROLD E. WATTS

THE GOD OF ABRAHAM PRAISE
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

JOHN E. WEST

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE
Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

W. WOLSTENHOLME

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD
Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS

	No.
*BIDE WITH US	6	Bleib' bei uns
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON	4	Christ lag in Todesbanden
CHRISTIANS GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY	63	Christen, ätzet diesen Tag
COME, REDEEMER OF OUR RACE	61	Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland
FROM DEPTHS OF WOE I CALL ON THEE	38	Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu dir
GIVE THE HUNGRY MAN THY BREAD	39	Brich dem Hungrigen dein Brod
GOD GOETH UP WITH SHOUTING	43	Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen
GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD	68	Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt
*GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST	106	Gottes Zeit ist die allerbeste Zeit
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
†HOW BRIGHTLY SHINES	1	Wie schön leuchtet
IF THOU BUT SUFFEREST GOD TO GUIDE THEE	93	Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten
JESUS, NOW WILL WE PRAISE THEE	41	Jesu, nun sei gepreiset
JESUS SLEEPS, WHAT HOPE REMAINETH?	81	Jesus schläft, was soll ich hoffen?
LET SONGS OF REJOICING BE RAISED	149	Man singet mit Freuden
LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD, THE	79	Gott der Herr ist Sonn' und Schild
†LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, THE	112	Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt
LORD, REBUKE ME NOT (Funeral Ode)	198	Lass, Fürstin (Trauerode)
*MY SPIRIT WAS IN HEAVINESS	21	Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss
O CHRIST, MY ALL IN LIVING	95	Christus der ist mein Leben
O JESU CHRIST, THOU PRINCE OF PEACE	116	Du Friedensfürst, Herr Jesu Christ
*O LIGHT EVERLASTING	34	O ewiges Feuer
O PRAISE THE LORD FOR ALL HIS MERCIES	28	Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende
O TEACH ME, LORD, MY DAYS TO NUMBER	27	Wer weiss, wie nahe mir mein Ende?
PRAISE OUR GOD WHO REIGNS IN HEAVEN	11	Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen
PRAISE THOU THE LORD, JERUSALEM	119	Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn
RISE, O SOUL	180	Schmücke dich
SAGES OF SHEBA, THE	65	Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen
*SLEEPERS, WAKE!	140	Wachet auf
†STRONGHOLD SURE, A	80	Ein' feste Burg
THERE IS NOUGHT OF SOUNDNESS IN ALL MY BODY	25	Es ist nichts Gesundes an meinem Leibe
THOU GUIDE OF ISRAEL	104	Du Hirte Israel, höre
WAILING, CRYING, MOURNING, SIGHING	12	Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen
WATCH YE, PRAY YE	70	Wachet, betet
WHEN WILL GOD RECALL MY SPIRIT?	8	Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?
WHOSO DOTH OFFER THANKS	17	Wer Dank opfert

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

THE SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS

IN TWELVE BOOKS (THREE BOOKS FOR EACH VOICE)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

BACH'S MOTETS

*BE NOT AFRAID	Fürchte dich nicht. 8*d.*
Ditto. (Edited by G. R. SINCLAIR)	1*s.*
*BLESSING, GLORY, AND WISDOM	Lob und Ehre und Weisheit und Dank. 8*d.*
*COME, JESU, COME	Komm, Jesu, komm. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*I WRESTLE AND PRAY (J. C. BACH)	Ich lasse dich nicht. 6*d.*
*JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE	Jesu, meine Freude. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*Ditto. (Welsh Words)	1*s.* 6*d.*
*NOW SHALL THE GRACE	Nun ist das Heil. 8*d.*
*SING YE TO THE LORD	Singet dem Herrn. 1*s.* 6*d.* [1*s.* 6*d.*
SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH US, THE	Der Geist hilft unserer Schwachheit auf

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa, complete. † May be had in Tonic Sol-fa (Choruses only).

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS.

No.
1.	LET THE WORDS OF MY MOUTH	Hugh Blair
2.	GRANT, O LORD	Josiah Booth
3.	LORD, WE PRAY THEE	H. A. Chambers
4.	HIDE NOT THOU THY FACE	Richard Farrant
5.	I WILL GO UNTO THE ALTAR	H. J. Gauntlett
6.	O LORD, INCREASE MY FAITH	Orlando Gibbons
7.	ONE THING HAVE I DESIRED OF THE LORD	G. A. Macfarren
8.	LET MY PRAYER COME UP	Henry Purcell
9.	GOD BE IN MY HEAD	R. Walker Robson
10.	LEAD ME, LORD	S. S. Wesley
11.	HIDE ME UNDER THE SHADOW	John E. West
12.	BLESSED LORD	C. Lee Williams

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC
BY
J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
HARVEST ANTHEMS.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RISE, O SOUL, THIS HAPPY MORNING.

(SCHMÜCKE DICH, O LIEBE SEELE.)

CANTATA

For four Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(CANTATA No. 180.)

Edited by JOHN E. WEST.

English version by A. H. FOX-STRANGWAYS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.
Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

TWO NEW ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

"O HOW PLENTIFUL IS THY GOODNESS" (Harvest Thanksgiving).

"GREAT GOD, WHO, HID FROM MORTAL SIGHT" (General Use).

Price Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Ye Holy Angels Bright

ANTHEM.

THE WORDS BY

R. BAXTER.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR THE 271st FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY

BY

STANLEY MARCHANT.

Price One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

Save Half the Cost of your Music Library by buying from Foyles. Call and inspect the exceptionally wide range of second-hand copies (in good condition) of Standard Text-Books, at about Half Published Prices. Including, amongst others, the Works of MACPHERSON, Stewart. PEARCE.

MATTHAY. OAKEY. PETERSON.
MRS. CURWEN. PARRY. PROUT.

NOVELLO'S PRIMERS AND TEXT-BOOKS.
GROVE'S DICTIONARY of MUSIC and MUSICIANS.
THE MUSICAL EDUCATOR, 5 Vols. 25s.
CURWEN'S PUBLICATIONS.

If unable to call, write, mentioning requirements or interests. Catalogue of Dept. 15 (Music) sent free of charge.

ORCHESTRAL, STRING, VOCAL, ORATORIO, AND PIANOFORTE MUSIC.
Foyles hold a wide range at greatly reduced Prices.

NEW MUSIC AND TEXT-BOOKS.
Foyles supply on the best terms and guarantee quick delivery.

MUSIC AND BOOKS PURCHASED;
BEST PRICES PAID.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-5, CHARING CROSS ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.2.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOCTURNE

FOR VIOLONCELLO (OR VIOLIN) AND PIANOFORTE.

BY

COLIN MACLEOD CAMPBELL.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
Piano Conductor	1	6
String Parts	2	8
Wind Parts, &c.	4	0
Harmonium	0	8

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SUITE

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA (OR QUARTET)

TRANSCRIBED FROM THE CLAVICHORD WORKS OF

DOMENICO SCARLATTI

BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

SCORE.

Price ... Three Shillings.

String Parts, 3s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CHAMBER MUSIC.

A Catalogue of over 70 pages would be loaned to anyone interested in above, or a copy could be purchased outright at cost price of 1/-

Exactly what is offered:

(A) PIANO AND INSTRUMENTAL SONATAS, and works for various combinations from Duos to Octets. The lists incorporate the Classics and important Moderns. Over 1000 different numbers, including many Continental publications now generally unobtainable.

(B) EACH WORK CAREFULLY GRADED as to degree of difficulty, and a readable dissertation for the principal items.

(C) THE EASIEST WORKS KNOWN, to the most advanced Salzburg, Coolidge, and Venice Chamber Music festival items.

(D) EXCEPTIONAL PRICES! Very large purchases often allow me to offer at half those ruling elsewhere.

Finally, the lists have been compiled by one who knows and appreciates the best in this most intimate form of music, and who is always willing to give the benefit of his experience to the first venturer in the Chamber Music domain, as also to the enthusiastic collector of novelties.

From Iceland to New Zealand is a far cry, yet my despatches are known and give pleasure to numerous ensembles throughout the world.

Edward Wm. Organ, Import and Export,

8, MAYFIELD ROAD, ACOCK'S GREEN, Birmingham.

SCOUTS' MARCH SONG

(FOR BOY SCOUTS AND GIRL GUIDES)

BY

MURRI MONCRIEFF.

Opinions of well-known Musical Directors:

"A thoroughly singable March Song for Scouts, with a rousing refrain."—Herman Finck, Drury Lane Theatre.

"A jolly March Song, which should become extremely popular."—Arthur Wood, Daly's Theatre.

"A splendid March Song for young voices, stirring and effective."—J. B. Hastings, Pavilion Theatre.

"An excellent example of a most difficult song form—the Marching Song."—John Ansell, Winter Garden Theatre.

"A jolly good tune for boys—and girls."—Alfred Dove, Coliseum.

Price Twopence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ...	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont"	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"	F. A. G. Ouseley
March	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Marching off to Bed	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute"	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March	Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

Price, Paper Boards, Six Shillings each Series.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.
BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY

FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

FOR SALE.—FULL SCORES.

GOUNOD.—"FAUST."
The rare original French edition (No. 254), half-morocco, with Ballet bound to match £15

HAYDN.—"ORFEO E EURIDICE" (c. 1800).
O.P. Loose sheets in original wrapper; good condition ... £2

RAMEAU.—COMPLETE WORKS.
First 17 bound in 18 handsome vols., half-morocco, with separate parts to Vol. II. (Concerts), in case to match £21

For particulars of these and some other works of interest, apply to T. S. WOTTON, 6, STOCKLEIGH ROAD, ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA, SUSSEX.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

BY W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.
Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.
Publishers:
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

YORK ANTHEM SERIES, ETC.

No.
457.	MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS,			B minor	...T. T. Noble	6d.
822.	Do.	do.	do.	B flat	... T. T. Noble	6d.
836.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	... Alec Rowley	5d.
865.	Do.	do.	do.	D minor	... J. S. Horne	5d.
866.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	Henry Gibson	5d.
880.	Do.	do.	do.	D ...	Edwin J. Crow	6d.

Write complete List.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX
SEA SONGS

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET.

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE
Short Introductory Voluntaries
FOR THE ORGAN.

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"THE CHOIR AND MUSICAL JOURNAL."

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

JOHN BROOK AND THE NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS.
ORGAN RECITALS AND TOURISTS.
ORGANS IN EXETER CATHEDRAL: A GLIMPSE INTO THE PAST.
GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVALS.
THE HISTORY OF THE OLD HUNDREDTH PSALM TUNE (continued).
MUSIC SUPPLEMENT. ANTHEM "O LOVE THE LORD," H A Fricker, Mus. D.

Monthly, Fourpence. Annual Subscription, 5*s.*

"The Choir" Office, 25-35, City Road, London, E.C.1.

THE SHAFTS OF CUPID

SONG.

THE WORDS BY

FRED G. BOWLES.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN THREE KEYS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

To be performed by the British National Opera Company, at Leeds, September 24.

AT THE BOAR'S HEAD

A MUSICAL INTERLUDE IN ONE ACT

THE LIBRETTO TAKEN FROM

SHAKESPEARE'S KING HENRY IV

THE MUSIC, FOUNDED ON OLD ENGLISH MELODIES, BY

GUSTAV HOLST

(Op. 42).

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENT BY VALLY LASKER.

Vocal Score, Price Six Shillings Libretto, One Shilling

SOME PRESS OPINIONS

THE TIMES—April 4, 1925

". . . . The dialogue moves almost at speaking pace; the tunes appear so easily that not one in ten of them would be recognised as a quotation (Holst owns to about forty borrowed tunes) if he had not shown his hand in a printed preface. The orchestration is another point of subtle interest. It is generally inconspicuous, almost always light enough to let the voice come through without effort. It never distracts attention from the play, yet Holst's skill appears in the way he clothes the thinnest harmonic outline with apt colour."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH—April 4, 1925

". . . . The generous use Mr. Holst has made of Old English melodies garnered from the Playford, Chappell, and Cecil Sharp collections. . . . Whatever its constituents this music adds zest and momentum to the comic scenes; it rises to dignity and eloquence in the noble monologue of Prince Henry; it sets in relief every element of the last episode where the love passages of Falstaff and Doll are broken off by war alarms. . . . . The individuality of the composer emerges clear and distinct, binding together firmly the action. It is a personality compounded of great daring and great simplicity; of a modern love for sharp, slick combination of harmony and an innate bias for the song that is the people's heritage. One might almost think of Holst as a master of the Tudor period who during the eras of German hegemony in music has lain in enchanted sleep, and awakened again in the twentieth century to resume his song making with modern tools."

DAILY MAIL—April 4, 1925

". . . . This original and exquisite little score . . . . It was no foolhardiness but a sound instinct that prompted the addition of this music to the richest and wittiest comedy scenes that ever came from pen of man. Mr. Holst's music is woven on material from the Old English country dance book. The small orchestra keeps these slight and blithe tunes chattering or murmuring, and above it the words are fitted in a rare new manner. The fine ingeniousness of it all can be judged from the score."

THE MORNING POST—April 4, 1925

". . . . More than half of the problem which Mr. Holst has set himself has been the mating of a certain text with a certain body of tune without doing violence to either. He has succeeded, and now that the job has been done one sees how inevitable is his solution of a difficult problem, and with what extraordinary skill it has been accomplished. . . . . The real feat of the composer has been the apparent ease with which he has brought words and music together, and has allowed free play to the Shakespearean text, while adding a covering of music as delightful as it is pertinent. . . . . The curtain is Shakespeare's, but it is also Mr. Holst's in an admirably effective page of his score. In his new opera he shows again his sense of theatrical effect, both in the ingenuity with which he has arranged this episode, and in the use he makes of his orchestra."

DAILY NEWS—April 4, 1925

". . . . Mr. Holst's method of composition is decidedly new. He has taken over forty English folk-songs, and used them as the principal element of the score, besides tunes of his own. The folk-songs are developed, combined, and transformed with surprising ingenuity."

THE SUNDAY TIMES—April 5, 1925

". . . . The melody that Mr. Holst has invented for them [the Sonnets], beautifully free in rhythm, and remote in style yet without a suspicion of archaism, seems a natural emanation from them. His technical skill is shown in the masterly combination of this song ['Devouring Time'], later with the 'King Arthur' ballad, in a little ensemble that comes just at the right moment. One is astonished at the general congruity between Shakespeare's words and the traditional tunes."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN—April 4, 1925

". . . . 'At the Boar's Head' is a work of genius, if only for its cleverness and the masterly way in which the words of Shakespeare are made to run in with the old and strongly rhythmical melodies of Shakespeare's own time. It is a work of genius also because it answers to the geniality of Shakespeare. . . . Mr. Holst should in this work have made friends with the man in the street."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONGS
BY ROBERT SCHUMANN
ENGLISH AND GERMAN WORDS.

THIRTY SONGS

Price 4*s*. Cloth, 7*s*.

1. Blondel's song — Blondel's Lied.
2. The walnut tree—Der Nussbaum.
3. Moonlight—Mond Nacht.
4. A holiday on the Rhine—Sonntags am Rhein.
5. The hat of green — Volksliedchen.
6. The joys of home—Ich wand're nicht.
7. Poor Peter—Der arme Peter.
8. A flow'ret thou resemblest—Du bist wie eine Blume.
9. O sunny beam—An den Sonnenschein.
10. A poet's love—Ich grolle nicht.
11. Devotion—Widmung.
12. Wanderer's song — Wanderlied.
13. A spring night — Frühlingsnacht.
14. Since mine eyes beheld him—Seit ich ihn geseh'n.
15. The noblest—Er der Herrlichste.
16. A vision—Ein Traum.
17. One only—Nur Eine!
18. Love—Liebe.
19. In May—Im Mai.
20. The two Grenadiers — Die beiden Grenadiere.
21. Thy lovely face—Dein Angesicht.
22. Beauteous cradle — Schöne Wiege.
23. Emotion—Die Stille.
24. A red, red rose—Rothes Röslein.
25. Deep-treasured in my heart—Intermezzo.
26. A ride in the wood—Waldesgespräch.
27. Evening song—Abendlied.
28. Drinking song—Trinklied.
29. The lotus flower—Die Lotosblume.
30. My cottage—Die Hütte.

SONGS

EDITED, AND IN PART TRANSLATED, BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price, cloth, folio, 16*s*.

Op. 24.

When the morning breaks—Morgens steh' ich auf.
Now hopes and fears—Es treibt mich hin.
Where sunlight thro' branches—Ich wandelte unter den Bäumen.
My darling, oh, list—Lieb' Liebchen, leg's Händchen.
Fair abode of all my sorrows—Schöne Wiege meiner Leiden.
Stay thy oar, thou rugged boatman—Warte, Warte, wilder Schiffmann.
On the Rhine—Berg' und Burgen.
First I felt near broken-hearted—Anfangs wollt ich fast verzagen.
With myrtles and roses—Mit Myrthen und Rosen.

MYRTLES.

Op. 25.

Dedication—Widmung.
The free mind—Freisinn.
The walnut tree—Der Nussbaum.
Some one—Jemand.
To sit alone—Sitz ich allein.
Bump not the flask—Setze mir nicht.
The lotus flower—Die Lotosblume.
Talismans—Talismane.
Suleika's song—Lied der Suleika.
The Highland widow's lament—Die Hochländer Wittwe.
Song of the bride—Lied der Braut.
Chide me not—Lass mich ihm.
My heart 's in the Highlands—Hochländer's Abschied.
Hey baloo—Hochländisches Wiegenlied.
My soul is sad—Mein Herz ist schwer.
Enigma—Räthsel.
Row gently here—Leis' rudern hier.
When thro' the Piazetta—Wenn durch die Piazzetta.
The captain's lady—Hauptmann's Weib.
O how can I be blithe—Weit, weit.
What would'st thou, lonely tear drop?—Was will die einsame Thräne?
No one—Niemand.
Out over the Forth—Im Westen.
Thou'rt like unto a flower—Du bist wie eine Blume.
A message sweet as roses—Aus den östlichen Rosen.
Conclusion—Zum Schluss.

Op. 27.

The passage bird—Sag' an, o lieber Vogel mein.
My love is like the red, red rose—Dem rothen Röslein gleicht mein Lieb.
The Jasmine—Jasminenstrauch.
When thy eye's starry beam—Nur ein lächelnder Blick.

Op. 30.

The rover—Der Knabe mit dem Wunderhorn.
The hidalgo—Der Hidalgo.

MYRTLES.

Op. 25.
Price 2*s*. 6*d*.
(For contents, see above.)

TWELVE SONGS

Op. 35.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Joy in tempest—Lust der Sturmnacht.
"Love, be thou dead?"—"Stirb, Lieb' und Freud'?"
The joy of wandering—Wanderlust.
The first verdure—Erstes Grün.
Longing for the woodland—Sehnsucht nach der Waldgegend.
On the drinking glass of a departed friend—Au das Trinkglas eines verstorbenen Freundes.
Wandering—Wanderung.
Silent love—Stille Liebe.
Questionings—Frage.
Silent tears—Stille Thränen.
Yea, thou art sore and weary—Wer machte Dich so krank?
Remembered sounds—Alte Laute.

TWELVE SONGS
(LIEDERKREIS)

Op. 39.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Homeless—In der Fremde.
Intermezzo—Intermezzo.
The Loreley—Waldesgespräch.
Maiden thoughts—Die Stille.
Moonlight—Mondnacht.
The fair, far land—Schöne Fremd.
In a ruin—Auf eine Brurg.
Far from home—In der Fremde.
Sadness—Wehmuth.
Twilight—Zwielicht.
In the wood—Im Walde.
Night in Spring—Frühlingsnacht.

WOMAN'S LOVE AND LIFE
(FRAUENLIEBE)

Op. 42.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Since I looked upon him—Seit ich ihn gesehen.
He, of all the best—Er der Herrlichste von Allen.
I cannot, dare not believe it—Ich kann's nicht fassen, nicht glauben.
Thou ring upon my finger—Du Ring an meinem Finger.
Help me, ye sisters—Helft mir, ihr Schwestern.
Friend beloved, thou look'st at me—Süsser Freund, du blickest.
Come to my heart—An meinem Herzen, an meiner Brust.
Now hast thou for the first time hurt me sore—Nun hast du mir den ersten Schmerz gethan.

A POET'S LOVE
(DICHTERLIEBE)

Op. 48.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 2*s*. 6*d*.

When May shed loveliness around—Im wunderschönen Monat Mai.
Where'er my tears have fallen—Aus meinen Thränen spriessen.
The rose and the lily—Die Rose, Die Lilie.
Ah, sweet, when in thine eyes I look—Wenn ich in deine Augen seh'.
My soul I will steep with longing—Ich will meine Seele tauchen.
Beside the Rhine's sacred waters—Im Rhein im heiligen Strome.
I am not wroth—Ich grolle nicht.
Sweet violets, did ye but know it—Und wüssten's die Blumen.
Hark! flutes and viols are sounding—Das ist ein Flöten und Geigen.
When on mine ear resoundeth—Hör' ich das Liedchen klingen.
A youth once loved a maiden—Ein Jüngling liebt ein Mädchen.
On radiant summer mornings—Am leuchtenden Sommermorgen.
In sleep my tears were flowing—Ich hab' im Traume geweinet.
At midnight—Allnächtlich im Traume.
From legends quaint and olden—Aus alten Märchen winkt es.
My songs so wild and troubled—Die alten bösen Lieder.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOK, No. 271.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH

DESCANTS

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

AND OTHERS.

CONTENTS.

THE BAY OF BISCAY	EARLY ONE MORNING
A-HUNTING WE WILL GO	O, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE
JOHN PEEL	THE BRITISH GRENADIERS
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT	THE ASH GROVE
SCOTS WHA HAE	GOOD KING WENCESLAS
THE OAK AND THE ASH	THE FIRST NOWELL

PRICE, EIGHTPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EDITION E. R. RICORDI.

THE SUPERIOR EDITION OF THE CLASSICS

This beautiful edition, the most modern and correct obtainable, being thoroughly revised and fingered by MASTER MUSICIANS OF THE PRESENT DAY. Printed on glazed paper from finely engraved plates and issued at specially cheap prices, with the text in English, French, and Italian, it may be rightly claimed as the "SUPERIOR EDITION." When ordering, mention "EDITION RICORDI" and "NUMBER" only.

A STRIKING EXAMPLE.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS

New Edition, edited, fingered, and revised by

ALFREDO CASELLA

(Explanatory Notes in English, French, and Italian), in 3 vols.: I. (1-12); II. (13-23); III. (24-32). Price, with paper covers, each 5*s.* net.

The Sonatas are also published separately, price 2*s. net each.*

The Edition, which is being added to constantly, comprises at present over 500 works for

VOICE	VIOLIN AND PIANO	VIOLONCELLO AND PIANO	VIOLA SOLO	FLUTE
PIANO SOLO	VIOLIN SOLO	VIOLONCELLO SOLO	VIOLIN AND VIOLA	CLARINET
PIANO DUET	TWO VIOLINS	TWO VIOLONCELLOS	STRINGS	OBOE
TWO PIANOS	VIOLIN AND STRINGS	DOUBLE BASS	THEORETICAL	BASSOON
HARP	ETC.	ETC.	ETC.	HORN

and is the most modern and correct obtainable.

SEND FOR LIST

G. RICORDI & CO., 271, Regent Street, Oxford Circus, London, W.1.

The Largest Music Publishers in the World.

NOVELLO'S
PIANOFORTE ALBUMS.

In Numbers, each 1s. 6d., except Nos. 26, 27, and 28; or, Cloth Volumes, each 6s.

VOLUME I.

No. 1.—BACH. Twenty pieces from Petits Préludes, Suites Anglaises. Partita Nos. 1 to 3, &c.
No. 2.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Suites Anglaises, Suites Françaises. Partita Nos. 4 and 5, &c.
No. 3.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Petits Préludes, Concertos, Suites Anglaises, &c.

VOLUME II.

No. 4.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 1 to 7, Sonatas, "Harmonious Blacksmith," &c.
No. 5.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 8 to 12, Gavottes, &c.
No. 6.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 13 to 16, Water Music, &c.

VOLUME III.

No. 7.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Hero's March, Rakoczy March, Bridal March ("Lohengrin"), &c.
No. 8.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Meyerbeer's Coronation March, Cornelius March, Pilgrims' March, &c.
No. 9.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Wedding March, March "Tannhäuser," &c.

VOLUME IV.

No. 10.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Rameau's Gavotte, Zimmermann's Gavotte, Calkin's Minuet, Silas's Bourrée, &c.
No. 11.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Gluck's Gavotte, W. Macfarren's Bourrée, Bach's Bourrée, &c.
No. 12.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including W. Macfarren's 2nd Gavotte, Benedict's Gavotte, Mozart's Minuet, &c.

VOLUME V.

No. 13.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including Marche Hongroise, Scherzo Brillant, &c.
No. 14.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "La Gazelle," "Mazeppa Galop," &c.
No. 15.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "Les Clochettes," "Feu Follet," &c.

No. 16.—SCHWEIZER, OTTO. Eight Scottish Airs (arranged for four hands).

VOLUME VI.

No. 17.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "Murmuring Rivulet," The Pilgrims' Chorus ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 18.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "L'Oisillon," "Le Carillon," "The Evening Star" ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 19.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Ten Pieces, including "Jeu des Ondes," Valse Mélodieuse, Spinning Song, ("Flying Dutchman"), &c.

VOLUME VII.

No. 20.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Five Compositions.
No. 21.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Four Compositions.
No. 22.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Six Compositions.

VOLUME VIII.

No. 23.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.
No. 24.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Eleven Compositions.
No. 25.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.

No. 26.—TOURS, BERTHOLD. Juvenile Album, Eight Characteristic Pieces (Duets), 3s.

VOLUME IX.

Nos. 27 and 28.—MOSCHELES, I. "Domestic Life." Twelve Characteristic Duets, Two Books, each, 3s.

VOLUME X.

No. 29.—KJERULF, HALFDAN, Nine Pieces. Op. 4, Nos. 1 to 3; Op. 12, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 30.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Ten Pieces. Op. 24, Nos. 1 to 4; Op 27, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 28, Nos. 1 to 4.
No. 31.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Op. 28, Nos. 5 and 6; Op. 29; and Twenty Songs arranged.

VOLUME XI.

Nos. 32, 33, and 34. The National Dance Music of Scotland. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Alexander Mackenzie; with additions by his son, A. C. Mackenzie.

VOLUME XII.

No. 35.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Eight Pieces. Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 5; Op. 15, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 36.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Nine Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 6; Op. 23, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 37.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Six Songs. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Giuseppe Buonamici.

No. 38.—ALTSCHUL, RUDOLF. Fifty Hungarian National Songs.

VOLUME XIV.

No. 41.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Twenty-one Pieces. Op. 2, Nos. 1 to 14; Op. 3, Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 6; Op. 6; Op. 15, Nos. 1 and 2.
No. 42—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Seven Pieces. Op. 4. Nos. 1 to 4; Op. 7, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 11.
No. 43.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Ten Pieces. Op. 8; Op. 9, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 10, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 4.

VOLUME XV.

No. 44.—CUI, CÉSAR. Thirteen Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 12; Op. 21, No. 3.
No. 45.—CUI, CÉSAR. Eleven Pieces. Op. 21, No. 4; Op. 22, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 31, No. 2; Op. 39, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 46.—CUI, CÉSAR. Seven Pieces. Op. 22, No. 4; Op. 29, No. 1; Op. 30, No. 1; Op. 35, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 40, Nos. 2 and 4.

VOLUME XVI.

No. 47.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 90.
No. 48.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 142.
No. 49.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Moments Musicals. (Op. 94), and Adagio and Rondo (Op. 145).

VOLUME XVII.

No. 50.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Three Sets of Variations, Andante, and Klavierstück.
No. 51.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Adagio, Allegretto, and March in E major, &c.
No. 52.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Five Klavierstücke and Two Scherzi.

VOLUME XVIII.

No. 53.—HOFMANN, H. "The Trumpeter of Säkkingen" (Op. 52) and Two Valses Caprices (Op. 2).
No. 54.—HOFMANN, H. "Italian Love Tale" (Op. 19) and Five other Pieces.
No. 55.—HOFMANN, H. Fourteen Pieces.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.

No.			No.
1.	Andante	Alfred H. Allen	11.	Allegro. Op. 21	Gustav Merkel
2.	Spring Song	W. H. Bell	12.	Andante. Op. 162	Gustav Merkel
3.	Andante con Moto	G. J. Bennett	13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn	J. T. Pye
4.	Song of Thanksgiving	Josiah Booth	14.	Prelude No. 2	A. Redhead
5.	Church Preludes No. 5	R. E. Bryson	15.	Larghetto and Allegro	J. Varley Roberts
6.	Postlude	H. Elliot Button	16.	Allegretto Pastorale	C. Steggall
7.	Postlude	G. Calkin	17.	Contemplation	John E. West
8.	Prelude	Percy E. Fletcher	18.	Postlude	John E. West
9.	Andante	J. W. Gritton	19.	Moderato Maestoso	Kate Westrop
10.	Allegro Moderato	Kate Loder	20.	Andante Pastorale	W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.			No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso	G. J. Bennett	11.	Andante quasi Allegretto	Gustav Merkel
2.	Church Prelude	R. E. Bryson	12.	Cavatina in G	Ernest Newton
3.	Andante Tranquillo	George Calkin	13.	Epilogue	J. Rheinberger
4.	For Holy Communion	J. Baptiste Calkin	14.	Andante in A	J. Varley Roberts
5.	Postlude	Percy E. Fletcher	15.	Andante in G	C. Steggall
6.	Largo	G. F. Handel	16.	March in G	Henry Smart
7.	Berceuse	Oliver King	17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funèbre")	John E. West
8.	Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2	Kuhlau	18.	Pastoral Melody	John E. West
9.	Allegretto	Kate Loder	19.	Andante	Kate Westrop
10.	Andante in G	G. F. Wesley Martin	20.	Allegretto Grazioso	W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.			No.
1.	Melody	A. Herbert Brewer	11.	Cavatina	Joachim Raff
2.	Maestoso	George Calkin	12.	Monologue No. 5	J. Rheinberger
3.	Ave Maria	Edward T. Chipp	13.	Melody in F	Anton Rubinstein
4.	Interlude	Percy E. Fletcher	14.	Dreaming	R. Schumann
5.	Intermezzo	Alan Gray	15.	The Poet Speaks	R. Schumann
6.	Postlude	Alex. Guilmant	16.	Soft Voluntary	B. Luard-Selby
7.	Sursum Corda	John Ireland	17.	Menuetto	Berthold Tours
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	18.	Aspiration	John E. West
9.	Andante	Gustav Merkel	19.	Sketch in C minor	John E. West
10.	Duettino in G	Ernest Newton	20.	Andante con Moto	W. G. Wood

SET IV.

No.			No.
1.	Romance	W. H. Bell	11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor)	W. Sterndale Bennett	12.	Trio	J. Rheinberger
3.	Canzonetta	César Cui	13.	Short Postlude	B. Luard-Selby
4.	Interlude	Th. Dubois	14.	Andante Maestoso	B. Luard-Selby
5.	Elegy	Edward Elgar	15.	Prelude	Henry Smart
6.	Allegretto	Niels W. Gade	16.	Fughetta	Henry Smart
7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita")	Ch. Gounod	17.	Choral Song	S. S. Wesley
8.	Intermezzo No. 3	Alan Gray	18.	Lamentation	John E. West
9.	Chanson de Joie	R. G. Hailing	19.	Allegretto Pastorale	John E. West
10.	Hymnus	A. C. Mackenzie	20.	Andante	W. G. Wood

SET V.

No.			No.
1.	Chorale Prelude—Erbarm' Dich mein, O Herre Gott	J. S. Bach	10.	Prelude	J. Rheinberger
2.	Allegro Maestoso e Vivace	W. T. Best	11.	Monologue No. 9	J. Rheinberger
3.	Meditation	Hugh Blair	12.	Chanson Orientale	Schumann
4.	Cantilène Religieuse	Th. Dubois	13.	Four Sketches, No. 1	Schumann
5.	Intermezzo No. 1	Alan Gray	14.	Larghetto from Sonata in D	B. Luard-Selby
6.	Then round about the Starry Throne ("Samson")	G. F. Handel	15.	Andante	E. Silas
7.	Lieder Ohne Worte, No. 4	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	16.	Six Short and Easy Pieces, No. 6	Henry Smart
8.	Moderato	Gustav Merkel	17.	Intermezzo founded on an Irish Air	C. V. Stanford
9.	Ave Verum	Mozart	18.	Andante in G	S. S. Wesley
			19.	Lament	John E. West
			20.	Canzona	W. Wolstenholme

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FOUR SHILLINGS EACH SET. CLOTH, SIX SHILLINGS EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings net.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

1.	FIVE-FINGER STUDIES	Part	1
2.*	,, ,, ...	,,	2
3.	SCALES	Part	1
4.	,, ...	,,	2
5.	BROKEN CHORDS	Part	1
6.	,, ,, ...	,,	2
7.	,, ,, ...	,,	3
8.	,, ,, ...	,,	4
9.	,, ,, ...	,,	5
10.	LEFT HAND	Part	1
11.	,, ,, ...	,,	2
12.	,, ,, ...	,,	3
13.	,, ,, ...	,,	4
14.*	ARPEGGIO	Part	1
15.	,, ...	,,	2
16.	,, ...	,,	3
17.	VELOCITY	Part	1
18.	,, ...	,,	2
19.	,, ...	,,	3
20.	,, ...	,,	4
21.	,, ...	,,	5
22.	,, ...	,,	6
23.	,, ...	,,	7
24.	FIGURES IN SEQUENCE	Part	1
25.*	,, ,, ...	,,	2
26.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	Part
27.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	,,	2
28.	SHAKES	Part	1
29.	,, ...	,,	2
30.	,, ...	,,	3
31.	DOUBLE NOTES	Part	1
32.	,, ,, ...	,,	2
33.	,, ,, ...	,,	3
34.	,, ,, ...	,,	4
35.	OCTAVES	Part	1
36.*	,, ...	,,	2
37.	CHORDS	Part	1
38.	,, ...	,,	2
39.*	STACCATO
40.	REPETITION	Part	1
41.*	REPETITION AND TREMOLO	,,	2
42.	,, ,, ...	,,	3
43.*	PART-PLAYING	Part	1
44.	,, ,, ...	,,	2
45.*	ORNAMENTS	Part	1
46.	,, ...	,,	2
47.	ACCOMPANIED MELODY	Part	1
48.	,, ,, ...	,,	2
49.	EXTENSIONS AND SKIPS	Part	1
50.*	,, ,, ...	,,	2
51.	RHYTHM	Part	1
52.*	,, ...	,,	2

53. EXERCISES FOR THE WEAKER FINGERS. By J. A. O'NEILL.

54. WRIST STUDIES (Handgelenksübungen). By ARNOLD KRUG.

55. EXERCISES FOR FACILITATING INDEPENDENCE OF THE FINGERS (Übungen für die Selbständigkeit der Finger). By ARNOLD KRUG.

56. PRELIMINARY STUDIES IN PLAYING POLYPHONIC MUSIC (Vorübungen für das polyphone Spiel. By ARNOLD KRUG.

* These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S
ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN
No. 9.

TWELVE SELECTED PIECES
(WEDDING MUSIC)

CONTENTS.

No.			No.
1.	WEDDING MARCH ...	William Faulkes	8.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
2.	HAPPY PAIR ("Alexander's Feast")	Handel	9.	BRIDAL MARCH AND FINALE ("The Birds" of Aristophanes)	C. Hubert H. Parry
3.	LOVE SONG—LIEBESLIED ...	Henselt	10.	FINALE ("Blest Pair of Sirens")	C. Hubert H. Parry
4.	BENEDICTION NUPTIALE	Alfred Hollins	11.	SERENADE ("Schwanengesang")	Schubert
5.	BRIDAL MARCH	Alfred Hollins	12.	BRIDAL CHORUS ("Lohengrin")	Wagner
6.	MINUET NUPTIALE ...	Edwin H. Lemare
7.	SPRING SONG ("Lieder ohne Worte")	Mendelssohn

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.
CLOTH, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ALEXANDER TCHEREPNIN
CONCERTO IN F MAJOR
PIANO AND ORCHESTRA.

TRANSCRIPTION FOR TWO PIANOS, EDITED AND FINGERED BY
I. PHILIPP.

PRICE ... FIVE SHILLINGS NET.

ORCHESTRAL MATERIAL TO BE HAD ON HIRE.

For some time the musical world has been aware that it possesses in Alexander Tcherepnin a young composer of great promise, and one well worthy of upholding the reputation of his father, Nicolas Tcherepnin, the well-known composer of the Ballets, "Narcisse" and "Le Pavillon d'Armide," and of many delightful piano pieces, including the famous set on the Russian alphabet.

The present Concerto is a fine piece of work in one movement, solidly constructed and abounding in brilliant and effective writing. An accomplished solo pianist will delight in solving its interesting technical problems, and find it an excellent vehicle for the display of his virtuosity, more especially as it presents at the same time a good deal of musical interest and the accompaniment is admirably orchestrated.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Gt. Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London: Printed by NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Tuesday, September 1, 1925.

The Musical Times. EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. September 1, 1925

No. 1424 NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK (SECOND SERIES) Price (4*d.*)

To MISS LUCY BROADWOOD, who noted the Ballad in Hertfordshire from the singing of Mrs. Joiner

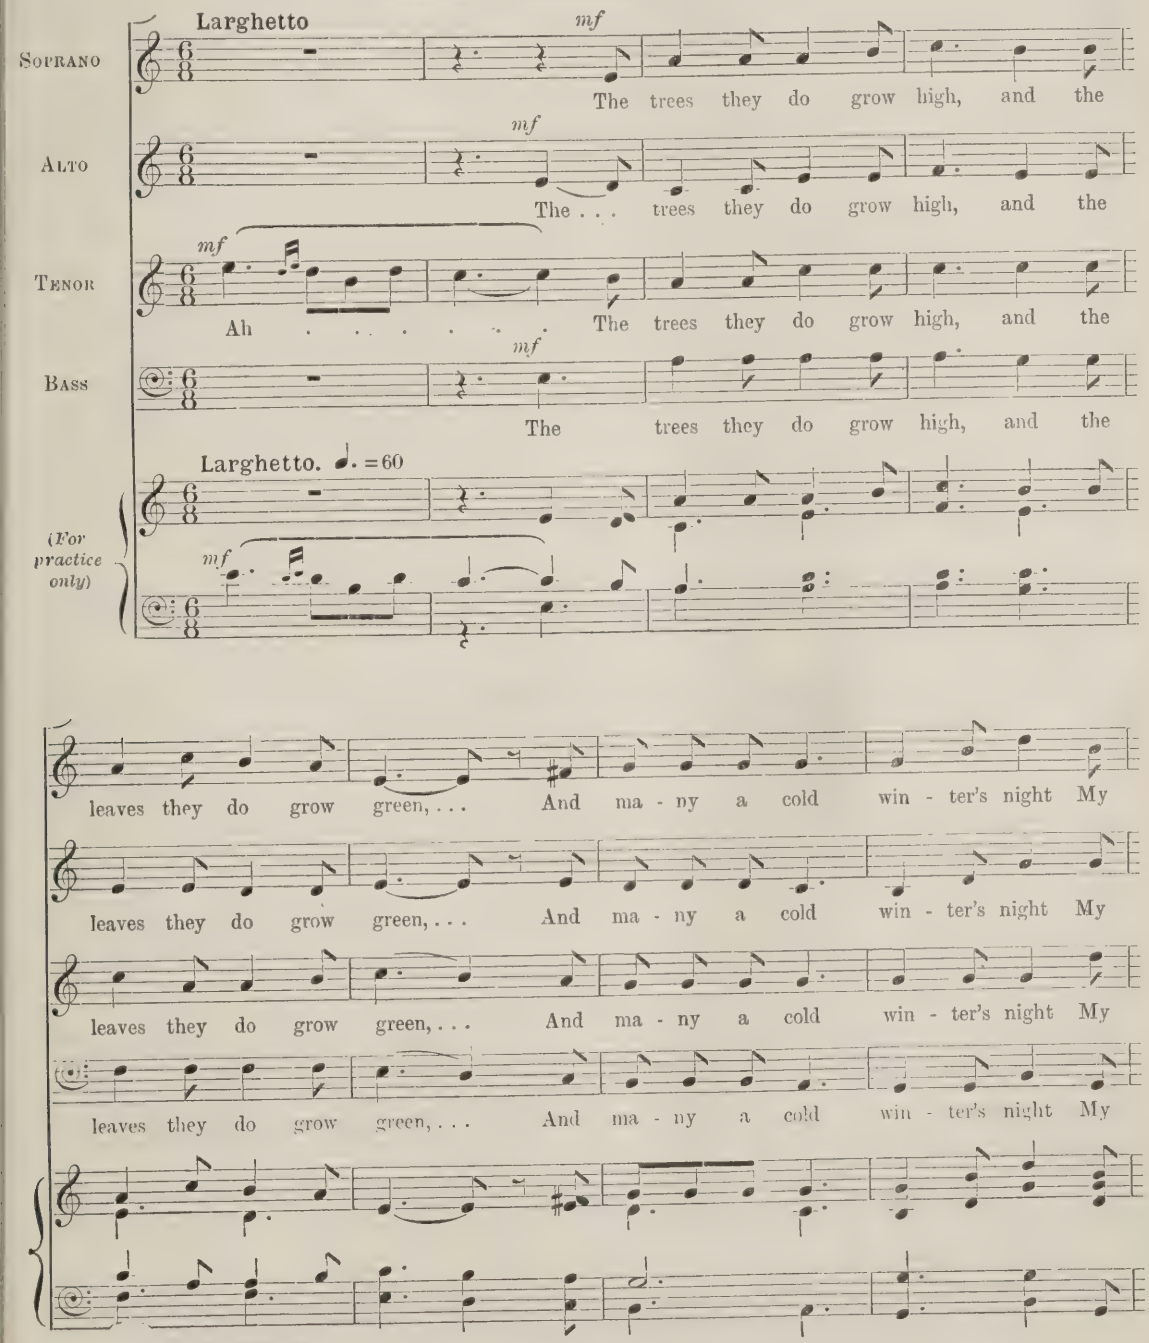
THE TREES THEY DO GROW HIGH

FOLK-SONG ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES

BY

E. T. SWEETING

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



Larghetto
mf
Soprano
The trees they do grow high, and the
Alto
The . . . trees they do grow high, and the
Tenor
Ah . . . . . The trees they do grow high, and the
Bass
The trees they do grow high, and the Larghetto. ♩. =60
(For practice only) leaves they do grow green, . . . And ma - ny a cold win - ter's night My leaves they do grow green, . . . And ma - ny a cold win - ter's night My leaves they do grow green, . . . And ma - ny a cold win - ter's night My leaves they do grow green, . . . And ma - ny a cold win - ter's night My

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

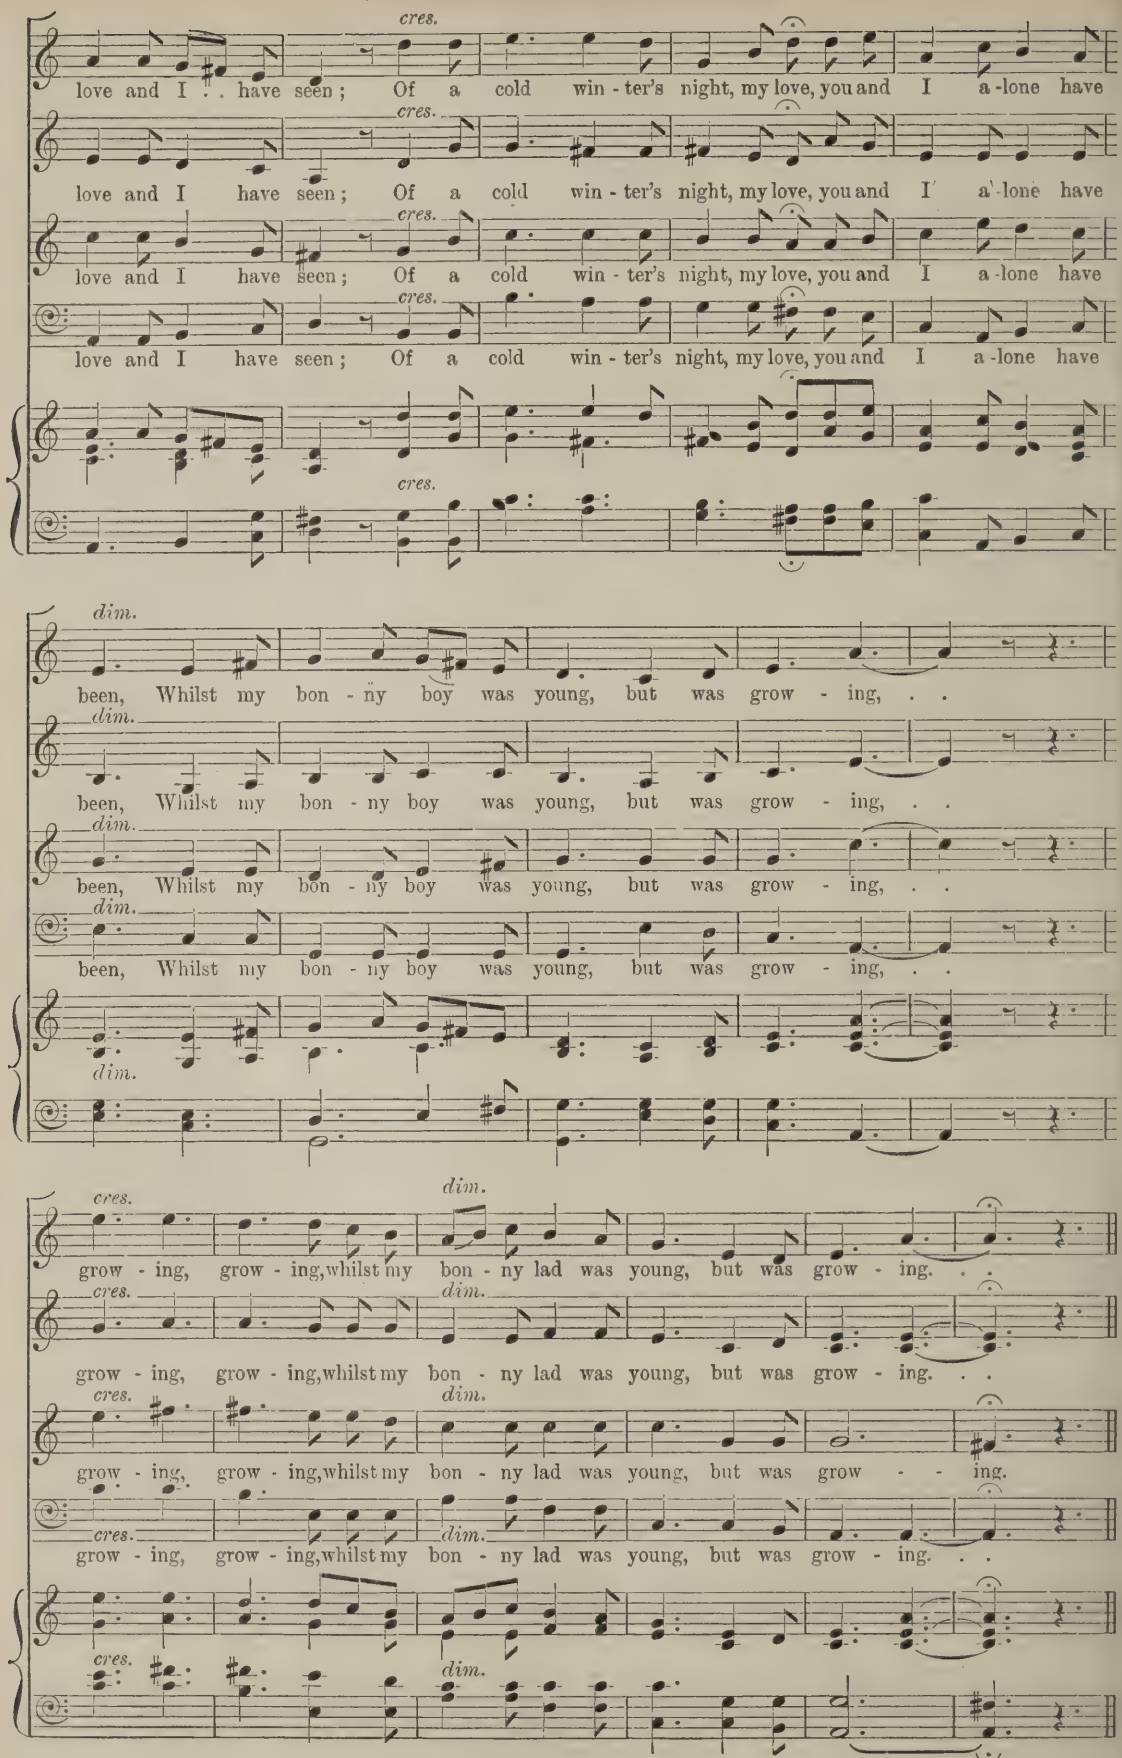
MADE IN ENGLAND.



cres.
love and I . . have seen ; Of a cold win - ter's night, my love, you and I a - lone have love and I have seen ; Of a cold win - ter's night, my love, you and I a - lone have love and I have seen ; Of a cold win - ter's night, my love, you and I a - lone have love and I have seen ; Of a cold win - ter's night, my love, you and I a - lone have dim.
been, Whilst my bon - ny boy was young, but was grow - ing, . .
been, Whilst my bon - ny boy was young, but was grow - ing, . .
been, Whilst my bon - ny boy was young, but was grow - ing, . .
been, Whilst my bon - ny boy was young, but was grow - ing, . .
cres.
dim.
grow - ing, grow - ing, whilst my bon - ny lad was young, but was grow - ing. . .
grow - ing, grow - ing, whilst my bon - ny lad was young, but was grow - ing. . .
grow - ing, grow - ing, whilst my bon - ny lad was young, but was grow - - ing.
grow - ing, grow - ing, whilst my bon - ny lad was young, but was grow - ing. . .

THE TREES THEY DO GROW HIGH

mf

"I'll send your love to col - lege, all for a year or

mf

"I'll . . send your love to col - lege, all for a year or

mf

Ah . . . . . "I'll send your love to col - lege, all for a year or

mf

"I'll send your love to col - lege, all for a year or

mf

two, . . . And then, when the years have passed, He will be wed to two, . . . And then, when the years have passed, He will be wed to two, . . . And then, when the years have passed, He will be wed to two, . . . And then, when the years have passed, He will be wed to cres.

you; I'll buy him white rib - bons, tie them round his bon - ny

cres.

you; I'll . . buy him white rib - bons, tie . . them round his bon - ny

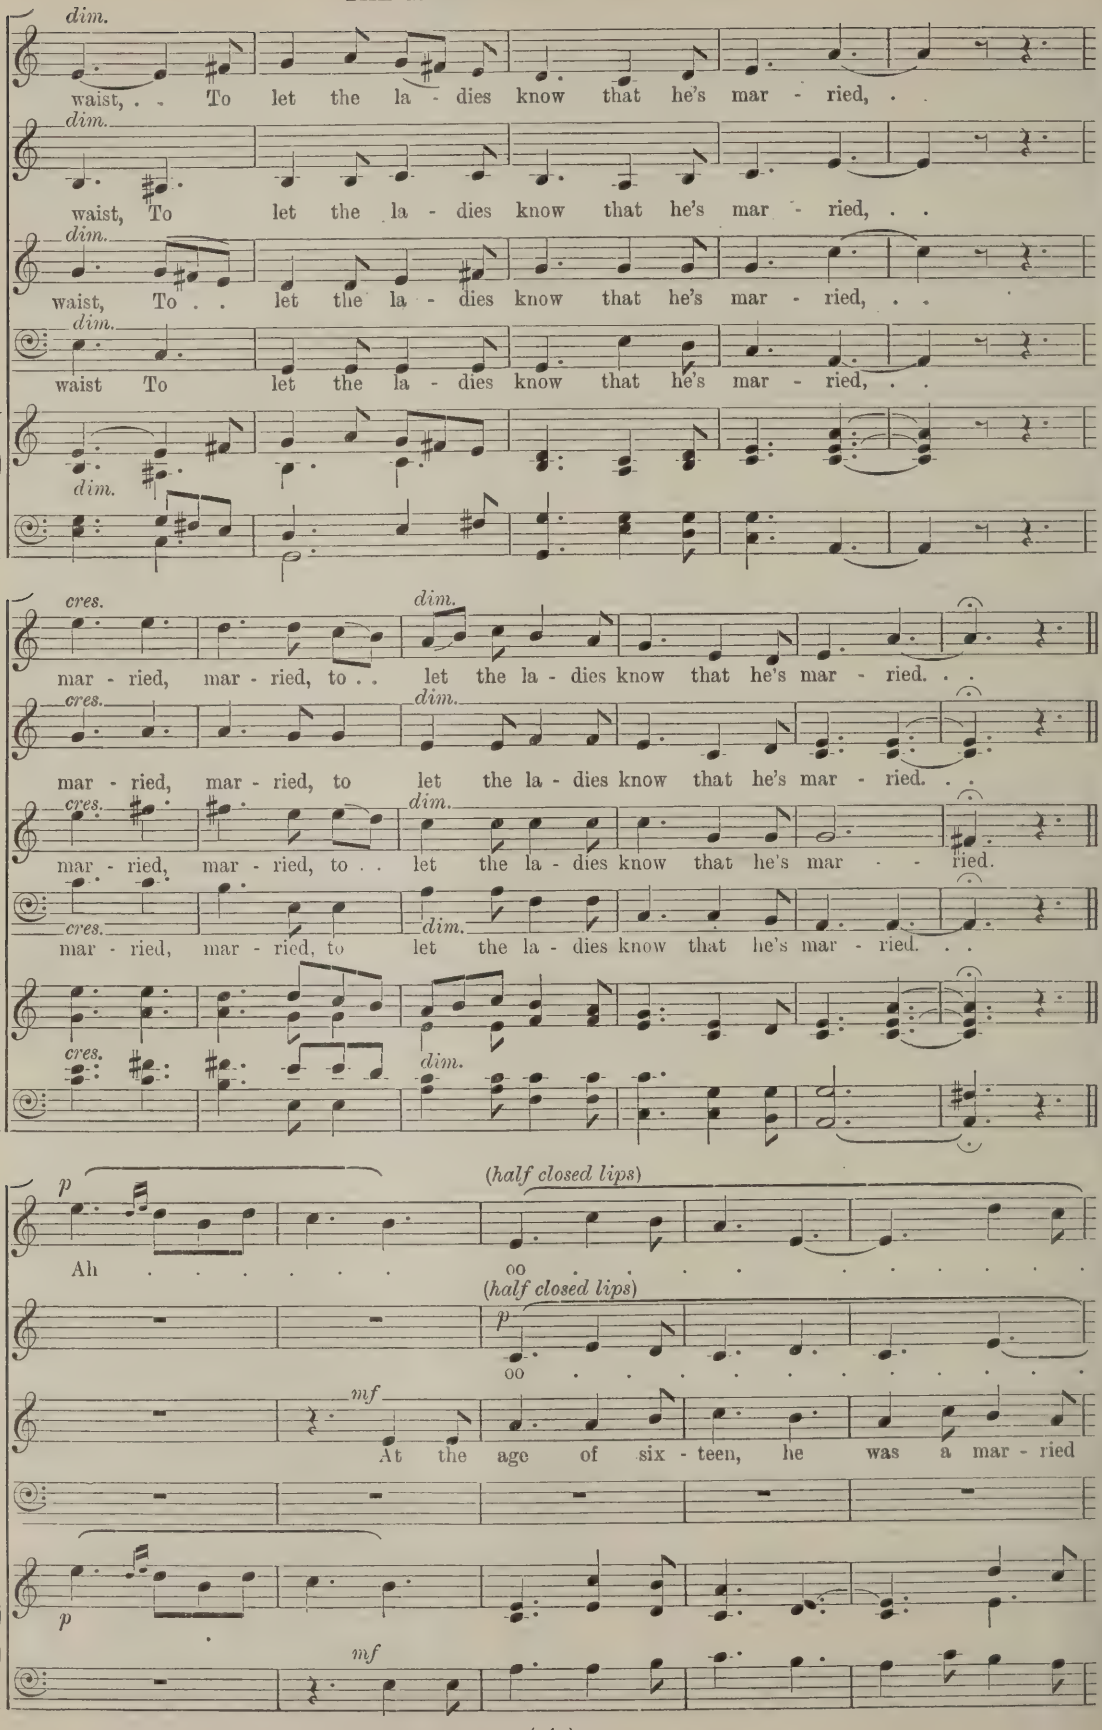
cres.

you; I'll . . buy him white rib - bons, tie them round his bon - ny

cres.

you; I'll buy him white rib - bons, tie them round his bon - ny

cres.



dim.
waist, To let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried,
waist, To let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried,
waist, To let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried, waist To let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried,
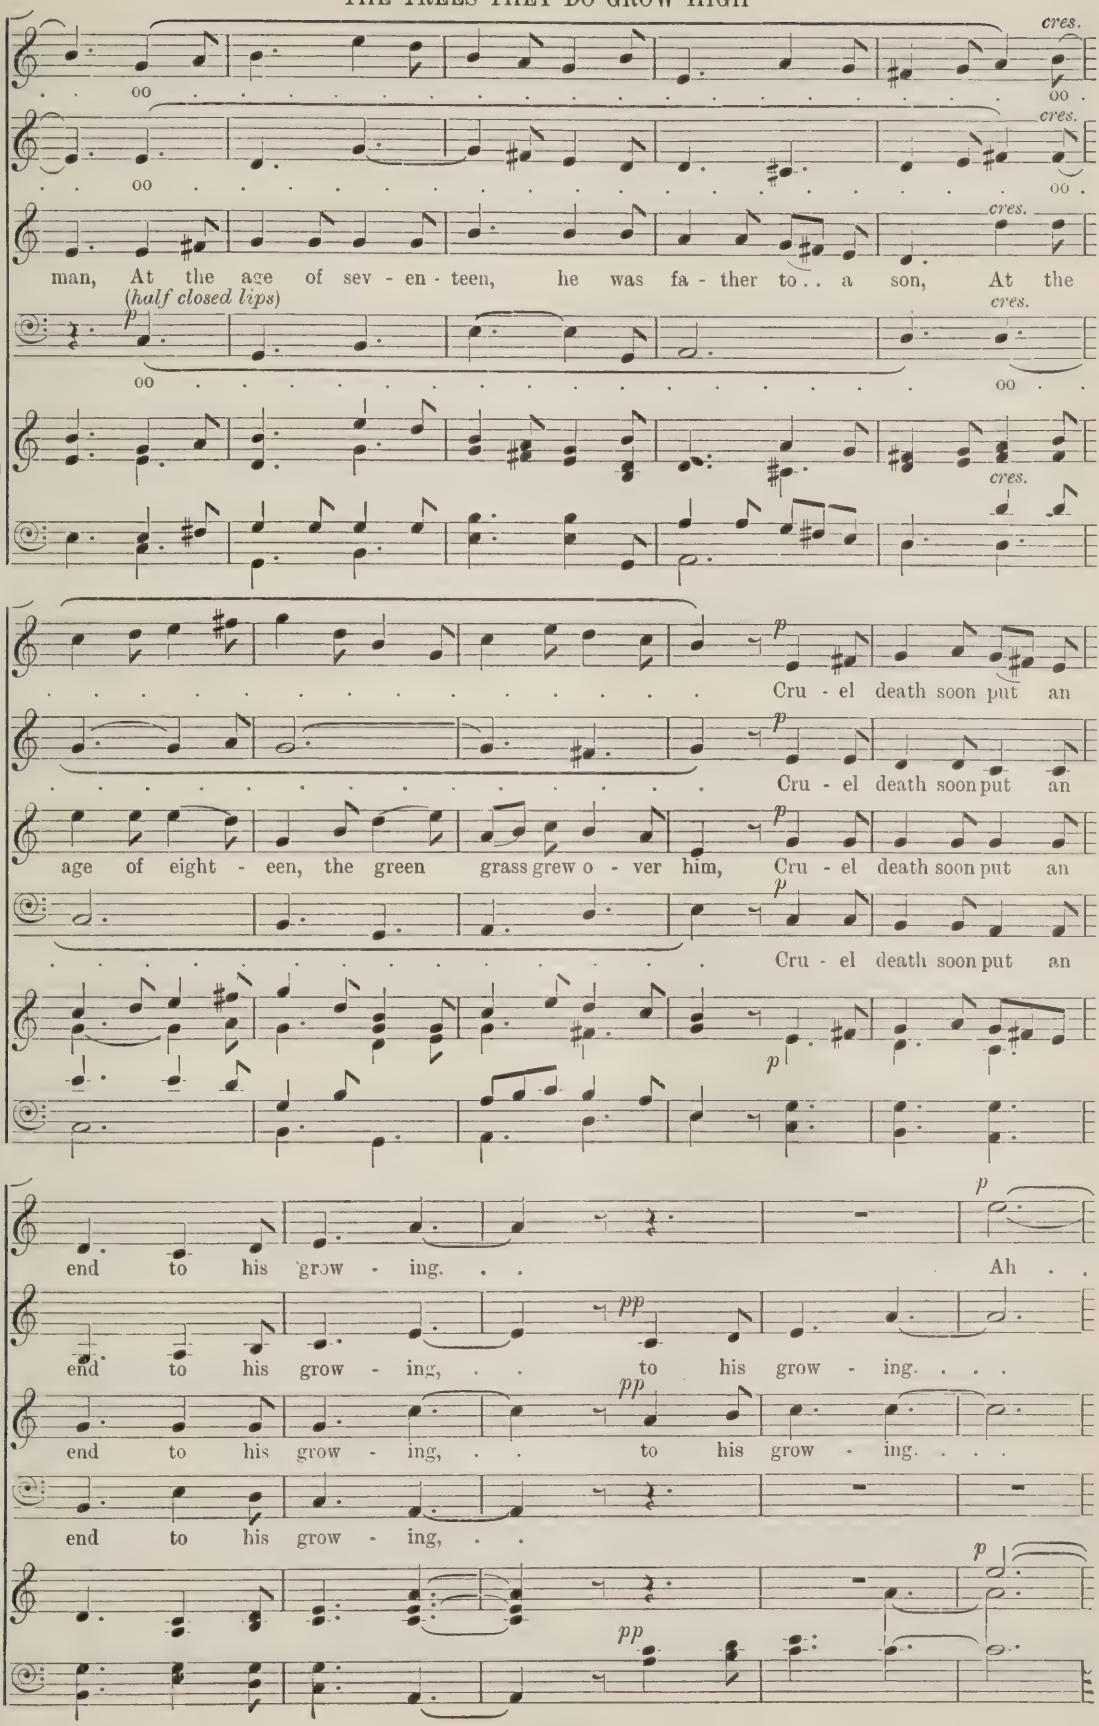
cres.
dim.
mar - ried, mar - ried, to let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried.
mar - ried, mar - ried, to let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried.
mar - ried, mar - ried, to let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried.
mar - ried, mar - ried, to let the la - dies know that he's mar - ried.
p
(half closed lips)
Ah oo
mf
At the age of six - teen, he was a mar - ried



cres.
oo man, At the age of sev - en - teen, he was fa - ther to . . a son, At the (half closed lips)
p
Cru - el death soon put an age of eight - een, the green grass grew o - ver him, Cru - el death soon put an end to his grow - ing. . . Ah . .
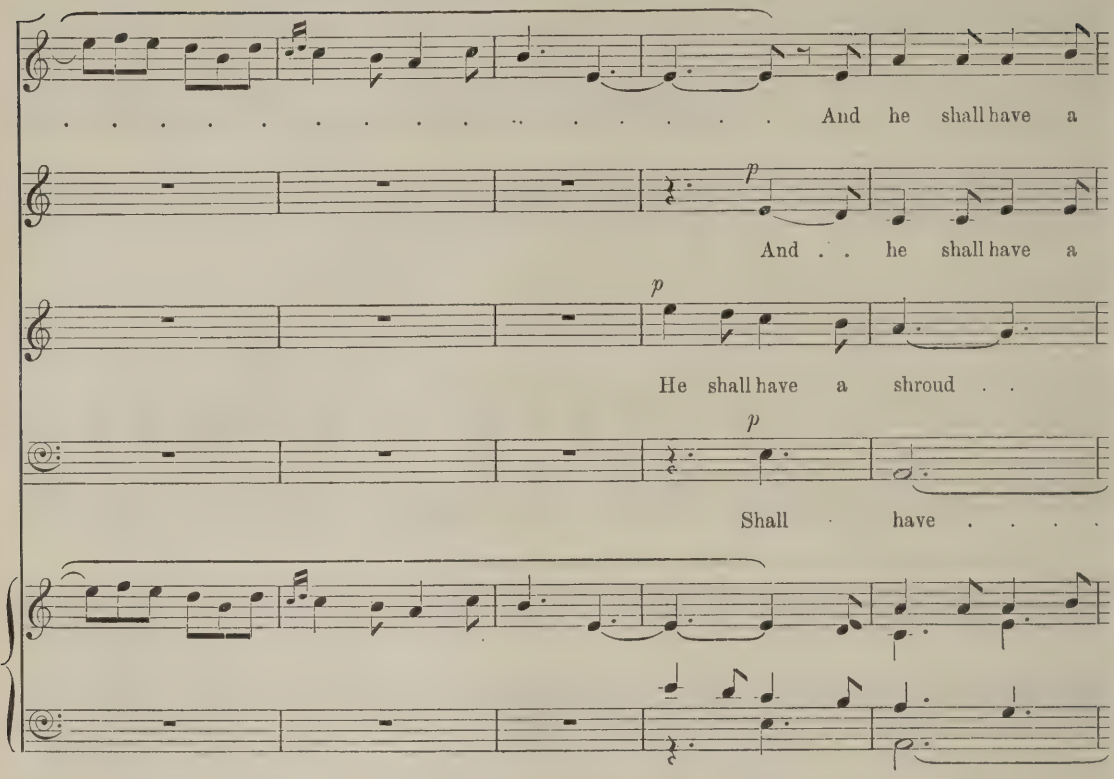
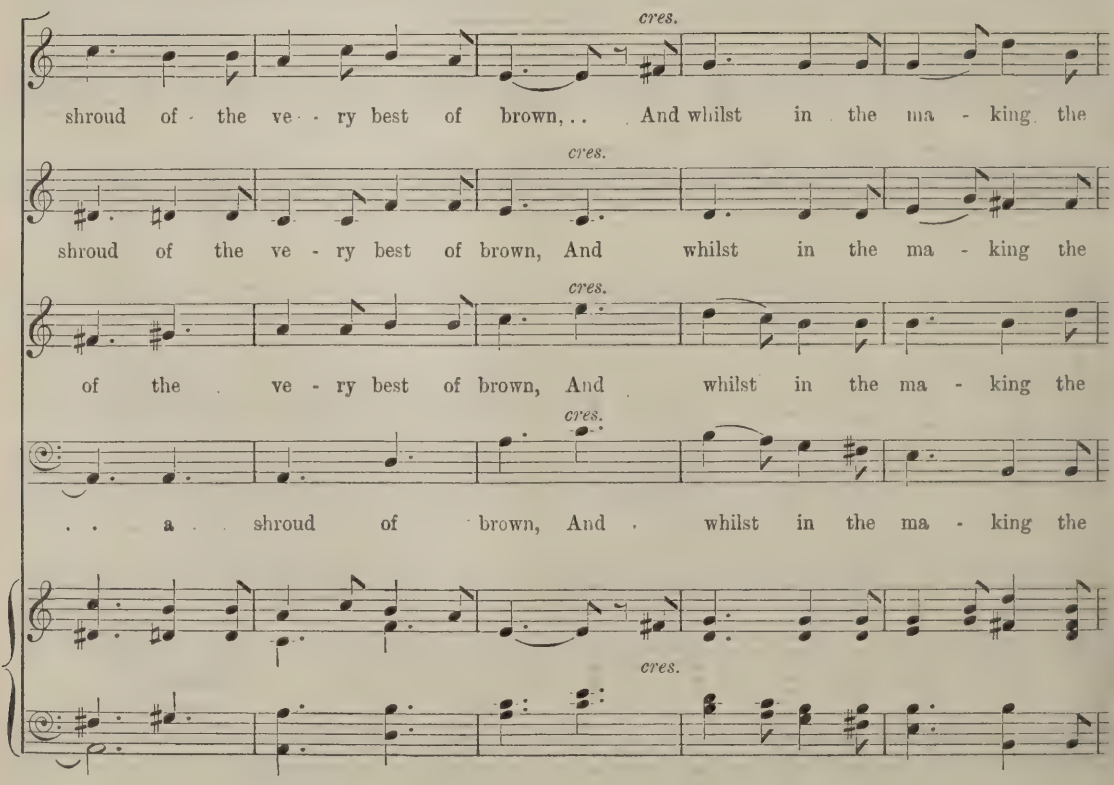
pp end to his grow - ing, . . to his grow - ing. . . .



And he shall have a
p
And . . he shall have a
p
He shall have a shroud . .
p
Shall have . . . .



cres.
shroud of the ve - ry best of brown, . . And whilst in the ma - king the cres.
shroud of the ve - ry best of brown, And whilst in the ma - king the
cres.
of the ve - ry best of brown, And whilst in the ma - king the
cres.
. . a shroud of brown, And . whilst in the ma - king the cres.

mf
p tears they shall run down, Say - ing, "Once I'd a sweet - heart, but now I've nev-er a tears they shall run down, Say - ing, "Once I'd a sweet - heart, but now I've nev-er a tears they shall run down, Say - ing, "Once I'd a sweet - heart, but now I've nev-er a tears they shall run down, Say - ing, "Once . . . I'd a sweet - - - one," So . . fare you well, my own true love, for ev - er, ev - er - one," So fare you well, my own true love, for ev - er, ev - er -
one," So fare you well, my own true love, for ev - er, ev - er - heart," So fare you well, my own true love, for ev - er, ev - er -

f
p rall. al fine
- more, Say - ing, "Once I'd a sweet - heart, but now I nev - er have
- more, Say - ing, "Once . . I'd . . a sweet - heart, but now I nev - er have
- more, Say - ing, "Once I'd . . a sweet - heart, but now I nev - er have
- more, Say - ing, "Once I'd a sweet - heart, but now I nev - er have espressivo

pp
one," So . . fare you well, my own true love, for ev - er, ev - er - more.
one," for ev - er, ev - er - more.
one," for ev - er, ev - er - more.
one," for ev - er, ev - er - more.

The Musical Times. EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. September 1, 1925.

No. 1143 NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK Price (1½*d.*)

SION, SING THY SAVIOUR'S GLORY

COMMUNION HYMN

WORDS BY

A. H. FOX STRANGWAYS

MUSIC FROM THE CANTATA
"RISE, O SOUL, THIS HAPPY MORNING"
(SCHMÜCKE DICH)

BY

J. S. BACH

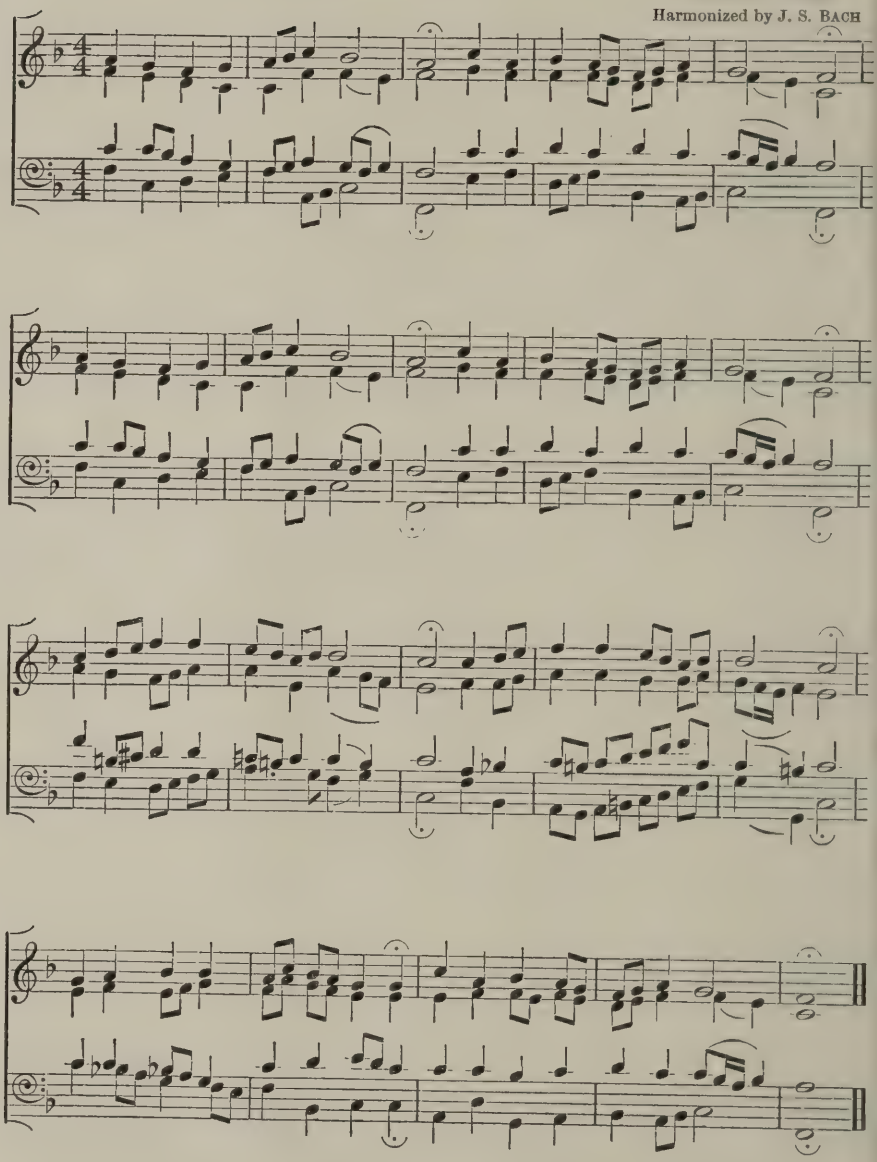
THE MELODY BY JOHANN CRÜGER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.
MADE IN ENGLAND

Sion, sing thy Saviour's glory

COMMUNION HYMN

JOHANN CRÜGER
Harmonized by J. S. BACH



SION, SING THY SAVIOUR'S GLORY

Translation of "Lauda Sion" by A. H. Fox Strangways

1.

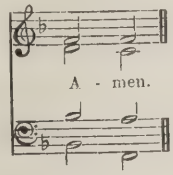
Sion, sing thy Saviour's glory,
Chant aloud His lofty story,
Who in pastures green hath fed thee,
And through desert places led thee.
Yet no homage thou canst render
Will be worthy of His splendour,
Brighter than the eye that gazes,
Clearer than the voice that praises.

2.

Token of the love He bore thee,
Here to-day is set before thee
Bread, the living bread from heaven,
Once to His disciples given;
When of old Himself did take it
On that night, the last, and break it.
So may we, this bread receiving,
Feed on it with true thanksgiving.

3.

Very Bread, sustain and feed us,
In Thy steps, Good Shepherd, lead us;
Thou, our strength and our salvation,
Call us in from every nation.
Lord of pow'r and knowledge, hear us,
At Thy table now be near us,
Make us, of Thy love and pity,
Heirs of Thine eternal city.



SHORT SETTINGS

OF THE OFFICE FOR THE

HOLY COMMUNION

(INCLUDING BENEDICTUS AND AGNUS DEI EXCEPT IN THOSE MARKED *)

FOR

PAROCHIAL AND GENERAL USE.

1. CALKIN, J. B., in C.
2. GARRETT, G. M., in A.
3. STAINER, J., in F.
4. ELVEY, G., in E.
5. TOURS, B., in C.
6. CRUICKSHANK, W. A. C., in E♭.
7. WOODWARD, H. H., in D.
8. HAYNES, B., in E♭.
9. HALL, K., in C.
10. †BRIDGE, J. F., in D.
11. BENNETT, G. J., in B♭.
12. *†LOHR H., in A minor.
13. †FIELD, J. T., in F.
14. †HALL, E. V., in C.
15. †CHAMPNEYS, F., in G.
16. *†WILLIAMS, C. L., in G.
17. †REDHEAD, A., in D.
18. †BLAIR, H., in F.
19. ALSOP, J. R., in E.
20. ILIFFE, F., in C.
21. ‡BLAIR, H., in G (Men's Voices).
22. STAMMERS, I. H., in E♭.
23. TOZER, F., in G (Treble Voices).
24. *ELLIOTT, J. W., in D.
25. †FISHER, A. C., in E♭.
26. FOSTER, M. B., in E♭.
27. NAYLOR, C. L., in D.
28. HALL, E. V., in E♭.
29. MARTIN, G. F. W., in E♭.
30. ROBERTS, J. V., in D.
31. HUGHES, P. E., in E.
32. †LIVETT, G. M., in G.
33. CARPENTER, T. L., in C.
34. MARTIN, G. F. W., in E.
35. MARTIN, G. C., in C.
36. GODFREY, A. E., in E♭.
37. FOSTER, M. B., in C.
38. TOURS, F. E., in E♭.
39. STEGGALL, C., in A.
40. ROBERTS, J. V., in F (Unison).
41. TOZER, F., in F.
42. MOIR, F. L., in D.
43. PARKER, H., in B♭.
44. GODFREY, A. E., in F.
45. STEANE, B., in D.
46. EYRE, A. J., in E♭.
47. EYRE, A. J., in E and C.
48. WILLAN, H., in C and E♭.
49. HIGGS, H. M., in C.
50. PYNE, J. K., in A♭.
51. LEY, H. G., in B♭.
52. IRELAND, J., in C.
53. STOCKS, G., in F.
54. HOYTE, W. S., in D.
55. HALL, G. J., in D♭.
56. MARTIN, G. C., in A.
57. RHODES, H., in A.
58. ARMES, P., in A.
59. †ARMES, P., in B♭ (Unison).
60. ARMES, P., in G.
61. *STAINER, J., in C.
62. STEGGALL, R., in G.
63. MACPHERSON, C., in G.
64. FAULKES, W., in E.
65. WEST, JOHN E., in E♭.
66. O'CONNOR-MORRIS, G., in E♭.

ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

Except the numbers marked thus † which are now published in the Parish Choir Book Series, price One Shilling each; and ‡ Now published in Men's Voice Series, No. 40, price One Shilling.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(July, 1923.)

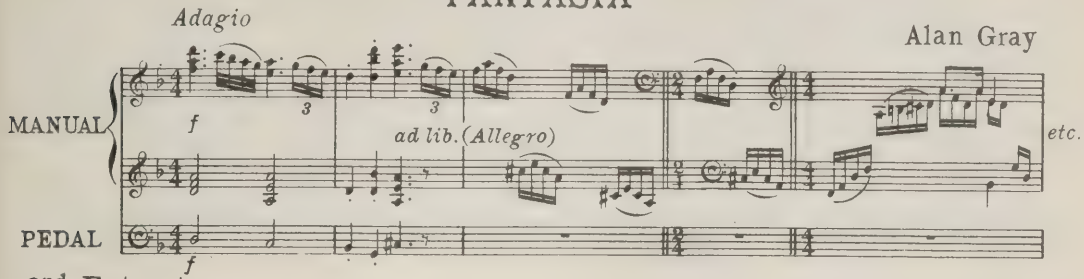
THEMATIC LIST OF ORGAN PIECES

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

DIFFICULT

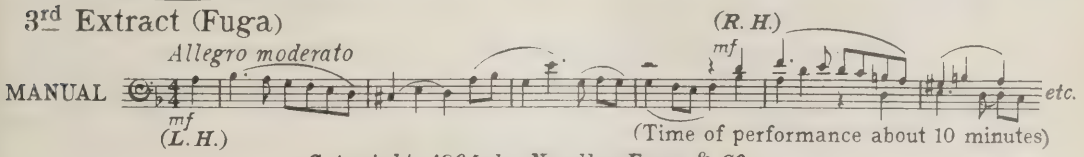
FANTASIA

Alan Gray



2nd Extract

3rd Extract (Fuga)



(Time of performance about 10 minutes)

Copyright, 1894, by Novello, Ewer & Co

Original Compositions for the Organ No 234. Price 2/3

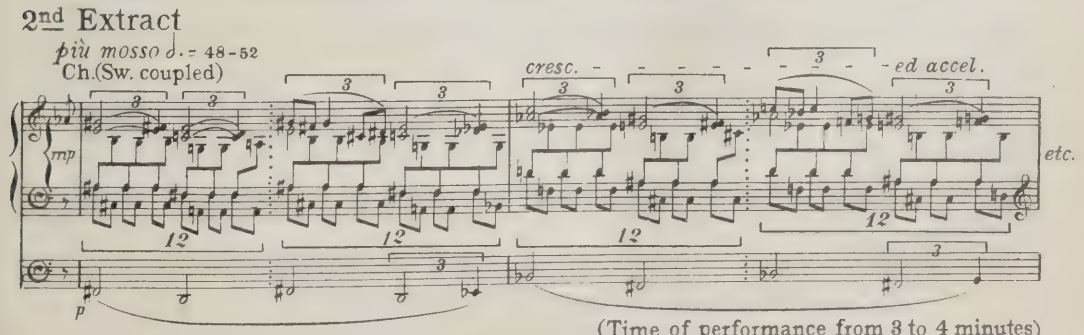
DIFFICULT

TROIS IMPRESSIONS

No. 2. Clair de Lune

S. Karg-Elert

2nd Extract



(Time of performance from 3 to 4 minutes)

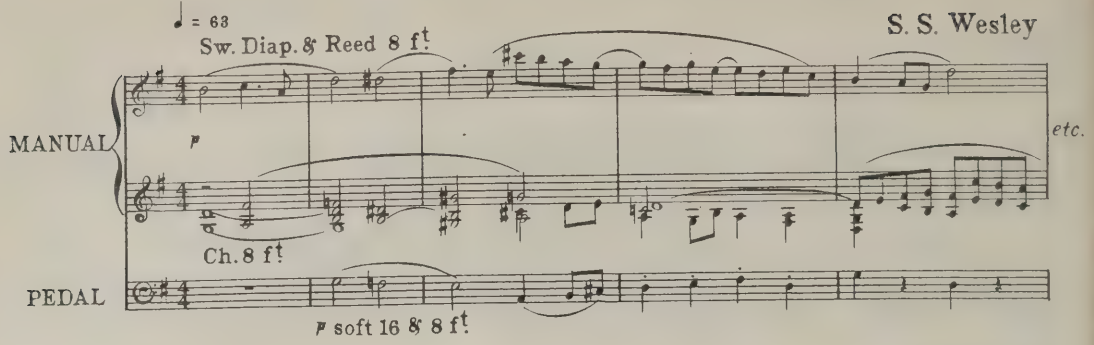
Copyright, 1909, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ No 404. Price 1/6

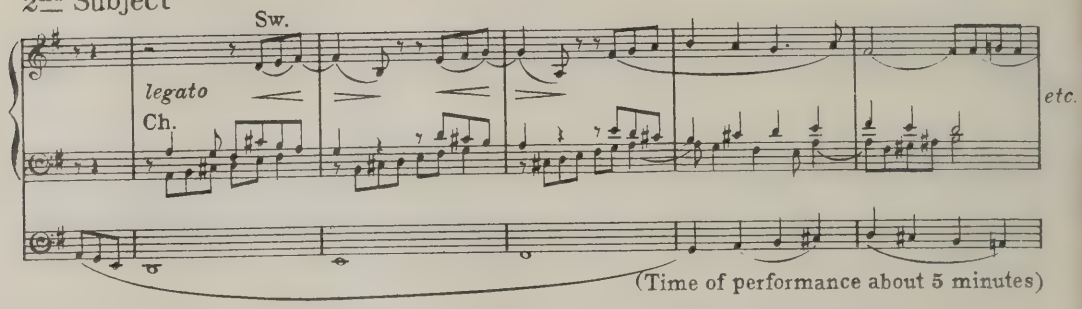
MODERATELY DIFFICULT

ANDANTE CANTABILE

S. S. Wesley



2nd Subject



(Time of performance about 5 minutes)

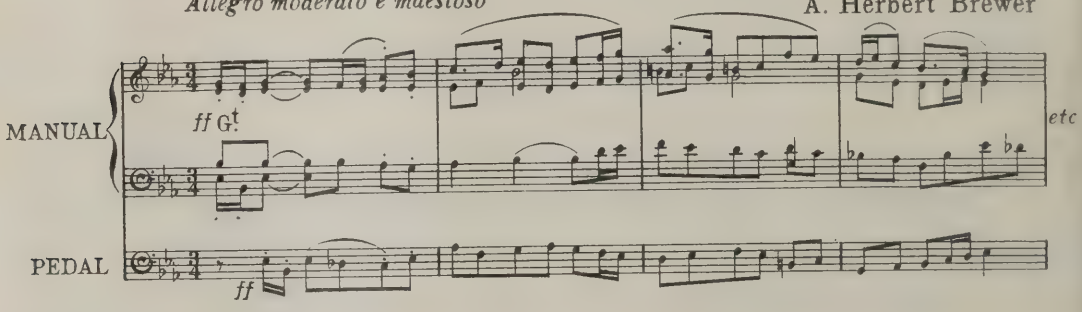
Original Compositions for the Organ by S. S. Wesley No. 8. Price 1/6

MODERATELY DIFFICULT

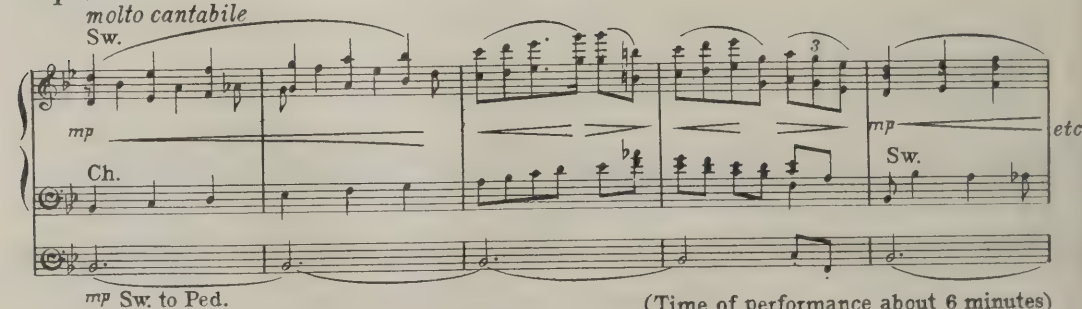
TRIUMPHAL SONG

Allegro moderato e maestoso

A. Herbert Brewer



Episode



(Time of performance about 6 minutes)

Copyright, 1901, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ No. 296. Price 2/3

MODERATELY EASY

TWELVE MINIATURES

Nº 6.

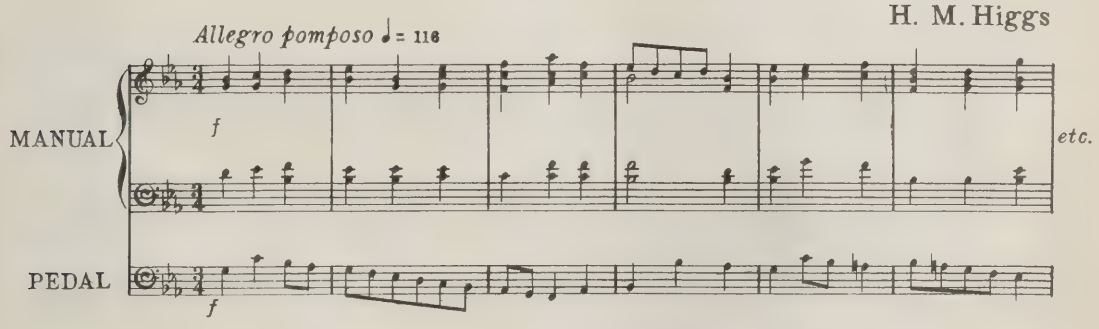
H. M. Higgs

(Time of performance about 2 minutes)

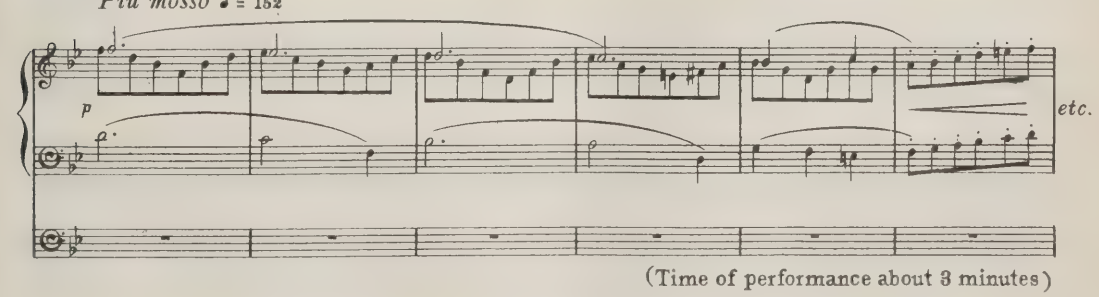
MODERATELY EASY

Nº 7.

H. M. Higgs



Episode



(Time of performance about 3 minutes)

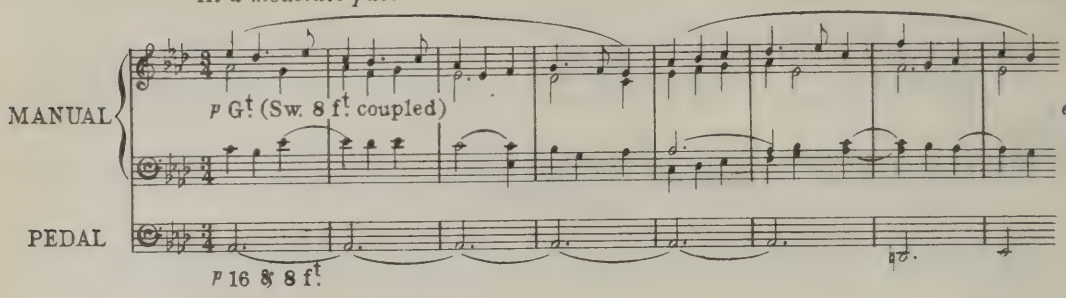
Copyright, 1913, by Novello & Company, Limited

Original Compositions for the Organ (New Series) Nº 27. Price 4/6 the Set

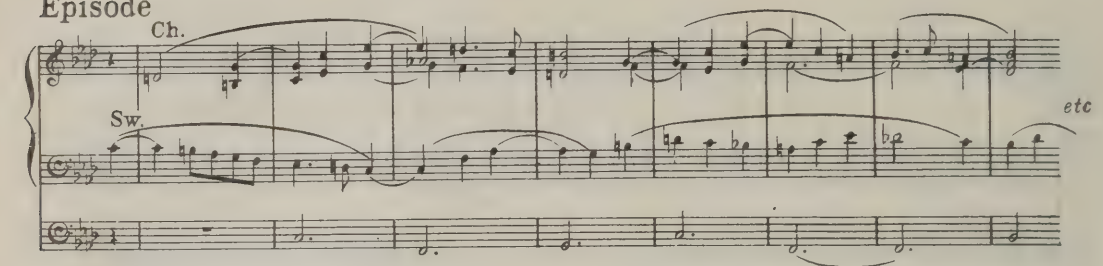
EASY

A MEDITATION

At a moderate pace Edmondstoune Duncan



Episode



(Time of performance about 4 minutes)

Copyright, 1893, by Novello, Ewer & Co.

Original Compositions for the Organ No 199. Price 1/6

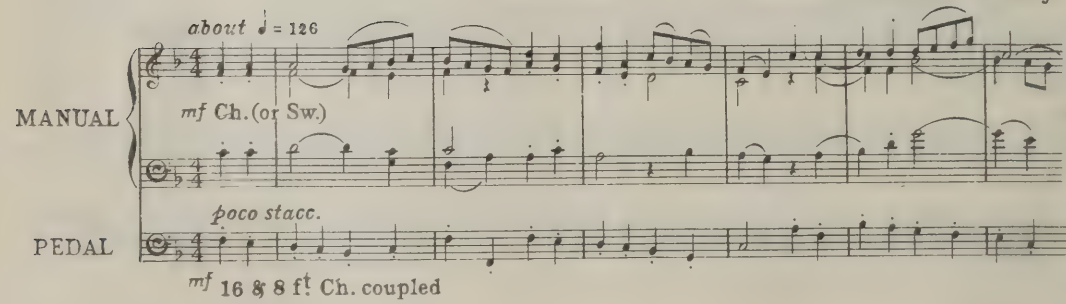
EASY

THREE SHORT PIECES

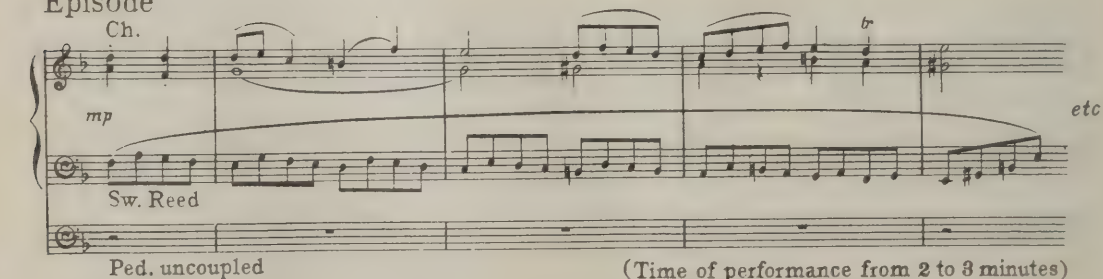
No. 3.

Gavotte

Samuel Wesley



Episode



(Time of performance from 2 to 3 minutes)

Old English Organ Music. Edited by John E. West. No 12. Price (3 pieces) 2/3

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 992.—Vol. 66
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

OCTOBER 1 1925

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1925-1926.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

ELIJAH - - - MENDELSSOHN

Conductor: MR. ALBERT COATES.

MISS FLORENCE AUSTRAL. | MISS EDNA THORNTON.
MR. FRANK WEBSTER. | MR. HORACE STEVENS.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1925, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

MISS DORA LABBETTE.
MR. WALTER HYDE. MR. JOHN GOSS.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - HANDEL

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

MISS FLORA WOODMAN. | MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. BEN DAVIES. | MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

HIAWATHA - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. MORGAN KINGSTON. MR. HAROLD WILLIAMS.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR

Conductor - SIR HAMILTON HARTY.

MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. STEUART WILSON. MR. KENNETH ELLIS.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - HANDEL

Conductor - DR. MALCOLM SARGENT.

MISS STILES-ALLEN. | MISS EDITH FURMEDGE.
MR. WILLIAM BOLAND. | MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

MASS IN B MINOR - - - BACH

Conductor - DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW.

MISS DOROTHY SILK. | MISS MURIEL BRUNSKILL.
MR. ARCHIBALD WINTER. | MR. HERBERT HEYNER.

DOUBLE CHORUS OF 850 VOICES.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Of the SEVEN CONCERTS to be given, Six, including the Carol Concert on December 19, will be comprised in the Subscription Series. Prices of Subscription for these Six Concerts: Stalls, £2 7s., Arena, £1 13s. 6d.: Balcony (Reserved), £1 4s.

Prices for Tickets for each Concert: Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

Subscribers' names will be received and tickets issued at the Booking Office, Royal Albert Hall, and the usual Agents.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by the Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

SPECIAL COURSES for the TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS and also for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS, the latter to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, have been arranged. A Junior Department is now open.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, October 10 and 24, at 3 p.m.

L.R.A.M. CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION. Last day for entry, October 31.

Half-Term begins Monday, November 2 Entrance Examination, on or about Wednesday, October 28.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
HER MAJESY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., MUS. DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in September, December, and April. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,876th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on October 6th, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are :

Aria in F, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, p. 112; Augener, p. 1178; Peters, Vol. 9, No. 8, page 34.)

Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Op. 18, César Franck. No. 3 of Six Pièces d'Orgue. (Durand.)

Bridal March and Finale, "The Birds," C. H. H. Parry. Arranged by W. G. Alcock. Organ Arrangements edited by John E. West. No. 14. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1925.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 10th. for Associateship by December 17th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, Proposal Forms, duly filled up, must be sent in before December 3rd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

FREE LECTURES on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Tuesday, November 3rd, at 3.30 p.m., by SIR WALFORD DAVIES, and at 6.30 by MR. STANLEY ROPER.

The Choir-Training Certificate Examination will begin on November 4th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, October 5th. Application for Membership (or re-election) must be made on a proposal form to be obtained on application. This form must be duly filled up and returned to the Registrar, with the Membership Subscription, not later than Monday, October 5th.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6*d*. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. Claud Biggs.

New Professor of Singing, Miss Marguerite Swale.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE

Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.

Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY,

who will open a NEW CLASS.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President: A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Frequent Students' Concerts. Free Scholarships. Prospectus from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... SIR EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1924-1925.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20): WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11): SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

---

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

MR. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1925: WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, MUS. B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS,

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

SOUTH WESTERN COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCIPAL:
ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L. Mus. T.C.L.
296-298, BALHAM HIGH ROAD, LONDON, S.W.17.

LARGE STAFF OF WELL-KNOWN PROFESSORS.
SPECIALISTS prepare for the Diplomas of F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., and A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, and Organ).
Private and Correspondence Lessons.
MANY RECENT SUCCESSES.
Address, The Secretary. Telephone: Battersea 916.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,

including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2*s*. 6*d*. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SCARBOROUGH
MUSICAL FESTIVAL
Under the Auspices of the
SCARBOROUGH TOWNSMEN'S ASSOCIATION.
MAY 13th, 14th, 15th, 1926,
GRAND HALL, THE SPA.

SOLO, DUET, QUARTET, CHORAL, ORCHESTRAL, SCHOOL CHOIR, ETC., COMPETITIONS.

£250 IN PRIZES.

Particulars may be obtained from
MR. F. CROMACK, Secretary,
Scarborough Townsmen's Association,
Albert Chambers, 9, Aberdeen Walk, Scarborough.

LONDONDERRY FEIS.
MARCH 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th, 1926.
SYLLABUS, 3*d.*
COMPOSERS' COMPETITION (OPEN).

All particulars on application to the Hon. Secretary, Feis Office, Beethoven House, Shipquay Street, Londonderry.

MIDLAND COMPETITION FESTIVAL SOCIETY LTD.

NEXT OPEN FESTIVAL.
APRIL 19th to MAY 1st, 1926.

NEW CLASSES AND TROPHIES.

SYLLABUS NOW READY.

Buy your Copy early. Price 9*d.* On sale at all Music Warehouses, and General Secretary, Queen's College, Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE CITY TEMPLE CHORAL SOCIETY.
CONDUCTOR:
MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O.

Rehearsals, Wednesdays, 8.15 p.m. Vacancies for ALL Voices, especially Tenors and Contraltos. Works being rehearsed: "Elijah," "Messiah," "Christmas Oratorio," "St. Paul," "Dream of Gerontius." No Subscription. Honorary Members (Listening Members), Subscription, 5*s.* the Season, for reserved seat.
Address: Mr. Geo. Tidy, The City Temple, E.C.4.

MISS MARJORIE GULLAN'S VERSE-SPEAKING CHOIR.

A POETRY RECITAL.

Æolian Hall, Bond Street ... ... October 17, 8 p.m.
Tickets: Reserved, 5*s.* 9*d.* and 3*s.* 6*d.*; Unreserved, 2*s.* 4*d.*

TWO DEMONSTRATIONS OF RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS TO SPOKEN POETRY.

Birkbeck College, Fetter Lane ... ... October 16, 5.30 p.m.
Reserved, 3*s.* 6*d.* and 2*s.* 4*d.*; Unreserved, 1*s.* 2*d.*
Godolphin and Latimer School, Hammersmith October 17, 11 a.m.
Seats, Unnumbered, 2*s.* 4*d.* and 1*s.* 2*d.*
Tickets from Miss G. N. Kerby, 11, Tavistock Square, W.C.1, or at doors.

CLAPHAM CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.
GRAFTON SQUARE, OLD TOWN, S.W.4.
MINISTER: THE REV. G. STANLEY RUSSELL, M.A.
SERVICE IN COMMEMORATION
OF ORLANDO GIBBONS
ON
WEDNESDAY, 21ST OCTOBER, 1925, AT 8 P.M.
Director of the Choir: HENRY F. HALL.
At the Organ: REGINALD REDMAN.

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
SESSION 1925-26.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.
Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.
Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, SOUTHAMPTON.
FACULTY OF MUSIC.
Christmas Term will begin on October 5, 1925.
A complete Course of Musical Education is provided for pupils of either sex, professional or amateur, with residence.
A Special Course is provided for Teachers of Music, who wish to become Registered under the Teachers' Registration Council.
Fees: Tuition, 24 guineas per annum.
Residence in Hostel, £72 per annum for men.
£52 per annum for women.

THE ORIGINAL PIANIST'S COURSE OF HARMONY NOW COMPLETING THE THIRD YEAR OF ITS REMARKABLE SUCCESS.

"Technique needs to be guided by a deeper knowledge of the musical material."—Music Teacher, July, 1925.

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS, or Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom without written exercises, by Dr. PERCY RIDEOUT, D. Mus. (Lond.), A.R.C.M.

A Course of Ten Correspondence Lessons, with Test Papers.
Not available in book form.

For further particulars call or write:
THE CHARLES A. GILLETT Pianoforte School,
11, SOUTH MOLTON ST., NEW BOND ST., LONDON, W.1.

LECTURE-RECITALS.

MR. A. M. HENDERSON
(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.),
PIANIST AND LECTURER
(Pupil of Cortôt, Pugno, Scharwenka, and Widor)

Organist to the University of Glasgow. One of His Majesty's Examiners in Music.

MR. A. M. HENDERSON specialises in PIANOFORTE LECTURE-RECITALS with Illustrative Programmes.
Also, assisted by MRS. A. M. HENDERSON, as Singer.
Prospectus and terms on application.
67, ANN STREET, GLASGOW, W.2.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS, THREE GUINEAS.
Personal Lessons if desired.

PRESS EXTRACTS.
Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."
Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint, and deals with it in clear and informant fashion. Cannot fail to be of service to the earnest seeker after improvement in pianoforte playing."
The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."
GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., ETC.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON: AND 32, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

Candidates for these examinations cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard" System, to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

"One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."
"Worth twenty times the fee charged."
"I have passed my examination with honours."
"The technical rules are alone worth the fee."
"I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."
"The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."
"The effect sometimes seems supernatural."
"To me it has been a veritable godsend."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

SPECIAL LANTERN LECTURE
Entitled "From Brain to Keyboard," at Æolian Hall,
By MACDONALD SMITH.
Thursday, October 8th, at 3 p.m. Tickets, 2s. 4d.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in my System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, Bloomsbury Sq., London, W.C.1.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

(Christmas, 1925, and Easter, 1926).

Candidates entering for the first time, and also those who have failed to pass, should communicate with

Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

Dr. Sprankling's system of Individual Postal Tuition enables you to study at home, and obtain a grip of everything essential to success in the shortest possible time.

Complete Postal Preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus.Bac., Mus.Doc., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

Personal Lessons also in Bristol and London.

Dr. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
Address: 46, Clarendon Road,
Telephone: Bristol 3033. Redland, Bristol.

ENLIGHTENED TEACHING.

THE Royal Society occupies such an exalted place among the learned scientific institutions that you will probably hesitate to believe me when I tell you that it once bestowed its attention on the achievements of a musical prodigy. Yet such is the case, and the little musician in question was no other than the eight years old Mozart. What happened was that a certain Mr. Barrington, after witnessing the remarkable powers of the little boy, which included Sight-Reading and Extemporization, as well as playing, was moved to place on record the results of his personal testing of the child's powers, and this took the form of a paper which he communicated to the Royal Society. You can read what he wrote in the sixtieth volume of the "Philosophical Transactions" (1770), some six years after Mozart's visit to London.

What a record for a child! But the wonder is merely that it concerns a child. These and similar powers acquired by patient study and enlightened teaching are being exercised every day by grown up musicians without exciting any particular comment. They are yours to acquire if you have the ambition and tenacity of purpose—but remember that patient study is needed . . . . and above all

ENLIGHTENED TEACHING.

THIS TEACHING

founded on the modern application of WEIGHT TOUCH can be obtained from

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

either through

PERSONAL LESSONS

at 11, South Molton Street, London, W.1

or through the unique

CORRESPONDENCE COURSE,

supervised in every instance by Mr. Gillett, with individual attention to Students' requirements, whereby the drawbacks of a rigid system of postal tuition are successfully avoided.

Write or call for further particulars:

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
Pianoforte School,
11, South Molton Street, New Bond Street,
LONDON, W.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

MATRIC. -	SUCCESSES - 126	Full Courses for January, July, and October, 1926.
1st M.B. - - -	March, 1925. - 50% of the entire PASS LIST.
MUS. BAC. - -	Guarantee Course. For ONE FEE, which can be paid by Instalments, Tuition is given until the Degree is gained.
A. MUS. T.C.L. -	July, 1925. Three Students of the M.C.C. gained the Diploma. Art of Teaching - 88%. Counterpoint - 93%.
L. MUS. T.C.L. -	July, 1925. - M.C.C. Students 100% ENTIRE PASS LIST. Two Candidates PASSED; both M.C.C. Students. One gained 95% Orchestration.
A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.	RECENT SUCCESSES - 31 For ONE FEE, TUITION is given for BOTH DIPLOMAS.
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.	RECENT SUCCESSES - 26 Form and Teaching - 81% Under other tuition - 66%
A.T.C.L. - - -	ART OF TEACHING - 86%

Revision Courses -

Enrolments received until October 15.

A.R.C.O.	January,	1926	...	10 Lessons	30/-
F.R.C.O.	,,	,,	...	10 ,,	£2
L.R.A.M.	December,	1925	...	10 ,,	30/-
A.R.C.M.	,,	,,	...	10 ,,	30/-
1ST M.B.	March,	1926	...	10 ,,	35/-
A. Mus. T.C.L.	December,	1925	...	10 ,,	30/-
Art of Teaching	...	...	...	10 ,,	25/-

GUARANTEE COURSES

London Matric., B.A., School Certificate, University Scholarships, Modern Languages, Mathematics, Science.

FREE

NEW GUIDE
Degrees and Diplomas in
MUSIC.

1. MATRIC.: CHOICE OF SUBJECTS.
2. MUS. BAC.: CHOICE OF UNIVERSITY.
3. COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.
4. DIPLOMAS FOR PIANOFORTE TEACHERS, ETC.

PLEASE STATE EXAMINATIONS INTERESTED IN.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

TURN THE LONG EVENINGS TO GOOD ACCOUNT.

Do not let this WINTER pass without making a determined effort to reach the goal of your ambition—to be memory perfect—The joy of perfect memory—playing lies within the reach of all, without drudgery, without constant repetition. Those difficulties of the past can easily be overcome, those "doubts" and "fears" dispelled for ever.

Take the first step by sending for my free Booklet and realise that memorising is not the "gift" of the favoured few. If you can play from the music you must have the power to play from memory. It is merely the question of a short Correspondence Course in which to be note-perfect without the music, with ease and certainty.

I GUARANTEE TO TEACH YOU

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

If you can play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ at all from the Music, write to-day (stating which instrument you play), for my free Booklet entitled the

MASTER-METHOD OF MEMORY-PLAYING.

COURSES FOR PIANO, VIOLIN, 'CELLO, AND ORGAN.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.
19, BEACON HOUSE,
HEMSTAL ROAD,
LONDON, N.W.6.

RIVARDE SCHOOL OF VIOLIN PLAYING.

TERM COMMENCES SEPTEMBER 28.

The Rivarde School is under the personal supervision of Achille Rivarde, F.R.C.M., and gives all violinists an opportunity of obtaining a complete course of training in the Rivarde Methods of Pure Tone Production and Left-Hand Technique.

ENSEMBLE PLAYING.

Particular attention given to children.

In response to numerous requests, Achille Rivarde has prepared a Correspondence Course on his Methods of Violin Playing.

The Course contains a complete exposition of his scientifically demonstrable methods of Pure Tone Production and Principles of Left-Hand Technique, together with a special series of photographs, illustrating the various Lessons. Price, £8 8s.

Write for full particulars to
MISS AGNES SKALLY, Secretary,
The Rivarde School of Violin Playing,
1A, CHENISTON GARDENS, LONDON, W.8.

MUS. BAC. (FINAL).

September, 1925. A Student of the M.C.C. PASSES at the FIRST ATTEMPT.

1ST MUS. BAC. (September, 1925).

TWO—Both at the FIRST ATTEMPT.

MODERN (CORR.) COLLEGE.

(See page 869.)

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),

undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.

8, THE RIDGWAY, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA" POCKET FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810).

INCREASES STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH.

Editor Musical Times says: "Have no hesitation in recommending."

Improved Model, 2*s.* 6*d.* post free.

"SIMPLEXA," 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

MR. CHARLES TREE

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION," 5s. 2d.
NEW EDITION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 3s. 7d.
The method which the Author has used for 35 years.
Address, Bolton Mansions Hotel, London, S.W.5.

ALBERT GARCIA'S

VOCAL STUDIO.
59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.
TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.
PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices, so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone, from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"
has recently been edited and revised from the original edition by ALBERT GARCIA.
Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland Street, W.1. Price 6s.

"A work that should be of interest to all singers, young or old, is Albert Garcia's newly-published edition of his grandfather's 'Art of Singing.' There are many famous cases of inherited talents in the arts, but not many where the same branch of the profession has been followed by successive generations, and the case of the Garcias is probably unique."—Daily Telegraph.

MARGARET COLEMAN

(SOPRANO).

"MESSIAH."—"To say that Miss Coleman's voice is MAGNIFICENT is brief, but adequate. . . . Her breathing and diction are excellent. She gives every word its full value, singing with a most tender feeling and emotion which found full expression in 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and she achieved a notable and fully deserved success."—Derby Daily Express, January 28, 1925.
For terms, apply, POOL HOUSE, LICHFIELD. Tel.: 42 Lichfield.

JAMES COLEMAN

(THE ORATORIO BASS-BARITONE).

"THE APOSTLES."—"Both Mr. James Coleman (Jesus) and Mr. Norman Allin (Judas) scored a VERITABLE TRIUMPH."—Daily Telegraph, March 31, 1925.

"Mr. James Coleman sang the part of Jesus with ALL THE ARTISTRY of which he is capable, and gave MORE PROOF OF HIS TREMENDOUS ABILITY in the handling of this type of solo work."—Derbyshire Advertiser, April 9, 1925.

"SAMSON."—"Mr. James Coleman is a great favourite, and sang his parts in the manner expected of him. The aria, 'Honour and Arms' was a great triumph, and the audience insisted on a repetition."—Shrewsbury News, February 21, 1925.

"ELIJAH."—"The rôle of the Prophet was in the hands of Mr. James Coleman, who has been described as ENGLAND'S GREATEST 'ELIJAH,' and he lived up to his reputation, and was a host in himself. . . . His singing will LONG BE REMEMBERED."—Crewe Chronicle.

Applications re Concerts, Lectures, Lessons, &c., address,
POOL HOUSE, LICHFIELD. Tel.: 42 Lichfield.

THE GRAFTON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Clapham, S.W.4) has just begun its third Season. There are VACANCIES for all Voices. Rehearsals on Thursdays, at 8 p.m., at Clapham Congregational Church. Mass in B minor (Bach). Annual Subscription, 5s.; Members purchase their own music. Apply, Hon. Musical Director, Henry F. Hall, "Forest End," Forest Hill Road, S.E.23.

ORGAN RECITAL

BY
MR. WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, Mus. Bac., Oxon.,
AT
ST. JOHN'S WOOD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
MARLBOROUGH PLACE, N.W.,
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31ST, AT 5.30 P.M.
Nearest station, Marlborough Road (Met.),
'Buses Nos. 2, 13, 48, 53.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

ELIZABETH MELLOR

(L.R.A.M.). SOPRANO.
CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, OPERA, ETC.
(Royal Albert Hall and Central Hall Concerts, and Provinces).
Pupils received for Voice Production and Singing.
West-End Studio.
Letters, c/o Central Hall, Westminster, London

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W 6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EVELYNE KING

(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.). CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Recitals, At Homes, &c.
Oratorio. BACH a speciality.
All Modern and Standard Works.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
WEST-END STUDIOS.
For Lessons or Vacant Dates, apply,
117, Hampstead Way, Golders Green, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

MISS MARY LINDSAY

L.R.A.M.
(Teacher's Diploma),
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

HAROLD KNOWLTON

TENOR.
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG

TENOR.
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.
93, Kelvin Road, Highbury, N.5.

JAMES CAPERN

BASS-BARITONE.
Cleeve, Parkside Drive, Watford. Telephone: Watford 531.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

ARTHUR LEES

BASS.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
58, Marmion Road, Hove, Sussex.

TOM LLOYD (L.R.A.M.)

BASS-BARITONE.
For BROCHURE, VACANT DATES, ETC., apply
15, Claughton Firs, Oxton, Birkenhead.

OLIVER ORCHARD

BARITONE.
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
'Cowley Bank," Thetford Road, New Malden, Surrey.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.)

BASSO-CANTANTE.
Bookings include "Rebel Maid," "Hiawatha,"
"Songs of the Fleet," &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. Hounslow 1536.

EDMUND TELFER (BARITONE)

For vacant dates, and Experts' criticisms,
Apply, Ibbs & Tillett, 124, Wigmore Street, London, W.1.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

R. ARNOLD GREIR
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
Organist to the Royal Choral Society, London.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
2, Highview Road, West Ealing, W.13. Ealing 201.

DR. REGINALD H. HUNT
D. Mus. (Lond.), F.R.C.O.
CORRESPONDENCE TUITION FOR DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS.
ORGAN LESSONS ON THREE-MANUAL HARRISON & HARRISON (1922).
Address: St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, W.1; and
7, Woodgrange Avenue, N. Finchley, N.12.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).
The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.
Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.
Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.
Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing.
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1, and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
Correspondence Courses in
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
Lyrics Set to Music, Melodies Harmonized, Music Transposed and Copied, Band Parts Written, MSS. Prepared for Publication by a Master Hand, Accompaniments of Distinction Written to Songs.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and Mus.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
Hazeldene, Tewkesbury.

MADAME ALBA, Dramatic Soprano (Italian Bel Canto), receives pupils. Perfect breath control. Clear enunciation. Italian, French, English. Cramer's Studios, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. — Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-25 ... 270 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-25 ... 72 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional Correspondence Courses:
(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.
(Address as above.)

THOMAS CARPENTER, L.R.A.M., L.T.C.L., Specialises in preparation for Associated Board (Pianoforte) Exams. (Primary to Final Grade.) Also short Postal Courses in Rudiments and Harmony. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes: 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., CORRESPONDENCE COACH, R.C.O., R.A.M. Exams., &c. "Zelgart," Harborough Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Special Coaching by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., Etc. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

MR. WALTER HUGHES, Pianist and Composer, resumed lessons, September 20. West-End Studio, or private address, Fairfield, 90, Underhill Road, Dulwich.

DR. A.G. IGGULDEN, Mus.Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus.Doc. passes. Mus. Doc. and Mus.Bac. Exercises, after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925. Both Mus. Doc. passes in 1924. Also several in 1st Mus. Bac. Over 170 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus. Doc., University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto; F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L. R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony, Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

ALFRED MORRIS, L. Mus. T.C.L., Specialises in Postal Tuition for all Diplomas, &c. Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Interesting personal courses. Model workings. Moderate terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.
273 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
169 F.R.C.O. " " "
RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

POSTAL TUITION, R.C.O., T.C.L., R.A.M.—Special Hints for Essay, Aural Tests, Art of Teaching, &c. H. Taylor, A.R.C.O., A.Mus. T.C.L., 10, South Street, Manchester.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

£100 SINGING, PIANO, and £50 ELOCUTION Free Scholarships, Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition, Oct. 24 and 31, and Nov. 7. Entries close, Elocution, Oct. 20; Singing, Oct. 27; Pianoforte, Nov. 3. Adjudicators, Mr. Claude Landi, late Conductor Royal Carl Rosa Opera Co.; Mr. C. E. de M. Leathes, M.A. Cantab., Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; and Mr. Douglas Pack, A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M. (Elocution). Results at Lecture-Recital, "Practical Singing," King George's Hall, Wednesday evening, November 11. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MELBOURNE.
VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA.
ORMOND CHAIR OF MUSIC.
Salary, £1,100.
Term of appointment, Five years.
Duties commence about March, 1926.
Applications are invited for this Chair, and should be lodged with the Agent-General for Victoria, Melbourne Place, Strand, W.C.2 (from whom conditions of appointment may be obtained) not later than October 15.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.—CHORISTERSHIPS. Board, Lodging, Education, and Medical Attendance Free. Candidates must have a good voice and correct ear, and should be between eight and eleven years of age. Education for the Public Schools. Apply to the Rev. The Precentor, The College, Durham.

SOPRANO.—Lady Wanted at once, for St. John's Presbyterian Church, Earl's Court Road.—Good Voice and Reader. 2 Services Sunday, and weekly rehearsal. Salary, £20 per annum. Apply, stating experience, to Dr. J. C. Philip, 5, Queen Anne's Gardens, Bedford Park, W.4.

SOPRANO, good Soloist, formerly leader West-end Church, desires appointment in City Church, about twenty minutes Liverpool Street. Morning Service only preferred. "S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—WANTED an ALTO SINGER (under 30). Stipend, £80 per annum, with small house in due course (£100 for the first year). Apply, stating age, immediately, to Canon Davis, The Liberty, Wells, Somerset.

ST. ALBAN'S, Holborn.—WANTED AT ONCE; Solo Alto (male). Particulars on application to "Organist," c/o Clergy House.

ALTO and BASS REQUIRED at St. Luke's, Sydney Street, Chelsea. £20 and £16 per annum respectively. Apply, "Choirmaster," 14, Gunter Grove, S.W.10.

ALTO.—£15. St. Matthew's, Bayswater. Light duties. A. C. Oram, Choirmaster.

TENORS and BASSES (Voluntary) WANTED for Roman Catholic Choir of St. Mary Magdalen, East Hill, Wandsworth. Good selection of Masses. Apply, Choirmaster, 35, Alma Road, East Hill, Wandsworth, or at the Church on Sunday morning at 10.25 a.m.

SECOND TENOR, Capable Soloist, desires appointment. London. Bethell, 18, Elgin Crescent, Kensington.

TENOR and BASS WANTED for West-end Church. Good readers essential. Light duties. £20. Write, A. G. Gee, St. Andrew's, Gloucester Road, North Harrow.

BASS WANTED for St. Paul's Church, Avenue Road, N.W. Apply, stating salary required, to R. W. Jeffery, St. Paul's Church Vestry, N.W.3.

BASS WANTED for St. Peter's, Bayswater, Salary, £20 per annum. Good reader. Address, Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.13.

WELL-KNOWN CHOIRMASTER who supplies Solo Boys of his own training to Churches all round London, and in the Provinces, is willing to impart his system of training boys' voices to others, for a nominal fee. It is extremely simple, and never fails. Highest personal testimonials from Bishops, Clergy, and eminent Church Musicians, which will be forwarded. Write "Choirmaster," c/o Willings, 119, Moorgate, E.C.2.

HENRY M. BYRON, MANAGING-DIRECTOR, CONCERTS AND RECITALS. Address: 75, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10. Miss A. Evans, Soprano, and J. Trew, Bass, kindly send address.

THE Elmott Amateur Operatic Society requires a Conductor. "G. & S." enthusiast preferred. Write, Hon. Secretary, 23, Glenshiel Road, Eltham, S.E.9.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, WANTED for Congregational Church, Walthamstow. Two-manual organ. Salary, £28. Apply, Rev. Norman Goodall, 1, Merton Road, E.17.

THE ORGANIST of Southwark Cathedral has a VACANCY for an Articled Pupil. Apply to Mr. E. T. Cook, at the Cathedral.

IN Aid of the Funds of the Organists' Benevolent League, Mr. Herbert Hodge will give a RECITAL at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on October 8, at 1.10 p.m.

SPOHR'S "LAST JUDGMENT." Advent, 1925. Mr. Herbert Gresham, F.R.C.O., can accept engagements to accompany above. Address, 1, Fitzwilliam Avenue, Richmond, Surrey.

BRITISH SCREEN MUSIC SOCIETY.
(Under distinguished patronage.)
Those desiring information concerning cinema music as a profession, whether as composers or executants, are invited to apply to the Controller, Film Music Studios, Wallshill Bungalow, Babbacombe Road, Torquay.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

PIANO PEDALS and BENCH, thoroughly modern. Like new, excellent practice. £5. "A. T.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1s. 4d. an hour, or 6s. a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6.

FOR SALE.—STEINWAY GRAND. £130 or best offer. F. L. Bardsley, 149, Rock Avenue, Gillingham, Kent.

FOR SALE.—VIOLONCELLO, £5. VIOLIN BOW (Tubb), £6. Also music of all kinds, half-price. List on application. 77, Spring Bank, Hull.

FOR SALE.—PEDAL PIANO, Norman & Beard, Pneumatic, Concave, Radiating. Pianoforte by Eavestaff. Complete with adjustable stool. Seen by appointment, London. Write for particulars, "D.W.H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

PIANIST (lady), L.R.A.M., L.L.C.M. Open to engagements as accompanist. Apply, "T. C. N.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—PIANOFORTE TEACHING CONNECTION by Pianist, L.R.A.M. "T.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TECHNIQUER FOR SALE, 21s.—R.C.O. Exam. Papers. Calendars. Offers. "Organist," 30, Lithos Road, N.W.3.

HARP FOR SALE (J. A. Stumpff). 8 Pedals. 43 Strings. HARP FOR SALE (Bond, London). Apply, "H.," c/o W. H. Smith & Son, Bookshop, Ashbourne.

TWO SETS BAGPIPES, one black ebony, ivory rings; another, black ebony, silver rings. Good reeds.—FOR SALE. Mrs. Graham, Springfield, Hollingworth, Manchester.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address—11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

"A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING" (12,000 words). 1/8. Illustrated. Invaluable to Members of any Orchestra, Band, Church Choir, or Singing Class. Bandmaster M. T. Cooper, R.M.S.M., 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool, Lancashire.

ORGAN MUSIC FOR SALE.—Classical and Modern. Half published price; send stamp for list. Warner, Mus. Bac., 33, Palmerston Road, Coventry.

MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS, Key F. By Charles Ward. Price 4d., specimen copy, 2½d. Post free. Ward, 79, Town Street, Armley, Leeds.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1926), on the book "William Byrd," 12 Model Essays, with valuable hints. 1st Series of 6 Essays, 4s. 6d.; 2nd Series of 6 Essays, 4s. 6d. Send P.O. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

H.M.V. GRAMOPHONE RECORDS in Album, "Morning Prayer," C. of E. Service, St. George's Chapel, Windsor. Excellent condition. £1. Write, "Organist," 118, Dodworth Road, Barnsley.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy set of 3 Songs—"The Churchyard," "A Dirge," "Winter" (Oakley). Compass, B♮ to D. Price, 2s. the Set. Also "Strengthen, my love, this castle of my heart" (Oakley). Compass, B to D. Price, 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—SONGS, LYRICS, and MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS wanted for Publication. We set Lyrics to Music if desired. Send MSS. (words or music) to the Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Sq., London, W.C.1.

WANTED.—40 copies 4-part Song "Hark to the sigh of low-breathing zephyrs." Rev. C. Bosanquet, St. Stephen's, Saltash, Cornwall.

SECRETARIES!—Complete equipment of Orchestral Society. 20 stands, repértoire over 40 standard works (11 extra parts). New condition, full scores. £15. Would separate. Godin, 3, Ballingdon Road, S.W.11.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC BY MAIL.
EVERYTHING IN MUSIC.—Vocal, Instrumental, Educational, British and Foreign. Largest Stock in London. Murdochs, 23, Princes Street, Oxford Circus; and 463, Oxford Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.

ANNOTATED SERVICE BOOK FOR THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL WEEK.

Exclusive Illustrations. Historical Notes on Church Music. Hymns and Descants. Special Photos of Organists and Composers also of Parish Church and of Choir. Price, including postage, 2s. 3d. Address to H. Bacon Smith, 31, Vernon Road, Leeds.

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. Pitcher, Mus. Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING, STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of Lamond, Pouishnoff, Fryer, Reddie, and many other eminent musicians. The Techniquer is now being extensively used for the treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis, and Hand Paralysis. See The Morning Post of August 7.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars from the Secretary—
Miss F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

FOR SALE.—Fine Library of Male-Voice Music. Apply, A. Thompson, 72, Gordon Road, Ealing, W.5

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests :

SOLO-PLAYING.	SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION.	ACCOMPANIMENT.
ESSAY.	(With list of 75 Solos.)

3*s*. each. 10*s*. 6*d*. the set.

To students who are receiving expert personal tuition, these AIDS afford a distinct economy, in that they render available for the modest sum of 10*s*. 6*d*. information which ordinarily would cost many guineas to obtain.

Moreover, the spoken word is fleeting : apt to be forgotten : whereas the matter is here set forth in a permanent form and is always available for reference.

To students who are unable to receive personal expert guidance, the AIDS are invaluable, and well-nigh indispensable.

TRUTH IN ADVERTISING is maintained in the statement that these AIDS are the finest value in correspondence tuition offered to A.R.C.O. Candidates.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address : 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

"THE CHOIR AND MUSICAL JOURNAL."

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER.

THE SINGERS' COLUMN. DESCANT, WHAT IT IS.
CENTENARY OF OUSELEY : A VISIT TO S. MICHAEL'S, TENBURY.
CONCERNING ORGAN RECITALS.
ANGLO-SAXON MUSICAL RIDDLES.
ON CHOOSING SUITABLE MUSIC.
MUSIC SUPPLEMENT; ANTHEM, "FROM THE RISING OF THE SUN" Ouseley.

Monthly, Fourpence. Annual Subscription, 5*s*.
"The Choir" Office, 25-35, City Road, London, E.C.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ORGAN WORKS
OF RHEINBERGER
BY
HARVEY GRACE.

Cloth Gilt, xii. + 130 pages.

WITH 127 MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Five Shillings net.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS,
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1
'PHONE : MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN, BORD,
SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE.

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists :

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
Phone : MUSEUM 439.

Highly Efficient Organ Blowing.

AN INTERESTING BOOKLET WHICH HAS BEEN WRITTEN BY EXPERTS IS AVAILABLE POST FREE UPON APPLICATION TO

TELEPHONE NORTH 2039.

WATKINS & WATSON,

DISCUS WORKS,
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

RECENT

OXFORD MUSIC

SONGS

NEW SONGS by Bernard Van Dieren, C. W. Orr, E. Kendall Taylor, E. L. Bainton. From 2s. each.

CHORAL

MOTET, JESU, JOY AND TREASURE. J. S. Bach. Edited by W. G. Whittaker. 3s.

VIOLIN AND PIANO

SONATINA. Arthur Benjamin. 6s.

BOOKS

MUSICAL TASTE, AND HOW TO FORM IT. By M.-D. Calvocoressi. 2s. 6d. net.

EVERYBODY'S GUIDE TO BROADCAST MUSIC. By Percy Scholes. 3s. 6d. net.

All above Issues, and other New Publications, may be Inspected at the Oxford University Press, and The Anglo-French Music Co., Ltd., 95, Wimpole St., W.1.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

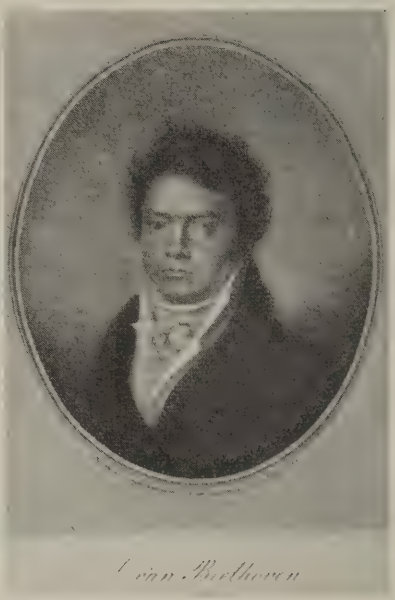
PHILHARMONIA
MINIATURE SCORES

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES:
HANDY POCKET SIZE, 5½-in. × 7½-in.
FLAWLESS, CLEAR ENGRAVING.
PRINTED ON FINEST WHITE PAPER.
BOUND IN PAPER, HALF LINEN OR LEATHER.
EXPLANATORY, HISTORICAL PREFACE.
SYNOPSIS OF THEMATIC FORM.
VALUABLE COPPER-PLATE PORTRAITS.
MEASURES ARE NUMBERED.

Volumes of special interest to Organists and Choirmasters.

No.	CANTATAS AND ORATORIOS.	s.	d.
101	Bach, The Passion of our Lord	8	0
99	,, Magnificat	3	0
111	,, Cantata 50, "Now shall the Grace"	2	0
102	,, Cantata 53, "Strike, thou Hour" ...	1	0
104	,, Cantata 56, "Ich will den Kreuzstab gerne tragen"	1	0
103	,, Cantata 211, "Be silent all" (Coffee Cantata)	2	6
30	Beethoven, Choral Symphony 9	7	0
28	Haydn, The Seasons	14	0
121	,, Mass in B♭	5	0
29	Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Elijah	12	0
46	Mozart, The Impresario	6	0
53	,, Mass 16 (Coronation)	4	0
90	Palestrina, Stabat Mater	1	6
280	Brahms, Song of Destiny	3	6
282	,, Song of the Fates	3	0

	CHAMBER MUSIC.
310	Beethoven, String Quartet, F, Op. 18... ...	1	6
316	,, ,, ,, Op. 59	1	6
319	,, ,, ,, E♭, Op. 74 ...	1	6
323	,, ,, ,, C♯ minor, Op. 131	1	6
338	Haydn, String Quartet, G, Op. 17	1	0
341	,, ,, ,, D, Op. 64	1	0
346	,, ,, ,, D, Op. 76	1	0
327	Mozart, ,, ,, G	1	0
328	,, ,, ,, D minor	1	0
330	,, ,, ,, B♭	1	0
332	,, ,, ,, C	1	0
351	Schubert, ,, ,, A minor, Op. 29 ...	1	6
352	,, ,, ,, D minor	2	0
354	,, String Quintet, C, Op. 163	2	0
301	Schumann, String Quartet, A minor, Op. 41...	1	6



Frontispiece appearing in
VOL. 9. BEETHOVEN, EROICA.

ENDORSEMENTS:

"... in no respect could they be better."
"... comparison with other editions is futile."
"... really splendid in every respect."
"... a supreme accomplishment."
"... achieves its purpose perfectly."
"... deserve wide recognition."
"... a fine achievement."
"... excellent and very clear."
"... they are quite admirable."
"... unsurpassable."
"... really model editions."
"... simply admirable."
"... surely a great success."
"... clear, flawless, and most practical."
"... of untold value."

As any list we can print in an advertisement can only be fragmentary, send for the complete catalogue from which to make your selection. It includes all the well-known symphonic chamber music and works.

SEND FOR COMPLETE DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE.

— SPECIAL OFFER TO MUSICAL TIMES READERS. —

To introduce the Philharmonia Miniature Scores to readers of the Musical Times, we are offering to execute one order at the special discount of 25 . Only one order may be placed at these terms, cash must accompany order, and the coupon must be attached. This offer is available only until November 1. Foreign readers may have until January 1.

HAWKES & SON,
DENMAN STREET, LONDON, W.1.

HAWKES & SON,
LONDON. Enclosed £.....

In accordance with your offer, execute the attached order for "Philharmonia Miniature Scores" at the special discount of 25%.

Name.....

Address.....

To be performed by the British National Opera Company, at Edinburgh, October 20.

AT THE BOAR'S HEAD

A MUSICAL INTERLUDE IN ONE ACT

THE LIBRETTO TAKEN FROM

SHAKESPEARE'S KING HENRY IV

THE MUSIC, FOUNDED ON OLD ENGLISH MELODIES, BY

GUSTAV HOLST

(Op. 42).

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENT BY VALLY LASKER.

Vocal Score, Price Six Shillings Libretto, One Shilling

SOME PRESS OPINIONS

THE TIMES—April 4, 1925

". . . . The dialogue moves almost at speaking pace; the tunes appear so easily that not one in ten of them would be recognised as a quotation (Holst owns to about forty borrowed tunes) if he had not shown his hand in a printed preface. The orchestration is another point of subtle interest. It is generally inconspicuous, almost always light enough to let the voice come through without effort. It never distracts attention from the play, yet Holst's skill appears in the way he clothes the thinnest harmonic outline with apt colour."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH—April 4, 1925

". . . . The generous use Mr. Holst has made of Old English melodies garnered from the Playford, Chappell, and Cecil Sharp collections. . . . Whatever its constituents this music adds zest and momentum to the comic scenes; it rises to dignity and eloquence in the noble monologue of Prince Henry; it sets in relief every element of the last episode where the love passages of Falstaff and Doll are broken off by war alarms. . . . . The individuality of the composer emerges clear and distinct, binding together firmly the action. It is a personality compounded of great daring and great simplicity; of a modern love for sharp, slick combination of harmony and an innate bias for the song that is the people's heritage. One might almost think of Holst as a master of the Tudor period who during the eras of German hegemony in music has lain in enchanted sleep, and awakened again in the twentieth century to resume his song making with modern tools."

DAILY MAIL—April 4, 1925

". . . . This original and exquisite little score . . . . It was no foolhardiness but a sound instinct that prompted the addition of this music to the richest and wittiest comedy scenes that ever came from pen of man. Mr. Holst's music is woven on material from the Old English country dance book. The small orchestra keeps these slight and blithe tunes chattering or murmuring, and above it the words are fitted in a rare new manner. The fine ingeniousness of it all can be judged from the score."

THE MORNING POST—April 4, 1925

". . . . More than half of the problem which Mr. Holst has set himself has been the mating of a certain text with a certain body of tune without doing violence to either. He has succeeded, and now that the job has been done one sees how inevitable is his solution of a difficult problem, and with what extraordinary skill it has been accomplished. . . . . The real feat of the composer has been the apparent ease with which he has brought words and music together, and has allowed free play to the Shakespearean text, while adding a covering of music as delightful as it is pertinent. . . . . The curtain is Shakespeare's, but it is also Mr. Holst's in an admirably effective page of his score. In his new opera he shows again his sense of theatrical effect, both in the ingenuity with which he has arranged this episode, and in the use he makes of his orchestra."

DAILY NEWS—April 4, 1925

". . . . Mr. Holst's method of composition is decidedly new. He has taken over forty English folk-songs, and used them as the principal element of the score, besides tunes of his own. The folk-songs are developed, combined, and transformed with surprising ingenuity."

THE SUNDAY TIMES—April 5, 1925

". . . . The melody that Mr. Holst has invented for them [the Sonnets], beautifully free in rhythm, and remote in style yet without a suspicion of archaism, seems a natural emanation from them. His technical skill is shown in the masterly combination of this song ['Devouring Time'], later with the 'King Arthur' ballad, in a little ensemble that comes just at the right moment. One is astonished at the general congruity between Shakespeare's words and the traditional tunes."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN—April 4, 1925

". . . . 'At the Boar's Head' is a work of genius, if only for its cleverness and the masterly way in which the words of Shakespeare are made to run in with the old and strongly rhythmical melodies of Shakespeare's own time. It is a work of genius also because it answers to the geniality of Shakespeare. . . . Mr. Holst should in this work have made friends with the man in the street."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

October 7th and 21st, at 3 p.m. Students' Concerts.

October 14th, at 3 p.m. Vocal Recital by Students in Mr. Ivor Warren's Class.

October 28th, at 3 p.m. Pianoforte Recital by Students in Miss Medd-Hall's Class.

Admission is free to these Concerts.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

The Clergy Voice-Training Class meets on Mondays, and is conducted by DR. GEORGE OLDROYD.

A special Class for Scoring for Brass and Military Bands, and the Theatre Orchestra, is conducted by Mr. HENRY GEEHL.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

A NEW ELGAR PART-SONG.

THE PRINCE OF SLEEP

PART-SONG FOR MIXED VOICES.

(Words by WALTER DE LA MARE.)

Price Sixpence.

This beautiful Part-Song by Sir Edward Elgar is in the

ELKIN CHORAL SERIES

(General Editor: DR. JOHN BORLAND).

This Series includes:

PART-SONGS by
ELGAR, MACDOWELL, CYRIL SCOTT, EDGAR BAINTON, and CHARLES WATERS.

UNISON SONGS by
GRANVILLE BANTOCK, ERNEST AUSTIN, ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH, and CHARLES WATERS.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

NEW EDITION.—JUST PUBLISHED.

CHURCH CHOIRS AND HOW TO TEACH THEM

With full explanations for breathing, voice production, and the correct rendering of the chants, hymn-tunes, and other parts of the choral services of the church, together with hints for training mixed choirs, and useful exercises for the cultivation of the voice, and for the training of choirs in general.

By ARTHUR W. MARCHANT,
Mus. D. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE NET.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.
MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, MUS. DOC.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

OCTOBER 1 1925

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 944.)

A POSTSCRIPT TO 'A MUSICAL CRITIC'S HOLIDAY'

BY ERNEST NEWMAN

I am sorry to inflict on the British music-lover any more chatter about my 'Musical Critic's Holiday,' but as Mr. Edwin Evans's article in the August number of the Musical Times calls for a reply, if only by way of correction of its errors of fact, perhaps I may be allowed to make, once for all, a personal statement with regard to that much-discussed book. But to have been under the necessity of making such a statement at all is one of those things I shall never understand till my dying day.

No book could have been more carefully and competently discussed by the reviewers. Few books can have been so kindly received on the whole. And none, I think, can ever have been so completely misunderstood from cover to cover. The reviewers have been misled both by the title and by the form of the book. They have taken the title with a literalness that has astonished and amused me. They have assumed that I am the critic referred to in it, and mine the holiday. In a way I do not regret this little misunderstanding; it has enabled my colleagues to make, with almost unbroken unanimity, a very original joke about a busman's holiday. Personal friends have even gone further. They have asked me whether the holiday was last year or the year before, where I had spent it, the name of the bay and the hill of which I speak in the book, and the name of the friend who was kind enough to place his house with its fine musical library at my service. I am sorry to nip a really promising romantic legend in the bud, but really there is and was nothing in nature corresponding to the friend, the house, the library, the hill, the bay, or the holiday.

Why then, it may be asked by the reader who has so little really useful work to do in the world that he has time to be interested in the trifling subject and to ask the question, Why such a title at all? Well, the title grew out of the form, and the form grew out of the idea; and it is through their almost uniform failure to perceive the idea that my reviewers have failed to understand first the form and then the title. The book has been called my Credo, my Apologia, and several other portentous things of that kind. Alone, as well as I can remember at the moment, Sir Richard Terry sensed the real purport of the book; it is not a confession of faith but an expression of doubt. Sir Richard opined that he had seen signs of the oncoming of this doubt in my Sunday Times articles for a considerable time. He was right. In our youth we practise criticism with gay irresponsibility and an unshakable belief in the plenary inspiration of our smallest word. With the coming of 'years, that bring the philosophic mind,' a critic becomes, or ought to become, less sure of himself. He is in a world of warring opinions, and it behoves him not merely to think differently from others but to find, if he can, some justification for doing so. It is particularly incumbent on him to do this in a time such as ours, when all musical ideas and ideals seem to be in the melting-pot. It is no use, to adopt and adapt a simile of Kipling's, A and B and C and D shouting at each other like so many islands of contradiction across so many seas of misunderstanding. A and B and C and D cannot all be right when they say opposite things; and there comes, or ought to come, a time when each asks himself not what it is that he and the others think, but why they think as they do, and if there are any criteria by which one opinion out of the many can be judged more likely than the others to be proved by time to be the right one.

What I wanted to do was to abstract myself from this world of warring opinions as well as I could, and see it in some sort of detachment. I thought it would assist me to do this if I cast my book into a non-personal form. One reviewer said that had I been a German I would probably have given the book some such title as 'Prolegomena to a Musical Æsthetic.' He meant it most kindly; but his words show that he has misunderstood my purpose. A man who sits down to write a 'Prolegomenon' to anything implies that he is quite clear as to his own opinions and as to the value of them—that he is in possession of the truth, and is benevolently disposed to shed its light and heat upon a less fortunate world. But I was not in that enviable position. My object was not to dogmatise but to inquire. The question then arose, What is the best literary form for such an inquiry? At first I thought of a dialogue between two representatives of different schools of critical opinion; the international Press of the last ten years would have furnished plentiful arguments for both sides. But I had to reject this plan, partly because a whole volume of conversations would have been tedious, partly because it would have been difficult or impossible to work in naturally the historical points of allusion. My next idea was an interchange of letters. Under this scheme it would have been easy enough for each contestant to cite whatever historical evidence he thought told in his favour; but I came to the conclusion that on these lines the book was likely to run to an inordinate length. My third plan was the one I finally adopted—to write not in my own person but in that of an imaginary character who goes into retirement to think things over. Then I had to invent the apparatus of a house with a musical library in order to make the references to past situations and the citations from past controversies credible, and I threw in the long view from the hill and over the sea to help the imaginary inquirer to get, by analogy, the necessary perspective over the musical history of the last four hundred years: in the one view, as in the other, main lines and big landmarks would show rather than the little objects in the immediate foreground.

So I dealt with the subject somewhat after the fashion of the novelist who sets forth his conclusions upon life in the form not of a set dissertation, but in that of a character or characters placed in a certain environment. I had an early warning that the unaccustomed form was likely to lead to misunderstanding. My publishers, anxious to do their best for me and for the book, pointed out that in the manuscript as they received it there were no chapter headings, or, indeed, chapter divisions; and they painted a moving picture of the horror of the innocent reader who had been unlucky enough to take up such a book. Couldn't I cast it into chapters, each with its proper heading; and couldn't I, above all, put in a few pretty pictures—the sort of things that help to sell a book on music? Regretfully I had to point out to them that neither could be done without making nonsense of the form of the book. The central idea of it was that the imaginary critic was talking not to the world but to himself—through the medium of a diary almost, except that each day's entry was not dated. A man does not group the musings of his diary into chapters; still less does he illustrate his diarial musings upon Monteverdi and Wagner and Hanslick with portraits of those gentlemen. But I saw that in a great measure my publishers were right. In deference to the English publishers I broke up the text in such a way as to lighten the burden of the poor reader. My American publisher, after reading the proofs, thought the long-sustained argument rather a tough nut for the average reader to crack, so he suggested my prefacing the book with a summary of the argument, which I did.

I should not have troubled the reader with these purely personal matters had not Mr. Evans's article in particular showed me how easy it is for the casual reader to misconceive the nature of the book. Mr. Evans's article, indeed, is of an almost incredible naïveté, to be accounted for only by the difficulty he has always shown in understanding my point of view. With an innocence that almost disarms me, he takes it for granted that I am the musical critic who is taking the holiday, and that in every sentence of the book I am speaking in my own person. I do not imagine that if I had been writing a novel in the first-person-singular form Mr. Evans would have fallen into the grotesque error of assuming that whenever I wrote 'I' the pronoun signified myself. Had I written, 'I crept up behind the man, plunged my knife into his back, snatched the bag of diamonds from him, and made off in the darkness down a deserted alley,' even Mr. Evans would not occupy half-a-dozen columns with an attempt to prove to the reader that a person of my confessed criminal tendencies ought not to be at large. But when I say that old Lobe is a man after my own heart, or that, as I read him, 'I have a curious feeling of watching and listening to myself in some previous incarnation,' Mr. Evans takes my words quite literally. He speaks of Lobe as my 'kindred spirit.' O sancta simplicitas! He has missed the whole point of this section of the book—that the imaginary critic, the workings of whose mind I am trying to describe, is astonished to find that there is nothing new in our problems of to-day and our way of looking at them; that, names and so on apart, what is being said in any musical journal of to-day is only what was being said three generations ago. Mr. Evans is simple enough to say that 'like his kindred spirit, Lobe, he has admirable theories . . . but, as with Lobe, they compare ill with his practice.' Mr. Evans, in his anxiety to disapprove of me, forgets that it is precisely I—through the imaginary critic of the book—who have insisted that Lobe's practice does not always square with his admirable theories. I have hinted that this is enough to make any critic of to-day doubt himself, for if Lobe's theories are true for all time, as most of them are, and yet he can go wrong occasionally, who can be certain that any amount of hard thinking about principles will ensure his correct application of those principles in a new case? So far from taking Lobe as his ideal, and joining hands with him against the world, the Imaginary Critic (let me endow him with capital letters to define him as the personage of my book) sees Lobe as a warning. He studies him purely and simply as a pathologist would study a 'case'; he recognises the streak of morbid tissue in Lobe's otherwise healthy mind, tries to account for its getting there, shows how it wrought for ill in Lobe's judgments, and wonders what he can do to prevent the growth of such a streak in his own mind. Mr. Evans should really give up reading me. He can rarely be trusted to state my views in a form in which I myself can recognise them again; but in this instance he has really surpassed himself.

After this it is a minor matter that he misrepresents me on such subjects as Stravinsky, Ravel, Debussy, and Brahms. One triviality I apologise for wasting the reader's time over, but it is typical of Mr. Evans's general failure to understand the plain sense of my words, because he approaches them in a mood of anticipatory hostility. He speaks of my 'eloquent simile' of Stravinsky as 'a chicken with its throat cut, but able to run a few yards before expiring,' and he wonders if 'the future kindred spirit' will quote this passage generations hence. If any future generation should be interested in Mr. Evans and myself, which is extremely improbable, I hope at any rate it will go direct to me for my own words, not to Mr. Evans, who is constitutionally incapable of quoting me accurately. Never did I describe Stravinsky as a chicken with its throat cut. It was to Mr. Evans and the other Stravinsky fanatics that I applied a simile resembling that. We had been discussing, in 1921, the then position of Stravinsky. Again and again I had eulogised his genius in the greater works and regretted the depths to which he had fallen in his weaker ones; again and again I had urged the Stravinsky claque to recognise, as the only way of salving their damaged reputation, that Stravinsky had his off moments even as Bach and Wagner and Beethoven and Mozart had. They still went on congratulating themselves on the superiority of their forward-looking minds long after every one who was not a blind partisan had recognised that, for the time being at any rate, Stravinsky was writing below his own best. By their refusal to recognise plain facts they finally wrote themselves completely out of the regard of plain people who wanted to get at the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth with regard to Stravinsky. I therefore, in an article in the Sunday Times of July 10, 1921, described these partisan critics as being dead but not knowing they were dead:

> I have never seen it done [I said], but I believe that when a chicken's head is chopped off with great suddenness the astonished little fellow is unable for the moment to realise that he is dead, and his body keeps running round the farmyard for a while. We need not be surprised, then, reasoning by analogy, if the little group of Stravinsky fanatics among us, although it has been slain by a suddenly enlightened public opinion during the last month, will still make a show of some of the signs of life a little longer.

As the remark was even then misunderstood by careless readers, I wrote in the Sunday Times of July 31:

> By the way, I should like to correct a little misapprehension that seems to be getting about. The chicken whose demise I sorrowed over in a recent article was not Stravinsky, but the critical reputation of two of the most prominent Stravinsky devotees in this country.

In the face of all this, Mr. Evans has the assurance to tell the readers of the Musical Times, four years later, that I once described Stravinsky as 'a chicken with its throat cut'! The thing in itself, as I have said, is trifling; it is merely one more illustration of Mr. Evans's inveterate predisposition to mistake his own fancy for fact where I am concerned. But it is intolerable that a writer should have to choose between wasting his own and his readers' time over the exposure of ineptitudes of this kind and having a malicious fiction perpetuated in a magazine of which not one reader in a thousand will ever have the desire or the chance to consult the original.

While I am on this subject, let me give one or two more illustrations of Mr. Evans's utter inability to represent my views accurately to others, because he has not been able himself to understand the plain sense of my words. He says that in my book

> . . . there is a passage admitting the importance of Stravinsky's 'Le Sacre du Printemps,' and, what is more strange, 'L'Histoire du Soldat' . . . Generations hence, will the future kindred spirit quote this passage in support of his contention that these works were duly and correctly appreciated?

En passant, I may say that I have never denied the power of at least half of the 'Sacre.' That, however, is not the point at issue. The point is that in the passage to which Mr. Evans refers I am not at all 'admitting the importance' of the 'Sacre' as a whole, and still less that of 'L'Histoire du Soldat' as a whole, but only arguing that whatever may be the ultimate value of Stravinsky's work, there can be no permanent value in the works of his imitators. I quote the complete passage:

> We need have no fear that posterity will take a different view from ours of the relative importance of the innovators of our own day. We can see that Stravinsky stands head and shoulders above all his imitators and hangers-on; and we can hazard our soul's salvation on the wager that, even though a good deal of his work should become for future ages only what much of Monteverdi's is for ours—evidences of an interesting stage in musical development rather than creations eternally valuable as art—posterity will confirm our judgment that 'Le Sacre du Printemps,' or 'L'Histoire du Soldat,' is to similar efforts of the day in the same genre as Monteverdi's 'Orfeo' was to the average dilettante essay of the time in the new Florentine 'drama with music.'

The point was that 'Orfeo' is a flawed work, admirably expressive in some parts, and historically interesting by reason of its innovations even though posterity can see no great æsthetic value in some of the sections that embody these innovations, for innovation values and æsthetic values are by no means the same thing; but that in any case Monteverdi, with all his flaws, was a being set apart from the contemporary dilettante innovators in the same field. The average man of that period saw at once that Monteverdi, Marco da Gagliano, and Cavalli were superior to their mere imitators. Even so, the Imaginary Critic surmises, does the average man to-day distinguish clearly enough between the flawed man of genius Stravinsky and his mere imitators and hangers-on. Mr. Evans has completely missed the meaning of the passage, and gives his readers a wholly false notion of it. He seems to regard himself as having detected an inconsistency in my views of the 'Sacre,' which, he says, I 'now place in a position corresponding to that of Monteverdi's "Orfeo."' The 'now' is irrelevant and superfluous and misleading, and the deduction illegitimate. The Imaginary Critic was not comparing the æsthetic values of 'Orfeo' and of any particular work of Stravinsky's, but only distinguishing between the innovations that have the force of a genuine personality behind them and the manipulation of the same innovations by second-rate minds that want to be 'in the movement' but have nothing that matters to say in the new idiom.

So again with Mr. Evans's remarks upon what he calls my 'Teutonic bias,' as shown in the fact that 'whereas he counts it against Ravel that he lacks the qualities of Brahms, which Ravel would not borrow if he could, he nowhere counts it against Brahms that he lacks the qualities of Ravel.' I have already had to correct Mr. Evans on this matter; but apparently he has forgotten the correction as completely as he has forgotten the original. In the article he has in mind I had simply said what I believe every one will admit to be true—that in point of design Ravel's Quartet was infantine compared with a quartet of Brahms. (I forget my exact words at the moment.) In this one respect Brahms's mind, I argued, was the bigger and more continuous-thinking organ. This simple particular statement, referring to a single work, Mr. Evans, in his usual inaccurate and reckless style, expands into a sweeping general statement that I 'count it against Ravel that he lacks the qualities of Brahms, which Ravel would not borrow if he could'—as if I would want him to do so! As for my not 'counting it against Brahms that he lacks the qualities of Ravel,' it would never occur to me, I hope, to write about two completely different composers in so childish a fashion. What sane person counts it against the mastiff that he is not a greyhound, or against the greyhound that he is not a mastiff? Each breed is excellent in its way. It is only an incurably partisan mind, like Mr. Evans's, that cannot conceive anyone else looking at a French and a German composer in any other terms than those of partisanship.

I will come to the question of objectivity in criticism later. Meanwhile, let me point out that much of Mr. Evans's article is merely a repetition of the very fallacies against which, using me as a mouthpiece, the Imaginary Critic has argued in my book. Mr. Evans indulges in the usual tall talk about progressives, 'alert' minds, and so on—meaning such people as himself—and reactionaries, conservatives, people who 'regard new manifestations as a nuisance,' and so on—meaning those who differ from him. It is with the analysis of this peculiarly naïve self-flattery that a good deal of my book is concerned. I have tried to approach the question with a brief for neither one side nor the other. The thesis throughout is that if our criticism is to find any first principles at all upon which to work, it can find them only by studying the past history of musical opinion. I have examined certain former critics and certain former epochs as typical 'cases,' the anatomy and pathology of which may possibly help us to a knowledge of our own make-up. I have tried to show that neither of the extreme views is ever wholly right—that the 'progressives' and the 'reactionaries' each talk a mixture of sense and nonsense, but that posterity has a curiously unfair way of remembering the sense of the 'progressives' and not their nonsense, while of the 'reactionaries' it remembers their nonsense but not their sense. If the 'reactionary' fails to perceive the future importance of a particular work, the 'progressive' attributes a false importance to many works that happen to be in a given stream of tendency; in fact, for one masterpiece that has been under-praised at the time of its appearance, a hundred mediocre works, destined to be utterly forgotten, have been over-praised by the 'alert' spirits.

In all this I have striven to avoid taking sides, or attaching more significance to these rather foolish old labels than they deserve. But as a result of my investigations into past periods of creative and critical ferment, I realised the persistency of a certain critical type that every one is familiar with to-day, but of whose existence in previous ages the non-historical student is perhaps not so acutely aware. It is a type that fastens itself on each new movement and uses it as a platform on which to display itself. It is the equivalent of the society woman who is known in America, I believe, as a 'taker-up'—she takes up the latest 'star,' the latest 'ism,' and decorates her salon with him or her or it. This type is glib and shallow, and is much given to catchwords and shibboleths. Its great desire is to be the first to write about this composer or that, to be remembered as the champion of this or that cause. It quite sincerely believes it is helping to make history. It has not sufficient knowledge of the past to take warning from the fate of its predecessors, who, in their own way, are every whit as ridiculous and pathetic as any 'reactionary' Artusi or Hanslick. It does not know the trick musical history has of suddenly taking a different turn from the one that was expected. It lives, moves, and has its being in the clique, the claque, and the coterie. It picks out what it believes to be the cat of the future, jumps in the direction that the cat jumps, and is unconscious of the sadly humorous figure it cuts when, as sometimes happens, the cat creeps back tired and lame, and leaves its too impulsive followers stranded in a critical No Man's Land. It swallows its approved morsels whole, without tasting them, and therefore without any discrimination between the fresh and the rank. It never learns to distinguish between principles and practice, between a good theory and a particular bad realisation of it. It still proudly carries the scutcheon of the lord to whom it has attached itself, even after a bar sinister has appeared in the scutcheon. It is convinced of its mission to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, itself being of the handful of the chosen. It reappears in every age, from Doni down to the present day. This is the ever-recurrent type of which I have tried to paint the portrait in certain sections of 'A Musical Critic's Holiday,' and I fancy I can detect signs that, in some quarters at any rate, the truth of the portraiture has been recognised.

(To be continued.)

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

[As the best way of answering inquiries we have received on this subject, we print, in full, the Preface to the Psalter, written by Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, and Dr. P. C. Buck. —Editor.]

I.—On the Principles of Pointing

During the last quarter of a century there has been, especially amongst church-musicians and organists, a great revival of interest in the methods and possibilities of singing the Psalms to the Anglican Chant. The dissatisfaction felt for what is generally called the 'traditional method' of chanting has reached a point where it may fairly be called universal; and a complementary belief has grown up in the virtues of other methods which, since they do not involve too great a complexity nor too complete a breakaway from tradition, are deserving of a trial on a large scale. The English Psalter is a practical attempt to embody the outstanding ideas that have been 'in the air.'

The problem of all Anglican Psalters is to effect a working compromise between the accepted rhythmical form of the Anglican Chant on the one hand, and, on the other, the natural elasticity and flow of the English Language. The faults of bad chanting are many, and for some of them the individual interpreter, admittedly, is primarily responsible. At least as numerous, however, are the faults to be laid to the charge of those Psalters which, by their distortion of our language, compel false quantities, wrong accentuation, and unnatural rhythm.

Hitherto the Psalms have, for the most part, been pointed as if the Anglican Chant were a rigid time-unit—a mould into which, by craft and ingenuity, the words must somehow fit themselves. Doubtless the many Prefaces have abundantly warned us that the chanting 'must always be natural, and must 'invariably reproduce the speech-rhythm of the English language'—pious aspirations which have seldom been fulfilled and seem, at the present day, to be as far from their attainment as ever. Indeed, the common conclusion arrived at by recent investigators (however diverse the remedies they propose) is that the 'traditional method' makes impossible the preservation of the true and vital rhythm of the English tongue. Single singers gifted with real rhythmical sensitiveness may be found —even, conceivably, small and highly-trained choirs which have enjoyed years of daily chanting—able to sing the Psalms with a natural phrasing and fluency whatever Psalter may happen to be in use. But it is manifestly unreasonable to ask any average choir (to say nothing of any average congregation) to preserve the speech-rhythm and natural accent of the English language in singing such verses as:

For thy testimonies are | my de- | light || and | — my | counsel- | lors, ||

or

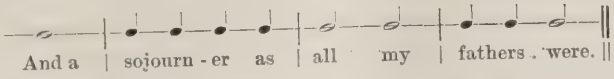
For mine | eyes have | seen ||
thy | — sal- | va- | tion. ||

The principles on which the present Editors have acted in their attempt to secure this natural fluency do not claim to be, to any great extent, original solutions of the problems confronting them. But it is probably true that in this Psalter such principles, whether old or new, have for the first time been systematically and fearlessly applied. It may be desirable, therefore, to enumerate the more important of them, adding, where necessary, illustrations of their practical application.

(1.) It has been assumed that a final 'ed' will not be pronounced in singing where it would not be pronounced in speaking. In any ambiguous case the syllable, if it is to be sounded, is marked in the usual way—e.g., Blessèd.

(2.) As in other recent Psalters, commas which would not be heeded in speech have been omitted.

(3.) The Point (.) between words, or a hyphen in the middle of a word, shows how the syllables are to be allocated to the minims:



Since the final bar may contain two minims in place of the usual semibreve, the point or hyphen becomes necessary whenever that bar contains more than two syllables.

(4.) The dash is a device used in all Psalters to show that two (or more) notes of the melody are to be sung to one word. It is a device which the Editors have tried to avoid, but in a few cases it has been necessary to resort to it; the majority of these will be found in alternative pointings given to certain verses in foot-notes:

through | — the | east- | wind. ||

(5.) The first minim after a reciting-note coincides, wherever feasible, with a really important syllable:

The Lord comfort him when he lieth | sick up-on his | bed: ||

not

The Lord comfort him when he lieth sick up- | on his | bed: ||

(6.) The semibreve following the melodic minims likewise coincides with an important syllable:

By this I | know thou | favourest . me, ||
Who did also eat of my | bread hath | laid great | wait for . me. ||

(7.) A word which, by meaning or position, acquires importance—e.g., Lord, Name, great—occasionally, when no other solution presents itself, has two minims allotted to it:

I call with my | whole | heart. ||

(8.) There are in most languages certain words (known as enclitics) which, possessing no accent proper of their own, sometimes acquire accent through the demands of rhythm or sense. The English words 'into' and 'unto,' so ubiquitous in the Psalms, are typical enclitics. They have no accent proper, though they frequently have to carry one by their position in a sentence; and no universally accepted law seems to exist as to which syllable acquires the accent. The best authorities, however, seem agreed (and the Editors have followed their ruling) that when these two words are preceded by a weak syllable they become trochaic (—◡):

Sing praises únto the Lord, when preceded by a strong syllable, however, they become iambic (◡—):

Sing praise untó the Lord.

In accordance with this principle it will be found that the first verse sung at Mattins has been pointed:

O come let us | sing un-to the | Lord. ||

Hitherto the Verse has been regarded as a fixed unit from which to work, and the colon as a fixed point dividing that unit into two halves. The verse has been taken to embody the parallelism characteristic of Hebrew poetry, and the colon to mark the cæsura, i.e., the hinge dividing and uniting the two-fold idea. The Editors have not felt themselves bound to conform to this formula. The structure of Hebrew poetry and the idiosyncrasies of 17th-century punctuation are undoubtedly matters of great interest to scholars; but it is unreasonable to demand that reverence for them should persist to the point of distorting the English language in chanting, and obscuring, or even destroying, the true meaning of the words. Moreover, no less a scholar than Bishop Westcott set the example, in his Paragraph Psalter, of combining verses, so that two might be sung to one single-chant; and another great scholar, Dr. S. R. Driver,* makes it clear that in the matter of parallelism and its corresponding punctuation the original translators were in innumerable instances quite at variance with the intentions of the Psalmist. The three sections following (9, 10, and 11) will give characteristic cases in which the Editors have broken away from normal use.

(9.) In a few cases verses of great length have been pointed so that they will require a complete double-chant:

Break their teeth O | God: in their | mouths; ||
smite the | jawbones . of the | lions . O | Lord: ||
let them fall away like water that | rǔnneth a- | pace; ||
and when they shoot their arrows, | lĕt[3] them be | rooted | out. ||

(An explanation of the figure [3] is given on page 888.)

* The Prayer-Book version of the Psalms (Clarendon Press).

Occasionally, when (according to Dr. Driver) it seems desirable in order to preserve the original intention, a long verse has been divided in other ways. The following example shows how, when three sections of a double-chant are required by one verse, the fourth section is allotted to a short verse:

Out of Sion hath God appeared in | perfect | beauty: ||
Our God shall | come . and shall | not keep | silence. ||
There shall go before him a con- | suming | fire, || and a mighty tempest shall be | stirred up | round a- | bout him. ||

(10.) In a very large number of cases two verses have been so pointed that they can be sung to one single-chant. This stratagem, having (as was pointed out above) the sanction and authority of Bishop Westcott behind it, has been resorted to without hesitation wherever by reason of the structure of the English, any other pointing seemed to be stilted and unnatural:

Consider my complaint; for I am | brought . very | low. ||
O deliver me from my persecutors; | for they | are too |
strong . for me. ||
Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, ac- | cording . to thy | word: ||
For mine | eyes have | $\overset{3}{\text{s}}$een thy sal- | vation. ||

(11.) The colon has been restored to its use as a mark of punctuation pure and simple; it therefore no longer indicates to the singer any coincidence with the double-bar of a chant, such coincidence being invariably indicated by a double-bar in the text:

My knees are | weak through | fasting, ||
my flesh is dried | up for | want of | fatness. ||

It has been retained where, according to Dr. Driver, it is the true punctuation-mark, and this will, of course, generally be found to be the customary place; but occasionally this is not the case:

$\overset{3}{\text{Th}}$ou | art my | King ||
O | God: send | help unto | Jacob. ||

(12.) It has become customary, owing to the importance hitherto accorded to the colon, to make a break (or breathing-space) after the first half of a single chant, even where the sense of the words and the flow of the melody do not demand or justify it. This custom leads to an unnecessary rigidity of phrasing, and the Editors have, in a good many cases, so pointed the words that no break should be made and no breath taken*:

O hold thou | up my | goings ||
in thy | paths . that my | footsteps | slip not. ||
Thou shalt | break the | ships ||
of the | sea | through the . east- | wind. ||
I have applied my heart to ful- | fil thy | statutes ||
alway, | even | $\overset{3}{\text{u}}$nto the | end. ||
Turn again then | $\overset{3}{\text{u}}$nto thy | rest ||
O my | soul . for the | Lord . hath re- | warded . thee. ||

(13.) The melodic bars of a chant, that is to say the bars which normally contain two minims, are obviously in duple time. When more than two syllables fall to the two minims a subdivision into smaller notes takes place. Hitherto this subdivision has always preserved the duple time, and has taken such forms as:

* Such verses are marked, throughout the Psalter, with a sign of warning (†), and in the majority of cases an alternative version is printed in a foot note.

The Editors have made use of a new form of subdivision, believing that when a bar contains three syllables which, in reading, obviously form a triplet, then the two minims should also be divided into a triplet: . In its simplest form, i.e., when the melody consists of two plain minims, the process offers no difficulty; the first minim is repeated. It has been found, after many trials, that quite inexperienced singers readily adapt themselves to the novelty. Even at a first trial few will feel any hesitation in singing the first half of a single-chant in this manner to:

O let my mouth be | fi^{3}lled with thy | praise, ||

Sometimes the '3' will be found over the final syllable of the recitation. In this case the syllable so marked is to be sung as a minim which, together with the two melodic minims, forms a triplet. On first acquaintance, the process may seem less easy, but in practice it will be found to be merely what good chanters have always done by instinct, viz., to hurry the two melodic minims when the words allotted to them are unimportant and do not require either the accent or the slight prominence accruing from a slower pace:

I am weary of my groaning; every night wa^{3}sh | I my | bed. ||
O let me no^{3}t | be con- | founded. ||

Chants which contain crotchets and dotted minims are, of course, special cases which require special treatment; but the Editors have satisfied themselves, by practical experiment, that the anticipated difficulties do not exist when the method of manipulating such chants is shown by vocal illustration. For this purpose, accordingly, a few examples with musical notation follow, in explanation of the various points which have been noted above.

II.—PRACTICAL CHANTING.

NARES.

(a) The bars and double-bars in this Psalter correspond, exactly and invariably, with those in the above Chant.

(b) An asterisk (*) denotes that breath must be taken, even if the singer should not happen to require it.

(c) No breath should be taken at a comma, but a slight 'poise' should be made, as in good reading.

(d) A Point (.) marks the division of the words between the minims to which they are sung:

Even so in | Christ shall | all be . made a- | live. ||

When this division occurs in the course of a word, a hyphen is used instead of a point:

and when I was thirsty they | gave me | vine-gar to | drink. ||

The semibreves immediately preceding each double-bar are, in some chants, replaced by two minims; accordingly the point and hyphen are inserted to show the division whenever there are more than two syllables allotted to such semibreves:

Hear me O Lord, for thy loving- | ki^{3}ndness is | comfort-able; ||

(1.) All Psalters lay stress on the necessity for 'give and take' in the value of the minims which form the melody of an Anglican Chant. It is only in the very best choirs, however, that real elasticity of rhythm is achieved, for in normal chanting the minim is still given a time-value as strict as in a hymn-tune or anthem. The Editors believe that the pointing of this Psalter will definitely help in the acquisition of elasticity. Such a verse as the following must be sung with ease of rhythm—some minims having more than their true mensural value, and others less:

Praise him sun and moon; * praise him all ye | stars and | light. ||
Praise him all ye heavens, and ye | waters that . are a- | bove the | heavens. ||

The pace should be that of a calm and unhurried reading of the words, not only during the recitation, but throughout the melodic portions. It is only by insistence on care and deliberation that some verses can be sung at all without a relapse into that distortion of our mother-tongue which has brought such discredit to the Anglican Chant. No choir should find any difficulty, if the Choirmaster will first recite to them (and then make them recite themselves) in a perfectly natural rhythm any verse that appears difficult owing to the number of syllables either on a melodic note (a), or on a final semibreve (b):

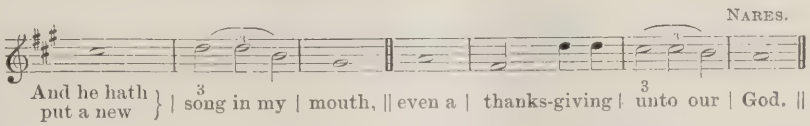
(a) Reward them ac- | cording . to their | deeds, ||
and according to the | wickedness . of their | own in- | ventions. ||

(b) I will magnify thee O Lord, for thou hast | set me | up, ||
and not | made my | foes to | triumph . over me. ||

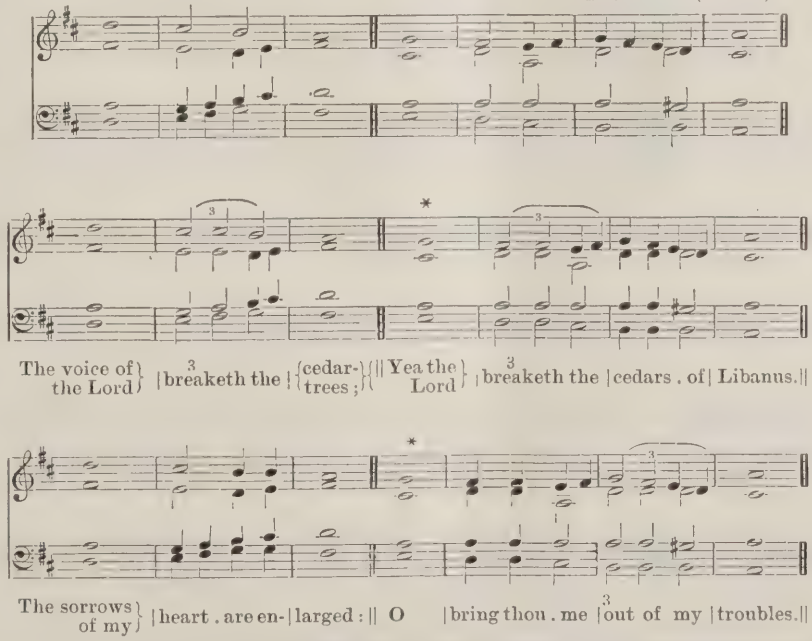
(2.) The following examples of triplets will illustrate the methods of adapting chants to their use:

(a) The primary triplet—i.e., when the figure [3] occurs over the first of three syllables in a bar.

In its simplest form it needs no explanation beyond the fact that the first of the two minims is repeated:



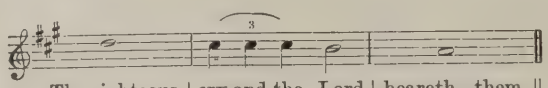
If a chant contains crotchets in the first half of the bar (in any part) they become minims: if in the second half, they remain crotchets (that is to say, they remain halves of a minim, the minim itself being the last of a triplet of minims):



Battishill (1st half).
The voice of the Lord | breaketh the | cedar-trees; || Yea the Lord | breaketh the | cedars . of | Libanus. ||
The sorrows of my heart . are en- | larged: || O | bring thou . me | out of my | troubles. ||

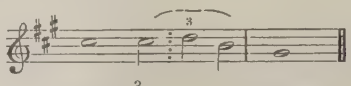
[3] It must be distinctly understood that the reciting-note, although always written as a semibreve, should not always have the time-value of such: e.g., good chanters will instinctively, in the above two examples, sing 'Yea the Lord' as a triplet, and 'O' as a minim.

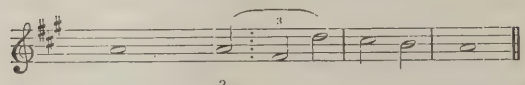
The rules concerning the triplet are in reality nothing new, for there have always been, in all Psalters, instances where three equal syllables have to be sung to one minim, and the singers have intuitively made that minim into a triplet of crotchets:



Equally intuitively the tenors and basses, being already provided with two crotchets, have repeated the first crotchet in exactly the same way as singers are now asked to repeat the first minim. For any choir, without special ability or training, would sing the above verse as follows:

(b) The secondary triplet (i.e., when the figure ^{3} is placed over the last syllable of the recitation) is, in its simplest form, as free from difficulty as the primary triplet. It means, in effect, that the singer 'poises' in that last syllable, giving it a slight accent and hurrying the two minims that follow just enough to convert all three into a triplet. No singer could find the following examples difficult to sing:





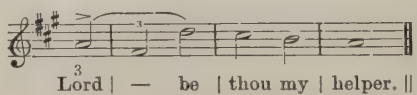
[It will be seen that a secondary triplet merely means that the verse must be sung exactly as if the triplet were not there, but with the accent on the last word of the recitation instead of on the first word of the following bar, and the whole a little quicker.]

In a few cases the recitation will be found to consist of one word only, and that word marked with the secondary triplet sign. Two examples of such verses, with illustrations of the exact difference which the figure ^{3} asks for, should dissipate any apprehension of confusion. The verse

Hear O | Lord . and have | mercy up-on me; ||
Lord | — be | thou my | helper, ||

would normally be sung with a long semibreve A to the word 'Lord,' then an accented F♯, then a normal finish:

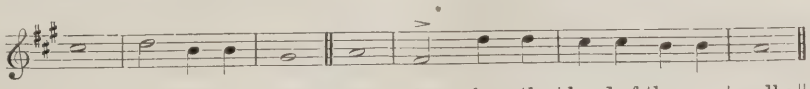
The singers are merely asked, by the figure ^{3}, to make the A a little shorter, and then to go straight on without accenting the F♯:



Again, in such a verse as :

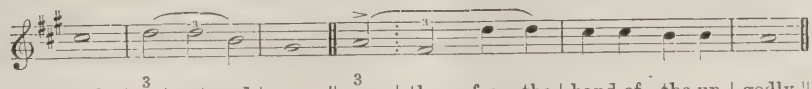
Deliver the | out-cast and | poor ; ||
Save | them . from the | hand of . the un- | godly, ||

the accents on 'cast' and 'them,' as normally sung, are obviously undesirable :



Deliver the | out-cast and | poor ; || Save | them . from the | hand of the . un- | godly.||

These undesirable accents are eliminated, the former by a primary, the latter by a secondary triplet :



Deliver the | ^{3}outcast and | poor ; || ^{3}save | them . from the | hand of . the un- | godly.||

Occasionally the minims of a secondary triplet, like those of a primary one, have more than one syllable allotted to them :

The King's daughter is all glorious within ; * her ^{3}clothing |
is of . wrought | gold. ||

Sung in the ordinary way (i.e., without any figure 3), an accent would fall on the word 'is' : the secondary triplet means that the strong accent should fall on 'clo,' and the word 'is' should be unaccented.

The one and only 'special case' is where a dotted minim with a crotchet take the place of the usual semibreve of the recitation. In such a case (as with all dotted minims at any place in the chant) the dot is to be treated as a crotchet. Thus :

becomes :

The following is an example of a verse with two secondary triplets applied to this chant :

Then shall the princes } ^{3}come | out of | Egypt ; || { the Morians' land shall soon } ^{3}stretch | out her | hands . unto | God.||

For some of the above examples two of the most difficult chants that could be found have been used (Battishill and Heathcote). Both of them contain so many crotchets that they have almost fallen out of general use. If, however, chants with no crotchets, or with very few, are chosen until the choir has accustomed itself to the use of the triplet, the Editors cannot believe—since their own experience gives the lie to such a belief—that the innovation will present any unreasonable embarrassment.

HOLST'S CHORAL SYMPHONY

By Harvey Grace

The title of Holst's new work* at once rouses interest. A composer does not use the word 'First' thus on a title-page without an eye to the future. Every orchestral composer of importance sooner or later writes a symphony; it is natural that Holst, with his strong choral leanings, should open his innings as a symphonist with a choral example.

It might reasonably be said that the 'First' has another and wider significance. For, when one goes into the matter, how many real choral symphonies are there? Beethoven's is an orchestral symphony with a choral section tacked on—to its detriment, some critics hold. And the few examples subsequently produced under the title might as fairly be called choral works with an unusually important part for orchestra. In other words, the composers have written the choral portion as if for an oratorio or cantata. But surely a genuine choral symphony would treat the vocal forces as a component part of the ensemble. There would be little room for the customary 'fat' for the choir in the shape of long sections in which a fragment of the text is discussed—perhaps 'worried' would be a better word—by all the parts over and over again. Florid writing is also more or less ruled out, because the utmost a group of singers can manage in this way can be done immeasurably better by their colleagues in the orchestra. And, just as no orchestral work would contain a long section for strings, wood-wind, or brass alone, so in a true choral symphony a lengthy a cappella section would be out of place. These remarks are prompted by the way in which this Holst work lives up to its title in regard to structure, distribution of interest, and, not least, the treatment of the voices.

Here it might be well to dispose of a point that will at once suggest itself to readers in connection with the choral part. How is the text affected? Will not the treatment of the choir as a mere member of the orchestral family tend to reduce the importance of the words, and so depreciate the very fons et origo of the whole composition? The answer is easy: this Symphony of Holst's gives the text the best of chances. There is very little repetition of words, and none of the treatment of the all-too-familiar type that is hit off in the 'Bill, give me that spike' parody. Moreover, in a very large proportion of the work all the voices are singing the same words, and in notes of the same value. When to these aids to clarity is added Holst's customary and scrupulous regard for verbal accentuation, it will be seen that if the text is not both audible and significant, it will not be the composer's fault. Nor is this effect of verbal naturalness achieved at the cost of the music. Although the vocal writing is mainly diatonic, often slight in texture and simple to the eye, it is of great rhythmic variety and interest. One has an impression that Holst has simply (and rightly) regarded the singers as a group of wind instruments, and has assigned to them the job that they alone can tackle—i.e., the delivery of the text in a musical idiom most suitable to it and them. In theory, of course, this is what all choral writers set out to do, but in actual practice the purely musical interest and the conventions of choral-writing are too strong for them.

The work is in the usual four movements, the first being ushered in by a slow Prelude corresponding to the Adagio of many classical symphonies. The words are from various poems of Keats, and an excellent 'book' they make, being well-contrasted, singable, understandable, and very apt for musical setting. Not often does fine poetry so amply meet the composer's requirements. The selection is wide and ingenious, and its details are here set forth for the benefit of readers who wish to hunt up the passages in their Keats. The Prelude, called 'Invocation to Pan,' draws on 'Endymion' for the first and last stanzas of the chorus in which the shepherds of Latmos invoke Pan. The first movement proper is a 'Song and Bacchanal,' and has for text some extracts from the 'roundelay' that occurs later in the poem. The slow movement takes the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn' intact. (What magical and familiar lines meet one here! 'Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard Are sweeter; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on . . . 'Beauty is truth, truth beauty,—that is all ye know on earth—'). The Scherzo uses most of the poem called 'Fancy' ('Ever let the fancy roam'), and the well-known 'Folly's Song ('When wedding fiddles are a-playing, Huzza for Folly-O!'), one of the short pieces headed 'Extracts from an Opera.' For the Finale the composer takes the first stanza of the 'Spirit Song' ('Spirit here that reignest'), the first four lines of the 'Hymn to Apollo' ('God of the golden bow'), and the main part of the 'Ode to Apollo.' It is worth noting that he omits the last two lines of the following verse:

> Here Homer with his nervous arms
> Strikes the twanging harp of war,
> And even the western splendour warms,
> While the trumpets sound afar:
> But, what creates the most intense surprise,
> His soul looks out through renovated eyes,

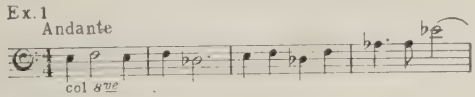
—a dreadful lapse on Keats's part that creates the most intense surprise until we remember that his mighty subject also nodded at times. (Yet there is nothing wrong with 'intense' or 'surprise' as poetical diction. Perhaps their combination has become cheapened in conversation, like 'awfully,' and other over-worked epithets.)

A detailed analysis of the Symphony would be useless without a prohibitive amount of illustration. Moreover, some of the finest passages do not lend themselves to quotation. It must suffice to give a brief description of each movement, with a few extracts of the kind that suffer least by removal from their context.

* First Choral Symphony, composed for the Leeds Festival (Novello). First performance, October 7.

Unusually prolonged and daringly-treated pedal points, and various kinds of ostinato, play an important rôle throughout, and the Prelude gives us a striking example of each. It opens with this theme:

Ex. 1



delivered against the note B held by the double-basses (divided) and violas. The pedal B persists during twenty-three bars, during which Ex. 1 is heard continuously struggling up through different keys; the bass then descends to F sharp, where it sits for a further nineteen bars, returning to the B for the remaining eight bars of the movement. The first of these pedal points is doubled by the altos and basses, delivering the text pp, sotto voce, while the remaining strings gradually steal up from the low B to the heights. During the latter part of the Prelude the voices are engaged with modifications of Ex. 1, which thus forms the basis of the whole movement.

Here are a few typical bars, at the point where the pedal changes from B to F sharp:

(The second half of the ostinato theme is seen in the underpart of the middle stave of the accompaniment, in Ex. 1*a*.)

The Prelude ends ppp, after a climax. Judging from the score it should create a striking atmosphere of awe and expectancy.

The 'Song and Bacchanal' begins with a free melody for viola solo, rubato, senza misura, accompanied by occasional low, quiet triads of E minor, F, and G, the soprano soloist alternating with the viola in snatches of modal melody. The first violins then take over the viola melody, carry it up, and lead into an Allegretto section in which the approach of 'Bacchus and his crew' is heralded. This brings on two characteristic themes in 7-8 time, the quaver figure (played by glockenspiel) and the dancing chords of fourths at the word 'crew':

Allegretto ♩=104
Ex. 2
sempre p e leggiero
And as I sat, o-ver the light blue hills There
pp came a noise of re-vel-lers: — the rills In-to the cresc.
wide stream came of pur - - ple hue - 'Twas Bac - chus — and his crew!
p staccato cresc.

The latter plays an important part during the Bacchanal, and, in augmented form, is alluded to in the maestoso section, which begins the closing part of the movement. The reader will remember a similarly startling use of 5-4 time for dance purposes in 'The Hymn of Jesus.' And here it may be said that 5-4 and 7-8 times are liberally used. Bars of the former frequently occur in alternation with bars of 4-4, which is of course another way of expressing 9-4. Much argument has been spent on the question as to whether, strictly speaking, there is such a time as 5-4, many musicians holding that it can never be more than a compound of 2 and 3. Holst appears to take this view, if we may judge from the fact that in all such cases he shows whether the bar is to be regarded as 2 + 3 or 3 + 2. Where alternations of 5-4 and 4-4 occur, the time-signatures of both are used at the beginning of the movement, a bold figure 4 or 5 in a circle being placed over the alternating bars. The effect looks more complicated than it actually is. Perhaps the most beautiful rhythm is that used for several pages in the Finale, where there is a scheme of 3 + 2, 4, and 2 + 3, the actual sequence being determined by the verbal accent.

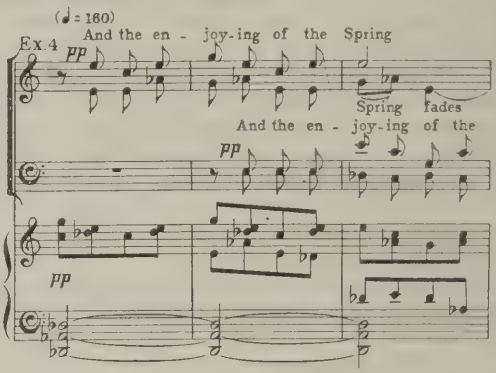
The close of the Bacchanal is quoted for several reasons:

Ex 3

Note how the plain triad of the choir has an emphatic seventh below in the orchestra. There are many passages in which simple vocal harmony occurs over a strongly dissonant bass — often taking on a new and strange character as a result. The rhythmic effect here is worth attention. The time is 7-8, and as a result of the accelerando in the preceding page, the pace at the first 'Bacchus' would be about ♩ = 100. In order to realise the rhythmic frenzy, let the reader play the passage sempre accel. Those explosive shouts (with an almost breathless effect produced by the rhythm) are surely far more Bacchanalian than yards of elaborate and chromatic polyphony. Even the piano opening and cres. of the final 'Bacchus,' though a not uncommon musical device, is in the picture, with its suggestion of exhausted devotees starting a last 'one more altogether,' and having to make an effort to bring it off.

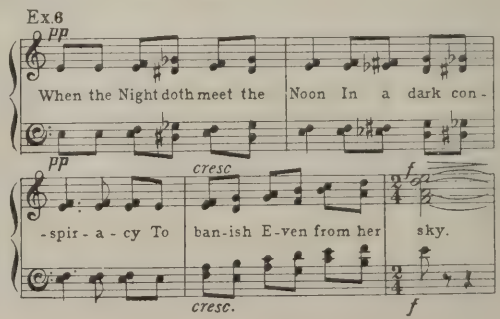
The slow movement is based largely on a double-pedal CC and G over which quietly rise fifths—G, D, A, and E, leading to alternating quaver chords of A minor and G sharp minor. The voices are divided a good deal in this movement, and the difficulties lie in notes rather than rhythm. They are not forbidding, however, for the pace is slow, and the dissonances are easily approached, and noted in such a way as to bother the singers as little as possible. With its slender orchestral demands (it can be done with strings, two flutes, one oboe, two clarinets, two bassoons, two horns, drums, and harp) this Ode should be well within the power of any good small choir. Its frequent pungencies are well balanced by passages of delicate beauty that make an instant appeal.

Each of the movements so far has had some special characteristic in material or rhythm. The Prelude was based entirely on two pedal points; the Song was modal and rhapsodical, and the Bacchanal largely concerned with a dance figure of chords built in fourths and in 7-8 time; the slow movement made most of its effect by superimposed fifths, pedal points, and suggestions of polytonality. The Scherzo takes up and develops this last device, chiefly by a combination, or rapid alternation, of the tonalities of C major and C sharp minor (the latter usually noted as D flat, E natural, and A flat):



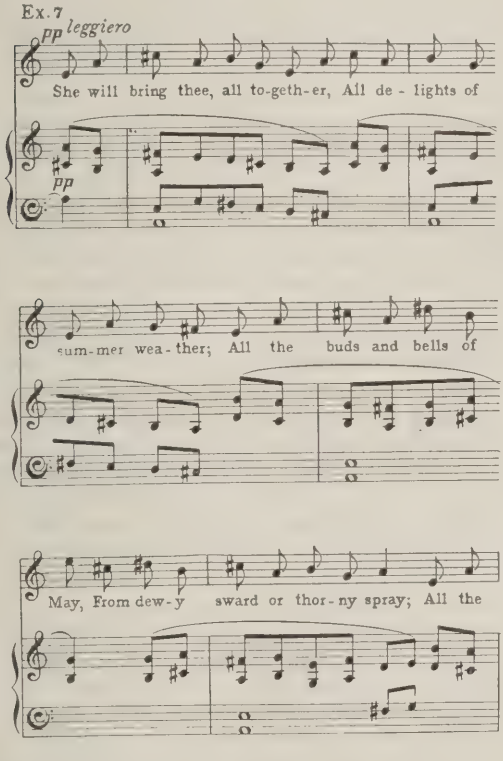
There is a touch of this oscillation between two adjacent keys in the choir's opening phrase:

The chorus is kept busy with quaver movement, pp, largely in unison, until this striking bit of descriptive choral writing:



The four-part chord of the sopranos and altos is held for a few bars while the tenors carry on the tune, and is then taken over softly by the orchestra for a further five bars, while a more deliberately-moving passage by the voices prepares the way for some very attractive pages in which the singers deliver a simple, tripping tune, accompanied by sixths over a pedal point. I quote the opening of this, by the sopranos :

Ex. 7



pp leggiero
She will bring thee, all to-geth-er, All de - lights of
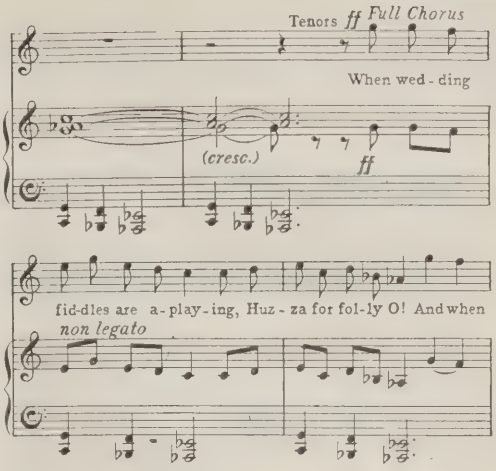
pp sum-mer wea-ther; All the buds and bells of May, From dew-y sward or thor-ny spray; All the

The theme is taken up by all the voices in turn, and there are some delightful sudden transitions to B flat and A flat. A brief return to the C—C sharp minor passage that occurred earlier leads, after a moment of hushed suspense, into the completest of contrasts, 'Folly's Song.' This is a riotous affair over a ground bass of three notes, delivered (after the first two bars) in fifths :

Ex. 8



'Three blind mice'? Why not, in so irresponsible a connection? And after all, it may be a mere coincidence. The fun is kept up with increasing gusto until a few final 'Huzzas' bring on a final orchestral presto, in which a little figure that has already been used a good deal (see Ex. 4) is dealt with further, and in more than one key at a time, as will be seen :

Ex. 9

The Scherzo ends pppp with a final reference to the C—C sharp minor chords :

Ex. 10

This movement may be performed as an orchestral piece—and one may safely predict that it will often be so played. The voice parts are all in the orchestral texture with the exception of four bars which, in the absence of a choir, are to be played by a string quartet.

The Finale starts in Holstian manner with the soprano soloist, unaccompanied, singing the opening stanza to a modal tune, the chorus entering immediately afterwards.

The mood generally is quiet. The one central climax is at the close of the passage referring to Shakespeare (voice parts only, until final bar):

Ex. 11

ff And each vi-brates the string That with its ty - rant molto pesante tem - per best ac - cords, While from their Andante
Mas-ters lips pour forth the in-spiring fff words.
Orch.

After the austere—even bleak—harmonies of much of the Symphony the augmented sixth at 'accords' comes almost as a shock. To some it will be a welcome touch of familiar richness; to others a descent into commonplace. The last bar of Ex. 11 gives another example of a crashing dissonant orchestral bass to the plain chord of the chorus.

I had marked several beautiful, quiet passages for quotation, but space will allow of no more than a few bars of vocal writing that are, perhaps, nothing when played. Their curious mellow beauty can be revealed only by voices:

Ex 12

smooth; Tales and golden his-to-ries Of PP Tales and golden his-to-ries Of hea - ven and its Orch.
hea - - ven and its mys - - ter-ies
dolce
mys - ter-ies, hea - ven and its mys-ter-ies.

The close of the Symphony, in which the altos and second basses only are heard, is another example of the same kind of magic simplicity. There is no lack of this kind of music in the work. Indeed, although the whirling pace of the Scherzo, the tingling brilliance of the orchestral part in the Bacchanal, and the occasional shattering climaxes, are the elements that strike one at a first perusal of the score, the main impression left by greater familiarity is rather one of remote beauty, mostly of an archaic, pastoral type.

All the movements may be performed separately, and the first is complete without the Prelude. The orchestra employed is modest for these days; and as a good many instruments are 'cued in,' it can be reduced to a small force. The choir may be large or fairly small, but it must be alert. Singers have by now pretty well conquered the difficulties of chromaticism. Holst here, even more than in 'The Hymn of Jesus' and the 'Ode to Death,' gives them a fresh set of hurdles in the shape of fluid shifting rhythms, and a harmonic system that largely discards thirds and sixths for fourths, fifths, and sevenths.

That both singers and hearers find this idiom difficult to grasp was shown at Gloucester recently, when Holst's eight-part 'Evening Watch' seems to have given some uncomfortable moments to all concerned. It may be that, for the present at all events, the difficulties are accentuated in an unaccompanied work (such as 'The Evening Watch') because of the impossibility of obtaining a firm foundation. Alone among instruments, the human voice weakens as it descends, and as eight-part work mainly confines the second basses to the weakest part of their compass, the superstructure (especially when new in idiom) must have its tottering moments. Moreover, an insecure bass may easily produce harmonic implications other than those intended by the composer.

In 'The Hymn of Jesus' Holst opened up a new path in choral writing. In the 'Ode to Death,' 'The Evening Watch,' and, above all, in this 'Choral' Symphony, he has gone a good way along that path. It is, I believe, one that will bear little fruit in unaccompanied writing, for several reasons, one of which is given above. Its frequent austerity and ambiguity seem to call for the balance and contrast of orchestral colour, and, above all, it needs a foundation of the firmness and depth that only instruments can supply.

Holst has a way of writing not for performers' abilities, but for their potentialities. There is no composer to-day with a surer instinct and knowledge of what 'comes off.' However widely opinions may differ as to the actual success of his dashes into opera, orchestral suite, and choralism, nobody can deny their brilliance, nor the attractiveness that lies in their strange—even baffling—mixture of the hazardous and the calculated. Baffling, because the more we see of the Holst of the past few years, the harder it becomes to distinguish between the hazard and the calculation. Perhaps, after all, there is no hazard. It is reasonable to suppose that a composer with Holst's uncanny instinct for effect may do apparently daring things without 'chancing his arm.' We may expect the Leeds Choir to prove this to be the case with the Symphony. If so, the 'First' on the title-page will excite lively anticipations.

A TALK ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING

By I. Philipp

(Professor at the Conservatoire)

When the technique of the pianoforte is mastered, the pianist finds before him a boundless field of action: interpretation. If technique is the result of steady and intelligent work—a gift for music in itself, by the way, is not sufficient—then artistic interpretation is the blend of thought and feeling, good taste, simplicity and knowledge. To interpret effectively, however, the fingers must not be continually dreading the difficulties that arise at each page of the music. To play the notes correctly is a small matter; one must be sufficiently accomplished to master the most arduous technical problems. It is possible to read 'between the lines,' to interpret the author's thought. Consequently technique and virtuosity are both necessary. This does not mean that a man is an artist because he possesses a brilliant technique. But to acquire this technique—if he would be capable of artistic interpretation—is indispensable.

The pianoforte is the one instrument capable of producing at the same time melody, harmony, and polyphonic problems and complexities; it is the favourite instrument of the great masters. Consequently the pianist ought to be the one instrumentalist who interprets with the utmost purity. Unfortunately this is not the case. Violinists, such as Kreisler, Thibaud, Huberman, Heifetz, and others, play religiously what the composer* has written; pianists (most of them, at all events) do the very opposite. The composer is nothing—the pianist allows himself every liberty. I have often wondered why this is so. I suppose it is because pianists, accustomed to playing always alone, show a tendency to exaggerate everything, and frequently to give rein to that which, with somewhat naïve vanity and presumption, even the youngest call their personality. And this is often accompanied by gestures and bodily movements, exaggeratedly sportive tricks and mannerisms. All the same, how one would like to see a little simplicity, a little modesty in this small world of artists!

The pianoforte is not in itself a singing instrument. Its legato compared with the legato of the human voice, or of a violin, for instance, is simply approximate. And yet the correct and expressive interpretation of a melodic part depends solely on a fine legato. We ought to approach as nearly as possible the legato of the violin or of song. It is a mistake to imagine that the quality of the sound depends on the perfection of the instrument used. This is not so. Each player has a sound of his own. No one privileged to hear Anton Rubinstein, or Busoni, can have forgotten the extraordinary variety of sound these artists of genius obtained from their instrument. Listen to a Paderewski or a Rosenthal, and you will at once note the striking difference in sonority between these masters of the pianoforte.

There is no difference in the sound of a single note on the pianoforte, whether played by a child or by an artist, for in itself the note has no expressive value. On all other instruments, with the exception of the organ, a note may be modified once it is given out, and it is this modification that is interesting, seeing that it permits at once of an expressive nuance. In the case of the pianoforte, we have to prepare the sound before striking the key. This it is that mainly constitutes the art of the pianist. Once the key is struck, it cannot be corrected by any amount of bodily or manual contortions. In the relation of one note to another must the pianist endeavour to find expression and contrast.

Everything plays an important part in the quality of sound obtained by a great pianist: suppleness of arms, freedom of movement, conformation of the hand, delicacy of touch, breadth or slenderness of finger-tips, the meditative or the impulsive temperament of the musician. Gradation and variety of sound presents one of the greatest difficulties in pianoforte playing. In spite of every natural faculty: suppleness of arms, perfect hands, broad fingers, only constant practice (and that of the most painstaking kind) will develop that quality which alone produces the endless discriminations needed for complete musical expression. One has not always at his disposal a perfect instrument, and the problem is to produce a fine sound from an instrument of too heavy or too light a touch, or from one whose mechanism generally is not sufficiently responsive. The pianist must be so skilful as to modify his playing instantaneously. Indeed, this perfect mastery of the keyboard is somewhat rare. A good instrument responds to the most delicate touch. One may vary the emphasis or pressure endlessly, obtain every contrast of nuance, and pass with like facility from the most powerful ff to the most mysterious pp.

Sound, then, may be modified beneath the controlled action of the fingers; it may be either full of energy or lingeringly tender. Manifestly a different sound is produced according as the hand is short and thick, long and slender, bony and brutal. The spirit of observation, however, aided by untiring and concentrated application, can refine even an unsuitable hand. Nor must we expect from a pianoforte more than it is capable of giving. Our modern instruments are extraordinarily adequate for the largest concert rooms. To play louder than one's means allow is to prevent the sound from expanding.

A singer who shouts cannot be heard so well as one who uses only the natural volume of his notes: the sound is less vibrant and lacks intensity. If one gives way to a sort of impulse which some call temperament, as above mentioned, then he is 'hammering upon'—not playing—the pianoforte.

* Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Saint-Saëns, Brahms, all of them pianists, have written masterpieces of music for the violin.

Just as the violinist modifies his strokes, so the pianist should modify his articulation. But above all should the body and arms be supple and free, the hands lightly held. And yet the fingers must be kept firm. Slow playing that is prolonged affords perfect accuracy of execution. This is the ideal of every performer, just as lack of accuracy fills him with despair. 'Work slowly,' Saint-Saëns was wont to say, 'then more slowly, and finally very slowly.'

But this slow playing should not be practised constantly. Changes of accents, rhythmic modifications, modifications of sound from ff to pp with the intermediate nuances of mf, mp, and p, will give one speed, so that intelligent and thoughtful practice results in both tone and rapidity. The slower the practice, the more one should articulate (without violence, of course), by 'kneading' the keyboard, so to speak. The faster one plays, the less he should articulate. It must be possible to play any technical passage faster than the time stated. Technique must be controlled if one would play musically. Scale and arpeggio practice—with both the C and the regular fingering—is absolutely necessary. It is good to do this rhythmically, with every possible nuance, in thirds, sixths, with crossed hands, one hand piano, the other forte, one staccato and the other legato.

The correct and skilful use of the pedal is of the utmost importance as regards sound. The pedal gives on the one hand force and dash, expansion and amplitude; on the other, sweetness, charm, and tenderness: whereas the wrong use of the pedal unfortunately results in destroying clearness, blurring the melody, and disturbing the harmony.

The pedal has been called the soul of the pianoforte, and there is some element of truth in the claim. The 'loud' pedal alone, the 'soft' pedal (una corda) alone, or both used together, afford a variety of nuances which a talented pianist can obtain.

Perfect pedalling depends on sensitiveness of the ear, on good taste, on true musical talent. As a rule it may be stated that, when the playing is no longer clear and distinct, there is too much pedal. Its use is so closely connected with the work that is being interpreted, with the personality of the player, with the perfection of the instrument, that it is difficult to lay down absolute rules. Many books have been written dealing with the method of using the pedal, but the theories they advocate are upset by one's first platform experience. However one may use the pedal, it must not become something to conceal one's own indifferent playing, a cache misère, as my own master was in the habit of saying. . . .

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

The Civil Service Choir and its conductor, Mr. Rutland Boughton, invite British composers to submit short unaccompanied choral compositions (unpublished) with a view to performance by the Choir. MSS. should reach Mr. Boughton not later than October 24. Works should not take longer than seven minutes in performance. Stamped addressed envelope should be enclosed for return. Success will be determined by merit, not by reputation of composer.

THE PERFORMER AND HIS AUDIENCE: SOME PSYCHOLOGICAL FACTS

By A. E. F. Dickinson

The relations between a performer and his audience are mainly unconscious and therefore likely to escape notice. Any performer will, of course, tell you that his audiences have been 'warmer' on some occasions than on others; but he probably does not think much about it, still less does he realise that he generally gets the kind of audience he deserves, by the programme he provides and the form in which he arranges and advertises it. Yet a little insight into the facts would show him, not only that an audience may vary in quality as well as in quantity, but also that it is in his power to organize his audience in certain important directions, and that by exercising or neglecting this privilege he has himself to thank or blame for the atmosphere he finds at any concert. Let us probe the matter for him.

First, if we are to understand audiences, we must appreciate the difference between a chance crowd and an organized gathering. In either we can observe a common object of interest, a common feeling in regard to it, and some degree of influence between the members of the gathering; for these are the conditions of the most elementary crowd-life. But in a crowd collected by chance the common interest will vanish as quickly as it has arisen; the feelings of which the crowd is capable will be of the more coarse or primitive kind; and there will be little reciprocal influence between one individual and another. In an organized group the common interest will be well defined; the general feeling in regard to it may be equally well defined and therefore exhibit the most refined sentiments, so that there may be close sympathy between one member and another; and in consequence the whole general purpose of such a group will be solid and continuous and, in short, significant.

At a concert there are two possible common interests—the music and the performer. Assuming that the performer cannot help himself to any degree, we are left with the music. A programme likely to draw an audience already united in feeling will be a psychological success, and an artistic success, because, pace Mr. Clive Bell, a performer cannot live by art alone but by the response which he feels in his audience. And a programme unlikely to draw a united audience is, so far as it goes, a failure. This suggests at once a distinction of programmes according to the unity they present. We may divide them into three groups: the one-composer recital; the programme of extreme variety; and the average concert which falls between these extremes. We are now clear of our general principles and can afford to be more concrete.

The one-man programme is common enough to need no instances. Anybody attracted by such a programme will be far more willing than the average listener to concentrate his attention. And while a few will attend, say, a Wolf recital for the purely intellectual purpose of widening their musical knowledge, most people will be drawn there by an emotional interest, centring round Wolf's personality, with a reflected sympathy for the performer who shares their enthusiasm for the composer. They will therefore come with a definite feeling in common, which feeling will be defined still more when it finds its most complete expression in the music. It is likely, moreover, that such an audience will quickly become aware of a common spirit amongst its members, and thus the enthusiasm of every listener will be intensified by the consciousness that it is shared—and all this may happen before the concert has begun. If this be true of a Wolf recital, much more will it apply to music by a really established composer like Beethoven. (I select Beethoven because until recently he was invariably chosen to represent music by writers on non-musical subjects, and is therefore very commonly assumed to be the composer among composers.) A composer of limited vision will draw an audience of like nature; but a really great composer will bring together a body of people united by a solid block of common feeling, enriched by wide differences of opinion on music and life in general. Further, a Beethoven audience will surely feel more enthusiasm from the consciousness that so many other music-lovers, past and present, could share their enjoyment. Finally, we may note that a performer will work up an enthusiasm for a particular composer most when he makes a habit of playing that composer. When he gives a one-man recital only on occasion, the probability is that some will come for the interpretation rather than the music. For example, we hear a singer we like in a Mozart opera and want to hear what he makes of Lieder, say Brahms, or of our favourite composer, should a recital of his works be given. Or again, we are in an anti-Beethoven period and, feeling we miss so much, go to see if Kussewitzky, the conductor who inspires us most, can restore for us life in the old dog. In such instances the common interest is not the music but its performance, and as the latter must be unknowable until it is given, it is not worth considering. On the other hand, when Mr. Samuel gives a week of Bach annually in London, every one knows he is not airing his interpretative powers but simply preaching the gospel of John Sebastian Bach for its own sake. And people come to those recitals for Bach, first and foremost, and for Samuel only because of his genius for presenting Bach without obtruding his own personality. At any rate, the present writer has joined no musical audiences more closely united in purpose than those which greet Mr. Samuel at those Bach recitals.

Next we may take the average programme, in which there is enough of one or more composers to constitute some common interest in a potential audience, but a certain variety is aimed at in order to catch more people. The mere step from one composer to two may often be a wide step in the direction of variety. Bach-Liszt, the subject of a recital (one of six) given by Moiseiwitsch some years ago, is an instance. Those who like Liszt must surely find Bach unromantic, and those who like Bach must hate Liszt, except in so far as Bach anticipated the modern extravagances exploited by Liszt. Similarly, Mr. Samuel's recitals of X. and British composers, X. being a 'classic' and therefore generally a German composer. The opposition of the British and German characters is pretty strong. On the other hand, it is quite possible to present the same general feeling through the mouths of different composers: for example, a recital of Elizabethan music, or of Lieder, or of the German classical school (Bach-Beethoven-Brahms, a programme given by Miss Hess and others). Such programmes will organize some common mode of feeling in the audiences they attract, though less definitely than the one-man programme, and there will be less reciprocal influence between individual members. They are, however, a practical compromise, for it may take some time to work up an audience for a one-composer recital.

Thirdly, there is the programme in which variety is the chief thing. Here there is of necessity no common object of interest, for the performer is out to please everybody—that is, nobody. Song-recitals are the most obvious instance. Singers may avoid even a 'group' by one composer—perhaps because they feel that no English composer is a 'classic' yet (although Miss Silk and others are doing their best for Dowland and the rest), and that songs in a foreign language or in a translation will not go down, even if they are by Schubert or Mozart. Anyhow, the result is that the general enthusiasm, if any, is spasmodic and aroused by the performance, not the music. The classic-lover will not be content with one Schubert item, especially if it is sandwiched between 'some awful modern composer' and (shall we say?) Edward German; and the devotee of Roger Quilter will not enjoy the Duparc and Holst. Contrast this phantasmagoria, in which every number cuts the other out like the stories in a magazine, with the variety of a Bach programme where every difference of mood serves only to enhance the impression of unity conveyed by a big personality.

A word about the form in which the concert is advertised. On the view maintained in this article, the ideal must be to suggest unity first and variety second. Also, a performer should realise that an appeal to an established classic will arouse very much wider interest than a mention of English composers. An enlightened patriotism takes time to develop itself, and we cannot be surprised that there has been no national movement in music in a country whose best material is to be found in the till recently unexplored mines of Byrd and his contemporaries, or amongst the equally unestablished products of the last thirty years. And on the musical side 'English composers' will not necessarily suggest unity to thoughtful people. What have Elgar and Vaughan Williams in common? One might as well pair off Mozart and Strauss.

Such are the relations which a performer may create between his art and his audience by his choice of music, willy-nilly: relations varying from a passing interest in himself, an unimportant personage, in a sense, to an intense and highly developed appreciation of the thing that really matters, the work of a master-spirit. Well! to some performers this will be hard doctrine, but are its conclusions therefore to be shirked?

IS TRANSCRIPTION PERMISSIBLE?

By Alexandre Cellier

(Organist to the Bach Society, Paris)

Like many other answers to questions on æsthetics, the one we are now attempting will be less a categorical reply than a series of considerations enforcing the pros and cons of the problem. One domain of music that is somewhat special, and not often critically examined, is that of transcription, an extremely well-known musical form, though it could lay claim to no rôle of first-rate importance, such as composition or actual playing. All the same, there have been so many abuses perpetrated in the name of freedom of transcription, that it may prove interesting to distinguish between the domain in which it is permissible and that in which it is not.

Given the work as the composer wrote it, interpreted by those instruments best capable of expressing his thought, should the expression of that thought be entrusted to other instruments?

In the first place, we will distinguish between:

1. Reduction, which entrusts to a group of minor importance, or even to a single instrument, what had devolved upon a great number;
2. Amplification, a term used—for lack of a more definite one—to designate a transcription that employs a sound group more extensive than that adopted by the composer himself;
3. Transcription strictly so-called, presupposing that sound groups are of equal importance, or practically so.

As regards reduction, we will first of all eliminate such as consists in reducing an orchestral work or theatrical score for the pianoforte; for whereas by this process æsthetics may lose theoretically, it acquires practical advantages which it is unnecessary to state. We should regard it as out of place to give, in a large concert-hall, transcriptions of Beethoven's Symphonies for four hands, seeing that they were composed pour s'esjouir ès maisons, as a master once said in the days of the Renaissance. As Liszt also remarked, these transcriptions play the part of engravings that reproduce pictures. To continue our comparison, let us suppose that reductions of orchestral works for string instruments, enriched with a few 'wood' effects, are related to highly-coloured engravings. Actually this reduced transposition of the composer's thought offers greater danger and responsibility than does the mere reduction en noir for the pianoforte. In painting, a good one-tone reproduction is often better than a copy in colours—generally a poor one.

There are certain reductions that are more clearly of the nature of transcription: Bach's famous Aria may be quoted as an instance. At the risk of grieving many violinists, I regard the transcriber as having taken a great liberty in turning into a solo on the fourth string a first violin part of the Adagio in the Suite in D. No one who has heard the original played by a string orchestra, with all its majestic and luminous grace, can regard the result of the transcription as anything but declamatory and bombastic. Finally, let it be stated that certain pieces conceived for a large orchestra, though being of a somewhat intimate character, lose nothing when played by a small orchestra. This is abundantly evident in the performances of the Ganne Orchestra at Monte Carlo and of the Touche Orchestra at Paris.

Now we come to the question of amplification. To give an extreme instance, let us take the pianoforte morceau transcribed for a large orchestra. Whereas the lesser is sometimes capable of replacing the greater, we do not so frequently find the greater capable of replacing the lesser.

Paltry and insignificant pianoforte pieces, inflated to the extent of interpretation by seventy performers, might well remind us of the fable of the frog and the ox. Moreover, a piece of music written for the pianoforte, by reason of its character of intimacy and abandon, and capable of expression by a single player, generally calls for rhythmic phantasies which offer great difficulties when attempted by an orchestra. As an exception, let us take Chopin's Polonaise in A major, one that is extremely orchestral, broadly-conceived, and popular in character. (Please do not mistake for this piece the Polonaise in A flat.) I once listened to a superb orchestration by a Russian composer, giving the work a certain grandeur and éclat which were really superior to the pianoforte version. In the case of Chopin, such a thing happens too seldom not to be quoted, seeing that he was the most pianistic of composers and the most compositeur of pianists. I think he would have heaped maledictions on the head of anyone so undiscerning and rash as to present 'Les Ballades' in orchestral form, though he would assuredly have approved of this amplification in the case of the Polonaise just mentioned.

Let us also take Schumann's 'Evening Song,' written for the pianoforte for four hands. Like the Polonaise it contains, as taken for granted, a reduced orchestra, the externalisation of so slow and expressive a movement being difficult for the pianoforte alone. Saint-Saëns, who could never be accused of lack of taste, was therefore quite right to give us his delightful orchestration. These are two rare instances in which amplification appears worthily to support the cause of the original. In other and more numerous cases both versions are of equal merit. It is all a matter of lo ality, of environment, and of expediency.

Do you prefer the model of a piece of Gobelin tapestry to the tapestry itself? The one will bear the direct impress of the artist's work; the other, the peculiar character introduced by the transposer. We may also mention, as a work equally acceptable in both forms, Debussy's charming 'Petite Suite' for four hands, the orchestration of which by Büsser emphasises the quite evidently orchestral intentions of the original. And Liszt's fine transcription for pianoforte and orchestra of Schubert's Pianoforte Fantasia is justified by the distinctively dialogue form of the original version, as well as by its breadth of range—a severe handicap for the most accomplished pianist!

By transcription, strictly so-called, I mean that which substitutes for the original an arrangement for one instrument or for groups of instruments somewhat equivalent, like transcribing an organ work for the pianoforte, wind instruments for strings, &c. Bach transcribed for the organ Vivaldi's Concertos and his own Violin Fugues, his cantata airs, his Clavecin Concertos, &c. Rameau indicates that his exquisite concert pieces may be played equally well by flute, viola da gamba, and clavecin, or by violin or 'cello. The organ pieces also of Daquin, Clérambault, and others are equally adapted for performance on the clavecin.

At the risk of depriving his three admirable pieces for oboe and pianoforte of their own appropriate characteristics, Schumann hints at versions for clarinet and violin. None the less, it cannot be denied that the clarinet lacks the incisive melancholy qualities of the oboe; with it, singing becomes heavier and more apathetic. The violin, too, is not so suitable, for the nervosity and the vibrato inherent in the strings counteract the rustic simplicity and the homogeneity of the oboe. The most popular kind of transposition is still that of the morceau célèbre. No sooner—by what is frequently an inexplicable decree of destiny—does a piece of music become popular, than the fortunate publisher (if he happen to be the owner of the copyright), or the fortunate publishers (if so be that the piece has run out of copyright), are compelled to dish up a meal to suit every taste, and we speedily find it being performed on the accordion or the cornet-à-pistons, and even on the mandoline

The 'Largo' of Handel, the Aria of Bach, the Minuet of Boccherini, the 'Traumerei' of Schumann, operatic airs, the 'Moonlight' Sonata, and many other pieces have undergone transcription for various instruments.

After all, good transcribed music is preferable to merely bad music. This desire to render homage to a favourite instrument is even akin to the translation of a literary masterpiece. It is alike an honoured and worthy testimony both of the work itself and of the language into which it is being rendered.

Certain instruments, such as the viola, so deserving of admiration, are catered for so poorly as regards répertoire, that they are compelled to borrow from those more richly endowed. What is less comprehensible, however, is to find the latter borrowing from the former. We might call for an explanation from pianists on this matter; indeed, there is no instrument in the world which possesses a richer or more admirable collection of works than does the pianoforte. To the exploration of its resources the greatest musical geniuses have given of their best. Nevertheless this is not enough for the insatiable virtuosi who are incessantly engaged in transcribing, and that, not to s'esjouir chez soi, ès maisons, where orchestra or instruments would have no place, but rather for the concert platform where ersatz are somewhat out of place. It may be granted that there is nothing absolute in this, and that certain productions, badly scored or erroneously conceived for orchestral phalanges, may in the long run be found more suited to those of the pianist. Still it is wise to reflect on Schumann's words: 'Love your own instrument, but do not regard it as unique, or as superior to all others.'

One kind of transcription very much in vogue is that of the classical organ piece arranged for the pianoforte, and although I may incur the reproach of vaunting my own wares and claiming that 'There is nothing like leather!' as did the proverbial cobbler, I am unable to condone this abuse, notwithstanding the fact that such great pianists as Busoni were guilty of it. Certain of his transcriptions even go so far as to modify the musical text, again incurring the reproach of Schumann:

> Regard it as odious to change anything whatsoever in the works of the masters, to omit anything or to add anything new; this is the greatest insult you can inflict upon art.

True, the warning is addressed to young pianists, whereas masters possess greater rights and privileges; nevertheless, the liberty is not without risk or peril to all. The objection will be raised that many of the old masters wrote certain sonatas or concertos in very summary fashion, leaving it for the performer to add fioriture, cadences, &c. This may be so, but a distinction must be drawn between what was composed with this understanding and what is manifestly regarded as ne varietur. Give what colour you please to an ordinary drawing and perhaps it will lose nothing thereby, but change the colour scheme of a Delacroix or a Monet, and you incur grave responsibility.

To avoid the accusation of too pronounced a bias, mention must be made of the transcriptions of pianoforte or orchestral works which are imposed—more than they would wish—upon my organist confrères, especially in church services. Here also we find successful reductions, amplifications, or transpositions, e.g., the short and tragic

Prelude in C minor of Chopin is splendid on the organ; certain pieces of Mendelssohn's and Schumann's also are passable, as well as the classics, naturally; and this in ensemble works as a rule and in figured-bass sonatas more particularly. Even Debussy's very mediæval 'Sarabande' for the pianoforte, when played on the organ, acquires perfectly adequate colouring, alike hieratical and bizarre in its character. But what abuses have taken place! How frequently we are compelled to listen to airs from old-fashioned operas during divine service!

As a curious instance of transcription by the composer himself, in every way superior to the original, we have Lalo's 'Chant russe,' taken from the 'Concerto russe' for violin. Compared with the very eloquent and strong version for the 'cello, that for the violin is only insipid.

In conclusion, What ought to be transcribed? Apart from reductions to pianoforte for practical use, only such works as are of a nature to justify another mode of expression which will not prove in any way harmful. Only very experienced musicians, of irreproachable taste, should exercise this right of transcription, which certainly they would not abuse. In taste, and its corollary, expediency, we have the final answer to the question. Let us transcribe but seldom, well aware of what we are doing, taking care never to encourage, where no justification can be found to exist, useless and, à fortiori, harmful transcriptions.

(Authorised translation by Fred Rothwell.)

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

It frequently happens that a beneficial change in manners or custom escapes notice, partly because it is gradual, or because it belongs to a branch rather than to the main line of affairs. A change of this kind has taken place in music, but it seems to have called forth little or no comment. I allude to the human note, freedom of style, and literary quality that are increasingly apparent in musical books and writings generally, thanks to which the art is becoming an attractive topic for the wayfaring man. Most of our musical problems will be solved when the man in the train or 'bus reads about music as he now reads about sport, the drama, and politics; he will be ready to do so when the topic is made as interesting.

I was reminded of this by an article that appeared in The Times of August 15. The Saturday musical column in that journal has long been a weekly thing one looked forward to, and the article in question, entitled 'Variations upon the Bassoon,' was one of the best of an honourable line.

Those who agree that the bassoon is an underrated instrument and worthy of a better label than 'clown of the orchestra,' will enjoy The Times pleasant tribute to its versatility. (The writer is discussing Mozart's B flat Concerto):

> There is much here of Mozart's characteristically whimsical humour, due to the combination of agility and dignity of which the bassoon is capable, and in the slow movement a revelation of the cantabile powers of the instrument. Like many middle-aged gentlemen—and the bassoon is surely in that class—he is apt to be, in the barber's euphemism, a little thin on top, and his voice becomes dry when he has to quack out a number of staccato notes. But Mozart never demanded of him the music-hall clowning to which he has sometimes been degraded. That he is capable of humour is a sign of his humanity; he can, when the time is right, jest with his fellow-members in the club and cap any of their stories; or, remembering his ancestry, he will 'talk crops' with any farmer in a country inn.

Again, speaking of the adaptability that makes the bassoon the handyman of the orchestra, The Times writer says:

> He always plays for his side. . . He is specially good at taking a pass from his wing three-quarter, the horn. He will pick up the melody, harden it a little, leaving out the oily quality, and pass it on to almost anyone else—a clarinet, a flute in its lower register, or a violoncello.

What treatise on orchestration could give one a better idea of the characteristics of the bassoon than such delightful writing as this? It is, as I said above, a hopeful sign of the times when we find a daily paper including a musical article of a literary quality that suggests Lamb, or, rather, the almost-forgotten and near equal of Lamb—Leigh Hunt.

In like vein, the Observer of September 13 contained a very racy column report of the International Festival at Venice, from which I take only an allusion to Stravinsky's new Pianoforte Sonata:

> The first movement seemed early Beethoven, the second a Bach Partita, both slightly (as the housewives say) 'on the turn,' but not yet sour.

It would be hard to find a better description of the curiously perverse quality that marks so much contemporary music. It claims to be 'advanced,' and we may now admit the claim, with a rider to the effect that the advance is towards putrescence. It would be easy to give many examples from the weekly writings of Mr. Ernest Newman and others. 'But,' the reader says, 'this is merely journalism—matter to be read and then pitched aside. What of books?' Here the answer is easy. Such recent volumes as Mr. Newman's 'A Music Critic's Holiday,' Mr. Eric Blom's 'Stepchildren of Music,' the stream of books in which Percy Scholes is teaching people how to make the most of the gramophone and wireless—these and others occur to the mind at once. Dead, or at all events on his last trembling legs, is the high horse from which musical writers formerly delivered themselves ore rotundo in terms that effectually choked off all but the elect. Think, for example, of the cloudy verbiage they have delivered on the nature and properties of music. Yet Philip Heseltine has put it all in three words, two of which are slang. In Chapter 2 of his work on Delius, he sets out to discuss music, but gives it up after a bit, and says 'Music's a rum go.' Exactly; when you've said that you've said all. But can you imagine a musical writer of a generation ago saying it?

Technical books are still too often written as if music were an esoteric mystery, to be jealously guarded by its professional initiates, the text-books serving mainly to show what prodigiously clever chaps the writers were. Books on singing are especially bad examples of this. When the Psalmist wrote the verse beginning 'I opened my mouth and drew in my breath,' he showed that, musician though he was, he would have been a failure as an instructor, at all events in regard to singing. Had he been describing his exploit in a book on breath control he would have gone to work rather in this strain :

> Standing erect, but not stiffly, with the right foot pointing straight, and the left at an angle of forty-five degrees, I opened my mouth with the lips drawn back so as to give a suggestion of a pleasing smile (but not baring the gums), placed my hands lightly on the lower ribs, adjusted the epiglottis till its front elevation rested lightly against the base of the arytenoid cartilage, raised both pillars of the fauces, moved the uvula slowly backwards and forwards until it was well under way, and inspired deeply, taking care that the midriff and thorax were in alignment. I then refrained from expiration while I mentally said 'Selah!' twelve times.

Is this parody overdone? If you think so, read the following from four books on singing published in America last year. (The extracts were quoted in this journal at the time. I don't apologise for repeating them. Indeed, they ought to be printed annually, as awful examples) :

> The Pneumogastric nerve, issuing from the Medulla Oblongata, divides and ramifies in the head, neck, and thorax, and is known to have a direct influence on the voice.

> When the thoughts can be brought to a more idealic (sic) state, the physical voice will more nearly appear in its natural state, which is its best condition, while the mental or spiritual side—the larger part—is enhanced according to the plane of thought.

> For relaxed muscles I know of no greater attribute one can develop for oneself than love for one's fellowman.

> Strengthening the hypoglossal, the back, or the intrinsic laryngeal muscles is not only unnecessary but tends to superinduce objective control of the separate factors of speech and an abnormal development.

All of which may or may not be true. But why bother singers about it, and, above all, why not write plain English?

For an entertaining blend of plain English and racy American one need ask for nothing better than Sigmund Spaeth's 'The Commonsense of Music' (John Lane, 7*s.* 6*d.*). He strikes a friendly note even in his dedication :

> There is no reason for concealing any longer that this book is dedicated to K. L. S.

The Preface tells us that the book is written > . . . on the assumption that musically all men are created free, though not necessarily equal. It is addressed to potential listeners rather than to potential performers.

So are a lot of recent books on 'musical appreciation,' but most of them, though starting off with this premise, soon begin to presuppose too much musical knowledge in their readers. Mr. Spaeth makes no such mistake. He assumes no more than a general response to the appeal of music, writes about it in a commonsense way, and gives his title a double meaning by saying that this response may be called, 'without severely stretching the play on words, a 'Common Sense of Music.'

Where Mr. Spaeth breaks fresh ground is mainly in his choice of illustration. Aware that all his readers will know the hymn tunes, popular songs, and dances of to-day, whereas only a small proportion will be familiar with even the best-known classics, he draws on both sources. So we see at the opening of the page extracts from 'Ein' Feste Burg,' 'Funiculi,' 'Roses of Picardy,' Tchaikovsky's 'Song without words,' 'Moon dear,' 'O sole mio,' and 'No, no, Nora.' All is fish that comes to his net; on p. 171 he drives home a point in melodic construction with the chorus of 'Love me and the world is mine,' turn over the page and you find Handel's 'Largo' pressed into service. And so on.

Mr. Spaeth makes lavish use of cross-headings, and it goes without saying that they have a strong transatlantic flavour. (The book is the outcome of a series of 'talks' delivered in America.) Here are a few of the many captions with which he lures the reader on :

> YOU ARE THE MASTER OF YOUR TASTE. WHAT ARE YOU AFRAID OF? THEY DO IT BETTER NOW. THIS ONE DIED HARD (of a rhythmic figure that a composer worked for all it was worth). WHY ARE DATES ANYWAY? PERHAPS YOU WERE ABOVE THIS. DON'T LOSE YOUR BREATH OVER THIS. THIS MUST BE AT THE PIANO [&c.].

The neophyte is started at the very A B C, and by the time he reaches p. 229 he is being shown how melodies are combined. 'WHEN TUNE MEETS TUNE' announces Mr. Spaeth in capitals, and after a brief paragraph on 'making different tunes harmonize with each other' we see 'The long, long trail' and 'Keep the home fires burning' combined. Then come 'Yankee Doodle' and 'Dixie.' A capital bit of joinery is that of 'The Spanish Cavalier' and 'Solomon Levi,' and I must confess to genuine delight at the neatness with which 'The Old Folks at home' and Dvorák's 'Humoresque' can be worked together. Having got his readers interested in the combination of themes they hear in the street, Mr. Spaeth proceeds to show them a bit of close imitation from the 'Unfinished' Symphony (a passage as easily grasped as 'Dixie'), a sample of two-part counterpoint from 'Carmen,' and so reaches one of the finest examples in all music—the combination of the three themes in the 'Meistersinger' Overture.

He enlivens his pages with some good yarns and other funniosities. For example, speaking of 'people who see the things in a concert hall but do not hear the music,' he says, 'A poet writing about an orchestra, began thus :

> A noise arose from the orchestra, as the leader drew across
> The intestines of the agile cat the tail of the noble hoss.

But he talks good sense between all his jokes.

So incorrigible a humorist could hardly be expected not to take the opening presented by the Glossary, so we find him frequently tacking on a supplementary definition touched with sarcasm or drollery, thus :

> Pianoforte.—The full name of the popular instrument generally called a piano. Literally, soft and loud, meaning that you can play both ways on it, although this is sometimes overlooked.

Temperament is 'also a convenient substitute for artistic ability.'

Bow (of the violin) having been duly explained, Mr. Spaeth adds :

> Also, when pronounced as in 'bow-wow,' the contortion used by a musician to indicate that he likes your applause, and that if you keep it up he may do it again. Take a bow : to come back unnecessarily on the stage without intending to repeat a performance.

He conforms to the fashion of the moment by having his dig at the critics. Ensemble is 'a handy word for critics, who call "the ensemble" good or bad without leaving any one the wiser'; and Nuance is 'a pet word with the harassed music critic.'

In regard to Obbligato, the reader is exhorted to 'notice the spelling, which is correct, strange as it may seem.'

Concerning Opus, we read that:

> A composer is sometimes ashamed to call anything short of a symphony an Opus, so you will find many smaller pieces listed as Opus —, No. —, meaning that each one is only part of an ordinary job.

Recitative is what you and I know it to be; but is also

> . . . handy for filling up the holes in an opera when the composer runs out of material.

Certainly a good deal of it sounds that way.

Ma has a whimsical extra definition:

> Italian for 'but,' very convenient where reservations are necessary in giving musical directions. Also a popular syllable with writers of jazz lyrics.

Introduction is > . . . also a social formula of the green-room, which means nothing in the busy life of an artist.

Bravo ('pronounced with the vowels and the mouth open') is

> . . . the password of the professional claquer. An Italian adjective meaning that the shouter thinks the performer a brave and good fellow, or that he got a free ticket or was paid to make a noise. Bravissimo: the same, but more of it; Bravura: a spectacular style of composition meant to encourage the bravo-hounds.

'Bravo-hounds' is good. (Which reminds me: Have you observed that at every concert there is one fat approving 'bravo!' that manages to make itself heard between the last note of an item and the first hand-clap? I have never yet seen the hound that gives it tongue, though he is never far off—just as we all hear 'cuckoo,' but never see the unprincipled fowl that cucks it. He—the 'bravo-hound'—gets about the country a good bit, too, for listening on the wireless to the Shire Hall Concert at the Gloucester Festival, I heard him chipping in as usual, as patronising and oleaginous as ever. I am sure that if ever I manage to track him down I shall find he has a double-chin, a cigar, and a paunch.)

Perhaps the most interesting of Mr. Spaeth's pages are those in which he shows how the melodies of certain successful songs and dances of to-day have been 'conveyed,' either wholly or in part, from the works of great composers. A striking case is the tune of 'I'm always chasing rainbows,' which is an almost exact copy of the melody that forms the middle section of Chopin's 'Fantaisie Impromptu.' Mr. Spaeth says:

> The words of that song-hit were written by a certain Joe McCarthy, who was later engaged to do the lyrics for the musical comedy, 'Irene.' He passed on the tip to Harry Tierney, who was responsible for the music to that show, and Mr. Tierney also saw the point. They decided that this fellow Chopin probably had some more good tunes up his sleeve, and they went systematically through his piano pieces to find out.

Not in vain did Joe and Harry overhaul the fellow Chopin. They found what they wanted in the D flat Waltz—the melody that comes midway. Distorted into a fox-trot, it became the chorus of 'The Castle of Dreams,' and was the hit of 'Irene.' Melodically not a note was changed.

This seems to have been the start of a regular system of pilfering that went on unchecked till Ricordi's brought an action in regard to a tenor air from 'La Tosca,' which had been appropriated by the 'composer' of a musical show called 'Avalon.' Mr. Spaeth gives many other examples, and his chapter on this topic is a damning exposure of the origin of a good deal of the music that is claimed to be representative of America. Some of our 'advanced' musicians who a year or two ago, with a great parade of daring, wrote and lectured on jazz (pointing out its superiority to Brahms and other flat-footed Teutonic pedants) must be feeling rather subdued now. At all events, they seem to have dropped jazz as enthusiastically as they took it up.

Mr. Spaeth's racy blend of commonsense, sound judgment, and humour ought to do a lot on behalf of music. Here and there his jocosity is of the type that comes off better orally than in cold print; and I marked a few matters of fact that might be questioned. But he does with thoroughness and success what he sets out to do; he shows that, save for a negligible handful of folk, the response to music is universal, and he strikes out a new line in his use of the feebler type of music. Instead of ignoring or ridiculing it, he turns it to good account. He treats it as ground on which he and the least cultivated of musicians may meet; shows its kinship (however remote) to the great things in music; and makes it clear that nobody need remain ouside the appeal of the best. The entire freedom from snobbishness is perhaps the best feature in this genial mentor.

The high horse was already badly gone at the knees; Mr. Spaeth has quite knocked the poor old steed off his pins.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XII.—Robert Johnson

Regarding the biography of Robert Johnson, details are scant; and Dr. Ernest Walker, in his 'History of Music in England' (2nd ed., 1924), is content with three lines: 'Robert Johnson, a Scottish priest who fled to England, and seems to have settled at Windsor, and perhaps to have acted as chaplain to Anne Boleyn.'

Much confusion has arisen over Johnson, for there was another Robert Johnson some twenty-five years later. There was also a John Johnson, as well as an Edward Johnson. Henry Davey, in his 'History of English Music' (2nd ed., 1921), adds to the confusion by telling us that 'in 1575, Robert Johnson was one of the musicians to Sir T. Kytson, and was lent to the Earl of Leicester for the Kenilworth pageants.'

Of course it was Edward Johnson who had been in the service of Sir Thomas Kytson at Hengrave Hall, not far from Bury St. Edmund's, and who graduated B. Mus. at Cambridge in 1594. Another Robert Johnson was Rector of St. Matthew's, Friday Street, London, from 1546 till his death on July 9, 1548, but not the composer.

As regards the statement that Robert Johnson was chaplain to Anne Boleyn, there is no foundation for it; and certainly his name does not appear in the official records for the years 1530-36. Moreover, no early authority is available for the statement—which, apparently, was first put forth by Stafford Smith in the late 18th century.

As far as recent research goes, Robert Johnson was 'a Scottish priest who, as Thomas Wodde, Vicar of St. Andrew's, writes, 'was born in Dunse [near Berwick-on-Tweed], and fled to England long before the Reformation for accusation of heresy.' This statement is found in the St. Andrew's Psalter, written and illuminated in 1566 by Wodde (Wood), four part-books, and a supplement; and the books contain Johnson's Latin Motet, 'Domine, in virtute'—a Motet which must have been popular in the last years of Henry VIII., as copies of it are to be found at the Bodleian, at Christ Church, Oxford, at the British Museum, and at St. Michael's, Tenbury.

Johnson was apparently in England from 1536 to 1560, and his adherence to the old faith is tolerably evidenced in the large number of Latin Motets he composed, including four in honour of the Blessed Virgin. Probably his most important Motet is 'Ave Dei Patris filia,' which was composed circa 1540. It is found complete in MS. at the Bodleian Mus. School, e 1-5, and at Tenbury, and is set for five voices. Mr. H. B. Collins says that it is 'a lengthy composition, in the style of Fayrfax's "Æternae laudis lilium," running to over three hundred bars.' It has seven distinct divisions, of which the first two are for three voices, in perfect time; the third and fourth for five; the fifth again for three, in imperfect time; the sixth for four; and the seventh, and longest, for five. The writing, as might be expected, is of a freer and more advanced character than that of Fayrfax, especially in the five-part sections, and it frequently rises to considerable heights of genuine musical expression, especially in the concluding section, 'Esto nobis via recta ad æterne gaudi, ubi pax est et gloria; O gloriosissime, semper Virgo Marie.' The words are not liturgical, yet along with the present setting, which is probably the latest, there are others by Fayrfax, Merbecke, Taverner, and Tallis, as well as an anonymous example in the Lambeth MS.

Another important setting by Johnson is his five-part music for Psalm xx., 'Domine, in virtute tue lactabitur rex,' which, Mr. Collins suggests, 'may possibly have been written for the Coronation of King Edward VI.,' but it is well to note that there are two different versions of this Psalm in Add. MSS. 30,480-4, suggesting that the work was re-written by the composer.

Burney has made us familiar with Johnson's five-part setting of the Easter Responsory, 'Dum transissit Sabbatum,' the bass being a plainchant Canto fermo. Johnson also composed a four-part setting of this Motet, which is in MS. at the British Museum (Add. MSS. 17,802-5), and Mr. Collins considers it a more beautiful example than the five-part setting printed by Burney. His four-part setting of the Psalm, 'Deus misereatur nostri' (Add. MSS. 30,480-4), displays sound writing.

In the British Museum are lute arrangements of two of Johnson's Motets, viz., 'Ave Dei Patris'* and 'Ave plena gratia,' while the Mulliner MS., circa 1560, has four organ solos, 'In Nomine,' 'Defyled is my name,' 'Full wrongfully,' and 'Benedicam Domino.' In Add. MSS. 30,480-84 there is an arrangement of his 'Deus misereatur' for string quartet. In Add. MSS. 36,993 is a dance-tune by him, for four viols, 'The Temporizer,' and in Add. MSS. 31,390 (circa 1578) are a string quintet, entitled, 'A Knell,' and settings for five viols of 'Gaude, virgo' and 'In Nomine.' Three of his sacred pieces, in English, 'Relieve us, O Lord, that are weak and feeble,' 'O Eternal God,' and 'I give you a new commandment'—are printed in Day's 'Certaine Notes' (1560) and 'Mornyng and Evenyng Prayer' (1565). In Add. MSS. 4,900 are two sacred pieces by Johnson, included in a collection for treble voices, with lute accompaniment by Taverner, Tallis, Shepherd, John Heywood, and R. Edwards.

Among Johnson's secular compositions is the well-known 'Defyled is my name,' absurdly said to have been composed on Anne Boleyn, and printed by Sir John Hawkins as 'Complaint of Anne Boleyn.' Others are 'Come, pale-faced Death,' 'My little pretty one,' and 'Tye the mare, tomboy.' This last song is found with the music in the Harleian Collection (No. 7,578), and, as Ritson informs us, 'is particularly alluded to in the passing merrie Interlude of "Tom Tyler and his wife," first printed in 1578.' The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book has an Allemande of his, worked on by Giles Farnaby, and two other Allemandes.

In the new constitution of Rochester Cathedral, under Henry VIII., on June 18, 1541, Robert Johnson—apparently the composer—was appointed third Prebendary, an office which he held for six years, and resigned on August 14, 1547. Early in 1559 he appears as a petty Canon of Windsor (as stated in the Christ Church Part-Books, 979-983). He died in 156½.

* This Motet has recently (1925) been edited by Mr. H. B. Collins as No. 4 of his 'Latin Church Music of the Polyphonic Schools' (Chester).

Occasional Notes

Several correspondents have written pointing out that we were wrong in speaking of Dr. Fellowes's edition of madrigals as being subsidised by the Carnegie Trust: Dr. Fellowes bore the financial burden himself until his publishers shared it. We are glad to make this matter clear, and to express regret for the slip. The facts merely add to the debt English music owes to Dr. Fellowes. Some of our readers, however, seem to imagine that criticism should be silent in the face of such self-sacrifice. We do not agree. Any kind of publication, no matter how altruistic, must stand the test of crit cism, especially when the venture is of the magnitude and importance of the one under discussion. The revival of early English music is a vital matter of public interest, and its success must not be hindered by undue tenderness for the feelings of those engaged in it. Any kind of musical activity worth its salt has everything to gain and nothing to lose from frank and fair discussion of its methods.

One other point has to be made clear, if we may judge from one or two letters we have received. Our 'Occasional Notes' on this subject expressed our own personal view, and were not inspired by Messrs. Novello, or any other publisher or editor. We were moved to write by a desire for fair play, and by our strong dislike of the present-day tendency to speak and act as if all modern musical activity of importance, especially in the field of research, has been confined to the past few years. The letter from Dr. Fellowes which appears, with comments, on page 927, winds up a discussion that has been, we hope, neither unfriendly nor unprofitable.

There is little need to remind readers of this journal of the fine work done by the Philharmonic Choir since its formation in 1919. Public support, however, has been inadequate, and as a result the policy of the Choir will be modified for the coming season. It will be somewhat less adventurous, though not necessarily less interesting in results. The inclusion of such familiar and popular works as 'The Messiah' and Mozart's 'Requiem' should extend the influence of the Choir considerably, both among hearers and singers. The former work is to be sung at Queen's Hall on November 30, with a powerful 'draw' in the group of soloists (Dorothy Silk, Margaret Balfour, Walter Hyde, and Robert Radford). The orchestra will be the Royal Philharmonic. The 'Requiem' will share the programme on March 11 with Delius's 'Song of the High Hills' and Bax's 'The Breastplate of St. Patrick.' The Choir Committee appeals for an increased number of honorary members, who, in return for a mere guinea, will be admitted to all ordinary rehearsals, and will receive two tickets for each concert, choosing the seats for themselves regardless of price—subject of course to such seats not being already applied for. If there is any better musical value for a guinea than this, we shall be glad to hear of it. Mr. D. Ritson Smith, the hon. secretary (70, Esmond Road, Bedford Park, W.4), will answer inquiries, and supply forms of application. We note that the form invites the applicant to state at once what seats will be desired, so promptness will bring its own reward. It is to be hoped that this attractive and accommodating scheme will bring such support as will enable the Choir to revert next year to its original policy of specialising in new and unfamiliar works.

In fairness to Mr. Joseph Holbrooke we pass on his disclaimer (appearing in a provincial paper) to the effect that he 'has not undertaken to write a work for jazz band that will petrify the critics.'

The Radio Times of September 4 contained a good deal of new light on Purcell in an article by Dr. Purcell-Taylor, who claims to be a lineal descendant of the composer. If his claims are well-founded, we can only express surprise that he appears to know so little about his great ancestor, and still less about his music. He starts by telling his readers that

> . . . Henry Purcell was of the oldest family of France, and his name should properly be spelt Pourcel. He has no connection with any English or Irish families of the same name.

Purcell has long since been claimed by the Irish. Was he French after all? We should like to hear the subject debated by Dr. Grattan Flood and Dr. Purcell-Taylor. We have little doubt as to the result—though we should still persist in regarding Purcell as an English composer. The Purcells, we are told, 'came to England to escape religious persecution'; they were glass manufacturers, and at the time of their arrival 'the only glass made here was the commonest window-glass and drinking glasses,' the monopoly of the better kind of glass-making having been sold by the English Government to France and Italy. The Pourcels, thus deprived of their business, > . . . were compelled to turn to account their musical talents, which were of a high order, but had up to that time been only a source of amusement in their family circle.

After some loose information on the state of musical culture in England at the time, Purcell's descendant sheds some startling light on composers' methods:

> The professional musician was even better trained, for he had to extemporise as he went along from a figured bass. How many persons now know what that is? I had better explain. A musical composer in those days composed first his base (now mis-spelled bass), the notes being such as were within the compass of the bass viol or the ordinary male voice. On that base he erected the other voices, soprano, alto, tenor, and the parts for the instruments in chords according to his own fancy, obeying the canons of musical composition.

One expects a writer on music (especially a Purcell) to know enough to be able to avoid confusion between ground bass and figured bass. Does he seriously think that 'Nymphs and Shepherds,' 'The Knotting Song,' 'I attempt from love's sickness,' and a hundred other delightful songs had their basses written first? That Purcell could compose beautiful tunes over a ground bass is proved by such exquisite examples as 'When I am laid in earth' and the 'Evening Hymn,' but the method was never a normal one with him or with any other of the world's great tune-writers.

Passing by some casual talk about playing from figured-bass, church music, &c., we come to this:

> Why is it that now Henry Purcell's music is scarcely ever heard? The first answer is that it is difficult. I have asked Church organists to sit down at my little organ and put a piece of Purcell's in front of them, and they have said: 'I cannot play that—it is too difficult—it would want practice,' and so on.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> Henry Purcell's music is much esteemed in Germany and is better known there than here. Moreover, the only correct modern editions of his music are those prepared in Germany. This last fact gives the key to the problem—it is the lack of cheap editions and of correct editions that prevents it being popular. The original editions are now very scarce and costly. The latest correct editions are those of the Musical Antiquarian Society, published nearly eighty years ago, and they also are now scarce and costly.

This is what Mr. Swiveller would call a floorer! Evidently Dr. Purcell-Taylor has never heard of the Purcell Society and its twenty-three folio volumes of Purcell's music, produced, under the best possible conditions of scholarship and publication, during the past fifty years. However, he has been busy with a crusade on his own account:

> When I first started the revival of Purcell's music about forty-five years ago, it was the rarest thing to see his name on a programme or to find anyone acquainted with it. However, by fifteen years' steady persevering effort I did manage to arouse some interest, but far more in the Latin countries than in England.

We cannot square this with the assertion as to German appreciation and 'correct modern editions' of Purcell — unless Dr. Purcell-Taylor regards Germany as one of the Latin countries.

Readers have frequently called our attention to the absurd statements on music that appear in the Radio Times. The limit has surely been reached by this article on Henri Pourcel. (Be calm, Dr. Grattan Flood!)

Owing to an unexpected demand on our space we are obliged to hold over 'Musical Notes from Abroad,' a number of Letters to the Editor, and some Answers to Correspondents.

New Music

SONGS

Particular interest attaches to the issue by the Oxford University Press of six songs by Bernard van Dieren, for this composer has hitherto been something of a Bunbury, in that his friends have talked freely of him as a genius, whilst outsiders have had little or no chance of making his acquaintance. It is only, of course, to a very limited extent that one can form any opinion from six songs, but as these were written at various times between 1909 and the present day, there may be some chance of discerning developments of style, if such there be.

Four settings are of English poets—Shelley, Shakespeare, Skelton, and James I. of Scotland—and the other two are of Victor Hugo, and one cannot but notice in every case the care and sensitiveness with which the poem is approached. The look of the music, owing to the number of accidentals, is alarming; but the harmony itself is mostly not very terrible. One can see its origins easily enough, and they are often pretty commonplace. What makes the songs unsatisfactory is that the composer, while he seems to be tending to atonality, is yet clinging to a definite key system. The end of 'Les Contemplations' (No. 1) is an instance. It is easy to follow the drift of the last two lines if we regard them as being frankly without feeling of key. But when in the last bar the thing is jerked back sharply, with a thoroughly hackneyed chromatic cadence, into A major, it makes the preceding lines sound aimless—and not intentionally, successfully aimless, but just incompetently so. The same thing is true of 'Les Rayons'; the vocal part closes in what is clearly D major, but a postscript, derived from the introduction to the song, hustles us in five bars back to E♭, where we arrive somewhat bewildered. It may be the vision of a genius: it may, on the other hand, be only a gaucherie of the composer. Certainly it does not seem right and inevitable in the way that good music always is. It isn't that the 'modernness' of the songs shocks or surprises, but rather that they are not quite modern enough. The idiom is too mixed. Passages of charming, quite simple stuff like the beginning of 'Les Rayons' make subsequent more dissonant effects sound harsh, while these highly-coloured passages make simpler ones sound tame. It is true that the opening of this song demands an atmosphere of sleep, from which we are to awake; but this effect could quite well be got within the limits of one style or another. One ought not to fall asleep a pupil of Grieg, and wake up a pupil of Schönberg.

Perhaps the most successful of the songs is 'Take, oh! take those lips away,' which is more of a complete whole than some of the others. And 'With margerain gentle,' a light, scherzo-like song, with a good pair of performers would sound charming. It is a relief in this and the other fast-moving song, 'Spring Song of the Birds,' to find the texture lighter. The comparative 'thickness' of the slower songs is apt to be cloying, particularly so because it is difficult in this style of music to keep the rhythm alive. This is specially true of 'Take, oh! take those lips away.'

Turning to E. J. Moeran, we find the work of a man who has obviously solved his problem of style and found his natural, inevitable idiom; and this crystallises our feelings about van Dieren. Moeran's 'A Dream of Death' begins quietly and works up to a climax as effective as one can want, within the limits of the medium which the composer has chosen. And while the music catches the spirit of the poem skilfully, it avoids the slight suspicion of affectation that hangs about some of Yeats's poetry, and infects some musical settings of it. Another good song, also from the Oxford University Press, is 'Angel Spirits of Sleep,' by Robert Bridges and E. L. Bainton. The swaying rhythmical figure which persists through this song is specially attractive, and is so deftly managed that it never becomes monotonous. It is something of a feat to have touched these words without breaking their fragile charm. E. Kendal Taylor's 'White in the Moon,' from the same publishers, is not so sure in its handling as these other two songs, but has a good deal to say. The music has strength and reticence, and the atmosphere of verse 2 is strikingly caught. The song contains, perhaps, too much material for its length, but it only just misses being a really fine thing.

From Cramer's come three songs by Martin Shaw. 'The Little Waves of Breffny' opens with a fine, broad phrase which makes the contrasting sections on pages 2, 4, and 7 sound somewhat commonplace. But it is an effective song, giving scope to both performers. 'The Conjuration' is a trifle, in a style unusual to this composer, and some of its effects, such as the 'bell-ninths' with which it closes, are hackneyed. But the song does not depend entirely on these. It has a delicacy and charm that will make it attractive for a time. Mr. Shaw's arrangement of 'Ye Banks and Braes' seems too elaborate for a simple tune, which needs little if any accompaniment, and makes its points more effectively when these are not heavily underlined.

'Evoe,' a prose-poem by 'Fiona McLeod' has got from John Foulds the setting it deserves. Words and music alike are 'full of sound and fury.' But if only on account of its vehemence the song might be made to sound impressive by a fine singer and an energetic pianist. With it, from Paxton's, comes Cyril Jenkins's 'My love is like a red, red rose,' which is something of a shock. It is a commonplace tune with commonplace harmonies, inadequate to the poem and unworthy of its composer; and it seems too casual even to become a best-seller, qualified as it is in some ways for this fate.

Austin Dobson's knack of blending sentiment and humour is pleasantly shown in his poem 'On a Nankin Plate,' and the same combination is happily achieved in Harvey Grace's setting, which comes from Novello. Some very attractive and unexpected effects are got by means of simple but skilfully managed changes of key. This house also publishes 'A Sprig of Heather,' four Irish tunes set to words by F. W. Harvey, and lightly but charmingly arranged by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer. There is little need to recommend these songs, which were heard all over England last week, when their first performance, by Miss Flora Woodman, at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, was broadcast.

From New York (H. W. Gray Co.) come Six Negro Spirituals, collected and arranged by Jean Taylor, which will be welcomed by those who like spirituals. For some of us there is always a suspicion about them. Sincere as they undoubtedly are for their originators, they sometimes seem less so among English people, who listen to them with a mixture of religious sentiment and amusement at their 'quaintness.' Nor can one help feeling that they owe some popularity to their coming so near to jazz music. This is obviously not true of the very best of them; but it is most noticeable that the combination of superficially popular music with religious sentiment is irresistible to some minds. Spirituals are, moreover, ineffective if sung in ordinary London English: and the attempts of English singers to imitate negro dialect, even when not actually ludicrous, involve an affectation and insincerity which are out of place in this kind of song.

Dr. Heinrich Möller is issuing through Schotts a series of ten volumes of folk-songs of all European nations. Three volumes of this set come up for notice, the first containing Russian songs, the second English, and the third, songs of various Celtic peoples. It is a fine scheme, and one, obviously, that might be of the greatest use both to singers and students. Beautiful things are to be found in all these volumes—though some of the arrangements might be severely criticised—and it is interesting to get the bird's-eye view of national characteristics which such a scheme offers. But we suspect that for serious study these volumes will have to be pretty freely supplemented from more original sources; most certainly German students will need a great many additions if they are to get any real idea of English folk-song. 'The Minstrelsy of England,' with Edmondstoune Duncan's rather heavy-handed harmonizations, is freely drawn upon, and some good 16th-, 17th-, and 18th-century traditional songs are included. But there is a serious dearth of real folk-song, and very many of the most highly characteristic English tunes (perhaps for reasons of copyright) are missing. The student would gain from this volume, therefore, only an inadequate idea of the wealth and individuality of our folk-song inheritance. The arrangements, too, serve to show how finely suitable and racy are those of Cecil Sharp and Vaughan Williams, whose work is not represented. The Editor cannot be blamed for not including specimens the publishing rights of which he was perhaps unable to obtain. Unfortuately, none the less, the absence of some obvious things detracts from the value of this collection, at any rate as regards the English volume.

Paterson's of Edinburgh are publishing a set of solos from Bach's Cantatas, sacred and secular, of which the first four numbers are already issued. They show the great man in cheerful, and sometimes boisterous, humour. Most amusing, and a fine baritone solo, is that from the 'Coffee' Cantata, 'Has a father with his children not a hundred thousand cares?'—a subject, anyway, on which Bach wrote with knowledge. The same publishers send four more songs 'From the Hebrides,' by Marjory Kennedy Fraser. And lastly, there is Schumann's 'Frauenliebe' Cycle, translated by Dawson Freer, and published by Joseph Williams. Translation is always a problem: here it is especially so, because the heavy German sentiment is even heavier than usual, and cannot but sound unnatural in English. The translator, however, has avoided bathos, and has made his translation singable, without doing violence to the musical text. T. A.

STRING ORCHESTRA

Two pieces have been added to 'The Amateur Orchestra' series of Messrs. Joseph Williams—'Air' from Gluck's 'Orpheus' and Allegretto from Schubert's Symphony in D. Both are well-arranged by the Editor, Mr. Adam Carse, and fulfil admirably the object of the publishers, namely, to provide school orchestras with music which is at once of good quality and easy to perform. In the Air from 'Orpheus,' the second violin part consists of accompaniment only, while the viola matches and blends with the first violin, which sings the melody. This plan will teach viola players the fallacy of believing that theirs is a 'cushy' job; but perhaps an interchange of responsibilities between violas and seconds might have resulted in greater variety of colour.

A 'Preghiera,' by Albert von Doenhoff, freely transcribed for strings by Michael Press (G. Schirmer), has little to commend it. I have not seen the original work of Doenhoff, but the main lines which must be retained in this transcription suggest something distinctly artless, redolent of the sentimentality which was the test—or, at any rate, one of the tests—of popular music long ago. There is little to be gained by trying to 'thicken' such thin broth, as Michael Press has attempted to do. You can make it heavier and muddy; you cannot give it real body and substance. The 'Preghiera' has an air of modernity; at heart it is as old as another 'Preghiera'—'La Prière d'une Vierge.' To my thinking, all heartful outpourings of the kind are best on the pianoforte. The string orchestra and the string quartet are instruments ill-fitted for such tasks. B. V.

VIOLIN PIECES

J. Stuart Archer's 'Berceuse' (Paxton) has a pleasant lilt, and, arranged for the violin by Léon J. Fontaine, should make a fairly attractive interlude between the study of more serious works. The fingering of the violin part, however, is open to objection on the ground that the frequent use of the same finger in going from a low note to a higher one, suggests competition with the sliding trombone of a jazz band. That the thing can be done gracefully must be admitted, but only by players advanced enough to choose their own fingering. I can imagine nothing more painful than a portamento on bars 7 and 8, as indicated, coming from a half-baked fiddler. Far more finished, and in every way commendable, is the Nocturne of Colin Macleod Campbell (Novello), which, by the way, has also been adapted for the 'cello. It is a straightforward, well-proportioned piece of music, which possesses the rare merits of simplicity and sincerity. B. V.

VIOLIN METHODS

In 'Problems of Tone and Technique' (Paxton) the author, W. Sachse, has touched upon one aspect of violin study and practice which older pedagogues were inclined to overlook. The average teacher of forty, or even thirty, years ago, never gave a thought to the dangers of excessive fatigue. The heroic method was the only one in use, and the pupil was urged to work and go on working. Not all teachers followed this practice, and Auer's 'The Violin as I teach it' proves that, at any rate, those who learnt from him or taught under his guidance knew better than to tempt providence and tire the muscles of the hand after nature had intimated the need for rest. Unquestionably the old plan has been the cause of much mischief, and it is gratifying to see the younger generation being brought up in a different way. Individual requirements need greater consideration than they got under a régime which apparently aimed at the survival of the fittest. The work under review takes into account individual difficulties—that is its chief claim to consideration. Instead of starting from the idea that all that matters is the overcoming of the physical weakness of a finger, the author realises the importance of keeping the mind alert and in control of the work which the fingers must do. Hence his general plan has variety at its basis, and proceeds gradually with many a lengthy explanation. Of course the new method will not succeed in making a fiddler of a man who has not the necessary qualifications, any more than the old method could have succeeded. But it may save the qualified student some bitter moments and humiliating experiences. There is nothing to be gained and much to be lost by forcing nature—that is the lesson modern teachers apparently have learnt. B. V.

CHAMBER MUSIC

A special interest attaches to any new work by Eugène Goossens. Amongst the younger composers he is one who has never fallen below a certain respectable standard, and if the great promise of his early work has not been so far completely fulfilled, there is no ground for scepticism. The greatest artists do not come to maturity in a day. A 'Pastorale and Harlequinade,' for flute, oboe, and pianoforte (now published by Curwen), is, as commercial people say, well up to sample. We all know with what skill and grace the composer can paint the whimsical mood of a Harlequinade, and what rich harmonic colour to expect in a pastoral piece. These are, of course, trifles; but they are the trifles of an expert craftsman.

Adela Maddison's Quintet for two violins, viola, violoncello, and pianoforte (Curwen) could not possibly be mistaken for great music. I am, however, one who frankly confesses to a partiality for small beer. More potent beverages have their merits and their rights. But surely there is something to be said also for 'the little creature,' all modesty and good nature, who will harm no man. It is only when small beer bears the label of some famous vintage wine that we feel disconcerted, since we don't know whether the host is conscious of his error or whether he is giving us in good faith what he believes to be something choice and rare. And this Quintet leaves us very doubtful. Unquestionably the composer aims high, and there is merit in hitching one's wagon to a star. But is there not merit also to be won in acknowledging that we are more familiar with the earth than with the stars, and in doing that which we can do with our whole heart rather than in attempting to follow an ideal which evades our grasp?

Unless I am mistaken, Arthur Benjamin's Sonatina for violin and pianoforte (Oxford University Press) is the first work of the kind the composer has published. I find in it much that attracts and charms me. There is a genuine feeling for the freedom of modern harmony, and a certain sense of style and proportion. If the Scherzo seems a little too brief to hold firmly the balance between the first movement and the Rondo, I feel inclined to ascribe it to the honesty of a composer who refuses to dilute his music by the usual methods—neither more honest nor attractive than the milkman's. On the other hand, I am not particularly struck by the tenths of the pianoforte opening the third movement, and occasionally the harmony is needlessly over-elaborate. Much modern music suffers in this way through lack of simplicity and clarity, and it is all to Benjamin's credit that he succumbs but rarely to the common malady. His 5-4's ring true enough, however, and the general impression is one of considerable promise. B. V.

CHURCH MUSIC

C. E. Miller's 'Missa Sancti Augustini' (Faith Press) is for unaccompanied singing. It is well written, is of only moderate difficulty, and should prove effective. The Creed is omitted, but both forms of the Kyrie are included. The treble D in the bottom line of p. 2 should be dotted.

A feature of Henry G. Ley's setting of the Lord's Prayer (Oxford University Press) is its freshness of treatment, both rhythmic and harmonic. For this reason, and also because it presents no difficulties, it should prove welcome. It may be used either for unison singing with accompaniment, or for S.A.T.B. unaccompanied.

Two numbers of Boosey's Modern Festival Series, under the general editorship of Herbert Hughes, are carol settings by Kenneth G. Finlay: 'When Christ was born of Mary free' and 'Angels from the realms of glory.' Both are for S.A.T.B. unaccompanied. The first has an optional faux-bourdon setting for the third verse, with melody in tenor and bass. They are excellently written, and deserve to be widely known. The music appears in both notations. The same composer has also written an admirable tune (S.A.T.B.) with an alternative faux-bourdon setting for use with two hymns: 'O Spirit of the Living God' and 'Almighty Father, Who dost give' (Oxford University Press).

A 'Service of Thanksgiving and Memorial,' compiled by Hugh Blair (Paxton), includes three well-known hymns suitable for use before the Service—'Soldiers, who are Christ's below,' 'O God, our Help in ages past,' and 'The Son of God goes forth to war'—Responses, Collects (from the collection of the Headmaster of Uppingham), Dr. Blair's anthem, 'Rest and Peace Eternal,' for S.A.T.B., concluding hymns, and a three-fold Amen, also by Dr. Blair. An arrangement for the organ of the Last Post and Reveille, for use if necessary, may also be obtained separately.

Choirmasters should note that the National Institute for the Blind has now issued (through Novello) its third Carol Booklet. Hitherto both words and music have been by blind poets and musicians. This year's booklet is made up of contributions specially composed by Norman Cocker, G. D. Cunningham, William Faulkes, T. W. Hanforth, Arthur Meale, and Dr. W. Prendergast. Readers may be reminded that a free grant of the necessary copies will gladly be made to Church choirs or carol parties willing to set apart a collection in aid of the work conducted by the National Institute for the Blind. Applications for free copies (stating how many required) should be addressed to the Secretary, Music Department, National Institute for the Blind, 224, Great Portland Street, W.1. Carol Booklets Nos. 1 and 2 are also available, if required, on the same terms.

The Church Music Society has just issued (through the S.P.C.K. and the Oxford University Press) a second edition of its Choral Festival Book No. 1 (Order of Evensong). This helpful little book, in order to be suitable for choirs of varying capacity, contains only the 'plain parts' of the service—Responses (Sarum form), Psalms (both plainsong and Anglican settings), and hymns. Services and anthems can be added as required, and graded lists of suitable music are included. G. G.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Some capital teaching material will be found in a number of pianoforte albums recently issued. They range in difficulty from Primary to Lower Division standard. For beginners, Ruth Tanner's 'Happy Days at the Piano' (Lyon & Hall, Brighton and Eastbourne) may be recommended. The pieces are short and easily graded, and the composer has also provided words to fit each tune. Though signatures of one flat and one sharp are used, no black notes occur in the first dozen pieces. In No. 4 the treble B flat requires a natural. In the last piece the tune would lie much more comfortably under the hand without the rather fussy changing of fingers on repeated notes. 'Two Little Pieces,' by R. H. Walthew (Paxton), are rather more difficult than the above. The first—Andante moderato—gives practice in expressive melody playing in each hand and in hand staccato in the più mosso section. The second—Allegretto—requires dainty playing and phrasing.

Two books by E. Beck-Slinn are more advanced. 'Seaside Sketches' (Bosworth) are four fluently-written pieces in two parts. They are excellent for developing clean playing in each hand. No. 3, 'A Romp,' is a capital study in quick repeated notes. In this, and in the first and last of the set, nimble finger-work is called for. In 'Masks and Faces' (Joseph Williams), Mr. Beck-Slinn portrays 'The Arrival of the Guests,' 'Columbine' (Scherzando), 'The Black Knight' (Alla Marcia), 'Pierrette,' and 'Harlequin.' The first and last require crisp, lively playing These bright little pieces should appeal to young people, and might profitably be given to those whose rhythmical sense needs quickening.

There is nothing blatant about 'A little Ragtime,' by John C. Holliday (Joseph Williams). It is a quietly-written little piece, mainly in four-part harmony, which, apart from its rhythmical value, would make a pleasant study in legato playing. Soundly written, and forming excellent recreation for elementary pupils, are four little pieces under one cover, 'Thoughts in Tune,' by T. Haigh (Paxton). They are usefully varied in style, and the left hand is well catered for.

For pupils just out of the primary stage, Leslie Fly's attractive suite 'Our Island Story' (Forsyth) may be cordially recommended. The story is told in fifteen short pianoforte solos and two duets. For technical purposes these are admirable. They range in length from a few bars to a full page, and are widely varied in style. Musically, their general level is high, and the harmonic treatment is frequently distinctive. G. G.

In reviewing Alec Rowley's 'Andante Religioso' for violoncello solo, strings, organ, and drums, in the September Musical Times (p. 822), the writer omitted to state that the work is published by Novello.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Musicians and Mummers.' By Herman Klein.

[Cassell, 21*s*.]

There is an equable tone about Mr. Klein's writing which seems to tell us that life has behaved very kindly to him. He has done what he most wanted to do, and has had the friendships he desired. In the course of these memories of a long and successful life no obstacle obtrudes. People have been almost uniformly charming towards him, and circumstances propitious. We know that in such cases there is always a give and a take. The world gave amiability, no doubt, in exchange for amiability received. Through all the years of his cruising in London theatres and concert-rooms he seems to have found wonderfully unruffled waters. We detect a distinct note of surprise in his account of his arrival at New York in 1901, when all unknowingly he stepped into a feud between a somewhat disreputable musical journal and a composer of operettas. It was as though he had not known such things could be.

Perhaps the happy temperament of our author is inclined to rob of vividness his accounts of the leading lights of the past whom he knew so well. The names of his friends make a splendid array, but with a natural kindliness he is often content to tell us that this or that great man or famously-fascinating woman was simply charming. Certainly he succeeds in making the impression that the personages of artistic London in the 'seventies and 'eighties were singularly bland and genial.

To protest much is not in the part of such a writer, but Mr. Klein's book does ever so mildly protest against the unfair modern disparagement of that period, and particularly of its musical achievements. Such justice was due. The disparagement has been overdone.

Mr. Klein has been a musical critic for about fifty years, and has heard everything and everyone. He protests, and his words carry weight, that the mid-Victorians were not so benighted as the neo-Georgians fondly imagine them. In some ways they were a good deal better off than this enlightened generation. Mr. Klein's memories embrace season after season of grand opera—grand beyond the dreams of the 1920's. There were singers then! And, moreover, all that were in the world aspired to shine in London.

The reader cannot but be impressed by the names in the great operatic companies assembled by Gye, Mapleson, and Augustus Harris. He is still more sympathetically struck by the story of Carl Rosa's exploits. Harris was in the grip of a fashionable public which wanted brilliant and expensive shows—that is, foreign operas with foreign casts. But Carl Rosa set out for something less ephemeral. This Hamburger meant to put English opera on its feet, and his achievements within a few years were remarkable. He was the man for the unresolved problem—but he died too soon (at forty-seven), and there was no one to succeed him. The well-meaning Company that still bears his name is a far cry from the admirable band of singers who in the early 1880's were so hopefully producing—and with definite public encouragement—operas by all the best of the young men, Stanford, Mackenzie, Corder, and Goring Thomas.

Then Mr. Klein went year after year to the St. James's Hall chamber concerts, and that brings him to pay tribute to another Victorian whom we would gladly have with us to-day—Arthur Chappell, whose good deeds should give that name a lasting place of honour in the history of English music. There is to-day no lack of chamber music in London, but still we have nothing quite like the permanent institution of the 'Pops.'

Mr. Klein does not over-glorify the age of his youth. He suffered too much from the futility of the ballad concert to deplore its decline. But he reminds us, all the same, that in the 'seventies the 'concert-world' was not afflicted by unwanted recitalists.

He saw all the Gilbert and Sullivan operas come to light, and on the strength of that alone he will be understood if he refuses to subscribe to the superiority of an age that has no Sullivan. Not only have we no Sullivan; Mr. Klein does not hide his opinion that recent attempts to sing his music have been pretty poor.

The 'seventies were also the golden age of choral singing in London. 'Choral singing to-day is palpably inferior to what it was before the close of the 19th century.' For Mr. Klein the best of choral singing was given by the Henry Leslie choir—

> . . . perfect in its unity and balance, its precision of attack, its delicate gradations of strength, and, perhaps above all, the miraculous beauty and tenuity of its pianissimo.

It ended its career in 1887, and the Sacred Harmonic Society soon followed it. The London Bach Choir was in those days brilliantly efficient.

Those who have not thought of Promenade concerts dissociated from the names of Robert Newman and Henry Wood may read in Mr. Klein's book of the older Covent Garden 'Proms.' with their regular Beethoven and Wagner nights and their throngs of devotees. In a word, then, this amiable and unassuming chronicle contains a salutary lesson for a rather conceited musical generation. We ought to be doing better things in all directions before we earn the right to scoff at the 'seventies.

C.

'The Organ Works of Rheinberger.' By Harvey Grace.

[Novello, 5*s*.]

I think most organists have been a little irritated, some time or other, by friends who took it for granted that there is no music for the organ that matters, outside Bach and a little Mendelssohn, until the advent of the younger French and German schools. That attitude arose from ignorance, of course; but I wonder if we organists do as much as we might, consistently, to enlighten our friends in the pews.

Any organist who has gone through the score of Sonatas that Rheinberger left, besides his smaller pieces, and who can play them with spirit, in a workmanlike manner, need have small fear of the reproaches of musical friends. He will, in addition, have given himself a very great amount of pleasure, and have improved his playing more than a little. These Sonatas, save for a rare dullish movement here and there, are full of meat, and the exposition of their good points has clearly been a labour of love to the author of this book, who, making acquaintance with Rheinberger and Bach together, when he was a choir-boy, has found that 'their music has stood the test of constant usage far better than that of any other composers.'

I take it that there are few guides who are more affectionately trusted for their sanity of judgment, broad-mindedness, and knowledge, than Mr. Harvey Grace; and so I have no doubt that this book (reprinted from papers in the Musical Times) will be kept by every organ 'fan' who reads these lines. Those who know the music will enjoy the exposition of its qualities, which does not lack the touch of enthusiasm that bespeaks the real music-lover keen on helping anyone who is interested, to taste the joys for himself; those who do not know Rheinberger have here matter that, with the plentiful illustrations, will show them how to get the best out of the Sonatas, and cannot fail to stimulate many to search for beauties in other departments of music. Here is something of the gusto that makes Grove's book on the Beethoven Symphonies so enjoyable, apart even from what it teaches.

Mr. Grace comments on Rheinberger's excellence as a writer of variations. Why are there so few good modern sets for the organ, of some scope? If we had more with the Brahmsian concentration and breadth of a set by Harford Lloyd (Augener), that I remember struck me as unusually good a few years ago, we should be happy. There is no form in which player and audience are more interested, when the variations really have meat in them. Rheinberger, both in his fugues and in his variations (especially in his ground-bass treatment), seems to me to have more than a tincture of those Brahmsian qualities, and of the big-chested freedom of stride of Bach. Some of the meditative slow movements, and certain of the short pieces, are as good as anything ever written in that kind for the organ.

Mr. Grace rightly emphasises the value of the hundred or so smaller pieces as voluntaries and recital items. It passes comprehension why so many organists continue to throw to their congregations the small change of compositions by inferior men, when these musicianly Monologues, Characteristic Pieces, Meditations, and so on, are available.

The difficulties in Rheinberger are of precisely the right kind, that inspire and do not repel the keen player. Other composers—e.g., Reger—will sometimes present enormous meals that leave little but a touch of indigestion by which to be remembered. One or two heavy doses of such works, and a recital audience retires discouraged—to the 'pictures,' maybe. Small blame to it.

As an organist whose days at the console are over, I shall continue to enjoy my Rheinberger with the aid of the pianoforte-duet arrangements of the Sonatas, and the memory of the more richly coloured delights of organ tone. Luckier people, still in harness, will find in this book the friendliest guide to the music, and a means of enabling them to commend it in the best possible way to their congregations.

W. R. A.

'The History of Orchestration.' By Adam Carse.

[Kegan Paul, 12*s*. 6*d*.]

The present seems to be a good moment for the issue of such a treatise as this. Ample material concerning early orchestral methods was available waiting to be collated; and the modern orchestra has reached a state of opulence calculated to satisfy even the most extravagant composer. One hopes so, at all events. Mr. Carse has made a capital book out of all the mass of interesting stuff at his disposal. He has consulted scores galore, first editions, contemporary prints, manuscripts, &c. He begins by discussing the instruments of the 17th century, and carries his study of methods from the early efforts of the 16th century, through the four-part string band of Purcell-Scarlatti, the Bach-Handel orchestra, the transition period of Gluck, the eras of Haydn-Mozart, Beethoven-Schubert-Weber-Rossini, Meyerbeer - Berlioz - Mendelssohn - Glinka, Wagner, Brahms-Tchaikovsky, to that of Strauss-Debussy-Elgar, with a break halfway for a chapter concerning the instruments of the 19th century. There is an abundance of illustration, pictorial and music-type. The style is always interesting (though not always careful: e.g., there are a few split infinitives and some slips in spelling of proper names). Particularly good are the pages devoted to Berlioz, and very much to the point concerning some contemporary composers is the remark of Spohr concerning Berlioz, quoted by Mr. Carse: 'I have a special hatred of this eternal speculating upon extraordinary instrumental effects.' Louis should have lived to-day, when so many scores contain an intolerable amount of extraordinary instrumental effect to a mere ha'p'orth of musical invention. Mr. Carse's history well deserves to become the standard authority on this perennially interesting subject. H. G.

'Etudes.' Par J. Rivière.

[Paris: Editions de la N. R. F., 8 francs]

French criticism lately lost a subtle and poetical mind in Jacques Rivière. Still a young man, he died of the lingering effects of the rigours he had suffered as a prisoner of war in Germany.

The musical essays in this volume date from before the war. The composers discussed are Bach, Rameau, Wagner, Franck, Debussy, Ravel, Dukas, Borodin, and Moussorgsky. Rivière's musical criticism was purely 'literary.' This is a sort which, often lending itself to high-falutin nonsense, has been so much abused that people excusably fight shy of it. Yet, surely, it all depends on how it is done. Rivière was too keen an intelligence, and too cultivated, to fall into any nonsense.

His picturesque style of writing stands or falls by the reality of the impression he has received. When the impression was somewhat slight, as we can guess that it was from Franck's music, the essay falls into mere word-spinning. But is not this a vivid way of putting the characteristics of Spanish music—a more vivid way than any purely technical statement could be?:

> There is a torpor in Spanish dance music—a union of fury and sleepiness. The dancers seem always to be arousing one another by their cries. They stamp their feet, they stand all ready, arms a-kimbo, and shout invectives as encouragement. But the storm does not break. Bold beginnings peter out. . . . All is preludising, preparatory ritornels, emphatic exordiums. The singers set out to show us how incomparable they are. But it is too hot to-night, and the guitar's strings snap.

There is a pretty tribute to the winning effect of 'Pelléas' on the men who were young when the century was young. The essays on 'Prince Igor' and 'Boris Godounov' date from the time of the first triumphs of the Russian Ballet. Rivière could go back to Rameau, and find 'a reward for weariness and one of our dearest astonishments.' The astonishment was that of the young men who had imagined that Wagner had broken all moulds and formal fashions of expression. But Rameau's spontaneity > . . . is so wondrous that it feels no uneasiness from its chains. It rises and dances, it suffers passion, and it weeps in the palace of its own choice, and within the rules of its games it employs itself whole, so that the idea never occurs to it of an escape from a constraint which is beyond its perception.

In Bach's 'St. John' Passion, Rivière hears the voice of contrition, ever harassed by the sense of guilt, a voice of deep self-accusation absorbed in the prayer for pardon:

> Like prayer, whose invariable modes it borrows, this music is both rigid and panting. Bach takes one idea after another. To each one he hangs until he has wholly expressed it. He leaves it only when it is exhausted. He inserts it in a fixed form—chorus, aria, or recitative—whose abstract lines draw beforehand a plan of the ways of its exploration. Within that form a great music, feverish and united, is developed. It tramps up and down the allotted space, and the ground is pitted with the number of its steps. Every inch is covered by that hurried, regular movement. Wondrous trampling! There is no way of escape for me. I am led by violence. I can but obey the hand which has gripped me, and I must feel unto the end. Under that close, grim grasp, I am an expiating penitent.

C.

'Debussy and Ravel.' By F. H. Shera.

[Oxford University Press, 1*s.* 6*d.*]

This is one of the excellent 'Musical Pilgrim' series, the first batch of which was reviewed in our last issue. Mr. Shera's book—inadvertently omitted from the notice—is a very concise discussion of the composers, the author having wisely saved space by omitting biographical details, which after all are easily accessible. The coupling of two composers so typically French, yet in many ways so diverse, is a happy thought, for there is a good deal that is interesting and instructive in a comparison. Mr. Shera deals with their main characteristics, and discusses a few representative works in detail, with music-type illustrations. It is not easy to see how he could have made better use of his sixty pages. (By the way, he says that 'No mode possesses a leading-note.' But what about the Lydian—F to F; and the Hypo-Lydian—C to C? Both acquired a certain amount of disrepute because of the possession of that rather weak feature.)

'Rubato, or the Secret of Expression in Piano Playing.' By J. Alfred Johnstone.

[Joseph Williams, paper, 3*s.*; cloth, 4*s.* 6*d.*]

A very thorough exposition of a subject very much in the air, and far too little understood, even by many experienced pianists. A study of it would enable students to hit the mean between rigidity and the incoherent and rhythmless distortions that too often pass as tempo rubato—even in the case of some famous players. Mr. Johnstone supports his text with numerous music-type illustrations.

'Everybody's Guide to Broadcast Music.' By Percy A. Scholes.

[Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*]

'The Second Book of the Gramophone Record.' By Percy A. Scholes.

[Oxford University Press, 4*s.* 6*d.*]

Little more than mere mention of these books is needed, seeing how familiar the author's method is to thousands of gramophone and wireless enthusiasts.

(Continued on page 916.)

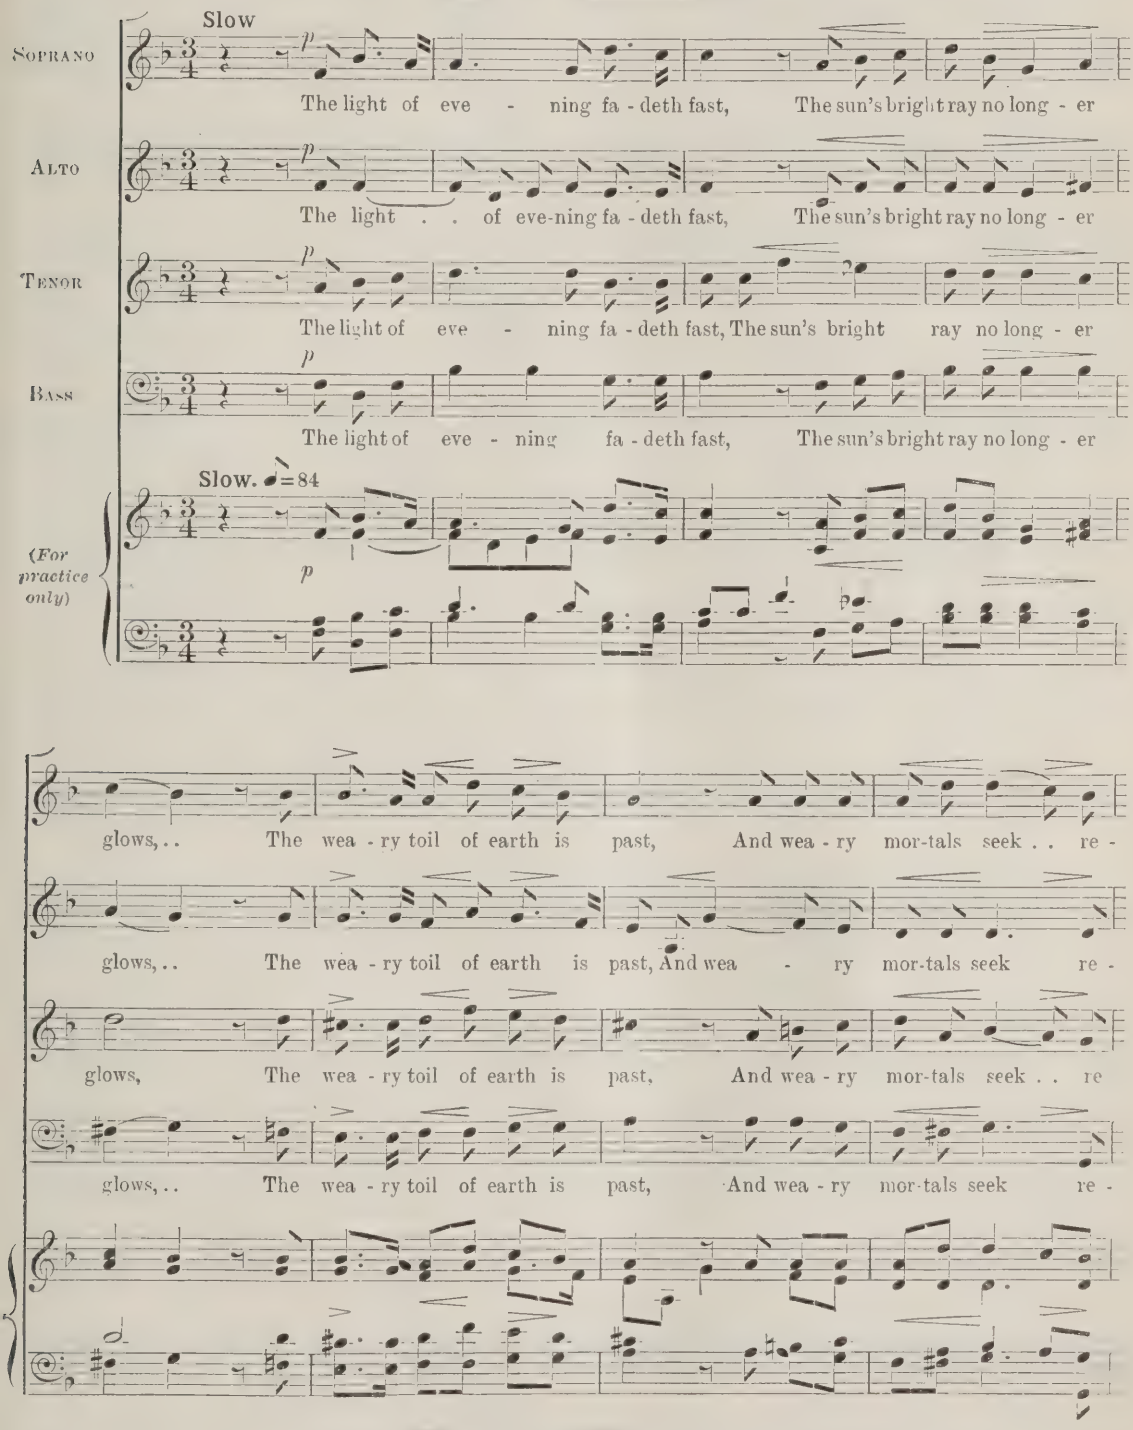
An Analogy

FOUR PART SONG

ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES

Music by C. H. H. Parry

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Slow
Soprano
The light of eve - ning fa - deth fast, The sun's bright ray no long - er
Alto
The light . . of eve-ning fa - deth fast, The sun's bright ray no long - er
Tenor
The light of eve - ning fa - deth fast, The sun's bright ray no long - er
Bass
The light of eve - ning fa - deth fast, The sun's bright ray no long - er
Slow. ♩=84
(For practice only) glows, . . The wea - ry toil of earth is past, And wea - ry mor-tals seek . . re - glows, . . The wea - ry toil of earth is past, And wea - ry mor-tals seek re - glows, The wea - ry toil of earth is past, And wea - ry mor-tals seek . . re glows, . . The wea - ry toil of earth is past, And wea - ry mor-tals seek re -

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

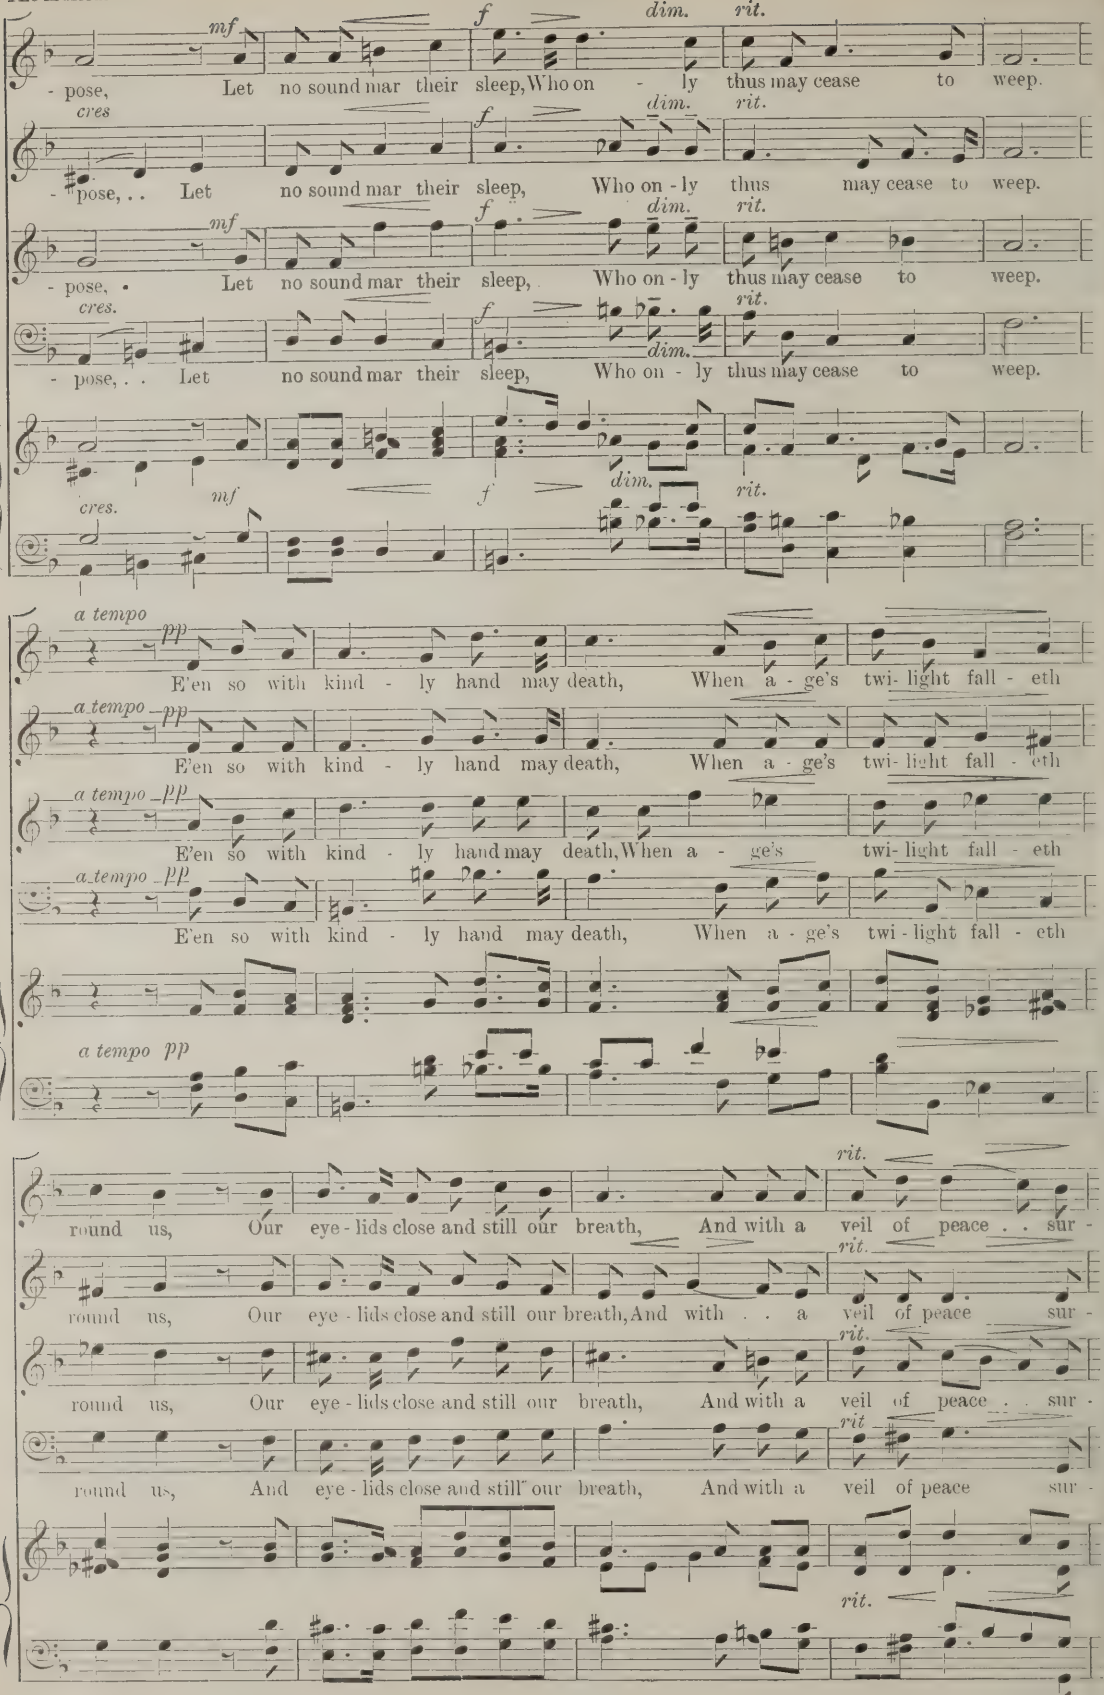
Also published for A.T.B.B. in The Orpheus, No. 486



mf f dim. rit.
- pose, Let no sound mar their sleep, Who on - ly thus may cease to weep.
cres
- pose, . . Let no sound mar their sleep, Who on - ly thus may cease to weep.
- pose, . Let no sound mar their sleep, Who on - ly thus may cease to weep.
cres.
- pose, . . Let no sound mar their sleep, Who on - ly thus may cease to weep.
cres. mf f dim. rit.
a tempo pp
E'en so with kind - ly hand may death, When a - ge's twi- light fall - eth
E'en so with kind - ly hand may death, When a - ge's twi- light fall - eth
E'en so with kind - ly hand may death, When a - ge's twi- light fall - eth
E'en so with kind - ly hand may death, When a - ge's twi - light fall - eth round us, Our eye - lids close and still our breath, And with a veil of peace . . sur - round us, Our eye - lids close and still our breath, And with . . a veil of peace sur - round us, Our eye - lids close and still our breath, And with a veil of peace . . sur - round us, And eye - lids close and still our breath, And with a veil of peace sur -

cres.
dolce
- round us, Un - til the dawn shall come, And wake us in a pain - less
cres.
dolce
- round us, Un - til the dawn shall come, And wake us in a pain - less
cres.
dolce
- round us, Un - til the dawn shall come, And wake us in a pain - less
cres.
dolce
- round us, Un - til the dawn shall come, And wake us in a pain - less
cres.
dolce

Slower
pp
home, and wake . . us . . . in a pain - less home.
pp
home, . . and wake . . us . . . in a pain - less home.
pp
home, . . and wake . . us in a pain - less home.
pp
home, . . and wake us in a pain - less home.
Slower
pp

(Continued from page 912.)

Mr. Scholes does a useful thing in discussing some of the numerous letters he has received from listeners —letters 'friendly, inimical, dogmatic, and inquiring.' 'The Second Book of the Gramophone Record' deals with a good many contemporary works, such as 'Petrouchka,' 'The Planets,' &c. Both books deserve extended notice, but space does not allow it in this issue, and a postponement is not to be thought of, lest several more volumes from the indefatigable and advisory 'P. A. S.' appear in the meantime. The panting reviewer must hang on to his skirts or toil after him in vain. H. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Les Quatuors de Beethoven.' By Joseph de Marliave. Pp. 403. Paris: Libraire Félix Alcan, 30 frs.

'The Singing of the Psalms and Canticles to Anglican Chants.' By A. Hastings Kelk. Pp. 19. Oxford University Press, 2*d.*

'Music and its Makers.' By Janet Weakley. Pp. 159. George G. Harrap, 3*s.* 6*d.*

'The Problems of Modern Music.' By Adolf Weissmann. (Translated from the German by M. M. Bozman.) Pp. 244. Dent, 6*s.*

'Robert Schumann.' By Frederic Niecks. Pp. 336. Dent, 10*s.* 6*d.*

'The Control of the Breath.' By George Dodds and James Dunlop Lickley. Pp. 65. Oxford University Press, 6*s.*

'A Skeleton History of Music from 1400 to the Present Day.' By Elizabeth Wray. Pp. 171. Kegan Paul, 4*s.* 6*d.*

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

In speaking last month of the new H.M.V. Pachmann records I said that they represented the player's début in the recording-room. Several correspondents write pointing out that Pachmann records have been in the Columbia list for some ten years; he has also recorded previously for H.M.V. Sorry! my mistake. But it was not invention on my part. I read the statement somewhere (though I cannot now trace the source), and merely quoted it in my simple, trustful way.

The pick of the Columbia basket this month is surely the reproduction of the Léner players in Beethoven's E flat Quartet, usually known as 'The Harp' (four 12-in.). The whole touches high-water mark, both in playing and recording, and one need say no more. Especially good are the first movement and the Presto, which come on the first and third records of the set. The brilliance and precision of the latter are remarkable.

Perhaps I am not a sufficiently keen Berliozian to appreciate fully the 'Roman Carnival.' I have never got over my feeling that the opening section is dull, and that (as usual with this composer) we do not get an approach to his best until he his going full steam ahead. Hence my pleasure in the 12-in. record of the Hallé Orchestra's performance is almost confined to the second side. I have an impression, too, that the quieter side is less well recorded.

A very good piece of work is the selection from Wormser's music to 'L'Enfant Prodigue,' played by the Queen's Hall Light Orchestra, conducted by Eugène Goossens, sen. There is always room for light music of this quality. The odd side of two 12-in. d.-s. is filled by a tasteful performance of the Meditation from 'Thaïs.'

The Preludes of Acts 1 and 3 of 'La Traviata,' played by the Court Symphony Orchestra, will please such as still have any use for that faded work. I note that Mr. Compton Mackenzie says he is 'prepared to defend "Traviata" against anybody.' I wish time and space allowed me to lure him on! (12-in.).

An interesting choral record is the 12-in. of the Associated Glee Clubs of America (eight hundred and fifty male voices) singing 'O come, all ye faithful' and 'John Peel,' with an audience of four thousand joining in the hymn. The power is considerable (though not overwhelming), and the success is sufficient to make us hopeful of getting first-rate choral records in due season. It cannot be said that the effect at the entry of the audience is that of four thousand people pulling their weight; their effort makes a vague and not unimpressive background. But, oh! the rhythm in 'John Peel'! If this is the fashionable rubaaaaahto, give me strict metronomic dealing all the time for music of this sort.

The Columbia Company has taken a leaf out of the B.B.C. book in a 12-in. 'Descriptive Record,' giving the conglomeration of sounds, vocal and mechanical, that accompany 'A Day at Scarborough' and 'The Departure of the Flying Scotsman,' played by the Columbia Sketch Company, with railway effects, bands, &c. This is a very promising start in a field that is capable of a good deal of development. There is humour, the dialogue is clear, and (with the exception of the querulous child, who sounds too adult, and is certainly over-acted) the whole thing is natural. I suggest as successors a reproduction of a stump speaker and his hecklers in Hyde Park, and the section of a crowd of football 'fans' during an exciting five minutes in a cup-tie.

Good average vocal records are those of Stracciari in the Serenade from Berlioz's 'Damnation de Faust' and an Air from 'Tannhäuser'—with a lot of wobble and unpleasing tone (10-in.); Miriam Licette and Frank Mullings in the 'Letter' Duet from 'Carmen' —a good record, in which the orchestral accompaniment is successful above the average (12-in.); Muriel Brunskill in a couple of Scotch songs, 'Ilka blade of grass' and 'Ca' the yowes' (10-in.); and Glanville Davies in Moussorgsky's 'Song of the Flea' and Vaughan Williams's 'Silent Noon,' with orchestra— not an unqualified success. Much more than a good voice is wanted here. We don't get the mood of the second song, and the satire of the other is drawn rather mild, with a laugh that sticks too faithfully to the notes (10-in.).

H.M.V.

The autumn season could hardly make a finer start than it does, with Elgar's second Symphony and Bach's Violin Concerto in E. The former is one of the greatest things in modern music, but so seldom heard that a recording is doubly welcome. The result is not perfect, of course. Elgar's orchestration and texture generally are of a complexity bound partially to defeat the gramophone and wireless for a while. The records give those of us who know the Symphony a chance to keep in touch with its beauties, while waiting for its occasional performances; and those to whom it is as yet unknown can get on terms with it. The opening record appears to be the least satisfactory. There is not only a lack of sonority; the details are far from clear. Curiously the second record shows a great advance in every way—at all events on my machine. The best recording is in the Scherzo, with the Finale as a good second. The Scherzo is a thing of joy, and the details (especially in the fascinating quiet passages for wood-wind) are as clear as one could desire. I fancy the inequality of the recording is due to the playing, which seems to improve and warm up as it goes along. The players are the Albert Hall Orchestra, with the composer as conductor. The work fills eleven sides, the odd space being given to the Meditation from Elgar's 'Light of Life,' an early work that is well worth attention.

The Bach Concerto shows how far off still is the solution of the question of balance in works for soloist and orchestra. Thibaud's tone is rich, and so far as his part is concerned one need ask for nothing better—though I feel that he doesn't quite maintain throughout the standard he reaches in the first movement. But we want a more clearly defined background. Even in the simplest of Bach's accompaniments there is always a good deal going on, and the faint, cloudy sounds here take off a lot of the interest and effect. I don't know what kind of orchestral strength is used in cases like this. Seeing, however, the success with which a string quartet is recorded, it might be worth while giving the background to a quartet, or double quartet, and allowing them a fair amount of rope in the matter of power. The effect of the string orchestra in this record is that of one long apology for being alive—the very last thing called for by music so vigorous. I hope my dwelling on this weakness will not give an impression that the records are not enjoyable. Far from it. I add that five sides are taken up by Bach, the sixth being used to good effect by an Adagio of Desplanes, arranged by Nachez—a worthy companion piece to the Concerto.

Pachmann plays a couple of Chopin Mazurkas—A flat, Op. 50, No. 2; and B flat minor, Op. 24, No. 4 (12-in.). He is, as usual, too much of a law to himself in regard to time and rhythm for my taste. Rubato, surely, should be little more than such rhythmic freedom as cannot well be expressed in notation. Pachmann doesn't merely rob the time; he robs the composer as well. As in last month's Pachmann records, the tone occasionally suggests steel bars, but there are some beautifully delicate bits. Most of us will be duly thankful that the player doesn't bother us with barely articulate babblings as to the meaning of the music, or his views on it.

Vocal records are pretty much as usual—that is to say, far less valuable than the instrumental, on both musical and interpretative sides. John McCormack sings Strauss's 'Morgen' and Rachmaninov's 'Before my window' with a tone-quality that is surely unduly lachrymose and nasal, Kreisler playing obbligati (10-in.); Frieda Hempel is heard in a poor piece of descriptive writing by Farley called 'The Night Wind,' and Schubert's 'Wohin' (10-in.); Eric Marshall is doleful and sentimental in Bemberg's 'Hindoo Song' and Schubert's 'The Wanderer' (12-in.); and Leila Megane does nothing to lift the general air of depression with Strauss's 'Dream in the Twilight' and Schubert's 'Death and the Maiden' (10-in.). It was a relief to put on the record of Ernest Hastings in a couple of Corney Grain's songs ('The Cautious Lover' and 'My old Dress Suit'), and his own 'After-thoughts.' The Grain songs were well worth revival, but I suggest that 'The Cautious Lover,' with its melody in the style of Hook, is better sung than parlando'd. This view is based on my recollection of hearing Corney himself sing it when a youngster—when I was a youngster, that is. 'After-thoughts' is genuinely funny.

VOCALION

Here, as in the other parcels, we find a big classical work—Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto No. 4, in G, played by York Bowen and the Æolian Orchestra, with Mr. Stanley Chapple conducting (four 12-in.). This is unusually successful in regard to the pianoforte tone. Indeed, I cannot recall so long a work in which the level is so high. Mr. York Bowen's fluent, happy style is well suited here. The orchestral part is at times too much in the background, but on the whole the balance is good. This is one of the very best concerto records. Only in the slow movement do I feel some lack of significance—a not uncommon experience in gramophone performances, and one for which the mechanical side is probably to blame.

A capital fiddle record is the 10-in. of Albert Sammons in Samuel Gardner's 'From the Canebrake,' and Dvorák's Slavonic Dance No. 1, arranged by Kreisler. The Gardner piece is rather small beer, but the playing of both is first-rate, and the reproduction all that can be desired.

To many the chief vocal record will be that of Luella Paikin in Benedict's 'La Capinera' and Bishop's 'Lo! here the gentle lark' (or, as the singer seems to prefer it, 'gentēll'). The first is very attractive, thanks largely to the flute and celeste, and the admirably clear recording. Miss Paikin does, with neatness and address, all that is possible with superficialities of this sort. The flute part in both (played by Charles Stainer) is a delight. One is reminded that in this type of song, which is really a duet (or a duel, perhaps) between the two wind instruments, human and wood, the wood often comes off the better, though the human gets the bouquets and the paragraphs (12-in.).

Horace Stevens shows a fine range of colour in his singing of a group of songs from Somervell's cycle, 'Maud.' But the very violence of the contrasts sometimes defeats the gramophone, which is apt to make a very quiet passage sound feeble. But it is good to find a singer of Mr. Stevens's calibre concerning himself with representative English songs (12-in.).

For an example of the reverse, take the record of Ethel Hook in 'The Lost Chord' and Liddle's 'Abide with me'—waste of a fine voice, at all events so far as the Liddle song is concerned. There is still something to be said for the Sullivan song. One can easily point to this or that weakness, yet when all is said, it is streets above the conventional sacred song in musicianship and legitimate effect.

NATIONAL GRAMOPHONIC SOCIETY

I am glad to see in the current number of the Gramophone that the Society winds up its first year in a satisfactory and hopeful position. Certainly it has justified its existence by producing excellent records of such works as the Debussy Quartet, the Beethoven E flat, the Schönberg Sextet, &c., at a subscription rate which works out at five shillings a record—about 50 per cent. less than the usual price for a 12-in. of the same standard. The latest issue is the Beethoven Quartet in F, Op. 59, No. 1. The players are again the Spencer Dyke Quartet. I cannot say that this set of records strikes me as being quite up to the level of the best of the Society's productions so far. There is more than a hint of doubtful intonation here and there, and the quiet passages suffer from a pronounced scratch that I am sure must evoke some pungencies from Mr. Compton Mackenzie. But there is much that is really first-rate—the freedom and nuance of the first movement and the delicacy of the Allegretto, for example. Readers who have not yet heard of the Society, or, having heard, are yet trembling on the brink, should write to the Secretary (58, Frith Street, W.1) for particulars. Now is a good moment, for the Society's year starts at Michaelmas, and there is a scheme whereby new members may make their membership retrospective, and so obtain the privileges of the past year so long as the supply of records holds out. I haven't space to give the details. I add that the issue of the records of the Brahms Sextet and the Mozart Oboe Quartet are imminent. The Society deserves well of gramophonists (especially such as are chamber music enthusiasts) not only for undertaking the recording of works that might be too risky for the regular companies, but in the long run by encouraging—one might almost say goading—those companies into giving more and more consideration to the claims of the best music.

Player-Piano Notes*

By William Delasaire

CLASSICAL

A piece of Bach's recorded by Harold Samuel is naturally something of an event in the world of 'mechanical' pianos, and the issuing this month as a 'Duo-Art' roll of such a well-known example as the Prelude and Fugue in B flat, No. 21 of the first book (A.C. 0206) is certainly a first-class event which all Bach lovers will be quick to note. And the playing of it is so delightful that many others will surely be converted at the hands of so persuasive an evangelist. It is a thing of joy from first bar to last—and all too short.

Another noteworthy roll is Gabrilovitch's playing of Chopin's posthumous Valse in E minor (A.C. 6273). One expects a good performance from such an artist, and to describe it as superb is to be but mildly enthusiastic. The opening subject is played with a sparkling grace, the second not too sentimentalised, and ornamented with some delightful touches of rubato which enhance rather than disguise the perfect rhythmic swing of it. Speaking of Chopin, I have been playing the Pachmann roll of the E minor Etude frequently of late. I referred to it approvingly last month, but wish to remind my readers to get this distinguished and beautiful example of the gospel according to Pachmann.

Rameau's 'Tambourin' (A.C. 0228) consists of a florid little tune over a sort of drone bass, and has an archaic flavour which provides happy relief after a bout of modernism. Mlle. Darré plays it with a delicate elegance that is admirably suitable.

These three rolls are all 'Duo-Art,' Haydn and Brahms providing the straight-cut rolls. The former gives us the first movement of his Sonata in D, Op. 7 (A.C. T24626, A.S. 93470), a jolly little piece, depending very largely upon manner of performance for its effect. Played inattentively it is dull, but with a proper rhythmic accent and observance of dynamic contrast it not only provides good practice, but is an excellent example of early sonata form. The Brahms Intermezzo, Op. 116, No. 5, in E (A.C. T24549), has a beauty which is the more precious for being not too obvious. It demands and repays careful study, with a fairly negligent eye upon the accent perforations. Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 10, No. 2, in F (A.S. 93465/6), I commented upon in the August issue.

The 'Animatic' rolls include a specially distinguished performance of Debussy's 'Reflets dans l'eau,' by Walter Gieseking. I fancy that we have been privileged to hear him but twice in this country, when his playing was universally praised, its most remarkable feature being, I thought, his wonderful command of the softer tone-colours. In this roll, of course, we are left to emulate these to the best of our ability, but all the beauty of his tempo and nuance are represented, supplying a powerful stimulus to the imagination. I must add also that special attention must be given to pedalling. Much of the effect of this music depends upon the subtle blending of chord-colours with the aid of the sustaining pedal, and if the automatic sustaining device is not used—and this is notoriously unsatisfactory—I recommend my readers to observe the pedal perforations very carefully, and to control the lever accordingly.

POPULAR

The remainder of the 'Animatic' rolls are mostly 'best sellers,' though one or two call for special mention. The first is Grieg's 'Albumblatt,' Op. 28, No. 2, in F (A.N. 51844). It is played by the composer, which fact alone makes it worth double its price. What a uniquely valuable record of such a composer's playing, preserved for all time! Surely it should give pause to those benighted souls who still affect to despise the player-piano! The music itself is a charming fragment in a rather Wagnerian vein of harmony, most exquisitely played. Two other unusually attractive little pieces are 'Valse Prelude' (A.N. 59516) and 'Etude' (A.N. 59517), by Archie Rosenthal. They have no pretensions to being more than salon music, but bear the stamp of a musicianship which is quite above the usual standard of such pieces. For one thing, they will bear frequent repetition, which is more than can be said of much light music. The acquisitive instinct may safely be indulged here. Massenet's 'Mélodie,' Op. 10, No. 5 (A.N. 58954), is issued as a straight-cut roll, and as a 'Duo-Art' roll (A.C. 6881), under the title of 'Elégie,' played by Rudolph Reuter. I think it demands a stringed instrument for its proper performance—by proper is meant one adequate to its long-drawn-out sentimentality. The 'sob-stuff' is well to the fore in the typically Victorian French manner, though this is no deterrent to many people. Moszkowski's ever-popular 'Arabeske,' Op. 15, No. 2 (A.N. 59245) is well played by H. Klinger, and Oswin Keller acquits himself worthily in Raff's March from the Suite in D, Op. 91 (A.N. 57178). The remainder of the 'Animatic' rolls are straight-cut, and in order of merit might be mentioned as follows: 'Tendre Aveu,' Op. 43, a Romance by Schütt (A.N. 54020), a very good example of his style; Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Mlada' (A.N. 57228); a Potpourri from Massenet's 'Herodiade' (A.N. 54986); and 'La Lettre de Manon,' by Ernest Gillet (A.N. 54018).

* A.C. = Æolian Co., Ltd.; A.N. = Hupfeld, Ltd.; A.S. = Sir Herbert Marshall & Sons, Ltd.

A friend remarked to me the other day that I use the word 'pianistic' too frequently in these notes. He may be right, but with many apologies I regret than I can find no other word which so adequately describes Genevieve Pitot's playing of Sieveking's Introduction and Valse Lente (A.C. 6815). Indeed, I think that it is in connection with her rolls that the offence has been committed. The fact remains, however, that whether the music be specially interesting or not, all the arts and graces of pianism are given us, pressed down and running over, but never to excess—if I may put it so paradoxically. In the present case the music is well-known enough and quite pleasing, but the playing lends a distinction which redeems it from the ordinary. Much the same might be said of Robert Armbruster, who provides two 'Duo-Art' rolls—'Idilio,' by Theodore Lack (A.C. 6886), a polished piece of salon music, and a selection from Flotow's 'Martha' (A.C. 0683). The remaining 'Duo-Art' roll is 'Snowbirds,' by Burleigh (A.C. 0683), a delicate, suggestive little piece of programme music.

The outstanding hand-played roll is Katherine Goodson's playing of Chopin's Nocturne, Op. 37, No. 2, in G (A.C. A807). Her tempi are a little unusual, perhaps, but are nevertheless very beautiful, and contribute to an interpretative insight which makes the roll indispensable to any Chopin collection. Cortôt pours out his marvellous technique on Liszt's eleventh Rhapsody (A.C. A809). All the customary features are present—the overwrought elaboration of something not particularly worth saying, plus the usual vulgar finish. But not to deter those who like such music, it must be added that it is a supremely fine performance. Two pleasant salon pieces complete the hand-played rolls—Stojowski's 'Chant d'Amour,' played by Rudolph Ganz (A.C. A815), and 'Au Matin,' by Godard, played by Clarence Adler (A.C. A813). Both are excellent examples of the superiority of the hand-played roll over the straight-cut in this sort of music, and introduce many little pianistic touches impossible of accomplishment with an ordinary roll. Two of the latter variety are 'Song of the Fountain,' by H. Baynton-Power (A.C. T24639: A.S. 93467), and 'Sérénade d'Oiseau,' by H. Marling (A.C. T24645). The former is a tuneful morceau, nicely treated, the latter hopelessly commonplace—Liszt has done it so much better.

SONG ROLLS

The best of these is again one by Roger Quilter—an extremely beautiful setting of Shakespeare's 'O Mistress Mine' (A.C. 26489). Those who are anxious to progress from the 'Garden of Love' type of ballad to something better should get these Quilter songs and study them. They will be an education both to themselves and their neighbours. The others are 'The Wheel-Tapper's Song,' by W. Charles (A.C. 26538; A.S. 72537), much on the lines of 'Stone-Cracker John'; Molloy's popular 'Carnival' (A.C. 26535; A.S. 72536); and 'The Mistress of the Master,' by H. Lyall Phillips (A.C. 26537; A.S. 72538). Mendelssohn's 'O rest in the Lord' is issued as an accompaniment only for 'Duo-Art' pianofortes.

DANCE MUSIC

As usual, most of this music is issued in 'Duo-Art,' 'Song Roll,' and straight-cut form. I think the best are the Charleston or fox-trot from 'Runnin' Wild,' a clever piece of rhythmic work; and the 'Midnight Waltz.' The rest are quite amusing, as much in the extravagance of their words as in the ingenuities of their syncopations.

Wireless Notes

BY 'CALIBAN'

The two Shire Hall concerts of the Gloucester Festival were so successfully broadcast and so highly enjoyed that it is to be hoped the Company will enable us to have a taste of the Leeds Festival. The only Gloucester item that didn't come through very well was the new work of Howells, partly because it was new, and even more because, like so much new music, it was mainly a kind of ingenious and complicated burbling. That is how it reached me, anyhow. Our young bloods have still something to learn in economy and directness (which means effect) from such composers as Edward German, whose 'Theme and Six Diversions' came through brilliantly, every note telling—chiefly because there were not too many of them.

From the London Station we have had many good things during the past month, the pick being the Virtuoso Quartet in Mozart and Debussy; and the D minor Bach Pianoforte Concerto with Harold Samuel at the keyboard and Malcolm Sargent conducting. On each occasion I found the result not a bit less convincing or enjoyable than that of a performance heard at first hand in a concert-room. Listening in slippered ease I marvelled more than ever at those of my professional brethren who are still unable to take wireless seriously as a distributor of fine music.

Here is a curious point in regard to the diction of singers, and one which seems to show that in this respect the wireless has a big pull over the gramophone. Incidentally it may provide data for useful experiment in the recording room. Everybody knows that the gramophone tends to make singers' words indistinct. Apparently wireless does the reverse. I was remarking to a friend that I had never been more thrilled by Stanford's 'The Old Superb' than by the Gloucester performance of Norman Allin, heard at hundreds of miles' distance, and I mentioned the clearness of the words. My friend thereupon said that he had been at that particular concert, and had spent the evening dodging to and fro between the Shire Hall and the wireless station. To his surprise he found the singers' words clearer on the wireless than in the Hall. Now if the exact reason for this can be discovered, we shall be on the way to some useful developments in recording. The fact may even throw a little light in the direction of singers and their teachers in regard to this usually weak side of their art.

I welcome the news that consideration is being given to the suggestion that composers shall be asked to write music specially suitable for broadcasting, and that certain standard works shall be recorded with the same object in view. There is no doubt that sooner or later the gramophone and wireless will be specially catered for in this way. Apparently there will always be certain peculiarities involved in recording and broadcasting. I say peculiarities, not disabilities, because it may prove (as in this case of diction) that the process is sometimes beneficial. (Another example: Heifetz's tone is generally held to be finer and warmer when recorded than in the concert-room.) If a slight modification of the scoring of the classics helps the music across, nobody need object. Something of the kind is already done in the recording-room, but still not enough, judging from some orchestral records. The writing of music with a special view to the needs and potentialities of radio is thoroughly commonsense, and I hope the B.B.C. will follow up the idea. It may open up a new world of effects, besides giving us the old ones to better advantage.

VENICE FESTIVAL

By Edwin Evans

The first migration of the International Society for Contemporary Music, from Salzburg to Venice, caused a marked contrast in the character of the meeting. For three years in succession (including the unofficial gathering at which the Society was created) there has been at Salzburg something like a happy family, where even the lion and the lamb would drink at the same fountain, possibly because there was no room to avoid each other, but still with cordiality. Much good resulted from this atmosphere of intimacy in the shape of exchanged ideas, mutual introductions to new works beyond those heard at the Festival, and a general comparing of experiences. At Venice the musical visitors dispersed on sight-seeing expeditions, or yielded to the seductions of the Lido, and the attractions everywhere were so numerous that one seldom met except by arrangement. The concerts being rather late, they were not even followed by any of those convivial adjournments which were so popular at Salzburg. At the end one has more or less 'done' Venice, and incidentally heard a lot of music, but Salzburg was different. There is, however, one compensation. For the International Society for Contemporary Music Salzburg was a kind of convent-school from which it has now emerged into the light of public life, for the audience here comprised a much larger proportion of lay folk, and a good sprinkling of the socially distinguished. The Festival is no longer a family affair, but, like other festivals, a function. It is even becoming fashionable. Let us not be too resentful of this, for it materially helps the aims of the Society.

Musically it was a mixed affair. Juries of three, however experienced or eminent their members may be, are exposed to one serious danger, which we call benevolence. The Conference of Delegates, realising this, has already increased the number, but so far as this Festival is concerned, it was closing the stable-door after the horse had been stolen. The programmes included some works which, on performance, aroused surprise and even resentment. Others, whilst less noxious, made one wonder at their selection from among those known to have been submitted. In short, the high standard of 1924 was not uniformly maintained, although there was still a satisfactory proportion of music such as one wants to hear at least once, and a sprinkling of works likely to be added to the répertoire. It is not merely a charitable view, but the truth, that the Festival may be described on the whole as a success, though it had its dark moments.

The concerts were held in the Fenice Theatre, a spacious and lovely building which made one envy the Venitians. Its seating capacity is three thousand, and it presented an appearance of a 'full house'; but the gallery was not in use, and the boxes held mostly small parties, instead of being crowded, so let us not be led astray by the figure. The concerts began at nine p.m. and were over about half-past eleven, which shows that the jury is still too generous, though probably the fault once more rests with the composers, who nearly always understate the 'time occupied in performance.' The following is a complete record of the programmes, in which only one change occurred, a work being transferred to another evening in consequence of the indisposition of an executant. Considering that the performers hailed from a dozen countries, and a complicated organization had to be set up, it is a feather in the Society's cap that so fixed an itinerary could be maintained. The local arrangements were excellent, and the first act of the Conference was to thank the Italian section for its great and successful effort.

FIRST CONCERT

String Quartet ... ...Erwin Schulhoff
'L'Horizon Chimérique,' Song-cycle... Gabriel Fauré
'Nocturnal Impression of Peking' and 'Korean Sketch,' for chamber orchestra Henry Eichheim
'Jazz Band,' for violin and pianoforte Wilhelm Grosz
Songs ... ... H. Villa-Lobos
Concerto, Op. 36, No. 1, for pianoforte and twelve instruments ... ...Paul Hindemith

Two of the above works have been heard and discussed in London: Eichheim's Oriental excursions, and Fauré's song-cycle—but it is permissible to add a tribute to Madame Croizat's singing of the latter. Madame Eva Gauthier sang the Brazilian composer's songs, which are short and pithy, strongly tinted in Gallic colours, but interesting and individual. Of the three chamber works the so-called 'Jazz Band' held more Viennese Schlagobers than was suited either to the title or its audience. There was a good deal of interest in Schulhoff's Quartet. The opening is bright and commendably short, there is some whimsicality in the second movement, and buoyancy in the third, a gipsy dance, yet the lyrism of the Finale does not sound quite true. The composer, a 'Deutsch-Böhme,' has plenty of skill, but studies his contemporaries too assiduously. Undoubtedly the best work of the evening was Paul Hindemith's Concerto. Like some recent Stravinsky it is pseudo-classical. It comprises a first movement which is full of vitality; a slow section with some very original part-writing but too drawn-out; a very short, brilliant and exhilarating 'Pot-Pourri' which, in the colloquial phrase, 'brought the house down'; and a Presto. All four sections are predominantly contrapuntal. Apart from occasional redundance the work suffers from a recently acquired mannerism which consists in eliminating all formal conclusions. The movements do not end; they simply leave off, one about the right time, one too early, the others rather late.

SECOND CONCERT

Sonata, for pianoforte and 'cello ... Gaspar Cassadó
Sonata No. 6, in B minor, Op. 13 (in one movement) ... ... Samuel Feinberg
Sonata, for violin alone ... ... Zoltan Szekely
Five short pieces for string quartet ... Max Butting
Songs ... ... Ladislav Vycpálek
Duo, for violin and 'cello ... ... Hans Eissler String Quartet ... ... Leos Janácek

The Spanish 'cellist's Sonata suggests that he is entertained in the best circles, and has written something with which to respond to the inevitable invitation to play. It is inoffensive, but without serious interest. Feinberg hails from Soviet Russia, where he is regarded as a kind of heir to Scriabin. But that composer's latter manner was too individual to be bequeathed without loss to the independence of the recipient, and the Sonata shows Feinberg repeating Scriabin's harmonic yearnings, even to the characteristic intervals which express them. Szekely is a very fine violinist. Of that he gave proof in the playing of his Sonata, and even more in Ravel's 'Tzigane' the following day. But the Sonata belongs to the kind of music which is more interesting to play than to hear, and the audience grew restive. Somebody was unkind enough to suggest afterwards that if Feinberg and Szekely had played their works together it would have saved time and enhanced the interest. Max Butting's quartet pieces proved an improvement on what had gone before, but though their treatment is skilful and effective, the ideas themselves are not very distinguished. The concluding Fugue, however, reaches some degree of brilliance. Vycpálek's songs are really very good, but of a widely prevalent type. Eissler is the Benjamin of Schönberg's little family of pupils, and the stamp of the school is not so firmly impressed upon him as upon some of his seniors, except in the matter of some external devices which, to be frank, are becoming a little tiring in all but the best of Schönberg's own work. I found much that was hopeful in this Duo. The least disputed applause went once more to the last work on the programme. Janácek writes as a child of nature, incapable of guile, and was thus enabled to regale us very successfully with music whose sincerity is its main charm. His changes of tempo, frequently caused by the interpolation of rapid little ritornelli between the phrases of a lyrical sentence, are very characteristic both of Czech music and this composer's unusually natural use of the native glossary. The Quartet, with three of its four movements headed simply Con moto, was quite refreshing after a rather dreary evening.

THIRD CONCERT

String Quartet in A, Op. 16 ... Erich W. Korngold
Two movements for two flutes, clarinet, and bassoon ... ... Jacques Ibert
Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte Arthur Honegger
'Joueurs de Flute,' four pieces for flute and pianoforte ... ... Albert Roussel
'Tzigane' for violin and pianoforte ... Maurice Ravel
Sonata for pianoforte, flute, oboe, and bassoon ... ... Vittorio Rieti

Korngold's Quartet is music that requires no 'international' or 'pioneer' society to help it into circulation. He has seen to that by infusing into it qualities that make for popularity, not even despising those of the 'best-seller.' The somewhat mushy sentiment of the Adagio is just the sort of thing that has a good chance of being regarded as inspired with emotion, and the bright, neat little Scherzo which follows is music that cheers and does not inebriate The Finale, amabile comodo, with a rather commonplace melodic lilt, should 'go down' well, and what more can one want in a string quartet? From this point onwards the Latins occupied the programme, and at once clarity supervened. It was really astonishing. Critics may go on asserting that there is 'nothing in' all this talk of nationality in music, but whether their music be good, bad, or indifferent that of the Latin races is always limpid, whereas even the best composers in Central Europe to-day give us music that occasionally resembles mud in opaqueness. Those wood-wind pieces by Ibert may not be very profound, but they are very musical, and delightful to hear. Their effect is derived from the notes themselves, and not from any abuse of 'expression.' The second of them shows that, pace Korngold, even a banal idea can be used with distinction. Honegger's 'Cello Sonata has been heard at the Contemporary Music Centre. On second hearing I like it even better than before. It is a fine utterance. Ravel's more-than-Hungarian rhapsody is also known in London through Jelly d'Aranyi's playing. Vittorio Rieti's Sonata belongs to the neo-primitive tendency—almost a cult in some quarters—but it is not larded with intentionally 'wrong' notes, as is so much music of the kind. The serious minds of this world get very impatient over simplicities of this kind, which of course exaggerates their importance (that of the simplicities, I mean, not of the serious minds, which would be impossible). This work has a jolie sonorité which is not a bad beginning. Its opening section is merry and bright, but the mock solemnities of the Adagio become a little tedious, and the Finale sounded rather childish.

FOURTH CONCERT

String Quartet ... ... Mario Labroca
Pianoforte Sonata ... ...Arthur Schnabel
'Merciless Beauty,' three rondels for tenor voice, two violins, and 'cello ... Vaughan Williams
Serenade for clarinet, bass clarinet, mandoline, guitar, violin, viola, 'cello, and voice Schönberg

Labroca's Quartet won favour all round. It has a good Allegro, a charming lyrical Rêverie for slow movement, and a brisk Rondo—for once, just enough and no more. Its only weakness is a too frequent recourse to the use of the short ostinato figures which have been called 'waterwheels.' Schnabel's Sonata proved a very tough proposition. He employs a very forbidding idiom, and in his first movement exploits what might be termed the 'dynamic semitone' to a degree that impinges unpleasantly on the ear. But his keyboard technique, remotely derived from Liszt but full of invention, is very rich. Musically the Sonata is difficult to follow, and the Adagio, which seems to meander interminably, exhausted the patience of a large part of the audience, although it had begun more accessibly than any other movement, except perhaps the Capriccioso. Schnabel has not proved his case, but there is enough in this Sonata to entitle him to more consideration than he received, despite the heroic efforts of Eduard Erdmann, who played the work. 'Merciless Beauty' was a downright, unqualified success. Mr. Steuart Wilson has evidently never sung better, and the lyrical serenity of the music was as balm to tired nerves. The work was received with genuine enthusiasm. Schönberg's Serenade was of course hailed with delight by the faithful. With others it had rather a succès d'estime. Shorn of a literary justification, such as 'Pierrot Lunaire' possesses in its curious reflection of the decadent 'nineties, the Beardsley-ish flavour of Schönberg's distortions becomes rather oppressive, and the jerkiness of the vocal line was not particularly well suited to the Petrarca sonnet which Herr Josef Schwarz sang as the fourth number. But there is no gainsaying the cleverness of the invention. The trouble is that it leaves one cold.

FIFTH CONCERT

String Quartet, Op. 31 ... Karol Szymanowski
'Le Stagioni Italiche,' cycle for voice and pianoforte G. Francesco Malipiero
'Angels,' for six trumpets ... ... Carl Ruggles
Pianoforte Sonata ... ... Igor Stravinsky
'The Daniel Jazz,' for tenor, string quartet, trumpet, percussion, and pianoforte ... Louis Gruenberg

Though a Pole, and born in Ukraine, Szymanowski at first favoured German rather than Slavonic influences. He was then inclined to a turgid, overcrowded mode of writing. In recent years he appears to have been striving to emerge from the fog, and in this new Quartet he shows a great advance towards clarity. It is a good Quartet, and should be heard in London. Malipiero's super-cycle (each song is as long as any conventional scena) is an important work, full of significance, demanding a genuine interpretative artist to sing it. The performance, by Spinella Agostini, with Alfredo Casella at the pianoforte, was a fine one. The poems are from different sources and of varied styles, each being imparted with a declamatory vocal line supported by an amplified commentary from the pianoforte, which merges into interludes, so that the cycle is performed without a break. The sonority of six trumpets is so captivating that Carl Ruggles deserves double blame for not employing this feature to better advantage than in his 'Angels.' It lasted less than three minutes and seemed too long. From Bach, to whom he has recently paid the tribute of a concerto, Stravinsky appears to be working his way through early Beethoven, for there is a good deal of both in his Pianoforte Sonata, of which he gave a good performance, though suffering from a sore finger. There is not much to carry conviction in the slow movements of either the Concerto or the Sonata, but the Finale of the latter has an impressive vigour. The opening section is almost incredibly Beethovenish. Fancy Mr. Steuart Wilson singing 'The Daniel Jazz'! If one reads Vachel Lindsay's poem he will realise the miracle. And he sang it not merely well, but with such conviction that Gruenberg wants him to sing it wherever it may be performed in Europe. As the work 'caught on,' this may involve his doing the 'grand tour.' The setting, with occasional spoken passages, is curiously compounded. When the composer remembers, it is a Negro Spiritual, a sort of sublimated 'When Joshua fit the battle of Jericho,' with a jazz accompaniment for small orchestra. When he forgets it is 'penny plain, tuppence coloured.' But when we come to 'Daniel's tender sweetheart' we find to our amazement that she was known in another incarnation as Sieglinde, or maybe Eva. In short, it is untidy and even clumsy, but somehow it goes, and a large international and very sophisticated body of listeners made their appreciation abundantly clear, which was very nice for Herr Gruenberg.

Space forbids individual mention of all the executants. The general standard of performance was high, especially in the quartets, of which three took part, viz., the local Venitian, the Viennese, and the Zika, from Prague. The Viennese, by the way, is ably led by Rudolf Kolisch, who, having lost a finger of his left hand, bows with the left and fingers with the right. Casella was, as always, a splendid pianistic partner to anybody who required one, and our old friend Fleury played the flute as alluringly as ever. The greatest technical feat performed was probably that of Erdmann in the Schnabel Sonata. But none of the music could be described as easy, and, so far as it is possible to judge in new works, it was all performed satisfactorily.

The most important task awaiting the conference of delegates was that of fixing next year's Festival (it is to take place at Zurich, in June), and that of electing a new international jury. This is to consist of Ernest Ansermet (Geneva); Arthur Bliss (London); Hermann Scherchen (Frankfort); Walther Straram (Paris); and Karol Szymanowski (Warsaw). The jury thus includes three conductors and two composers.

Interesting proposals were received for the Festival of 1927, but these cannot yet be divulged.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL

By Herbert Thompson

'The Gloucester Musical Festival, being the two hundred and fifth meeting of the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford, for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans of Clergymen of the Three Dioceses'—I love to give its proud official title—took place on September 6, 8-11. It achieved three records—one, an unpleasant one, I refer to now so as to clear the ground for more agreeable matters: it was the weather, which forsook the tradition of the Three Choirs for at least the generation during which I have known them, and was bleak and wet, with only glimpses of sunshine. A more satisfactory record is that the financial receipts, both for tickets and collections, and all attendances, exceeded anything before known at these Festivals. Without giving the details for each day, it may be of interest to mention some official totals. The attendances in 1913 were 14,205, in 1922 they rose to 18,208, and this year to 19,968. The collections for the same years were respectively £415, £700, and £826, and I understand that the actual profits from all sources amount to the handsome sum of £3,750. These figures suggest that the Festivals have a vitality which one would not have ventured to prophesy half a century ago, and Gloucester has now reached a point beyond which further financial progress will be difficult.

From an artistic point of view, certainly from that of patriotism, a third record was achieved. Of course one wishes the public taste was adventurous enough not to confine its interest in Handel and Mendelssohn to stereotyped repetitions of 'The Messiah' and 'Elijah,' and those who really appreciate these composers' genius would be glad to extend their acquaintance with its manifestations; but so long as these two oratorios fill the Cathedral and lighten the work of rehearsal—already far too crowded and arduous—we cannot look for much enlightenment. The outstanding feature of the programme was the quantity of music by native composers included. So far as the number of names goes, it must have been without precedent. On going through the programmes, and taking the small with the great, from Croft's 'St. Anne's' tune to Elgar's 'The Apostles'—the only work which formed an entire programme—I can count twenty-eight British names, to which may be added seven others that appeared in the service lists for the week. Of these, twenty-five are living, and fifteen of them conducted their own works. To interest so many distinguished musicians in the Festival was worth doing on its own account, and next to the satisfaction of hearing their own music adequately performed, it was surely an advantage for these composers to listen to each other's works. They made a happy family, for musicians are generally good company, but I imagine that a collection of their frank opinions on their colleagues, made privately in moments of expansion, would form very interesting reading indeed.

To give precedence to novelties, the most important was Walford Davies's choral Suite, as he styles it, 'Men and Angels.' It is a series of six pieces, connected by nothing more than a certain mystical mood underlying them, and by a curious kinship between the muses of George Herbert and Bunyan, which one would hardly have anticipated. The inception of the work is due to some chance remarks of Hubert Parry and Gervase Elwes, and it is no doubt by way of acknowledging this that it is dedicated to their memory, and that any profits derivable from the sale of the score are to be given to the Parry Room and the Elwes Fund. That Herbert and Bunyan—whose lives only just overlap—had something more in common than their piety is testified by this composition, and it is apparent that the same note of mysticism which Sir Walford found in 'Everyman' has appealed to him here. There is an 'Antiphon,' in which the suggested contrast between full choir and distant voices might with advantage have been more clearly observed; then a tenor solo (Mr. Norman Stone); a 'Rêverie,' which embodies a characteristic conceit, the word 'Jesu' being made to spell 'I ease you'; a choral ballad, 'All my love, leave me not,' for chorus, taken from a Scottish collection of 'Gude and Godlie Ballats'; a 'Dream,' for soloist and chorus, picturing the arrival of Christian at the Cross and the loosing of his burthen, a 'Dialogue Anthem' between Christian and Death—the latter represented by the chorus singing sotto voce 'mysterious, creeping harmonies in the lower compass of the voices'; and, finally, the pilgrim's song from Part 2 of 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' 'True Valour,' a vigorous song for soloist and chorus. The work, as a whole, is a characteristic example of Walford Davies. It reminds the listener frequently of 'Everyman,' and it has, perhaps to a still more marked degree, an obvious desire to make the presentation of the text as vivid and clear as possible, even though this may thrust purely musical development and melodic interest into a secondary place. The composition leaves an impression which can be best explained by saying that it excites a wish that Sir Walford would write a mystery music-drama; we know no one who would enter upon such a task with more sympathy and insight. Next in extent came Dr. Basil Harwood's Motet for chorus and orchestra, 'Love Incarnate,' based on the last lines of Browning's 'An Epistle,' together with a verse of St. Bernard's hymn, 'Jesu dulcis memoria.' Like Walford Davies's work it is mystical and intensely religious in feeling, but musically is more distinctly modern in character, especially as regards the treatment of the orchestra. The score bears date 'November 1, 1922,' so it has been long in coming to performance; and now only the difficulty of securing an adequate presentation, at least as regards the orchestral side of the score, will hinder its performance in church, for which it is peculiarly suited. The sole fault I could venture to find is that the orchestra seems more effectively and sympathetically treated than the voices, though the introduction of the ancient plainsong melody to St. Bernard's hymn was very apt. Two other new Motets remain to be considered. Dr. Charles Wood, Stanford's successor in the Cambridge Professorship, years ago proved himself to be more than a pedagogue in his inspired setting of the 'Dirge for two Veterans,' and his Motet for unaccompanied chorus, 'Glory and Honour and Laud,' showed not only his finished technique but his originality. As a whole, it is in direct succession from the great choral masters of Elizabethan times, a solid, splendid work; but every now and then we have flashes of originality which belong to no period, and are the outcome of the composer's individuality. The Motet is one which should take a high place among works of its class, and it was very finely sung by one of the best choruses Gloucester has ever mustered. Mr. Holst's work, 'The Evening Watch,' is another unaccompanied Motet, but it is distinctively modern in idiom, and while allowing for the fact that its strangeness made the performance wanting in ease, as if the singers were not sure of their ground, one is inclined to doubt whether with the most accurate performance it could ever produce an effect commensurate with the means employed. The only remaining vocal novelty was a charming song-cycle by Dr. Brewer, for soprano soloist, accompanied by a string quartet. The tunes are old Irish airs, delightful in themselves, and made still more delightful by the lightness of touch with which they are arranged.

Orchestral novelties were less numerous, and, on the whole, less important. Two were heard at the opening service—the function which in later times has acquired much greater musical significance. Dr. James Lyon's two Preludes are well written for the orchestra—brilliant, melodious, including some most effective climaxes, and showing a ripe musicianship. Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill's Three Short Pieces, for strings and organ, are as interesting as any of the new works produced on this occasion. Within his narrow limits of space and colouring, the composer has written some very charming music. 'Venite, adoremus,' with an important violin part, is gracious and suave without being over-sweet. 'Canticum Fidei' is sturdier in character, with just a flavour of archaism; 'Hosanna' is brilliant, but a momentary reminiscence of '1812' might well be revised. Mr. Howells is a Gloucestershire native who deserves the recognition he has received at this and the preceding Festival, and his little orchestral piece, 'Paradise Rondel,' is appropriate in that it takes its name from a Cotswold village. It is a delicately-handled score, so subtle as to cause the hearer to regret that the scoring, though for a small orchestra, makes many of the details obscure. As they say, 'There are so many trees that you cannot see the wood.' More obviously effective is his 'Puck's Minuet,' which he conducted at another concert—a dainty, happily-orchestrated little work. The one remaining novelty in this long list was a Prelude by Mr. J. B.McEwen, the new Principal of the R.A.M. Its musicianship is undoubted, but its effect seems obscure; the themes are not characterised by great spontaneity, and the work leaves the impression that the head rather than the heart has been concerned with its genesis.

The Tercentenary of Orlando Gibbons's death was not neglected, and three of his Motets were heard during the Festival: 'Hosanna to the Son of David' appeared in three programmes, and 'God is gone up' and 'O clap your hands' each had a hearing. Mr. C. Lee Williams, the doyen of the Three Choirs, at one time conductor, now chairman of the executive and dispenser of lavish hospitality, was represented by an anthem at the opening service, and also by his beautiful setting of the Lord's Prayer as an unaccompanied Motet, a little work not to be measured by its length, but by its charm, its reverent sincerity, and its extraordinary effectiveness. Elgar was, as usual, the most prominent personage in the programmes. His 'Apostles' and 'For the Fallen,' both of which were given in 1922, were repeated on this occasion, but a still more welcome feature was the reappearance of one of his Symphonies, the first, in A flat, which had not been heard at these festivals since its performance at Gloucester in 1910. It was not before it was due, and one renewed acquaintance with what is undoubtedly a great work with great satisfaction. In one respect it was, as it seems to me, heard to greater advantage, for the composer, who conducted, took the Finale quicker than of yore, and did not over-stress the strenuousness of the main theme, which is apt to become rather too insistent. Other composers who conducted their own works were Vaughan Williams, the final section of whose 'Sea' Symphony, a work of enduring value, was given; Dame Ethel Smyth, who directed an excellent performance of the Kyrie and Gloria from her Mass in D, which for the first time, I understand, was heard in the proper environment of a cathedral, and she also won enthusiastic applause at the concert with her 'Wreckers' Overture. Dr. Hathaway conducted his musicianly variations on one of the tunes played by the Gloucester chimes, which, by the way, are so grateful to the ear that one does not complain when awakened by them at 5 a.m. Granville Bantock conducted his 'Hebridean' Symphony, in which one always wishes his desire for realism had not made him repeat the warlike pibroch with such monotonous iteration that it loses its impressiveness, and disturbs the great charm of this picturesque work. Mr. Edward German gave a brilliant performance of his 'Theme and Six Diversions,' and Mr. W. H. Reed repeated his fantastic and amusing 'Æsop's Fables.'

At the Friday evening concert—a pleasing innovation, in which, following the example set at Worcester, a small orchestra of thirty-four took part—Mr. Vaughan Thomas conducted two songs to words by George Meredith, settings which reproduce very faithfully the moods of the poems, and were artistically sung by Miss Brunskill.

The most important works by deceased native composers were Parry's 'Job,' a well-chosen revival of a work written for Gloucester in 1892, and containing, in Job's Lamentation and the choral setting of the Almighty's response, some of his best music; and Stanford's 'Stabat Mater,' which many will reckon among his most powerful works. The attractive lilt of Sullivan's music was evidenced in his 'Graceful Dance' ('Henry VIII.'), a trifle, but a delightful one, which, however, like the 'Rosenkavalier Waltzes' which were coupled with it, seems to require more elastic and dainty handling than it received.

Though Handel and Mendelssohn monopolised nearly the whole of two programmes, Continental composers were in a minority, if a strong one, for Bach, who has been somewhat neglected at Gloucester, was represented by the unfamiliar cantata, 'Give the hungry man thy bread,' which, in view of its very picturesque and finely developed opening chorus, has unusual interest, and Brahms by the 'St. Antoni' Variations. 'Tod und Verklärung' of Richard Strauss has long been favoured by the Three Choirs, no doubt because it is one of his few works which are suited to Cathedral performance. It was given at Worcester in 1902, 1905, and 1923; at Gloucester in 1910; and if it seems less sensational than in the early days, it has gained something in intimate charm. Sibelius was to have brought over a new Symphony, but it was not finished in time, so we had to be content with 'Finlandia,' which sounds well in the Cathedral, and the popular 'Valse Triste' in the Shire Hall. That Verdi's 'Requiem' is favoured by Gloucester is shown by the fact that this was its sixth performance since its first appearance at a Gloucester Festival in 1901, since when it has been absent from the programme only once—in 1904. It certainly had an exceedingly fine performance on all hands, and the quartet of soloists—Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Robert Radford—was an admirable one.

Mr. Norman Allin sang Hans Sachs's monologue, 'Wahn, Wahn,' and Miss Dorothy Silk introduced a Mozart aria, at Wednesday's concert, so two great names were not entirely neglected. The greatest absentee was Beethoven, whose 'Choral' Symphony might well have been included in this the centenary year of its introduction to this country.

In addition to the principals already mentioned there appeared Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Elsie Suddaby, and Miss Flora Woodman as sopranos, Miss Margaret Balfour among the contraltos, Mr. John Booth and Mr. Gwynne Davies among the tenors, Mr. Herbert Heyner among the basses. Special mention should be made of Mr. Keith Falkner, a young baritone who essayed the exacting part of Job, and, in spite of his youthful personality and voice, sang it with remarkable intelligence, and of Mr. Horace Stevens, who in one day appeared in the very different parts of Elijah and Jesus ('The Apostles'), and achieved an unqualified success which places him in the front rank of oratorio singers. The vividness of his impersonation of Elijah can never have been exceeded. The London Symphony Orchestra was engaged, and Sir Ivor Atkins and Dr. Percy Hull shared the duties at the organ, the pianoforte, and the celesta. Finally, more than a conventional word of acknowledgment is due to Dr. Brewer, who, beyond his more obvious task as conductor, had done so much to arrange the programme, organize the performances, and maintain local enthusiasm at a high pitch. A new secretary was in office in the person of Mr. A. A. G. Jones, but with the hearty co-operation of his predecessor, Mr. P. Barrett Cooke, there was no hitch in the machinery of the Festival.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The Certificate Choir-Training Examination will be held on Wednesday, November 4. Last day of entry, Monday, October 5.

Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Tuesday, November 3, at 3.30 p.m., by Sir Walford Davies, and at 6.30 p.m. by Mr. Stanley Roper.

H. A. Harding, Hon. Secretary.

NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS CONGRESS

By W. A. Roberts

The annual Congress was held at Exeter on August 31 and September 1-3. There was an attendance of a hundred and ten delegates and members from various parts of the country, representing the thirty-two Associations at present affiliated with the National Union, a slightly larger attendance than at the Newcastle congress last year. It was a happy choice to hold this year's congress in the fascinating old city of Exeter, where a hearty welcome was accorded. Civic recognition was given by the Mayor on behalf of the city and corporation, and at the reception held in the ancient Guildhall there was a brilliant gathering, representative of the leading citizens and city officials.

Nothing could exceed the kindness and hospitality which the members received on all hands, and that not only from the city authorities. The local association had left no stone unturned to make the social side of the congress an outstanding success, and in this direction Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe, as secretary, earned and received warm congratulations. The affair was certainly admirably managed. At the opening reception, held at the Exeter Museum, on Monday evening, August 31, Dr. Ernest Bullock, the Cathedral organist and president of the local Association, welcomed the visitors to the city. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, as president of the Association, supported Dr. Bullock (his previous assistant at Manchester Cathedral), and during the evening an interesting programme of music was given by Dr. and Mrs. Bullock (pianoforte), Miss Phyllis Smith (violin), Miss Anderson (viola), with Miss Upward and Mr. Crabb (vocalists).

Tuesday morning was devoted to the annual meeting of delegates and members, held in University College. Mr. Nicholson presided, and in alluding to the difficulties besetting organists in their work, especially in rural districts, he spoke of the necessity for some definite forward policy to justify the existence of the Association, which was not formed merely for the enjoyment of social functions. Thanks to the Archbishops' Report, Church music was now having more serious attention than it had received during the last hundred years.

Mr. Nicholson, who, owing to great pressure of work had desired to be relieved of the office of president, was, after discussion, persuaded to retain office for another year. The invaluable hon. general secretary, Mr. John Brook, and the general treasurer, Mr. Hodgkinson, were re-elected with acclamation. Afterwards a good deal of time was occupied in discussing the rule as to the retirement of members of the Executive. To vote by ballot for the retirement of a member of the Executive was bluntly described by Mr. Handel Hall as disgraceful. It was apparent that in this direction the rules needed touching-up, and this is to be done under expert guidance. The effect of the ballot would have been the retirement of Mr. Ellis, of Manchester, an undesirable happening which was obviated by the retirement of Mr. Ormerod, of Southport, in favour of Mr. Ellis's re-election.

On Tuesday afternoon, Alderman Widgery, the well-known Exeter artist, gave a discourse on 'Music and its Influence,' in which his remarks were the more stimulating as coming from one who professed no knowledge of music beyond his love for the art 'for which humanity hungered.'

In the discussion as to what constituted the good or bad in music, Dr. Dixon (Lancaster) said that the criterion was whether it had power and charm.

Mr. Percy Baker doubted whether the capacity of anything to charm constituted merit. The question was whether the music conformed to certain standards. He thought that the way in which music as a subject was taught to school children was too superficial to be of any value. On the other hand, Mr. Malkin (Beverley) and other speakers expressed satisfaction with the efforts now being made in the schools.

Dr. Warriner, whose fund of humour made him an ideal chairman, had a sly dig at Jackson's famous Te Deum in F, which he said did not represent Exeter musicians at their best. Alderman Widgery's acceptable address certainly afforded a most useful subject for discussion.

A visit to the Cathedral followed, when the members were received by the Dean, Dr. Gamble, and viewed under his guidance the extremely beautiful features of the interior which atone for a certain lack of dignity in the exterior design. They were impressed by the striking and unique vista which no other English Cathedral possesses in the unbroken ridge-line of the vaulting extending from west to east. A choice Bach programme was played by Dr. Bullock on the Cathedral organ. The instrument is one of Father Willis's early masterpieces, and possesses the typical Willis-quality of true organ tone. The pieces which Dr. Bullock played with admirable skill and artistic insight were the Fantasia in G, Allegro (last movement of first Sonata), two Chorale preludes, 'Nun Komm, der Heiden Heiland' and 'Valet will ich der geben,' and Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, which has become popular in Elgar's orchestral version.

Following the recital was a garden party in the grounds of the Bishop's Palace, and in the evening a delightful reception was held in the Guildhall by the Mayor, Alderman A. N. Pitts, on behalf of the City and County of Exeter. Wednesday was devoted to excursions—first to Hay Tor, on Dartmoor, and in the afternoon to Crediton to view the magnificent old church; also the fine screen in Bovey Tracey Church. In between these trips was a luncheon at Deller's Café, at Exeter, where the local Association right-royally entertained the very large party of members and friends. At Crediton the features of the extraordinarily interesting old church were explained by Miss Beatrix Creswell, the well-known local writer on Devonshire history and topography, and a recital was given by Mr. Cyril G. Church on the new Harrison organ, of which the tone-variety and power were exhibited in two movements from Vierne's third Symphony and Parry's 'Wanderer' Toccata and Fugue.

In the evening the Congress dinner at the Rougemont Hotel wound up a day full of incident. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson occupied the chair, and among the guests were the Dean, the Mayor, and Sir Robert Newman, M.P. In responding to the toast of the National Union of Organists, the chairman appealed to the members to do their best to support the Association's benevolent fund. An organ recital once a year was a piece of constructive work all should do. It is computed there are some forty thousand organists, and if they each raised 10s. it would result in £20,000! Other toasts included the 'Mayor and the city of Exeter,' proposed by Mr. Percy Baker and responded to by the Mayor. Mr. Baker hoped that the municipalities of the country would take a wider and more enlightened view of their duties in regard to musical art. There were public libraries and museums and picture galleries, but very little encouragement was given to music. In replying the Mayor said that Exeter had gone back somewhat in music. It used to have a public band, but the advent of other recreations had killed that institution. He was, however, glad to say that Exeter this year was again to have a city band. Dr. Hutchinson (Newcastle) gave 'Success to the Exeter Association,' which was replied to by Dr. Bullock and Mr. Gilberthorpe, and Mr. Lumsden (Edinburgh) gave 'The Guests,' responded to by the Dean of Exeter and Sir Robert Newman. Dr. Warriner, in his happiest mood, proposed the 'Musical Press,' responded to by Mr. W. A. Roberts (Liverpool). On Thursday morning a visit was paid to the quiet resting place of the great Dr. S. S. Wesley in the Old Cemetery, and a laurel wreath was placed on the grave. This was a happy idea on the part of Mr. Handel Hall (Northampton). Wesley was organist of Exeter Cathedral, 1835-42. The time was all too short for visits to the recently restored Benedictine Priory of St. Nicholas (to see which would be worth a trip from America), as also the Norman Church of St. Mary Arches and the Clock-Jacks of St. Mary Steps. The final meeting was held in University College, where Dr. Bullock initiated a discussion on 'Church Music.' He remarked that he would scrap Tallis's responses, 'in which congregations generally tried to sing the top line.' He was no advocate of Gregorians, but recommended the free rhythm of plainsong and the non-stressing of words in chanting. Dr. Bullock said truly that the writing of Anglican chants was a lost art, and it seemed to be the same with hymn-tunes. He would freely 'telescope' certain verses in the Te Deum, and as regarded 18th-century anthems we should be careful in their use and more careful concerning those of the 19th-century, but should give a chance to 20th-century examples. As organ voluntaries he recommended greater use of the works of Bach, Franck, and Rheinberger. In the discussion the chairman, Dr. Harold Rhodes, limited speeches to three minutes apiece, so that nothing very material was forthcoming beyond individual opinions. Mrs. Cranston, a lady organist from Tasmania, offered some remarks. A paper on 'Performing Rights,' by Mr. Purcell Mansfield, of Glasgow, was read in his unavoidable absence by Mr. Sheard.

The members reluctantly said farewell to Exeter, en route for Torquay, the only regrets possible being those of the bell-lovers who had not been favoured with a hearing of the splendid bells of the Cathedral—the heaviest ringing peal of bells in this country rung in full swing in the English fashion. 'Grandison,' the tenor bell (1729—recast 1902), is 6-ft. in diameter and weighs 72½ cwt. A feature of the peal is the provision of the half-tone bell ('Pongamouth'), which sounds G natural, so that while the peal is in A (A—C sharp) it is possible to obtain the descending melodic minor scale of B, producing a very beautiful and unusual effect when muffled.

Torquay vied with Exeter in offering a Devonshire welcome, which was expressed officially by the Mayor (Alderman E. H. Sermon), who entertained the members to tea in the Pavilion Gardens. Later, at a reception held in the Town Hall, Mr. Brook expressed the acknowledgments of the members both to the Mayor and to the local Association, so well represented by Mr. F. L. Harris, the local secretary. Dr. Dixon, of Lancaster, set the seal on his reputation as a humorist in his felicitous impromptu speech on a rather delicate subject on which the Mayor requested his views, and the proceedings ended with the National Anthem, heartily and quite tunefully sung.

The chief incidents at Torquay included a visit to the recently-excavated ivy-shrouded remains of Tor Abbey (1196), where Mr. H. Watkins proved an eloquent guide, and to the fine Gilbert Scott Church of St. John, overlooking the bay, where a recital of music was given by Dr. Harold Rhodes (organ), Mr. Harry Crocker (violin), and Mr. H. G. Skidmore (pianoforte). The masterly organ playing of Dr. Rhodes was enjoyed in Stanford's Fantasia and Toccata and Liszt's 'Ad Nos' Fugue; and two melodious and musicianly movements by local composers were forthcoming in the Prelude for violin, organ, and pianoforte (Skidmore), and 'Andante religioso' for violin and organ (W. L. Twinning). St. John's organ (Hill, 1872 and 1900) is remarkable for its four keyboards of white sharps and black naturals, and for its Latin stop-labels. Choral evensong was attended in St. Matthias Church, where the well-trained choir, under Mr. Twinning, sang the Canticles to Nicholson in D flat, and Orlando Gibbons's anthem (unaccompanied), 'O Lord, increase my faith.' The organ voluntaries were also music by Gibbons, well played on the old Hill organ.

Apart from the gratifying social success of the Congress, there is now unmistakable evidence that the Association has reached a period in its existence when, under firm guidance, its objects and aims will be placed on a definite basis. The pioneers have worked well, and the small beginnings, with which the name of Councillor John Brook, of Southport, is so specially and honourably associated, will surely develop into greater things. It is in the hands of organists themselves to make their Union a real force. Next year the Congress will be held at Manchester.

We have received from Messrs. Henry Willis a copy of the first number of The Rotunda, a 'Journal of Artistic Organ-building and Musical Progress' (Ferndale Road, S.W.9; post free, 2*s*.). This, although a 'house' magazine, contains much of importance to all who are interested in the organ. Charles Macpherson writes on 'Father Willis'; Walter G. Alcock discusses the remarkable series of recitals at Westminster Cathedral; Harvey Grace chats about 'The Passing of the Organ Blower'; the Rev. Noel Bonavia Hunt deals with 'Synthetic Tones and Colouring'; 'Modern Organ Registration' is the subject of an article by J. Stuart Archer, &c. Henry Willis explains the origin and intention of the magazine, and has much of interest to say concerning recent developments in the work of the firm. Portraits of the chief contributors, one of Father Willis, and illustrations of consoles, mechanism, &c., add to the interest of a journal that is both well written and excellently produced.

Mr. Septimus Rostron has received from his fellow-members of the choir of St. Luke's, Southport, a presentation on his having concluded fifty years of continuous service. His average annual attendance during that period was a hundred, and never once was he late. We have received his recently-issued 'Reminiscences of a Chorister,' an eight-page pamphlet in which a long series of organists under whom he served are racily discussed. There are about twenty of them, but the most exciting period was probably that in which these two reigned:

> 'MR. JONES (a shoemaker).—His style of chanting was a gabble, he being a scorcher, a snapshot musician.
>
> 'MR. BLACKBURN (a butcher).—A noisy player, light and shade being out of the question. He made the harmonium and the organ in church thunder forth in sonorous tones; the singing also was uproarious.'

At Lausanne Cathedral a joint recital was recently given by Mr. Rollo Maitland, of Philadelphia, and Mr. George Arthur Wilson, of Brooklyn, the former's share of the programme including his own Scherzo-Caprice, Bach's Passacaglia and Liszt's Liebestraum, and the latter playing Gibbons's 'Fantasia of foure parts,' Healey Willan's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Vaughan Williams's Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' and Guilmant's Allegro Appassionata.

At St. John's, Barmouth, the programme of an organ recital given by Mr. H. Cyril Robinson included Mozart's Pianoforte Trio in E flat (K. 498), played by Dr. J. R. Heath (violin), Mrs. Heath (viola), and Mr. Robinson (pianoforte). The introduction of chamber music into organ recitals given in towns where chamber music concerts are rare is a capital move.

A new organ, built by Messrs. Chestnutt, of Waterford, has been installed in the Cathedral Church of St. Carthage, Lismore. It has two manuals of sixteen stops. Prof. W. H. Murray gave the opening recital, assisted by Miss Maisie Kelly (soprano), Mr. William Fortune (tenor), and Mr. Frank Twigg (bass).

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper are now engaged in rebuilding the organ in Keble College Chapel, Oxford, to the specification of Dr. Henry Ley. When completed the instrument will be a three-manual of thirty-five speaking stops, and fourteen manual- and nine foot-pistons.

RECITALS

Mr. Hugh Taylor, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Fantasia Sonata in A flat, Rheinberger; Cantabile in G, Jongen; Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude on 'Now thank we all our God,' Karg-Elert.

Mr. George Ryan, St. Mary-le-Bow—Sonata No. 1 (first movement), Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Herbert Howells; March Pontificale, Widor.

Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, Church of the Holy Communion, New York—Four Bach recitals: Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C; Trio-Sonatas Nos. 1 and 2; Fugue in G; Prelude and Fugue in D minor ('Fiddle' Fugue); Prelude and Fugue in A minor; Prelude and Fugue in A major; Aria in F; Prelude and Fugue in B minor; Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor; Prelude (9/8 time) and Fugue in C; Prelude and Fugue ('Great' C minor); Alla Breve in D; Un poco allegro from Trio-Sonata No. 4; Prelude and Fugue ('Wedge' Fugue); and twenty-one Chorale Preludes.

Miss Marjorie T. Renton, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude on 'St. Mary's,' Wood; Pastorale, Vierne; 'A.D. 1620,' MacDowell; Prelude and Fugue in E minor ('Wedge'), Bach; Fantasia in C, Handel.

Mr. William Robson, St. George's Presbyterian Church, Stockton-on-Tees—Recessional, Alan Gray; Fantasie-Overture in D minor, Rootham; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; No. 3 of three Cathedral Preludes, William Robson; Postlude in C, W. G. Alcock.

Mr. F. B. Porkess, Minehead Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Minuet from Sonata No. 1, Stanford; Largo sostenuto, Vaughan Williams; Preludes on 'St. Peter,' Darke; and 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams.

Dr. M. P. Conway, Chichester Cathedral—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Pæan, Basil Harwood; Preludes on 'To God on high be thanks and praise' and 'Out of the deep,' Bach; Communion in D, Alfred Hollins; Allegro Vivace, Adagio, and Toccata, Widor.

Mr. Maughan Barnett, Town Hall, City of Auckland—Pæan, Basil Harwood; Pastorale and Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Prelude and Fugue on the name B A C H, Liszt; Intermezzo, Hollins; Nocturne, Bairstow.

Mr. R. A. Jevons, American Church, Brussels—Fugue in G minor, Bach; Pastorale and Lament, Rheinberger; Suite Gothique, Boëllmann; Musette, Lemare; Finale, Dubois.

Mr. A. J. Sainsbury, Lausanne Cathedral — Fantasia, Orlando Gibbons; Ciacona in D minor, Pachelbel; Allegro maestoso, Elgar; Fugue and Choral, Honegger; Fugue on the name B A C H, Schumann.

Mr. J. R. Middleton, C. M. Chapel, Loughton—Marche Gothique, Salomé; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Fantasia on 'Twrgwyn,' Morgan.

Dr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church—Allegro Moderato ('Unfinished' Symphony), Schubert; Sonata in A, Rheinberger; Alla Marcia, Petrati.

Mr. H. Moreton, Plymouth Guildhall—Allegro Vivace, Vierne; Finale (Sonata Eroica), Stanford; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Andante and Scherzo, Widor; Finale in B flat, Franck.

Mr. Norman Cocker, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Marche Nuptiale No. 2, Guilmant; Variations on a Theme in A, Hesse; March for a Church Festival, Best.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Legend, Harvey Grace; Hindoo Song, Rimsky-Korsakov; Spring Song, Hollins; Triumph Song, Arthur Baynon.

Mr. W. A. Roberts, Peterborough Cathedral—Overture, 'Siroe,' Handel; Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Harvey Grace; Sonata in C minor, Reubke; Pastorale and Scherzetto, Vierne; Intermezzo (Suite No. 1), James Lyon.

Mr. Guy Michell, Baptist Church, Ceylon Place, Eastbourne—Agitato and Canzona, Rheinberger; Fugue in A minor, Bach; Romance, Wolstenholme; Scherzo in F minor, Sandiford-Turner.

Dr. C. H. Moody, Lincoln Cathedral—Pavane, Byrd; Phantasie in E flat, Rheinberger; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Postlude on 'London New,' Grace; Carillon, Vierne.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Allegro Militaire, Wolstenholme; Three Miniatures, Pullein; Chorale Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Marcia Eroica, Stanford; Theme and Variations and Fantasia and Finale (Sonata No. 10), Rheinberger; Sonata in A minor, Borowski; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Dithyramb, Basil Harwood; Lament, Harvey Grace.

Rev. L. G. Bark, Crosthwaite Parish Church—Preludes on 'Rockingham' and 'St. Cross,' Parry; Concerto No. 11, Handel; Variations on an Old English Air, Geoffrey Shaw; Suite in G, James Lyon.

Mr. Bernard F. Page, Town Hall, Wellington, New Zealand—Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Handel; Two Choral-Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Fantaisie in A, Franck; Prelude (Act 1), 'Tristan and Isolda.'

Mr. Paul Rochard, Crosthwaite Parish Church—Passacaglia in D minor, Reger; Variations on two English Airs, Guilmant; Sonatina ('God's time is the best'), Bach; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. H. Bentley, Christ Church, Lowestoft—Recessional, Alan Gray; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Preludes on 'Come, Redeemer of our race,' Bach; 'Old 104th' and 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Pastorale, Franck; Variations (Sonata No. 6), Mendelssohn.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Festival Postlude on 'Leoni,' W. A. Roberts; Tempo di Minuetto (Sonata No. 1), Stanford; Air with Variations, Best; Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Sonata, Reubke; Meditation in a Cathedral, E. Silas; Final in B flat, Franck; Prelude in C minor, Mendelssohn; First movement (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Passacaglia, Bach; Canon in B minor, Schumann.

Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church—Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Legend, Dvorák; 'La Cathédrale engloutie,' Debussy; Fantaisie in D flat, Saint-Saëns. (Miss Grace Adams, violin, played Chaconne, Vitali, and movements from Sonata in E, Bach.)

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Ernest T. Allen, choirmaster and organist, St. Barnabas, Oxford.

Mr. Henry Brentnall, choirmaster and organist, St. Brendan's Parish Church, Birr, King's Co., Ireland.

Mr. William Pulford, choirmaster and organist, Hadley Church, Barnet.

Mr. Reginald Ward, choirmaster and organist, St. Mary Magdalene, Taunton.

Letters to the Editor

THE ENGLISH MADRIGAL SCHOOL

[We gladly print the following letter from Dr. Fellowes. The points on which we comment are numbered for convenience of reference.]

SIR,—It is not my usual practice to take notice of either favourable or unfavourable criticism of my work in the Press, but I am compelled to ask you to correct certain statements made by you in commenting upon Mr. Norman Stone's letter in the current number of the Musical Times. It is absolutely untrue that the Carnegie Trust has in any shape or form subsidised the publication of 'The English Madrigal School,' edited by me in thirty-six volumes and published by Messrs. Stainer & Bell. Nor has anyone else subsidised this edition. In the opening stages I took the sole financial risk myself, relying entirely upon the support of subscribers given upon my personal solicitation. Eight volumes had been issued when the war broke out. At that date the list of subscribers was steadily increasing, although still insufficient to meet the actual cost of production; but the declaration of war temporarily wrecked the list. In the course of time Messrs. Stainer & Bell, with splendid enterprise and at immense financial risk, and also, I must repeat, without any kind of subsidy, took over my own financial loss to date and undertook to produce the whole of the thirty-six volumes completed last year. I say nothing further of the heavy expenditure of time and money incurred by me in preparing the edition from the original sources. In view of your statement as to 'the subsidised edition of Dr. Fellowes,' and the false inference contained in your sentence about producers who 'had no millionaire at their back,' I must ask you to take steps to remove any misapprehension which must have been aroused in the minds of many of your readers. (1)

In reference to your comments there would seem to be some further misunderstanding to remove. In your 'summing up' paragraph (p. 806) you say that I 'having done a work of national importance in transcribing these works for library use, the need now is for a performing edition of the best and most practical numbers, prepared by one who is expert in all matters regarding notation and laying-out for clearness and convenience in performance.' In other words, you propose that I having borne the burden and heat of the day for some fourteen years in toiling over what you yourself describe as 'a work of national importance,' some one else should pick the plums out of my edition and reap the profits. Is this British fairness either in reference to myself or to Messrs. Stainer & Bell? (2) But you are evidently unaware that I have already, several months ago, produced some seventy or eighty of these madrigals in a performing edition such as you demand, and that these are published by Messrs. Stainer & Bell. In this performing edition those madrigals are dealt with in which the compass of the voices presents practical difficulties. Transposition is employed where necessary, the inner parts being slightly interchanged in order to avoid the peculiar difficulties and awkward compass. The value of the crotchet remains constant throughout each composition. Accent-marks are employed as rhythmic rather than dynamic indications. The characteristic 'underlaying' of the words is preserved as in my other edition. A reference is also given on each number to 'The English Madrigal School' so that conductors may see the precise extent of my adaptations. I should add that modern key-signatures and time-signatures are employed, and that accidentals are used freely. Both 'This day Christ was born' and 'What is our life?' have been issued in this edition, and the points from them which you quoted are made perfectly clear for performance. In 'What is our life?' the 'weak alto' is not divided, the awkward compass is avoided, the lay-out is for S.S.A.T.B., and you may be satisfied to know that it is transposed to E minor. In the case of a large majority of the madrigals there is no need for an alternative version, but in the course of time still more will be issued in this slightly adapted form. (3)

But as regards the text of my 'English Madrigal School' as it stands, its chief value lies in the fact that it represents the original text, as far as possible, in all details. That text is so scarce, and so difficult of access to the vast majority of musicians, that it was supremely important to produce an edition in which, as far as possible, all uncertainty as to the original text is eliminated. That is why I have not inserted extra time-signatures and other details, such as you suggest, in the voice parts. The pianoforte part is intended to act as a 'crib' does for a school-boy; an intelligent student can see by my vocal text what the original reading is; I have endeavoured to obscure nothing by my editorial methods. To achieve this object and at the same time to produce a satisfactory working edition was not always possible; my so-called 'transposed edition' was contemplated by me at the very first inception of the scheme to meet this difficulty, but it necessarily had to wait until the end. (4) I have not been so entirely without practical experience of choral-singing, or as a chorus-master during the past thirty years, as you seem to suppose. Nor have I 'profited by the slips' of other editors as you suggest; I worked exclusively from the original editions, and I am at a loss to understand the point of your remark about the 'conditions that were always difficult and rarely lucrative' under which you say earlier editors worked; for how could the conditions have varied if we all prepared our editions from the one and only available source? (5)

One further matter. The text of the music is not the only detail in which error can arise. The Elizabethan idiom in 'underlaying' the words is peculiar and characteristic, and most important to preserve. Mr. Arkwright alone, I believe, among editors before me, observed this point. It was not until thirteen volumes of my edition were published that I perceived that he and I had worked independently and correctly on these lines. No other edition of madrigals except Mr. Arkwright's and my own follows the true principle of underlaying the words, as far as I am aware. And what becomes of the 'regard for the verbal accent' of which you speak if the words are frequently misplaced? I did not see Mr. Kennedy Scott's little book on madrigal singing until after my 'English Madrigal Composers' was published; but I well remember my pleasure many years earlier in noticing how Mr. Scott, by rare exception among madrigal conductors at that time, observed the free rhythms in performance. I may add that Mr. Scott has been one of my most consistent and generous supporters, and I treasure a letter written by him to me in enthusiastic terms in reference to my treatment of the rhythmic problem when the Morley volumes were first published in July, 1912. I make no claim and never have made any claim to discoveries of this nature. As to other editors whose names you mention, some of them are my personal friends, and my friends know well that I lose no opportunity for paying tribute to others who at different times have worked in the same field; I had a special pleasure in doing so on June 24, as I am sure all who were present will remember.—Yours, &c.,

The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.
September, 1925.

Edmund H. Fellowes.

[(1.) Our mistake in this matter has been pointed out to us by several correspondents, and before Dr. Fellowes's letter was received we had written an 'Occasional Note' (p. 905) expressing our regret for the slip.

(2.) We need hardly say that our proposal meant nothing of the sort. Indeed, we imagine that the laws of copyright would amply protect Dr. Fellowes and his publishers.

(3.) This is the first intimation we have received regarding the performing edition. We have not been favoured with review copies, nor, apparently, has any other journal. Moreover, although the edition was produced 'several months ago,' the copy of 'What is our life?' on which we based our criticism was bought in the ordinary way at the publishers as recently as the end of July; and a copy of Byrd's 'When Christ was born,' bought on the day Dr. Fellowes's letter was received, turned out to be the same version as the one we discussed in our September issue. Without pressing this point, we mention it in order to show that our criticisms were based on the only copies available, and on the only edition that, so far as we knew, had been published, or was likely to be published. If our criticisms needed justification, we could ask for none more ample than that supplied by this portion of Dr. Fellowes's letter. We said the existing edition was unsatisfactory from the performer's point of view, and along comes Dr. Fellowes with the most practical agreement in the shape of a new edition embodying improvements of the type we advocated. (And we may add that within a couple of days of the appearance of the September Musical Times, a well-known choral conductor wrote expressing entire agreement with our criticisms, and saying that before his choir could sing Byrd's 'When Christ was born' the copies had to be re-edited.)

(4.) We agree with Dr. Fellowes as to the importance and value of an edition giving an exact transcription of the original. If, however, the works so transcribed have any interest for the average member of the public, a performing edition is even more important than the volumes for library use. It is unfortunate that circumstances prevented Dr. Fellowes from doing years ago what he has done now—that is, issue a large batch of the best of the works laid out and noted in a manner conforming as far as possible to present-day usage.

(5.) The conditions of early workers in any field of research are usually difficult for two reasons—first, the available material is less plentiful and less get-at-able than it becomes later, when public interest has been roused; second, the actual transcription is almost inevitably made without that full knowledge of the notational and other peculiarities that can develop only with the research itself. Even the difference between the travelling facilities of to-day and seventy years ago is a factor worth considering. An editor can reach a MS. to-day after a run of an hour or two by motor or railway. Seventy years ago the journey would have made a big hole in a day—and the MS. would probably have been left undisturbed. We are sorry to have to explain what we imagined to be self-evident. No less obvious is the fact that a generation ago the public for Elizabethan music was small, and publishers must have regarded most madrigals as mere swings, to be paid for by the more popular roundabouts. Later, when new and correct editions come along, the editors and publishers of these inevitably profit (though indirectly) from the fact that earlier editions are apt to be discredited (sometimes unfairly) as unreliable and corrupt.

In regard to Dr. Fellowes's closing sentences we add that we were prevented from being present at the occasion to which he refers (the dinner given in his honour, a report of which appeared in our August issue), but we heard from some who were present of the generous references made by Dr. Fellowes to his fellow-workers in the Elizabethan revival. This is entirely what we should have expected from our personal knowledge of him, and we end this discussion, as we began it, with the assurance that our comments have been dictated only by a desire to deal fairly and frankly, and as impersonally as possible, with a matter of public interest.—EDITOR.]

THE GIBBONS TERCENTENARY CELEBRATIONS

SIR,—The criticism of my letter appearing in the September issue of the Musical Times, headed 'The Gibbons Tercentenary Celebrations,' deals with a matter which is quite beside the issue.

I merely set out to answer the query contained in 'Occasional Notes' in the July issue: 'Is Orlando quite so much of a discovery as some of the enthusiasts would have us think?' and in doing so I naturally referred to Dr. Fellowes's book, 'The English Madrigal Composers,' as being the latest contribution to the literature dealing with the vocal music of the Tudor period, and, in my opinion, the most comprehensive and illuminating treatise of its kind.

That is not to say that earlier contributions have had no hand in restoring the spirit of the madrigalists—indeed, anyone who has read Dr. Fellowes's book knows that he himself, as mentioned in the preface, acknowledges with gratitude his indebtedness to Mr. Barclay Squire and Mr. Kennedy Scott (to mention only two outstanding names associated with madrigal music).

I have been closely associated with Mr. Kennedy Scott and his magnificent work with the Oriana Madrigal Society and the Oriana Singers (a select off-shoot of the Madrigal Society) than whom he has no warmer admirer—indeed, it was while under his conductorship in both these bodies that I was introduced to the editions of Mr. Barclay Squire which are referred to in the criticism.

Moreover, all this is beside the point—and the point is that Orlando Gibbons is justly considered to be a 'discovery.'—Yours, &c.,

NORMAN STONE.

36, Carlton Road,
East Sheen, S.W.14.

[We do not agree that our comments on Mr. Stone's letter were 'beside the issue.' They were entirely concerned with certain obvious—though no doubt unintentional—implications on his part to which we took exception.—ED.]

WAGNER AND THE ENGLISH PRESS

SIR,—I am not disposed to waste either time or old-fashioned courtesy upon a controversialist so unscrupulously mendacious as Mr. G. Ainslie Hight. He tells your readers that 'Mr. Newman draws his material [for 'Wagner as Man and Artist'] from the notoriously scandalous Jewish Press of Germany.' I give Mr. Hight the lie direct. There is not a paragraph of my book that draws to the smallest extent, for material for my estimate of Wagner, on anything in the Press of Germany, Jewish or Gentile, scandalous or respectable.

If Mr. Hight objects to this plain speaking, no doubt your columns will be open to him to substantiate his assertion.—Yours, &c.,

ERNEST NEWMAN.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES

SIR,—'F.R.C.O.'s' letter has been admirably replied to by your paragraph. Still, there is a point I should like to refer to, viz., 'Salary of vicar, £580 and house.' This would be subject to such reductions by taxes, rates, and dilapidation charges, that the net would probably amount only to about £350. If the stipend, or any part of it, comes from tithe, there will be income tax on the tithe as well as on the total—two income taxes. Believe me, incumbents at present are harder hit, all things considered, than any other class of professional men.—Yours, &c.,

The Vicarage, Little Waldingfield. E. H. MELLING
(Vicar of Little Waldingfield, Suffolk).

SIR,—'Oxonian' has so ably expressed himself in reference to the organist that he leaves very little to be said. It is a hopeless task. Some readers have at times expected the R.C.O. to take this matter up, but we could not surely think that possible on a guinea a year. I am afraid the College gains very little by the time we get our annual calendar, examination papers, and Musical Times monthly.

I should like readers generally, especially those whom it concerns, to think over the following questions. I do not wish for any reply, as this letter is final:

(1) Why do Church authorities ignore the financial position of the organist?
(2) When salaries are cut down, why does the operation generally start with the organist?
(3) If there is to be a pension scheme for certain Church workers, why not let all contribute? If not, why not?
(4) Is there any Church in existence which can or does say—'We need all the money collected for the upkeep of our Church. Anything over will be devoted to the usual outside objects'? If not, why not?
(5) Congregations contribute largely to the Easter and Whitsun-day offerings, but when organ and choir Sunday comes along, they ignore it. Why?

I now crawl into my shell.—Yours, &c., F.R.C.O.

SIR,—I appreciate your remarks on my last letter, and I thank you for its insertion. The verger referred to is a half-timer, and again I say if unskilled verger's work can command more than my job, which is skilled, well, it is time all we organists became vergers, or combined the two jobs. Your remark that the Church is in economic straits is true. Why? Any Church where there is a good, sound parson and a decent musical service never lacks funds. The administration is wrong. 'Oxonian' has embodied in his letter everything that I have already generally touched upon. I was on holiday recently at ——. The first thing that caught my eye was an organ recital announcement pasted on a notice board; 'Collection for the organist's salary augmentation fund.' I once did that; never again! The tune was £5 0*s.* 9*d.* We had a gala day at the Parochial Church Hall to give it to me, headed by the Mayor and Corporation—the church band played selections, and the clergy and the parochial council attended. I nearly fell off the platform when I found what the cheque was. (1) Why house free for the clergyman? (2) Why Easter offering? (3) Why Whitsun offering for the curate? (4) Why ask for funds to train ordination candidates? (5) Why money for clergy pensions, widows and orphans? (9) Why schemes to benefit the clergy only? (7) If all Church workers can be included, I am ready to support it. At present, 'nothing doing.' (8) Has ever anyone seen or heard of a scheme to help the organist?—Yours, &c., F.R.C.O.

THE MALADY OF CHOPIN

SIR,—In your September number, Mr. Norman Suckling refers to Schubert as 'the most shallow Teuton who ever covered up a painful poverty of musical ideas by providing fictitious opportunities to be soulful.'

Whatever the latter part of the sentence means—if it means anything at all—the designation of the immortal Franz Schubert by a phrase declaring that he suffered from a poverty of musical ideas, indicates a fundamental weakness of musical appreciation. Phrases like that quoted are exceedingly easy to coin, and can readily be produced apropos of anybody or anything; but sad to relate, they are not customarily received like the words of the prophet.

A man who, though dying at thirty-one, was yet, by almost universal acclaim, the greatest song-writer of all time, and who, besides much other music, produced two of the world's finest Symphonies, is not to be disposed of by the phrase, 'most shallow Teuton who ever covered up a painful poverty of musical ideas,' &c.—Yours, &c.,

49, Manor Road, Stamford Hill, N. L. J. Green.

CHRISTOPHER TYE

Sir,—As Dr. Grattan Flood has referred very kindly to my article on 'Christopher Tye' in Grove's Dictionary, perhaps you will allow me to ask him for the authorities for some of the details in his little biography of this composer, which are new to me in the form in which he states them. No doubt I shall have to revise my article before long, and if documents have come to light since I wrote it, which have escaped my notice, Dr. Grattan Flood will be doing me a favour if he will give the references.

He says that Tye was born in $149\frac{8}{9}$, and was in the choir of King's College, Cambridge, from 1510 to 1515. If he has proof of this, I should be very grateful if he would print it. When I wrote my article, it was possible to say only that if the boy Tye, who was in King's College choir in 1511 and 1512, was Christopher Tye, his birth may perhaps be placed between 1497 and 1500. Also I had no proof that the Tye who was in that choir in 1527 was Christopher. The name 'Christopher' Tye does not appear in the College Books till 1537, so far as I know; and there was certainly one other Tye in the choir.

Dr. Grattan Flood gives September 10, 1541, as the date of his appointment at Ely Cathedral. I should be very glad to know where this date is found.

I should like to ask Dr. Flood why he says that Tye 'had to' resign the livings of Wilbraham and Newton? We know he did resign them: but 'had to' suggests compulsion, for which I know of no evidence.

I cannot imagine why Dr. Flood asserts that Tye probably ''verted to the ancient creed,' between August 27, 1571 (when he signed the Articles of Doctrine with the other Ely clergy), and the date of his death before March 15, $157\frac{3}{8}$. His only reasons for saying so seem to be: (1) That on August 26, 1571 (the day before he signed the Articles of Doctrine), Tye had met the Bishop of Ross, who had given him some verses on the previous day's hunting to put into English—which does not seem to me to bear upon the subject; (2) that in 1568 he set the Vulgate version of the 119th Psalm beginning 'Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way.' Many people have set the Latin version of the Psalms to music, who would be very indignant if they were told that they therefore were Roman Catholics. If this was a proof that Tye had ''verted to the ancient creed,' he must have signed the Articles of Doctrine as a double-dealer, to use no harsher word, which I do not for a moment believe. My own impression of Dr. Tye is that he was a man of extreme simplicity, not to say guilelessness, in affairs outside his music, and I must express my entire dissent from what I take to be Dr. Grattan Flood's view of his character. Nor can I accept his picture of him as sitting comfortably in the richest living in England, occasionally sparing a few moments of his wealthy leisure to compose a little music. (I hope I am not exaggerating, but that is what Dr. Flood's words suggest to me.) Other writers have alluded to the fact that at one time Doddington was reputed to be the richest living in England; so it is just as well to explain that in the 16th century that very extensive parish was for the most part a stretch of swamp, of no interest to the tithe collector. It was not until the Fens were drained that Doddington parish became a rich tract of corn land. I have been told that at one time the rector received fifteen or sixteen thousand a year in tithe. But that was long after the period of Dr. Tye.

Dr. Grattan Flood is good enough to say that I give an 'almost complete' list of Tye's works. I shall be very glad to hear of any additions to it. So far none have come to my knowledge. The MSS. which Dr. Flood mentions are all duly entered in my list.—Yours, &c.,

Highclere, Newbury. G. E. P. Arkwright.
August, 1925.

CONVERSATION AT CONCERTS

Sir,—The question of conversation at concerts, and more especially orchestral concerts, is one that has occupied many minds and pens. A recurring aspect is raised by your correspondent, 'A Promenader,' in the September issue, where he asserts that women are the chief offenders. This is no doubt true, and the reasons are both psychological and temperamental.

At concerts by a soloist, their attention will be taken either by the external appearance and demeanour of the singer or player, or his idiosyncrasies, but at an orchestral concert few of these considerations apply, or only for a short time, and the resumption of activities by the orchestra at once releases them from their reverie and provides an obbligato for chatter that has to do with various mundane affairs, but very little concerning music.

I believe that students of the subject are agreed that women are not musical. They take music-lessons when young either because it is 'the thing' or else to warrant the possession of a pianoforte; but it is doubtful if in many cases their musical education is advanced by these means, or their ability to appreciate the general field of music enhanced.

It seems, then, after all, to be a case of concentration; and this faculty would appear to have received its death-blow, or at any rate a set-back, after generations of 'At Homes,' where very little of any worth was ever heard; and last, but not least, the distaste of women generally for mechanics has its echo in a disability to appreciate all that an orchestra means, apart from its economics.—Yours, &c.,

S. F. D. Howarth.
September, 1925.

Sharps and Flats

Llanystumdwy is engraved on my heart. It was in the chapel close by that I learnt Tonic Sol-fa, and I once won a prize for singing; but they only gave me a threepenny book, and I gave up the job.—David Lloyd George.

I have in my will stopped any native conductor from doing my works when I am dead. If they won't do them when I can hear them, they shall not enjoy the usual posthumous popularity.—Joseph Holbrooke.

It would be so beautiful to hear a whole audience hiss a work which one feels, oneself, to be pretentious nonsense. We are too polite for that as yet. Communal hissing is just as fine an ideal as communal singing; it is just a different path to the same end—real appreciation.—Sir Hamilton Harty.

Quaintly figured Harvey Grace's Postlude was a dart from a seldom-ridden blue, closing with a problem climax chord into the Infinite.—Guernsey Newspaper.

Dancing to the Minuet of Beethoven's first Symphony would have split the seat of every pair of breeches in the ballroom.—Compton Mackenzie.

D'Aranyi and Fachiri, two talented women, are quite safe Bach players.—John F. Porte.

One winter night in 1892 . . . I heard a street singer sing 'The song that reached my heart,' and I declare that even to-day I would not yield that experience for later experiences of the 'Choral' Symphony or the Mass in B minor—at least, I think I would not.—Sydney Grew.

Delius in the mood of 'On first hearing the cuckoo in spring' and 'Song before Sunrise' always reminds me of a schoolmaster on his holidays. I feel that an accomplished mind is reacting in an accomplished way to the conventional rustic emotions that Mr. Pickwick expressed on that May morning at Dingley Dell.—Compton Mackenzie.

I feel that I am only beginning to know what I must know before I can really know anything about singing; and it will be another five years before I know even a little.—Teify Bonner (tenor).

It is not often that I have the felicity to be of the same mind as a tenor with regard to his powers. Indeed, if anything, Mr. Bonner is a trifle too modest. — Ernest Newman.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

'Cellist (medium ability) wishes to join quartet for mutual practice, one morning a week. N. or N.W. districts.—A. E., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to meet vocalist for mutual practice.—D. H., 'Pewlyn,' Basingstoke Road, Reading.

Mezzo-soprano wishes to join quartet. Near West-End.—L. H., c/o Musical Times.

Young bass wishes to meet pianist (lady or gentleman), at own residence preferred.—John Naunton-Rushen, 55, Kendall Road, Beckenham, Kent.

Baritone (amateur) wishes to meet young pianist for mutual practice. N.W. London.—H. H., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady singer wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. E. London district preferred.—F. M. A., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman pianist and flautist wishes to join others for practice of easy orchestral (chamber) music. Chiswick or Kew districts.—E. A. Cousins, 32, Thorneyhedge Road, Chiswick, W.

Pianist wishes to meet good violinist and 'cellist to form trio, for mutual practice.—Mabel E. Armitage, 101, Narbonne Avenue, Clapham Park, S.W.4.

Young gentleman wishes to join amateur dance band as pianist (able to lead). Would also act as accompanist to vocalists, &c.—Jack Carlton, c/o 41, Charles Street, Stepney, E.1.

'Cellist (lady) wishes to meet good pianist (lady) for mutual practice.—R. M., c/o Musical Times.

Young tenor wishes to meet pianist (lady or gentleman) for mutual practice, one or two evenings a week. Clapham district.—H. M. W., c/o Musical Times.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The inaugural address for the Michaelmas term was given by Sir Dan Godfrey, who chose for his subject 'Music as a Career.'

Following the precedent of last term, a course of lectures on one of the sister arts of music will be given by Mr. Fred H. Crossley. His subject is 'Gothic Architecture,' and the lectures will be illustrated by lantern slides. Mr. H. Ostrovsky will lecture on his system of 'Hand-Training for Instrumental Players.'

The usual students' concerts will be given in addition to recitals by students of various professors.

Mr. A. W. Payne has joined the teaching staff of the College. Dr. Horner, Director of Examinations, has left for an examining tour in South America and the West Indies.

Distributions of certificates have been arranged to take place at various centres during the month.

The many friends of Mr. Edward d'Evry will be sorry to learn that he has met with an accident by falling and breaking his knee-cap. It is hoped that he will be able to resume teaching at an early date.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS

The novelties have not stirred the blood very much. Bartók's 'Dance Suite' has been the most exciting thing so far. This was written a couple of years ago as a kind of celebratory piece for the concert that signalised the fiftieth anniversary of the union of Buda with Pesth. There are five movements, linked by a bright little theme, that gets smaller and smaller each time till it is the thinnest of threads. Perhaps that may be because of the rather daunting nature of some of the tunes that keep it company in the various movements. These are all set off in a rather bizarre manner, and a good many of the consecutive seconds and other dissonant intervals cling around them. There is, however, no feeling of the composer's playing the fool, and of his skill in contrivance there can be no doubt. We do not look for high development in a dance suite, of course. The things that happen here are, it is quite certain, very personal expressions of a powerful mind, which, though it may not be easy to sympathise fully with them, do set forth a point of view without imitating others, and without unnecessary fuss and advertisement. So we respect Bartók; though I, for one, cannot often get far on the road to affection for his music.

Schreker's 'Birthday of the Infanta' Suite, taken from its dance-pantomime context, does not amuse. It is heavy, pedantic music.

Paul Graener's Variations on 'The Volga Boatmen's Song' were respectably made, but the song is not a good theme for treatment. The composer frequently left it 'until called for,' and ambled, pleasantly enough, in other fields. Competent music this, only reminding us how much better a master of his material, such as Tchaikovsky, could do the thing.

Pfitzner, born of German parents in Russia (1869), is a composer of whom we certainly ought to hear more. Three Preludes from his opera, 'Palestrina,' were almost full of meat. There were corners in which something very like padding was to be observed, but this is music of serious aim and of definite achievement. The Prelude to the second Act, foreshadowing the warfare of the Council of Trent, is on the whole less impressive than the introduction to the opera and to the last Act, in which the music really soars for several minutes at a time. Pfitzner's idiom is reasonably modern; he knows how to score; and he has something to say, born of imagination and a sense of breadth and dignity in music. We hope Sir Henry will let us have these Preludes again, and some more samples of Pfitzner.

Nicholas Tcherepnin's suite, 'The Romance of a Mummy,' was written for the dancer Pavlova. Its ideas are puerile, and the combination of Russian and Oriental repetitiveness is exceedingly tiresome.

Dr. Norman Hay's 'Dunluce' has some good stuff in it, but the performance was so scratchy that it was sometimes difficult to know what was going on. I think the orchestration could in several places be reconsidered with advantage; and the work is rather too long. These tone-poems with vague backgrounds almost always tend to diffuseness, and so cause us to lose interest. The romantic legends associated with the fine ruin near the Giants' Causeway have evidently moved the composer more deeply than he has been able to move us. That often happens; and because we feel there is some good stuff in him, we shall be willing to hear him again.

Three quaint little musings of Haig Gudenian, the Armenian composer who plays very adroitly on a tuned-down fiddle, have been orchestrated by Sir Henry Wood. These Oriental fragments—'The Shepherd,' 'The Candy-Seller,' and a 'Pastorale'—are sweetmeats that melt in the mouth. They last just long enough. If they were any longer, I fear they would bore us. The tone M. Gudenian gets is curiously fascinating and soothing—rather like that of a peculiarly refined and rarefied viola.

So much for the 'novelties'—which, by the way, Sir Henry has put in the second part of the programme, presumably to make it more interesting. It is rather hard on the hearer who has to listen attentively. At ten o'clock he is not too fresh; and I think it may be a little hard on the composers too.

The oldsters have held their own triumphantly, and a bit more. Handel, in the midst of plenty of perfunctory, or at the best, decent routine work, suddenly gives us an eloquent, deeply felt movement, and makes us resolve to explore him afresh. So does Haydn. The slow movement of the twelfth Symphony (B. & H. new edition number), played on September 8, is a fine example of the inclusion of something of concentrated force, of almost Bachian austerity and elevation of feeling, in the middle of a work otherwise of no great interest—though the very short first movement has a foretaste of the concentration of the second, and just a trace of its dramatic power.

The English Singers have scored a great success. The refinement of these accomplished artists is highly enjoyable. I wish sometimes they had rather more actual vocal power and richness. The bass in particular is rather light. Artistry makes up, however, for this little lack (as I feel it), and they have delighted the Thursday nighters so much that an encore has had to be given each week.

One of the happiest memories is of Miss d'Aranyi's playing of the Brahms Violin Concerto. This was noble indeed.

I have heard only one of the Saturday organists, but I believe they have 'gone down' very well, Bach is always popular, but a few pieces by other composers might have been played on the organ. Mr. Kiddle's Handel Concerto, one Wednesday, gave great delight, and he had to play an encore. The work was the G minor, No. 5 (second set, Op. 7).

A pair of R.A.M. students of excellent quality, Miss Edna Howard and Mr. Eric Brough—played the second Concerto of Bach (in C, for two pianofortes), on September 16. They showed a sound grasp of the fundamentals of Bach-playing.

It is a pity the new singers so rarely come up to the players' standard. They have varied a good deal, and few have been particularly good. Some older, more mature, performers have done well, as ever, and one or two have even sung fresh music. Miss Balfour came out with a long, difficult, and wide-ranging Mozart air—'Non più di fiori,' from 'Titus'—which she sang in musicianly style. On the same evening (September 15), Mr. Frank Phillips, a sound and pleasant-voiced bass, was heard. He made a good impression. Miss Bessie Kerr, Miss Bella Baillie, and Miss Eva Cattaneo have shown varying degrees of promise. Miss Cohen has not made the pianoforte sing so sweetly as she was wont to do. Is mannerism getting in the way? Mr. Falkner, whom my colleague mentioned last month, sang Sach's monologue one evening. This is not quite his 'pidgin' yet. He is too young for it, and sings more like the bright youth, Walther, than the sage philosopher, Hans. He is one of the most promising singers we have heard.

Mr. McEachern sang in Italian, but it sounded to me more like the language of the biggest of the Three Bears. He sings a little more delicately than he used to, at moments, which is something to the good.

Miss Betty Humby plays the pianoforte very cleverly, but she is much too young for the Mozart D minor Concerto. Experience—of art and of life—is necessary for Mozart. Miss Hess played the A major Concerto a week or two later, in a way that provided a fine lesson for any pianist. It is difficult to know which to praise more—her exquisite taste, or that of Sir Henry and the orchestra. They all played like angels. As an encore Miss Hess gave us her arrangement (I presume) of that most mollifying Chorale of Bach, 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring.' What a different tone this was—grander in scale and amazingly varied in quality; yet it was the same instrument which she had caressed in the Mozart. A finer artist never touched keyboard. How old John Sebastian would have loved to hear his tune set forth with such plenitude of grace! This is music to bridge earth and heaven.

W. R. A.

HANDEL AND THE FOUNDLING HOSPITAL

By T. Francis Forth

The sale of the Foundling Hospital for a fabulous sum brings to mind the fact that Handel was greatly connected with the foundation of that institution, which has been of such tremendous value during the greater part of two centuries.

Ten years after the foundation of the Hospital, by Captain Coram in 1739, Handel offered to give a performance in aid of the Chapel, which was not as yet complete. This offer the Committee accepted, and on the day fixed, Saturday, May 27,

> '. . . the Prince and Princess of Wales, with a great number of persons of quality and distinction, were at the Chapel of the Foundling Hospital to hear several pieces of vocal and instrumental music, composed by George Frederick Handel, Esq., for the benefit of the foundation' (Gentleman's Magazine).

The programme consisted of three parts: (1) the 'Firework' Music, brought out only a month before at Green Park, in connection with the celebration of the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, when the orchestra of a hundred performers consisted of 43 strings, 24 oboes, 12 bassoons, 9 trumpets, 9 horns, and 3 timpani; (2) such parts of the oratorio 'Solomon' as were connected with the Dedication of the Temple—it had been produced at Covent Garden only two months previously; and (3) various compositions on words applicable to charity and written for the occasion. Handel also gave to the Chapel an organ, which he himself opened on May 1, 1750.

On account of his beneficent acts, Handel became one of the Governors of the Hospital; and such was his interest in the institution that annually from 1750 to 1758 he conducted 'The Messiah' in the Chapel, and by so doing was the means of bringing in £7,000 to the charity. The first performance of this, his greatest oratorio, in London took place only two months before he became a Governor, and it is probable that its immense popularity was due to the fact that 'The Messiah' at first came to be identified with the Foundling Hospital; so much was this the case that the Governors expected the copyright to be handed over to them. This, however, Handel could not see his way to do. Though he did not part with the copyright, in his will he ordered that 'a fair copy of the score and all the parts of "The Messiah"' be given to the Hospital.

At his death a dirge was sung in the Chapel, on May 26, 1759—ten years after he became a Governor. During those ten years he had laid the foundation of that music for which the Hospital has been so famous.

Now that the Foundling is to be removed into the country, it is to be hoped that this musical tradition will be kept up, and that the new buildings will contain some suitable commemoration of the great Master of Music who was so ready to use his wonderful genius to further a charity so dear to his heart.

SOME NEW HYMN-BOOKS

There has been of late a correspondence in one of the evening papers on the subject of dull hymn-tunes. There are certainly many specimens in our collections which merit this designation—poor tunes to doggerel verses—but which are nevertheless popular.

Two new collections of hymns are in the press, and will appear almost simultaneously. One is called 'Songs of Praise,' and is to be issued by the Oxford University Press under the editorship of Dr. R. Vaughan Williams. This distinguished modern musician has already shown his gifts in the direction of the composition of hymn-tunes by his setting to 'For all the Saints,' in the 'English Hymnal,' and recently his Mass has been adapted to the English rite. We may certainly expect some 'finds' in the way of new tunes in this collection, which is sure to be an interesting and comprehensive compilation.

The other hymn-book is that to be issued by that useful Society encumbered with a very unwieldy title, and usually referred to as the S.P.C.K. This, it is understood, is to be a children's book, and in this fruitful field there seems to be a lack of good material. Children require constant change to keep alive their interest, especially in a more or less prescribed and rigid set service which has its advantages and its corresponding drawbacks. It is good to note, however, that the Church of England is showing a desire for more elasticity, more freedom, in its services. This is instanced by a fresh choice in the matter of the Psalms.

Yet again the proprietors of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern,' our tried friend of the old days—and one which it is curious to recall at this time of day, caused a riot in some churches on its first introduction—is to be revised or to have a further supplement by way of showing its vitality. Naturally there is always the expense of a new hymn-book to be considered; and it would seem that the Church of England does not set a very high price on its music, or at least on the services of those who provide it, judging by the very meagre salaries usually offered to organists. Bearing in mind this feeling for economy, there is also on the stocks a collection of a hundred new tunes to familiar hymns which will include some of the best of the tunes written by various organists all over the country, and from places as far distant as Demerara, Jersey, and Greenock. These places are mentioned as showing the very wide field covered by the Musical Times, in which paper the announcement of this collection was made in May last. It will include examples from Roman Catholics—who are not at all well served in the matter of hymns, other than the traditional Office hymns—as well as Nonconformists, and is likely to meet with great favour. These various indications of renewed activity in the service of the Church will each help in its own way, but it is to be hoped that the needs of congregational singing will be prominently borne in mind, so that the service may not be left to the choir, thus becoming a stilted sort of performance and not, as it should be, a hearty burst of thankfulness and praise. W. D.

A NEW SYSTEM OF CHOIR CONTROL AND ORGANIZATION

By H. F. Thiele

When I was appointed choirmaster at my present Church (Christ Church, Southgate, London), I put into effect what I believe to be a new method of choir control and organization. It is a method by which competition, always an excellent thing in a choir, is encouraged, and by which the boys to a great extent govern themselves. So excellent have been the results obtained in one year, that I feel the scheme would be of enormous use to many other choirmasters and organists who are anxious to get the best results out of the material at hand. I cannot do better than give my own experiences.

When I went to Southgate I found I had sixteen boys who received a nominal quarterly allowance for their services. I was fortunate in finding good material. Within a month, however, four of the best boys left owing to their voices breaking, and it took some time before they were replaced. Meanwhile, with twelve youngsters, all mediocre, we carried on, learning chants, hymn-tunes, and an occasional anthem by ear. The problems I set myself to tackle were, first, to improve the standard of singing, and to do it quickly; second, to teach the boys the rudiments of music; third, to secure myself so far as possible against the loss of a useful voice, and to increase the number of treble voices to twenty-four.

The first problem had to do with the general singing, in other words, as will be agreed, to make the boys more confident of their own ability to sing. To this end, I divided my choir into four divisions. In the first division I placed the four best singers, and called them 'Seniors.' They were my potential soloists. The second division of four boys represented the next most useful voices, and were called 'Junior A's.' In the third division were those who had completed their probationary period, the 'Junior B's,' and the fourth division was composed of probationers. Whenever we practised an anthem or service in which there was a solo, it was sung full by the four 'Seniors' until it became known, when it would be taken by each of the boys at a time at the practices, that one with the best voice singing it at the service. By this method it ensues that always four soloists are available, all in friendly competition with one another. When a 'Senior' has to leave the choir through his voice breaking there is immediately a solo-singing competition among the 'Junior A's' to fill the vacancy, the best all-round boy being promoted. The vacancy that occurs in the 'Junior A's' necessitates a further competition in the 'Junior B's,' and yet another among the probationers. The difficulties of the tests are naturally graded according to the division competing. The unique point about this system is that it is the 'Seniors' who act as judges, subject only to the choirmaster's ruling. They seat themselves about the church during the tests, and give marks according to a prearranged plan. There can be no favouritism, each singer being judged on his own merits, and receiving promotion accordingly. The competitive spirit thus introduced has led to an unbelievable improvement in confidence, tone, and general usefulness. The 'Seniors' are proud and jealous of the position they hold, and each of the other divisions is keenly anxious for promotion. Even should no vacancies occur in the higher divisions there is always a quarterly probationers' test so that the best of the probationers are promoted to 'Junior B.' The quarterly allowances made to the boys in the various divisions are also graded, the 'Seniors' naturally receiving more than the 'Junior A's.'

The second problem was to train the boys to read music, and this proved difficult, as so little time was available. There are only two practices a week, an hour on Tuesdays and an hour and a half with the full choir on Fridays. Psalms, hymns, canticles, anthems, &c., not to speak of scales, took nearly all the time, so another method had to be discovered. This was the solution: From a book on the theory of music the main ideas, such as the scales and names of notes, key-signatures, intervals, &c., were extracted and divided into eight short lessons. These were duplicated on a hand machine, and every Tuesday evening one lesson was distributed and briefly explained, after which the practice proceeded. The examination was continuous. For instance, before singing a new chant a boy would be asked to name a certain note; another boy an interval; and another the key. Consequently very few, if any, items are now learnt by ear, because the boys are able to make a really creditable exhibition the first time they tackle new music.

My third difficulty by now had disappeared, because the keenness of my original boys had made them anxious to introduce their friends, and also parents in the parish, hearing that the choir was making such excellent progress were anxious for their boys to join. I had evolved a system which ensured that always I had a continuous supply of voices, progressing on a basis of competition, and each boy had as good a chance as another of promotion. It was not long before I had my twenty-four boys, in fact I could easily have had forty. I did away with the bugbear of a voice trial before a boy enters the choir. I rely entirely upon the first probationers' quarterly test, by which time the newcomer has had time to find his feet. No boy is compelled to enter a progressive test once he has passed the probationers' test, but so far there has not been a single slacker.

Lastly, the choir is run entirely by the boys themselves. There are two 'Seniors' on each side, and the Decani and Cantoris choirs are in their respective charges for discipline, &c. If a boy misbehaves he is dealt with by his 'Seniors' under the supervision of the choirmaster. An illustration will show how well this latter idea works. A complaint was received by the choirmaster that a window had been broken by a choirboy. The choirmaster called a meeting of the four seniors (the eldest by the way was only eleven years old), together with the culprit, read them the complaint he had received, and then asked what action they thought should be taken. The decision reached was that a letter of regret be sent to the churchwardens and an offer made to pay for the repair of the window out of their choir allowances. The culprit was reprimanded by the choirmaster, and then satisfactorily dealt with by his 'Seniors.' By working together on this co-operative basis, choirmaster and boys are in enthusiastic touch with one another. Discipline is strong because they rule themselves, and their keenness to give of their best is a delight. The choirmaster does not need to rule them, but simply to guide, direct, and advise. It is a system worth a practical test by any choirmaster, and the results will be found to be far beyond expectation. No loss of dignity or control will be apparent; rather will it be found that more work can be done in less time and with less effort, and with greater pleasure. I need hardly add that such a system can be worked only where the church authorities give the choirmaster a free hand.

PRE-BACH ORGAN COMPOSERS

By Charles F. Waters

That there has been in recent years an ever-increasing interest in the work of J. S. Bach must be evident to everybody. The pioneer work of the late Dr. E. H. Thorne has been followed up by many living recitalists, until the Bach organ recital is a weekly—if not a daily—occurrence.

Outside the organist's 'little world of his own' the growth of appreciation is as sure, and possibly more noticeable inasmuch as it is more recent and rapid. Performances of the 'Passions' and the 'Mass' are far more frequent, the Concertos have found a place in the répertoire of the standard orchestras, violinists cannot be without the Sonatas, while pianists, not content with the Suites and the great '48' Preludes and Fugues, appropriate to themselves the D minor Organ Toccata and Fugue and even the Chorale Preludes!

Interest in a great master naturally and quite inevitably leads in turn to a study of his predecessors. In the introduction to his book on 'The Growth of Music,' H. C. Colles aptly expresses this thought when he explains that > '. . . the more modern composers are constantly repaying the debt which they owed to their predecessors at first by securing fuller appreciation for them afterwards.'

Thus, while the compositions of great masters such as Bach and Beethoven, representing as they do culminating points in the evolution of the art, have eclipsed the efforts of their predecessors, they may yet focus on these composers greater attention than even the intrinsic value of their work would merit.

As regards Bach's forerunners, to whom Parry applied the epithet 'an exceptionally high-spirited group of composers,' it is the intrinsic value of their work as well as their influence on their illustrious successor which merits and demands attention:

> 'For though their work [Parry proceeds to assert] never reaches the pitch of equal mastery which satisfies the fastidious judgment of those who have enjoyed maturer things, it was only through their devoted pioneering that the musical revelation of the personality of Bach in instrumental music became possible.'

The significance of the work of Bach's predecessors lies in their establishment of those essentially organ forms which have been consistently utilised by composers for the instrument of the generations since. In the close association of the organ with the services of the Reformed Church, there evolved from the extempore embellishments upon the Chorales those characteristic types of organ composition included within the title chorale prelude. The various methods employed by these pioneers may be said to resolve into three characteristic styles—the coloratura of Böhm, the vocal style of Pachelbel, and the dramatic, fantasia style of Buxtehude, each of which had its influence upon Bach. His settings of 'Blessed Jesu, we are here' and 'By the waters of Babylon' remind us of Böhm; one of his 'Our Father' Preludes is distinctly reminiscent of Pachelbel's setting; and Buxtehude's flights of fancy are manifest in 'A Strong Fortress.' Again, the ground-bass became firmly established as a distinctive type of organ composition in the generation before Bach's gigantic C minor Passacaglia. Indeed, in no instance is greater resourcefulness exhibited by Buxtehude, Pachelbel, and Muffat than in their treatment of this difficult species of composition. It has to be conceded that in their Passacaglias and Chaconnes they were to no small degree successful in combating the inherent monotony of the ground-bass. In their hands the fugue was freed from vocal fetters and assumed more rhythmic characteristics. And if their essays in toccata form seem crude and immature, they have a particular interest as precursors of those mighty movements of Bach in D minor, C, and F.

Leaving aside the historical significance of the pre-Bach organ composers, it will be found that their compositions have a fascination which invites their acceptance on æsthetic grounds as well as on considerations of antiquity. Technically the more difficult movements make a fair demand upon the player, although it may here be remarked that the simpler numbers may with profit form the subject of practice by the student as a preliminary to the greater technical demands made by Bach. Judging by their writings, these Northern organists were of no mean order, and we know that Bach walked many miles to hear one of them play. It is the frequent crude touches of modulation, rapid arpeggio-passages, and daring innovations which make so strong an appeal.

After all, we all like sometimes to take a leap backwards and enjoy the old-world art. The choral bodies have for long known the delights of Elizabethan part-writing; choirs forsake 19th-century anthems for 16th-century motets; pianists, scorning contemporary cacophony, even leave their instrument's literature altogether and adopt the treasures of its predecessors, those delightful pieces of Gibbons, Byrd, and Farnaby—and why should the organist not do likewise? Dare we censure him for sometimes keeping company with these 'high-spirited' gentlemen of old?

RECENT ACOUSTICAL EXPERIMENTS IN AMERICA, AND THEIR BEARING UPON THE PROBLEMS OF TONALITY

By John L. Dunk

The invention of the electric valve has greatly affected our social and musical life by the introduction of 'wireless.' It is also an important technical instrument. The introduction of such an appliance into the scientific laboratory has, among other achievements, greatly facilitated acoustical and auditory investigation by making possible very much more exact numerical measurements than hitherto existed of some of the graded phenomena of hearing. Many of these phenomena have so far only been discussed qualitatively, which has led to misunderstanding and controversy.

Foremost among many able investigators in America is Dr. Harvey Fletcher, the Director of the Research Laboratory of the Western Electrical Company of New York, whose great resources have been freely put at the disposal of pure science. As manufacturers of telephones, broadcasting apparatus, &c., the Company has to handle speech and music, and the Doctor himself puts it characteristically, 'We have to deliver the goods [i.e., speech and music] clearly and distinctly.' In the course of investigation to this mundane end, the science of acoustics and hyperacoustics has greatly benefited.

By means of electro-vibratory apparatus, consisting essentially of the usual elements, capacity and inductance, with exciting and controlling triode valves, combined with an ingenious 'voltage attenuator' and meters, Dr. Fletcher and his colleagues are able to control and measure the exact energy of each harmonic component in a musical sound, delivered to the auditory passage of a suitably-placed observer, and can also check by specific synthesis the harmonic analysis of any given sound. Without belittling the great work done by predecessors with far less controllable apparatus, this represents a great advance.

As regards the observers: the methods introduced by Stumpf and his school, of statistically registering and dealing with groups of observations, enable the characteristics of the average ear to be tabulated and plotted numerically, showing many instructive facts as to the process of hearing.

Referring particularly to the paper of Dr. Harvey Fletcher (Amer. Phys. Review, March, 1924, p. 427), we find the substance is in effect the statement that the pitch of a note remains unchanged to a great extent when either the upper or lower component tones of the note are suppressed, provided that a moderate group is retained. Moreover, a considerable variation in the elimination was possible before the characteristic quality of the notes experimented upon (voice, clarinet, pianoforte, violin, and organ, over a wide range of pitches) becomes unrecognisable.

That the upper harmonics could be manipulated without pitch change of the note had long been known; but experimental difficulties, and doubt as to precision, had heretofore prevented much being done by variation of intensity of lower components. The result that in many cases the ear heard the fundamental pitch when the fundamental tone (and even several early harmonics) were physically absent from the sound, is somewhat surprising.

As Dr. Fletcher points out, the ear is non-linear as a responding mechanism: thus combinational tones with the prominent differentials are introduced; but the question is the sufficiency of this non-linearity in an instrument of such known discretional perceptivity as the modern ear shows itself to be. If we turn to the original theory of audition due to Helmholtz, and see what he really says (not the usual popular summarised description of the text-books), we learn that his views are quite in accord with those of Dr. Fletcher.

The sense of single note 'blending' is due to the whole or partial image of the harmonic series sent by the ear to the brain : and the ear is always predominantly assailed by that particular group of relations owing to resonance analysis following the mathematical theorem of Fourier. Further, as Helmholtz shows, this very set of relations is the least disturbed by inter- and secondary beating 'anti-tone' effects.

The corresponding case of the eye is the complex sensation we call white light, which is the most predominant average of our experience of light sensations, and which thus becomes a single impression, the basis and standard of our comparison with colour.

When we turn to the phenomena of concordance, we find that major and minor common chords are both acceptable as maxima of that class of experience. Now the agreement of the major chord with the qualities of the harmonic series and its coherent or blending characteristics, has long been recognised, but the minor chord has appeared a stumbling-block in many ingenious theories.

Serials 6 : 5 : 4 give us a major chord in close position, and 15 : 12 : 10 provide a minor chord. But if serial qualities are identified with concordance, then the earlier 9 : 7 : 6 should appear more concordant than the minor chord 15 : 12 : 10, which is contrary to general experience. We have thus reason to believe that serial blending and chordal concordance—although closely related—are not based on the same experiences.

How does this separation of criteria apply to modern harmonic practices, which often differ widely from those of the classical theories of harmony? I think it shows that what we have hitherto accepted as equivalent—i.e., blending and concordance—are really two separate phenomena, which can be employed by the tone artist more or less independently.

Indeed, this is quite old news. The theorist banned consecutive fifths from a concordant point of view—and when due to careless part-writing they sound as bad as ever—while the organ-builder put them in his Mixtures. The older and more general practice was based upon a criterion of concordance versus discordance, with a regular procedure of preparation, resolution, &c. But modern artists can rely upon obtaining much more precise results from instruments and performers (if not from concert-halls), and can thus employ the great range of blendance characteristics, with their possibilities of subtle interplay and contrast. Such practices have long been implied in the works of great composers, but until now their numerical exploration has been difficult. Hence the task of the modern harmonic theorist is to examine separately these component factors of the complex sounds dealt with in practice, and mere quotations in the generalised script of notation are inadequate.

Our congratulations are due to the brilliant experimenters, not forgetting their predecessors in all lands, and we are again reminded that the vast possibilities of the world of sound are not yet exhausted.

THE HASLEMERE FESTIVAL OF CHAMBER MUSIC

By Gerald R. Hayes

The Haslemere Festival presents unusual difficulties to adequate description and comment. In the first place, the programmes of the twelve concerts held between August 24 and September 5 contained eighty items, and many additional pieces were played ; again, the music being limited to the period between the early 16th century and the mid-18th century, was mostly quite unfamiliar to the audience ; and finally, not only were the performances carried out on the actual instruments for which the music was written, but the manner of playing and the texts used were both as near the originals as possible. These points raise several important questions in an acute form, and no account of the Festival, however brief, is complete without some reference to them.

Before describing the effects of the viols and the lute, the harpsichord and the clavichord, one essential aspect of the whole movement must be made clear. It is no mere antiquarian research of purely scholarly interest that has led Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch and his family to organize this Festival, or that has inspired many friends and pupils to follow his teaching. Something of this old music has, of course, been attempted before in England and abroad, but the attitude has usually been totally wrong. Mr. Dolmetsch approaches these works in the same spirit in which we now take Shakespeare's plays : that is to say, the music is not of evolutionary interest only but is of pure beauty and greatness, irrespective of period, and it must be treated with a corresponding reverence. He would regard the 'arrangement' for modern instruments of, let us say, a Fantasy for six viols, or one of the 'Brandenburg' Concertos as a barbarism exactly comparable to that of the Restoration dramatists who brought Shakespeare's plays 'up-to-date.' This includes the conjoint view that the instruments usually classed as obsolete have not really been superseded but have a definite value and importance, not only for the performance of these old works, but together with their music, as a source of inspiration for the future.

None who made the pilgrimage to Haslemere could fail to be grateful for the opportunities which the excellent scheme afforded. At Mr. Dolmetsch's all too rare London recitals, the listener usually goes with his ear quite unprepared for the idiom of the past and there is no chance of discussion and elucidation. After the first concert on August 24, the Hall was open for two hours every morning when the instruments were on view and were explained, while some members of Mr. Dolmetsch's family and his pupils played concerted pieces ; and as the concerts usually ended early there was another opportunity then for an exchange of views. On such an occasion, it was of the greatest benefit to get undisturbed into the atmosphere of the music and also to meet friends and acquaintances for a daily symposium. The Festival was by no means a 'preaching to the converted,' for even those who have followed Mr. Dolmetsch's work for some time found much to learn, while to most of the audience it opened up a new world in musical possibilities.

The Festival itself may be summarised as consisting of four evenings devoted solely to the works of Bach, two evenings of English Consorts of Viols, two evenings of general English music, one evening each of French and Italian music, one evening of miscellaneous works, and one evening of the works of Mozart and Haydn. The instruments used were the lute, the family of viols, including the small bass of variable tuning known as the lyra viol, the family of violins with the true tenor violin which went out of use about the end of the 17th century, the viola d'amore, the recorder or vertical flute, the virginals, harpsichord, clavichord, and a small chamber organ of exquisite purity of tone. On the Mozart and Haydn night the usual wood-wind and brass were added.

The task of compiling the programmes must have been very difficult, not by finding pieces to include but by the more trying work of exclusion. It is hoped that it does not show any carping spirit if one criticism be made here ; the present writer, for one, cherished a lingering regret that the chamber music of Handel found no place at the Festival. This is a side of Handel's music which is all too little known ; it contains some of his most beautiful moments, and we longed to hear it played under Mr. Dolmetsch's conditions.

Mr. Dolmetsch will have no one regarded as a 'star' : he abhors the virtuoso on the same grounds as he does the specialist. 'Team work' is the watchword of his family's playing, and he would regard his life's work as wasted if it has not helped to bring concerted music back into the domestic circle. At risk, however, of breaking the rules, some reference must be made to his own astonishing playing of the Bach unaccompanied Prelude and Fugue in G minor for violin. Privately, Mr. Dolmetsch has long been known as one of the finest violin players of the day, with a deeply spiritual insight and eschewing its facile appeal to the more superficial emotions. But he is seldom heard at his best at public recitals, possibly owing to the bustle of preparation and having to play so many instruments in quick succession. At the first concert at Haslemere, however, he was in his highest vein, and it was an event not soon to be forgotten to hear such a fine interpretation of these extraordinarily difficult contrapuntal pieces. All the voices of the fugue were in perfect tone, and a sustained three- and even four-note chord would dissolve into a melody starting sometimes from the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, or 4th note.

This has been made possible by Mr. Dolmetsch's researches into the contemporary construction of the violin, for these pieces cannot properly be played on the instrument as we have it to-day. Many years ago he found the advantages of the short bow and thinner strings with correspondingly lighter bass bar, and now he has greatly modified the bridge and the finger-board. After hearing this performance it will be impossible again to listen to these works of Bach's being attempted on a modern violin where the chords are either got by grinding on the strings with sheer muscle to the loss of all true tone or are played as arpeggios.

Great praise, too, is due to Mrs. Dolmetsch's fine playing on the viola da gamba in the Sonata No. 1, in G minor, with harpsichord. The gamba, which was constantly in evidence at all the concerts, is a beautiful instrument of great resource. It is difficult to understand how it ever fell into disuse. The explanation may be that it has been looked upon as a sort of 'cello, and when tried is strung and bowed as one. The whole construction is, of course, quite different, and the strings are much thinner and less tense, while the system of bowing differs fundamentally from the modern 'cello. It may be remarked in passing that the method of bowing is the same for all the viols, as even the smallest treble is held between the knees, and it was also the way in which the 'cello was usually bowed up to about the middle of the 18th century.

The harpsichord under the able hands of Mr. Rudolf Dolmetsch must have startled many people who knew only by pianoforte transcriptions the Bach and Scarlatti pieces. The variety of effects obtainable with the double manual and the pedal stops gives a great richness of colour. In fact, the modern pianoforte is far too muffled in tone for these brilliant and sparkling compositions, which demand the sharp accent of the plucked string. The effect of the clavichord with its tiny voice was more difficult for many Bach enthusiasts to absorb who knew their 'Forty-eight' from the thunderous tones of a concert grand. This was one of the most keenly debated points during the first week, but gradually the most reluctant yielded to the spell of this extraordinary instrument. The clavichord is the only keyboard instrument in which the player has a direct control on the note produced, and it has in consequence a sympathetic quality comparable to a violin. The bass can have a peculiarly reedy tone, and in one of his lighter moments Mr. Dolmetsch did all sorts of tricks on the instrument from imitating bassoons, trumpets, and village bands to visualising the march past of a regiment of soldiers!

The motto on this particular instrument, which is a fine specimen of the master craftsman's art of Mr. Dolmetsch, says Plus fait douceur que violence, and after listening to the 'Chromatic Fantasia' (of which he gave a rather dour performance) and some seven or eight of the 'Preludes and Fugues,' we felt it would be rather a sacrilege to go back to the pianoforte again. Mr. Dolmetsch's reading of the phrasing and rhythm sometimes differed from accepted practice, but after considering the erudition shown in his monumental work on 'The Interpretation of the Music of the 17th and 18th Centuries,' it would take a bold man to question his authority.

The concerts of the first week were well arranged to lead through English and French music for one or two instruments and for 'broken consorts' (mixed instruments) to the great Consorts of Viols which represent English music at its very pinnacle of achievement. This was a happy and necessary preparation of the mind and ear, as these works are no easy matter for the auditor. Space forbids any detailed description of the French music for viols by composers like Marin Marais, the great gamba player of the late 17th century; de Caix d'Hervelois, who wrote much very beautiful but rather over-decorated music for the treble viol; Antoine Forqueray le père, the second of several generations of court musicians to Louis XIV.; and names better known to modern musicians like Rameau and Couperin. Similarly, we can do little more than mention the Italian music, so unexpectedly severe in character compared to the output of that country during the last hundred years. One of the great features of the Italian night was the use of the true tenor violin in chamber music of the second half of the 17th century. It is hard to see why this instrument was allowed to drop out of the quartet, as it provides exactly that tone-quality needed between the upper part of the 'cello and the lower register of the viola. The playing of the Fantasy for four viols, by Frescobaldi (on the popular tune 'La Bergamesca'), was a fine example of that team work so characteristic of Mr. Dolmetsch's family; it would seem to be of great difficulty. The Concerto Grosso in G minor, which Corelli wrote as the Nativity music for Christmas, 1712, has such an exalted and mystical quality that the audience did not need Mr. Dolmetsch's admonition not to applaud but to consider themselves in church.

The Spanish 'Fantasies for Four Viols,' by Fray Thomas de Sancta Maria (1565), played on the 'Miscellaneous' night, have a peculiarly hard and gaunt atmosphere; they made the Inquisition easier to understand. At this concert Dr. Tom Goodey gave charming readings of the songs of Henry Lawes to Milton's 'Comus.' It is worth recording that the composer himself sang them at their first performance. In the tenor Air from Bach's 'Æolus' cantata there is an obbligato for the viola d'amore; this attractive name is probably only a corruption of 'the Moor's viol,' and it must be confessed that its highly-coloured tones need to be used with the greatest reserve.

Mozart's Concerto No. 13, in C major, for harpsichord, was played with an exact reproduction of the orchestra of the period—4 violins, 2 violas, 2 'cellos, violone (double-bass viol), 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, and drums. It is difficult to think that a modern performance with pianoforte and full orchestra adds anything artistic to this; it rather seems to give noise at the expense of balance. The most interesting feature of the night was the unknown and unrecorded 'Divertimento' of Haydn's, for oboe, violin, viola da gamba, 'cello, and harpsichord. The unique MS. of this charming work was given many years ago to Mr. Dolmetsch by Auguste Tolbecque, a French musician who is now chiefly remembered by his book on 'Les Instruments à corde et à Archet,' published at Paris in 1898.

The twelfth and last concert was, like the fifth, devoted to English Consorts of Viols. These were, of course, the real raison d'être of the whole Festival, for by them the music of the viols must stand or fall; and they represent the English school at a period when we were the acknowledged leaders of the world in music. From the more rigid patterns of the 16th century they pass to the apotheosis of free contrapuntal writing under the hands of men like William Lawes and John Jenkins—'the mirror and wonder of his age for music,' as Anthony à Wood calls him. The period practically ends with Matthew Locke, who has been called 'the last of the old masters' but might with more propriety be termed the first of the moderns, so completely does his Suite for four viols, No. 2, in D minor, foreshadow the string quartet form of the later masters. Some of Locke's music raises to heights that have seldom, if ever, been equalled by later composers, but in his work an element of sophistication is felt which is markedly absent from that of his immediate predecessors. The writing of a Jenkins Fantasy is so inevitable that we do not realise at first how amazingly intricate and profound is the construction.

It has been said recently that the instrumental composers of this period were only experimenting in their medium and consequently imitated the vocal music of the madrigal writers. Such a statement could have no basis but sheer ignorance of the facts, and it is to be hoped that after this Festival the fruits of Mr. Dolmetsch's life-long work in rediscovering this music will be seen in the abandonment of such theories.

As a fact, pure instrumental writing existed as far back as the late 15th century, and nothing could be a more finished art than the consorts of the Golden Period of James I. and Charles I. Every possibility of the combination of the viols is used, and the tricks of rhythm and phrasing excite the listener at every turn. Moreover, these composers have a human element in their music that is somewhat to seek in the earlier work. Again, in such a work as Deering's Fantasy for six viols, in C major, the effect is not of a certain number of instruments playing together, but an infinite quantity of sounds blending in an ethereal fashion quite uncanny to hear.

In works of such high standard throughout any preference may seem impertinent, but perhaps of all, the Fantasy and Air No. 1, in G minor, and No. 2, in F major, both for six viols, by William Lawes, are the most completely satisfying. The music of no period could say more; it might be said differently, but it could not be added to. The viols themselves are a loving family, and blend together so perfectly that an effect of ensemble was given that is heard perhaps only once or twice in a life-time from a string quartet. It has been said that the viol is an easier instrument to play than the violin, and that hence it is simpler to get this perfect ensemble. This is not strictly accurate, as the viol can be quite as difficult as the violin—or, conversely, the violin need be no harder to learn than the viol—if the method of teaching is on Mr. Dolmetsch's rational lines, but what is true is that these masters got their effects without putting such a tax on the individual player. They did not need elaboration to conceal their lack of ideas.

Already there are two or three consorts of viols playing these works, and some of these people gave excellent performances at the morning demonstrations. There is no doubt that this Festival will have a great effect on the better understanding and appreciation of this music and its intrinsic importance. The time is ripening for a return of chamber music to its proper sphere in domestic life, and the viols and their music offer the ideal inspiration to a generation which is getting rather tired of the tempests of Scriabin and Gustav Mahler.

THE MARGATE FESTIVAL

The second Margate Festival (September 12-17) was as successful as the first, and great credit is due to the musical director, Mr. Bainbridge Robinson, for his excellent organization and for the high musical and personal interest of his concerts. The only falling off as compared with last year was that nothing replaced the visit of the London Choral Society and the performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' In compensation there were distinguished conductors and composer-conductors to give the cachet of their presence to the Festival.

Mr. Robinson conducted only the first, second, and last of the six concerts, giving up the baton to Mr. Maurice Besly for a new suite, 'Romanesque,' and to Mr. Percy Fletcher for his 'Nautical Scenes' and 'Woodland Pictures.' On the Sunday evening Mr. John Goss and the Cathedral Male-Voice Quartet provided the bulk of the programme.

Monday's concert was taken over by Sir Hamilton Harty, who conducted his Suite on Handel's 'Water Music,' Dvorák's fourth Symphony, and his own Violin Concerto, with Mr. Alfred Barker as soloist. Tuesday's was an Elgar concert, under the composer's direction. The programme consisted of the Handel-Elgar Overture, 'Polonia,' the 'Enigma' Variations, the second 'Wand of Youth' Suite, the 'Sea Pictures' (beautifully sung by Miss Muriel Brunskill), the 'Light of Life' Meditation, and the first 'Pomp and Circumstance' March. Sir Landon Ronald was in charge of the Wednesday concert. He conducted, among other things, the 'Meister-inger' Overture, Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad,' and German's 'Welsh Rhapsody.'

The list of artists was strong. It included, beside those already mentioned, Miss Dora Labbette, Miss Dorothy Greene, Mr. Morgan Kingston, Mr. Roy Henderson (singers), Mr. Maurice Cole, Mr. Harry Petersen (pianists), and Mr. Lionel Tertis (viola).

Competition Festival Record

CHORAL COMPETITIONS FROM THE COMPETITORS' POINT OF VIEW

By R. H. Wilson

(Late Chorus-master, Hallé Concerts, &c., &c.)

It will be generally admitted that choral singing is the most attractive feature of the big festivals. It is to such contests that we must look for the preservation and development of chorus-singing in the future, for during the last ten years there has been a marked falling off in the number and quality of the non-competitive choral society. The national distinction we have won in the art of choral singing must be maintained at all costs, and it is to further this cause that the present article is written. During the last five years the standard of performance has been raised, and it only remains now to keep alive the enthusiasm of choirs and conductors by a policy of sympathetic consideration on the part of festival promoters.

Let us take first the choice of test-pieces. The marking-sheets used by adjudicators (usually those prescribed by the Federation of Competitive Festivals Association) ask for a considerable number of attributes to be displayed by the singers in the test-pieces. Technical accuracy, tone-quality, balance, blend, diction, rhythm and, above all, an expressive interpretation, are required. It is therefore due to the competitors that music shall be chosen which will permit the display of these qualities. This is not always the case. Too often it happens that a piece of music is selected, which, by an excess of chromatic harmony, complicated cross-rhythms, and frequent crude modulations, compels the singers to think only of accurate intonation, to the exclusion of all the other features of beauty in choral singing. If selection committees wish to test choirs as to their power to maintain mathematically exact intonation under distracting conditions, let them ask one of our modern men to write a stretch of twenty-four, thirty, or thirty-six bars in which the 'values,' 'sonorities,' 'super-imposed motives,' 'richness of texture,' 'tonal colour synthesis,' 'imaginative mysticism,' and the rest of the monstrosities to which they apply their silly jargon, could be incorporated. After this test the surviving choirs could engage in the singing of pure, beautiful music, in which they could show the judges the beauty of their tone, the purity of their diction, their perfection of blend and balance, and their power of combined personal expression, with none of the awful dread of catastrophe which too often undermines the most efficient choirs. By this arrangement the sufferings of the audience would not be prolonged. As a rule the conductors and choirs who take part in competition work are a sporting crowd, taking defeat with fortitude and accepting victory with modesty. But occasionally one does hear complaints both as to the manner and methods of an adjudication. In a letter which appeared in the Musical Times in 1919, I find the following:

> As regards pleasing adjudicators, it was said at a meeting of the Glasgow Choral Festival that the ideal adjudicator has yet to be found. It would be a great mistake for conductors to train their choirs with a view of pleasing any particular adjudicator or class of adjudicators. These men are human, some very human—with special likes and dislikes, which, it may be, are unconsciously allowed to weigh in their decisions.

The letter does not make clear the circumstances which prompted these observations, but, to me, they offer material for an extended discussion. It is to the credit of conductors and choirs, that in spite of disappointment, and sometimes of irritation, we rarely hear of the honesty of a judge being questioned, however capricious or mistaken the judgment may have been. The complaints are more of methods than of principles. Many conductors of famous choirs hold the opinion that one adjudicator would be more satisfactory than three or four.

The usual practice is to have three or four judges sitting at one table under rather compressed conditions. The dominating personality (we will call him Mr. A) usually does the marking. He has in front of him a score of the piece being sung, his colleagues may, or may not, have copies. Very often during the singing comments are made—Mr. B may say, 'Tenors flat on that top F sharp'; Mr. C, 'Chording not good here'; Mr. D, being generously inclined, may add, 'Sopranos very fine,' and so on, to the end of the piece. This is not an extravagant fancy picture, but a personal experience on many occasions. Of course all this sort of thing is wrong, and against the concentration which ought to exist when judging serious effort. Now we reach the time when Choir No. 1 has finished singing. Mr. A. says, 'Well, gentlemen, what do you think? The tone is good, the singers have good rhythmical swing, and they kept the pitch, but they got off the rails at page four. If we give them eighty-five marks we shall do them justice. We must not forget we have nine more choirs to hear.' A few amending suggestions are made by Messrs. B, C, and D, and by this time Choir No. 2 is waiting, and Mr. A. says, 'Well, we must get on. Shall we say eighty-eight? This is accepted (perhaps doubtfully), and Mr. A proceeds to allocate the marks to the different sections of the marking-sheet so as to aggregate eighty-eight. This sort of thing goes on during the singing of the rest of the choirs, and is, in my opinion, manifestly unfair to the singers. The interjection of comments distracts attention, and some point of excellence may easily be missed. Moreover, this hasty adjustment of opinions is not a definite judgment. If it is considered essential to have more than one judge, why not let them be separated, sitting in different parts of the hall? Let them give individual markings and decisions, and then take the figures of the four, add them together, and let the highest total be declared the winner. The reading and comparison of the four sheets would no doubt provide much amusement and instruction for the committee.

But, with all its disadvantages, it would on the whole be fairer to the competing choirs. There would be no talking, no time lost in argument, no fighting for compromise, and the markings under the various sections would be more rational, and free from the arithmetical adjustments which are so often ridiculous, making the marks and 'remarks' entirely at variance. Some adjudicators (probably inexperienced in large-scale choral music) make a fetish of singing from memory. If this were allowed to influence the marking it would be obviously unjust, as no extra marks are offered for singing without copies. The plain duty of the judge is to form his opinion from what he hears—not from what he sees. Besides, there is the terrible risk that the non-use of copies may result in the eyes of the singers being 'glued' on the conductor—a practice which has recently been thoughtlessly condemned by an adjudicator. Most conductors, either of orchestra or chorus, would feel inspired by an attention so close as to merit the application of 'glued.'

I have heard the point raised as to whether the Federation marking-sheets are not too involved. Thus under the section 'Diction,' there are four subsections: (1) purity of vowels; (2) use of consonants; (3) naturalness (often difficult to attain in some modern music); and (4) significance—whatever that may mean. Now these four subdivisions could very well come under the one heading 'Diction.' In actual practice it is more than probable that judges are influenced mainly by three factors—tone, technique, and interpretation.

I remember many years ago sitting on the judges' bench with one of the greatest of England's choral writers. He wouldn't look at a copy; he refused to have anything to do with marks; he simply recorded his impressions; and, after all, is not that what every sound judge does? He will not allow a choir which displays nobility of tone and conception to be penalised by a falling in pitch, nor will he permit a highly-expressive interpretation to suffer on account of an odd technical lapse. No, he will take the big view; but he is tied up with his twenty-four factors on the marking-sheet, and this complication is responsible for the grievances of conductors and choirs. Let us carry ourselves to the crucial and exciting moment of the contest, when the last choir has sung its last note, and the result of many weeks of serious work is to be publicly commented upon. The adjudicator also must feel a sense of responsibility at this moment. It is his duty to expose the weak points of the singing, and to extol the strong features. If he is tactful, he will take care that his remarks are helpful and sympathetic, avoiding all destructive criticism—and not dwelling too much on what might have been done. The emotional crisis of the festival arrives when the judge announces the placing of the choirs. In a first-class competition it may happen that Choir No. 4 is first, with 96 marks; Choir No. 6 second, with 95; and Choir No. 8 third, with 93. For the public the affair is over, but choirs placed second and third are naturally anxious to know how, and why, they lost, respectively, their one and three marks which deprived them of victory. This is a difficult problem, but in the interests of the choral competition movement it ought to be solved. The adjudicator should be able to assign clear and good reasons for the pre-eminence of choirs Nos. 1 and 2.

The question of 'massed' performances is very much to the fore in these days. The phrase 'massed choirs' has an imposing sound; but does it really mean much from a purely musical point of view? The object of competition festivals is to encourage rivalry and promote efficiency in choral singing, and to get the finest possible tone and technical finish in the performance of the test-pieces. Every competing choir spends many weeks in preparation, and in the end generally secures a good and individual interpretation. But when eight or ten choirs are combined, each intent upon its own idea, more time would be needed to get a reading unanimous in nuance, tempo, and expression than can ever be spared on the last bustling day of a festival. Many experienced conductors have described the experiment as a fiasco.

Another question which I think may seriously affect these competitions is the crusade to abolish 'prize-money,' the crusaders using as an argument the beautiful phrase 'Art for Art's sake,' and not for gain. If this principle is established, how will it affect the adjudicators? In order to get first-hand information on this money question, I wrote to an amateur conductor of a choir which has gained fame in competition work at many important festivals. In reply, he says:

> No case has come to my knowledge where the giving of a money prize has caused trouble between competing choirs. The money rarely, if ever, pays the travelling expenses of the winning choir. Take the case of the recent B—— Festival. The travelling expenses of my choir amounted to £20. They won two prizes of the total value of £10 10s. In our case this money will go to the Choir Fund to defray the expenses of attending a distant festival. My fear is that if this subject is too much laboured, as it is at present by some adjudicators, there may result a set-back to the whole competition movement.

This opinion is held by many conductors of choirs, and the fact should cause the 'Art for Art's sake' men to reflect. If the expression 'prize-money' is considered objectionable, let the word 'honorarium' be substituted. This has quite a nice sound.

My object in writing at such length is in no sense to frame an indictment against adjudicators or their methods, but to induce those who hold in their hands the future of these festivals to give careful consideration to the competitors' point of view.

SCOTLAND

At the annual general meeting and conference of the Scottish Area of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, held at Glasgow, Mr. David Martin, Perth, presiding, it was reported that twenty-eight Scottish Festivals were now affiliated, and several new Festivals were in process of formation.

The most striking new developments in the work of the year had been the rapid growth of the Scottish country-dance classes and elocution classes. The work of the Scottish Association for the speaking of verse was commended, and classes in team-reading and group-speaking were advocated.

The method, in successful operation in several districts, of co-operation between branches of the Educational Institute of Scotland (the school teachers' organization) and the Festival Executives in the districts, was explained and discussed.

The inclusion of competitions for Women's Rural Institute members was urged.

Mr. H. S. Roberton introduced a discussion on the need for definite instruction in technique for conductors, and urged that Festivals should take the matter up in their own districts. The chairman suggested forming a corpus of conductors who would undertake to give such instruction, and thought that young conductors could be encouraged to come forward for instruction if competent teachers were available. A delegate said that his Festival had arranged a series of lectures by well-known conductors, but Mr. Roberton replied that he thought mere lectures were not enough; what was wanted was small classes and the doing of practical work. Ultimately it was remitted to a special committee to consider a draft scheme of classes, to be formulated and issued as soon as possible. Mr. F. H. Bisset intimated that arrangements had been made for the publication of a small Festival booklet on conducting technique, which Mr. Roberton had undertaken to write.

Mr. Bisset submitted a report on a proposal to promote a Scottish National Festival, to be held at intervals of three or five years, which was under the consideration of a special committee.

A resolution submitted by an affiliated Festival, deploring the excessive fees exacted by some adjudicators for their services, found no support.

Music in the provinces

Birmingham and District.—In addition to a series of twenty-five Sunday concerts, eight symphony concerts are to be given this season by the City of Birmingham Orchestra. One of these programmes will be conducted by Vaclav Talich, of Prague; in another, Holst will conduct his 'Fugal' Overture' and the Scherzo 'Fancy' from his Choral Symphony. Symphonies by Haydn, Beethoven, Dvorák, Vaughan Williams, and Bantock will be given, as well as Concertos by Bach, Beethoven, Delius, &c.——A series of five chamber concerts is announced by the Catterall Quartet. First performances at Birmingham will be given of Brahms's Clarinet Quartet, Op. 115, Alfred Wall's 'Idyll,' Casella's Concerto Quartet, and Dvorák's Quartet in G major. Beethoven, Bax, and Tchaikovsky are among the names that figure in the programmes.——It is understood that the 'Mid-day' concerts, under the directorship of Mr. Johan Hock, will be confined entirely to instrumental music. A number of programmes will be given by the Philharmonic Quartet, and there will be concerts by the Beatrice Hewitt Trio, by Mr. William Primrose, and by Miss Lucy Pierce and Mr. Charles Kelly in duets for two pianofortes.——The principal artists in the 'international celebrity' series are John McCormack, Heifetz, Frieda Hempel, the Léner Quartet, Pachmann, and Elena Gerhardt.——The names of Elizabeth Schumann, Cortôt, Casals, Dorothy Silk, Maurice Ravel, and Arthur Rubenstein appear among others in the programmes for the forthcoming series of Max Mossel concerts.——The Festival Choral Society has four concerts in its subscription series this season. Vaughan Williams's 'Sea' Symphony, Parry's 'Job,' and a Mozart 'Mass' figure in the scheme.—— Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' is to be given by the City of Birmingham Choir. The Midland Musical Society will be heard in a performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Holst's 'Hymn of Jesus,' under the directorship of the new conductor, Dr. Darby. An outstanding feature of the season will be the collaboration of three choirs in a performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion.

Music in Scotland

Dunfermline.—The Carnegie Dunfermline Trustees made an interesting experiment by suspending for a week the regular open-air band performances, and inviting the various musical societies in the town to perform a programme each evening. The bodies represented were the Dunfermline Amateur Orchestra, Dunfermline Operatic Society, Rosyth Male-Voice Choir, the Junior Choral Class, the junior section of the Amateur Orchestra, and the Dunfermline Choral Union. The week finished with an evening of community-singing, led by the director of music of the Carnegie Trust, Mr. David Stephen. This was, however, only moderately successful. It is pre-eminently a kind of work demanding a vivid type of personality.

Edinburgh.—The first biennial conference of the World Federation of Education Associations brought to Edinburgh educationists from many continents, and notably from America. Although not figuring among the subjects discussed, a fair amount of music found its way into the evening programmes, which included concerts by Boroughmuir and Broughton Secondary Day Schools, a unique recital given by Miss Marjorie Gullan's Verse-Speaking Choir, and a concert by the Glasgow Orpheus Choir, which caused something of a sensation amongst the visitors from overseas. Mr. Gibson Young, of the Community Singing Association, directed a community-singing programme of folk-songs and sea-shanties, and Mr. Grover Sims, of Kirksville, U.S.A., took charge of a similar evening, and surprised us as much by the cheap, 'Babbitty' character of the songs he chose, as by the exuberant unconventionality of his methods. The conference closed fittingly with a Hymn Festival (conducted by Sir Walford Davies in his own individual and unrivalled way), which taxed the resources of Usher Hall, and sent every one away inspired and happy.—— The prospectus of the thirty-sixth season of the Paterson Orchestral Concerts at Edinburgh, for which the Scottish Orchestra has again been engaged, is on similar lines to the Glasgow scheme set out below, but finds room for some individual differences, the most interesting of which is, perhaps, the inclusion in its survey of one of our younger British conductors, Dr. Malcolm Sargent. The promoters, Messrs. Paterson, Sons & Co., one of the oldest-established music houses in the country, point out in a Foreword that they have carried on these concerts at their own financial risk for the last thirty-five years, and they appeal for increased support, as since the war it has been possible to run the season only at a loss. —— The Edinburgh Reid Orchestra (conductor, Prof. Donald F. Tovey) has been re-organized on a co-operative basis, and announces a series of six concerts. At the first of these Sibelius was to have conducted his fifth Symphony, but his place has had to be taken by Mr. Adrian C. Boult. The programmes are largely classical, and an interesting novelty is Prof. Tovey's own Symphony in D. The Orchestra is to join forces with the Edinburgh Royal Choral Union in Brahms's 'Requiem.' The Choral Union's own programme includes also 'The Hymn of Praise,' 'The Messiah,' and 'The Dream of Gerontius.' The conductor of the Union, Mr. Greenhouse Allt, has received the compliment of being invited by the Palestrina Choir of Buda-Pesth to conduct a performance of 'Gerontius' there.——Mr. Alfred Hollins, the veteran blind organist, has given at St. George's Free Church, Edinburgh, a largely attended series of twelve weekly organ recitals.——The Edinburgh Opera Company has chosen for production this season Goetz's 'The Taming of the Shrew,' Gounod's 'Faust,' and Goring Thomas's 'Mignon.' Mr. Thomas G. O'Feely has been appointed conductor, and Mr. E. C. Hedmondt producer.——The death of the well-known German conductor, Michael Balling, recalls his pre-war association with music in Scotland. Balling was brought to Edinburgh and Glasgow by Denhof to conduct the first performances of 'The Ring' given in Scotland. He also conducted a notable Beethoven Festival at Edinburgh, which extended over a week.

GLASGOW.—A fourteen-weeks' season of the Scottish Orchestra is covered by the prospectus of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union, just issued. The conductors engaged are Abendroth, Weingartner, Mlynarski, Talich, and, for the choral concerts, Wilfrid Senior. A feature of special interest is the large number of unfamiliar works included in the orchestral programmes. The choral works announced are Bantock's 'Omar Khayyám' (Part 1), Brahms's 'Requiem,' Debussy's 'Blessed Damozel,' the Coronation Scene from 'Boris,' and (conducted by Weingartner) the ninth Symphony. Newcomers among the soloists are Mlle. Irene Dobieska, the Polish violinist, and Mijn. Lidus Van Giltay, the Dutch violinist. The many admirers of Mr. Philip Halstead, the veteran Glasgow pianist, will welcome his re-appearance as a soloist after too long an absence from the Scottish Orchestra concerts.——The programme of the Glasgow Bach Society (conductors, Mr. J. Michael Diack and Mr. F. H. Bisset) includes two chamber concerts by the Society's chamber orchestra, part of the 'Christmas' Oratorio, the Motet 'Jesu, meine Freude,' Psalm 100 and Psalm 121 (two pastiches drawn from the lesser-known Church Cantatas of Bach by Ivor Atkins and J. Michael Diack), and the 'St. Matthew' Passion. All the Church works will be sung in Glasgow Cathedral.——The prospectus of the 'international celebrity' series of concerts at Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Dundee promises the fattest of feasts to those who enjoy rich fare.——Mr. Max Mossel, who has brought many fine artists to Glasgow and Edinburgh in the past, surpasses all his previous efforts by providing real music-lovers with a series of four concerts (at a cost of 2*s.* 6*d.* per reserved and numbered seat per concert) finer than anything which could be had at those prices even in pre-war days.——For the annual Chamber-Music Week of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir the Léner Quartet has been engaged. The programmes of the seven concerts announced range from F. X. Richter (a contemporary of Bach) to the Respighi of 1924.——The annual visit of the British National Opera Company, reduced this autumn from four to two weeks, has been prefaced by an appeal from the 'local advisory committee' for support for a guarantee fund to enable the committee to indemnify the Company in £500 per week should any losses be incurred. The appeal has met with fair success, but not to the extent anticipated. The Glasgow season will be followed by a two-weeks' season at Edinburgh. The programmes scheduled follow the usual lines, the only novelties being Holst's 'At the Boar's Head' (which, rather to the chagrin of Glasgow musicians, is to be given at Edinburgh only) and 'Coffee and Cupid,' the new Sanford Terry/W. G. Whittaker version of Bach's 'Coffee' Cantata—which Glasgow will be interested to compare with the version staged last season by the Glasgow Bach Society.——At the annual general meeting of the British Music Society, Glasgow Centre, it was reported that five recitals had been given to members, viz.: a lecture-recital at the pianoforte by Mr. Philip Halstead, 'What and how to practise'; a recital of unfamiliar national and international songs; a lecture-recital on Holst's 'Planets'; and recitals from the works of John Ireland (directed by the composer himself) and Orlando Gibbons. Eleven lecture-recitals on 'Scottish Folk-Song' had been given to schools by Mr. F. H. Bisset, and a number of chamber concerts had also been given to schools. A series of four lectures on 'Folk-Song,' given at Glasgow University in co-operation with the Workers' Educational Association, had been so well received that a tutorial class of ten lectures on music appreciation was arranged, with Mr. Percy Gordon as lecturer. Three Study Circles had been formed among the members of the Society, each of which had carried through a programme of six evenings.——Mr. Herbert Walton's twenty-eighth annual series of autumn organ recitals at Glasgow Cathedral is proceeding, and as usual attracting large audiences.——The installation (following American practice) of a large orchestral pipe organ in the Grosvenor Picture House, Glasgow, was apparently deemed of sufficient importance to call for a formal inauguration by the Lord Provost of Glasgow.

ST. ANDREW'S.—The vacation course in music at St. Andrew's University, promoted jointly by the British Federation of Music Industries and the British Music Society, combined instruction and entertainment in a delightful way to the hundred-and-fifty or so students whom it attracted from all parts of the Kingdom. Mr. Herbert Wiseman made an ideal director and host. The lecturers included such notabilities as Messrs. George Dyson and W. G. Whittaker, and the students studied, discussed, sang, played, danced, and picnicked ad lib. Perhaps the most popular figure of all was Mr. Harold Samuel, who not only played and frolicked in (literally) his most unbuttoned mood, but joined with Messrs. Dyson and Wiseman in improvising the most compelling of dance strains for the students. The St. Andrew's vacation course is likely to create problems for those who have the task of finding accommodation for next year's function.

THE UNIVERSITIES.—The Scottish Universities appear suddenly to have awakened to a realisation of the place of music in education. Until recently, Edinburgh stood alone with its Reid Chair of Music, occupied by Prof. Donald F. Tovey. Two years ago the Cramb Lectureship in Music was established at Glasgow University, and the early endowment of a Chair of Music in the University is practically a certainty. Mr. Willan Swainson, a leading Aberdeen musician, has just been appointed to a newly-established lectureship in music at Aberdeen University, and Mr. F. J. Sawyer is leaving Glasgow to take up a similiar appointment at St. Andrew's University.

GENERAL.—The prospective issue of a new and drastically revised edition of 'The Scottish Church Hymnary' is leading to much fluttering of the dove-cotes in the district Presbyteries, and a pitched battle is threatened between the extremists on both sides—on the one hand, the ultra-evangelicals and the hymns-our-fathers-loved-to-sing sentimentalists; and, on the other, the ultra-modernists and literary highbrows. Meanwhile the musicians look like being relegated to their usual place on the door-mat.

SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—On Sunday afternoon, August 9, Sir Walford Davies gave an address on Church Music in St. Michael's Church, assisted by a contingent of the small choir which took part in the Vaughan Williams Mass and Palestrina's 'Stabat Mater' at the June Musical Festival.——The Cardiganshire Festival Choir, conducted by Mr. J. T. Rees, presented 'The Messiah' on August 19. The soloists were Madame Laura Davies, Miss Myfanwy Ellis,

Mr. Evan Lewis, and Mr. David Evans. Speaking generally the performance was good, some of the choruses being finely sung, but the work as a whole suffered from lack of rehearsal. A scratch local orchestra assisted, and Mr. Charles Clements gave the greatest possible help at the pianoforte. The obbligato in 'The trumpet shall sound' was interpreted in brilliant fashion by Mr. Tal Morris, on an E flat cornet. He would probably achieve distinction if he took up the study of the orchestral trumpet.——On August 25 the Town Band gave a concert in University Hall, under the direction of the bandmaster, Mr. Corney Richards. Like most Welsh brass bands, these townsmen have a beautiful round tone. The few numbers which they played showed careful rehearsal, though the standard of selection was not a high one. Mr. Tal Morris played a very sparkling cornet solo by Rimmer. and Madame Leila Megane, Miss Myfanwy Ellis, Mr. Edern Jones, and others contributed a number of vocal and instrumental solos, the former consisting chiefly of Welsh songs (many of them folk-songs) which made a great appeal to the audience. The accompanist was Mr. Osborne Roberts, some of whose compositions figured in the programme, notably 'Annwyl Cymru,' which was sung for the first time at the recent Pwllheli Eisteddfod.

Carmarthen.—The musical festival movement has gained ground in North and Mid-Wales, and the South has now had a stimulus. Carmarthen was announced as holding its first Festival on September 24 and 25 at the old church of St. Peter. The choir would comprise mainly singers from Carmarthen, Llanelly, and neighbouring districts, and, along with an orchestra, would be conducted by Mr. J. Charles Williams. 'The Hymn of Praise' was to be given on August 24, followed by the 'Unfinished' Symphony, Mr. F. W. Watts, the organist, playing Bach's Fugue in D major. 'Elijah' was also to be performed. This new organization has already attracted some distinguished patronage, among its supporters being the Archbishop of Wales and Sir Walford Davies.

Holywell.—The Holywell Choral Society performed 'Elijah' on September 3, at the opening ceremony of the Mostyn Memorial Hall. The choir has selected Handel's 'Samson' for study during the coming winter.

Llangollen.—The Llangollen Choral Society, conducted by Mr. J. E. Morris, gave a successful concert in the Town Hall on August 26. The choral items included Schubert's 'God in the Thunderstorm,' the 'Hallelujah Chorus,' and the late Dr. Joseph Parry's 'The Storm.' A special feature of the concert was the playing of the Czecho-Slovakian violinist, Mlle. Irma Suranyi, who was heard in a Sonata, 'Le Tombeau' (J. M. Le Clair), 'Gipsy Airs' (Sarasate), 'Hejre Hoti' (Hubay), and Arioso (Fresco). Other artists were Madame Florence Rouse, solo-pianist and accompanist, and Miss Gertrude Green, vocalist.

Music in Ireland

The production for the first time on any stage of a new musical comedy, 'Nicolette,' at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, on August 31, presented by an Irishman, Mr. Thomas J. Courtly, achieved a great success, under the baton of Mr. J. A. Heavel. Chorus and orchestra, and also the principals, were alike efficient. At the same venue, the musical comedy 'No, no, Nanette,' described as 'the greatest success of this generation,' opened on September 14. Already we are replete with 'Tea for two' and 'I want to be happy.'

The dearth of good choral societies at Dublin is to be deplored, but a revival of the Dublin Musical Society has been suggested. So long ago as 1845, in the present month of October, it is interesting to recall that the city could boast of eleven choral societies. To-day there are but three!

At last the Free State is to have its own broadcasting station—the principal one at Dublin and a subsidiary installation at Cork. The Minister for Posts and Telegraphs (Mr. J. J. Walsh) announces that we may expect a Dublin radio station in November. This is good news for lovers of music, although maybe it will not be appreciated to the same extent by artists and concert-givers.

From the twenty-fifth annual report of the Derry Philharmonic Society it appears that though the Society began its season with an adverse balance of seven pounds, it finished with a small credit balance. The presidency of the Duchess of Abercorn is admittedly a tower of strength, and Mr. Eddlestone is a capable and resourceful hon. secretary.

Mrs. A. M'C. Steuart, who inaugurated the Londonderry Feis twenty-six years ago, although now residing in Brittany, has expressed a wish to continue her interest in this event. In furtherance of this idea, Miss Bride O'Neill has been appointed to collaborate with her as assistant hon. secretary. Several new competitions have been added to the syllabus for 1926.

His numerous Ulster friends were delighted at the fact of Dr. Norman Hay, of Belfast, having been specially invited by Sir Henry Wood to conduct his Irish tone-poem 'Dunluce,' at Queen's Hall, London, on September 9. Another Ulsterman, Dr. Charles Wood, Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, had a great triumph at the Gloucester Festival with his eight-part Motet, as is recorded in another column. After its successful première at Dublin, the musical comedy 'Nicolette' proved an attraction at Belfast during the week September 7-12.

It is gratifying to chronicle that the concert given gratuitously by Mr. Walter Rummel, in Ulster Hall, Belfast, on September 2, for the benefit of the dependents of the late W. R. Reynolds, music critic of the Belfast Telegraph, was an unqualified success. Rarely has the hall been so crowded, and it is bare justice to say that Mr. Rummel gave of his best, especially in his Chopin selections. Thus was he able to add substantially to the fund on behalf of Mr. Reynolds's widow and children.

THE SALZBURG FESTIVAL

By Paul Bechert

The idea which led to the establishment of annual Mozart Festivals at Salzburg, about twenty years ago, was the founding there of a sort of Mozartian Bayreuth; to set a standard of excellence and an example of perfection for the performance of Mozart's often misrepresented master operas. While the financial proceeds expected from such festival performances were to go towards the foundation and maintenance of the Mozart Conservatory as well as towards the preservation of Mozart's birth-house at Salzburg as a Mozart Museum, the chief aim of the founder of the Mozart Festivals—Lilli Lehmann—and of Gustav Mahler (who conducted many of the performances in those times) was principally an educational one. When, after a several years' interval caused by the war, the Salzburg Festivals were resumed a few years ago, Lilli Lehmann was no longer among the promoters. Although this great artist and last priestess of Mozart style of our generation still spends her summers at Salzburg, devoting her time to the instruction of a few selected pupils (Mr. Brabazon Lowther being among them this season), the still queenly figure of this great woman of eighty years is conspicuously absent from the Festivals, and her educationally valuable experience is not allowed to be brought to bear upon the quality of the performances. What was originally a worship at the shrine of Mozart has been turned into an enterprise calculated to attract wealthy foreigners for the furtherance of local business interests. Thus has post-war mentality reacted upon the ideals of music and art.

Still it should be stated that this year's operatic performances were far superior to those given in the same place two years ago by Richard Strauss and his company from the Vienna Staatsoper. Virtually the same singers collaborated in this season's Festival, but the results of thorough rehearsal were gratifyingly in evidence, and interesting guest-artists, in conjunction with fine conductors, lent particular importance to the productions. Strange to say, however, the highest standard of excellence was achieved not in one of Mozart's great operas, but in the performance of 'Don Pasquale,' under Bruno Walter's baton. This gem of Italian opera buffa seems to be particularly dear to the heart of Walter, who produced it with great orchestral and all-round finish. The presence in the cast of Madame Maria Ivogun was, moreover, a delight. True, she is probably too much of an Austrian to command the Italian brio, and the big coloratura style which is still a prerogative of the Italian race; instead, however, she added a note of intellectualism and histrionic greatness rarely found in Italian singers. She succeeded in divesting the runs and trills of the rôle of their purely virtuoso character, making them instead a medium for the utterance of human emotions. Such sprightly temperament, such perfect union of music and gesture, I do not recall having seen on any stage for many years. Next to her, Richard Mayr, the famous and unsurpassable Baron Ochs from 'Rosenkavalier,' was the star of the performance. His supreme gift of dramatic characterization added a touch of real tragedy to the fate of the sad Don which the average Italian basso-buffo would hardly fathom. But such Teutonic virtue was coupled with an equally Teutonic tendency to coarsen the outlines of the vocal part of his performance. It seems deplorable that his opulent personality induced him to revel in vocal over-emphasis, and a farcical exuberance more suited to the spacious house of the Vienna Staatsoper than to the small and intimate Salzburg Theatre.

In 'The Marriage of Figaro,' which Franz Schalk conducted in authoritative style, the vocal gifts of the company shone to the best advantage. There was a good ensemble spirit, furthered no doubt by the absence of even one real 'star' in the cast. To those who recall Gustav Mahler's staging of this opera, the production could not but seem superficial, clinging merely to the musical outlines of the score. With Mahler, 'The Marriage of Figaro' was a social drama, a foreboding of the French Revolution in the combat of the humble servants against their aristocratic lords; and besides he made it a drama of strong human passions. The present management of the Vienna Staatsoper, whose company was called upon to perform the work, sees it as a comic-opera pure and simple, and little more than a harmless play of intrigues to the accompaniment of Mozart's beautiful music.

While 'The Marriage of Figaro' may with some truth be regarded purely as a humorous work, such is not fully the case with 'the opera of operas,' 'Don Juan.' This masterwork resembles the Shakespearean tragedies in its mixture of tragic elements with strongly, often coarsely, comical episodes. In view of the fundamental tragic note of the characters and situations it seems justifiable to assume that the humorous elements represented a concession to contemporary taste rather than Mozart's intention to establish 'Don Juan' as an example of opera buffa. Mahler's masterly revival of twenty years ago was done in the nature of an opera seria; and when Richard Strauss, more recently, re-staged it for the Vienna Staatsoper, his view of it as opera buffa expressed itself merely in a few 'humorous' patches of acting and a few brighter touches of colour added to the setting. Thus the shape in which the Vienna Staatsoper presented 'Don Juan' at Salzburg this season was a blend of both versions, and therefore quite inconsistent. Karl Muck, the conductor, did away with the perpetually brisk tempi introduced by Strauss, to re-establish those commonly accepted. Alfred Jerger, who sang the title-rôle, is a good and 'thinking' actor, but he lacks the sensuous beauty of voice required for the part. Richard Mayr's Leporello, conceived in the spirit of the Austrian baroque theatre rather than of the Italian commedia dell-arte, marred the effect of his fine performance by the same 'over-acting' and 'over-singing' which hampered his otherwise fine Don Pasquale. Helene Wildbrunn, widely famed in Germany as a great Donna Anna, deviated little from the current German conception of the operatic heroine, i.e., a big, 'Hausfrau'-like appearance and sweeping gestures—but she lacked the ringing top tones and strong dramatic accents which constitute the one saving quality of most German dramatic sopranos. The genuine Mozart style was represented solely by the Zerlina of Madame Ivogun, whose 'Batti batti' aria was a delight to the ear.

The three operatic conductors—Walter, Schalk, and Muck—also came forward with a cycle of three orchestral concerts calculated to represent the masterworks of Austria's greatest musical geniuses. Walter did not seem to be so much at home in Haydn's D major Symphony and in Mozart's E flat major Pianoforte Concerto (beautifully played by Rudolf Serkin) as he is in modern music, and on this occasion as he showed himself to be in Brahms's second Symphony. Nor is Dr. Muck, with his stern and rigid methods, as fine a conductor for Mozart's 'Don Juan' or for his G minor Symphony as he proved to be for Beethoven's 'Eroica.' Muck's sharp profile, which has aged very much in recent years, looks more remarkably like Wagner's now than ever before. The concert directed by Schalk—the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra being the instrument for all three conductors—brought forth excellent performances of Schubert's 'Unfinished' and Bruckner's seventh Symphony. The cycle of concerts was filled out with a number of 'chamber concerts' which, aside from those given by the Rosé Quartet and by the Wood-wind Society of the Vienna Opera (in conjunction with Rudolf Serkin, the pianist), resolved into a series of pleasing if unassuming song recitals by Madame Ivogun (in conjuction with her husband, the tenor Karl Erb), Madame Lotte Schöne, soprano of the Vienna Opera, Richard Mayr, and Josef Schwarz.

Mozart music—compiled by Einar Nilson into a ballet entitled 'The Green Flute'—furnished the vehicle also for the first appearance anywhere of a new 'International Pantomime Company,' launched under the name of Max Reinhardt, but in fact stage-directed by Ernst Matray, a well-known dancer. Much had been anticipated from this venture towards the modernisation of pantomime as a species; whatever had been attempted in this field by men like Stravinsky (in 'Petrouchka') and Béla Bartók (in 'The Wooden Prince') has remained more or less entangled in the fetters of choregraphic display. Those who had expected more from the 'International' Company were bound to be disappointed, for it gave little more than mere dancing—and rather antiquated and uninteresting dancing—in conjunction with a rather naïve stage management. There was not even an attempt to make pantomime a medium, as it were, whereby to 'hold up the mirror to a contemporary life' in a satirically witty, even grotesquely comical manner (which would seem to be its mission). True that neither Mozart's music, nor that of Muffat—compiled into an insignificant marionette play—gives wide scope for such aims. But the fault lies with those who made such an unwise choice.

The symphony concerts, as well as Max Reinhardt's productions of 'The Miracle' and 'The Great World Theatre' (the latter adapted from Calderon by Hugo von Hofmannsthal), were given in the newly-opened Festival Theatre, situated in the plain and sober baroque building known as the Reitschule (Riding School), which only a few years ago had served as a barracks for the Austrian military. Eduard Hütter, the architect, has succeeded with great skill and economy of means in turning the old hall into a beautiful and acoustically excellent Festival Theatre, eminently suited for orchestral concerts and for Reinhardt's spectacular productions. As for Reinhardt's work itself, it proved equally disappointing in the hollow pomp of 'The Miracle' and in the bombastic display of affected naïveté in 'The Great World Theatre.' It was the familiar concoction of Reinhardt's well-worn and customary stage devices crowded into two hours filled with noise and stilted pathos.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

Leonard Borwick, who died, after a short illness, on September 17, at the age of fifty-seven. He was taught by Henry Bird until, at the age of fifteen, he went to the Hoch Conservatoire at Frankfort and studied under Madame Schumann for six years. His success was immediate, for he played the 'Emperor' Concerto at Frankfort in 1889, and the Schumann Concerto for the Philharmonic Society in 1890. Throughout his career he dwelt high in the public esteem, which he courted all over the musical world, and he was held in special regard by musicians. His playing was never of classic quality; nor did it depend upon the display of technique. It had a certain intensity, verging sometimes on impatience, which put life of its own into familiar classical music and always held a peculiar intrinsic attraction. Of late years Leonard Borwick showed a leaning towards impressionist music, and he evinced a marked faculty for Debussy's tone-colour effects. He arranged Debussy's 'Fêtes' and 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune' for the pianoforte.

Michael Balling, the German conductor, known in Britain chiefly as Richter's successor at the Hallé concerts, and as being the first conductor of 'The Ring' in Scotland. He was born at Heidingsfeld in 1866, conducted the Court Orchestra at Schwerin from 1886 to 1892, went to New Zealand, and founded the first music school in Australasia, at Nelson (this school still flourishes), occupied various important posts during 1896-1906, became one of the principal conductors at Bayreuth in 1906, came to Manchester in 1911, and conducted the Hallé concerts until the war caused his resignation. He was in Germany in August, 1914. A description of his career and artistic personality was given in our issue for January, 1913.

Leo Fall, the famous composer of musical comedies, known as the 'Waltz King.' His most successful work was 'The Dollar Princess,' which ran at Daly's Theatre for over four hundred performances. A still longer run of 'Madame Pompadour' terminated at the same theatre in January this year. Leo Fall, Franz Lehar, and Oscar Straus, all expert as well as popular musicians, were the High Priests of the cult of the waltz-song in the light operatic theatre.

Alfred Carpenter, for many years musical director at the Theatre Royal, Glasgow. Before coming to Glasgow Mr. Carpenter was engaged at the Garrick and other London theatres, and also conducted several of the George Edwardes productions.

David S. MacGregor, at Glasgow, by whose death Scottish song loses one of its most enthusiastic exponents. Mr. MacGregor had been long a leading member and office-bearer of the Scottish Song Society.

Miss A. E. Tennant, hon. secretary of the Glasgow Centre of the British Music Society, at Peebles, while on holiday.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

F. P.—Your first question is easily answered. The Irish harp is slightly less than half the size of the orchestral harp. Whether it is still played is, however, another matter. It is not an orchestral instrument for the simple reason that while it cannot vie in sheer volume of tone with the Erard instrument, the latter can reduce its tone so as to match that of the Irish harp. Hence its use must be limited to amateurs. It is inconceivable, however, that so old and beautiful an instrument should be now completely neglected. The shape has changed somewhat in different epochs. Early Irish harps had no pillar; but in the 17th century it acquired a curved pillar, a straight sound-board, and a high neck. The keyed Irish harp in the Victoria and Albert Museum—dated 1820—is one of the most graceful musical instruments in existence. The popularity of the pianoforte has been won at the expense of the harp and the harpsichord. But since there are devotees of the harpsichord, there is no reason to think that the harp has been less fortunate, and is now completely superseded by its more successful and noisy rival. Books dealing with the subject are Carl Engel's 'Music of the most Ancient Nations' (London, 1864) and Bunting's 'Ancient Music of Ireland.'

Organum.—(1.) From our experience of congregational hymn-practices we should say that you will have little time, or need, for discussion of the historical side of words and music. The most helpful comments are generally those that do not appear in books—e.g., simple remarks concerning the structure of a tune, its climax, rhythmic beauties or peculiarities, &c. These are not only interesting to your congregation; they also help in a right performance. However, if you want more, consult the historical edition of Hymns A. & M., or J. T. Lightwood's 'Hymns and their Story' (Epworth Press). (2.) Iliffe's 'Analysis of Bach's 48 Preludes and Fugues'; Harding's 'Analysis of Beethoven's Sonatas'; and 'Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas: Hints on their Rendering,' by C. Egerton Lowe, all published by Novello.

Inquirer.—(1.) The rights of public performance are reserved in order to prevent performances from copies purchased or hired elsewhere than from the publishers. You will have no difficulty in obtaining permission in the case of the work you mention, provided you obtain the copies from the publishers. (2.) The examiners are not bound by the rules of any books on counterpoint, and will accept all good musicianly workings. Prout's work on the subject is not, we think, up to the standard of the rest of his series of text-books, and we prefer the two others you mention. You should also see Kitson's 'Applied Strict Counterpoint' and 'Counterpoint' (Clarendon Press).

W. T. G. W.—(1.) The pitch best for your purpose is that now generally adopted and known as the 'French Diapason Normal,' or, familiarly, 'low pitch.' (2.) Question too wide. There is no limit to the 'reading one can do with a view to improving one's musical knowledge.' If you have no special subjects, you might do worse than take a good encyclopædia, or a volume of 'Grove,' and read, or skim the cream, of all the articles that interest you;

H. W.—(1.) See Mrs. Curwen's 'Psychology Applied to Music Teaching' (Curwen) and 'Music and Mind,' by Yorke Trotter (Methuen). (2.) The only way to be prepared to name sources of representative themes from the classics, played to you by examiners, is the obvious and unornamental one: memorise, read at sight, hear, and generally browse as much as possible among classical music of all kinds.

G. M.—Authorities generally agree that boys should not sing through the 'broken-voice' period. But there are plenty of adult singers who have done so without apparent harm. Much depends on the type of voice, the physical condition of the singer, and, most of all, on the way he sings during this stage.

Turntable.—We prefer not to recommend any particular type or 'make' of gramophone. You cannot do better than go to a dealer who has a large stock, and taste and try before you buy. Your dealer will also answer the mechanical question you ask far better by demonstration than we can by words.

J. M. McA.—Organ Concertos: Guilmant in D; Rheinberger, No. 1 (strings and three horns); No. 2 (strings, two horns, two trumpets, and two drums); Harwood, in D; Horatio Parker, in E flat minor. All are to be had at Novello's.

W. A. C.—The following may suit you: South London Philharmonic Society (Mr. John Waterer, 50*c*, Croom's Hill, S.E.10); Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster (Secretary, 30, The Green, Twickenham).

K. R. M.—Our advertisement pages contain announcements of many correspondence schools of the type you need.

Second Cornet.—An inquiry addressed to the bandmaster would no doubt bring you the information.

[Want of space compels us to hold over a number of queries.—Editor.]

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
A Postscript to 'A Musical Critic's Holiday.' By Ernest Newman	881
The English Psalter	885
Holst's Choral Symphony. By Harvey Grace	892
A Talk on Pianoforte Playing. By I. Philipp	897
The Performer and his Audience: Some Psychological Facts. By A. E. F. Dickinson	898
Is Transcription Permissible? By Alexandre Cellier	900
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	902
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XII. Robert Johnson. By W. H. Grattan Flood	904
Occasional Notes	905
New Music	907
The Musician's Bookshelf	910
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	916
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	918
Wireless Notes. By 'Caliban'	919
Venice Festival. By Edwin Evans	920
The Gloucester Musical Festival. By Herbert Thompson	922
Church and Organ Music	925
Royal College of Organists	925
National Union of Organists' Associations Congress. By W. A. Roberts	925
Letters to the Editor	927
Sharps and Flats	930
The Amateurs' Exchange	931
Trinity College of Music	931
The Promenade Concerts	931
Handel and the Foundling Hospital. By T. Francis Forth	932
Some New Hymn-Books	932
A New System of Choir Control and Organization. By H. F. Thielé	933
Pre-Bach Organ Composers. By Charles F. Waters	933
Recent Acoustical Experiments in America, and their Bearing upon the Problems of Tonality. By John L. Dunk	934
The Haslemere Festival of Chamber Music. By Gerald R. Hayes	935
The Margate Festival	937
Competition Festival Record	937
Choral Competitions from the Competitors' Point of View. By R. H. Wilson	937
Music in the Provinces	939
Music in Scotland	939
Music in Wales	940
Music in Ireland	941
The Salzburg Festival. By Paul Bechert	941
Obituary	942
Answers to Correspondents	943

MUSIC:

'An Analogy.' Four-part Song. Arranged for Mixed Voices. By C. H. H. PARRY	913

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number: 'Ring out, wild bells.' Festival Carol (arranged for S.S.A.). By Percy E. Fletcher.

Music and Books

at Great Reductions.

Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.

New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.

Music and Books Purchased.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

EGAN, ABBOT.—Benediction Services Nos. 1-6. On Card. 6d. each.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—"The Lording's Daughter." Ballad. In D minor and F minor. 2s. each.

—— "Rolling down to Rio." Arranged as a Two-part Song. (No. 218, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 4d.

GRACE, HARVEY.—"On a Nankin Plate." Song. In D minor and F minor. 2s. each.

HANDEL, G. E.—"Dance of Sailors" (from "Rodrigo") and "Rigaudon" (from "Almira"). Arranged for Pianoforte Solo. 1s. 6d.

HOLST, GUSTAV.—First Choral Symphony (Op. 41). For Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra. Vocal Score. 4s.

KNIGHT, J. D.—"A Cotswold Idyll." Song. 2s.

PARRY, C. H. H.—"An Analogy." Four-part Song, arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 992, The Musical Times.) 2d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, W.—Benediction Hymn No. 7 (Holy One! I come."). 1d., or 2s. 6d. per 50.

—— General Hymn, No. 9 ("Have you?"). 1d., or 2s. 6d. per 50.

—— General Hymn, No. 10 ("Trust"). 1d., or 2s. 6d. per 50.

—— General Hymn, No. 14 ("Lift up thine eyes"). 1d., or 2s. 6d. per 50.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 400, contains the following music in both notations.—"My Land." Unison Song. Composed by HAROLD RAWLINSON. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1187. "In praise of Neptune." Arranged as a Unison Song. EDWARD GERMAN 4d. —

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2487. "Sing Alleluia forth." Hymn-Anthem. E. H. THIMAN 2d.

2488. "The Campbells are comin'." Scottish Folk-Song. Arranged for S.S.A by JOHN E. WEST 3d.

2491. "Praise, my soul." Hymn. JOHN GOSS 1½d.

A reply to inquiries, Musical Press, &c.

TE DEUM. Two Sets (Chant form and Quadruple). 3rd Thousand. 4*d.* By JOHN J. JONES.

"This straightforward setting should become popular where simplicity is necessary. Variety is effectively introduced by unison passages and change of rhythm."—Musical Times.

"Easy, singable; the whole thing shows nice feeling. we can thoroughly recommend it."—Musical News.

"A 'Chant Service' of really ecclesiastical character, varied with 'anthem-wise' passages."—Organist and Choirmaster.

Also A SHORT COMMUNION SERVICE in E flat. 2nd Thousand. 8*d.*

LONDON: WEEKES & CO.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1.

AMY FISHER (of Liége Opera), Pupil of Koenig, of Paris Opéra, teaches singing in English, French, and Italian. Specialises in Diction. Studio, 44, Hogarth Road, S.W.5.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST WANTED for South Kensington Church. Light duties. Must live near. Use of fine organ. "R.G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

TENOR WANTED—St. Andrew's, Holborn. Two Services, and one rehearsal a week. £12. Apply Organist.

TENOR WANTED for St. Peter's, Bayswater. Salary, £25 per annum. Good solois and prayer. Address, Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.5.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS

BY

H. T. BURLEIGH

(b) ARRANGED FOR MALE VOICES. (2) Tenors and 2 Basses)
Price 9*d.* net each

DEEP RIVER
DE GOSPEL TRAIN
GO DOWN, MOSES
I GOT A ROBE (HEAV'N, HEAV'N)
O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT
'TIS ME, O LORD
WERE YOU THERE?

(c) ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES. (Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass)
Price 9*d.* net each

COULDN'T HEAR NOBODY PRAY
GO DOWN, MOSES
I GOT A ROBE (HEAV'N, HEAV'N)
I'M A ROLLING
MY LORD, WHAT A MORNIN'!
SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS
STEAL AWAY
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT
WERE YOU THERE?

(d) ARRANGED FOR FEMALE VOICES. (2 Sopranos and 1 Contralto)
Price 9*d.* net each

BALM IN GILEAD
BY AN' BY DE GOSPEL TRAIN
DEEP RIVER
GO DOWN MOSES
HARD TRIALS
I DON'T FEEL NO-WAYS TIRED
I GOT A ROBE (HEAV'N, HEAV'N)
I WANT TO BE READY
MY WAY'S CLOUDY
NOBODY KNOWS DE TROUBLE I'VE SEEN
OH, DIDN'T IT RAIN
O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS
SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS
SOMETIMES I FEEL LIKE A MOTHERLESS CHILD
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT
WEEPIN' MARY

(e) ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES (Tonic Sol-fa only). (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass)
Price 3*d.* net each

I GOT A ROBE (HEAV'N, HEAV'N)
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT

Send a postcard now for FREE booklet giving thematic extracts of 12 of these songs, and try them over on your piano.

G. RICORDI & CO., 271, Regent Street, Oxford Circus, London, W.1.

The Largest Music Publishers in the World.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,

Or,

In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s.*;
Music only, 3*s.*

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING
FOR
VOICE-PRODUCTION

(Rewritten and brought up to date).

PART I.

OF

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

BY

H. H. HULBERT,

Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price ... Three Shillings.
Paper Boards, 4*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION
FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION

FROM

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.

BY

H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS.

No.
1.	LET THE WORDS OF MY MOUTH	Hugh Blair
2.	GRANT, O LORD	Josiah Booth
3.	LORD, WE PRAY THEE	H. A. Chambers
4.	HIDE NOT THOU THY FACE	Richard Farrant
5.	I WILL GO UNTO THE ALTAR	H. J. Gauntlett
6.	O LORD, INCREASE MY FAITH	Orlando Gibbons
7.	ONE THING HAVE I DESIRED OF THE LORD	G. A. Macfarren
8.	LET MY PRAYER COME UP	Henry Purcell
9.	GOD BE IN MY HEAD	R. Walker Robson
10.	LEAD ME, LORD	S. S. Wesley
11.	HIDE ME UNDER THE SHADOW	John E. West
12.	BLESSED LORD	C. Lee Williams

Price One Shilling.
Each Introit may be had separately.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC
BY
J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
HARVEST ANTHEMS.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	4d.	3d.
While the earth remaineth	4d.	3d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
Service in G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Service in Chant Form (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use)	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: Novello and Company, Limited.

SIX NEW CAROLS
SPECIALLY COMPOSED FOR CAROL BOOKLET No. 3,
OF THE
National Institute for the Blind
(Registered under the Blind Persons Act, 1920).

MUSIC BY

NORMAN COCKER,
Sub. Organist, Manchester Cathedral.

G. D. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.C.O.,
City Organist, Birmingham Town Hall.

WILLIAM FAULKES,
St. Margaret's, Anfield, Liverpool.

T. W. HANFORTH, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.,
Sheffield Cathedral.

ARTHUR MEALE,
Director of Music, Central Hall, Westminster.

W. PRENDERGAST, Mus. Doc.,
Winchester Cathedral.

Published for the National Institute for the Blind, by NOVELLO & Co., Ltd. Price Fourpence.

A FREE GRANT of the necessary copies for choirs will gladly be made to churches willing to set apart a Carol Service Collection in aid of the far-reaching work which the National Institute for the Blind conducts on behalf of the blind of the British Empire.

Applications for free copies (stating how many desired) should be addressed to the Secretary, Music Department, National Institute for the Blind, 224-6-8, Great Portland Street, London, W.1.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

(THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings.
Boards, 4s.; Cloth, 6s.
Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each.
Parts 1 and 2, 1s. 6d.; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. 6d.;
Parts 5 and 6, 1s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12s. 6d.
Books of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

†CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG!)

A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)

Edited by J. E. WEST. English Words by C. AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

†BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY

C. ROSSETTI.

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY

H. M. BURNSIDE.

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE.

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence;
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY

S. J. STONE.

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE.

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings.
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. C. NUNN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS BY

S. WENSLEY.

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS

	No.
*BIDE WITH US	6	Bleib' bei uns
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON	4	Christ lag in Todesbanden
CHRISTIANS GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY	63	Christen, ätzet diesen Tag
COME, REDEEMER OF OUR RACE	61	Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland
FROM DEPTHS OF WOE I CALL ON THEE	38	Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu dir
GIVE THE HUNGRY MAN THY BREAD	39	Brich dem Hungrigen dein Brod
GOD GOETH UP WITH SHOUTING	43	Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen
GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD	68	Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt
*GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST	106	Gottes Zeit ist die allerbeste Zeit
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
†HOW BRIGHTLY SHINES	1	Wie schön leuchtet
IF THOU BUT SUFFEREST GOD TO GUIDE THEE	93	Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten
JESUS, NOW WILL WE PRAISE THEE	41	Jesu, nun sei gepreiset
JESUS SLEEPS, WHAT HOPE REMAINETH?	81	Jesus schläft, was soll ich hoffen?
LET SONGS OF REJOICING BE RAISED	149	Man singet mit Freuden
LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD, THE	79	Gott der Herr ist Sonn' und Schild
†LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, THE	112	Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt
LORD, REBUKE ME NOT (Funeral Ode)	198	Lass, Fürstin (Trauerode)
*MY SPIRIT WAS IN HEAVINESS	21	Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss
O CHRIST, MY ALL IN LIVING	95	Christus der ist mein Leben
O JESU CHRIST, THOU PRINCE OF PEACE	116	Du Friedensfürst, Herr Jesu Christ
*O LIGHT EVERLASTING	34	O ewiges Feuer
O PRAISE THE LORD FOR ALL HIS MERCIES	28	Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende
O TEACH ME, LORD, MY DAYS TO NUMBER	27	Wer weiss, wie nahe mir mein Ende?
PRAISE OUR GOD WHO REIGNS IN HEAVEN	11	Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen
PRAISE THOU THE LORD, JERUSALEM	119	Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn
RISE, O SOUL	180	Schmücke dich
SAGES OF SHEBA, THE	65	Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen
*SLEEPERS, WAKE!	140	Wachet auf
†STRONGHOLD SURE, A	80	Ein' feste Burg
THERE IS NOUGHT OF SOUNDNESS IN ALL MY BODY	25	Es ist nichts Gesundes an meinem Leibe
THOU GUIDE OF ISRAEL	104	Du Hirte Israel, höre
WAILING, CRYING, MOURNING, SIGHING	12	Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen
WATCH YE, PRAY YE	70	Wachet, betet
WHEN WILL GOD RECALL MY SPIRIT?	8	Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?
WHOSO DOTH OFFER THANKS	17	Wer Dank opfert

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

THE SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS

IN TWELVE BOOKS (THREE BOOKS FOR EACH VOICE)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

BACH'S MOTETS

*BE NOT AFRAID	Fürchte dich nicht. 8*d.*
Ditto. (Edited by G. R. SINCLAIR)	1*s.*
*BLESSING, GLORY, AND WISDOM	Lob und Ehre und Weisheit und Dank. 8*d.*
*COME, JESU, COME	Komm, Jesu, komm. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*I WRESTLE AND PRAY (J. C. BACH)	Ich lasse dich nicht. 6*d.*
*JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE	Jesu, meine Freude. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*Ditto. (Welsh Words)	1*s.* 6*d.*
*NOW SHALL THE GRACE	Nun ist das Heil. 8*d.*
*SING YE TO THE LORD	Singet dem Herrn. 1*s.* 6*d.* [1*s.* 6*d.*
SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH US, THE	Der Geist hilft unserer Schwachheit auf

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa, complete. † May be had in Tonic Sol-fa (Choruses only).

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS.

BACH BACH

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT TO CHORAL CONDUCTORS ON SALE OR RETURN.

PSALM CXXI.

For Semi-Chorus and Chorus, with Accompaniment for Organ.
Arranged by IVOR ATKINS and J. MICHAEL DIACK.

1. CHORUS: "I will lift up mine eyes."
2. CHORUS: "The Lord will not suffer thy foot to be moved."
3. CHORUS: "God is thy Keeper."
4. SEMI-CHORUS AND CHORUS: "The Lord shall preserve thee."

Price, 2*s*. Sol-fa, 1*s*.

THE PEASANT CANTATA.

ENGLISH VERSION BY
J. MICHAEL DIACK.
ARRANGED BY
HARRY EDGAR BAKER.

Soloists: Soprano and Baritone.
Staff, 3*s*. Sol-fa, 1*s*. 6*d*. Choruses, 1*s*. 6*d*.
Accompaniments arranged for Small Orchestra: First Violin, Second Violin, Viola, 'Cello and Bass. Flute, Oboe, Clarinet and Bassoon (ad lib.).
Price, 1*s*. net each Part. Piano Part, 2*s*.

THE COFFEE CANTATA.

ENGLISH VERSION BY
J. MICHAEL DIACK.
ARRANGED BY
HARRY EDGAR BAKER.

Soloists: Soprano, Tenor, and Baritone.
Staff, 2*s*. 6*d*. Choruses only, 1*s*.
Accompaniments arranged for same Orchestra as the Peasant Cantata.
Price 9*d*. net each Part.

THE HUNDREDTH PSALM.

For Semi-Chorus, Chorus, and Orchestra.
Arranged by IVOR ATKINS AND J. MICHAEL DIACK.

1. SEMI-CHORUS AND CHORUS: "O be joyful, all ye nations."
2. CHORALE: "Know that the Lord is God indeed."
3. CHORUS: "For the Lord is gracious."
4. CHORALE: "Praise God from Whom all blessings flow."

Price, 2*s*. Sol-fa, 1*s*.
Orchestral Parts may he had on hire from the Publishers.

SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS.

Sacred and Secular.

1. "Good fellows, be merry" (Baritone) Peasant Cantata
2. "Of flowers the fairest" (Soprano) - Peasant Cantata
3. "Has a father with his children" (Baritone) Coffee Cantata
4. "On my Shepherd I rely" (Soprano) Violin obligato - - - Cantata No. 92

Price 1*s*. 6*d*. each.

CHORUSES.

No.	Published separately in the Lyric Collection
1563	"Spring comes laughing"	Peasant Cantata	4*d*.
1564	"And now 'tis time to go" (T.T.B.B.)	Peasant Cantata	3*d*.
1565	"Welcome Chorus" -	Coffee Cantata	3*d*.

Sol-fa, 2*d*.

24 ENGLISH HYMNS
ADAPTED TO BACH'S CHORALES.

Price complete, Staff or Sol-fa Notation, 2*s*. net.
12 Separate Numbers: Staff, 3*d*.; Sol-fa, 3*d*.

Dance Movements from Bach.

A selection from the French, English, and Orchestral Suites.

Piano Solo, 2*s*.
Arranged for Small Orchestra of Strings and Wood Wind.
Complete Parts, 5*s*. Separate Parts, 1*s*.

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS LTD.,

152, BUCHANAN STREET, GLASGOW. 95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

* NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICE.

* Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE ENGLISH MADRIGAL SCHOOL.

The complete works of English Madrigalists in thirty-six volumes.
Transcribed, scored, and edited from the original editions by

EDMUND H. FELLOWES, M.A., Mus. Doc.

The Madrigal writings of Thomas Morley, Orlando Gibbons, John Wilbye, John Farmer, Thomas Weelkes, William Byrd, Henry Lichfild, Thomas Tomkins, John Ward, Giles Farnaby, Thomas Bateson, John Bennet, George Kirbye, Francis Pilkington, Richard Carlton, Henry Youll, Michael East, Richard Alison, Robert Jones, Thomas Vautor, Michael Cavendish, Thomas Greaves, John Mundy, William Holborne, and the "Triumphs of Oriana" by divers several authors.

Consisting of nearly 1,000 numbers. Every number Published separately, and many numbers specially transposed for male voices.

MANY MADRIGALS IN WHICH THE COMPASS OF THE VOICES PRESENTS PRACTICAL DIFFICULTIES ARE TRANSPOSED AND ADAPTED FOR GENERAL USE.

Over 70 are already issued.

Among these are:

	O.N.	Sol-fa.
MORLEY
Now is the gentle season (S.A.T.B.) ...	4d.	2d.
I follow lo the footing (S.S.A.T.B.) ...	4d.	4d.
Hark! Alleluia (S.A.A.T.T.B.)	3d.	2d.
GIBBONS.
O that the learned poets (S.S.A.T.B.) ...	3d.	2d.
Dainty fine bird (S.S.A.T.B.)	3d.	2d.
What is our life? (S.S.A.T.B.)	6d.	4d.
WILBYE.
Draw on sweet night (S.S.A.A.T.B.) ...	6d.	4d.
Stay, Corydon, thou swain (S.S.A.T.T.B.)	4d.	3d.
Happy, O happy he (S.A.T.B.)	4d.	2d.
Adieu, sweet Amarillis (S.A.T.B.) ...	3d.	2d.
WARD.
Upon a bank with roses (S.S.A.T.B.) ...	3d.	2d.
WEELKES.
O care, thou wilt despatch me (S.A.T.B.B.)	4d.	4d.
Like two proud armies (S.S.A.T.B.B.) ...	3d.	3d.
BYRD.
This sweet and merry month (S.S.A.T.T.B.)	8d.	—
This day Christ was born (S.S.A.T.T.B.B.)	8d.	— TOMKINS.
When David heard (S.A.A.T.B.)	4d.	2d.
BATESON.
Sister, awake (S.S.A.T.B.)	3d.	2d.
Have I found her? (S.S.A.T.B.)	3d.	2d.
Cupid in a bed of roses (S.S.A.A.T.B.) ...	4d.	4d.
PILKINGTON.
O softly-singing lute (S.S.A.A.T.B.) ...	3d.	3d.
VAUTOR.
Sweet Suffolk owl (S.S.A.T.B.)	3d.	2d.

FULL LIST ON APPLICATION.

A GUIDE TO THE WHOLE SERIES IS PUBLISHED SEPARATELY, PRICE, 2s. NET.

SEND FOR FULL CATALOGUE OF MUSIC

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

EDMUND H. FELLOWES, M.A., Mus. Doc.,

which includes

THE ENGLISH MADRIGAL SCHOOL

(Including the many Transposed and Adapted Versions)

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL OF LUTENIST SONG WRITERS,

ELIZABETHAN AND JACOBEAN PART-SONGS

(S.A.T.B., with Staff and Tonic Sol-fa combined)

ELIZABETHAN STRING MUSIC, SONGS, CHURCH SERVICES, ANTHEMS, Etc.

PARCEL SENT ON APPROVAL.

STAINER & BELL, LTD., 58, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RISE, O SOUL, THIS HAPPY MORNING.

(SCHMÜCKE DICH, O LIEBE SEELE.)

CANTATA

For four Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(CANTATA No. 180)

Edited by JOHN E. WEST.

English version by A. H. FOX-STRANGWAYS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Ye Holy Angels Bright

ANTHEM.

THE WORDS BY

R. BAXTER.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR THE 271st FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY

BY

STANLEY MARCHANT.

Price One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW

SET TO MUSIC BY

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

EDITED BY

EDWARD ELGAR AND IVOR ATKINS.

BOOK OF WORDS,
with the Music of the Chorales.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

REEVES' LIST.

(PUBLISHED AT NET PRICES.)

VIOLINIST'S ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, containing the Explanation of about 4,000 Words, Phrases, Signs, References, &c., Foreign, as well as English, used in the Study of the Violin, and also by String Players generally. By F. B. Emery, M.A. New and enlarged Edition, doubled in size. 246 pages. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s., paper covers, 4s. 6d., or on India paper, and bound in red pegamoid, rounded edges, 6s. 6d., suitable for student or travel.

CONCISE METHOD OF INSTRUMENTATION. How to Write for the Orchestra, and Arrange an Orchestral or Band Score. Illustrated with Musical Examples, and various large folding charts, with Index. By Edwin Evans (Senior). Author of "Beethoven's Nine Symphonies Fully Described and Analysed," &c. 8vo, cloth. Vol. 1, 6s. 6d. Ready end of October. Vol. 2. Ready end of November. Vol. 1, "How to Write for Strings, Arrangement of Scoring and Preparation of Parts." With Charts. Vol. 2 "How to Write for Wood, Brass, and Drums, and arrange a Band Score." With Charts.

THE ARABIC MUSICAL MANUSCRIPTS IN THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY. By H. G. Farmer, M.A. (Author of "The Rise and Development of Military Music," and Editor of the English Translation of Salvador-Daniels's "Music and Musical Instruments of the Arab." Other works also stand to his credit.) 8vo. Sewed.

THEORY OF MUSIC FOR YOUNG MUSICIANS. With Answers given to all the Questions, and a Dictionary of necessary Musical Terms. By Mary Sharp. Limp cloth, 1s. 6d., paper covers, 1s.

102 TEST QUESTIONS ON THE GENERAL RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC. In groups of six each lesson, for written or oral use. By Wilson Manhire, F.T.C.L., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and L.G.S.M. 4d.

TRIO FOR PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN, AND VIOLONCELLO. Beethoven's Celebrated Minuet in G. No. 2, Score and Parts. Folio, 2s. Also arranged for Violin and Pianoforte, 2s.; and Pianoforte Solo, 1s. 6d.

EXAMINATION TEST QUESTIONS, containing spaces for the Pupil's answers. By Walter L. Twinning, F.R.C.O.
No. 1. Musical Notation and Time. 7d.
No. 2. Formation of Scales. 6d. Other numbers to follow.

WITH THE GREAT COMPOSERS. A Series of Pen Pictures exhibiting in the form of Interviews the Personal Characteristics as Artists of the World's great Tone Poets. Illustrated with portraits. By Gerald Cumberland. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"THE IMMORTAL NINE."

BEETHOVEN'S NINE SYMPHONIES Fully Described and Analysed. A Series of Chapters giving a complete account of Thematic Material and auxiliary motives: an Analytical Chart of each Movement; full Technical Descriptions of Developments; Particulars of Formal and Rhythmic features: Epitomical Tables, &c. Illustrated by 637 Musical Examples. By Edwin Evans (Senior), Author of "Handbook to the Works of Brahms," &c. Cloth, Vol. 1 (Nos. 1 to 5), 10s. 6d. Vol. 2, completing the work, 10s. 6d.

THE BYRD ORGAN BOOK, FOR PIANO OR ORGAN. A collection of 21 Pieces (Pavans, Galliards, &c.), by William Bryd, 1543-1623, edited from the Virginal MSS. and now published in Modern Notation. By M. H. Glyn, in two books, 3s. each; or complete, 5s.

ABOUT ELIZABETHAN VIRGINAL MUSIC AND ITS COMPOSERS. With Fascimiles of William Byrd, John Bull, Orlando Gibbons, and Giles Farnaby. By Margaret H. Glyn. Cr. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. The above work is based upon experience of all Virginal MSS. and collation of a considerable part of their contents. A full Index of the Virginal Composers is added, together with detailed references as to where their MSS. are to be found. Besides full accounts of the lives of William Byrd, John Bull, Orlando Gibbons, and Giles Farnaby, there are also numerous notes and details concerning some 26 lesser Virginal Composers. An explanation of Elizabethan Music Terms also forms a part of the work. The minor Virginal Composers are: H. Aston, E. Bevin, B. and J. Cosyn, H. Facy, R. Farraby, J. Harding, T. Holmes, E. Hooper, W. Inglott, E., J., and R. Johnson, Marchant, T. Morley, J. Munday, Newman, M. Peerson or Pierson, P. Phillips, F. Richardson (Sir F. Heyborne), W. Tisdall, G., J., and T. Tomkins, T. Warrock or Warwick, T. Weelkes.

THE BIRTH OF ARTHUR (Uther and Igraine), Choral Drama. The LIBRETTO by R. R. Buckley and Rutland Boughton. 1s. 6d. This work was performed at Glastonbury in August, 1925 to the music of Rutland Boughton.

BOW INSTRUMENTS.—Their Form and Construction. Practical Detailed Investigation and Experiments regarding Vibration, Sound Results, and Construction. By J. W. Giltay. Englished by the Author and E. van der Straeten. With diagrams. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.; paper, 6s. 6d.

ART OF VIOLONCELLO PLAYING. Complete Tutor. By E. van der Straeten. Text in French and English. 4to. Part I., 3s. 6d. Part II., 4s. Part II. ready end of October.

 Catalogue B, containing full list of our works on Biography, History, Criticism, Æsthetics, Essays, Organ, Orchestra, Piano, Violin, Vocal, and Wagner. Sent anywhere, post free. Fresh issue, Oct. 15.

LONDON: 83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

Music for Armistice Day.

By JOHN FOULDS.

A WORLD REQUIEM.

THE GREAT WORK THAT HAS MADE MUSICAL HISTORY AT THE ALBERT HALL.

For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Baritone Soli; Small Chorus of Boys and Youths (or Sopranos and Tenors); Full Chorus (Large or Small); Full or Small Orchestra and Organ. Available for performance by small choirs of 20 voices and upwards with organ; or by larger choirs with small string orchestra and organ (the latter playing from the Vocal Score); or by the average Choral Society of about 200 voices with orchestra of about 60; or by large choruses of 350 voices with orchestra of 80.

Vocal Score (complete), Price, O.N. 5s. S.F. (Choruses only), 2s. 6d.
Excerpts from the above published separately—

	O.N.	S.F.
REQUIEM. For Chorus with Baritone Solo ...	6d.	4d.
PRONUNTIATIO. For Chorus with Baritone Solo	6d.	4d.
ELYSIUM. Duet for S. and T., with small Female Chorus	6d.	4d.
HYMN OF THE REDEEMED (In Pace). For Male Chorus	6d.	4d.
SONG OF THE BLEST (In Pace). For Soprano Solo (Violin obligato, ad lib.) ...	2s. 6d.	–
BENEDICTIO AND CONSUMMATUS. For Chorus with S.C.T.B. Soli, and small Chorus of Boys and Youths	6d.	4d.

By Dr. HUGH BLAIR.

A SHORT FORM OF SERVICE FOR ARMISTICE DAY.

A dignified and comprehensive Memorial Service comprising suitable Hymns, Prayers and Responses, an Anthem, Three-fold Amen, and suggestions for "The Last Post" and "Reveillé," Benediction, &c., &c.

Complete Service. Price, 1s.
Anthem, "Rest and Peace Eternal." Price, 3d.
"Last Post and Reveillé." Arranged for Organ Solo. Price, 1s. 6d.
Words only for Congregation, 1d. each, 3s. per 100.

ORGAN MUSIC.

DEAD MARCH IN "SAUL" ...	Handel	63020	6d.
ELÉGIE HEROIQUE. Tone Poem	H. Farjeon	57356	1s. 6d.
FLOWERS OF THE FOREST	J. Stuart Archer	63026	1s.
MARCIA FUNÈBRE	Beethoven	63019	9d.
MARCHE FUNÈBRE	Chopin	63018	6d.
LAMENT	Cyril Jenkins	57355	1s. 6d.
PRAYER AND FUNERAL MARCH	A. Hollins	57159	1s. 6d.

Of all music dealers, or the Publishers:

W. PAXTON & Co., Ltd., 22, High Street, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.1

Send for Complete Catalogues, Vocal, (C 201); Instrumental, (C 401); Organ, (C 501), post free.

JUST PUBLISHED

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOK, No. 271.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH

DESCANTS

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

AND OTHERS.

CONTENTS.

THE BAY OF BISCAY	EARLY ONE MORNING
A-HUNTING WE WILL GO	O, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE
JOHN PEEL	THE BRITISH GRENADIERS
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT	THE ASH GROVE
SCOTS WHA HAE	GOOD KING WENCESLAS
THE OAK AND THE ASH	THE FIRST NOWELL

Price, Eightpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Published in Three Volumes with (a) Preface by the Editor giving his reasons for making a new edition.

(b) Classification of the Sonatas according to their degree of difficulty.

(This classification takes into consideration not only the difficulties of technique but also those of style and interpretation.)

(c) Chronological order of the 32 Sonatas (it is known that the opus numbers do not coincide with the order of composition) in relation to the usual division of Beethoven's works in three periods.

(d) Explanatory notes in English, French, and Italian.

(e) Thematic index of all the Sonatas.

The price of each volume is 5*s.* net (postage 9*d.*).
Paper covers—Quarto size.
Newly engraved with good clear notes and printed on excellent paper.

PROCURE IT NOW.

WHEN YOU POSSESS
THE NEW E.R. EDITION
OF

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS

(With copious explanatory notes)

EDITED, RE-FINGERED, AND CORRECTED
BY

ALFRED CASELLA

YOU HAVE THE BEST

The distinctive characteristics of this fine edition, which differs from those that have preceded it are :—

1. A strict revision of the text from the existing manuscripts and the origina editions.
2. The correction and completion of the original phrasing which was imperfect.
3. The modifications of certain dynamic indications that are erroneous or insufficient.
4. A modern fingering destined to ensure to a greater degree the musical accent.
5. The complete indication of modern pedalling (the great frequency with which one changes the right pedal nowadays makes the old indications Ped. and * impracticable). In place of these indications I have substituted the modern notation ⌊————⌋ in which the length of time during which the pedal should be held down is indicated by the horizontal line.

G. RICORDI & CO., 271, Regent Street, LONDON, W.1

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S
ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN
No. 9.

TWELVE SELECTED PIECES
(WEDDING MUSIC)

CONTENTS.

No.
1.	Wedding March ...	William Faulkes
2.	Happy Pair ("Alexander's Feast")	Handel
3.	Love Song—Liebeslied ...	Henselt
4.	Benediction Nuptiale	Alfred Hollins
5.	Bridal March	Alfred Hollins
6.	Minuet Nuptiale ...	Edwin H. Lemare
7.	Spring Song ("Lieder ohne Worte")	Mendelssohn
8.	Wedding March	Mendelssohn
9.	Bridal March and Finale ("The Birds" of Aristophanes)	C. Hubert H. Parry
10.	Finale ("Blest Pair of Sirens")	C. Hubert H. Parry
11.	Serenade ("Schwanengesang")	Schubert
12.	Bridal Chorus ("Lohengrin")	Wagner

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.
Cloth, Seven Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Composed for the Leeds Festival, 1925.

FIRST CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.
(Op. 41.)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK
FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.
For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.
POEMS BY F. W. HARVEY.
MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY
A. HERBERT BREWER.
PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.
STRING PARTS, Price 8s.
An Edition for Contralto or Baritone (in the Press).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LOVE INCARNATE
A SETTING OF LINES
BY ROBERT BROWNING.
With a Verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria,"
BY
ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.
Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.
Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ
BY BASIL HARWOOD.
(Op. 37.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Lording's Daughter

BALLAD.

WORDS ELIZABETHAN.

MUSIC BY EDWARD GERMAN.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY AUSTIN DOBSON.

MUSIC BY HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

"THE CLANSMEN" (2nd thousand), 4*d*.
Sol-fa, 2*d*.
"NOW LET PRAYER AND MUSIC MEET" (AVE), 3*d*.
Sol-fa, 2*d*.
Well-written, effective part-songs for S.A.T.B., by T. W. Blakey.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONGS
BY ROBERT SCHUMANN
ENGLISH AND GERMAN WORDS.

THIRTY SONGS

Price 4*s*. Cloth, 7*s*.

1. Blondel's song — Blondel's Lied.
2. The walnut tree—Der Nussbaum.
3. Moonlight—Mond Nacht.
4. A holiday on the Rhine—Sonntags am Rhein.
5. The hat of green — Volksliedchen.
6. The joys of home—Ich wand're nicht.
7. Poor Peter—Der arme Peter.
8. A flow'ret thou resemblest—Du bist wie eine Blume.
9. O sunny beam—An den Sonnenschein.
10. A poet's love—Ich grolle nicht.
11. Devotion—Widmung.
12. Wanderer's song — Wanderlied.
13. A spring night — Frühlingsnacht
14. Since mine eyes beheld him—Seit ich ihn gesch'n.
15. The noblest—Er der Herrlichste.
16. A vision—Ein Traum.
17. One only—Nur Eine!
18. Love—Liebe.
19. In May—Im Mai.
20. The two Grenadiers — Die beiden Grenadiere.
21. Thy lovely face—Dein Angesicht.
22. Beauteous cradle — Schöne Wiege.
23. Emotion—Die Stille.
24. A red, red rose—Rothes Röslein.
25. Deep-treasured in my heart—Intermezzo.
26. A ride in the wood—Waldesgespräch.
27. Evening song—Abendlied.
28. Drinking song—Trinklied.
29. The lotus flower—Die Lotosblume.
30. My cottage—Die Hütte.

SONGS

EDITED, AND IN PART TRANSLATED, BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price, cloth, folio, 16*s*.

Op. 24.

When the morning breaks—Morgens steh' ich auf.
Now hopes and fears—Es treibt mich hin.
Where sunlight thro' branches—Ich wandelte unter den Bäumen.
My darling, oh, list—Lieb' Liebchen, leg's Händchen.
Fair abode of all my sorrows—Schöne Wiege meiner Leiden.
Stay thy oar, thou rugged boatman—Warte, Warte, wilder Schiffmann.
On the Rhine—Berg' und Burgen.
First I felt near broken-hearted—Anfangs wollt ich fast verzagen.
With myrtles and roses—Mit Myrthen und Rosen.

MYRTLES.

Op. 25.

Dedication—Widmung.
The free mind—Freisinn.
The walnut tree—Der Nussbaum.
Some one—Jemand.
To sit alone—Sitz ich allein.
Bump not the flask—Setze mir nicht.
The lotus flower—Die Lotosblume.
Talismans—Talismane.
Suleika's song—Lied der Suleika.
The Highland widow's lament—Die Hochländer Wittwe.
Song of the bride—Lied der Braut.
Chide me not—Lass mich ihm.
My heart 's in the Highlands—Hochländer's Abschied.
Hey baloo—Hochländisches Wiegenlied.
My soul is sad—Mein Herz ist schwer.
Enigma—Räthsel
Row gently here—Leis' rudern hier.
When thro' the Piazetta—Wenn durch die Piazzetta.
The captain's lady—Hauptmann's Weib.
O how can I be blithe—Weit, weit.
What would'st thou, lonely tear drop?—Was will die einsame Thräne?
No one—Niemand.
Out over the Forth—Im Westen.
Thou'rt like unto a flower—Du bist wie eine Blume.
A message sweet as roses—Aus den östlichen Rosen.
Conclusion—Zum Schluss.

Op. 27.

The passage bird—Sag' an, o lieber Vogel mein.
My love is like the red, red rose—Dem rothen Röslein gleicht mein Lieb.
The Jasmine—Jasminenstrauch.
When thy eye's starry beam—Nur ein lächelnder Blick.

Op. 30.

The rover—Der Knabe mit dem Wunderhorn.
The hidalgo—Der Hidalgo.

MYRTLES.

Op. 25.
Price 2*s*. 6*d*.
(For contents, see above.)

TWELVE SONGS

Op. 35.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Joy in tempest—Lust der Sturmnacht.
"Love, be thou dead?"—"Stirb, Lieb' und Freud'?"
The joy of wandering—Wanderlust.
The first verdure—Erstes Grün.
Longing for the woodland—Sehnsucht nach der Waldgegend.
On the drinking glass of a departed friend—Au das Trinkglas eines verstorbenen Freundes.
Wandering—Wanderung.
Silent love—Stille Liebe.
Questionings—Frage.
Silent tears—Stille Thränen.
Yea, thou art sore and weary—Wer machte Dich so krank?
Remembered sounds—Alte Laute.

TWELVE SONGS
(LIEDERKREIS)

Op. 39.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Homeless—In der Fremde.
Intermezzo—Intermezzo.
The Loreley—Waldesgespräch
Maiden thoughts—Die Stille.
Moonlight—Mondnacht.
The fair, far land—Schöne Fremd.
In a ruin—Auf eine Burg.
Far from home—In der Fremde.
Sadness—Wehmuth
Twilight—Zwielicht
In the wood—Im Walde.
Night in Spring—Frühlingsnacht.

WOMAN'S LOVE AND LIFE
(FRAUENLIEBE)

Op. 42.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 1*s*. 6*d*.

Since I looked upon him—Seit ich ihn gesehen.
He, of all the best—Er der Herrlichste von Allen.
I cannot, dare not believe it—Ich kann's nicht fassen, nicht glauben.
Thou ring upon my finger—Du Ring an meinem Finger.
Help me, ye sisters—Helft mir, ihr Schwestern.
Friend beloved, thou look'st at me—Süsser Freund, du blickest.
Come to my heart—An meinem Herzen, an meiner Brust.
Now hast thou for the first time hurt me sore—Nun hast du mir den ersten Schmerz gethan.

A POET'S LOVE
(DICHTERLIEBE)

Op. 48.

EDITED AND TRANSLATED BY
NATALIA MACFARREN.

Price 2*s*. 6*d*.

When May shed loveliness around—Im wunderschönen Monat Mai.
Where'er my tears have fallen—Aus meinen Thränen spriessen.
The rose and the lily—Die Rose, Die Lilie.
Ah, sweet, when in thine eyes I look—Wenn ich in deine Augen seh'.
My soul I will steep with longing—Ich will meine Seele tauchen.
Beside the Rhine's sacred waters—Im Rhein im heiligen Strome.
I am not wroth—Ich grolle nicht.
Sweet violets, did ye but know it—Und wüssten's die Blumen.
Hark! flutes and viols are sounding—Das ist ein Flöten und Geigen.
When on mine ear resoundeth—Hör' ich das Liedchen klingen.
A youth once loved a maiden—Ein Jüngling liebt ein Mädchen.
On radiant summer mornings—Am leuchtenden Sommermorgen.
In sleep my tears were flowing—Ich hab' im Traume geweinet.
At midnight—Allnächtlich im Traume.
From legends quaint and olden—Aus alten Märchen winkt es.
My songs so wild and troubled—Die alten bösen Lieder.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

SET I.

No.			No.
1.	Andante	Alfred H. Allen	11.	Allegro. Op. 21	Gustav Merkel
2.	Spring Song	W. H. Bell	12.	Andante. Op. 162	Gustav Merkel
3.	Andante con Moto	G. J. Bennett	13.	Introductory Voluntary on the Russian Hymn	J. T. Pye
4.	Song of Thanksgiving	Josiah Booth	14.	Prelude No. 2	A. Redhead
5.	Church Preludes No. 5	R. E. Bryson	15.	Larghetto and Allegro	J. Varley Roberts
6.	Postlude	H. Elliot Button	16.	Allegretto Pastorale	C. Steggall
7.	Postlude	G. Calkin	17.	Contemplation	John E. West
8.	Prelude	Percy E. Fletcher	18.	Postlude	John E. West
9.	Andante	J. W. Gritton	19.	Moderato Maestoso	Kate Westrop
10.	Allegro Moderato	Kate Loder	20.	Andante Pastorale	W. G. Wood

SET II.

No.			No.
1.	Allegretto Grazioso	G. J. Bennett	11.	Andante quasi Allegretto	Gustav Merkel
2.	Church Prelude	R. E. Bryson	12.	Cavatina in G	Ernest Newton
3.	Andante Tranquillo	George Calkin	13.	Epilogue	J. Rheinberger
4.	For Holy Communion	J. Baptiste Calkin	14.	Andante in A	J. Varley Roberts
5.	Postlude	Percy E. Fletcher	15.	Andante in G	C. Steggall
6.	Largo	G. F. Handel	16.	March in G	Henry Smart
7.	Berceuse	Oliver King	17.	Andante Doloroso ("Marcia Funèbre")	John E. West
8.	Adagio, from Sonatina No. 2	Kuhlau	18.	Pastoral Melody	John E. West
9.	Allegretto	Kate Loder	19.	Andante	Kate Westrop
10.	Andante in G	G. F. Wesley Martin	20.	Allegretto Grazioso	W. G. Wood

SET III.

No.			No.
1.	Melody	A. Herbert Brewer	11.	Cavatina	Joachim Raff
2.	Maestoso	George Calkin	12.	Monologue No. 5	J. Rheinberger
3.	Ave Maria	Edward T. Chipp	13.	Melody in F	Anton Rubinstein
4.	Interlude	Percy E. Fletcher	14.	Dreaming	R. Schumann
5.	Intermezzo	Alan Gray	15.	The Poet Speaks	R. Schumann
6.	Postlude	Alex. Guilmant	16.	Soft Voluntary	B. Luard-Selby
7.	Sursum Corda	John Ireland	17.	Menuetto	Berthold Tours
8.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 22	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	18.	Aspiration	John E. West
9.	Andante	Gustav Merkel	19.	Sketch in C minor	John E. West
10.	Duettino in G	Ernest Newton	20.	Andante con Moto	W. G. Wood

SET IV.

No.			No.
1.	Romance	W. H. Bell	11.	Lieder Ohne Worte No. 44	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
2.	Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor)	W. Sterndale Bennett	12.	Trio	J. Rheinberger
3.	Canzonetta	César Cui	13.	Short Postlude	B. Luard-Selby
4.	Interlude	Th. Dubois	14.	Andante Maestoso	B. Luard-Selby
5.	Elegy	Edward Elgar	15.	Prelude	Henry Smart
6.	Allegretto	Niels W. Gade	16.	Fughetta	Henry Smart
7.	Judex ("Mors et Vita")	Ch. Gounod	17.	Choral Song	S. S. Wesley
8.	Intermezzo No. 3	Alan Gray	18.	Lamentation	John E. West
9.	Chanson de Joie	R. G. Hailing	19.	Allegretto Pastorale	John E. West
10.	Hymnus	A. C. Mackenzie	20.	Andante	W. G. Wood

SET V.

No.			No.
1.	Chorale Prelude—Erbarm' Dich mein, O Herre Gott	J. S. Bach	10.	Prelude	J. Rheinberger
2.	Allegro Maestoso e Vivace	W. T. Best	11.	Monologue No. 9	J. Rheinberger
3.	Meditation	Hugh Blair	12.	Chanson Orientale	Schumann
4.	Cantilène Religieuse	Th. Dubois	13.	Four Sketches, No. 1	Schumann
5.	Intermezzo No. 1	Alan Gray	14.	Larghetto from Sonata in D	B. Luard-Selby
6.	Then round about the Starry Throne ("Samson")	G. F. Handel	15.	Andante	E. Silas
7.	Lieder Ohne Worte, No. 4	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy	16.	Six Short and Easy Pieces, No. 6	Henry Smart
8.	Moderato	Gustav Merkel	17.	Intermezzo founded on an Irish Air	C. V. Stanford
9.	Ave Verum	Mozart	18.	Andante in G	S. S. Wesley
			19.	Lament	John E. West
			20.	Canzona	W. Wolstenholme

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FOUR SHILLINGS EACH SET. CLOTH, SIX SHILLINGS EACH SET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors	H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ...	Flotow
Instrumental Band, The	Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A	J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont"	Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp"	F. A. G. Ouseley
March	Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
Marching off to Bed	Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute"	Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March	Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX SEA SONGS

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET.

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE

ORGAN.

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOCTURNE

FOR VIOLONCELLO (OR VIOLIN) AND PIANOFORTE.

BY

COLIN MACLEOD CAMPBELL.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
Piano Conductor	1	6
String Parts	2	8
Wind Parts, &c.	4	0
Harmonium	0	8

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SUITE

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA (OR QUARTET)
TRANSCRIBED FROM THE CLAVICHORD WORKS OF

DOMENICO SCARLATTI

BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

SCORE.

Price ... Three Shillings.

String Parts, 3*s.* 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK

OF THE

BREARE VOCAL SERIES

No. 5,

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

BY W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.

Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.

Publishers:
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

YORK ANTHEM SERIES, ETC.

No.
487.	MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS,			B minor	...T. T. Noble	6d.
822.	Do.	do.	do.	B flat	... T. T. Noble	6d.
836.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	...Alec Rowley	5d.
865.	Do.	do.	do.	D minor	... J. S. Horne	5d.
866.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	Henry Gibson	5d.
880.	Do.	do.	do.	D ...	Edwin J. Crow	6d.

Write complete List.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

NOVELLO'S
POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS
FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH
DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE
Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER
EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES
Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

J. D. DAVIS.
FOUR LITTLE PIECES
Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
HAPPY THOUGHTS
Price Three Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG
TEN LITTLE PIECES
Op. 109.
In two Books. Price Two Shillings and Threepence each.

ARNOLD KRUG
SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND
In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK
TWENTY-FOUR PIECES
Op. 62 AND 81.
In four Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

MAX MAYER
BAGATELLES
Price Four Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN
SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

ERNEST NEWTON
WOODLAND DANCES
Price Three Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON
ROMANY LIFE
Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE
THREE PIECES
Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN
PIECES FOR THE YOUNG
Part I., Price 1*s.* 6*d.*; Part II., Price 1*s.* 6*d.*

SCHUMANN
THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS
(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES
Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER
Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES
Price Three Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY
CHRISTMAS ALBUM
In three Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

FRANCESCO BERGER
FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE
PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S
LATEST SONG SUCCESSES

GUY D'HARDELOT.
"The Quiet Country Place
"Wings"
"Love's Ecstasy"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.
"The Fairy Laundry"
"The Dawn has a Song"
"A Border Home"
"The Dance on the Lawn'

TERESA DEL RIEGO.
"If any little Song of Mine
"Some Day"

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE.
"Song of the Homeward Bound"

RICHARD KOUNTZ.
"Sleepy Hollow Tune"

RAYMOND LOUGHBOROUGH.
"High on the Sleepy Hills"

CECIL BAUMER.
"Spring, the Fiddler"
"Follow the Fairies"

HERMANN LÖHR.
"Friendships"
"Immortality"
"It's a year almost"

HAYDN WOOD.
"I Look into Your Garden"
"Dearest, I Love the Morning"
"The Valley of Roses"

ERIC COATES.
"The Little Green Balcony"
"Song of the Little Folk"
"Yearning"

MOLLY CAREW.
"Canterbury Bells"
"Somewhere in this Summer Night"
"The Market"

BERNARD ROLT.
"The Moon upon the Chimney"

CHAS. WAKEFIELD CADMAN.
"The Shadowless Hour"

GEORGE H. GARTLAN.
"The Lilac Tree"

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, New Bond Street, London, W.1.
NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

SPANISH DANCES
FOR THE PIANO
BY
MANUEL DE FALLA.

RITUAL FIRE DANCE (from "El Amor Brujo") .... 2s.
FARUCCA
(Dance of the Miller, from "The Three-Cornered Hat") 2s. net.
FANDANGO
(Dance of the Miller's Wife, from "The Three-Cornered Hat") 3s. net.
TWO DANCES (from "La Vida Breve") .... each 2s. net.
The same, for Pianoforte Duet .... each 3s. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd.,
11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London: Printed by Novello & Company, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Thursday, October 1, 1925.

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION OF TRIOS, QUARTETS, &c. FOR FEMALE VOICES.

FOR S.S.A. UNLESS OTHERWISE STATED.

266. About the sweet bag of a bee (4 v.) Marie J. A. Wurm 3d.
406. Ah, tender flower ... F. Hiller 2d.
236. Albion ... ... Marie Wurm 3d.
456.* And how should I your true love know (arr. by) H. B. Gardiner 2d.
411.* Annie Laurie (arr.) C. Macpherson 4d.
47.* Approach of May, The Walmisley 4d.
226. April ... ... King Hall 4d.
114.* April showers ... ...J. L. Hatton 4d.
351.§ Arab's song, An... H. M. Higgs 4d.
152. As in the field ... ... C. Reinecke 3d.
113. At midnight ... Franz Lachner 4d.
172. At the spinning wheel ...Carl Hering 3d.
138. Ave Maria ... ... Franz Abt 3d.
30. Ave Maria ... ... Marchetti 4d.
23.*§ Ave Maria ("Loreley") Mendelssohn 3d.
148. Awaking of morn, The C. Reinecke 3d.
379.* Ballad of Sir Humphrey Gilbert, The W. Wolstenholme 8d.
335.* Barcarolle (4 v.) ... J. Brahms 2d.
437.* Beauteous Morn ... E. German 4d.
530. Bells are ringing, The N. von Wilm 4d.
37.* Bells in May ... ... F. Hiller 4d.
78.* Be strong to hope Edward Hecht 4d.
6.* Bird at sea, The... Henry Smart 6d.
49.* Blanche of Provence ... Cherubini 3d.
398. Bleacher's night song, The (4 v.) Schumann 2d.
195.* Blessed are the pure ... G.E. Lake 4d.
Ditto (without accomp.) G. E. Lake 1½d.
425. Blind Boy, The... ... W. G. Ross 4d.
424. Blow, ye gentle breezes (4 v.) J. C. Marks 4d.
343.* Bride, The (From the Island of Rügen) (4 v.) J. Brahms 4d.
334.* Bridegroom, The (4 v.) J. Brahms 4d.
205.§ Bride hath paced, The J. F. Barnett 6d.
202.§ Bright is the day (4 v.) E. Prout 6d.
206.§ But tell me, speak again (2 v.) J. F. Barnett 6d.
347.*§ But thou, O Hope F. H. Cowen 3d.
41. Call to the mountains ... F. Hiller 4d.
220.* Cast thy bread W. S. Bennett 4d.
389.* Chapel, The (4 v.) ... Schumann 2d.
234.*§ Charity (La Carita) ... G. Rossini 4d.
68. Charming little valley ... G. Roberti 4d.
134. Christmas Carol, A (2 v.) C. Reinecke 3d.
119. Christmas Eve ... H. Marschner 6d.
100. Clieveden Woods ... F. Corder 4d.
181.* Come away, Death ... J. Brahms 3d.
428.* Come away, Death ... J. Harrison 3d.
215.* Come, rosy morn ... Oliver King 4d.
85.*§ Come, sisters, come A. C. Mackenzie 6d.
490. Come unto Him ... ... H. Farjeon 3d.
386. Convent Maiden, The (4 v.) Schumann 2d.
1.* Corall'd caves of ocean, The H. Smart 4d.
466.* Corinna ... ... Ethel Boyce 4d.
13.* Coronach ... ... Schubert 4d.
315.* Coronation Song ... E. Faning 4d.
354.* Cradle Song, A H. Walford Davies 4d.
65.* Daffodils... ... H. Ellingford 4d.
224.* Daffodils, The ... ... King Hall 4d.
373.*§ Dametus... ... ... W. Bendall 3d.
327.* Dartside ... ... A. Hollins 6d.
441. Dawn of Day, The ... S. Reay 4d.
71. Day is at last departing J. Raff 4d.
404. Day, in twilight grace, is dying Hiller 4d.
183. Death of Trenar, The ... J. Brahms 4d.
79.* Departure ... ... L. Samson 4d.
297.* Dickory, Dickory dock (humorous) H. W. Schartau 4d.
84.* Distant bells ... A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
435.* Dream, baby, dream P. E. Fletcher 4d.
144.* Dreaming lake, The ... C. Reinecke 3d.
460.* Dream-Pedlary... ...Colin Taylor 4d.
378.* Duncan Gray (humorous) A. M. Richardson 4d.
249. Early Morning (2 v.) ... J. Kinross 4d.
414. Earth and Man, The A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
130. Eat the fruit (2 v.) ... C. Reinecke 3d.
213. Ebb and Flow ... ... Oliver King 4d.
470. Echoes ... ... B. Johnson 4d.
439.§ Echoes ... ... J. Pointer 4d.
184.* Eglantine (4 v.) ... Adolf Jensen 4d.
161. Eglantine, The ... ... R. Würst 4d.
319. Eidola ... ... F. C. Woods 4d.
80. Elf, The ... ... L. Samson 4d.
153. Elves, The ... ... C. Reinecke 3d.
230. Elves' Duet The (2 v.) Karel Bendl 6d.
382.* Encinctured with a twine of leaves S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
309.* England ... ... J. L. Hatton 3d.
9.* Evening ... ... Henry Smart 3d.
59. Evening rest ... Oscar Wermann 6d.
171.* Evening rest ... ... Carl Hering 3d.
112.* Evening Star, The Franz Lachner 3d.
151. Evening Wind, The ... C. Reinecke 3d.
434.* Exiles, The ... Laurent de Rillé 4d.
321.* Fair Daffodils ... A. H. Behrend 4d.
395. Fair Elma ... ... F. Hiller 4d.
214. Fair Luna ... ... Oliver King 4d.
318. Fairest of lands A. Goring Thomas 6d.
377.* Fairies' Song (4 v.) ... H. Brian 4d.
187.* Fairies' Song. The (4 v.) Bishop 6d.
484. Fairies were tripping, The E. D. Tayler 4d.
232. Faith ... ... G. Rossini 3d.
290. Falcon, The ... Felix Woyrsch 3d.
124. Fancy ... ... A. H. Behrend 4d.
65. Fare thee well! ... ... G. Roberti 4d.
429. Father Eternal (4 v.) ... Brahms 2d.
53. Father's watchful eye, The Franz Abt 4d.
8.* Fays' song, The... Henry Smart 6d.
174. Festival, The ... ... Carl Hering 3d.
33.* Fisherwife's song, The J. L. Hatton 4d.
394. Flaming sun is dying, The F. Hiller 2d.
106. Flora ... ... M. Hauptmann 3d.
194.* Flow down, cold rivulet B. Luard-Selby 4d.
252. Flow'rets fair (2 v.) ... J. Kinross 4d.
55.* Fly forth, my song ... Franz Abt 4d.
239. Fly not, summer hours Marie Wurm 3d.
307.*§ Fly, singing bird ... E. Elgar 8d.
385.* Forest fay, The (4 v.)... Schumann 2d.
393. Forsaken maiden, The (4 v.) Schumann 2d.
255. Four Angels ... C. A. Macirone 4d.
500. Frog, The (humorous) E. Newton 4d.
345.*§ From the green heart of the Waters S. Coleridge-Taylor 4d.
86. From Venice ... ... C. Reinecke 4d.
311. Frost-bound ... H. W. Wareing 4d.
182.* Gardener, The ... ... J. Brahms 4d.
245. Garden of peace, The (2 v.) King Hall 4d.
356.* Gentle spring ... Joseph Holbrooke 6d.
122.* Gipsy life ... ... Schumann 4d.
46. Glorious stand the mountains C. Reinthaler 3d.
17. Glory to the Lord ... Schubert 4d.
15.* God in Nature (4 voices) Schubert 6d.
44.* Good-night (3 v.) Henry Leslie 4d.
413. Good-night ... M. F. Phillips 4d.
269.* Good-night (4 v.) Marie J. A. Wurm 4d.
129. Good-night (2 voices) C. Reinecke 3d.
423.* Good-night, beloved (arr.) Pinsuti 2d.
488.* Goslings, The (humorous) J. F. Bridge 4d.
442. Green are the leaves A. Brent Smith 4d.
324. Greenfinch, The (4 v.) L. Sinigaglia 4d.
284.* Hail! Star of Eve ...R. Spofforth 3d.
22.*§ Hail to thee ... Henry Smart 3d
133.* Happiness ever (2 v.) C. Reinecke 3d.
391. Happy hunter, The (4 v.) Schumann 2d.
358.* Hark! how the ripples G. C. Young 4d.
158.* Hark! the Lark (S.S.A.A.) Cooke 4d.
98.* Hark! the village bells James Shaw 4d.
317. Hasten, Oh! Sisters ... F. Tozer 4d.
375. Haste thee, Nymph T. S. Holland 3d.
125. Haymakers ... A. H. Behrend 4d.
56.* Hear, O hear my prayer (Veni, Domine) Mendelssohn 4d.
27.*§ Hearts feel that love Thee „ 3d.
2.* Heaven ... ... Henry Smart 6d.
426.* Here a pretty baby lies H. A. Smith 2d.
465.* Here a solemn feast Ethel Boyce 3d.
247. Here, in cool grot ... Mornington 3d.
316.* His Majesty the King F. H. Cowen 4d.
270.* Hohenlinden ... F. A. Marshall 3d.
285.* Honey-bees love heath'ry heights Chas. H. Lloyd 4d.
233. Hope ... ... G. Rossini 4d.
237. Hope ... ... Marie Wurm 3d.
3.* Hope and Memory Henry Smart 6d.
39. Hours of rest ... ... F. Hiller 4d.
499. How far is it to Bethlehem? Geoffrey Shaw 3d.
88. How quickly sorrow ... C. Reinecke 3d.
250. Hunter's Song (2 v.) ... J. Kinross 4d.
102. Hurley Mill ... ... F. Corder 4d.
310.* Hurrah for merry England Pierson 3d.
173. Hussar's departure, The Carl Hering 4d.
296. Hymn to Nature ...L. Streabbog 4d.
279.* If hope were but a fairy (2 v.) Foster 3d.
342.* If through the churchyard (4 v.) J. Brahms 2d.
459.*§ If yet Pan's Orgies (S.S.A.A.) Geoffrey Shaw 4d

*Pieces marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d. to 3d. each.*
§ Band Parts.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MADE IN ENGLAND.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

FESTIVAL CAROL

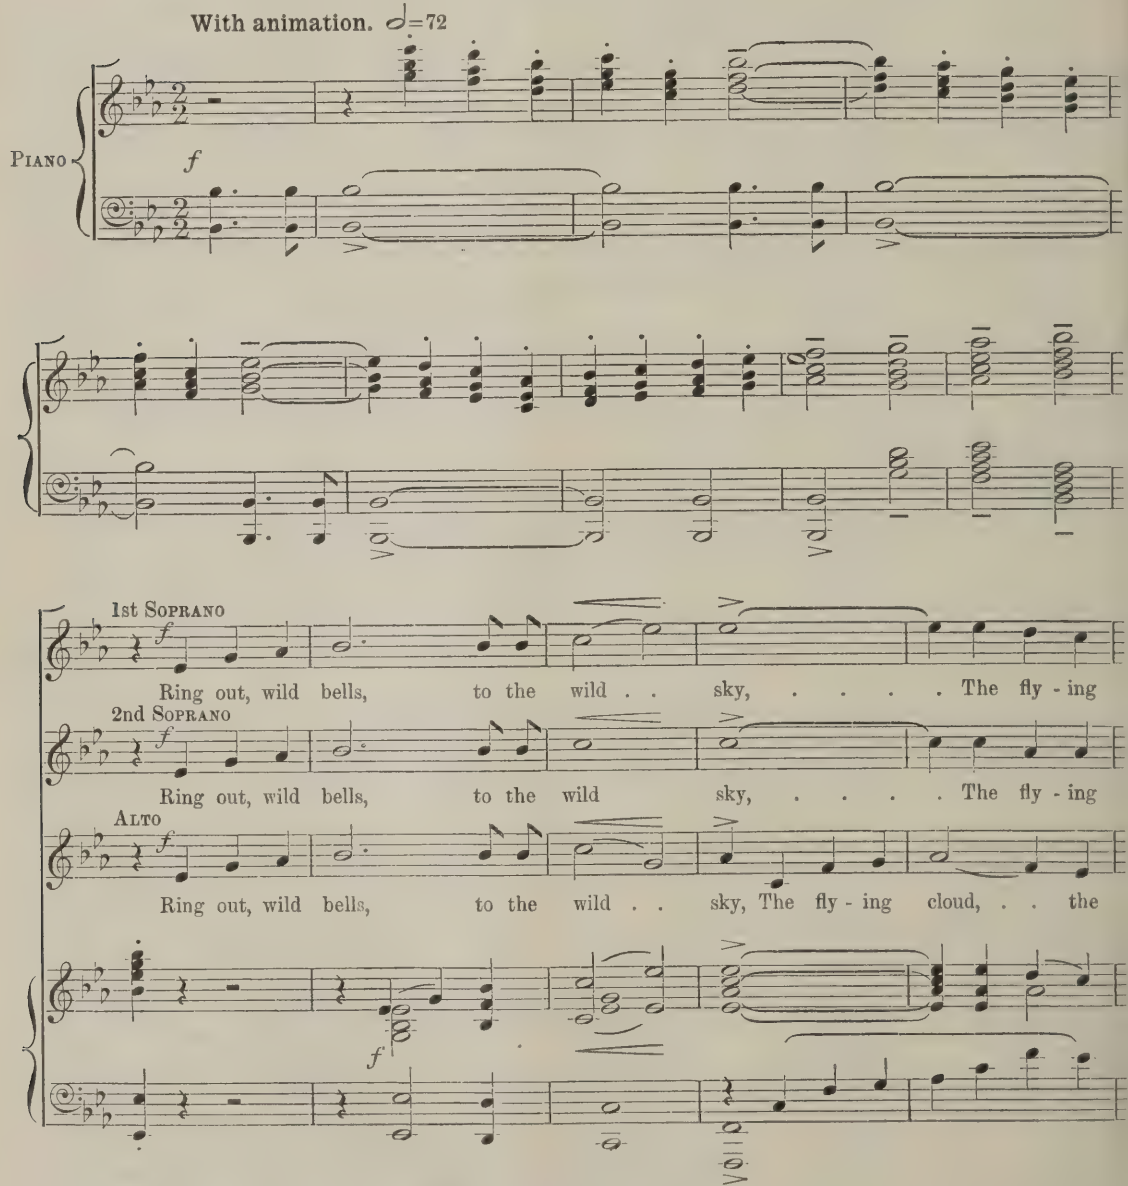
WORDS FROM TENNYSON'S "IN MEMORIAM"

MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER

ARRANGED AS A TRIO FOR FEMALE VOICES BY THE COMPOSER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.



With animation. ♩=72
Piano
f
1st Soprano
Ring out, wild bells, to the wild . . sky, ... The fly - ing
2nd Soprano
Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky, ... The fly - ing
Alto
Ring out, wild bells, to the wild . . sky, The fly - ing cloud, . . the

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

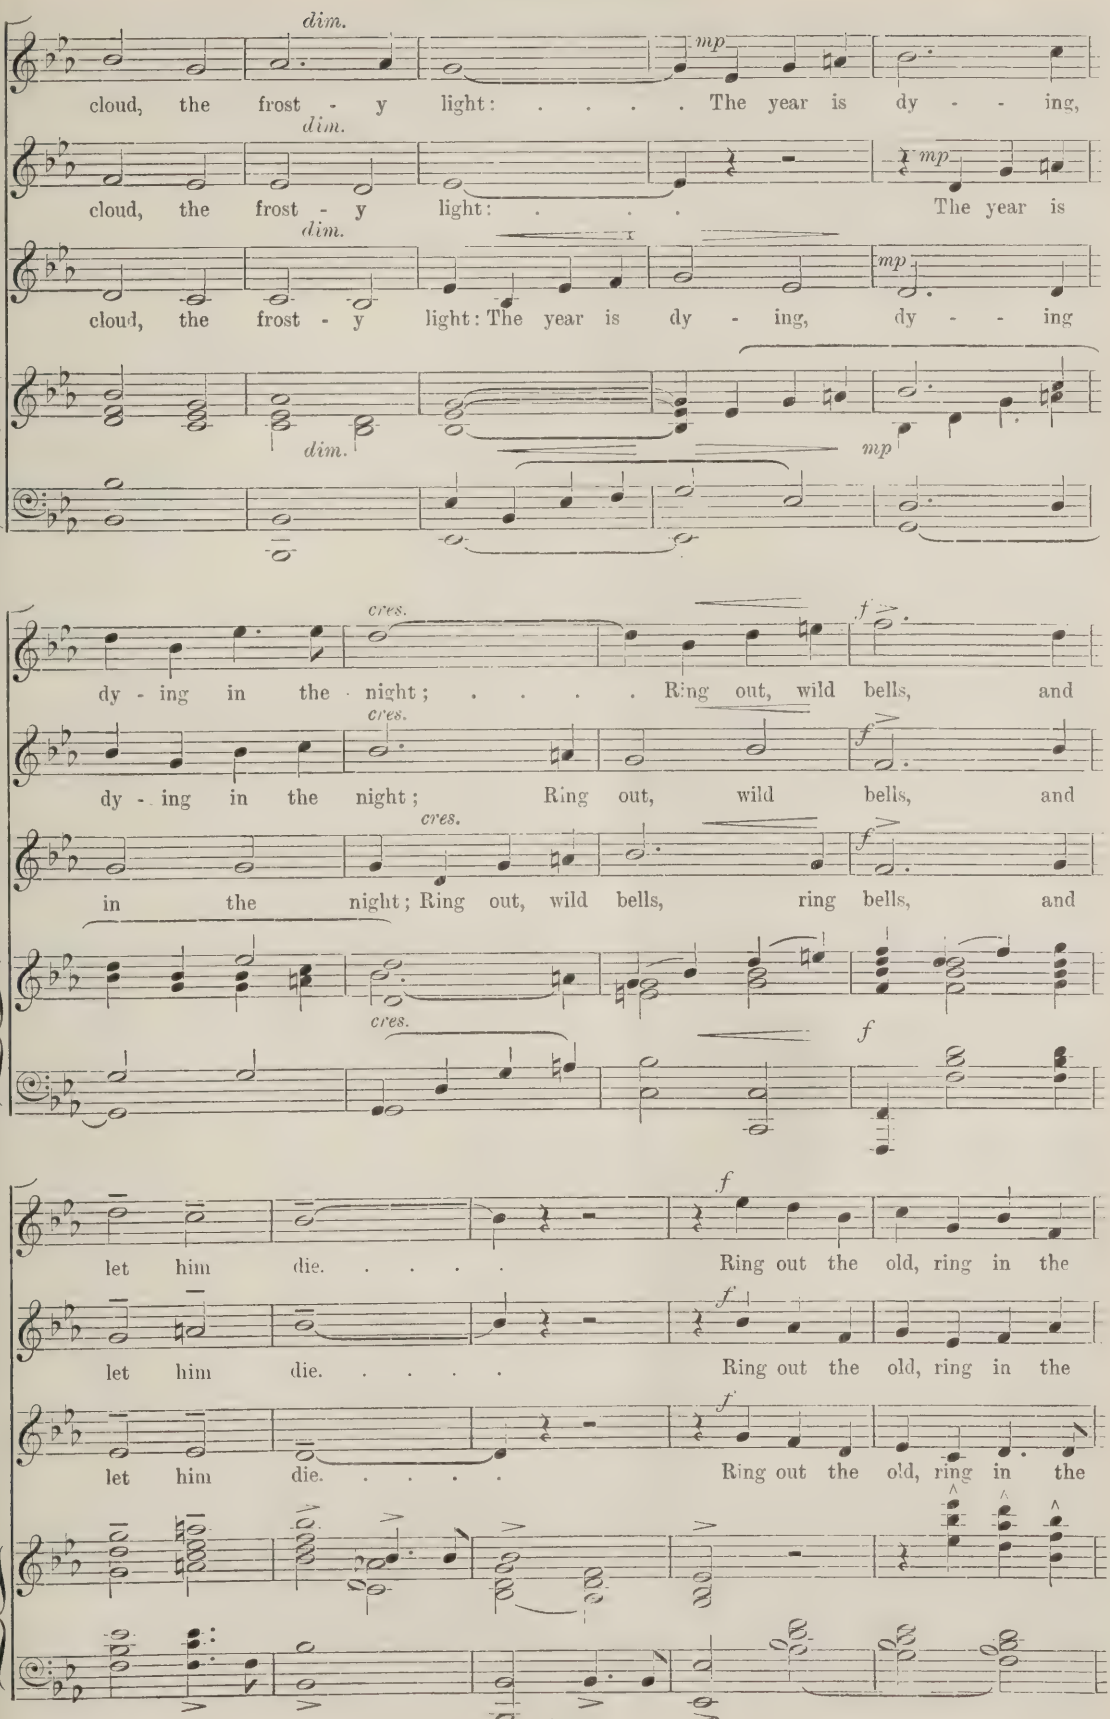
Also published for S.A.T.B. in NOVELLO'S OCTAVO ANTHEMS, No. 1053, and TONIC SOL-FA SERIES, No. 2211; and for S.A. in NOVELLO'S TWO-PART SONGS FOR FEMALE VOICES, No. 217; and for Men's Voices (T.T.B.B.) in THE ORPHEUS, No. 589.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS



dim.
mp
cloud, the frost - y light: . . . . The year is dy - - ing, dim.
mp cloud, the frost - y light: . . . The year is dim.
mp
cloud, the frost - y light: The year is dy - ing, dy - - ing
dim.
mp
cres.
f dy - ing in the night; . . . . Ring out, wild bells, and cres.
f dy - ing in the night; Ring out, wild bells, and cres.
f in the night; Ring out, wild bells, ring bells, and cres.
f
f let him die. . . . . Ring out the old, ring in the
f let him die. . . . . Ring out the old, ring in the
f let him die. . . . . Ring out the old, ring in the new, Ring, hap - py bells, a - cross the snow: The year is go - ing, let him go; . . .

new, Ring, hap - py bells, a - cross the snow: The year is go - ing, let him go; . . .
new, Ring, hap - py bells, a - cross the snow: The year is go - ing, let him go; . . .
. . Ring out the false, ring in the true. Ring out the marcato
. . Ring out the false, ring in the true. Ring out the marcato
. . Ring out the false, ring in the true. Ring out the old, . . ring in the new, ring in the new. . . .
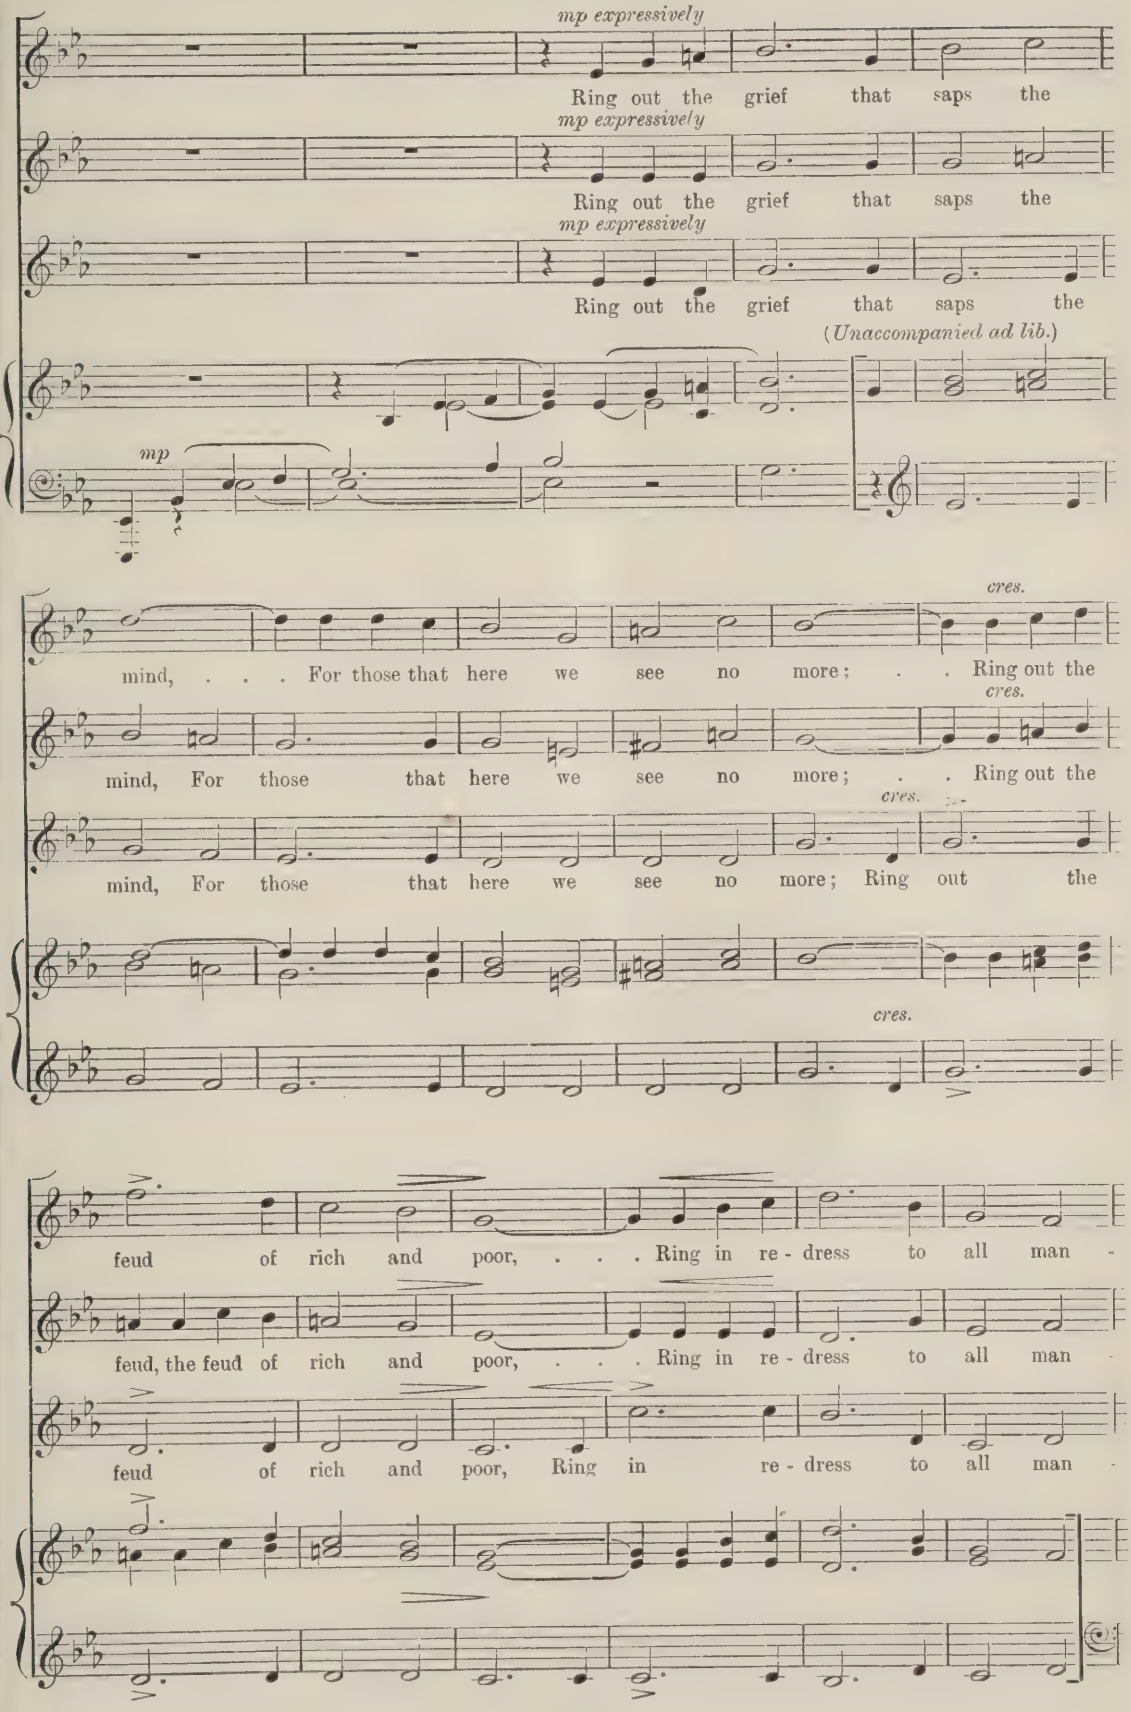
old, ring in the new, ring the new. . . .
old, ring in the new, ring in the new. . . .

RING OUT, WILD BELLS



mp expressively
Ring out the grief that saps the mp expressively
Ring out the grief that saps the mp expressively
Ring out the grief that saps the (Unaccompanied ad lib.)
mp
cres.
mind, . . . For those that here we see no more; . . Ring out the
cres.
mind, For those that here we see no more; . . Ring out the
cres.
mind, For those that here we see no more; Ring out the
cres.
feud of rich and poor, . . . Ring in re - dress to all man - feud, the feud of rich and poor, . . . Ring in re - dress to all man - feud of rich and poor, Ring in re - dress to all man -

- kind. . . .
- kind. . . .
mf
- kind. . . . Ring out a slow - ly dy - ing cause, And an-cient forms of par - ty mf
mf
Ring in the no - bler modes of life, With sweet - er man - ners, pu - - rer cres.
strife;
cres.
f laws. . . . Ring out the old, ring in the new, Ring, hap - py
f
Ring out, ring out . . . the old, ring in the new, Ring, hap - py
f
Ring out, ring out . . . the old, ring in the new, Ring, hap - py
f bells, a - cross the snow: The year is go - ing, let him go; . . . . Ring out the bells, a - cross the snow: The year is go - ing, let him go; . . . . Ring out the bells, a - cross the snow: The year is go - ing, let him go; . . . . Ring out the marcato

false, ring in the true. Ring out the old, . . .
marcato false, ring in the true. Ring out the old, ring
marcato
false, ring in the true. Ring out the old, ring ring in the new, ring in the new. . . .
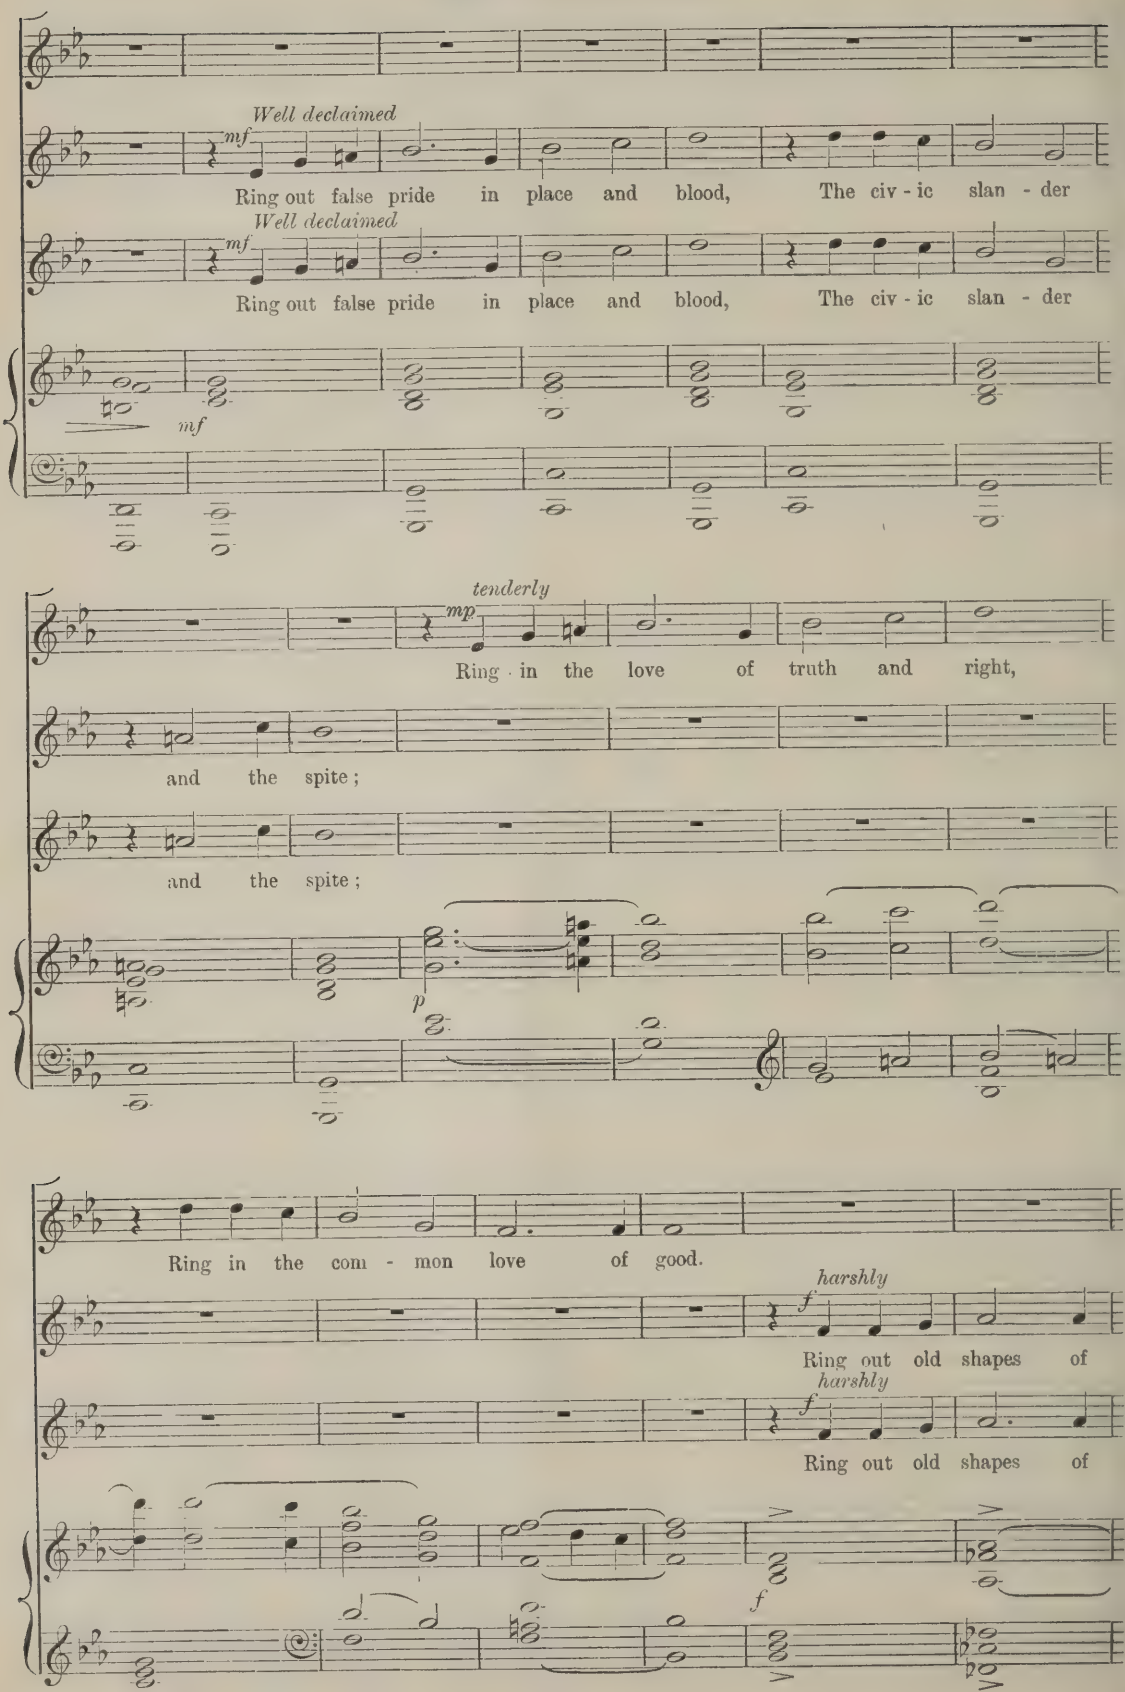
in the new, ring the new. . . .
in the new, ring in the new. . . .



Well declaimed
mf
Ring out false pride in place and blood, The civ - ic slan - der Well declaimed
mf
Ring out false pride in place and blood, The civ - ic slan - der mf tenderly
mp
Ring in the love of truth and right, and the spite;
and the spite;
p
Ring in the com - mon love of good.
harshly
f Ring out old shapes of harshly
f Ring out old shapes of f

foul dis - ease; Ring out the nar - row-ing lust of gold;
foul dis - ease; Ring out the nar - row-ing lust of gold;
Ring out the thou - sand wars of old, ...
Ring out the thou - sand wars of old, ...
Ring out the thou - sand wars of old, ...
marcato
Poco più lento
a tempo
Ring in the thou - sand years of peace. . . Ring in the val - iant man and Ring in the thou - sand years of peace. . . Ring in the val - iant man and Ring in the thou - sand years of peace. . .
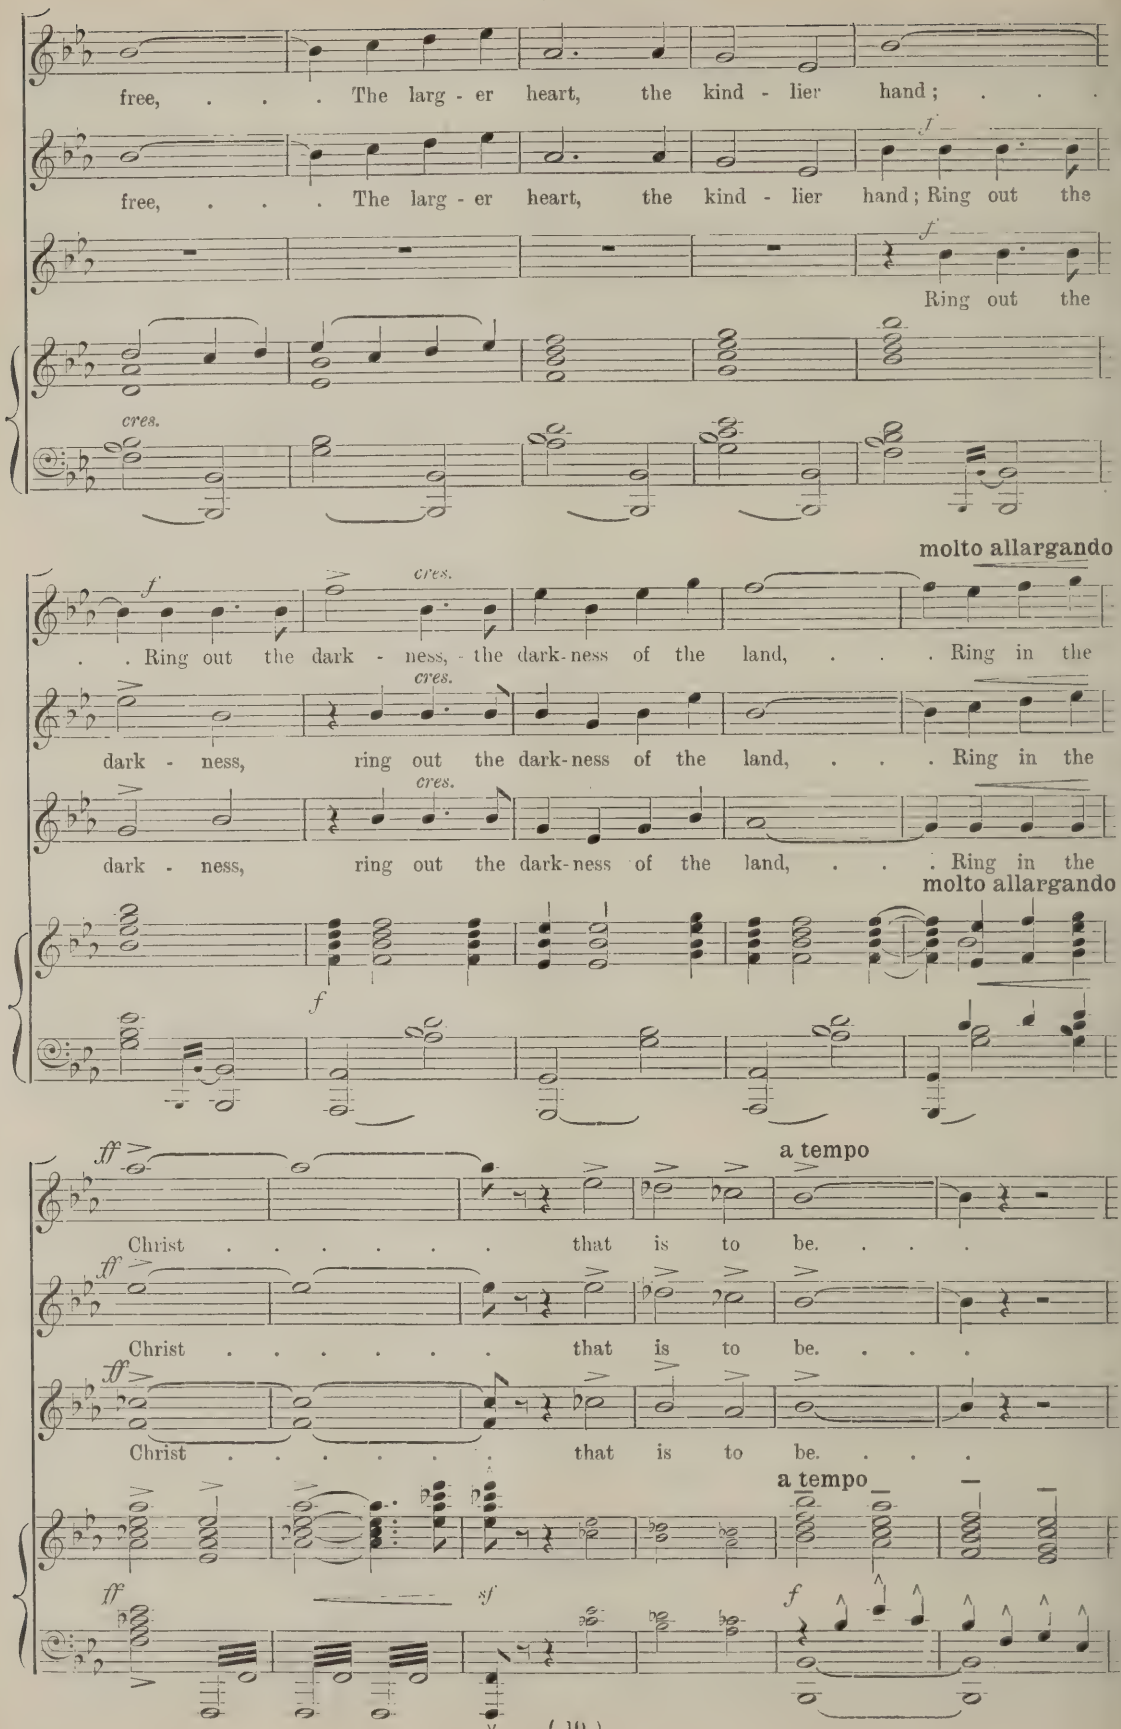
Poco più lento
a tempo
sustained



free, . . . The larg - er heart, the kind - lier hand; . . .
free, . . . The larg - er heart, the kind - lier hand; Ring out the Ring out the
cres.
molto allargando
. . Ring out the dark - ness, - the dark-ness of the land, . . . Ring in the dark - ness, ring out the dark-ness of the land, . . . Ring in the dark - ness, ring out the dark-ness of the land, . . . Ring in the molto allargando
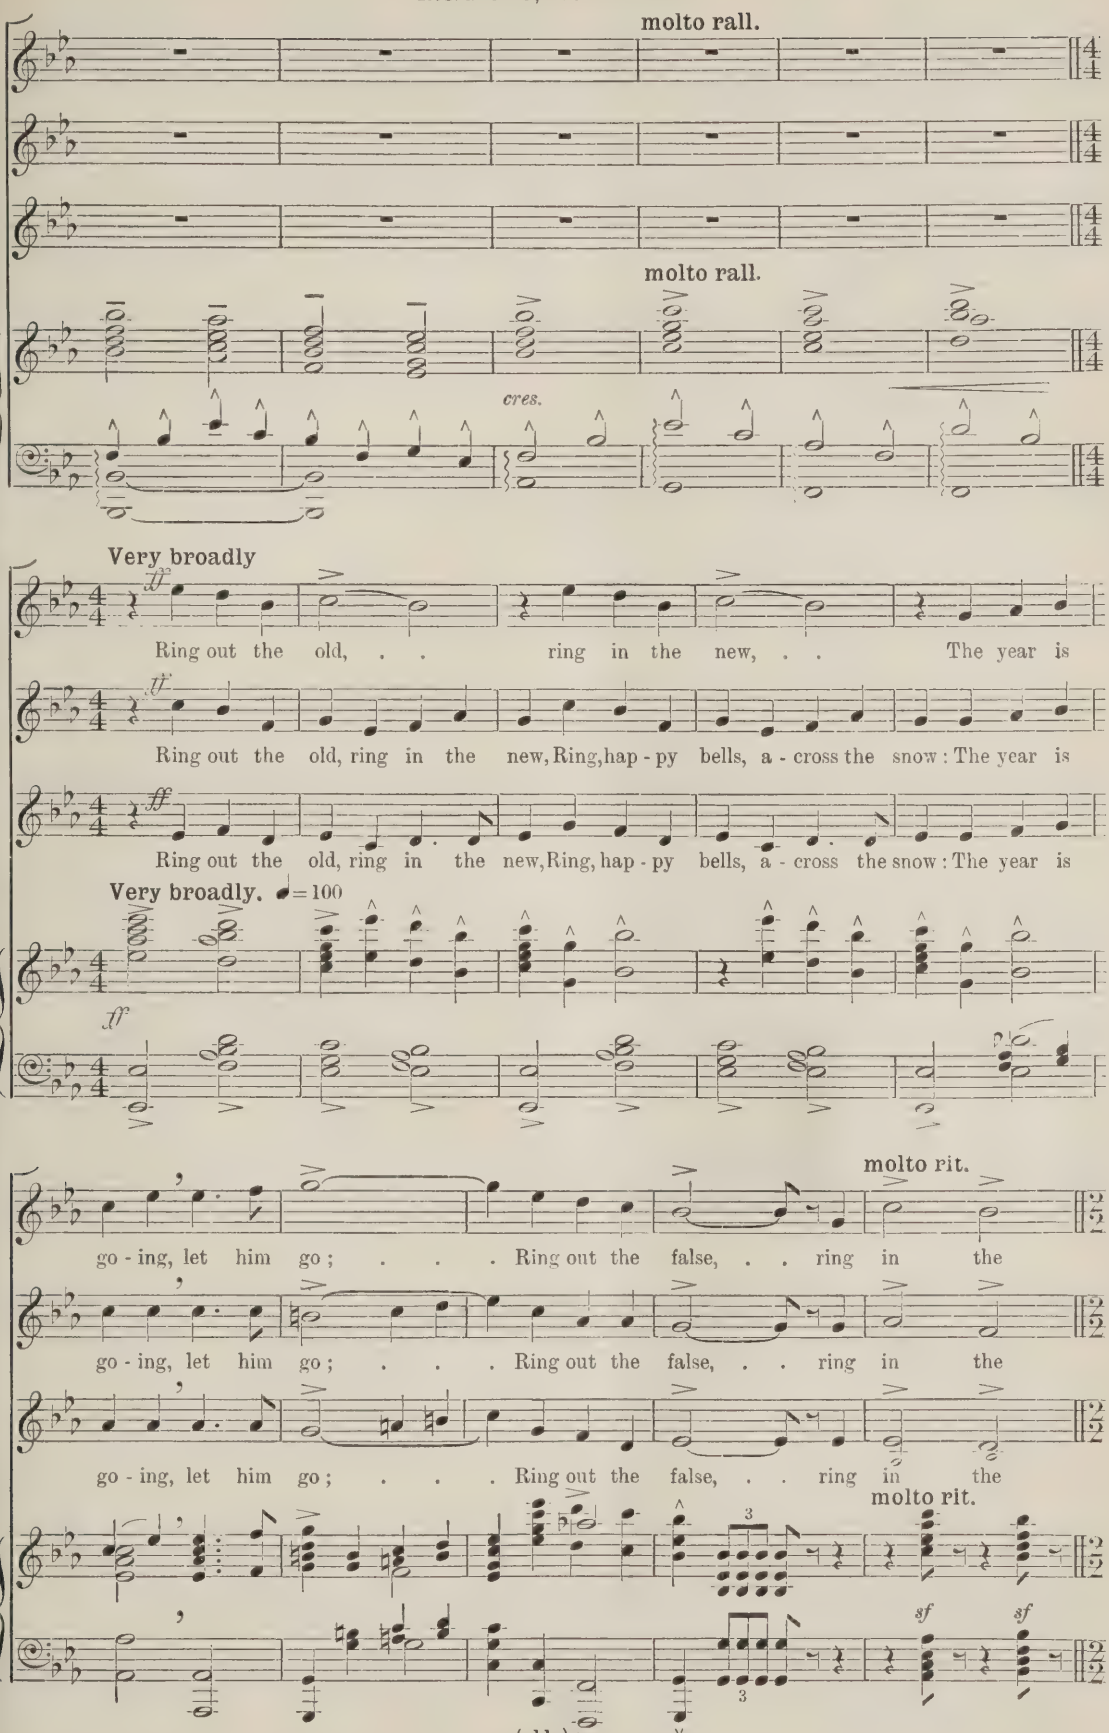
a tempo
Christ . . . . . that is to be. . . .
Christ . . . . . that is to be. . . .
Christ . . . . . that is to be. . . .
a tempo



molto rall.
molto rall.
cres.
Very broadly
ff
Ring out the old, . . ring in the new, . . The year is
ff
Ring out the old, ring in the new, Ring, hap - py bells, a - cross the snow : The year is
ff
Ring out the old, ring in the new, Ring, hap - py bells, a - cross the snow : The year is Very broadly. ♩ = 100
ff
molto rit.
go - ing, let him go; . . . Ring out the false, . . ring in the go - ing, let him go; . . . Ring out the false, . . ring in the go - ing, let him go; . . . Ring out the false, . . ring in the molto rit.
sf sf

Tempo 1mo.
marcato true. . . Ring out the old, . . ring in the marcato
true. Ring out the old, ring in the marcato
true. Ring out the old, ring in the Tempo 1mo.
ff
new. . . . . .
new. . . . . .
new. . . . . .
rit.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 993.—Vol. 66
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

NOVEMBER 1 1925

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1925-1926.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 19, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

MISS DORA LABBETTE.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. JOHN GOSS.

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by the Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM begins on Monday, November 2.

SPECIAL COURSES for the TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS and also for the TRAINING OF TEACHERS, the latter to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, have been arranged. A Junior Department is now open.

CHAMBER CONCERTS, November 2, 18, and 30, at 3.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, November 7 and 21, at 3.

L.R.A.M. CHRISTMAS EXAMINATION. Entries will be accepted up to November 12, on payment of a late fee of 5s.

EMMA LEVY SCHOLARSHIP open to Jewish Pianists. Last day of entry, Monday, December 21.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING. HER MAJESY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., MUS. DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar: E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in December, April, and September. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on Thursday, November 12th, at 1.10 p.m.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)
VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5566.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Aria in F, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, p. 112; Augener, p. 1178; Peters, Vol. 9, No. 8, page 34.)

Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Op. 18, César Franck. No. 3 of Six Pièces d'Orgue. (Durand.)

Bridal March and Finale, "The Birds," C. H. H. Parry. Arranged by W. G. Alcock. Organ Arrangements edited by John E. West. No. 14. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1925.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 10th, for Associateship by December 17th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, Proposal Forms, duly filled up, must be sent in before December 3rd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

FREE LECTURES on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Tuesday, November 3rd, at 4 p.m., by SIR WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc. Subject: "Rhythm in Church and Choir Practice." Chairman: Prof. C. H. KITSON, M.A., Mus. Doc.: and at 6.30, by MR. STANLEY ROPER, B.A., Mus. B., Organist of H.M. Chapel Royal, St. James's. Subject: "The Training of Boys' Voices." Chairman: DR. H. W. RICHARDS, President of the College. No tickets required.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.
Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

THE MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

Founded 1874. Incorporated 1904.
President:
DR. CHARLES WOOD, M.A., Prof. Music, Cambridge University.

FIFTY-SECOND SESSION, 1925-26.

Meetings before Christmas.

Nov. 3rd.—"Music for Two Pianos," by Mr. A. M. HENDERSON, L.R.A.M., with illustrations by the lecturer and MR. WILFRID SENIOR.
Dec. 1st.—"Spanish Madrigals," by MR. J. P. TREND, M.A., with illustrations by the English Singers.

Prospectus and terms of Membership on application to the Secretary,
J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., F.R.A.M., 12, Longley Road, S.W.17.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).
Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 10th, 1926.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).
Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 3rd, 1926.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. Claud Biggs.

New Professor of Singing, Miss Marguerite Swale.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

16, ALBERT SQUARE.
Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:

MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1925-26.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS,

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1924-1925.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20): WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11): SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1925: WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, Mus. B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

President; A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Frequent Students' Concerts. Free Scholarships. Prospectus from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS, THREE GUINEAS.

Personal Lessons if desired.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint, and deals with it in clear and informant fashion. Cannot fail to be of service to the earnest seeker after improvement in pianoforte playing."

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., ETC.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON; AND 32, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

GRESHAM COLLEGE, Basinghall Street, E.C.2.

FOUR LECTURES ON MUSIC.

BY SIR WALFORD DAVIES,

at 6 p.m., on

NOVEMBER 2. The Perfect Fourth from Hucbald to Holst.
" 3. The Community of Six Chords (continued).
" 4. Key and Mode.
" 5. Nine Notes and Ten Chords.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH, HAMPSTEAD.

SPECIAL ORGAN RECITAL

TO COMMEMORATE THE ARMISTICE ANNIVERSARY,
On WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 11th, at 8 o'clock.
The Programme will include: Allegretto, 7th Sym. (Beethoven); Threnody, "Elegiac" Sym. (Kingston); "The Last Post" and "In Memoriam" Overture (Sullivan), &c., &c.
Vocal Solos by Miss FORDHAM, assisted by the Church Choir.
Organist: MR. M. KINGSTON, B. Mus. Cantab.

ORGAN RECITAL

BY

MR. ARCHIBALD FARMER, F.R.C.O.,

AT

ST. JOHN'S WOOD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
MARLBOROUGH PLACE, N.W.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 28TH, AT 5.30 P.M.

Nearest station, Marlborough Road (Met.),
'Buses Nos. 2, 13, 48, 53a, 153.

South London Philharmonic Society.

Conductor: WILLIAM H. KERRIDGE.

VACANCIES FOR
TENORS AND BASSES.
Also, in Orchestral Section, for WOOD-WIND, BRASS, AND BASS STRINGS.

REHEARSALS: Choral, Wednesdays. Orchestral, Tuesdays.

PRINCIPAL WORKS:
"Faust" (Berlioz); "Meistersinger" (Wagner);
"Hymn of Jesus" (Holst); "New World" Symphony (Dvorák);
Violin Concerto (Beethoven).

Prospectus from Hon. Org. Sec.,
JOHN W. WATERER, 50*c*, Crooms Hill, S.E.10.

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY.

(Founded 1741.)

The Madrigal Society offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four, nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two treble voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative Part-Writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonized Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz.:

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs.
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least.
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated.
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning.
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, The Oaks, Ashtead Woods, Surrey, on or before February 1st, 1926, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in April, 1926.

STANLEY C. EDGAR, Hon. Secretary,
Ashtead, Surrey, October 8, 1925.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA"

POCKET FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810).

INCREASES STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH.

Editor Musical Times says: "Have no hesitation in recommending."
Improved Model, 2*s*. 6*d*. post free.
"SIMPLEXA," 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

(CHRISTMAS, 1925, and EASTER, 1926).

Candidates entering for the first time, and also those who have failed to pass, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

Dr. Sprankling's system of INDIVIDUAL POSTAL TUITION enables you to study at home, and obtain a grip of everything essential to success in the shortest possible time.

Complete Postal Preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus.Bac., Mus.Doc., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

PERSONAL LESSONS ALSO IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
Address: 46, CLARENDON ROAD,
Telephone: Bristol 3033. REDLAND, BRISTOL.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP Without Keyboard Practising.

NOT the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances render keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard. This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency take my Postal Course.

Many eminent musicians, including the late SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, have used and highly recommended my System—the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM. More than 19,000 Successful Students of all ages add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

MATRIC. - LONDON — DURHAM — DUBLIN.

SUCCESSES - - - - - - - 127

LONDON, September, 1925. - M.C.C. Student PASSES at the 1st ATTEMPT.

1st M.B. - -
September, 1923. 9 PASSED ... 4 were Students of the M.C.C.
March, 1925. 4 „ 2 „ „ „ „
September, 1925. 4 „ 2 „ „ „ „
7 of these Students PASSED at the 1st ATTEMPT.

Final Mus. Bac. - September, 1925. M.C.C. Student PASSES at the 1st ATTEMPT

ONE FEE — BOTH DIPLOMAS.

A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.
A Student PASSES ... F.R.C.O., July, 1925.
1st M.B., September, 1925.

RECENT SUCCESSES ... 26

A. Mus. T.C.L. -
ART OF TEACHING 88%
COUNTERPOINT 93%

L. Mus. T.C.L. - July, 1925. Two Students PASSED. Both M.C.C. Students.
ORCHESTRATION 95%

A.T.C.L. - - ART OF TEACHING 86%

A.R.C.M., XIII. - MUSICAL APPRECIATION. 100 per cent. of Passes.
Entries 3
Successes 3

L.R.A.M. (Singing) A successful Student writes: "I was complimented by the Examiner for my paper on 'Vocal Physiology.'"

A.R.C.M. (Singing) "Your course may be summed up in one word, 'MODERN.'"

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte) September, 1925. A successful Student writes: "The papers on Musical Form, Art of Teaching, Phrasing, Fingering, and Questions on Touch, cover completely what is required at the Examination. The System of marking adopted by you is also most satisfactory: every correction is written out distinctly and clearly, so that every one can understand."

IMPORTANT TO YOU.

1. We give NAME OF EXAM.; DATE OF EXAM.; RESULTS.
2. We do not mix up successes by Private Tuition with Correspondence Successes.
3. Postal Tuition with the M.C.C. is not a side-line to be taken up in SPARE TIME, but our SOLE CONCERN.

WE DO NOT GUARANTEE SUCCESS except through HARD WORK.

FREE - - GUIDE TO MATRIC., MUS. BAC., ETC.
Please state Exam.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

THROUGH THE POST

IS it too much to say that a quarter or even a third of our newspapers is given up to advertisements? The full significance of this is probably a matter that never claims our attention; we take it for granted as a feature of modern life and trade. But looking at it a little closer we shall reach the conclusion that, for all the multitudinous articles advertised for sale, many purchasers can never get into touch with the sellers except

THROUGH THE POST.

I remember finding myself once in a remote part of the British Isles, and the friend I had living there exhibited a motor coat bought by correspondence in response to the advertisement of a London firm. Of course, a garment like this does not demand the delicacy of fit which is necessary in a suit coat, but I am told that even here alterations can be indicated and successfully carried out. Now the teaching of the Pianoforte "through the post" is just the kind of thing that requires to be an "exact fit," and therefore it is essential you should choose the system which ensures you a teacher with whom you can correspond, and not merely an official who will post you the next lesson.

This system you will find if you study with

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, through the unique

CORRESPONDENCE COURSE

where every pupil's work is individually and personally supervised by Mr. Gillett. The course of study includes Technique founded on the modern application of WEIGHT TOUCH, a method which has proved so successful in the production of good tone, as well as instruction in the necessary matters of Memorising, Sight-Reading, Pedalling, &c.

PERSONAL LESSONS AND CONSULTATIONS DAY AND EVENING.

Write or call for further particulars:

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

BATTERSEA POLYTECHNIC, LONDON, S.W.11.

(Within easy access of Victoria, Battersea Park, Clapham Junction, and Queen's Road Stations, Southern Railway).

PRINCIPAL ... ... ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.
HEAD OF MUSIC DEPARTMENT ... H. DAVAN WETTON, D.Mus., F.R.C.O.

ORGAN RECITALS

WEDNESDAYS, AT 8 P.M.

NOVEMBER 4th. G. THALBEN BALL, F.R.C.O.,
Organist and Director of the Choir, Temple Church.

NOVEMBER 11th. HAROLD DARKE, D.Mus.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Michael's, Cornhill.

NOVEMBER 18th. H. DAVAN WETTON, D.Mus.
Organist and Director of Music, Foundling Hospital.

ADMISSION, INCLUDING TAX, 1*s.* SERIES TICKET, 2*s.* 6*d.*

Tickets can be obtained at the Polytechnic either before or on the Recital evenings.

ARE YOU NOTE PERFECT WITHOUT MUSIC?

Thousands of promising musicians have failed to achieve the success they deserved through their inability to trust their memory.

If you can play the Piano, Violin, 'Cello, or Organ at all from the music, I guarantee by the

MASTER-METHOD
OF MEMORY-PLAYING

to teach you in a short correspondence course to play your instrument from memory with ease, certainty, and accuracy. Your memory need no longer be a handicap to your progress.

My booklet, which is sent free and post free, deals with the fascinating subject of memorising music, and tells you how in a remarkably short time you can master this dreaded weakness. Send a post card to-day, stating which instrument you play.

NO KNOWLEDGE OF HARMONY REQUIRED.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,

19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

RIVARDE SCHOOL
OF
VIOLIN PLAYING.

The Rivarde School is under the personal supervision of Achille Rivarde, F.R.C.M., and gives all violinists an opportunity of obtaining a complete course of training in the Rivarde Methods of Pure Tone Production and Left-Hand Technique.

ENSEMBLE PLAYING.

Particular attention given to children.

In response to numerous requests, Achille Rivarde has prepared a Correspondence Course on his Methods of Violin Playing.

The Course contains a complete exposition of his scientifically demonstrable methods of Pure Tone Production and Principles of Left-Hand Technique, together with a special series of photographs, illustrating the various Lessons.

Write for full particulars to

MISS AGNES SKALLY, Secretary,

The Rivarde School of Violin Playing,

1A, CHENISTON GARDENS, LONDON, W.8.

'Phone: Western 6653.

PIANOFORTE RECITAL-LECTURES.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

(Mus. Doc., Lond.).

For vacant dates, &c., apply,

46, CLARENDON ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."

"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES,

including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),

undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.

8, THE RIDGWAY, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

FAMOUS MUSICIANS PRAISE THE MACKINNON MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE.

MISS MYRA HESS
the famous Pianist, writes:

"It is my opinion that Miss Mackinnon has produced a memorising method of real value. It is based on her own wide experience, and gives evidence of most careful observation and profound thinking. Her instructions and advice cover the ground to a remarkable degree, especially perhaps her remarks about the attitude of mind which is likely to contribute to success in public performance. Her work should help to solve many of the difficulties which all artists and amateurs have to encounter, and I hope it will become widely known."

(Signed) MYRA HESS.

DR. ADRIAN C. BOULT
the famous Conductor, writes:

"We musicians are not usually supposed to be very well endowed with common sense—and it is therefore a great pleasure to find so eminent a performer as Miss Lilias Mackinnon has been the author of so sensible a work as her Memory Course. I have been through the Course carefully, and it seems to me most valuable and comprehensive. I am certain that there are few, if any, who cannot learn a great deal from it, since it combines the results of a wide musical experience with an application of fundamental psychological principles."

(Signed) ADRIAN C. BOULT.

LITERALLY hundreds of pianists, both professional and amateur, have learned to memorise through the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course. Very many of these had previously been unable to memorise the simplest piece—others had suffered from nervousness to such an extent that they were quite unable to play to an audience—others again had been able to memorise quickly but unable to retain any piece in the memory for a long period. All found the complete solution of their difficulties in the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course.

The Course consists of:

SIX CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS

The Fee is - £3 : 3 : 0

There are no extras, 15 minutes daily practice only is required. Teachers, Students, Concert-givers, can easily fit in the course with their ordinary work.

You run no risk of disappointment in taking the course—for under the guarantee your fee is returned without question if your memory fails to improve after the first lesson. Fill up the COUPON below and send for Free Booklet to-day.

COUPON.

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
EMPIRE HOUSE,
175, PICCADILLY, W.1.

Please send me free and post free your Booklet on Memory Training.

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss)

.....

Address.....

.....

A few of the many enthusiastic letters received from pupils last month, all entirely unsolicited:

"Have found your Memory System the greatest benefit, especially when performing in public. Will recommend to all my friends."

"Delighted with results."

"Highly delighted with your wonderful explanations."

"I am simply delighted with them [first three lessons] and feel quite proud of being able to play Scriabin from memory. I may tell you that my sight-reading has improved, also my technique."

GUARANTEE.

You risk nothing in taking this Course, for under this guarantee your money is returned if you fail to make immediate progress.

If within four weeks of the receipt of the first lesson and, before the receipt of the second, any student should find that no progress has been made as a result of taking the Course, Miss Mackinnon will unconditionally refund all fees received from such student.

MR. CHARLES TREE

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION," 5*s.* 2*d.* post free.

"BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 3*s.* 7*d* post free.
(If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Mr. Vincent Clegg, Burnley, October 2, 1925.—"I have toured with the Moody-Manners and Quinlan Opera Companies, but for the past six years have been teaching singing. I candidly own that though I was supposed to have had good training and had read many books on the subject, your books have done more for me than all the lot. I wish to heaven I could have had similar instruction twenty-five years ago. Last year my pupils won 6 prizes at the Blackpool Festival."

Charles Tree, Bolton Mansions Hotel, London, S.W.5.

ALBERT GARCIA'S

VOCAL STUDIO.

59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.

PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices, so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone, from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING" has recently been edited and revised from the original edition by ALBERT GARCIA.
Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland Street, W.1. Price 6*s.*

THE TECHNIQUER

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

FOR FLEXING, STRENGTHENING,
STRETCHING, and DEVELOPING THE HANDS.

Send for testimony of LAMOND, POUISHNOFF, FRYER, REDDIE, and many other eminent musicians. The Techniquer is now being extensively used for the treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis, and Hand Paralysis. See The Morning Post of August 7.

Treatise on "Hand Development," with photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Full particulars from the Secretary—
MISS F. J. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: Maida Vale 1715.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.

A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:

SOLO-PLAYING.	SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION.	ACCOMPANIMENT.
ESSAY.	(With list of 75 Solos.)

3*s.* each. 10*s.* 6*d.* the set.

These papers will help to secure for you the few extra marks often necessary to turn failure into success.

Send stamped, addressed envelope for fuller particulars.

"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.
London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

BRITISH SCREEN MUSIC SOCIETY.

(Under Distinguished Patronage.)

British Composers are earnestly advised to write for the Screen. Information on application (enclosing stamp) to
THE CONTROLLER, Film Music Studios,
Wallshill Bungalow Theatre, Babbacombe, Torquay.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. MCEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

LICENTIATESHIP EXAMINATION.

SEPTEMBER, 1925.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SINGING.—As TEACHERS: Arthur Albert Dodd, Dolan Evans, John Dawson Hands, Cyril Norris Hartshorn, Tom Lewis, Florence Miriam Ling, James Moodie, Lucretia Gertrude Mary Oldham, Ada Louisa Pickles, Doris Gwendolen Powell, Owen Menai Price, Ellenita Ruth Tomlinson.

As PERFORMERS: Winifred Batty, Gertrude Beresford, Jenny Booth, Henry Crowther, Elsie Elliott, Gwendolene Maude Embley, Mary Elizabeth Jennings, Alice Millicent Livesey, Victoria Pickering, Florence Gertrude Stockil, Sarah Irene Thomas, Sarah Edna Tweddle, Phyllis Westby, Norah Wiggins, Scottie Williams.

EXAMINERS: Ethel Bilsland, Maurice D'Oisly, Thomas Meux, Arthur Thompson.

PIANOFORTE.—As TEACHERS: Adeline F. Armstrong, Jean Margaret Atkinson (Easter, 1925), Alma Margaret Austin, Doris Barker, Christina Doris Barton, Phyllis Bath, Florence Beanland, Frederick William Beaver, Lawrence Lindsay Charles Bleach, Marjorie Constance May Bloese, Eily Nadine Bolton, Adelaide Margaret Brett, Pamela M. L. Brett, Ivy Brunskill, Jessie Mabel Brymer, Dora Butterworth, Ena Calder, Lucy Vera Carrick, Primrose Cobb, Helen J. Cordiner (Easter, 1925), Cyril Stanley Christopher, Edna Scott Craig, Lilian Kathleen Dahl, Dorothy Marie Dollin, Grace Annie Dorban, Frances Elizabeth Dunkley, Evelyn Jessie Dupont, Irene Mary Ellis, Gertrude Mary Elsey, Marjorie Elsley, Florence Mabel Fearnley, Yvonne Fearnley, Grace Lucy Fishlock, Edith May Fitzjohn, Arthur Fozzard, William Abraham Gill, Frieda G. Gordon, Annie Hadley, Frederick William Victor Handley, Olive Hannah Harding, Lilian Heath, A. Evelyn Herbert, Barbara May Hodge, Mary Joan Hollingdale, Sadie Irwin, Edward Jackson, Enid Frances Evelyn Johnson, Gertrude Annie Kellett, Hilda Mary Keyte, Beryl Stuart King, Idwal L. Kinsey, Florence Lilian Kislingbury, Leila Margaret Langerman, Hilda Doris Vera Lewis, Kirsty Forrest MacLennan, Phyllis Gertrude Manger, Annie Doris Manley, Daisy Manley, Hilda Marshall, Violet Eileen Massimo, Margaret Mather, Freda Mehew, A. Monteith Michael, Earnest Miller, Helen Naylor, Marjory Nicoll, Ellen Emma Palmer, Muriel Gwendoline Pattison, Elizabeth Mary Payton, Bessie Marian Peal, Marjorie Perrett, Ursula May Perry, Doris Muriel Petty, Violet Dorothy Pleming, Aileen Marian Pownall, George Campbell Reay-Hartnell, Elizabeth Renwick, Lilian Rickman, Eugene Patrick Ring, Linda Isabell Rowe, Ethel May Royle, James Harvey Scott, Kathleen Scruby, Beryl Grace Shepherd, Mary Slingsby, Agnes Johnstone Smart, Catherine T. Smith, Evelyn Smith, Janet Snowdon, Beryl Audrey Taylor, Bernard Thomas Oldbury Tonks, John Adolphe Trotman, Flora Edith Wall, Charles Noel Walton, Mary Wareing, Dorothy Westby, Elsie Mercy Whitehead, Gordon Whittaker, Alice Marjorie Wilkinson, Elsa Joan Williams, William Stuart Wilson, Elizabeth A. Bottomley Wise.

EXAMINERS: Cave. Carlo Albanesi, Victor G. Booth, York Bowen, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, Thomas B. Knott, Frederick Moore, John Pauer, Charles F. Reddie, Felix Swinstead, Percy Waller, Cuthbert Whitemore.

ORGAN.—Irvine Willis Johnson.

EXAMINERS: G. D Cunningham, Stanley Marchant, Mus. D. Oxon., Reginald Steggall.

ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS.—VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS: Floyd Elsie Edmunds, Mildred Firth.

As PERFORMERS: Irene Buckingham, Dorothy Macpherson.

VIOLONCELLO.—As PERFORMER: Brenda Hales.

EXAMINERS: Spencer Dyke, James T. Lockyer, B. Patterson Parker, Lionel Tertis, E. Rowsby Woof.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.—Jennie Davies, William J. Gaze.

EXAMINERS: Julius Harrison, Welton Hickin, Montagu Phillips Cuthbert Whitemore.

AURAL TRAINING and SIGHT-SINGING: Leah Elizabeth Barnard, Mrs. Isobel Barrett-Watson (née Swan), Louisa Blackburn, Dorothy Evelyn Ling, Winifred Edith Long, Dorothy Maud Smith.

EXAMINERS: Arthur J. Greenish, Mus. D. Cantab., Ernest Read, Frederick G. Shinn, Mus. D. Dunelm.

VOICE CULTURE and CLASS SINGING.—Louisa Everett Bell.

EXAMINERS: Arthur J. Greenish, Mus. D. Cantab., Stewart Macpherson, Stanley Marchant, Mus. D. Oxon.

ELOCUTION.—As TEACHERS: Frances Davies, Catherine Hollingworth, Dorothy Gladys Jacobs, Jessie Kathleen Parrott.

As PERFORMER: Frederick Arthur Baker.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton-Bond, Wilton Cole, Constance Newell, Katie Thomas.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED DENHAM.
SOPRANO.
"A voice of pleasing freshness and flexibility."—Daily Chronicle.
"A clear, well produced voice—exceedingly well sung."—Musical Standard.
41, Avondale Road, South Croydon.

JOHN HENDERSON (BARITONE).
For Oratorio, Masonic (Lodges), Concerts, &c.
Press Notices, &c.,
"Hazeldene," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.
Telephone: Willesden, 170.

ELIZABETH MELLOR
(L.R.A.M.). SOPRANO.
CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, OPERA, Etc.
(Royal Albert Hall and Central Hall Concerts, and Provinces).
Pupils received for Voice Production and Singing.
West-End Studio.
Letters, c/o Central Hall, Westminster, London

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

EVELYNE KING
(L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.). CONTRALTO
Concerts, Recitals, At Homes, &c.
Oratorio. BACH a speciality.
All Modern and Standard Works.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
WEST-END STUDIOS.
For Lessons or Vacant Dates, apply,
117, Hampstead Way, Golders Green, N.W.11.
'Phone: Speedwell 2209.

HORACE CURTIS
TENOR.
ORATORIO, WORKS, REQUIEMS, Etc.
99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12.
'Phone: Streatham 5246.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR.
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR.
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, Etc.
93, Kelvin Road, Highbury, N.5.

EDWARD REACH
TENOR,
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, Etc.
12, Maybury Street, London, S.W.17.

MILLARD THOMPSON
(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.
17, Forest View Road, Highams Park, E.17.

JAMES CAPERN
BASS-BARITONE.
Cleeve, Parkside Drive, Watford. Telephone: Watford 531.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

ARTHUR LEES
BASS.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
58, Marmion Road, Hove, Sussex.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.)
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Bookings include "Rebel Maid," "Hiawatha,"
"Songs of the Fleet," &c.
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. Hounslow 1536.

TOM LLOYD (L.R.A.M.)
BASS-BARITONE
For BROCHURE, VACANT DATES, Etc.,
apply
15, Claughton Firs, Oxton, Birkenhead.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

R. ARNOLD GREIR
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
Organist to the Royal Choral Society, London.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
2, Highview Road, West Ealing, W.13. Ealing 201.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma),
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).
The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.
Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.
Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.
Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing.
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1, and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

EVERARD C. VAN-ESSEN,
OBOE AND COR ANGLAIS (High and Low Pitch).
Oratorios, Choral and Orchestral Concerts, Opera, &c.
10, The Avenue, Grove Park, Lee, London, S.E.12.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,
L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and MUS. D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES :—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-25 ... 277 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-25 ... 75 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES :

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. — Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

J. C. BRYDSON, MUS. B. (Dunelm.). Correspondence Coach. Special "Elementary Guinea Course." Kegworth, Derby.

THOMAS CARPENTER, L.R.A.M., L.T.C.L., Specialises in preparation for Associated Board (Pianoforte) Exams. (Primary to Final Grade.) Also short Postal Courses in Rudiments and Harmony. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes: 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount Pontefract, Yorks.

EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., CORRESPONDENCE COACH, R.C.O., R.A.M. Exams., &c. "Zelgart," Harborough Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

SINGING (Italian method), and ELOCUTION LESSONS. MME. ROSA GLYN, Medallist L.A.M., gives lessons at pupils' houses or her Studio, London, W. "A. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

DR. A.G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus Bac. passes. Also 1st Mus. Bac. pass. Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925, Both Mus. Doc. passes in 1924. 170 Successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

PIANO LESSONS.—Tobias Matthay's Method taught by ELIZABETH LEVY, L.R.A.M., GOLD MEDALLIST, at pupils' houses or her own Studio, 52, Fairhazel Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.6.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High Street, W.8.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto; F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

PREPARATION L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all Associated Board Exams. 1925 Successes include 5 L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte). Courses of study, or single lessons, arranged at home or West End. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony. Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

ALFRED MORRIS, L. Mus. T.C.L., Specialist in Postal Tuition, Harmony, Counterpoint, &c., assures each student personal attention. Preparation for Diplomas. Model workings Moderate terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

POSTAL TUITION, R.C.O., T.C.L., R.A.M.— Special Hints for Essay, Aural Tests, Art of Teaching, &c. H. Taylor, A.R.C.O. A.Mus. T.C.L., 10, South Street, Manchester.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Several recent successes in all these examinations.
R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."
SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

273 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
169 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. EXTEMPORIZATION.

A Special Course of five lessons has been devised with a view to showing candidates how to obtain design, development, cohesion, and unity, thus avoiding the aimless, incoherent wandering from one key to another, which is so often heard.
Many candidates who have adopted the suggestions contained in these lessons have been successful in the organ tests.
Further particulars will be sent on application.

DR. PERCY WOOD, MUS. DOC., OXON., F.R.C.O.,
"TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte); A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas; also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

WELL-KNOWN CHOIRMASTER who supplies Solo Boys of his own training to Churches all round London, and in the Provinces, is willing to impart his system of training boys' voices to others, for a nominal fee. It is extremely simple, and never fails. Highest personal testimonials from Bishops, Clergy, and eminent Church Musicians, which will be forwarded. Write "Choirmaster," c/o Willings, 119, Moorgate, E.C.2.

CHORAL SCHOLARSHIPS offered to Boys for the Choir of St. Clement Danes, Strand. Apply to the Rector.

ALTO WANTED. £20. West-End Church. Apply, "H. R.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ST. ALBAN'S, Holborn. WANTED AT ONCE; MALE ALTO, accustomed to Mass Music. Duties: Sundays, and Holy Days. Salary, £40. Write, "Organist," 23, Midhurst Avenue, Muswell Hill, N.10.

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.

There is a VACANCY for a TENOR LAY-CLERK. Applicants must be communicant members of the Church of England. Stipend, £100 per annum. Applications, with three recent testimonials (one to include reference to sight-reading) to The Chapter Clerk, 16, High Street, Worcester.

PARISH CHURCH, Stoke Newington. TENOR WANTED. £20. Apply by letter to Norman Collie, 52, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, N.16

TENOR DESIRES APPOINTMENT. Professional Singer. "E. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EXETER CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There will shortly be a vacancy for a BASS. Salary, £145. Candidates must be Members of the Church of England. Good sight-reading essential, previous experience desirable. Applications, stating age, with copies of not more than three recent testimonials, should be sent to the Rev. The Succentor, The Close, Exeter.

BASS WANTED. £15 to £18. West Acton Parish Church. Write, A. Henry, 36, Marquess Road, Canonbury, N.1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Kelvinside U.F. Church, Glasgow. Salary, £150 per annum. Reply by letter, with copies of testimonials, to W. M. Galbraith, 87, St. Vincent Street, Glasgow.

THE ORGANIST of St. John-the-Baptist, Holland Road, W., has a VACANCY for an ARTICLED PUPIL. Anglo-Catholic. Write, J. Hurst Bannister, 9, Luxemburg Gardens, Brook Green, W.6.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital (1,880th) at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C., on November 3rd, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

CHELSEA POLYTECHNIC, MANRESA RD., S.W.3.
PART-TIME DIRECTOR OF MUSIC.

The Governing Body are about to appoint a part-time Director of Music in succession to Mr. Seymour Dicker.
The duties include general direction of the Music Department, lecturing, individual instruction in Organ, Piano, and Singing, and tutorial guidance and help to students. A fixed salary of £250 has been assigned to the post.
Forms of application (which must be returned not later than 16th November) may be obtained by sending a stamped, addressed foolscap envelope to the Secretary.

THE DIRECTOR OF MUSIC at a Public School DESIRES the ASSISTANCE of a young musician for Piano Teaching. Salary. A premium must be paid in return for highly specialized instruction in practical Piano Teaching to boys and others. "N. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANO or SINGING TEACHING CONNECTION WANTED. "X. Y. Z.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TEACHER OF PIANOFORTE (Gentleman), A.R.C.O., L.T.C.L. desires appointment one or two mornings weekly as teacher. School preferred. Apply "A. N.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LADY, Excellent Accompanist, Sight-reader, wants engagements, or practice, professional or amateur. Moderate Terms. Firmin, 84, Engadine Street, Southfields, S.W.18.

PIANIST (gentleman), extensive musical education, DESIRES ENGAGEMENTS, evenings. Write, "S. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS, melodies effectively harmonized and arranged by experienced Reviser-Composer. Write, A. E. Holdaway, 30, Turret Grove, Clapham, London, S.W.4.

PIANOFORTE TUNING LESSONS GIVEN. Postal or personal. Write for Prospectus, Terms, and Testimonials. W. Cawson, Piano Tuner, 117, Armley Road, Leeds.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

CHAMBER ORGAN by Hill & Son, 6 stops, pedal board, sliding manual, swell, hand or foot blown. Ready for erecting. Reasonable price. Seen by appointment. Richards, Hamilton House, Eastbourne.

RARE OPPORTUNITY—BARGAIN PRICE. Holt Three-Manual Pedal ORGAN. 33 Stops, Church Organ Console. Seen London. "L. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—OVERSTRUNG BOUDOIR GRAND, by Förster, of Saxony. Practically new. Cost 200 gns. Would sell at reasonable reduction and take upright in part payment. Mallecci, 17, Forest View Road, Highams Park, E.17.

FOR SALE.—BECHSTEIN UPRIGHT, in excellent condition. £75, or best offer. Mrs. Ferens, 3, Grove Road, Flat H, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.8.

ANGELUS PLAYER-PIANO for SALE, splendid tone, equal to new, fine instrument; also music cabinet, music rolls, and stool, all to match. A bargain. Write, "Angelus," c/o Deacon's, Fenchurch Avenue, E.C.3.

ORGAN PRACTICE.—1*s.* 4*d.* an hour, or 6*s.* a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6.

HARP FOR SALE.—Erard, good condition. Fine tone. £25. 16, Ranelagh Avenue, Barnes, S.W.13.

TO MANUFACTURERS Stringed Musical Instruments. The Proprietor of Patent No. 184,809 desires to enter into negotiations for grant of licenses to manufacture on royalty or otherwise, or treat for sale of Patent outright. Particulars furnished by A. M. & Wm. Clark, 53 & 54, Chancery Lane, W.C.2.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMS.
A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., &c.

(a) Outline of Course of Instruction (lists of Technical Exercises, books of Studies, Pieces), 5*s.*
(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5*s.*
(c) Two Special Test-Papers (including correction), 5*s.* each.
"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL REPAIR FUND.

Dr. Bennett will be glad of the loan of any Orchestral Music (mainly for strings), suitable for use in Early English Pageant, in aid of above Fund. Address: North Place, Lincoln.

BACH'S ORGAN WORKS, complete Griepenkerl (Peters) Edition. Exceptionally fine copy. Eight books bound in five volumes. Offers. Organist, Somersby, Berrymoor, Banbury.

ORGAN MUSIC, Rheinberger, &c. Piano Music, Grieg, &c. 168, Ivydale Road, Peckham.

BRAHMS' SEXTET.—Complete analysis with Themes, 5*s.* Solutions of F.R.C.O. Exam. Paper, July, 1925 (accepted by examiners), showing style required to pass Fellowship, 10*s.* 6*d.* "W. P. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR S.A.T.B. "The Clansmen" (2nd thousand), 4*d.*; Sol-fa, 2*d.* "Now let prayer and music meet" (Ave), 3*d.*; Sol-fa, 2*d.* Effective Part-Songs by T. W. Blakey.
London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS, Key F. By Charles Ward. Price 4*d.* 1st 1000 copies only, half-price to Advertise. Ward, 79, Town Street, Armley, Leeds.

TENORS should buy set of 2 Songs: "I think on thee in the night," and "Absence" (Oakley). Compass, E♭ to G. Price 2*s.* the Set; also "Who is Sylvia" (Oakley). Compass E to G. Price 2*s.* Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1*s.* (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

WHAT OFFERS for ARNOLD'S CATHEDRAL MUSIC, large folio; Full Scores, "Messiah," and "St. Paul," folio; Hawkins's History Music; English Minstrelsie, Vols. 1-8; and Madrigals, Old English Edition? 25 Numbers. &c. Particulars, Revell, 3 Fons George Road, Taunton.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1926), on the book "WILLIAM BYRD," 12 MODEL ESSAYS, with valuable hints. 1st Series of 6 Essays, 4*s.* 6*d.*; 2nd Series of 6 Essays, 4*s.* 6*d.* Send P.O. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4*s.* 6*d.* to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—59 Vols. (1 to 35, bound) of Musical News. No reasonable offer refused. Lamerton, L.T.C.L., Hillside, Bodmin.

SECOND-HAND GLEES, ETC., FOR SALE. Apply, "Organist," St. Agnes, Whitehall Road, Chingford.

DONT'S FOR CHOIRMASTERS. "Brimful of sound advice." "Sound practical advice pungently expressed." DONT'S FOR CHURCH ORGANISTS. 2nd edition. Considerably enlarged. 1*s.*, post, 2*d.*, of Heffer, 4, Petty Cury, Cambridge.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. 1*s.* 8*d.* Illustrated! Method thoroughly explained. Invaluable to Conductors and progressive Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. Bandmaster M. T. Cooper, 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

MUSIC BY MAIL.

EVERYTHING IN MUSIC.—Vocal, Instrumental, Educational, British and Foreign. Largest Stock in London. Murdochs, 23, Princes Street, Oxford Circus; and 463, Oxford Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

TO COMPOSERS.—A Music Traveller at your service. Write, "Music," Times Office, Torquay.

HAROLD REEVES

H. R. occupies an Unique Position in the Music and Book world. Extensive premises and staff are devoted entirely to the supply of Music and Musical Literature. Old and Rare, Second-hand and New. Catalogues as follows, post free, to any part of the World.

No. 60. Miscellaneous Second-hand Music of all kinds. Musical Text-Books, Hymn Books, Musical Periodicals.
No. 59. Bargain Catalogue of Music.
No. 58. Old, Rare, and Interesting Musical Works, Harpsichord Music, Old Treatises and Histories, Early Instrumental Music, &c.
No. 56. Music by Classical and Modern Composers all in New Condition, Books on Music and Musicians in fine Bindings for Presentation.
No. 55. A List of over 1000 Miniature Scores of Standard Classical and Modern Orchestral Works, Operas, Chamber Music, &c.
No. 52. Books on Music, Musicians, and Musical Instruments in all Languages, Biographies, Dictionaries, Histories, Letters, Criticisms, &c.

Call and Inspect the remarkable stock displayed by Harold Reeves. 'Phone or write for anything you are wanting. Libraries supplied. Music and Books about Music sent to all parts of the World.

HAROLD REEVES
210, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.C.2, ENGLAND.
(New Oxford Street end, next to Princes Theatre.)
'Phone: Gerrard 8398.

Music and Books

at Great Reductions.

Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.

New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.

Music and Books Purchased.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

"THE CHOIR AND MUSICAL JOURNAL."

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS FOR NOVEMBER.

THE HISTORY AND ASSOCIATIONS OF THE "OLD HUNDREDTH" (continued).
HANDEL AND MATTHESON.
ADELAIDE ANNE PROCTER (Centenary).
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS.
CENTENARY OF A FAMOUS SCOTTISH SINGER.
MUSIC SUPPLEMENT: ANTHEM, "BEFORE THE DAWN." By W. G. Woodcock.

Monthly, Fourpence. Annual Subscription, 5*s.*
"The Choir" Office, 25-35, City Road, London, E.C.1.

Highly Efficient Organ Blowing.

AN INTERESTING BOOKLET WHICH HAS BEEN WRITTEN BY EXPERTS IS AVAILABLE POST FREE UPON APPLICATION TO

TELEPHONE: NORTH 2039.

WATKINS & WATSON,

DISCUS WORKS,
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

OXFORD MUSIC

The following are among the additions made to the Music List in October:

Songs

By R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS	s.	d.
'Four Poems by Fredegond Shove' ...	3	6
'Three Poems by Walt Whitman' ...	3	6
By BERNARD VAN DIEREN
Balow—French and English words ...	3	0
Levana (de Quincey)—ditto	3	0
Sonetto VII. of Spenser's Amoretti (For voice and 11 instruments) ...	4	0
By PETER WARLOCK
Four English Songs of the Seventeenth Century	3	6

Chamber Music

By WILLEM PIJPER
Trio No. 2 (violin, 'cello, and piano) ...	6	6
Sonata No. 2 ('cello and piano)	5	0
Sonata No. 2 (violin and piano)	5	0

Small Orchestral Series

The 'Giant' Fugue (Bach), arranged by R. Vaughan Williams and Arnold Foster.

Score, 2*s.* 6*d.*, Parts, 4*d.* each.

Prelude from 'English' Suite No. 5 (Bach), arranged by Gerrard Williams.

Score, 4*s.* 6*d.*, Parts, 6*d.* and 4*d.* each

Oxford Piano Series

A new library edited by A. FORBES MILNE

Ten new numbers, including works by Martin Shaw, Percival Driver, Colin Taylor, Arthur Baynon, &c. From 1*s.* each

Oxford Choral Songs

Eighteen new numbers, including songs by E. J. Moeran, Peter Warlock, H. G. Ley, Vaughan Thomas, &c.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMEN HOUSE, E.C.4, AND 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."
—Musical Times.

ANTHEMS: The Desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.) ... ... 3d.

PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SHEPHERDS AND THE MAGI

BY

DR. CYRIL BOWDLER

FOR CHRISTMAS AND THE EPIPHANY,

Being the narrative from the Holy Scriptures, together with hymns from various sources. Time: Part I. (Story of the Shepherds), 25 minutes. Part II. (Story of the Magi), 15 minutes.

¶This beautiful and devotional setting is suitable for mixed Choirs and Parish Church Choirs who require a musicianly and most melodious work.

PRICE 2*s.*

Words and Hymn Tunes, 22*s.* 6*d.* per 100.
Words only, 15*s.* per 100.

CHRISTMAS EVE

BY

DR. STANLEY MARCHANT.

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND MALE-VOICE CHORUS.

A beautiful, joyous, and uplifting setting of words by Martin Luther, translated by Winckworth. About 15 minutes.

PRICE, with Pianoforte (or Organ) accompaniment, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A. WEEKES & CO.,
14, HANOVER STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from

STEINWAY & SONS,
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1
'PHONE: MAYFAIR 6641-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN, BORD,
SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE.

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
Phone: MUSEUM 439.

To be performed by the British National Opera Company, at Manchester, November 19.

AT THE BOAR'S HEAD

A MUSICAL INTERLUDE IN ONE ACT

THE LIBRETTO TAKEN FROM

SHAKESPEARE'S KING HENRY IV

THE MUSIC, FOUNDED ON OLD ENGLISH MELODIES, BY

GUSTAV HOLST

(Op. 42).

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENT BY VALLY LASKER.

Vocal Score, Price Six Shillings Libretto, One Shilling

SOME PRESS OPINIONS

THE TIMES—April 4, 1925

". . . . The dialogue moves almost at speaking pace; the tunes appear so easily that not one in ten of them would be recognised as a quotation (Holst owns to about forty borrowed tunes) if he had not shown his hand in a printed preface. The orchestration is another point of subtle interest. It is generally inconspicuous, almost always light enough to let the voice come through without effort. It never distracts attention from the play, yet Holst's skill appears in the way he clothes the thinnest harmonic outline with apt colour."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH—April 4, 1925

". . . . The generous use Mr. Holst has made of Old English melodies garnered from the Playford, Chappell, and Cecil Sharp collections. . . . Whatever its constituents this music adds zest and momentum to the comic scenes; it rises to dignity and eloquence in the noble monologue of Prince Henry; it sets in relief every element of the last episode where the love passages of Falstaff and Doll are broken off by war alarms. . . . . The individuality of the composer emerges clear and distinct, binding together firmly the action. It is a personality compounded of great daring and great simplicity; of a modern love for sharp, slick combination of harmony and an innate bias for the song that is the people's heritage. One might almost think of Holst as a master of the Tudor period who during the eras of German hegemony in music has lain in enchanted sleep, and awakened again in the twentieth century to resume his song making with modern tools."

DAILY MAIL—April 4, 1925

". . . . This original and exquisite little score . . . . It was no foolhardiness but a sound instinct that prompted the addition of this music to the richest and wittiest comedy scenes that ever came from pen of man. Mr. Holst's music is woven on material from the Old English country dance book. The small orchestra keeps these slight and blithe tunes chattering or murmuring, and above it the words are fitted in a rare new manner. The fine ingeniousness of it all can be judged from the score."

THE MORNING POST—April 4, 1925

". . . . More than half of the problem which Mr. Holst has set himself has been the mating of a certain text with a certain body of tune without doing violence to either. He has succeeded, and now that the job has been done one sees how inevitable is his solution of a difficult problem, and with what extraordinary skill it has been accomplished. . . . . The real feat of the composer has been the apparent ease with which he has brought words and music together, and has allowed free play to the Shakespearean text, while adding a covering of music as delightful as it is pertinent. . . . . The curtain is Shakespeare's, but it is also Mr. Holst's in an admirably effective page of his score. In his new opera he shows again his sense of theatrical effect, both in the ingenuity with which he has arranged this episode, and in the use he makes of his orchestra."

DAILY NEWS—April 4, 1925

". . . . Mr. Holst's method of composition is decidedly new. He has taken over forty English folk-songs, and used them as the principal element of the score, besides tunes of his own. The folk-songs are developed, combined, and transformed with surprising ingenuity."

THE SUNDAY TIMES—April 5, 1925

". . . . The melody that Mr. Holst has invented for them [the Sonnets], beautifully free in rhythm, and remote in style yet without a suspicion of archaism, seems a natural emanation from them. His technical skill is shown in the masterly combination of this song ['Devouring Time'], later with the 'King Arthur' ballad, in a little ensemble that comes just at the right moment. One is astonished at the general congruity between Shakespeare's words and the traditional tunes."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN—April 4, 1925

". . . . 'At the Boar's Head' is a work of genius, if only for its cleverness and the masterly way in which the words of Shakespeare are made to run in with the old and strongly rhythmical melodies of Shakespeare's own time. It is a work of genius also because it answers to the geniality of Shakespeare. . . . Mr. Holst should in this work have made friends with the man in the street."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.

Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.
Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

November 4th and 18th, at 3 p.m. Students' Concerts.

November 12th, 19th, and 26th, at 5 p.m. A course of Three Lectures to Students of the College only, on "Gothic Architecture," by Mr. Fred H. Crossley, F.S.A., with lantern-slide illustrations.

November 25th, at 3 p.m. Violin Recital by Students in Mr. A. J. Slocombe's Class.

December 3rd. Last day of entry for the next Open Competition for Scholarships.

December 7th. Last day of entry for the January Diploma Examinations.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

A special Class for Scoring for Brass and Military Bands, and the Theatre Orchestra, is conducted by Mr. HENRY GEEHL.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned. C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

A NEW ELGAR PART-SONG.

THE PRINCE OF SLEEP

PART-SONG FOR MIXED VOICES.

(Words by WALTER DE LA MARE.)

Price Sixpence.

This beautiful Part-Song by Sir Edward Elgar is in the

ELKIN CHORAL SERIES

(General Editor: DR. JOHN BORLAND).

This Series includes:

PART-SONGS by
ELGAR, MACDOWELL, CYRIL SCOTT, EDGAR BAINTON, and CHARLES WATERS.
UNISON SONGS by
GRANVILLE BANTOCK, ERNEST AUSTIN, ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH, and CHARLES WATERS.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

SACRED MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

ANTHEMS.

	Price.
DERING, RICHARD.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts)	4d.
GOSS, JOHN.
Behold, I bring you good tidings	3d.
HANDL, JACOB.
Behold, thou shalt conceive	4d.
HOPKINS, E. J.
Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	3d.
DI LASSO, ORLANDO.
Let Zion resound with praise	4d.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts)	4d.

CAROLS.

ADAMS, THOMAS.
SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Separately ... each	3d.
In one volume, complete...	9d.
BRIDGE, J. FREDERICK.
Ring out with jocund chime	3d.
A Babe ys borne I wys	3d.
Welcome, Yule	3d.
Christmas Day	3d.
When Christ was born	3d.
Yonder in Bethlehem	3d.
The Star of the East. A Fantasy for contralto solo (ad lib.) and chorus, S.A.T.B.	9d.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.
A selection of 25 (Ancient and Modern)	1s. 6d.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT ON REQUEST.

ORGAN MUSIC.

BACH, J. S.
Two Preludes on "In dulci jubilo" (from book of selected chorale preludes). Steingraber Edition, No. 2172	2s. 6d.
GRUNDMANN, A.
At Christmas Eve. Three Pastorales. Steingraber Edition, No. 2018	1s. 6d

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE
ENGLISH PSALTER
CONTAINING
THE PSALMS OF DAVID
EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING
UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY
CHARLES MACPHERSON, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).
EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).
PERCY C. BUCK, MUS. DOC.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

Demy 8vo size, 4s. net.
Imperial 32mo, 1s. 6d. net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

NOVEMBER 1 1925

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1039.)

A POSTSCRIPT TO 'A MUSICAL CRITIC'S HOLIDAY'

BY ERNEST NEWMAN

(Continued from October Number, page 884.)

II.

If the Editor's tolerance continues, there are still two or three points arising out of the reviews of my book that I propose to discuss. In the present number of the Musical Times I will deal with only one of them—that of the recognition of contemporary genius. It is the point on which those who disagree with me do so most completely. I speak, it will be observed, in the first person. In several portions of my book the Imaginary Critic whose spiritual experiences I have attempted to describe is speculating for himself rather than speaking for me; he is stumbling his way through thickets of doubt, looking for the light that shall show him the way home. I had to leave him to it, for I did not see how I could help him, being, in most of the matters that worry him, only an inquirer as doubting and perplexed as himself. But on this particular point he and I see as one: I must confess that the arguments put forward by the Imaginary Critic are so reasonable, and supported by so much evidence, that they have convinced even me. I propose, therefore, to speak for him in this the hour of his assailing by his foes.

It is well to understand an argument before you reject it, and I am afraid this one has not been fully understood by many of the people who have been irritated by it. It is, indeed, looked at rightly, less a dogmatic pronouncement than a series of inquiries. Like everyone else, I believed until lately all that is told in the story books about the persistent misunderstanding of Wagner until long after his death. Like the rest of the world, I had shed bitter salt tears over the sufferings of the poor neglected man of genius. It fell to my lot to spend some years of research into the Wagner history and the Wagner literature; and without in any way willing it—to my surprise and perturbation, indeed—I found a doubt creeping up at the back of my mind. From the subconscious the doubt gradually emerged into the conscious. Staring me in the face I saw a number of facts that seemed to negate the accepted story. It was obviously a case for inquiry; so I went once more systematically through the Wagner literature, this time looking solely for evidence that bore one way or the other on the question of his contemporary recognition. The only conclusion I could come to was that the world had been obsequiously mumbling a sort of sacrosanct formula that had no relation to anything in reality. I felt like the scientist of whom Rousseau tells us in his essay on French and German music. The learned academies of Europe had been exercised over the problem of a boy in Silesia who had been born with a gold tooth. Books were published on the subject, papers were read to philosophical societies; each contributor to the discussion had a theory of his own as to the cause of this remarkable phenomenon. Then it occurred to someone of a more sceptical turn of mind than the others to make inquiries on the spot; whereupon it turned out that the story of the Silesian boy born with a gold tooth was a tarradiddle.

Being convinced of the tarradiddleism of the Wagner legend, it occurred to me next to ask whether there was anything more substantial in the other legends of the same class. The results of my inquiry are given in my book. They have been greeted in three ways. Some people accept them wholly; others accept the evidence in some cases and reject it in others; while still other people reject the evidence and the argument in toto. From the last group I learn, with both amazement and amusement, that I have committed an unpardonable sin in trying to show that a great composer has always been recognised as a great composer by his contemporaries. Mr. Sorabji, for instance, would make a Star Chamber matter of it:

> Whether Mr. Newman [he says] has or has not demonstrated the existence of the recognition of which he speaks does not for the moment matter. What does matter is that a critic of Mr. Newman's influence and importance can so misuse his position as to lend his authority to bolster up a fraudulent proposition.

This is the language not of musical criticism but of theology; I have ventured to question a point of doctrine, and the Holy Inquisition is called upon to burn me at the stake. It is perhaps the heat in which Mr. Sorabji finds himself—a pardonable heat, we must all agree, since it is the historic privilege of the people in possession of the true truth to call down lightnings and thunders upon the doubters—it is perhaps due to Mr. Sorabji's heat that his remarks are not quite so lucid as I could wish. I should say, in my simplicity, that it matters a good deal whether I have or have not demonstrated what I was trying to demonstrate: that if my evidence is wrong, the proper thing to do is to show where it is wrong, and if it is right, the proper thing is to accept the conclusions that seem to follow from it. With Mr. Sorabji, apparently, evidence and argument count as little as they ever did with a Grand Inquisitor trying a heretic: the man's heresy is sufficient condemnation of him! But I must confess to being a little saddened by this and some similar experiences. Like Ibsen's Dr. Stockmann, who found himself denounced as an enemy of the people for trying to improve the sanitary condition of the town, I, who had innocently thought I was letting in a helpful light on a vexed question of musical criticism, find myself abused as a bolsterer up of a fraudulent proposition!

I have been sketching out lately a new book on 'The Tragical Comedy of Musical Criticism,' an expression of the amused scepticism that has been bred in me by half a life-time spent in close association with, and close study of, the musical mind. I am grateful to some of my reviewers for providing me with the richest imaginable material for one or two chapters of that book. They have given me a comfortable assurance of the unchangeableness of human nature. What is most delightful about them is their complete unconsciousness of their own parity with certain figures of the past for whom they have the greatest dislike and contempt. They are scornful of the 'conservatives,' and completely unaware that they themselves exhibit all the traditional blind reactions of the 'conservative' mind. I suppose none of us can see himself as others see him, and few of us are as successful in prescribing for our own ailments as for those of others. Herbert Spencer long ago commented gravely on the strange behaviour of medical students, who, though their very business was to know and to teach others that riotous living is bad for the human body, are regrettably slow to apply their admirable principles in their own cases. I have just realised, to my delight, that it is precisely the musical people who are most vehement over the obscurantism of the past who are the greatest obscurantists of the present.

The point against the Hanslicks and the rest of them has always been that at the first shock of a new idea they put on the defensive armour of reaction. It was sufficient for the idea to be new for them to be horrified by it; as Mr. Calvocoressi puts it, it 'ran contrary to the hearers' customs and tenets, and did not make sense for them.' My suggestion that we had been wrong about the attitude of past generations towards contemporary composers, and especially wrong about Wagner, was one that ran contrary to the customs and tenets of a number of good people, so they condemned it out of hand; they barricaded themselves in the citadel of their traditional beliefs and prejudices, and fired through loopholes at the audacious stranger who had dared to call upon them with a new idea. Hardly one of these conscientious objectors goes to the length of bringing rebutting evidence in what is, after all, purely and simply a matter of evidence. One reviewer 'knows' that I am wrong as regards the contemporary appreciation of literature, and 'suspects' that I am wrong as regards music. Another sapiently asks me if Mozart was not buried in a pauper's grave—as if a man could not die poor for a thousand other reasons than that people did not like his music! It would be of no avail, I suppose, for me to remind this objector of such historical facts as that the first performance of 'Figaro' lasted nearly twice the proper time owing to almost every 'number' being encored. Some alleged evidence has to be found that Mozart's music was not appreciated in his own day, and so we are reminded that Mozart died a pauper. What bearing that fact has on the problem I was discussing I cannot perceive.

I have come to the conclusion, indeed, that it is useless to produce evidence for some people. They blandly ignore it all. Thus I have been reproached for not championing the cause of Hugo Wolf while he was alive: this is supposed to be another proof that the great man is not recognised till after his death. But in my book I gave various reasons why Wolf's fame spread slowly during his lifetime. There are only two ways in which a composer's songs can become known: (a) we must either hear them sung, or (b) we must study them for ourselves. The general unwillingness of the average singer to take up new songs that do not show him off, and the difficulty of the accompaniments, account for the slowness with which Wolf's songs reached the public viâ the concert platform: whenever they were sung they found plenty of enthusiastic admirers, as Wolf's own letters show. As regards (b), I pointed out how Wolf virtually cut himself off from the reading public by refusing to allow his songs to be published except in large volumes, by refusing to allow any of them to be transposed (I am not contending, of course, that he should have done), and generally by getting on the wrong side of the publishers with his defects of temperament. My contention all along was that I could find no case in history of a great man's contemporaries failing to recognise his greatness provided they had due opportunities of becoming acquainted with it. In Wolf's case those opportunities were obviously lacking. The 'public,' so far as he was concerned, meant not Germany as a whole but the few people who had the chance to hear and study his music. This 'public' was in the main enthusiastically for him. He was suddenly forced upon the attention of the musical world as a whole by his tragic death. Appreciation then followed quickly enough: it was only about that time that I myself became acquainted with his songs, and I wrote on them in the Contemporary Review in 1904, the year after Wolf's death.

Let us try to understand what it is we are discussing. The question is whether a great new composer is so far ahead of his time that only a later time can understand him and do him justice. Is it seriously contended that in 1903, when Wolf first began to be generally talked about, the general music intelligence of Europe had suddenly taken a mighty step forward and was now able to understand what had been a mystery to it in 1902? The suggestion is nonsensical. The simple truth is that Wolf's newness and greatness would have made precisely the same impression on intelligent music-lovers in 1890 as they did in 1903, if only these people had had the good luck to meet with the songs earlier. There may be a hundred reasons why a composer is not so well known to his contemporaries as he should be. But that is a separate question; it has nothing to do with the question of the degree of understanding of his music among such of his contemporaries as are acquainted with it.

All the reviewers who have fallen foul of me over this question exhibit a curious inability to perceive what the real point in dispute is, and to stick to it. Thus Mr. Dunton Green, discussing the Sarti-Mozart episode, says that:

> . . . what has made Sarti a conspicuous and damning example of an un-understanding critic is that whilst he followed the easy course of picking technical holes in a work of genius, he entirely failed to grasp the greatness of its spiritual message, and, indeed, of its musical beauty.

Mr. Dunton Green's gesture is magnificent, but, if I may become flowery, it cuts no ice. There was no call whatever upon Sarti to discuss the beauties of Mozart in general. He was not writing a general critical study of Mozart; he was answering, in a private document (the manuscript has not been published to this day) a query put to him by a Milanese lady about those passages in the C major Quartet that were arousing so much excitement at the time. Sarti had been consulted on a purely technical matter, and he naturally confined his reply to the technics of the matter. If, fifty years hence, it leaks out that I called in a plumber last week to tell me what was wrong with the bath tap, will some Dunton Green of that future day curse him because, after having done his best with the tap, the plumber did not write a lyrical ode on the charm of the tenant, the furnishing of the house, and the view of the grounds from the ball-room windows?

Mr. Dunton Green treats the Wagner case with the same light-hearted irrelevance. Like his colleagues, he does not make the slightest attempt to upset my evidence: he merely repeats the original theory. I gave twenty-five pages of cumulative evidence of the popularity of Wagner—and I may add that I have material enough in my note-books for another two hundred and fifty pages. This evidence ranges from about 1850 to Wagner's death in 1883. Mr. Green brushes it all aside with a lordly gesture. He 'knows,' from 'personal experience,' that in his boyhood, 'which fell between the 'eighties and the 'nineties,' Wagner's music was 'frankly condemned as "no music" by people who had spent their lives in the pursuit of music in all its forms,' and that 'proportionately to the enormous number of its detractors, its enthusiasts were "the passionate few".' Now nobody—myself least of all—is so foolish as to deny that there was a large Wagner opposition; in my book I have tried to show that for various reasons, some of them not connected with his music, he made a quite exceptional number of enemies. But in the first place no one in his senses expects the whole world to think alike on any subject. Wagner's music creates a strong repulsion in many people even to-day, when there is no question of its novelty being a hindrance to the comprehension of it; it is purely and simply a matter of temperament, of mentality, of morale. That the world should have been divided over Wagner in 1880, let us say, is no more astonishing than that the world should be divided to-day over Strauss, or Stravinsky, or Brahms, or Ravel. In the second place, does not the very magnitude and vehemence of the opposition to Wagner point to his popularity? People do not get wildly excited over the opposite cause when it is a losing one: if they are hysterical about it, it is a pretty sure sign that the success of it has frightened them.

Now nothing is more certain then that the hysterics of the good people 'who had spent their lives in pursuit of music in all its forms' were due to their alarm at Wagner's enormous and ever-growing vogue. This vogue they cannot deny; and to them it is a sign of the rottenness of the public taste. Nietzsche, in 'The Wagner Case' (1880), treats Wagner all through as a conqueror whose victory is going to ruin European music and European morals:

> Ah, this old robber! [he cries]. He plunders us of our youths, he takes even our women as plunder, and drags them into his cavern. Ah, this old Minotaur? What he has already cost us! Every year trains of the finest maidens and youths are led into his labyrinth that he may devour them—every year all Europe strikes up the cry: 'Off to Crete! Off to Crete!'

That was the real condition of musical Europe (and we may add America) in those years of Mr. Green's adolescence. The whole point of Nietzsche's polemic is that Wagner is so successful that he must be prevented from dragging Europe into the abyss with him. 'The Germans have created for themselves a Wagner whom they can worship.' That does not surprise Nietzsche, for, as he is always telling us, the Germans are so stupid. But he is horrified and astounded to find intelligent Paris and St. Petersburg also succumbing to the Wagnerian poison:

> People honour themselves by exalting him to the skies. For it is already a sign of decadence that no one defends himself against Wagner. Instinct is weakened. What should be shunned attracts people.

Nietzsche consoled himself with the reflection that it was only the neurotics whom Wagner attracted. But the fact of the attraction he never dreamed of denying.

I open another book by a violent anti-Wagnerian, published a year before Wagner's death,—"Wagnerism: a Protest"; by Major H. W. L. Hime. Here again the tone is not that of a victor exulting over the defeat of the other side, but that of a combatant who knows that the fight is going against him, and thinks it necessary to rally the forces of what he conceives to be the right for a last desperate stand in the hope of saving music. Major Hime cannot blind himself to the growing success of Wagner: all he can do is to try to account for it on other grounds than the intrinsic value of Wagner's operas. He attributes 'their success at Bayreuth' to 'the money and influence of the King of Bavaria, and to the strong national feeling evoked in Germany by the war against France.' 'These elements of success,' he continues, 'may be quietly ignored, but their existence cannot be denied.' Later he speaks of Wagner's 'triumph at Bayreuth' and his 'subsequent success,' which latter he puts down to the activities of a 'clique of critics.'

This was in 1882, and it may perhaps be objected that by that time the Wagner cause really had advanced a little, but that the years before were years of unbroken misunderstanding. When we find, however, that as early as 1864 a Stuttgart hotel-keeper was so great an admirer of Wagner that he offered to place the two best rooms in the hotel at his disposal, and give him all his meals gratis, we cannot resist the suspicion that Wagner's vogue was already large. In 1876 the success of Bayreuth so alarmed the German Court theatres that some of them began to refuse permission to their singers to accept service under Wagner. They wanted to reap the benefits of Wagner's popularity themselves; nor can we blame them when we read that a queue waited all night in Berlin to get tickets for 'Tristan,' and that 150 marks were paid for a stall. In 1877, we are told, 'the German theatres were clamouring for the performing rights' of the Wagner operas, especially the 'Valkyrie.' Theatrical managers do not clamour for the performing rights of operas that no one wants to hear. At Vienna, as early as 1877, the first two operas of the 'Ring' 'were already bringing in huge returns to the Hoftheater.' Angelo Neumann's European tour with the 'Ring' in 1882 was one long success, artistic and financial.

I do not want to go over the whole ground again. I wish only to suggest that it is futile for Mr. Green to try to counter a mountain of evidence of this kind with the remark that he 'knows from personal experience' of his boyhood that I am wrong. I have tried to put before the jury only such evidence as would be accepted in a court of law; and I submit that the cumulative effect of it is convincing. Mr. Green does not deal with it at all; he merely tells us what the soldier said, which is not evidence.

I have commented on the reluctance of certain 'progressives' of to-day to admit that the accepted theory of the inevitable failure of a big man's contemporaries to recognise his bigness is a pure legend. The reason for their reluctance is fairly obvious. Each of them has at least one living pet composer of his own whom he ranks more highly than the musical world as a whole does. If it be true that, given opportunities for hearing his work, the really big man is soon picked out by the general consciousness, then we have at least some grounds for doubting whether the big man of to-day who is big only for a handful of admirers (though the world as a whole may respect and admire him without according him royal honours), is really so big as they assert. I myself do not dogmatise on this point: I merely ask questions. What I tried to do in my book was to discover if the past could throw any light on the problems of the present. It is the past alone that we can see complete and in the round; and my idea was that by studying the physiology and the pathology of certain personalities and certain epochs of the past we might possibly be able to work out a few general principles that there would be a fair probability of being applicable to our own problems. I put it no higher than that. I leave it to others to forecast the future. There are several of my colleagues who assure us that they know positively who are the really great composers of to-day. It is true that each of them has a different 'fancy,' and that each of them is sure that the others are anything from simpletons to imbeciles for believing in their 'fancy'; but this only makes the spectacle more interesting and more amusing to the outsider. Thus Mr. Cecil Gray and Mr. Sorabji plump for Bartok. Others plump for Stravinsky, in spite of the fact that Mr. Gray has told them that 'the later works of Stravinsky appeal only to a few congenital idiots.' Schönberg also has his prophets: have not Madame Marya Freund and others told us that the reason for the world not falling at Schönberg's feet is that he is a hundred years ahead or so of the musical intelligence of to-day—excepting, of course, the musical intelligence of Madame Freund?

I cannor soar to these dizzy heights. With infinite regret, I cannot go with Mr. Sorabji when he writes:

> Because an audience in 1820 recognises, let us say, the greatness of Beethoven, and because one in 1920 did not recognise the greatness of Bartok, and to deduce therefrom that Beethoven is a genius and Bartok is not, may satisfy Mr. Newman, but does not satisfy me.

By what clairvoyance, he demands, have I been able to discover 'that the audience of 1920 is in any respect of musical intelligence or artistic sensibility the same as that of 1820?' I might ask Mr. Sorabji how he knows that the two audiences are in any way different. It is surely a reasonable presumption that our grandfathers were about as intelligent as ourselves, and that they reacted to musical impressions in much the same way. Their actual musical experiences, of course, were not ours; times change. But I should not imagine that the relation between their experiences and their intelligence was different from ours. If Mr. Sorabji thinks it was, he might give us his reasons. But in any case Mr. Sorabji must make his leap into the future without the distress of my abhorred company—for I am compelled to point out to him that his comparison is illegitimate. Beethoven has been dead a hundred years; Bartok is still alive. Beethoven's work is complete, Bartok's is not. Beethoven's work can have no further surprises for us; Bartok's may have. Beethoven's greatness is now universally accepted; Bartok's is not. The prudent thing is surely to leave a comparison between the generation of 1820 and the generation of 1920 to the men of 2020. They alone will be able to see the two periods in proper perspective; they alone will have all the documents in their hands; they alone will know which of the personalities of to-day has emerged from the crowd in the way that Beethoven has emerged from the crowd of his own time. They alone will be able to say whether the formula I have tried to deduce from the past that we know—the formula that history presents us with no record of a great composer being too far ahead of the average intelligence of his time for the mass of plain music-lovers to understand him—is applicable also to what is for us a very perplexing present, but will be for them a very placid past indeed. The utmost we can do is to surmise that history will repeat itself; we must not take upon ourselves to speak for the historians of the next generation but three.

What we can do is to provide the historian and critic of 2020 with material to work upon. He will no doubt be debating the very question we are debating now. We have to dig out of musty libraries the material for our study of past genius and contemporary criticism, and the material is not always as plentiful as we should like. It might be a good idea to leave a mass of representative material relating to the present day to the future historian, much as gramophone records and films are sealed up, it is said, in the cellars of the British Museum so that our posterity may know exactly what we looked and sounded like. Or, to vary the illustration, should we not present a handy corpus of the critical opinions of to-day to our successors, as public-spirited citizens present their bodies to the hospitals for dissection for the benefit of science? Posterity may, of course, take us willy-nilly, as the hospitals take the cadavers of paupers. But it would be ever so much nicer for us to make the graceful gesture of giving ourselves before we are taken. Why should not some learned society—or some millionaire with a grim sense of humour—compile a huge volume of the representative criticism of the period, say, 1905-30, and leave it to the British Museum with the proviso that it was not to be made available for study until 2030? My only regret would be that I could not be alive at that time to see whether the few poor criteria for criticism that we have been able to deduce from the practice of the past hold good also for the present day.

(To be concluded.)

LEONARD BORWICK

By Ernest Walker

I feel much honoured by the invitation to write a few words about Leonard Borwick for the Musical Times. Not that I could ever lay any sort of claim to the privilege of intimate friendship: but I enjoyed personal acquaintance over more than thirty years, and I have many kindnesses and a store of pleasant memories upon which to look back.

'I liked Borwick's playing very much, and I liked him himself almost more,' wrote Grove (as recorded in Mr. C. L. Graves's biography) to Mr. Edward Speyer in the summer of 1890; and all through Borwick's life even the casual crosser of his path must have felt the strength of this double appeal of the compelling art and the winning personality. For myself, I have memories of country week-ends (with talk on such matters as the new invention of free-wheels for bicycles); but for the most part my memories are concerned with music.

Sensitiveness and sanity are fine twin equipments for an artist; and Borwick's pianoforte playing (so it seemed to me) always aimed, first and last, at an ideal which was the unity, in their highest manifestations, of these two. Some of his listeners perhaps felt the sanity more than the sensitiveness; the kind of performance which has abundant musical sensitiveness for the duration of each individual spasm is very far from uncommon, and we often forget that the business of the pianist (as of the composer) is to initiate and communicate to others an organic experience, not a mere series of however interesting details. Borwick, when at his best, held the balance rigidly even: he saw the parts, and he saw the whole also. Technique being taken for granted (he had more than enough for any purpose, but no pianist ever made less spectacular display with it), his business, so he seemed to conceive it, was simply to represent the musical thought as such in its threefold aspect—intellectual, emotional, and sensuous. The listener felt that, in the result, Borwick was there as well as the composer; but to Borwick himself such self-expression seemed a side issue, not in any way consciously to be sought. It was characteristic of him that he was so often to be heard in ensemble work of all kinds. In a trio, or quintet, or song accompaniment, he seemed to approach the music in exactly the same spirit as in a concerto or a pure solo: he was there simply to do his share in transmitting the composer's thought, doing his duty, neither obtrusively nor subordinately, as the musical circumstances might direct.

But his art by no means ran in grooves. He could be as volcanically stirring as any professed emotionalist: I recollect, in particular, a performance of Chopin's F minor Fantasie that was a sheer blaze. And he had no unnecessary respect for any pianistic orthodoxies as such: his thumbs had ways of their own, and he took many a technical risk that I do not suppose he ever taught to his pupils. Brought up as he was in a circle of classicism, at the feet of a great artist to whom much great contemporary music was alien, his sympathies never stood still. Rachmaninov, Scriabin, Palmgren, and many more, owed him heavy debts; and he was one of the first Englishmen to see Debussy and Ravel with the eyes of their own race. And no listener could really say whether the greater sympathy went out to Bach or Mozart or Beethoven or Schumann or Brahms, or to any of the men who might be considerably his own juniors.

Odd little things might occasionally happen; his normally first-class memory might fail and reduce him to circling round and round a page of Bach without ever discovering its proper end, or he might leave out the last two notes of the Largo of Beethoven's Op. 10, No. 3, and be extremely surprised to be told he had done so. And, of course, like all other performers, he had occasional off-days of tiredness or what not, when his tone might lose its colour and his rhythm its spring. But such days did not come often; and even when they did come there was nothing common or mean to be heard; the fire might, for some reason or other, be burning low, but it was plainly enough the authentic fire none the less.

Though (so far as I know) Borwick wrote but little, he had a great gift of literary expression; and his article on 'Rhythm as Proportion' in Music and Letters for January, 1925—the latest piece of his work that I have myself seen—is of very real and permanent æsthetic value, crammed full as it is of that typical combination of sensitiveness and sanity of which I have already spoken, minutely practical and at the same time, and in the highest degree, imaginative. Towards the end of it, in answer to some possible objections, he writes: 'I am an idealist; and, as an artist in pursuit of so ideal an art as music, I look to be one all my days.' There are many true things in his article: but none truer than this.

ANGLICAN CHANTING: A CHALLENGING PSALTER*

By Ernest Bullock

(Organist and Choirmaster of Exeter Cathedral.)

The Church jealously and rightly guards its ancient uses and traditions. It grudges any change of custom, as instanced in the revision of the Prayer Book; it is disturbed when new light is thrown upon its beliefs, for example by modern Biblical criticism; and when any innovation is suggested that may deprive its members of hymns they have been associated with since youth, or that involves a new way of singing the Psalms, or the like, congregations present a bold front to innovators. In many minds the ancient uses and traditions of the Church have become so confused with personal associations that the true proportion of things is in danger of being lost. Hence any attempt at revision which silences (even temporarily) some members of the congregation, is sure to cause trouble. In the heat of argument, common-sense, long experience by specialists, research and thought contributed by scholars, go for little. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that some people would leave a church where they did not find some 'dear old hymn' sung, and yet would scarcely be conscious of the omission of some salient feature such as the 'Absolution.' Choirs also have a natural aversion to change. They prefer to 'stray along the cool sequestered vale of life, and keep the noiseless tenor of their way' (though perhaps the simile is not altogether apt!). Such choirs may be musical and have common-sense enough to realise the faults, say, of chanting. But any change requires an effort.

In spite of probable rocks and breakers ahead, the 'English Psalter' has appeared, and the publishers are to be congratulated on their courage and foresight. The need was a pressing one, and the result has more than fulfilled anticipations. Wisdom has been shown in the choice of editors for this work, as they are all practical Church musicians, men fully equipped for the task by their knowledge and long experience; and incidentally being only three in number and wise in counsel, they were not likely to delay the preparation of such an important work by failing to arrive at unanimity of principles. 'These principles,' as they state in the preface, 'have been systematically and fearlessly applied.'

For many years there has been a growing dissatisfaction with the singing of the Psalms to Anglican chants, not only amongst Church musicians but also amongst many of the more thoughtful of the clergy and laity. Some have solved the problem by returning to plainsong. Others, however, have been unwilling to forego the use of Anglican chants, and have clung to them in the pious hope that some solution would be evolved.

The Anglican chant, in spite of its monotonous insistence on four-part harmony, still attracts Church musicians. Nevertheless many of them have been fully alive to the defects of Anglican pointing, and for years have been experimenting and trying to solve the problem. Little by little fresh ideas have been presented, tried and, if successful, retained. In some cases individuals have committed themselves to print, so that a wider trial of ideas was possible. But in the majority of cases, reformers have been content to make alterations in the psalters found in use, or have marked prayer books according to their own views. The strength and weakness of these efforts have soon been discovered. The problems have been discussed, lectured on, and written about in musical periodicals and manuals of Church music. A short time ago a pamphlet appeared with the Canticles pointed in natural speech rhythm, thereby considerably adding to the store of thought and experiment. During this time there has been a great revival of interest in free rhythm, to which modern composition and the research, publication, and performance of Elizabethan sacred and secular music have largely contributed. The time was ripe for the publication of a pointing of the Psalms based upon the principles of natural speech-rhythm, and embodying the best and simplest ideas and the results of long experience.

In the 'English Psalter' the problem of fitting the true prose-rhythm of the Psalms to the rhythm of the Anglican chant has been squarely faced. Moreover the signs used to accomplish this have been reduced to a minimum. Those that were necessary are, with few exceptions, based on signs that have become conventional. The present writer has been carefully through the whole Psalter, and no false accents have come to light. There may, however, be a difference of opinion as to the scansion of a few verses. For instance:

* The 'English Psalter.' Edited by Charles Macpherson, Mus. D., Edward C. Bairstow, Mus. D., and Percy C. Buck, Mus. D. (Novello.)

The 'English Psalter' sets out the following verse in this wise:

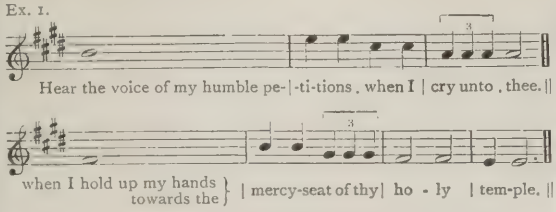
Sing praises unto him with the lute and | instru-ment of | ten | strings ||

An alternative easily suggests itself:

Sing praises unto him with the | lute and | instru-ment of | ten . strings. ||

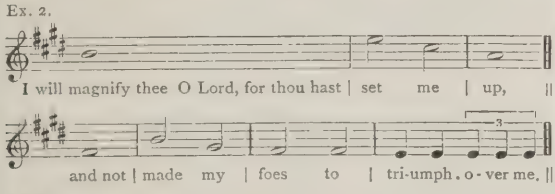
In order to appreciate fully the 'English Psalter,' it is necessary to eliminate all thought of a rigid time for the chant, all idea of stress or prolongation of syllables before the first bar-line. Thus the Anglican chant becomes a very elastic thing, capable of producing great varieties of rhythm, although strictly based on the accepted formula. I quote a few examples of the more unusual rhythms:

Ex. 1.



The last bar of the first part in the above example instances a device of the subdivision of similar bars frequently employed in this Psalter with good effect.

Ex. 2.



Ex. 3.

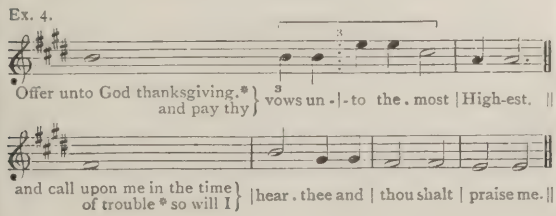
O love the Lord all | ye his | saints, for the Lord preserveth them that are faithful * and plente-ously re- | -wardeth the | proud | do - er. ||

In the first half of this chant there is an example of a 'secondary triplet,' so designated by the Editors, i.e., a triplet made up of the reciting-note plus the two following minims. Thus the accent is thrown on the syllable indicated by the figure 3, placed over a syllable in the reciting part, and eliminated from the first syllable of the bar of minims. A 'primary triplet' is shown in the second half of the chant.

The first part of Ex. 4 shows yet another variety of 'secondary triplet':

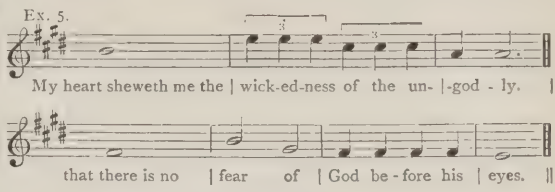
Ex. 4.



Offer unto God thanksgiving.* and pay thy | vows un - | -to . the . most | High-est. ||
and call upon me in the time of trouble * so will I | hear . thee and | thou shalt | praise me. ||

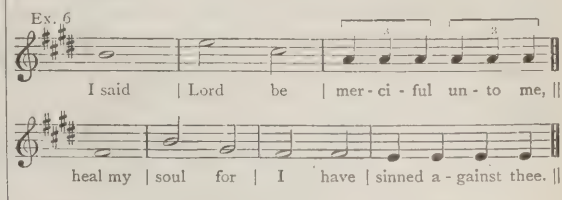
Ex. 5 shows a good variety of rhythm introduced at the first bar of minims:

Ex. 5.



The following example shows not only a variety of rhythm, but also balances well the two parts of the verse:

Ex. 6



Needless to say, in the above examples the values of the notes are only approximate, because they are governed by the natural rhythm of the words. Of course numerous examples could be quoted, but these must suffice.

A good test of the potentialities of this Psalter is to be found in the striking comparison that is afforded when it is placed side by side with one of the commonly used systems of pointing:

Ex. 7. (a)

(b) 'English Psalter.'

Ex. 8. (a)

(b) 'English Psalter.'

The pointing of the Gloria has hitherto been open to serious objection on account of false accentuation and unnecessary prolongation of syllables. Compare that in general use with this from the 'English Psalter':

Ex. 9. (a)

Glory be to the Fá - ther, | and to the | Son: || ánd | to the ||
Ho - ly | Ghost. || As it was in the beginning * is nów, and | ev - er | shall be: || wórld with-out | end... | A - - | men. ||

(b) 'English Psalter.'

Glory | be to the | Fa-ther, || and to the Son, | and . to the |
Ho - ly | Ghost; || As it | was in . the be-|-gin-ning, ||
is now, and ever shall be,* | world . without | end. A -|-men. ||

Consideration of the latter pointing of the Gloria brings to our notice the many changes of punctuation which have been adopted in the 'English Psalter,' and the practical results obtained:

1. All commas have been omitted except those to be observed. This is the only sensible principle in order to secure unanimity.

2. The colon, which hitherto marked the coincidence of the double-bar of the chant, is now used as a punctuation mark only, and the position of the double-bar is indicated by the usual musical notation sign. Consequently, not only does the colon disappear out of some verses altogether and a suitable punctuation mark is substituted, but the position of the colon does not always coincide with the double-bar of the chant. Compare the following, and note which better brings out the sense of the words:

Ex. 10. (a)

As for such as turn back unto | their own | wickedness: ||
the Lord shall lead them forth with the evildoers; but peace | shall be | up - on | Israel. ||

(b) 'English Psalter.'

As for such as turn back unto their own wickedness, * the Lord shall lead them forth with the | ev - il | doers; ||
but | peace shall | be up - on | Israel. ||

Another good example can be shown by reproducing v. 3 of Psalm 107 from the 'English Psalter':

And gathered them | out of the | lands, || from the east and from the | west . from the | north and . from the | south. ||

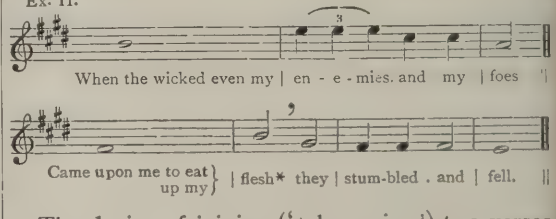
The elimination of the colon has also made it possible for the whole verse to be run through without a break, when the sense of the words demands it. This adds still more possibilities of variety of rhythm, and is a welcome change from the monotonous pause for breath at the double-bar.

The following supplies a convenient illustration, and approximates as far as possible to the effect when sung:

Ex. 11.



The device of joining ('telescoping') two verses so that they may be sung to one single chant is also introduced. It has been frequently employed in the short verses of Psalm 119, e.g.:

O Lord, thy word endureth for | ever in | heaven. ||
Thy truth also remaineth from | one . gener- | ation . to an- | other. ||

By this means of combining verses it has been possible to rid ourselves of that universal blot on Anglican pointing, found in Psalm 148, v. 10, viz.:

worms |— and | feathered | fowls.

The 'English Psalter' has rearranged it to read thus:

Mountains and all hills; * fruitful | trees and . all | cedars. ||
Beasts and all cattle; | worms and | feathered | fowls. ||

On the other hand, many of the longer verses have been divided so that they are sung to a double instead of a single chant:

When the company of the spearmen and | multi-tude of the | mighty ||
are scattered a- | broad a-mong the | beasts . of the | people ||
So that they humbly bring | pieces of | silver ||
and when he hath scattered the | people . that de- | light in | war. ||

The editors have frankly disregarded three things: (a) the parallelism of the original Hebrew; (b) the 17th-century punctuation; (c) the pronunciation of the final 'ed,' except in a few cases. They state their reasons for so doing, and quote authorities in support. Very few instances have been discovered to which exception can be taken. In Ps. 79, vv. 7, 8, and in Ps. 93, vv. 1, 2, there are changes of mood and sense, occurring in the middle of a single chant. This may be found to be a little disconcerting, because we had come to consider the single chant as the normal musical sentence in chanting.

(From a contemporary drawing)

GEORGE FREDERIC HANDEL

There cannot be even this slight objection when considering the Canticles. Devices such as these are essential to preserve the sense and to avoid distortion of the language. They have been freely used in the Te Deum (the most difficult of all Canticles to point, except when re-arranged), the Magnificat, and the Nunc Dimittis.

The accentuation of enclitics—i.e., words deriving their syllabic accent from the context—hitherto left to chance, has been carefully considered.

Several instances can be given in which the meaning of a word is made clear, and its significance increased, by proper accentuation, viz., the word 'own' in Ps. 67, v. 6, 'thanksgiving' in Ps. 98, v. 6, Ps. 107, v. 22, Ps. 116, v. 15, Ps. 147, v. 7.

The book is admirably presented. The clearness of the type and indications of pointing, both essential features, are commendable. The Editors have wisely omitted to suggest marks of expression. May one hope that many dynamic misinterpretations of the words that have crept into use will as a result be eradicated? A glaring example of this fault is sometimes heard in the following verse:

(ff) For this God is our God for ever and ever (p) He shall be our (dim.) guide unto (pp) death.

As a guide to the structure, general mood, and feeling, the headings to each Psalm, which previously appeared in the 'New Cathedral Psalter,' have been reprinted.

As is customary, the numbers of the Psalms have been indicated by Roman figures. It would have been helpful if ordinary numerals had been substituted, especially in view of the use of the New Lectionary. This may seem a trifling point, but it is worthy of consideration in the event of a reprint.

Some typographical accidents, inevitable probably in a first impression, have occurred: e.g., in Ps. 74, v. 24, the dot showing the sub-division of the bar has disappeared, and Ps. 119, a redundant dot occurs in v. 143. Also some bar-lines have 'broken off' in printing: e.g., Ps. 70, v. 4, Ps. 119, v. 129, Ps. 132, v. 8, and Ps. 144, v. 3.

I venture to suggest that when demonstrating this Psalter choirmasters should take Psalm 87, and contrast the pointing at present in use with that of the 'English Psalter.' This Psalm in the latter is extraordinarily well done, and contains examples of almost all the new principles in the small space of seven verses. When introducing the Psalter to a choir, Psalm 96 will be found a suitable one to rehearse first, because it contains only slight deviation from the familiar pointing.

Now that the 'English Psalter' is an accomplished fact, it only remains for individual churches where Anglican chanting is in use to give it careful consideration. There is no doubt as to the ultimate result if it is tested properly. Of course, no pointing of the Psalms can be invented which precludes any possibility of misinterpretation, and particularly so when the natural recitation of the words is of first importance. Choir and congregation must do their share by using imagination and cultivating a sense of rhythm. Anglican chanting may then be made a thing of beauty, and truly expressive of the deep religious significance of the poetry.

THE EARLIEST EDITIONS OF HANDEL'S 'MESSIAH'

(NEW LIGHT ON AN OLD SUBJECT)

By William C. Smith

(Of the British Museum)

So much has been written about Handel, Walsh, and 'The Messiah,' that it may seem futile to attempt to add anything of importance to what has already been published. In addition, however, to the fact that many of the popular statements on the matter are conflicting and inaccurate, there is a further reason for continuing the inquiry. Behind the few certainties and many speculations about the earliest appearances in print of 'The Messiah,' there is a mystery still awaiting solution.

The purpose of the present article is to reopen the question in the light of some recent investigations which may help towards an ultimate settlement, and at any rate, a summary of the existing evidence for this or that theory should be useful.

Readers of Handel literature will be familiar with the statements that 'The Messiah,' in its complete form with the choruses, was first published by Randall & Abell, in 1767, and that a rare version of the 'Songs in Messiah,' was published in 1760 or 1763, these editions being the first of the numerous reproductions of the immortal masterpiece.

The authority for the information with regard to the 1767 edition appears to be almost unquestionable. The work was advertised in the Public Advertiser for July 23, 1767, as being ready to be delivered to the subscribers, an earlier announcement on July 4, stating that it would be ready by July 7. For a fuller account of this part of the story, the reader is referred to the excellent article by the late F. G. Edwards, in the Musical Times, November, 1902, although further reference will be made to the subject later on.

As to the actual date of the first edition of the 'Songs in Messiah,' said to have been published in 1760 or 1763, there is unfortunately a good deal of repetition and contradiction in the statements of the authorities, but very little evidence. The matter is not referred to by Mainwaring, and apparently it did not attract attention until well on in the 19th century.

Sir George Macfarren, in a series of articles in the Musical World, 1849, refers to 'the edition of Walsh, published in the life-time of the composer.' This statement is qualified by Macfarren in his introduction to the libretto of the work, published by the Sacred Harmonic Society in 1853, and which reads as follows :

> It is remarkable that 'The Messiah' was not printed in the life-time of the author. This may be inferred from his legacy of the manuscript copy to the Foundling Hospital, and it is more directly proved by the catalogue of Walsh, his publisher, dated 1760, in which it is not included. A very scarce edition of the songs only, which has none but the first settings of the pieces that were recomposed, bears Walsh's imprint; this, however, is never advertised during Handel's life, neither does it appear in Walsh's catalogue to which reference has been made, whereas of all the other Oratorios, the publication of the songs is announced in the journals immediately after the production of the works. The earliest printed copies of the entire work bear the imprint of Randall, Walsh's successor, and they are chiefly printed from the same plates as this edition of the songs, but the choruses are as obviously printed from plates engraved at a later time.

Still another modification is made by Macfarren in the preface to the vocal score of 'The Messiah,' published by R. Cocks & Co., London, in 1884. In this case it is stated that

> The first publication of the songs in 'Messiah' was advertised by Walsh, the music-seller, in 1760, the year after the composer's death.

Schoelcher, in his well-known biography, says :

> The first collected edition, entitled 'Songs in the Messiah,' does not date further back than 1763, four years after the author's death. Even in this there were wanting five recitatives and all the choruses, and still we find all the airs as they had been composed originally, and without any of the changes which Handel had made. The first edition which is really complete is that of Randall, Walsh's successor, and it belongs to the year 1768.

Schoelcher also mentions how he met John Caulfield, the son of Walsh's apprentice, and that Caulfield, in recalling the conversation of his father on the question of the publication of 'The Messiah,' said that > Walsh demanded the MS., sending at the same time the usual honorarium of twenty guineas, which was the stipulated price of every oratorio which he printed. But the composer would not accept them, saying that rather than receive such a sum he would not publish the oratorio.

In considering the motives which may have prevented the early publication of 'The Messiah,' Schoelcher suggests that Handel > . . . valued this work from the beginning, much beyond any other, in spite of the indifference of the public.

and later on says :

> It must even be supposed that Walsh was in some manner religiously bound, since, in spite of the certainty of profit, he only engraved his book of 'Songs in the Messiah' four years after the death of the composer.

With reference to Schoelcher's remarks about Walsh, Frank Kidson, in his very interesting article, 'Handel's Publisher, John Walsh, his Successors and Contemporaries' (Musical Quarterly, July, 1920), says :

> It is obvious that Walsh junior is here meant, for the elder Walsh died in 1736, when but few of the oratorios were issued. 'The Messiah' in its entirety was not published until after the death of the younger Walsh, though one curious folio edition, 'Songs in Messiah an oratorio, set to musick by Mr. Handel,' bears a Walsh imprint. There is reason to believe that this was published by William Randall, who has used an old title-page, the first three words being inserted from a different plate in one which seems to have been used for all the oratorios as they came out.

Mr. Kidson's unique position as an authority on music publishers is well known, but it is difficult to understand why he has suggested Randall as the publisher of the 'Songs.' The evidence appears to be in favour of a much earlier date than has been usually accepted, and there seems to be no apparent reason for ascribing the first edition to Randall (i.e., 1766, or later), although he did publish some issues of the work.

It may be as well to point out also, that Walsh used more than one kind of plate for title-pages of Handel's oratorios, although the one referred to by Mr. Kidson is very common. Another plate was used for 'Joseph' (1744) and 'Jephtha' (1752), and the imprint on it reads : 'Printed for I. Walsh . . . of whom may be had all Mr. Handel's works.' While admitting that it is unsafe to interpret Walsh's statements too literally, it is nevertheless interesting to find that subsequent to the production of 'The Messiah,' the publisher was advertising 'all Mr. Handel's works.'

F. G. Edwards, in the article already referred to, says :

> 'The Messiah' was not published in its complete form during Handel's life-time. The Overture is said to have appeared in 1743, as one of a set of overtures published by Walsh, who, between the years 1749 and 1759, also issued eighteen of the vocal solos in a collection of 'Handel's Songs (400) from the Oratorios.' It is significant that while these 400 songs bear the titles of the oratorios from which they are taken, those from 'The Messiah' are printed without such headings.

These four hundred songs went through several editions, and instrumental parts were issued with them by Walsh. In the index to the volumes of these parts, the name of the oratorio is given to 'The Messiah' items, and in one or two of the parts the word 'Messiah' also appears in connection with the aria, 'But who may abide.' Evidently there was some definite objection to publishing 'The Messiah,' or even items from it, with the same freedom as other works by Handel.

Romain Rolland, in 'A Musical Tour Through the Land of the Past' (1922), says that > Handel had forbidden his publisher Walsh to publish any part of this work ['The Messiah'], the first edition of which did not appear until 1763, and he bequeathed to the [Foundling] Hospital a copy of the full score. He had given another copy to the Dublin Society for the Relief of Debtor Prisoners, with permission to make use of it as often as the Society pleased in the interest of their beneficiaries.

Other quotations could be furnished showing how contradictory the statements are as to the date of publication, and the equally conflicting opinions as to why the publication of 'The Messiah' was delayed.

It has been reserved for J. Allanson Benson, in his most interesting booklet, 'Handel's "Messiah"; the Oratorio and its History' [Reeves], to offer, with much that concerns the practical interpretation of the work, a new suggestion that the 'Songs' were first published as early as 1743-44, but were not advertised at the time owing to the objections which existed against the use of such a sacred subject as an entertainment.

The question of date is important, and it is necessary to quote Allanson Benson on this point :

> It has been stated that the 'songs' in 'Messiah' were not printed till 1760 at the earliest. This seems to me to be very unlikely. The appearance of 'O thou that tellest' and 'He was despised,' an octave higher in the G clef (the usual way of printing 'counter' parts for the use of the general public) long after they had ceased to be sung by that voice, cannot be accounted for. Then why should the original version of 'But who may abide,' which Handel had certainly discarded after the first London performances (we gather from a pencilled note in the autograph that he had tried a transposition in E minor for Lowe) be inserted, when the version with the prestissimo movements had been in use both as contralto (artificial) and soprano for years? The air, 'But lo!' which he wrote for Mrs. Clive, must have been written for the early performances in 1743, or possibly 1745, as she did not sing for Handel after 1746 ; and this was printed instead of the original recitative (14*a*) which had been reverted to long before 1760. Again, the version of 'Thou art gone up' (the mezzo-soprano version—not the original bass) seems to have been written for early performances, for it must have come before the 'Guadagni' version, as it is in this collection ; the 'Guadagni' not having been printed till Randall's score of 1767.

Nothing that has been discovered conflicts with the valuable internal evidence offered by Allanson Benson as to the first appearance of the 'Songs' about 1743-44, and some of his statements will bear amplification.

The writer of the present article has seen six early editions of the 'Songs.' They are owned as follows :

No. 1.	Newman Flower.	(First edition.)
No. 2.	Allanson Benson.
No. 3.	Newman Flower.	(Another edition.)
No. 4.	Harold Reeves.
No. 5.	British Museum.	(G. 160. p.)
No. 6.	British Museum.	(G. 160. l.)

From an examination of these six editions, it appears certain that No. 1 is the earliest and that No. 2 followed soon afterwards. Nos. 3 and 4 were probably issued some years later, and there is no difference between them except in the direction of the water-lines in the paper. Nos. 5 and 6 probably appeared still a little later, No. 6 being certainly the last.

In support of this chronological arrangement, the following points are important.

The title-pages of Nos. 1 and 2 are similar, and read 'Songs in Messiah.' All the other editions have 'The Songs in Messiah.' Otherwise the six title-pages agree, all having the same Walsh imprint. Other important features distinguish the two earlier editions from the others. They are paginated 1-70 at the bottom of the pages, in the centre. The others have additional paginations, to be described later. Moreover, Nos. 1 and 2 are the only editions with the aria 'He was despised' printed in the G clef with the direction 'to be sung an octave lower,' as pointed out in Newman Flower's catalogue of his collection and by Allanson Benson. Nos. 1 and 2 have, in places, different figuring in the bass from that of the later editions. The recitative 'Then shall the eyes of the blind' (p. 31), the heading 'Part the Third' (p. 57), and the separating stave marks (𝄂) which occur in the other editions are all omitted from Nos. 1 and 2. Finally, there are slight differences in the engraving which distinguish the two earlier issues from the others. Without doubt, Nos. 1 and 2 are clearly different from Nos. 3-6.

That Newman Flower's copy is the earliest is beyond question. It is identical with Allanson Benson's except for p. 66. In the former copy, the recitative 'Then shall be brought about the saying' has been omitted, but the page has been re-engraved for the Allanson Benson copy, the recitative inserted, and the succeeding staves of 'O death, where is thy sting?' compressed to make room for the addition.

Nos. 3 and 4, practically duplicates (see above), have in addition to the original pagination at the bottom of the pages, a second pagination at the top inner or outer corners running as follows, consecutively, through the volume: 1-10; 18-23; 37-41; 53-55; 60-67; 78-81; 106-109; 121, 122; 126-134; 142; 143; 153-155; 159-164; 34; 35; 172-174. Pp. 17-19 (bottom pagination) have, however, no top pagination. The second (or top corner) pagination was added to the plates when they were prepared for Randall & Abell's complete edition with the choruses, published in 1767. The appendix, issued as part of that work, and containing alternative settings of certain items, was paginated 1-35, and the numbers 34, 35 following 159-164 (top pagination) in copies Nos. 3 and 4 are explained as follows: They refer to the lengthened form of 'O death, where is thy sting?' which was printed in the appendix to the 1767 edition, the shortened version being inserted in its place in the body of the work. All the editions of the 'Songs' have the longer version, but in the issues subsequent to the preparation of the plates for the 1767 edition, the pages have the second pagination of the appendix.

It may be noted also that, with the following exceptions, the plates of the 'Songs' with pagination at the bottom were used for the 1767 edition. Pp. 17-19 ('O thou that tellest') were re-engraved, however, the aria for contra-tenor being lowered an octave for contralto voice, and the recitative, 'Behold a Virgin,' being included. This re-engraved version appears as pp. 30-32 of the 1767 edition, without any pagination at the bottom of the pages, although later issues of the 'Songs' still retained the contra-tenor setting from the original plates. Pp. 36-39 ('He was despised'), of editions Nos. 3-6 of the 'Songs,' appear in the 1767 edition as pp. 78-81, without any pagination at the foot of the pages, This is explained by the fact mentioned above, namely, that the first two editions of the 'Songs' contain this aria printed an octave higher than it was to be sung, but in the full edition of 1767 it was given the lower setting, and this version was included in issues Nos. 3-6 of the 'Songs.'

The last two copies to be considered (Nos. 5 and 6) have the same two sets of pagination as Nos. 3 and 4, and in places a third pagination. This third pagination, added to the top centre of pages 14-16 ; 20-24 ; 48-54 ; 60-65, of the original edition is correspondingly as follows: 19-21 ; 22-26 ; 27-33 ; 34-39. This requires further explanation. In 1746, Walsh published a volume, entitled :

> Handel's Bass Songs from all the Operas. Price 5*s*. London, I. Collins. Sculp. Printed for & Sould by I. Walsh Musicall Instrument maker in Ordinary to His Majesty at the Golden Harp & Hoboy in Catherine Street near Summerset house in y^e^ Strand.

This was followed the same year by :

> A Second Set of Favourite Bass Songs Collected from the Late Oratorios Compos'd by Mr. Handel. These Songs are proper for two Violoncellos. N.B. The First Set of Bass Songs are Collected from the Operas. London. Printed for I. Walsh in Catharine Street in ye Strand. I. Collins. Sculp.

This volume also bears another imprint in the form which appeared on the First Set as above.

About 1757 another volume appeared with a title-page like the First Set but preceded by the words 'A 3d Set of,' written in manuscript.

These three sets of Bass Songs were well advertised on various Walsh publications. They contain no items from 'The Messiah.'

Then, strangely enough, unadvertised, there appeared another volume entitled 'A Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs,' with a similar title-page to that of the Second Set published in 1746, and the two Walsh imprints retained. The distinguishing feature of this Fourth Set is that it contains numbers from 'The Messiah.' It is paginated 1-51 consecutively, and the pagination of 'The Messiah' items of this work is that which reappears as the third pagination on the later editions of the 'Songs' (Nos. 5 and 6) referred to above.

In addition to the consecutive and complete pagination, 1-51, every page of the 'Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs' also bears at the top the pagination of the particular song as it appeared in, presumably, an earlier edition of the complete oratorio or in an edition of the songs from the particular oratorio in question. In the case of 'The Messiah' items, however, there are the three paginations, i.e., those of the 'Songs,' the 1767, edition, and the 'Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs.'

On the surface, it looks as if this 'Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs' was published after the complete edition of 1767 not by Walsh, but by his successors Randall & Abell, or Randall alone, who used the earlier Walsh plate for title-page in conformity with the first three books. Randall's imprint appears on very few publications, although he continued to issue works with Walsh's imprints and title-pages.

It is significant in this connection to note, for later consideration, that this 'Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs' does not bear the word 'Messiah' on the music pages, neither the initials 'W.R.' nor the name 'Randall,' such as that publisher used in his later editions of the 'Songs in Messiah.'

The items from 'Judas Maccabæus' included in the 'Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs' have also the pagination of the full edition of the oratorio published in 1769, but the selections from 'Samson' present a peculiar problem. The full edition of this oratorio was also published in 1769, and the items included in the 'Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs' have the original pagination of the complete edition (pp. 42-44), as well as the new pagination (pp. 11-13) of the 'Bass Songs,' and the two paginations also occur on the corresponding plates in the full edition. Of these two works it is therefore impossible to say whether one was published earlier than the other. The reasonable explanation is that they were published contemporaneously, the one engraving of the plates being used for both issues. This is another illustration of the difficulties to be met with in investigating Walsh's publications.

Returning to the question of editions Nos. 5 and 6 of the 'Songs,' other facts are worthy of notice. No. 6 differs from No. 5, and from all the previous issues, in two important respects. The first is the frequent use at the top of the pages of the word 'Messiah.' Whether there was formerly any reason for suppressing the advertisements of the oratorio under its correct name or not, they had evidently disappeared by the time this volume was issued. The second point is the addition at the bottom of the pages of the word 'Randall,' or the initials 'W. R.,' clearly showing that this edition of the 'Songs' was issued by Randall—i.e., after 1766, the date of the death of J. Walsh, junior—and suggesting that the other five issues were not by Randall, or that they were prepared in Walsh's time, even if not all issued by him.

As a rule, the publication of Handel's works was very well advertised, as even a cursory glance at the newspapers of the time will show. With few exceptions, soon after an opera or oratorio was produced, Walsh announced an edition of the work, or the songs from it, and on most of these publications there is a catalogue of earlier works also to be had of the publisher. As the oratorios continued to be produced, so the advertised list of them was extended, but up to the present the most diligent search has failed to find any mention of the 'Songs in Messiah,' or of the complete work, in the advertisements before 1763.

As has already been suggested, there is some reason for thinking that the 'Songs' at least were issued some twenty years earlier than 1763. If this is correct, why was the work not advertised in the usual way?

It is well known that the oratorio was produced in Dublin in 1742 as 'The Messiah.' Reproduced in London three times in 1743, and twice in 1745, it was billed on these occasions as 'A New Sacred Oratorio' or 'The Sacred Oratorio.' It was not performed again, apparently, until 1749, when it was advertised as 'An Oratorio called Messiah.' Contemporary with the early London productions, there were in Walsh's publications one or two very rare references to the work as the 'Messiah.'

On December 12, 1743, the London Daily Post advertised:

> Six Overtures from the Opera and Oratorio's of Sampson, Messia [sic], Saul, Deidamia, Hymen, Parnasso; set for the Harpsicord. Compos'd by Mr. Handel. The 8th Book. These Overtures are also to be had for Violins, in eight Parts.

On December 14, 1743, a similar advertisement of the same work appeared in the Daily Advertiser, but with 'The Sacred Oratorio' substituted for 'Messia,' and this modification was also made in the title-page of the instrumental parts of these overtures, which appeared at the same time. On later sets of the instrumental parts (from about 1749) 'The Messiah' is advertised under its correct title, and not as a 'Sacred Oratorio.'

Between 1730 and 1760 Walsh published seven volumes of > Sonatas or Chamber Aires for a German Flute, Violin or Harpsicord. Being the most Celebrated Songs and Ariets Collected out of all the Late Oratorios and Operas Compos'd by Mr. Handel.

Vol. 5 of this set, published in 1744, contains one item from 'The Messiah,' namely, 'He was despised.' In the index the aria is stated as being from 'The Messiah,' but on the page of the work it is described as 'Air by Mr. Handel in the Sacred Oratorio.' No 'Messiah' numbers occur in the sixth volume of the series, but there are nine in the seventh volume, published in 1760. In this latter volume the items are described in the index as being from 'The Messiah,' but in the body of the work there is no indication to that effect.

The elimination of the source of 'The Messiah' excerpts included in the collection 'Handel's Songs [400] selected from his latest oratorios,' published from 1749-59, has already been referred to. It is only mentioned again here, as part of the evidence which exists to show that there must have been some significant fact behind the very occasional use of the word 'Messiah' as the title of the oratorio.

The first definite advertisement of the publication of 'The Messiah' appears to be that in the Public Advertiser of March 29, 1763, which runs as follows :

> This Day is published a Second Set of Handel's Grand Songs in Score, introduced in his Oratorios not printed before.
>
> Handel's Oratorios in Score of Judas Maccabeus, Samson, Occasional Oratorio, Messiah, Alexander's Feast, Acis and Galatea. Also a complete Set bound, 14 vols.

In passing, it may be worth while pointing out that copies of the 'Second Set of Handel's Grand Songs' are of the utmost rarity. But to return to 'The Messiah' : the Walsh advertisement of March 25, preceding the significant one of March 29, 1763, mentions 'Judas Maccabeus,' the 'Occasional Oratorio,' 'Samson,' 'Alexander's Feast,' and 'Acis and Galatea.' 'Also a Complete Set bound, 14 vols.' 'The Messiah' is not included. Similar advertisements, with slight differences, appeared on March 10, 15, 17, 18, that of Feburary 17, 1763, announcing 'Oratorios in Score in 13 vols.'

It may be thought it can be safely assumed that 'The Messiah' was first included in the fourteen volumes from March 10, 1763, onwards, but the Walsh advertisements are contradictory at times and not accurate guides. For instance, as early as June 29, 1751, it was announced that 'A Complete Set of all Mr. Handel's Oratorios may be had neatly bound in eleven volumes,' and on February 8, 1753, 'Handel's Oratorios in Score, in all, 22, bound in 12 volumes.' Similar advertisements at other times, suggesting that Walsh was offering all the oratories to date, could be quoted, but none of these would throw any further light on the query as to whether the advertisement of March 29, 1763, was coincidental with the publication of 'The Messiah' (songs or complete work), or whether the oratorio was published earlier and not advertised by name.

There was an advertisement in the Public Advertiser of September 16, 1763, which seems to sum up the position with regard to the oratorios. It mentions '24 Oratorios in Score (5 of which complete with recitatives and choruses).'

In the light of the foregoing, an approximation can now be made of the dates of publication of the six editions of the 'Songs in Messiah,' reviewed above :

Nos. 1 and 2 : 1743-44, contemporary with the earliest performances in London.

Nos. 3 and 4 : 1763, probably referred to in the advertisements, March, 1763, &c., and perhaps used in preparation of a full edition by Walsh, which was not, however, completed or issued by him.

No. 5 : 1769-70, a Randall issue, contemporary with the 'Fourth Set of Favourite Bass Songs,' but without Randall's initials or name.

No. 6 : 1770 or later, a Randall issue.

These suggestions are put forward tentatively, but at least there appears to be some bibliographical evidence for them.

Walsh advertised from time to time 'A complete catalogue of all the Musick printed in England. Price 6d.' Sir George Macfarren (quoted above) stated that the 1760 edition of this catalogue did not include 'The Messiah' or 'Songs in Messiah.' As no early copies of this catalogue appear to be available, although later Randall editions exist, it has been impossible to check Macfarren's statement. This is to be regretted. A copy of Walsh's early catalogue would be invaluable to musicologists and bibliographers, and it is not unreasonable to hope that attention having been drawn to its importance, one may be brought to light.

Having dealt at length with the dates and issues of 'The Messiah,' there now remains the problem as to why the Oratorio was not issued in Handel's lifetime, assuming such to be the case. Three or four theories have been advanced :

(1.) That Handel quarrelled with Walsh about the price.

(2.) That the composer wished to retain the copyright of his work.

(3.) That as a production it was so unpopular in its earlier years that publication was not worth while.

(4.) That the use of incidents in Christ's life and passion for an 'entertainment' was objected to on religious grounds.

(5.) Personal animosity against Handel.

These theories are found scattered about in the literature of the subject, and are here briefly referred to. It remains to examine them systematically.

The first theory, that Handel would not accept Walsh's price, is not very tenable. Why should Handel continue to give Walsh his other successful works to publish? Moreover, avaricious as Walsh is supposed to have been, would he have risked losing the position as Handel's publisher for a single work, and one not over popular at that? As has been pointed out, there is good reason for thinking that the 'Songs' were engraved about 1743-44, and as they were not advertised, it may be contended that a few copies were issued and the rest suppressed.

The second theory is not convincing in view of the facts (i.) that several copies of the manuscript existed in various hands ; (ii.) that the overture was published in 1743 ; and (iii.) that the songs were included in Walsh's collection of 'Handel's Songs' (1749-59).

The third theory has some weight as an explanation up to 1749 or 1750 only, as after that the popularity of the work is unquestioned.

Although there is little definite evidence for the fourth and fifth theories, they appear jointly as the most reasonable. The use of the title 'Sacred Oratorio' instead of 'Messiah,' and the omission of the name of the work even when excerpts were openly published, are significant points. That Handel's genius and personality did provoke opposition is hardly to be disputed.

Mainwaring, whose dates and remarks are so often open to question, lived through the period ; and it is reasonable to suppose that his statements in the following quotation at any rate are substantially correct :

> In times when narrow notions were more in vogue and when even men of sense were governed rather by appearances than by realities, Oratorios would not have been tolerated. In these happier days the influence of prejudice was not indeed quite strong enough to exclude these noble performances, yet it is even still strong enough to spoil them. For are not the very same arguments which prevailed for admitting Oratorios sufficient to justify the acting them?

Again:

> Indeed, in the year 1743, he had some return of his paralytic disorder; and the year after fell under the heavy displeasure of a certain fashionable lady. She exerted all her influence to spirit up a new opposition against him. But the world could not long be made to believe that her card-assemblies were such proper entertainments for Lent, as his Oratorios. It is needless to enlarge upon particulars which are easily remembered, or to give a minute account of things generally known. It is sufficient just to touch on the most remarkable. What is very much so, his Messiah, which had before been received with so much indifference, became from this time the favourite Oratorio.

As to the religious aspect of the matter, the reader is referred to a long letter, dated March 13, 1761, in the Gospel Magazine, Feburary, 1775, entitled 'Letter to a Friend, on going to hear the Messiah, at the Play-house.'

Whatever conclusion is arrived at, it is quite obvious that there was some reason why 'The Messiah' was treated differently from Handel's other oratorios, and although all the available evidence has here been brought together, the uncertainty still remains.

Surely it is not unreasonable to expect that some 18th century musical publication, diary, or collection of family papers may presently be discovered which will settle the question for all time. It will then be known whether the answer is to be found in Walsh's greed, Handel's special affection for this supreme work, or the strange spirit of the time which could see incongruity in the blending of such a sacred subject with the music of a master.

The writer of this article can only suggest, in conclusion, that there is offered here sufficient evidence to dispute many previously accepted statements, and to enable the question to be entirely reconsidered. Further, it is hoped that the various bibliographical and historical points raised en passant may not be without interest.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XIII.—Osbert Parsley

Quite a remarkable composer was Osbert Parsley, whose many pieces, scattered in various libraries, especially his 'Lamentation' (Bodleian e 1-5), proclaim him as worthy of inclusion among the late Tudor period. Yet all that was hitherto known of his biography is the brief record given by Mr. Henry Davey, whose reference to him among those 'generally unknown biographically' is as follows: 'Osbert Parsley (Persleye) belonged to Norwich Cathedral, where he was buried, aged seventy-one, in 1585.' Morley knew of his fame, and in his oft-quoted dialogue between Master and Pupil, he gives in score, in order that the pupil 'should the more easily perceive the conveyance of the parts,' Parsley's arrangement of the Gregorian hymn, 'Salvator mundi.' In his own quaint way Morley describes this example as a model of its kind: 'The plainsong of the hymn "Salvator mundi," broken in division, and brought in a Canon of three parts in one, by Osbert Parsley.' He also alludes to him as 'the most learned musician.'

As Parsley's span of life is given in his epitaph as 'seventy and four years,' it is safe to assume that he was born in 1511, and from being 'a singing-child' in Norwich Cathedral, he was appointed a 'singing man,' circa 1534, retaining this post, as is recorded in his epitaph, for 'full fifty years.'

During his career of a half-century as 'singing man' of Norwich Cathedral, Parsley enjoyed the friendship of Bishop Nykke (who had been Dean of the Chapel Royal from 1499 to 1501); of Bishop Thirlby (who was Dean of the Chapel Royal from 1540 to 1547, and also under Queen Mary); and of Bishops Parkhurst and Freake. During his time William Inglott, sen., was Master of the Choristers, a position he vacated in 1579, being succeeded by his son, William Inglott, jun., some of whose pieces are included in the 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book.' During Parsley's last years at Norwich, William Cobbold was a budding chorister. Mr. John E. West, in his excellent book, 'Cathedral Organists' (new edition, 1922), gives Henry Baker as the first recorded organist of Norwich Cathedral, holding office from 1585 to 1597, but it is more than probable that Parsley acted unofficially as organist from 1535 till his death in 1585. His monument, on the fourth pillar from the western door on the north side of the nave, once bore a eulogistic epitaph which has yielded to the ravages of time, and is now undecipherable. Fortunately, the wording is given by Sir Thomas Browne in his 'Repertorium' (1712) as follows:

Osberto Parsley,

Musicae Scientissimo

Et quondam Consociati.

Musici posuerunt. Anno 1585.

Here lies the Man whose Name in spight of Death
Renowned lives by Blast of Golden Fame,
Whose Harmony survives his vital Breath,
Whose Skill no Pride did spot, whose Life no Blame.
Whose low Estate was blest with quiet Mind
As our sweet Cords with Discords mixed be.
Whose Life in Seventy and Four Years entwin'd,
As falleth mellow'd Apples from the Tree,
Whose Deeds were Rules, whose Words were Verity:
Who here a Singing-man did spend his Days,
Full Fifty Years, in our Church Melody
His Memory shines bright whom thus we praise.

As a composer Parsley deserves to be held in remembrance. His 'Lamentation' ('Mem. Cui comparabo te') is of peculiar interest, and differs considerably from those of Tallis and White. It is worth noting that he has the plainchant melody throughout in the treble. The same Bodleian MS. (e 1-5) contains his Motet, 'Conserva me, Domine,' for five voices. In the R.C.M., 1,737, are fragments of two other pieces, 'Benedicam' and 'Multiplicati,' almost certainly extracts from larger works, as in the case of all the excerpts in the MS. In the Bodleian (D 212-216) there are two 'In Nomines'—à 4, and one à 5—by Parsley. The British Museum (Add. 32,377, written about the year 1584) has an 'In Nomine'; and another MS. (Add. 31,390, written about the year 1578) has a Motet by him, 'Spes noster,' arranged for five viols, in parts. There are arrangements of three of his Latin motets: 'Conserva me, Domine,' 'Benedicam,' and 'Multiplicati,' with lute accompaniment, in the British Museum (Add. 29,246-7); and a string quintet arrangement of 'The Clock' ('Persly's Clocke') among the Add. MSS., 30,480-84.

Occasional Notes

Not the least of the economic difficulties that hinder the circulation of important new works is the costliness of the full score. The demand for copies can never be large, and may be very small. Hence the score remains in MS., or is published at a necessarily high price. Hence, in its turn, the small demand; and so the vicious circle goes on. Is there a way out? Acting on the suggestion of the composer himself, Messrs. Novello have decided to invite subscribers for the full score of Mr. Holst's 'Choral' Symphony. A leaflet, giving full particulars, is inserted in this issue.

In our issue for August we quoted from a provincial paper an advertisement wherein the Rev. —— (we suppressed the name) undertook to give free pianoforte lessons and to pass on the pupils 'for examination to Prof. ——, Trinity College, London.' We now find that the professor named in the advertisement is not, and never has been, on the staff of Trinity College, London. In so far as our reprinting of the advertisement has caused any annoyance to the authorities at Trinity College, or may have appeared to reflect on that institution, we express our regret. We need hardly say, however, that our comments were aimed at the advertiser, not at the College.

Apropos of the recent letters in our correspondence columns concerning talking at concerts, and the allegation that women are the chief offenders, we take the following from L'Orient Musical:

> Le Musical Times recueille les plaintes d'un fervent habitué des 'Promenades Concerts,' ces fameux 'Proms,' dont la trentaine est révolue et que Sir Henri Wood dirige avec un zèle infatigable. Le fervent habitué s'élève contre le terrible brouhaha dont le Public, principalement féminin, se rend coupable en cours d'exécution. La Musique produit sur les canaris et sur certains auditeurs, les mêmes effets. La règle est générale, ici aussi bien qu'à Londres, et rien ne vaut une bonne petite symphonie pastorale pour vous engager ces sujets en des entretiens d'ordre ménager, pickles, plums, intarissables.

We have received more letters on the subject than we can accommodate. It must suffice to say that the writers, almost to a man, are women; and that one and all declare that le terrible brouhaha comes from the other sex. So they must settle it between them. We hope both parties will in future listen intently for the first sign of a word from their opponents during a performance. The rest of us will then be able to enjoy the music.

Evidently the talkers have been busy at Harrogate, for we hear of an amusing and complicated rebuke administered by Mr. Basil Cameron, musical director to the Harrogate Corporation. At Harrogate it appears that they not only talk, but make great play with newspapers. Mr. Cameron introduced into a recent Saturday night an item entitled 'Causerie,' 'dedicated to a small section of the Royal Hall audience.' The work consisted of a quiet movement, scored for strings. Hardly had it got under way, when the wood-wind and brass players produced newspapers and began to read, with much sonorous turning of the pages. Brisk conversation was then added, typical remarks being: 'Jolly good music, what!' 'Are you taking the cure?' 'Nice weather we're having,' 'Do you knit one and purl two?' 'Ta-ta, I'll see you at the Symphony concert and have another chat.' By way of Coda they gave a stirring exhibition of sneezing and coughing. Of course, hardly a note of 'Causerie' could be heard. Let us hope the reproof—quite in the vein of old Haydn—will be effective.

In Prof. Quiller Couch's latest book, 'Charles Dickens and other Victorians,' is a passage that calls for quotation. (It should be noted that the book is a reprint of lectures delivered at Cambridge by the author in his capacity of King Edward VII. Professor of English Literature):

> Now may I put in here, Gentlemen, and in parenthesis, a word of which I have often wanted to unburden myself? . . . Some of you—some of the best of you, I hope—may leave Cambridge for Fleet Street, a street which I too have trodden. It is a street of ambitions; but withal the centre of our English Republic of Letters, in the motto of which, though there can be no 'Equality,' let us neither exclude the 'Liberty' which Milton fought for, nor the 'Fraternity' of elder and younger brethren. I remember this plea for Fraternity being put up by an eminent man of letters, still with us; and being so much impressed by it that it outlasted even the week-after-next, when I found him taking off the gloves to punish a rival scribe. But these two were musical critics, arguing about music: and I have sometimes, pondering, thought that there must really be something naturally akin between music and prosody (arts of which I know so little), seeing that the professors of both pelt each other in terms of insult so amazingly similar, and with a ferocity the likeness of which one has to recognise even while murmuring 'Come, come! What is this all about, after all?' I suppose the average musical review in the weekly papers to contain more mud to the square inch than even The Dunciad! And you must acknowledge, Gentlemen, The Dunciad, with all its wit, to be on the whole a pretty wearisome heap of bad breeding. It kicks: but as they say in the country, there is 'plenty hair on the hoof.' What I plead is that all we engaged in literature take some warning from the discourtesies of the past, and that you, at any rate, who pass out into literary practice from this Tripos of ours, shall pass out as a confraternity of gentlemen.

Now what 'weekly papers' could 'Q.' have been thinking of?

The introduction of organ solos into the Saturday evening programmes at the Promenades has been so successful as to warrant a hope that the organ may eventually take its place as a solo instrument at other concerts. We notice with pleasure that organ solos have figured in the Saturday afternoon Chappell Popular Concerts at Queen's Hall. Our pleasure, however, is tempered by the fact that among the solos so far played have been Smart's March in G, and the 'War March of the Priests.' Without wishing to decry either piece, we venture to suggest that they mark a serious decline from the standard set up at the Promenades. On the occasion when Smart's March in G was performed, the pianoforte soloist played works by Debussy, Albeniz, and Chopin, and we see no reason why the organ solos should not have been of equally good quality. Smart's March in G is a good march of its kind, and is all right in its place, but that place is not a London concert-hall in a scheme that included performances by the English Singers, Myra Hess, Jelly d'Aranyi, &c. The organ still suffers from a popular belief that, save for the contributions of Bach, its repertory consists of music by third-rate composers. The choice of such solos as those we complain about merely confirms an audience in this mistaken impression. Why shouldn't the Queen's Hall audiences have an opportunity of hearing the organ music of Liszt, Reubke, Widor, Franck, Jongen, Rheinberger, Parry, Stanford, Howells, and a dozen others? (There may even be room for Smart, but not for his March in G!)

An unusual feat was performed by Mr. Alberto Zelman, the conductor of a concert version of 'Lohengrin,' given recently by the Melbourne Philharmonic Society and Symphony Orchestra. The tenor, Mr. Radford Hawley, was taken ill at the last minute, and a substitute could not be obtained. Whereupon the undaunted Alberto saved the situation by singing the title-rôle, in addition to conducting his chorus of two hundred and fifty and orchestra of eighty. The Melbourne Herald tells us that the audience was in doubt as to who was singing until the performance was well under way, the writer adding: 'It is the first time I have known such a feat performed. The late Prof. Marshall Hall used to make sweet moans sometimes at rehearsals; but that was a different affair altogether.'

There is an excellent opening for voluntary choral conductors in the classes held at girls' and lads' clubs in London. The clubs are mainly in poor districts, and cannot afford to pay a fee. The British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals, anxious to foster this valuable bit of social and musical work, will be glad to hear from voluntary teachers and conductors. Lack of experience need be no fatal bar, for the Federation is prepared to arrange a series of conductors' classes for the benefit of those who wish to help, but who lack the necessary technical equipment. (The formation of such classes is, of course, contingent on a sufficient response to this appeal.) Those interested should write to the Secretary of the Federation, 3, Central Buildings, S.W.1.

In connection with the forthcoming choir-training examination at the Royal College of Organists, two lectures will be given at the College. On Tuesday, November 3, at 3.30, Sir Walford Davies will speak on 'Rhythm in Church and Choir Practice,' and at 6.30 on the same day Mr. Stanley Roper will deal with 'The Training of Boys' Voices.' The College throws the lectures open to the public, free, in the hope that they will be of benefit to many who are interested in church-choir work.

An event of considerable musical as well as historical interest is the forthcoming production of Monteverdi's 'Orpheus' at the Playhouse, Oxford. The performances will take place on December 7, 8, and 9, at 8.0 o'clock, with a matinée (2.30) on the 9th. The soloists will be Miss Denne Parker (Spirit of Music and the Messenger), Mrs. Bertha Philipps (Eurydice), Mr. Sumner Austin (Orpheus), and Miss Marie Howes (Hope). The orchestra will consist mainly of local players, conducted by Dr. W. H. Harris from the pianoforte. The production will be in the hands of Mr. Nugent Monck, of the Norwich Players. A new translation has been made by Mr. R. L. Stuart, and Mr. J. A. Westrup has re-scored the work. (An article by Mr. Westrup on 'Orpheus' will appear in our next number.) Readers who are interested in the revival, and who wish for further particulars, should write to Mr. Westrup, at 58, Holywell Street, Oxford. Tickets may be had from Mr. C. Taphouse, Magdalen Street, Oxford.

Readers will remember the remarkable performances of 'The Magic Flute' by Mr. Ronald Cunliffe's Boys' Choir, at Todmorden, last year. The young Todmordenians are going one better shortly. Mr. Cunliffe sends us a prospectus of a three weeks' season of Grand Opera to be given by his choir from December 22 to January 9, the répertoire consisting of 'The Magic Flute,' 'The Golden Cockerel,' 'Pagliacci,' and 'Susanna's Secret.' The performances take place in the Co-operative Hall, Todmorden.

We like the following, from a Daily News interview with Mr. J. H. Iles, the founder of the National Brass Band Festival:

> 'How is it you are always pulling off so many prizes in band contests and in cricket matches?' one North Country bandsman asked another.
>
> 'It's like this,' replied the other. 'In our village, as soon as our boys can speak they are asked "Is it bands or cricket?" and if they don't say one or the other we just wring their necks!'

With this issue we present as a supplement a reproduction of a portrait of Handel which, we believe, has not hitherto been published. We owe it to the kindness of Mr. A. M. Henderson, of Glasgow, who purchased it at a recent sale of one of the finest collections of drawings and etchings in Europe, that of the late Bernard MacGeorge, of Glasgow—a Bach and Handel enthusiast. The original is a drawing in red chalk by a contemporary artist.

We reprint the following in no spirit of sniffing superiority, but merely because we think most readers will enjoy it as much as we did. An attempt on our part to reply in German would probably be funnier, and certainly less intelligible:

> To the > Mister Editor-in chief.
> Dear Sir!
>
> Enclosed we present to you two copies of our newspaper '. . . . .' Number 16 there will be interesting separately for you, because the leading-article treats the English Music-Festival at Bad Homburg (Germany) in a large particularity. We will also work for a international annexation of peoples by music, and we would be very much obliged to you for a well-wishing mention of the called article—separately of the last break—in your esteemed newspaper. In this case we beg a proof. In the agreeable hope of a frequenter exchange of newspapers,
>
> we sign with the expression of our greatest esteem,
>
> Berlin.

'On Sunday the rector officiated, and preached his farewell sermon. The choir rendered the anthem, 'O clap your hands together.'—Local Paper.

'Our cynical organist again,' comments Punch.

Our attention has been called to a misprint in the advertisement pages of the October number. On page 873, column 1, line 3, '7 Final Mus.Doc. passes' should read '7 Final Mus.Bac. passes.' The slip is partly excused by the fact that the advertisement was received late, and dropped into the page just as the Musical Times was going to press.

New Music

CHORAL MUSIC : UNISON SONGS

The output of unison and other songs for school use is so large that space allows of no more than brief mention of such as strike the reviewer most favourably.

Roy Thompson shows a happy touch in some settings of old rhymes—'As I was going to Banbury,' Follow my Bangalorey Man,' and 'Mister Ascham is a good man.' There is no repetition of words; the tunes are attractive ; and the pianoforte part has individuality without over-elaboration or difficulty. Junior classes will find these little songs very enjoyable. They are issued separately in Novello's 'School Songs' series. Felix White's 'Milk O!' has the same good points, though it is rather longer. Issued with it as a number of the School Music Review series is 'The Oak and the Ash,' arranged with a descant by Geoffrey Shaw. Alec Rowley's 'Wheat Cradles' (same series) is simple, with a few touches of harmonic richness that add to the effect without increasing the difficulty.

From a batch sent by Edward Arnold, I like best Jane Joseph's setting of Belloc's 'Noel' ('On a winter's night, long time ago'); Percy Judd's 'The Cock' and 'I have twelve oxen' (though the latter is rather too deliberately reminiscent of folk-song) ; and Herbert Brewer's 'Barley-Break,' a spirited setting of 'Now is the month of Maying.' Herbert Menges has effectively set a couple of attractive little poems from William Canton's 'The Invisible Playmate'—'The Orchard of Stars' and 'Bubble-blowing.' The music is unconventional but not far-fetched. Felix White's 'A Child's Evening Prayer' is a setting of Coleridge's 'Ere on my bed my limbs I lay'; it strikes a sincere note, and is music that appeals to both adult and child. Very happy is the accompaniment, with its slender but effective polyphonic texture. Herrick's well-known 'A Child's Grace' ('Here a little child I stand') has been provided with fit and simple music by Armstrong Gibbs. 'By the Moon' is a fanciful and neat setting by Edgar L. Bainton of Ravenscroft's 'By the moon we sport and play.' Given the right dainty tip-toe style by singers and pianist this should be very successful. All these songs come from Curwen's.

The Oxford Press is doing good salvage work by issuing some long-forgotten songs from Handel's operas. The two latest numbers are 'Ho! the trumpets' ('Vaga e bella'), and 'When my eyes' ('Quando mai spietata sorte'), both from 'Radamisto.' The English words (which are not a translation from the original) are by Charles Williams, and the music is edited by Dr. Whittaker. Another revival is Martin Peerson's 'Now, Robin, laugh and sing,' transcribed and edited by Peter Warlock. A good example of the longer and more ambitious type of unison song is Roy Thompson's setting of Tennyson's 'The Warrior Earl of Allendale.' Though not difficult it gives a good deal of interpretative scope for singers and player.

Felix White is very much on the spot lately as a writer of school songs. His 'The Cuckoo's a bonny bird' and 'The little red lark' are engaging examples of his work in this by no means easy field (Bayley & Ferguson).

C

PART-SONGS FOR CHILDREN'S AND FEMALE VOICES

A capital addition to Novello's 'School Songs' series is the set of national songs with descants by Geoffrey Shaw. Apart from their effectiveness they are valuable as a means of laying the foundations of part-singing. The tunes treated are 'The Bay of Biscay,' 'A hunting we will go,' 'John Peel,' 'All through the night,' 'Scots wha hae,' 'The Oak and the Ash,' 'Early one morning,' 'Oh, dear! what can the matter be?' 'The British Grenadiers,' 'The Ash Grove,' 'Good King Wenceslas,' and 'The First Nowell.' They are issued in separate numbers, and also as No. 271 of the 'School Song Book.' Though not difficult as a whole, they will give the best of classes something to work at, e.g., the florid counter-theme in the 'Bay of Biscay.' In the School Music Review series is a good two-part canon for equal voices by George Rathbone—'Nineteen Birds,' issued with a unison song by Geoffrey Shaw, 'Trees and flowers of May'; No. 396 contains three songs—a very attractive two-part setting of 'Bobby Shaftoe's gone to sea,' by Roy Thompson; something for the smaller children in a two-part setting of 'Ding dong bell' by the same composer ; and a unison song, 'The Willow and its Lesson,' by Myles B. Foster. No. 397 opens with 'Weel may the Keel row,' arranged for S.S., and a couple of unison songs, 'The Gas Jet' ('The gas-jet on my bedroom wall,' from Wilfrid Thorley's 'Cloud-Cuckoo-Land'), neatly set by H. A. Chambers, and 'The Rabbit,' by Robert T. White. Rather more extended than any of the foregoing, and calling for good part-singing, is George Rathbone's two-part 'Spring in the woods.' For three-part (S.S.A.) unaccompanied singing there is George Rathbone's well-written 'My true love hath my heart' ; and for the same voices, with pianoforte, a stirring arrangement by John E. West of 'The Campbells are comin'.'

From the Oxford Press parcel the following stand out : Harold Clark's 'Curfew,' a short but striking two-part canonic setting of Longfellow's 'Solemnly, mournfully dealing its dole' ; three delightful two-part canzonets by Martin Peerson, transcribed by Peter Warlock—'Cuckoo' and 'Come, pretty wag' (issued together) and 'Pretty wantons, sweetly sing'; and a suave song for two trebles by Handel, 'Beauty latety' ('Questo e il cielo,' from 'Alcina'), edited by Dr. Whittaker.

Harry Farjeon's 'A Ring Song' and 'The Wind blows north' are effective songs for S.S., the imaginative words being by Eleanor Farjeon (Curwen).

The spirit of Padraic Colum's poem, 'O men from the fields,' is well caught by Harold Clark in his setting for S.S. (But there are two bothering misprints in the first treble part of the opening and penultimate bars : the time-values are wrong.) Herbert Brewer's 'Amaryllis' is a bright setting (S.S.) of some anonymous (1611) verses. 'The Grasmere Carol,' words and music by Arthur Somervell, is a reduction for S.S. from the original version for S.A.T.B. (Edward Arnold).

Suitable for Christmas is a good setting for S.A., by Alec Rowley, of 'Ring out, wild bells.' Gerrard Williams's 'Whither go the swallows?' is one of the best of this month's batch—charming words by Wyville Home set as a kind of dialogue between a boy and a girl, the two voices combining for the final page. The same composer's arrangements of a traditional tune, 'The Morris Dance' (S.S.), and the Helston Furry Dance, 'Robin Hood and Little John' (S.S.S.), are good, but I feel the ostinato in the pianoforte part is a bit overdone in both cases. These are from Winthrop Rogers.

From Elkin's comes an attractive selection for various combinations of voices, the most notable being Edgar L. Bainton's 'What way does the wind come?' (S.S.); Cyril Scott's 'Lullaby,' an arrangement by Walter Kramer for S.S.A. of his well-known song; and 'To a wild rose,' an arrangement for S.S.A. of MacDowell's familiar pianoforte piece. Other MacDowell transcriptions are 'Hymn of the Pilgrims,' for S.S.A. (the pianoforte piece 'A.D. 1620'); 'Cradle song' for S.S.A.A.; and 'Dance of the Gnomes,' S.S.A.A. The same composer's 'Alma Mater,' S.S.A.A., would make a good song for school prize days.

Choirs in need of short, simple, unaccompanied work would be well suited by the latest additions to the St. Cecilia series of Joseph Williams, which consist of three-part songs (S.S.A.) by Lawes, Benjamin Rogers, and other old composers, issued in pairs.

The 'Hindu Song' from 'Sadko' has been arranged in a variety of ways. Here is yet one more version—for S.S.A. and pianoforte, by Julius Harrison. Given a good choir, able to deal with the little chromatic figures and to sing with variety of nuance and colour, this should come off well (Hawkes).

Kenneth Finlay's 'In Fountain Court,' for S.S.A.A. is an excellent setting of some lines by Arthur Symons. A good, well-balanced choir is needed. There is a lot of scope for good singing here, and the texture is first-rate, and full of interest (Ashdown).

MALE-VOICE

Some of the MacDowell songs mentioned above appear also in versions for A.(or T.)T.B.B.—the 'Cradle Song,' 'Dance of the Gnomes,' and 'Hymn of the Pilgrims' (Elkin).

Holst has arranged various folk-tunes for T.T.B.B. 'I love my love,' a Cornish song, calls for an unusually well-equipped choir—not so much because of any technical difficulty (though it is far from easy), but owing to the demands the composer makes on the second bass department. There are some low D's that must be well heard, and a long CC that is hardly likely to be more than a draught. 'Swansea Town' is more normal in every way, and a very jolly piece. 'I sowed the seeds of love' and the 'Song of the Blacksmith' are well-known in Holst's S.A.T.B. version. They appear to gain rather than lose by being arranged for T.T.B.B. Armstrong Gibbs's 'The Old Soldier' is a picturesque setting of verses by Walter de la Mare (T.T.B.B.). All these come from Curwen.

A striking and gloomy affair is E. Melartin's 'Moonland,' for T.T.B.B. and baritone solo, descriptive of Charon his boat-load of shadows (Chester).

Not much of Bach is available for male-voice choir, so there is room for a chorus from the 'Peasant Cantata,' 'Now 'tis time to go' (T.T.B.B.); cheerful—even convivial—and only moderately difficult (Paterson).

A choir able to deal with subtleties is needed for E. J. Moeran's 'O sweet fa's the eve,' for baritone solo and T.(or A.)T.Bar.(or T.)B. Is the circle going round to early Victorianism? One or two touches of harmony at the end are distinctly Spohrish. Spohr, of all the discredited dead ones!

John E. West has arranged Pearsall's 'In dulci jubilo' for T.T.B.B., in which form it should be very effective (Novello). There appears to be a shortage of Christmas Church music for male voices, so the Pearsall work will serve well for an occasion during the season when the boys are absent.

MIXED-VOICE

The beautiful folk-song, 'The trees they do grow high,' has been well arranged for S.A.T.B. by E. T. Sweeting in a natural, simple way that suits the tune and presents no difficulty to an average choir. Alan Palmer's 'Hoyda, hoyda, jolly Rutterkin' is a lively setting of some racy words by the 16th-century William Cornish. There is no difficulty so far as the notes are concerned, but the singers must be able to get over the ground quickly, and sing with boldness and vigour even in the quiet passages. The ending of this rousing part-song—a dim. to pp, but senza rall., followed by a mighty shout of 'Hoy!'—is not only very effective; it is also a useful reminder to choirs that final cadences, even when diminuendo, are not necessarily to be slowed down. A capital, rousing part-song, this. Easier, and more ordinary, but well-written for the voices, is A. Herbert Brewer's 'April is in my mistress' face.' These three songs are published by Novello.

A good essay in an old fashion, yet fresh and natural, is Thomas F. Dunhill's 'To Gloriana,' one of the choral numbers from the composer's music to the Guildford pageant. It is moderately difficult. Keble's 'November' ('Red o'er the forest peers the setting sun') has received an admirable setting from Edgar L. Bainton. Alec Rowley's 'Down in yonder meadow' succeeds so long as it keeps up the pleasant, simple style of the opening, but a few stickily rich chromaticisms at the end are out of the picture. Arthur Somervell's 'Grasmere Carol' appears in this batch as a simple S.A.T.B. chorus (Arnold).

Stainer & Bell have issued a set of 'Forty 16th-Century Rounds or Catches for three to ten voices,' edited by Heathcote D. Statham. Here are lots of old friends and many that should in due season become so. All are drawn from the two famous collections 'Pammelia' and 'Deuteromelia.' Dr. Statham adds an interesting and instructive preface.

Two Bach numbers come from Paterson's—'Spring comes laughing' ('Peasant' Cantata) and 'Welcome Chorus' from 'Æolus.' Both are only moderately difficult, and call for accompaniment, though the former is practically complete with voices alone. There is so little of Bach for unaccompanied singing that in the case of such choruses as this it might be worth while making the very slight modifications necessary to enable the accompaniment to be dispensed with. The effect of a mixed-voice choir and pianoforte is not happy, and most choral societies that do not perform works requiring orchestras rightly prefer to sing a cappella.

'The Hindu Song' from 'Sadko' has been arranged for mixed voices and pianoforte by Julius Harrison. The choir must be able to divide in all parts at times (Hawkes).

In the new Elkin Choral Series arrangements play a part for mixed voices as in the equal voice numbers mentioned above. MacDowell's 'A.D. 1620,' 'Hymn of the Pilgrims,' seems to call for the sonority of a mixed choir, and should be better in this version than in that for S.S.A. But it is a pity the pianoforte is made a necessary part of the arrangement. A good choir is needed for Edgar L. Bainton's 'A Musical Instrument,' an excellent setting of Mrs. Browning's 'What is he doing, the great god Pan?'

Elgar's 'The Prince of Sleep' (de la Mare) does not show the composer at the top of his form, but it has some characteristic touches—e.g., the cadences of the first and last verses. It is not difficult technically, but calls for good, expressive, sustained singing.

May the harassed reviewer enter a mild protest on a practical point in typography? Publishers are more and more adopting the habit of printing the pianoforte part of these works in type so small that the pianist has to play painfully peering, with his nose almost touching the page. A singer can hold his copy at whatever distance suits him. A pianist is not in that position. Unable to say at a first or even a second glance whether some of these microscopic crotchets and quavers are on a line or in a space, I found myself adapting Randolph Churchill's remark about 'these damned dots . . .' H. G.

VIOLIN MUSIC

Whatever may be said against the modern composer, none can accuse him of being idle or of taking his work lightly. With sharps and flats, with directions to the player (technical and psychological), with expression marks and subdivision of bars—he is indeed a busy fellow. Let us glance, for instance, at Willem Pijper's Sonatas (violin and pianoforte; 'cello and pianoforte) and Trio (No. 2), which have been published by the Oxford University Press. Pijper, by the way, is a well-known figure in Holland, and Dr. Weissmann places him at the head of the modern school in that country. The first page of his Trio for violin, 'cello, and pianoforte is all we need for our purpose, for it is typical of all the rest. The time is Andante molto rubato, and to the metronome mark are added the usual arithmetical symbols for plus and minus which we take it to mean 'more or less.' Naturally enough, the first query we should like to put is—When is it to be more and when less? In the third bar the only thing that happens is the addition of D natural to a chord held over from the second bar. Yet this lonely D is to be played not only p but espressivo. How can D be played, on the pianoforte of all instruments, espressivo? In the fourth bar the 'cello enters with three notes, of which the third is also marked espressivo ma pp. In the fifth, the 'cello has to descend a third, and this must be performed glissando espressivo. One could go on indefinitely, for there is hardly a bar in which the composer does not stand at the performer's elbow whispering piano or mezzo-piano, forte or fortissimo, and every trick from glissando to mutes and col legno is freely employed. In the old days, of course, something was left to the interpreter; a few expression marks and an indication of the pace of each movement are all that can be found in many a masterpiece. Why now this desperate anxiety for espressivi, why this constant jogging of the player's elbow to call his attention to this or that feature, why this delving for effects which are merely effects of colour and sometimes perfectly futile or even absurd, like the glissando espressivo? There are no two ways of playing a glissando. One may call for expression till doomsday, but the result must be the same. It may be that all these things have their purpose, that these are the prophets of to-morrow who will convert us in time, and we all of us shall do to-morrow what they are doing to-day. But the morrow is in the lap of the gods. To-day we have an uneasy feeling that some of the pioneers have taken so much to heart this window-dressing fashion that they are apt to mistake garish tailors' dummies for men and women. We hope to be mistaken in our impression, for, if we are, then this is the most fruitful era in the whole history of music, for the moderns, who claim to possess not moderate talent but the genius of the innovator, are as numerous and ubiquitous as the victims of Don Juan.

Another innovator is Otto Siegl, whose Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Ludwig Doblinger) bears every evidence of the dashing, devil-may-care disposition essential to the pioneer. Siegl is less determined than Pijper, for he does not need three staves for the pianoforte, and his rhythms are generally more or less conventional. But like the Dutchman he believes that rest and consonance are no longer necessary—not even by way of contrast. There is inevitable monotony in this highly-spiced harmony, just as there is monotony in the 'thrilling' episodes of a cinema drama. A succession of ninths cannot be much more interesting than a succession of thirds or sixths. When thirds were fashionable the man in the street found relief in ninths. Now the process is reversed, and we sigh for what is not. The future has been severe on those who abused consonance; it may be as severe with those who abuse dissonance.

Chaminade's 'Pièce dans le style ancien' (Enoch) has been reduced to pianoforte and violin—not by a violinist of very serious artistic aims, but the arrangement is what Chaminade's music deserves. The one is, like the other, pretty obvious—yet efficient in its way.

ORGAN MUSIC

It was a happy thought to add to Novello's Albums for the Organ one consisting of pieces for use at weddings. The choice shows a judicious blend of enterprise and respect for convention. There are four marches, that from Parry's 'The Birds,' attractive specimens by Hollins and Faulkes, and —of course—the Mendelssohn. Purists may give all sorts of reasons why the last-named should never have been allowed to become established to the extent of being regarded almost as an essential part of the ceremony, but the fact remains that at the time of its adoption there were apparently no good organ marches available. Having got into the organ-loft the piece stayed there, and it remains there largely because it is a good march. In this Album it is given in the arrangement by Best—a fine version, though, as is usual with Best's transcriptions, it calls for a very good player and a big organ. A dignified yet festal movement is made by G. J. Bennett from the Finale of Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and among the quieter movements are pieces by Henselt (an effective arrangement of the 'Liebeslied'), Hollins, Lemare (the dainty 'Minuet Nuptiale'), Mendelssohn, Schubert, and Wagner. Apart from its usefulness as a compendium of all the organ music that may be required at an ordinary wedding, the book provides several numbers that would make good recital items.

From Bayley & Ferguson comes an album of 'Twenty-three Choral Preludes by Bach,' the selection editing, and fingering being by A. M. Henderson. The degree of difficulty ranges from easy to difficult, i.e., from the little Prelude on 'Ebarm' dich mein' to those on 'In dir ist Freude,' 'Schmücke dich,' and 'Wachet auf,' and the so-called 'Giant' Fugue. Among the easier ones, by the way, are a couple of doubtful authenticity, but their origin does not affect their usefulness. Mr. Henderson has added helpful 'footing,' as well as fingering marks, and has also written some notes concerning a few of the more important Preludes. Every organist should, of course, possess the whole of Bach's works in this field, but for those who cannot, and as a preliminary collection for those who can, this album will be very useful.

Under one cover come a pair of short pieces by J. Stuart Archer, 'Compline' and 'Canon-Scherzo,' attractive and not difficult (Paxton).

Most of Mr. Lemare's recent essays have been disappointing, so one is glad to see in his 'Twilight Sketches' a return to something like his old form. The titles are 'Sundown,' 'The Thrush,' 'Glow-worm,' 'Firefly,' and 'Dusk.' Occasionally (especially in the first and last numbers) the harmony and sentiment are cloying, but there is genuine fancy and beauty in the suite as a whole. Perhaps the best piece is 'The Thrush,' which treats the bird-call very deftly. The degree of difficulty is moderate, except for 'The Firefly,' where an agile finger is necessary (Arthur P. Schmidt).

Sigfrid Karg-Elert's 'Zwei Gesänge mit Orgel' are mentioned here because their accompaniments are impossible on any other instrument. 'Abendstern' is for high voice; 'Geistlicher Dialog' calls for two singers—a high soprano and a baritone, the two being used together only for a bar or so. These songs are of great beauty, and one hopes that the publishers will provide an edition with a good English translation. They should then be welcome additions to the scanty store (outside the oratorio extracts) of fine things for organ recitals (Carl Simon, Berlin). H. G.

SCORES: WORKS FOR STRING QUARTET AND SMALL ORCHESTRA

Julius Harrison has put together three well-contrasted movements (Præludium, Sarabande, and Capriccio) from the clavichord works of Scarlatti, and arranged them for string orchestra (or quartet). The music bears transcription surprisingly well, and the result is an engaging Suite that will be a boon to string players (Novello).

Two Bach transcriptions come from the Oxford University Press. Gerrard Williams has arranged for strings and ad lib. wind (flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and trumpet or cornet) the Prelude from the E minor 'English' Suite—one of the longest and finest of the Suite movements. The familiar Chorale Prelude popularly known as the 'Giant' Fugue has been arranged for string orchestra by R. Vaughan Williams and Arnold Foster. From the same house come Vivaldi's E minor Concerto for strings, edited by A. Mistowski, and 'Recreations,' a suite in old style by Alfred M. Wall. Unfortunately the last-named suffers from its full score being printed by some lithographic process that is far from clear; and there seem to be a few misprints.

Durands send a miniature score of a new String Quartet by André Pascal.

A very interesting revival comes from Chesters—Purcell's Chacony in G minor. This appears to have remained unpublished hitherto, though it was played in 1909 by the London Chamber Concert Association. Though composed for viols, it is well adapted for performance by string quartet. The transcription from the original MS. in the British Museum has been done by Hannah Bryant, who has edited it and added a few expression marks. As its title indicates, the piece is an essay in Purcell's favourite form of ground bass. It is a beautiful and expressive little work. Chesters have also just issued John Beach's 'Poem' for string quartet.

H. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

It is a pleasure to be able to turn on Haydn's 'Surprise' Symphony in the set of records just made by Sir Henry Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra. Incidentally one is amused to find how little the actual 'surprise' itself goes for in these strepitous days. If you don't know exactly where Papa inserted what was at that date a crashing chord, I defy you to locate it in these records. Perhaps a timpanist might with advantage have been brought to the forefront for the necessary bang. However, Haydn's mild little joke never mattered much, and the main point is that the Symphony contains a great deal that is in the composer's most tuneful and attractive vein. The performance and recording are good, though, as is perhaps inevitable, some of the sparkle of the music remained in the recording-room. The work fills five sides, the remaining space being given to a capital performance of Jarnefelt's 'Præludium.'

The record of the Philharmonic Orchestra's playing of the Prelude to Act 3 of 'The Mastersingers' is good, and would have been first-rate with a more telling bass. On the other side is the Nocturne from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music. Here one is struck by the excellence of the horn recording. The movement is one that might well be heard more often. Does Bruno Walter take it rather quickly? There seems to be a suggestion of hustle here and there—the last thing one wants in a nocturne (12-in.).

W. H. Squire plays 'The Foggy Dew' and 'Believe me, if all those endearing young charms' with his usual luscious tone and expression (12-in.).

The vocal records are rather a poor lot, despite the distinguished names of the singers. Dame Clara Butt does her best to breathe life into two of England's worst songs—'She wore a wreath of roses' and Virginia Gabriel's 'Cleansing Fires'—but they remain obstinately dead. The need now is for speedy re-burial. Riccardo Stracciari gives a quite unnecessary performance of the Prologue to 'Pagliacci.' Several excellent records of this exist already, and a new one can justify itself only by being at least as good. This one isn't. Mr. Stracciari sings out of tune, and does all sorts of things that, if we were as critical about singing as we ought to be, would disqualify him for the title given him in the catalogue—'The World's Greatest Baritone.' As a rule it is a delicate matter placing these singers (Dame Clara Butt is hailed on the same page as 'Britain's Queen of Song'), but it wouldn't be much trouble to name half-a-dozen superiors to Mr. Stracciari, judged on his form here (10-in.).

Frank Mullings sings 'The Snowy-Breasted Pearl' and 'Kathleen Mavourneen.' (The latter might well be planted with 'Cleansing Fires.') I have heard Mullings to better advantage (12-in.).

Hubert Eisdell leaves the usual Italian operatic tenor far behind in beauty of tone, but it is a pity he sings such sentimental things as Haydn Wood's 'Valley of Roses' and Eric Coates's 'Yearning.' He gives both all the sentiment they can stand—which is much more than I can. His words might be clearer, especially in the second song, where his excess of soulful yearning seems to make him inarticulate (10-in.).

After these enervating experiences it was a tonic to hear Norman Allin stand and deliver 'See the way, you rogues,' from 'Il Seraglio,' and Fisher's 'Tavern Song.' We don't get all his words, but there are enough to serve as pointers, and the vigour, crisp rhythm, and humour of the Mozart are a delight (10-in.).

An excellent military band record is that of the Grenadier Guards Band playing the Rigaudon from Rameau's 'Dardanus' and a Gavotte of Herman Finck. The crisp playing of the clarinets and the neat rhythm of the performance as a whole make the Rameau transcription unusually successful (12-in.). Band records in which the music is first-rate and the wood-wind prominent will soon rival chamber music records in attractive power, if composers and recording companies rise to the occasion.

I do not often mention humorous records here, chiefly because so few are really funny. Here are some exceptions—Milton Hayes, meandering Montywise on 'Fashions' and 'Burglars,' the first being particularly good (10-in.); of the two ditties sung by George Robey, 'Nero' is by far the better, though George rattles it off a bit too quickly for clearness (10-in.); W. H. Berry is amusing in 'Spring,' especially in his painful tra-la-la's (10-in.).

H.M.V.

The only orchestral record received is a 12-in. of the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Eugène Goossens, playing the Suite, 'La Boutique Fantasque.' Apparently the record has been made by the new process. At all events it has a timbre unlike that of any other orchestral record I have heard. At first one has an impression that a military band is playing, so incisive, brilliant, and even strident is the tone. This is not all gain, for we get little real string tone. On the other hand, some details of the wind-playing are extraordinarily vivid and true. Probably, as the process is developed, the metallic, cutting character of the tone will be reduced. The most promising feature is the sign that at last we are in sight of orchestral records that shall rival—even beat—the dance orchestra and military band in brilliance and sonority.

Fibre needle enthusiasts and others who like a quiet life may protest that they don't want power, but I fancy most of us feel that an orchestral work in which power and brilliance are essential loses most of its point when the gramophone reduces the scale to such a degree that we feel we are listening through the wrong end of a telescope, so to speak. This particular record is, therefore, of great interest as a harbinger; when one gets over the first jar it is enjoyable. I add that a medium needle is advisable.

Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Paganini are not often heard, so there should be a welome for the unusually fine set of records of their performance by Backhaus (two 12-in.). The playing is masterly, and the recording well above the average. Probably most people under-value these Variations. I did until I heard these records, and I am grateful to the gramophone for once more putting me on terms with a hitherto unappreciated work—a masterpiece in its way.

Heifetz is as uncannily brilliant as ever in a couple of light pieces—an engaging Waltz by Godowsky and Achron's 'Stimmung' (10-in.). One may pitch into this player for his choice of small works rather than great, but when one hears the small thing so perfectly done as this Waltz there is really nothing to be said. I doubt if any other fiddler of the day could beat it, though there are no doubt several who could leave Heifetz behind in a big classic.

Of a good batch of vocal records the pick is surely that of Chaliapin in a couple of extracts from 'A Life for the Czar' (12-in.). Even the most zealous advocate of opera in the vernacular must be given pause by such singing as this. So varied and significant is the tone that one is held throughout, though not a word of Russian does he know. The ordinary operatic vocal record is mere futile ear-tickling beside this. The orchestral part deserves mention for its vividness.

A typical Galli-Curci record is the 12-in. giving a couple of 'Trovatore' airs, one of them very brilliant, ending at a dizzy height that will bring down the house where great store is set by mere altitude.

Apollo Granforte pleases me less in his latest record than in a former one of the 'Credo' from Verdi's 'Otello.' Here he is heard in 'O Lisbona,' from 'Don Sebastiano,' and 'Largo al Factotum.' A wonderful voice, poured out over-lavishly. Less power and a lighter method altogether would have improved the Rossini song, but it is still an arresting bit of work (12-in.).

Michael Fleta is heard in Lacalle's 'Amapola' and Cortesi-Bettinelli's 'Bimba, non t'avvicinar.' He still overdoes his diminuendos to such an extent that they become almost a stunt, but I like his singing here better than in any of his previous records.

Some good song records are those of Derek Oldham in Schubert's 'Who is Sylvia?' and the folk-song, 'The Cruiskeen Lawn' (10-in.); Peter Dawson in Molloy's 'Kerry Dance' and Godard's 'The Traveller' (12-in.); and Walter Widdop in two capital songs by W. B. Manson—'A Birthday' and 'Hence away, begone.' (There is a curious whistling effect in Derek Oldham's record that is due either to the singer's treatment of his sibilants or to a freak in the recording.)

VOCALION

The Kutcher String Quartet is recorded in Mozart's D minor Quartet—a work in which thousands of us enjoyed these players' performance by wireless recently. The playing is excellent, save for an occasional lack of balance, which may, perhaps, be due to the recording, for the fault was not apparent in the broadcast playing. One is the more disposed to blame the recording because there is at times a want of sonority. But the set, as a whole, is a capital start for the Kutcher party. The Mozart fills nine sides, the same composer being drawn on for the remaining space—the Minuet from the E flat Quartet.

The record of the Modern Chamber Orchestra in Holst's 'Country Song' and a couple of movements from 'La Cimarosiano' (Malipiero's arrangement of some pieces by Cimarosa) is not quite so good as one would expect, after the previous work of this band and its conductor, Mr. Stanley Chapple (12-in.).

The Life Guards Band is recorded in a 'Faust' selection that will doubtless be popular (12-in.).

Paul Kochanski has a couple of attractive choices in Raff's 'Cavatina' and Pierné's 'Serenade,' which he plays with perhaps overmuch vibrato (10-in.).

In the matter of vocal records one rarely meets with anything so good as that of John Coates in Quilter's 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind,' Morley's 'It was a lover and his lass,' and Linley's 'Lawn, as white as driven snow,' the Morley song being the pick. It is a model of light, easy singing, breath control, and rhythm (10-in.).

A record of similar excellence is the 10-in. of Olga Haley in Grieg's 'I love thee' and 'Les Trois Princesses,' a delicious song, apparently of folk-origin. Miss Haley sings it with a refreshing beauty of tone and rhythm.

Good operatic records are of Luella Paikin in the Mad Scene from 'Lucia' (12-in.); and Frank Titterton in 'Your tiny hand is frozen,' from 'La Bohème,' and 'Strange harmony of contrasts,' from 'Tosca' (12-in.). I have rarely, if ever, enjoyed a Malcolm McEachern record more than his latest —Richards's 'Captain Blaze' and Sanderson's 'The Old Shepherd.' The words are remarkably clear, and the first has abundant humour and point (10-in.).

POLYDOR

A parcel of Polydor records has reached me, some, I believe, not the most recent issues and therefore not calling for detailed discussion. I have been much struck by the excellence of certain records of works that, apparently, have not yet been recorded in this country. Thus, there is a fine one of a couple of Wolf's songs, 'Der Rattenfänger' and 'Verschwiegene,' sung by Heinrich Schlusnus. In the first the orchestral part is extraordinarily good—one can almost see the scurrying rats; the second is notable for the beautiful mezza-voce of the singer.

Violinists will enjoy the records of Vitali's 'Chaconne,' the player being Vasa Prihoda. Here a feature is the accompaniment, in which quiet organ tone is reproduced more successfully than hitherto, so far as I know. The odd side in four 12-in. is made up with an elaborate version of Schubert's 'Ave Maria.' Another outstanding set of records are those of Beethoven's Sonata in F, Op. 24, for violin and pianoforte, played by Robert Zeiler and Bruno Seidler-Winkler. The pianoforte tone is unusually good, and the balance could hardly be improved.

Of the orchestral records the pick are those of Beethoven's B flat Symphony, played by the Berlin State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Hans Pfitzner. These succeed where most records of the classical symphonies fail—that is, in clarity and brilliance. I have often felt that some of the conventions of classical scoring, such as the lower-octave-doublings of wood-wind passages, were responsible for the drab effect of so much of Beethoven on the gramophone, but there is no trace of the fault here. Incidentally, these records have converted me to a Symphony that hitherto has made little appeal to me.

'The Poet and Peasant' Overture is also an unusually good bit of recording, the players being the New Symphony Orchestra under Bruno Seidler-Winkler.

These Polydor records have proved very stimulating. I am glad to say that reviews of latest issues will in future appear in these columns.

Just as my notes are closed, comes the latest batch from the National Gramophonic Society. I can do no more than mention them now, reserving discussion till next month: Mozart's Oboe Quartet; the Sinfonia from Bach's Cantata No. 156; Brahms's Sextet in B; and 'By the Tarn,' Eugène Goossens.

Player-Piano Notes

By William Delasaire

ÆOLIAN

Chopin provides three important 'Duo-Art' rolls this month, all played by eminent pianists. The first is the ever-popular 'Polonaise' in A flat, Op. 53 (0231), recorded by Eugène d'Albert. It is certainly a thrilling piece of work, though personally I should prefer rather less of the 'thunder of horses' hoofs.' It is played with astonishing verve, and despite the high price is a roll which should create a wide demand. Arthur Rubinstein gives us a group of the Preludes, Nos. 1, 4, 10, 21, and 24 (6811). The style of playing does not please me equally in each, but this is purely a matter of taste. I must, however, point out one rather serious mechanical defect; in the last Prelude many essential melody notes are deprived of accent owing to the accent perforations being cut in the opposite section to which they occur. An intelligent owner will readily correct this, no doubt, but I suppose rolls should be edited having regard to the least measure of common-sense amongst owners. I read that critics have belittled the Nocturne in B, Op. 62, No. 1 (6443). Certainly it has a rather exotic and effeminate atmosphere, but in Friedman's hands it has an unquestionable, if cloying beauty. The passage, for instance, in which the theme breaks into trills is an exquisite example of decorative writing, and I fancy, too, that the work has an additional charm by reason of its being less hackneyed than many of Chopin's works.

A roll of outstanding importance is Scriabin's 'Poème Satanique,' Op. 36, magnificently played by Leo Sirota (0222). I am afraid that its harmonic style will render it caviare to the general—it is emphatically not a best-seller. Although, of course, not in his advanced idiom, it presents many of the composer's characteristics—extraordinarily distinctive 'bitter-sweet' harmony, 'wormy' counterpoint, and restless emotionalism—in a remarkable manner. I have had the roll too recently to analyse it in detail, but it certainly merits the most attentive study.

I cannot help thinking that Liszt's 'Mazeppa' Etude, in D minor (No. 4 of 'Etudes d'éxécution transcendante') (0232), approaches the vulgar. The middle section is a fine example of a Lisztian tune floridly ornamented—pianistically very thrilling—but the re-statement is really not good. With Emil Sauer the execution is certainly transcendent—in fact, it much transcends the inspiration, I think, and is a wonderful exhibition of virtuosity.

I must encroach on my wireless colleague's province for a moment to remind readers that Miss Katherine Bacon recently played from London a delightful little encore in the shape of Barberini's Minuet. Those who heard it and were charmed, as I was, will be glad to learn that Harold Bauer has recorded his own arrangement thereof (6820). The work has a delicacy and grace that make it one of the most attractive little pieces in this vein that I have encountered for some time. Rudolf Ganz plays his own 'Etude Caprice' (6823), and makes a very fine roll. A brilliant tour de force, it exploits the pianoforte in the most exciting manner. I prefer the toccata-like opening subject to that which follows, which is less original, but the whole makes an excellent 'livener.' The 'Waltz Medley,' arranged and played by Robert Armbruster (6817), is what I suppose the Americans call 'dinner music'—in this case a succession of popular waltzes pleasantly strung together. The playing is frequently better than the music.

The two best hand-played rolls are the Schubert-Liszt 'Hark! hark! the lark,' played by Ethel Leginska (A823), and Grieg's 'Scherzo-Impromptu,' Op. 73, No. 2 (A825). The latter bears the unmistakable Grieg idiom, and is a spontaneously wrought piece, played with distinction by Rudolf Reuter. Litolff's Scherzo (A819) and Geneviève Pitot's playing of 'Marcheta' (A817) were commented upon recently in their 'Duo-Art' form.

Beethoven lovers will welcome the issue in straight-cut form of his Sonata, Op. 14, No. 1 (24651/2). It is all fine, vigorous music, and the last movement especially provides splendid practice in accentual pedalling. Indeed, the whole work is made interesting or dull according to the manner of performance. Holbrooke's 'Queen Mab' (24648/50), arranged by the composer, is a remarkable work which I have also been unable to study adequately at the moment. It contains much beautiful music. Rosenbloom's Polonaise in A flat, Op. 27 (24647), is perhaps not entirely without inspiration from Chopin's work in the same key. It is a vigorous piece, rather rambling perhaps, but effectively written for the instrument.

ANGELUS

Most of these I have noted recently when issued by the Æolian Company. Of the remainder, the Albeniz 'Fête-Dieu à Séville,' from Book 1 of 'Iberia' (92067), is the most notable. It is a wonderfully coloured piece of writing—a tone-poem in miniature—and full of the greatest interest for the player-pianist. I need not remind readers that Albeniz is one of the most important of modern composers for the pianoforte, and here one gets his extraordinary 'pictorial' facility to the full. What a wonderful chatter and excitement there is! The listener immediately visualises a market-place in the Cathedral square with all its life and colour, and odd juxtaposition of worldly and spiritual things. A remarkable roll.

I like Tchaikovsky's Berceuse (89029) for its musicianly writing, a pleasantly monotonous pedal effect, syncopation, and quietly musing tune.

ANIMATIC (Hupfeld)

I was glad to record my appreciation of Geiseking's playing of Debussy's 'Reflets dans l'Eau' (58763) in last month's issue. Since then my exalted opinion of Geiseking has been confirmed at his recent recital in London. He is certainly one of the world's great pianists, with an unequalled range of colour between mezzo-forte and pianissimo. He has recorded exclusively for the 'Animatic' rolls, and I have now to hand three further examples of his playing, in which, although the all-important matter of dynamics is left to the player, one has the joy of co-operating with his tempo-record. These rolls are Liszt's second Legend, 'St. Francis walking on the Waves' (58770), the Scherzo-Caprice from Walter Niemann's 'Alt-China' Suite (58773), and Debussy's Arabesque No. 2, in G (58863). The first is too well-known to call for comment; the second is a delicate little atmospheric piece with charming local colour, and of the last I cannot imagine a more perfect performance.

Two examples of music that is light but good are Schütt's 'Carnaval Mignon,' Nos. 4-6 (53056), and Moszkowski's 'Air de Ballet,' Op. 36, No. 5 (51717). They are first-class salon music played in a distinguished manner, and will please both the discerning listener and the person who is merely 'passionately fond' of music. Contrasting with these are Debussy's 'Pagodes' (Estampes, No. 1) (51803), played by Michael Zadora, and two Intermezzi of Brahms, Nos. 3 and 4 from Op. 76 (55745), recorded by Arthur Schnabel. The Debussy is a fine piece of impressionism aptly interpreted; the Brahms is particularly good, in my opinion, and a noteworthy example of the beauty of these hand-played rolls. And lastly, Grieg's 'Humoresque,' Op. 6, No. 1 (55745), in straight-cut form, and Moszkowski's 'Pantomime,' Op. 77, No. 8 (55187), deserve honourable mention.

SIGHT-READING

By Watson Lyle

Though it is perfectly true that some pupils display a greater natural aptitude than others in reading music at first sight, it is still truer that the ability of all in this very essential detail of a musician's professional equipment can be greatly improved by daily practice, along a course of study graded to meet the needs of the individual.

Even a quarter of an hour every day is worth a couple of hours one day in the week, or—as frequently appears to be the case with backward readers—an hour or so occasionally. This applies particularly to the reader whose ability is so elementary that he must muddle along at a slow and irregular pace, playing promptly those chords and arpeggi that are quickly taken in by the eye because of their familiar shape, and stumbling over the unfamiliar ones. This kind of thing is, of course, merely reading the print and translating it into sound by the mechanism of the instrument, or the voice. The really good sight reader plays, or sings, the music with time-values of notes, rhythm, phrasing, and tonal balance as they should be. In the case of a piece that is technically simple, or of superficial appeal, a quite personable interpretation will be managed as well.

At first the brain refuses to continue for any considerable time the duple process entailed by the reading of the printed notes and their reproduction in accordance with the mechanism of the instrument, so that the student who begins to brighten up his sight-reading for ten minutes daily will return to it, after the first trial, with keen interest, instead of with a distaste engendered by recollections of the dreariness that arose from the attempt made to stick at it for an hour on the previous occasion. The period devoted to this particular section of practice may soon be extended to from twenty to thirty minutes. It must be remembered that there is a somewhat greater eye-strain, as well as an increased tax upon the motor processes of the brain, when music is being played from at first-sight than when the student has the score before him merely to refresh his memory.

Only music that is well within the theoretical knowledge and technical ability of the player should be used in sight-reading practice. To become slick and fluent at translating the written signs into the sounds, the brain should not be hampered by having to make a conscious effort, simultaneously, over executive details, or trying to remember theoretical dicta. There is help for the beginner (and most professional pianoforte accompanists find it useful) in reading the score through, silently, before trying to play or sing the music. Expression marks and other directions regarding the manner of performance may then be noted, and if unfamiliar, looked up for their meaning. Helpful as this preliminary study undoubtedly is, especially for vocalists, it hardly comes within the strict definition of the term 'sight-reading.' However, since it is very useful in speeding-up the acquirement of the desired facility, it cannot be ignored. While reading in this way it is important to remember that unless that which is seen is also mentally heard the value of preliminary study is greatly discounted.

Much hesitation and stumbling in playing through, or singing, music at first sight is a pretty sure indication that the theoretical and technical knowledge is being overtaxed. In whatever else you err, do not stop and stumble to correct mistakes whilst actually playing the piece through. If you give in to this quite natural instinct you may as well abandon all thought of becoming a proficient sight-reader. Try the same piece through, but still without stopping, a second time or more, and you will find the rough places become smooth: this presuming that actual ignorance of the meaning of the symbols on the printed page is not the true explanation of the trouble, but merely a feeling of newness in the music.

Accuracy in note-values as well as in pitch, &c., must be aimed at, and there is no particular reason why the whole piece should not be taken at a slower tempo throughout than is indicated by the general direction—i.e., Allegro vivace might be taken Allegro ma non troppo, and so on, so long as rhythm, phrasing, and time-distribution are not interfered with. But as progress is made these easy ways should be discarded, or a lazy, dragging style of performance may be formed. With chordal harmony a safe rule is to read from the bottom upwards whether or not the lowest note is the root of the chord, and also whether or not the intervals of the chord are to be played simultaneously or in arpeggi. It is here that a sound knowledge of harmony will be found of the utmost service.

When a considerable degree of proficiency has been attained in playing or singing at first sight, the student should form the habit of utilising, for this part of his practice, any and every type of music he comes across, and that he can beg, borrow (or steal!), including MS. He should likewise practise from full score, adapting it to the limitations of the pianoforte, if he is a pianist, or just playing all the parts for his especial instrument if he is an orchestral player. The training of the eyes is the object to keep well in view.

Ensemble practice is another excellent way of sharpening the wits and general musicianship, and is practically indispensable for all who aim at the career of being players in orchestras, large or small. Potential solo players should also avail themselves of every opportunity for this kind of practice, not only because of its general value, but because familiarity with team work will be required should they ever come to play concerti in public. The student must be on edge for cues the whole time, as it is truly a case of 'the devil take the hindmost.' For similar reasons, and by way of preparation for ensemble practice, the performance of duets is most helpful. Pianists and organists whose professional duties entail much accompanying should, of course, devote special care to acquiring and perfecting the ability to play from music at first sight.

Music in the Foreign Press

DARIUS MILHAUD

In Le Ménestrel (August 14-28), Paul Landormy devotes a thoughtful essay to Darius Milhaud:

> Melodically, his music is tonal. The contrapuntal treatment is polytonal. It is true that theory proves capable of reducing this polytonality to the usual schemes in one key. Hence certain writers started asserting that there is no such thing as polytonality, and describing polytonality as a mere 'illusion.' But in art, after all, illusion is the only thing that matters: there is a certain kind of music which conveys the impression of being in one key, and another kind which conveys the impression of being polytonal. All arguments to the contrary are mere theory.

The writer finds much to praise in Milhaud's output, and especially in his dramatic works, 'Agamemnon,' 'Les Coéphores,' and 'Les Euménides'; in the 'Soirées de Pétrograd,' the fourth String Quartet, the Sonatina for flute and pianoforte, and the three books of songs.

> Schönberg and Milhaud are the first Jewish composers who, instead of trying to resemble Europeans, boldly assert themselves as Jews, and modify the modern musical idiom according to their atavic instinct. Hence, for instance, the particular power and eloquence of Milhaud's 'Chants Juifs.'

By way of postscript the editor publishes an excerpt from a letter written by Saint-Saëns to Gabriel Pierné in 1921, after the performance of a work by Milhaud:

> I see with grief that you find room in your programmes for insane aberrations which you force upon a revolted public. Several instruments playing each in a different key do not constitute music, but a charivari.

OLD HUNGARIAN MUSIC

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (September) appears the first of a series of Essays devoted by Benedikt Szabolski to the problems confronting investigators of the history of Hungarian music. This Essay deals with the musical texts provided by Sebastian Tinodi's 'Cronica' (1554) and another book of the 15th century, usually called the Hoffgreff Collection.

BRITISH MUSIC AT BAD HOMBURG

In Das Orchester (September), Reinhold Scharnke devotes an article to the works by British composers, ancient and modern, performed at Bad Homburg in the course of three special concerts. He praises the music of Bax, Vaughan Williams, McEwen, Frank Bridge, Ireland, Elgar, Parry, Holst, Peter Warlock, and others; and he describes the performances, by Martha Kuhn Liebel, Dorothy Doria Grey, and the Music Society String Quartet, as altogether excellent.

DUTCH FOLK-TUNES

In the Zeitschrift für Musik (September), Prof. J. Röntgen writes on Dutch folk-tunes, with special reference to a collection of over eight hundred examples printed at Amsterdam in 1700 or thereabouts.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'The Problems of Modern Music.' By Adolf Weissmann. Translated by M. M. Bozman.

[Dent, 6*s*.]

The great attraction about this book is its dealing in ideas. It is rather rare for an idea to crop up in musical criticism, which has a way of sprouting with irrelevant biography, egoism, and elaborate periphrasis for 'I do (or don't) like this, that, or the other.'

Captious readers might like to dispute with Prof. Weissmann on every other page, but all will agree that he is trying seriously to grapple with his subject. He is not out to make a smart personal display; and he is not the 'propagandist' of any individual, chapel, or nation. We are glad to meet a non-nationalist. A casual glance shows a great deal of space given to such composers as Bruckner, Reger, Mahler, and Pfitzner, which are hardly names of burning actuality. But those chapters turn out happily to be not partial apologies, but good, detached criticism. We should dread a man with a brief for those four, but they make useful and not over-worked material for a musical writer who can bring a few general ideas into play.

Another thing. Prof. Weissmann is not a bit dull. The composition of the book may be rather scrappy, but (in this translation at least) there is nothing of the terrible 'woolliness' of typical German prose.

The course of music is, probably, in most people's minds, pictured as directed by the commanding genius of a certain few composers; and if the question is pushed farther, 'But whence did those great men get their sense of direction?' the average man will fall back rather helplessly on a theory of some preternatural inspiration. Prof. Weissmann is intensely conscious how much genius depends on the age and its circumstances—how much, in fact, the works of genius are shaped by the contemporary spirit.

'The Music Market' is the title of one chapter. It is suggestive. It comes very near the beginning, and although we have never before heard of a musical professor starting an æsthetic discourse with considerations on concert agents, newspaper publicity, crowded audiences, and the rest of the modern machinery for music's dissemination and the necessary money-getting, Prof. Weissmann is surely right. Music is to-day the most intensely alive of the arts (except, perhaps, novel-writing), and it is only the obsolete arts, like blank-verse drama and the painting of altar-pieces, which can ignore the Market. By the Market, in a commercialised world, we all live.

Of course there must always have been a Music Market where there was music. The question of the demand has, after all, always had some bearing on the nature of the supply. But to-day the market is something different from what it was even a generation ago.

Our author sees in Haydn's admirably-organized London visit of 1791 the first handling of music by Big Business. It was auspicious, even unduly auspicious. It was an all-round success, a social and an artistic and a lucrative coup altogether much prettier than anything our latter-day 'concert-directions' (absurd nomenclature!) manage to achieve.

The modern market has a prodigious extension. It affords quite moderate talents a world-wide celebrity—just what such men of the past as Berlioz and Wagner craved for in vain. It is true that they enjoyed something which the present-day world refuses to its musicians—a stiller air, a chance for peace, retirement, and concentration. How to-day is a musician of any eminence to stop his ears—as a Beethoven could do and a Bach had no need of doing—to the clatter of publicity, critical, analytical, or just gossiping?

We may like the position or not, but there it is, and the interesting point is the formative effect on music. Clearly it has brought about an enormous vulgarisation on the one hand, and in opposition to that a music of far-fetched subtlety, scrupulously hedged in for the few. Prof. Weissmann's chapter is short, but it starts a train of reflection we can all carry on for ourselves. He sums up:

> Publicity and the 'market' can only prove helpful to music when interest in that art is inherent in a people. . . . Within recent times the music industry has caused profound changes in the musical life of Germany, a heightened sensibility which is favourable to progress, but also a want of quietude and serenity.

The next chapter is 'Art and Artifice.' Turning the pages, one is caught by a characteristic phrase: 'Vocal music is undoubtedly endangered by the unsatisfied and insatiable longings of the over-sensitive modern temperament.' And later: 'The doubts which at once enrich and torment the modern composer.' Thus we have the modern temperament held responsible for a definite, technical fact of modern music, and we come upon the 'doubts' which make this book, on the whole, depressing reading.

No doubt the responsibilities of the modern composer and the burden of the heritage of music ('the terrific burden of the past which forces him and his contemporaries to seek new forms of expression,' says our author in the Schönberg chapter) weigh more heavily in Germany than elsewhere. But can a musician anywhere in the world to-day quite escape the sense of that burden? There are few—the music of our times admits how very few—who have never at some moment had to ask themselves, 'What new thing remains to be said under the sun?' The past of the art is so well-known, and who so self-sure as to feel the man to state the eternal verities over again?

Inhibitions, paralysing inhibitions, are, then, a symptom of the musical times. Prof. Weissmann has hardly anything to say about Stravinsky, but he has a first-rate chapter on Schönberg, though not a very encouraging one. Schönberg was wanted, and it was handsome of chance or nature thus to have supplied the want—if the story of German romantic music from Weber and Schubert onwards was to be complete. Such music as Weber's and Schubert's simply grew and multiplied in a free field. As we read Prof. Weissmann, we see that Schönberg's seed—a most hopeful samp'e, too—had no room to germinate.

It is a most interesting story, if somewhat grim. Schönberg is an intensely musical nature, but also passionately critical, and generally of a powerful intelligence. He could not be trivial, as Mahler was. The oppression of the past was such that he sought to rid himself of every scrap of tradition. The Debussyans had made a fairly clear sweep, but not enough for Schönberg, who went on to discard a last principle, that of sequence. (Hence the famous Op. 11.) He was left with nothing but sound.

> The idea of beauty, variable as it is by nature, he argued away entirely; and the emotions and thoughts of a common humanity—also less well-defined than is generally supposed—were discarded as immaterial to a ruthless search for truth and truthful expression. . . . Schönberg's sense of tone was at first romantically beautiful, but in his later work it is non-existent. He has succeeded in arguing it away.

The pianoforte pieces, Op. 11

> . . . sprang from a sense of sound distorted by theoretical Expressionism, and they are almost agonised attempts to give artistic form to the reality behind appearances.

The summing-up is that his art springs from an imagination injured and finally crippled by too much theory, but that > . . . he is undoubtedly the most stimulating influence in the musical world at its present critical period.

After Schönberg, none of the professor's other chief subjects appears either problematical or indeed modern. We quote a few of his terse verdicts.

On Bruckner:

> He will remain the possession of a few, but he will, at least for a time, lead many a weary futurist back to the source of music.

Pfitzner

> . . . is a gnarled and tangled thicket of mingled qualities. . . . His work will have value only in the history of the development of music, but he himself remains, in spite of limitations, one of the greatest Germans of the age.

Mahler's life was greater than his work, 'which was for the most part baulked of fulfilment by imitativeness; the man himself retains our hearts.' Reger's work 'is stimulating, though not in itself great art.' Strauss 'is the last great German of our day, and, so far, the last one who may fairly be called a genius.'

It is natural enough that to this Berlin professor (who is no whit a chauvinist) other countries are as islands off the musical mainland. On Debussy he is good—cool and a bit ironic, but, on the whole, just. But Duparc's songs are called 'amateurish,' and Fauré's songs are not mentioned. The young Frenchmen are not considered worth even a cuff on the ear.

And England? Evidently ours is not the land for the seeker after musical problems. The frontispiece to the book is a portrait of Sir Edward Elgar, but Prof. Weissmann has only two or three words to say of him—and these might have been more happily chosen. He is a 'true heir of Brahms' and a 'witness to the connection between the best musicians and folk-music.' Somehow the real Elgar seems to us neither here nor there!

Mr. Edward Dent's charmingly urbane and very interesting Introduction makes us wish again that he would give us some of his scattered periodical writings in the form of a book. C.

'The Control of the Breath.' An Elementary Manual for Singers and Speakers. By George Dodds, Mus.B., and James Dunlop Lickley, M.D.

[Oxford University Press. London: Humphrey Milford, 6*s*.]

So many books have been written on the subject of respiration, and so divergent are the views expressed—and frequently backed up by apparently unanswerable arguments—that the average student may well be pardoned if he feels that it is scarcely necessary to add to his mental confusion by producing yet another work on so controversial a subject. The present volume, however—the joint production of a singing teacher of wide experience in the North of England and of a lecturer on Applied Anatomy at University of Durham College of Medicine—is not, one thinks, at all likely to increase the fog which already may have settled on the hapless student. On the contrary, it appears to go far towards achieving its object as expressed in the preface, viz.,

> To present a description of the mechanism of respiration, and an explanation of its action in such a manner that the student of singing, elocution, or physical culture may have a basis upon which existing systems or authorities can be examined and judged.

The explanations and terminology are as non-technical as possible, and so add to the work's helpfulness to the ordinary reader.

The first part of the book deals with 'Structures and Mechanism,' under the headings: The Structure of the Respiratory Organs—The Mode of Action of the Respiratory Mechanism—Types of Breathing—The Production of Tone in the Larynx—Attack—The Open Throat. Part 2 consists of Exercises. These include Breathing Exercises—Messa di voce—Pressure Variations—Length of Breath and Control in Vocalizing—Singing or Speaking on the Breath—Attack Exercises—Sostenuto—Phrases requiring Good Breath Supply and Control.

The description of the structure of the respiratory organs is clear and concise, and is illustrated—as are the other sections of the book—by numerous helpful diagrams. In discussing the muscles that take part in the movements of respiration, a distinction is made between what are here called the muscles of quiet respiration (the diaphragm, the intercostal muscles, and the quadratus lumborum), which are used in ordinary quiet breathing, and those which are brought into use only during extra effort, and known as muscles of forced respiration. The writers hold that for most purposes in the life of a healthy person the mechanism of quiet respiration during inspiration is ample; it should suffice for ordinary work, and should be more than sufficient for all vocal purposes, whether of speech or song. In expiration, however, where increased pressure is required during singing or speaking, the abdominal muscles are brought into use:

> Too much stress cannot be laid on the fact that it is not by the employment of the muscles of forced inspiration that breathing capacity for ordinary or vocal purposes is improved, but by the development of the muscles of quiet inspiration, which will result in increased power of these muscles and increase in the amount of chest expansion. . . . In strength and control of the abdominal muscles lies the power of the singer or speaker over his expiration. The mechanism of quiet inspiration will suffice for every voice user, but as it is with expired air that he actually works, his control of that must be absolute.

On this point the authors part company with at least one eminent authority who, in a recently published work,* makes out a strong case in favour of the theory that the abdominal muscles play an important part during both inspiration and expiration. On another much-debated subject our authors express definite views :

> The intercostal muscles have continually received credit for acting as respiratory muscles, although there never has been evidence, other than of the most controversial and indecisive nature, in support of the theory. Their true function is to maintain the form of the chest wall. . . They contract during both phases of respiration, and form semi-rigid walls which resist the influence of alterations of pressure in a manner which would be impossible to simple membranes.

The chapters on 'Attack' and 'The Open Throat,' though brief, are full of sound advice. In the latter the discussion on the pharynx—its proper functions and its frequent misuse in voice-production by singers and speakers alike—clearly defines the cause of much throat trouble, the cure for which, we are very sensibly reminded, is to be found 'in a proper education of the respiratory and vocal mechanism and not in medical or surgical treatment.'

The exercises contained in the last twenty pages of the work are well devised. The concluding set—for those who have reached a fair degree of proficiency—provides a number of florid phrases, mainly from Bach and Handel, requiring good breath supply and control. This is a book which may be used safely and profitably by any student of singing or speaking.

G. G.

'The Organist and his Choir.' By Augustus Toop. [Musical Opinion Office, 2*s*.]

'Church Choirs and How to Teach Them.' By Arthur W. Marchant. [Bosworth, 1*s*. 6*d*.]

'The Music Class.' By Herbert Wiseman and John Wishart. [Glasgow : James S. Kerr, 2*s*. 6*d*.]

Class Singing.' By W. G. Whittaker. [Oxford University Press, 6*s*.]

With regret one has to say at the outset that the two books on church choir-training are platitudinous to an inexcusable degree. The fact that one of the authors in his preface disclaims any pretensions to literary merit does not excuse a blemish of this sort. No marked literary ability is called for. The need is for ideas, expressed with clearness and conviction. But both books contain far too much information of the type that may well be taken for granted, e.g. :

> Instruct the boys to walk slowly to their places, with hands at their sides . . . and not to look about the church during the service.
>
> A printed choir list should be provided, to be filled up for each service, and placed in the choir stalls before the service commences. [Dr. Marchant.]

There are naivetés, too :

> In some of the churches in the United Kingdom, and especially in America and the colonies, the choir consists entirely of ladies and gentlemen, the ladies as well as the gentlemen in many cases being robed in surplices. This arrangement has been found to be highly impressive and refined, both musically and otherwise. [Dr. Marchant.]

And so on.

That there is some sound advice goes without saying, but there is also some that may be questioned. Thus Dr. Marchant surely lays too much stress on the division between the head and chest registers, giving exercises in which the boys are instructed to sing certain notes in the head register to Coo, changing always at A (second space) to the chest on Ah. There are plenty of skilled boy-trainers who go through year after year of successful work without even referring to the break, carrying down the head register in such a way that the middle and lower notes are developed in a mellow kind of mixture of the two registers.

In regard to the treatment of consonants, both authors tell us that the r should be rolled. Dr. Marchant says :

> Roll the letter r at the beginning of such a word as 'righteous,' or when it is used in combination with other letters, as in 'praise' and 'strangers,' but it is generally silent when it comes before another consonant, or at the end of a word . . .

which sounds dangerously like advice to sing 'prrraise to the Lo'd, ye strrangers frrrom afa'.'

But, after all, isn't the rolling a special effect, to be used sparingly and with discretion?

Mr. Toop confuses the rolling with the common trick of adding an r at the end of a word :

> When boys acquire the ability to 'roll' their r's they are very apt to use this action when there are no r's in the word.

And he cites 'lo*r*' for 'law,' 'aw*r*' for 'awe,' 'dro*r*' for 'draw,' &c.

Both books in their music illustrations, reference to works, and in other ways, show a failure to realise the recent marked change of taste and ideals in Church music.

A sound and commonsense little book is 'The Music Class.' Its concern is with sight-singing and ear-training, and its eighty pages embody the fruits of many years of practical experience. The scheme of work developed in the book, with the accompanying exercises, was compiled in the first place for the schools of Edinburgh. The transition from Sol-fa to Staff reading, rhythm graphing, pitch training by imitation, time beating—all are treated in the simplest and most practical manner, and the work is planned out from the first infants' stage to Standard V. The authors are emphatically in favour of the children making acquaintance with as many songs as possible, reserving finished performances for the few that may be in hand for competition festivals, school concerts, &c. :

> In the ordinary everyday school singing-lesson an attempt should be made to get through a great many songs, and to let the children have copies before them as they sing. Of course, though the songs are not to be studied in minute detail, this does not mean that coarse tone and bad singing should be tolerated. It merely means that the child is being provided with a whole lot of musical material on which to build in after life.

* 'Breathing for Voice.' Hulbert (Novello).

In this, as in every other detail of the work, the aim is the development of the child's musical sense. Everything can and should be made alive and interesting, and the authors show the way. This meaty little manual should be closely studied by all teachers, especially of sight-singing and ear-training.

Dr. Whittaker modestly says of his book that it makes no claim to originality:

> It is merely a summary of experience gained in practical class singing, actual work in training colleges and secondary schools, and observation of the teaching of others, students and members of staff, both visiting specialists and non-specialists, in elementary and secondary schools.

I like that 'merely'! No book dealing with such a subject is worth the paper it is printed on unless it is just such a summary as is here described. There is of course no room for originality, because the essence of the matter is that the methods advocated should have long since ceased to be original and experimental, and have become conventions—using the word in its best sense. There is, however, room for freshness in exposition, even of conventions, and here Dr. Whittaker is extraordinarily successful. Rarely does one meet a text-book so full of life and enthusiasm. This refreshing quality is no doubt partly due to the fact that the book does not aim at being a complete exposition. The author points out that a number of works already exist in which various departments of singing-class work are fully discussed. Some branches of the subject, however, have either escaped attention or have been only cursorily treated. He sets out to fill the gaps, and to amplify what others have merely touched upon; where a reliable book already exists the reader is directed to it. By this means the whole of the ground is covered, either by fresh matter or by reference to accepted text-books. As a result we find no chapters of the kind that so often take off the keen edge of text-books—chapters which consist of little more than a re-writing of other authors' material.

Dr. Whittaker divides his subject into the teaching of tune by Sol-fa and Staff; teaching of time; combined time and tune; ear-training; breathing, voice-training and production; various matters; and songs; ending with a long list of songs, classified, with particulars as to publisher and degree of difficulty. In regard to the teaching of Staff he joins Mr. Wiseman and Mr. Wishart in the book reviewed above in advocating a very early start—in the first standard of an elementary school—'as soon as the doh chord can be sung from the blackboard. . . . It is a mistake to postpone old notation until singers are able to read fluently from the new.' And he gives reasons that are often overlooked. The Sol-fa notation is easy, and a child who has had no trouble in acquiring fluency therein will find the Staff discouragingly difficult. Early concentration on the Sol-fa is merely the line of least resistance:

> One of the chief causes of prejudice among musicians against Sol-fa notation is due to the faults of early enthusiasts, who trained their classes to read with great fluency in a comparatively short time, and then either left their pupils staff-less, or failed to persuade them to pass from the safe and easy ways they were treading into the more adventurous but essential road to the vast treasures of musical literature. . . . Every step should be taught first through Sol-fa and then applied immediately to the Staff.

The pages on voice-training are admirable. Dr. Whittaker emphasises the importance of aiming at quality and freedom from strain, and he says wise things on the treatment of the voice of the adolescent girl. Conductors who pride themselves on the mature, adult vocal quality of their girls' choirs should note this plea for the retention of youthful quality on artistic grounds:

> Each age has its characteristics of beauty of voice, reflecting those distinctions of charm in which a lover of young people finds delight. The kindergarten appeals to one in a particular way, the lower classes in another, the upper classes of an elementary and the middle forms of a secondary school in a third, and the senior groups of a secondary school in yet another. All are different from adult female singing, all are beautiful and distinctive in their peculiar way. They afford infinite variety of shades of colour on the choral palette.

Most teachers have at some time or another received a jolt on discovering that the class that sounded so fine was but a poor thing when one or two leaders were absent. Dr. Whittaker gives good advice on the point, and shows how the average ability of a class may be levelled up.

I am glad to see that he objects to the common practice in mixed schools of giving the treble part to the girls and the alto to the boys. As he says, boys' upper notes are more easily and safely developed than girls', and the practice of confining the boys' singing to lower notes is almost certain to develop coarseness. Similarly, teachers should resist the natural temptation to put the best readers among the second trebles and altos, regardless of their quality of voice.

Over-difficult songs are condemned. They discourage a class. If too chromatic they hinder instead of developing the sense of key; if they contain too many long-held notes they exhaust; and if there is an overdose of high notes, or if the general 'lie' is too high, they lead to strain and loss of quality.

The importance of the early acquirement of a large stock of songs is emphasised:

> There is a growing desire to teach musical appreciation in schools. This is an admirable movement, and generally to the good. But if it tends to squeeze out singing, it is harmful. To place within the power of every adult the ability to sing at sight, to train the ear to a considerable state of proficiency, to lay the foundations of a pleasant singing voice, and to familiarise him with a large répertoire of folk, classical, and modern songs, is surely the best method of teaching musical appreciation we know. To add the newer subject to the older is to make for a truly musical nation in the future, but to attempt to teach people to listen intelligently without giving them the power to take part in our national heritage of communal singing, and without the invaluable sharpening of all the musical faculties which is the natural result of a good singing class, is a wholly retrogade step, flattered by a high-sounding and deceptive title.

On the question of teaching songs, Dr. Whittaker joins Wiseman and Wishart in distinguishing between the general répertoire and the small selection for special purposes:

> There is the question of standard of performance; should every song be polished carefully, or should a large number be learned without thought of a high standard of finish? Too much insistence on the first limits the child's répertoire seriously, and is apt to cause boredom. The second is likely to foster slovenliness and a careless attitude to music. The best way is to avoid both extremes. Let a certain number be rehearsed thoroughly each year, so that the class may appreciate the value of a good performance and gain the technique necessary for it. But a number of songs must also be learned with only a reasonable amount of attention to minute detail, so that pupils may gain an extensive knowledge of music.

The extracts given in this review show the thoroughness and practical nature of the book, and the reader may be assured that the whole is up to these samples. Trainers of church choirs, whether mixed or boys-and-men, will gain from a study of it hardly less than the special class of teacher for whom it is written. Looking back over a longish experience as a church choirmaster, the present writer is convinced that had such a book come his way at the beginning of his career, it would have saved him much disappointment and many hours of comparatively ineffective work. H. G.

The first seven numbers of 'The Musical Pilgrim,' an excellent series of booklets, under the general editorship of Dr. Arthur Somervell, recently reviewed in these columns, have now been issued in one volume by the Oxford University Press (10*s.* 6*d.*). A capital book, and hardly to be beaten for gift purposes.

'Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.' By F. Gehring.
'Joseph Haydn.' By Pauline D. Townsend.
'Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy.' By W. S. Rockstro.
'Ludwig van Beethoven.' By H. A. Rudall.

[Sampson Low. 2*s.* 6*d.* each.]

These volumes are from a series published some years ago—a good many, if we may judge from the fact that among the contributors was Julius Benedict—and now re-issued under the editorship of Francesco Berger. A standard biography will of course bear reprinting over a long period, but as a rule the text will need addition or modification, in order to bring the work into line with the latest discoveries of biographical and other data. Apparently no such process has been applied in the case of the series under notice; and there is a misleading absence of any explicit indication that the volumes are other than new works. This is unfortunate, inasmuch as the reader can never feel confident that the text is reliable in matters of fact. The publisher's announcement is flamboyant, e.g.,

> Take away the light from the skies, take the flowers off our earth, take the waves from the sea, and take Music out of our lives, and what is left? A darkened world, a barren earth, a waste of stagnant water, saddened days and joyless nights; and Mr. Berger's introductions are too much in the same extravagant vein. The volumes are handy in size and form, and low in price. H. G.

'The Singer's Art: Letters from a Singing Master.' By Harry Gregory Hast.

[Methuen, 5*s.*]

This is one of the simplest and least pretentious of all the many books on singing produced during recent years. It is also—largely for that reason—one of the very best. Mr. Hast leads off with a letter to Cousin Betty on choosing a teacher; thereafter a young singer named Anthony is the recipient of the genial and advisory correspondence. There are no physiological dabblings, no horrid pictures of lungs, abdomens before and after breathing, sections of wind-pipes, and other peeps into the interior that are the concern of the pathologist and the vocal curative expert rather than of the singer. Mr. Hast hears his imaginary correspondent make his débût at Queen's Hall, and deals faithfully with him concerning his breathing ('I was at the back of the stalls, and both saw and heard nearly every breath you took'); and in succeeding chapters he gives him good counsel on the 'break,' sostenuto, phrasing, rhythm, recitative, &c. Particularly good are the pages on consonants, word-values, and other departments of enunciation. Mr. Hast will have no truck with modification of vowels for the sake of sonority:

> There is not the slightest reason for distorting our beautiful language with the mistaken idea of improving the tone. . . . A young baritone came to me not long ago who told me that he had been taught by his master to sing about 'My lawvely rawses' for the reason that he sang with a better tone on those vowels. Put your foot down firmly on such bosh as this, and see that your pupils form the habit of singing pure English; precisely the English that is—or should be—spoken.

Here is a point that needs constant hammering home:

> A diminuendo must never weaken. It must grow. We must never let it get softer. We must make it grow softer.

Many a performance is ruined by the loss of tone-vitality that follows this weakening of grip and control in the quiet passages.

Mr. Hast gives a good deal of space to interpretation, taking the reader through some typical songs in detail.

In the chapter on choir-training (Mr. Hast assumes that his protégé has taken a post as church choirmaster), the use of the boys' voice during adolescence is sensibly discussed. Mr. Hast adds some words about the voices of girls at the same period. After expressing admiration for the work that is being done by competition festivals, he says:

> There is one competition that I should like to see eliminated from all of them, and that is the one for female voices between (usually) the ages of fourteen and sixteen. It is bad in the last degree for any girl of that age to compete in such an event, and I sincerely hope that before long this particular competition will be discontinued.

This is a counsel of perfection, and it can be followed only when adolescent girls give up singing in the schools, at home, and elsewhere. So long as they are allowed (often encouraged) to sing at home and at concerts during this period, so long will it be necessary for the competition festival to provide the corrective influence of judges who, as a body, are constantly on the war-path against strain and misuse generally. Mr. Hast may rest assured that this subject has been thoroughly discussed by the festival leaders, and, as a result, the majority feel that the risks attendant on adolescent classes are small compared with those incurred by the singers if left to their own devices. Young girls cannot be stopped from singing for three years. This being so, they are at the mercy of the incompetent teacher, the charlatan, and admiring relatives and friends. The results, as seen but too often at competition festivals, are such as to lead one to say that nobody needs the help of a competition more than the adolescent.

In his Preface the author says:

> Some singers may think that many of my suggestions are dangerously original because they are the result of my own experience, and have not been copied out of other people's text-books. I only ask you to give them a fair trial. I am telling you what has helped me. I cannot do more, and I will not do less.

Certainly he could hardly have done better.

H. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'A Book of Bohemians.' Verses by St. John Adcock. Drawings by Fred Adlington. Sampson Low, 5*s.*

'Songs of Praise.' Edited by Percy Dearmer, R. Vaughan Williams, and Martin Shaw. Oxford University Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Chopin: The Child and the Lad.' By Zofia Uminska and H. E. Kennedy. Pp. 91. Methuen, 5*s.*

'The Psalms, Books 4 and 5, Rendered into English. By E. H. Askwith. Martin Hopkinson, 6*s.*

'The Well-Tempered Musician.' A Musical Point of View. By Francis Toye. Pp. 209. Methuen, 5*s.*

'Locheimer Liederbuch und fundamentum organisandi des Conrad Paumann.' Berlin: Wölbung-Verlag.

'How to Build a Small Two-Manual Chamber Pipe Organ.' By H. F. Milne. Pp. 169. Musical Opinion Office, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'The English Madrigal.' By Edmund H. Fellowes. Pp. 111. Oxford University Press, 3*s.* 6*d.*

THE LEEDS FESTIVAL

By W. McNAUGHT

We ask of a Leeds Festival that it shall (a) bring to Leeds the best available resources for musical performance; (b) give its visitors the best that Leeds itself can offer; and (c) give everybody good music. London musicians and others who have long lived amongst concerts are apt to be selfish about (c), and complain if the Festival programme includes music that they have heard too often. Is Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony good music? No, says the man from London. Yes, says the West Riding, assembled in Leeds Town Hall. Yes, said the Londoner thirty years back. Leeds is not a laggard town in music, but in some of their likings its most musical citizens may be still back in the 'nineties. Happy folk, to be thrilled while we yawn! So we may concede the E minor to Leeds, with the London Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Albert Coates to drive it home; and the second Pianoforte Concerto of Rachmaninov, too, with Miss Myra Hess as make-weight.

But we must draw the line somewhere, and we may rightly draw it to exclude works that do not thoroughly represent their composers. That empty Rimsky-Korsakov stuff from 'Tsar Saltan'—what was it doing in a Festival? And that laborious 'Divine Poem' of Scriabin's, in which so much is spoken and so little said? Mere waste orchestration, and not even thorough Scriabin, this was an intrusion in a list that contained 'Prometheus.' It provoked one to jot down on the back of the programme the names of some fine works, especially works of our own composers, that were left out of the scheme.

We jotted down some more of these while we were listening to the novelties that had been brought to Leeds from abroad. To 'Tsar Saltan' and the 'Divine Poem' add Deems Taylor's 'Alice through the looking-glass' and Howard Hansen's 'Lux Eterna,' and you have a deed of charity to Russia and America that was too magnanimous when we have so many deserving cases at home. Italy came in with Respighi's 'The Pines of Rome.' This justified itself as a curiosity rather than as music. It is a Suite of four pieces about what happens near, under, or in the pine-trees of the Campagna. One of the commonest incidents in the life of these pine-trees, we gather, is the singing of a nightingale in their branches. Flute, oboe, and clarinet have been imitating the nightingale and all sorts of vocal fowl for more than a century, says Signor Respighi; nicht diese Töne, we will use a gramophone and listen to a real bird. We did, and we were entranced. In the same way we should be thrilled if a real nightingale were to flutter down to the conductor's shoulder at Queen's Hall and give of his best in the middle of some Wieniawski or Saint-Saëns or Massenet or the 'Alpine' Symphony, where any diversion would be welcome, and the brighter the better. Yes, Respighi gave his own music—I can't resist it—the bird. Down to that point 'The Pines of Rome' had not been interesting. The descriptions of children playing, of gloomy catacombs, and of religious chanting had been no more than craftsman's work, done in formulæ and orchestral devices rather than in musical ideas. The Finale section, the progress of a Consul, was loud but insignificant march music, a hasty epilogue. Nobody minded; the star turn was over, and the audience wanted to talk about it.

We are probably right in attributing the inclusion of all this faulty music to Mr. Albert Coates. As Mr. Coates's influence was powerful in making a success of the Festival, there is no harm in dwelling for a moment on the price paid for it. We were made not only to share his American associations and his Russian predilections, but, more broadly speaking, to be witnesses at his worship of sound. He has a bias towards the physical facts of music. The deflection may be seen not only in his choice of works—the sound-fabrics of Scriabin, the glitter of Rimsky-Korsakov, the hammered rhythms of all the Russians, the gramophone trick of Respighi—but in his conducting, with its emphatic triumphs and its disconcerting failures. It explains his indecision in the quiet refinements of certain classical works, and his remoteness from Elgar. (Only the 'Introduction and Allegro' for strings was heard at Leeds.) It explains Mr. Coates's own tone-poem, 'The Eagle.'

The 'programme' of this work is a Russian poem. The eagle, it says, is a superior bird. He ponders on great truths and notices not the grey dust of a sordid world that blows around him, nor the flocking discord of the other birds. He spreads his wings and flies upward into the sun. As a composer, freed from the fetters of other men's tastes and traditions, Mr. Coates reveals his full nature. It is no longer a bias, but a plunge towards his own instinctive ideal. Discords, mixtures, juxtapositions, and all the hard facts of orchestral scoring are used in their pure state. The direst handiwork of a Stravinsky or a Schönberg is shaped to some suggestion of a musical outline. Mr. Coates gives us the lump, the untouched ore. He conveys it to us with an extra large orchestra, and the wordless voices of a choir and two solo singers. The athletic freedom of his quarrying is magnificent, and it deserves to be applauded as admiringly as our fathers applauded the feats of the late Eugen Sandow.

Although 'The Eagle' did not rank high as music it was welcome as a clue to Mr. Coates—to his excellences as well as to his shortcomings. We understand all the better from it why he excels in music that, while it is moulded in thought, is built of substance; why he made so fine a thing of the Chaconne in Brahms's fourth Symphony; why he made the Wagner of 'Siegfried' and 'Die Meistersinger' tower and glow like a range of Alpine summits; why the Tchaikovsky Symphony was child's play to him, and 'Prometheus' a great game; whence came his dashing mastery of Holst's 'Choral' Symphony.

FIRST 'CHORAL' SYMPHONY: BY GUSTAV HOLST

The word 'first' suggests that Mr. Holst intends to write others; perhaps nine, like Beethoven; or, since he has started so late, four, like Brahms. In the lobby after the performance a critic was asked: 'Well, which is the greater, Holst's or Beethoven's?' The questioner was poor in his ignorance, but his question becomes instructive when you have to account for your answer. Beethoven was within the prohibitions of his time. At any point in the Ninth Symphony, at least in the instrumental movements, there is a limit to what he may do next. Holst may do what he likes. Not that he abuses liberty or breaks the continuity of his own style—in so far as he is responsible. But he is freer than Beethoven was to create his own style, to throw open its boundaries. Beethoven thrusts Sisyphus-like to his peak. Holst mounts in light kit. Modern music is like that—it tempers our warmest liking with the knowledge that the composer's mental effort is less acute than it used to be in the old days, even if the listener's is more so. With this reservation, which is not meant to be damning, Holst's Symphony is a great work.

It came with more than the force of novelty; it had the effect of envelopment which accompanied the great new experiences of our growth as listeners, such as—I speak for myself—the impact of 'Tristan' on a youth brought up strictly in the classics, the quiet trespass of 'L'Après-Midi d'un Faune,' or 'Petrouchka' rattling open a shutter of the mind. Holst's 'Choral' Symphony is a new staging of music. (It had an inexplicable suggestion of a parade of things to the eye.) Even to a close student of Holst it brings discovery. The familiar idiom, handwriting, call it what you will, is still shaping. The more practised he is in the use of it, the more simple and exact it becomes. The passages in the 'Choral' Symphony that stand out are very often those of the fewest notes. New types of music worked out on simple lines are more powerful than those worked out in intricacy. Every new development that we meet with in the Holst type (and, we may add, the Vaughan Williams type) is a larger step in progress than any of the competitive travails of the Vienna-cum-Salzburg composers. So, while the 'Choral' Symphony may only widen the scope of Holst's method, the effect of it is out of proportion, just as cubical expansion is far greater than linear increment; a dusty comparison to use for a work so full of poetry.

The Invocation to Pan fulfilled expectation with its atmosphere of awe and expectancy. Its effect was incomplete only inasmuch as the choral singers were inexperienced in recitation as distinct from recitative. In the monotoned lines the play of consonant, vowel, and stress need to be organized not by a choral trainer but by one who is used to teaching Shakespeare at a dramatic academy. The Bacchanal was the least salient part of the Symphony. It passed through our ears without making an incisive impression on the mind. We may attribute this to its breathlessness, the continual stumbling forward of the seven-eight time—both in keeping, of course, with a Bacchanal procession—and partly to the weakness of the word 'Bacchus' as verbal material for a composer. The movement is not as first movements are.

With the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn' we seemed to enter the portals. In listening to musical settings of well-known poems we often feel that intimate knowledge of the poem helps us to appraise the music, to feel its pulse, to sympathise with it. Here the position is different. This calm, wistful music, coldly pensive, with a flicker of feeling here and there, helps us to cherish the poem—even the Ode of Keats. Its design and mood subsist unbroken. Holst does not reach out to the quotable lines—'Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard are sweeter' and 'Beauty is truth, truth beauty'—but allows them to float through on musical ideas that are already part of the composition. This reticence is grateful; it gives a key-note to the mentality that has made so beautiful a fusion of the poetic thought and the musical.

The Scherzo of 'Fancy' and 'Folly' was dazzling. You will not play it on your pianoforte, nor guess what it is like from looking at the score. We were occupied at Leeds with two mocking tasks for the comprehension—to catch the laughing sense of the music and to take heed of the choral miracle that gave it to us. It is rather difficult to give a critical estimate of five minutes in the company of Ariel. It has since transpired that the rapidity of the performance exceeded the intentions of the composer, the singers, and Mr. Coates.

The fourth movement is a Pageant in which certain of the tableaux appeal better than others, and appeal to different people differently. I liked Homer, striking the 'twanging harp of war,' and the 'sweet majestic tone of Maro's lyre,' but I was a little disappointed when 'Shakespeare waved his hand and quickly forward sprang the Passions.' The rhythm seemed to under-rate them, and it was scarcely the moment for a complete set of fugal entries. 'Tasso's ardent numbers' are an exquisite episode. Near the beginning and end of this movement the composer puts us on solid ground with some broad, substantial music based largely on a diatonic tune. He strengthens his musical design with it, but not so far as to disturb the mysticism. The actual beginning and end are remote. The ethereal voice and singing of Miss Dorothy Silk in the lines 'Spirit here that reignest' lifted and let fall the curtain.

THE CHOIR

Leeds was helped by Bradford and Huddersfield in assembling a choir for the Festival. Probably there were local difficulties that kept away some of the best voices. The choral tone was not perfect, from which it follows that the voices were not the best in the district. Perhaps other considerations than voice entered more largely than usual into the selection. There was increased stringency, perhaps, in the tests of sight-reading and general musicianship. There was certainly need for it with the 'Choral Symphony' to be learnt. The Symphony may be taken as the main motive of the choir's existence. A year was given to its preparation; last winter, it is said, Dr. A. C. Tysoe and the choral singers gave three months of hard work to it. The objective was carried. They gave such a first performance as surely never before fell to the lot of a long, novel, and difficult work. The problems that can be read on any page of the score seemed to pass out of existence. As a technical feat the only parallel that comes to mind is the performance of Bantock's 'Atalanta in Calydon' by the Liverpool Welsh Choir under Harry Evans at Birmingham in 1913. Every opinion of the work and quality of the Leeds Festival Choir must be held in relation to its supreme achievement.

So it is not in a fault-finding spirit that some of its other performances may be described as good choral society work and some as being inadequate. Outside the 'Choral' Symphony the best achievement was the Mass in B minor. This, in fact, was festival singing. The Qui Tollis, Incarnatus, and Crucifixus were given with simple purity. The choral muscle stood firm throughout those tremendous middle reaches of the Mass that include the Credo and the Sanctus. It was an uplifting and, with Sir Hugh Allen to direct it, a considered performance. In the 'Sea' Symphony of Dr. Vaughan Williams the choir gave what was asked of it by the composer and by the conductor, again Sir Hugh Allen. It kept in tune in its wordless contributions to the 'Song of the High Hills,' 'The Eagle,' and 'Prometheus.' It gave a new zest to the Wagner selections. Mr. Norman Allin was heard to observe that the chorus of Gibichungs was so tremendous that it unnerved him. 'Good choral society work' was attained in Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' Wood's 'Dirge for Two Veterans,' Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet,' Mozart's 'Requiem,' Brahms's 'Nänie' (a mutilated version), Mendelssohn's 'When Israel out of Egypt came,' and Beethoven's 'Choral' Symphony. But in what remains in the list the choir did no more than function. Its singing of Bax's 'This worldes joie' and 'Mater ora filium,' the 'Alto Rhapsody' of Brahms, Parry's 'The glories of our blood and state,' Stanford's 'Heraclitus,' Purcell's 'Soul of the World,' Palestrina's 'Assumpta est Maria' and Handel's 'May no rash intruder' would not have brought the choir out on top at a competition festival. The choir had too much to do to attend to everything. Under the heading of 'tone' we will imagine an adjudicator's jottings: Sopranos—fairly bright, no thrill, but pleasant; loss of quality high up. Contraltos—lovely. Tenors—rather loose anchorage, not up to heroics, nice in lyrical bits. Basses—always a comfort.

The solo singers I will pass over. They frequently come to London and into the department of my friend 'H. J. K.' Suggia and Miss Hess won Leeds. A hero sprang up in the familiar form of Mr. W. H. Reed to conduct the instrumental movements of the Ninth Symphony while Mr. Coates was indisposed. But for Mr. Reed, what would have happened?

Excellent chamber concerts are being given on Sundays, at 6.30, at the Working Men's College, Crowndale Road, N.W.1. The performers include the Elsy, Kutcher, Rawlins, and Mandeville Quartets, and among the soloists will be Misses Marjorie Hayward and Harriet Cohen, Messrs. John Goss, John Buckley, &c. The College is within one minute of Mornington Crescent Tube Station, buses, and trams. Admission is free, but of course there is a collection.

PARRY: MEMORIAL TABLET AT GLOUCESTER

Many of our readers will remember that at the recent Gloucester Festival a memorial tablet to Sir Hubert Parry was unveiled. It is placed in the Shire Hall, in the gallery added through the generosity of Sir Hubert some years ago. In unveiling the tablet, Sir Hugh Allen made a brief speech which, as it was not reported in most journals at the time, we are glad to be able to give in full:

It seems appropriate that a word or two should be said about Sir Hubert Parry on this night, at this concert, and in this Hall; not only because it has most properly been decided to commemorate with a tablet his generous gift to the City of Gloucester of the gallery which adorns this Hall, but because it was just fifteen years ago to-night that the gallery was first used for the purposes of this Festival, and, on that occasion, the Mayor of Gloucester presented an address to Parry, thanking him for his great service to music generally and to Gloucester. Parry, in reply, said that he hoped the gallery, by increasing the accommodation for concerts, might enable many more poor people to enjoy the advantage of fine music, and so bring more happiness into the drab surroundings of many lives. More than ever is it necessary to do this. He would indeed have been astonished, and, I believe, pleased to know that to-night for the first time in the history of the Three Choirs Festival (or perhaps of any Festival) a concert in the Shire Hall is being listened to by many thousands of people far outside the limits of the county or of the three counties, or even of Great Britain. The hope he expressed in 1910 is being realised, though perhaps not quite in the way he anticipated. Parry was a great Three Choirs man. A splendid series of his works is entwined round the very heart of these Festivals, and one of the greatest of them was sung this morning in its original home. One of the faces most looked for at these jolly gatherings was his—one of the greetings most cherished was his—one of the losses hardest to be borne is his. This Festival in particular had the most intimate connection with Parry, and were he alive to-day, this very Wednesday, it is likely that choir and orchestra would all of them have been having tea with him at Highnam, to their great content and his delight. Was there ever a man who made people feel so happy, or could get the last ounce out of life and out of others as he could? But he put as much into life as he took out, and that is the reason that he always had something to spare to help people on the road—to show them the way—to egg them on to finer work. A few years before Parry died, in an address to some students he said, 'I confess to a sense of exhilaration wherever I meet with a human life which can be contemplated fully and frankly with the certainty of its true quality being untarnished. It soon mitigates the bitterness of the ending of human relations. When a man's life has been really well spent, we can be glad he had enough time to find out how to make a good thing of it and spend it with advantage. Every life so spent strengthens the spirit of those who are in contact with it.' This truth was never truer than in his case. No one could come into contact with Parry without being immediately conscious of the refreshing influence he had upon one. You felt that his life included you in it, and that your thoughts were caught up in that splendid mind and carried far higher. This country will never have a man with more of those qualities which it most admires and sets store by, and Gloucester, with its many fine musicians and composers, will never have a nobler name on its records than that of Hubert Parry of Highnam in the County of Gloucester.

Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding

ANTHEM FOR ADVENT

Words from the Latin (tr. E. Caswall)
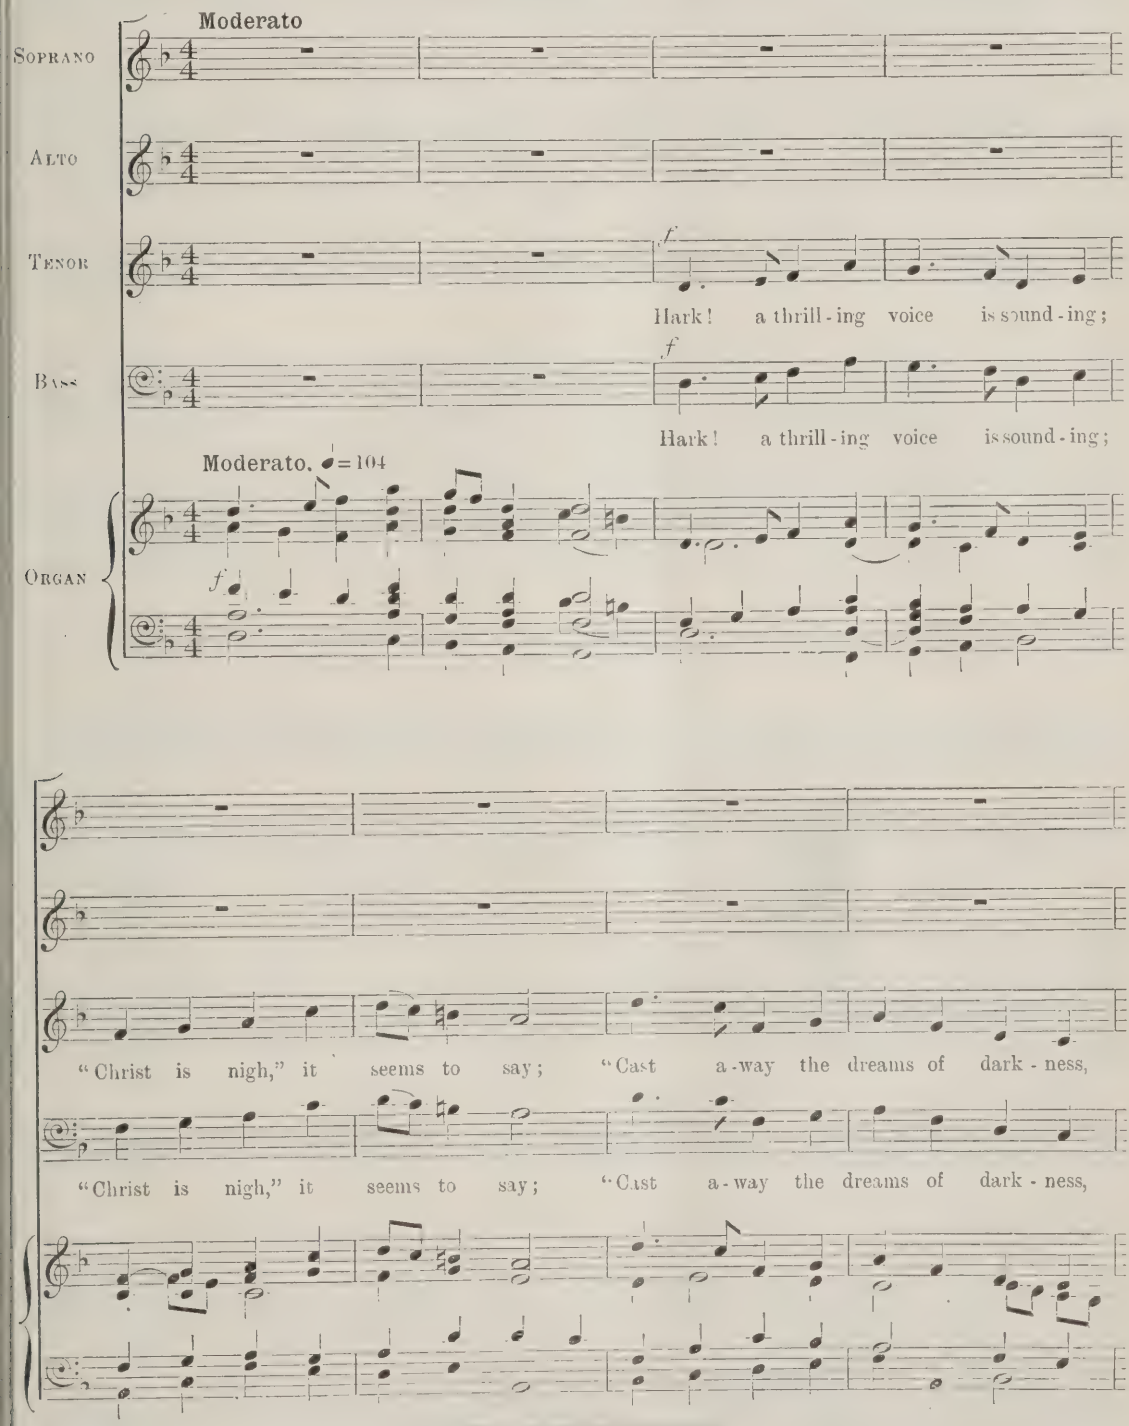
v. 5 added by Composer

Music by Eric H. Thiman

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.



Moderato
Soprano
Alto
Tenor
Bass
Hark! a thrill-ing voice is sound-ing;
Hark! a thrill-ing voice is sound-ing;
Moderato. ♩=104
Organ
"Christ is nigh," it seems to say; "Cast a-way the dreams of dark-ness,
"Christ is nigh," it seems to say; "Cast a-way the dreams of dark-ness,

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

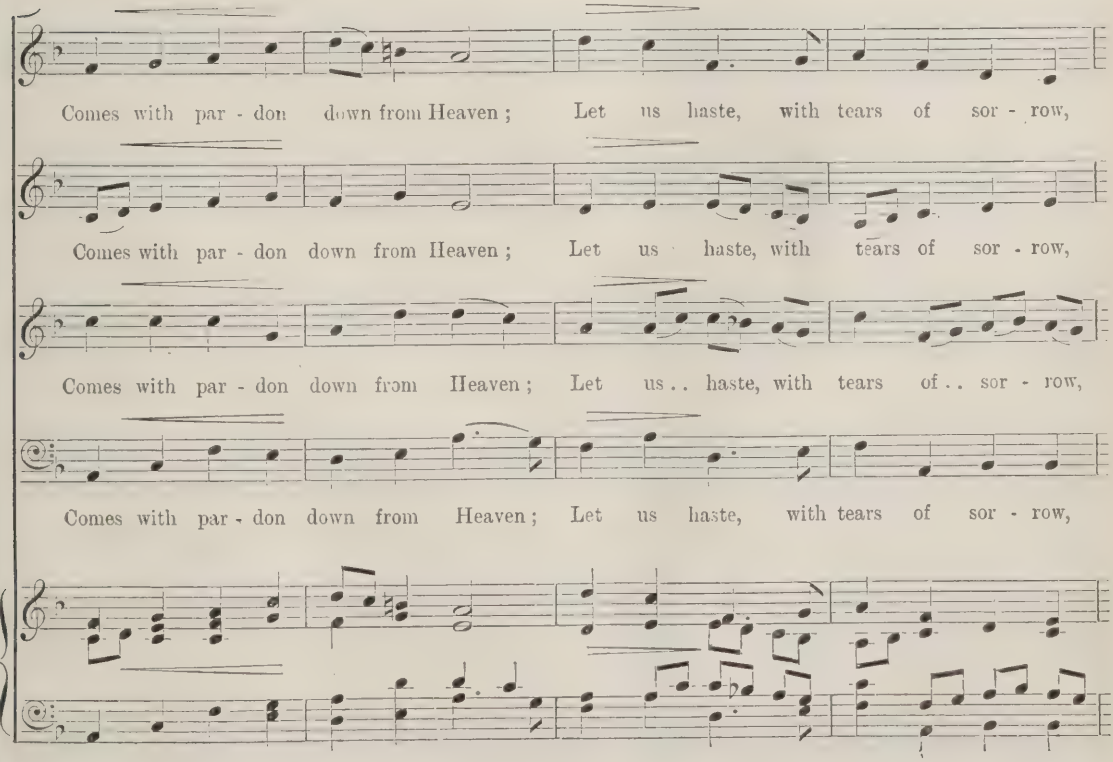
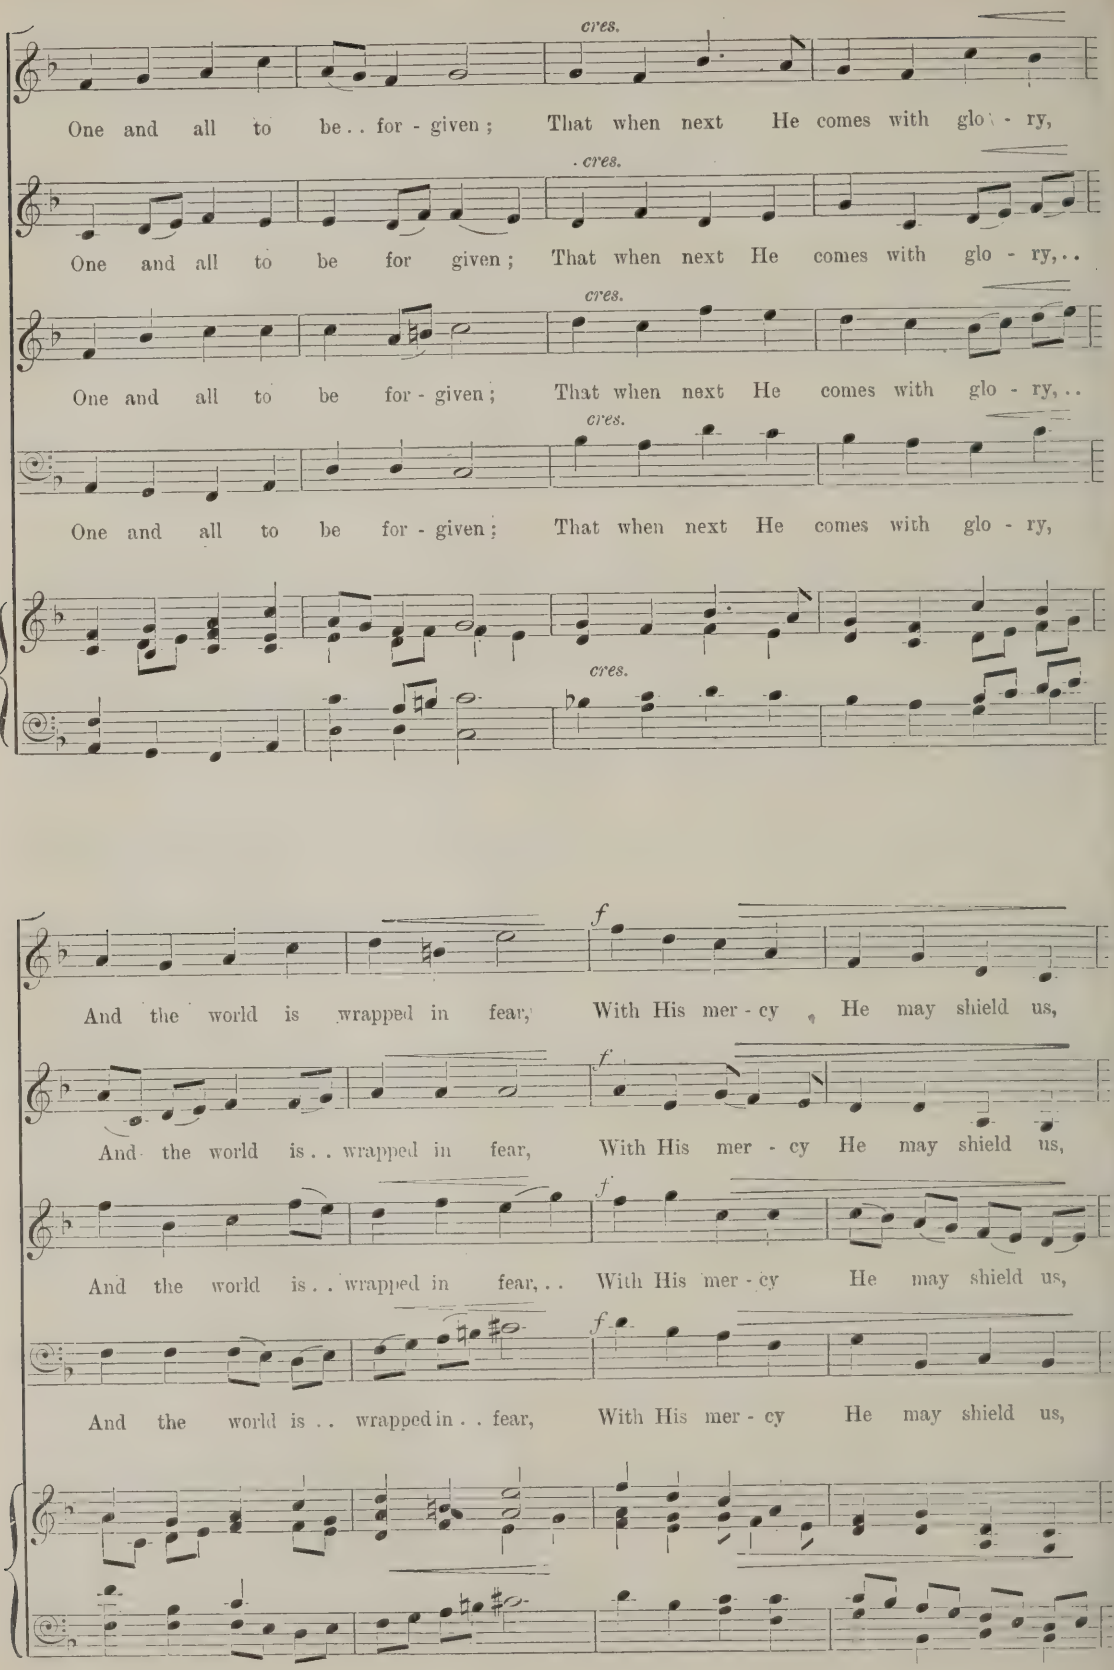
mf
Wa - kened by the sol - emn warn - ing,
mf
Wa - kened by the sol - emn warn - ing,
O ye chil - dren of . . the day!"
O ye chil - dren of . . the day!"
mf
f
Let the earth-bound soul a - rise; Christ, her Sun, all ill dis - pell - ing,
f
Let the earth-bound soul a - rise; Christ, her Sun, all ill dis - pell - ing,
f
rall.
Shines up - on the morn - ing skies.
rall.
Shines up - on the morn - ing skies.
rall.
a tempo
p Sw.
cres.
Man.

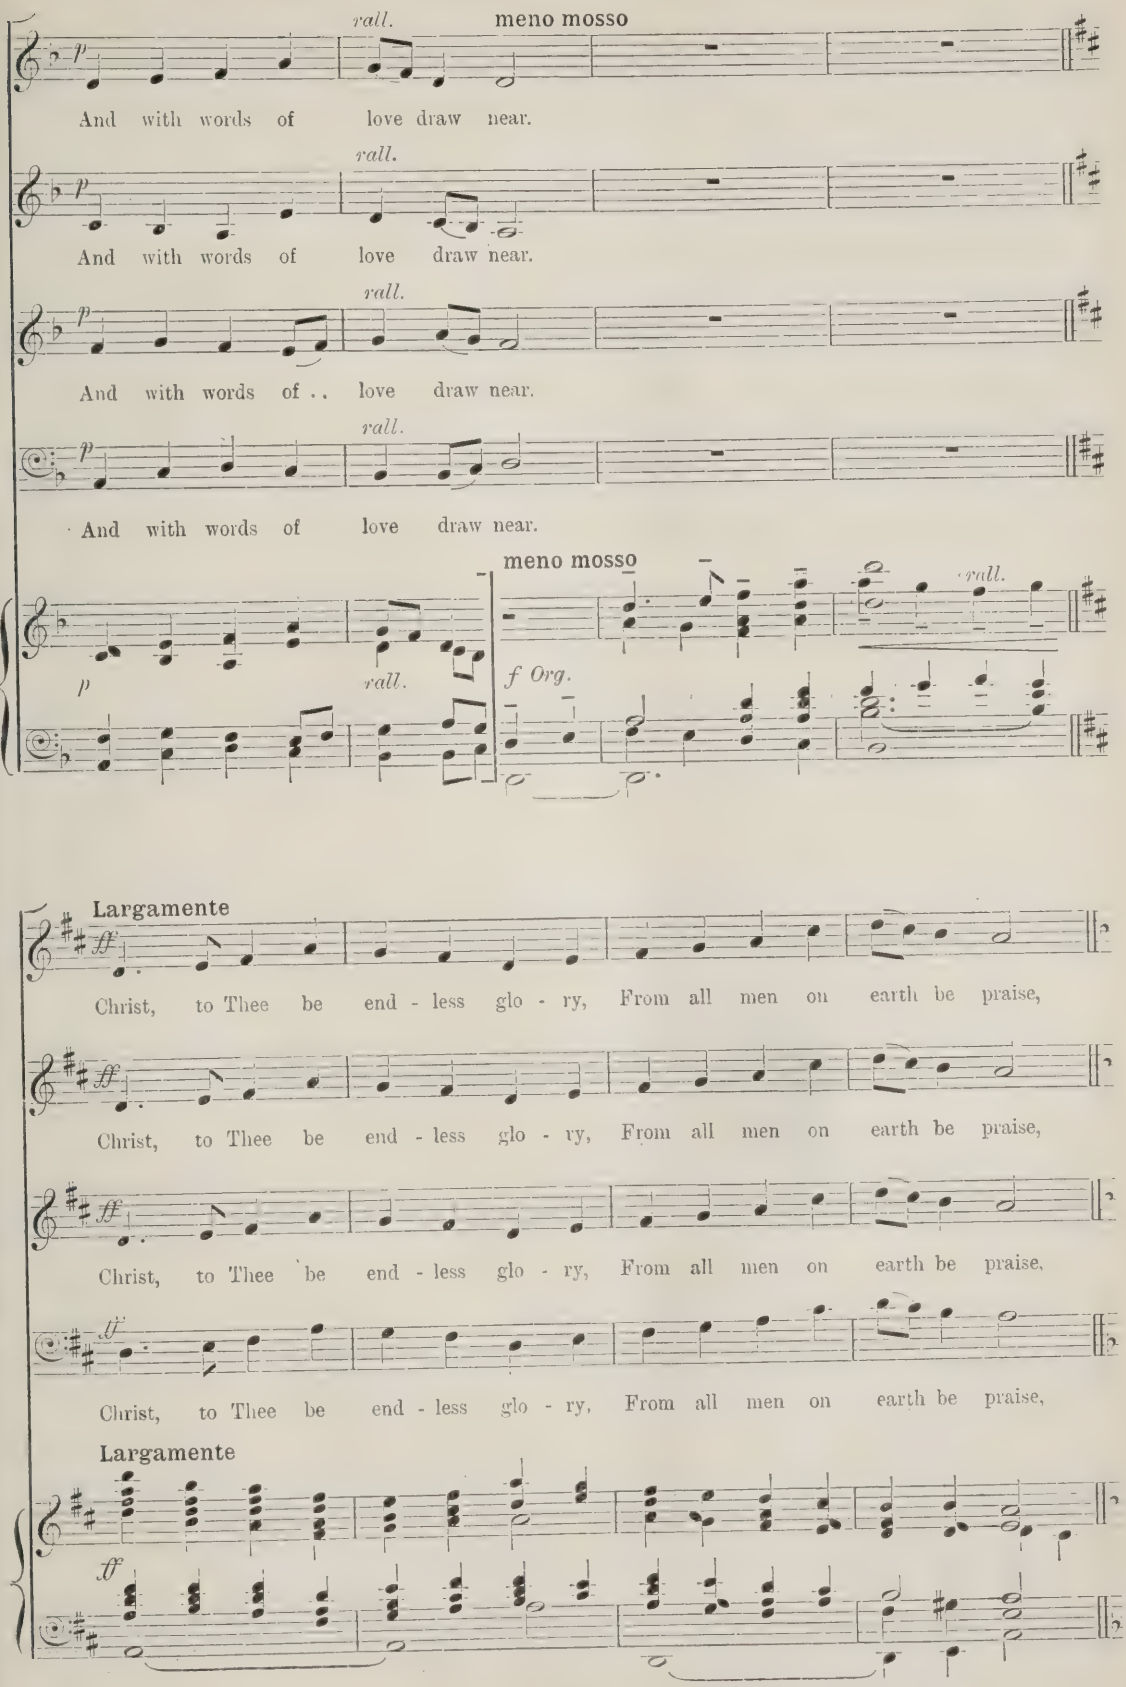
rall.
p a tempo
Lo! the Lamb, so long ex - pect - ed,
rall.
p a tempo
Lo! the Lamb, so long ex - pect - ed,
rall.
p a tempo
Lo! the Lamb, so long ex - pect - ed,
rall.
p a tempo
Lo! the Lamb, so long ex - pect - ed,
Voices alone
rall. e dim.
p a tempo
Gt.



Comes with par - don down from Heaven; Let us haste, with tears of sor - row,
Comes with par - don down from Heaven; Let us haste, with tears of sor - row,
Comes with par - don down from Heaven; Let us .. haste, with tears of .. sor - row,
Comes with par - don down from Heaven; Let us haste, with tears of sor - row,



cres.
One and all to be . . for - given ; That when next He comes with glo - ry,
cres.
One and all to be for given ; That when next He comes with glo - ry, . .
cres.
One and all to be for - given ; That when next He comes with glo - ry, . .
cres.
One and all to be for - given ; That when next He comes with glo - ry,
cres.
f
And the world is wrapped in fear, With His mer - cy He may shield us,
f
And the world is . . wrapped in fear, With His mer - cy He may shield us,
f
And the world is . . wrapped in fear, . . With His mer - cy He may shield us,
f
And the world is . . wrapped in . . fear, With His mer - cy He may shield us,



rall.
meno mosso
p
And with words of love draw near.
rall.
p
And with words of love draw near.
rall.
p
And with words of .. love draw near.
rall.
p
And with words of love draw near.
meno mosso
rall.
p
rall.
f Org.
Largamente
ff
Christ, to Thee be end - less glo - ry, From all men on earth be praise,
ff
Christ, to Thee be end - less glo - ry, From all men on earth be praise,
ff
Christ, to Thee be end - less glo - ry, From all men on earth be praise,
ff
Christ, to Thee be end - less glo - ry, From all men on earth be praise, Largamente
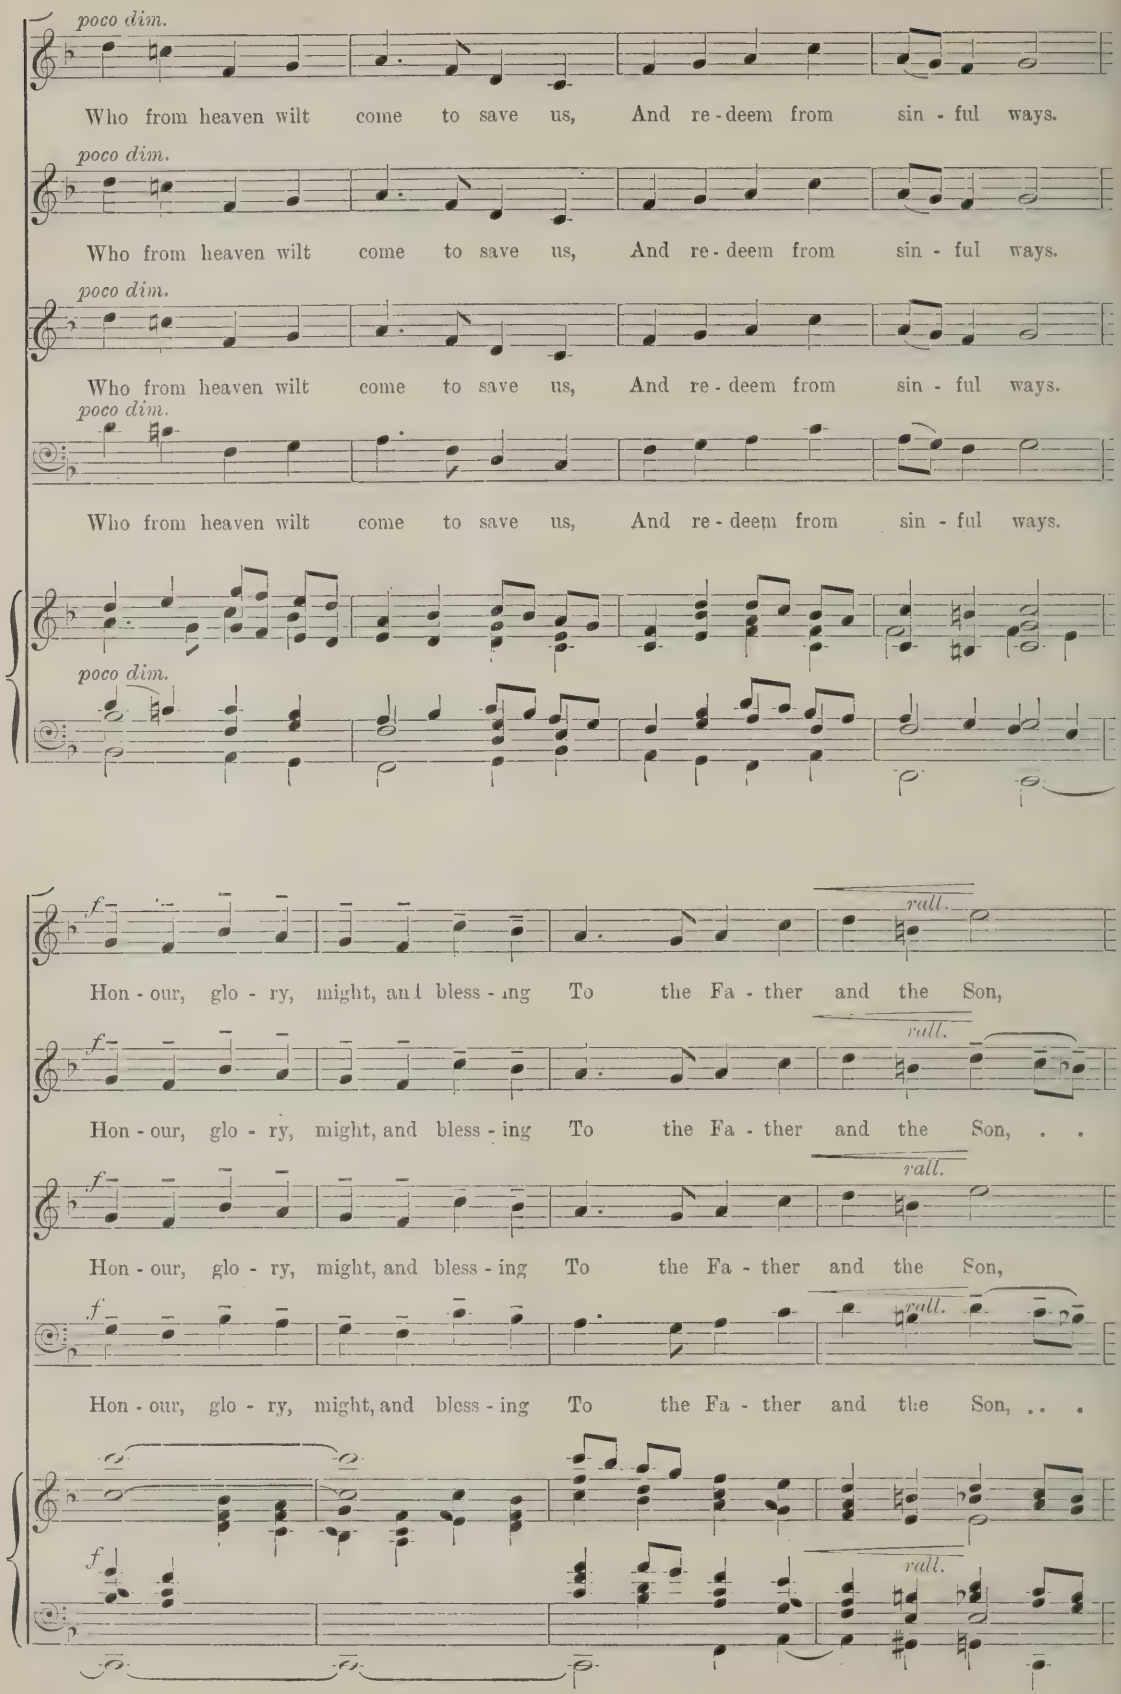
ff



poco dim.
Who from heaven wilt come to save us, And re-deem from sin-ful ways.
poco dim.
Who from heaven wilt come to save us, And re-deem from sin-ful ways.
poco dim.
Who from heaven wilt come to save us, And re-deem from sin-ful ways.
poco dim.
Who from heaven wilt come to save us, And re-deem from sin-ful ways.
poco dim.
f
rall.
Hon-our, glo-ry, might, and bless-ing To the Fa-ther and the Son,
f
rall.
Hon-our, glo-ry, might, and bless-ing To the Fa-ther and the Son, . .
f
rall.
Hon-our, glo-ry, might, and bless-ing To the Fa-ther and the Son,
f
rall.
Hon-our, glo-ry, might, and bless-ing To the Fa-ther and the Son, . . .
f
rall.

ff a tempo
rall
With the Ev - er - last - ing Spi - rit, While e - ter - nal a - ges ff a tempo
rall.
With the Ev - er - last - ing Spi - rit, While e - ter - nal a - ges ff a tempo
rall.
With the Ev - er - last - ing Spi - rit, While e - ter - nal a - ges ff a tempo
rall.
With the Ev - er - last - ing Spi - rit, While e - ter - nal a - ges Largamente
mf
molto rall.
ff
run. A - men, A - - - men, A - - - - men.
molto rall.
run. A - men, A - - - men, A - - - - men.
molto rall.
run. A - men, A - - - men, A - - - - men.
molto rall.
run. A - men, A - - - men, A - - - - men.
Largamente
molto rall.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The Certificate Choir-Training Examination will be held on Wednesday, November 4. Free lectures on Choir-Training will be given at the College on Tuesday, November 3: at 4.0, by Sir Walford Davies, who will take for his subject 'Rhythm in Church and Choir Practice,' Prof. C. H. Kitson, Mus. Doc., in the chair; and at 6.30 by Mr. E. Stanley Roper (organist of His Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. James's), who will speak upon the 'Training of Boys' Voices,' Dr. H. W. Richards, President of the College, in the chair. Admission will be free; no tickets required.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

'A POLYPHONIC REQUIEM'

Many churches will be grateful for the issue of a beautiful little work, 'A Polyphonic Requiem,' adapted to the English text from the works of the 16th- and 17th-century masters, by Francis Burgess. (Published for the Plainchant Publications Committee by the Society of SS. Peter and Paul, Westminster House, Great Smith Street, S.W.1.) Just as the Latin rite has its magnificent and complete Requiem by Palestrina and Anerio, from out of which the simpler plainchant is embellished on those occasions when a full choir is available, so, the Editor tells us, the purpose of this publication is to provide a similar complete work for the use of English choirs on such days as, e.g., Armistice Sunday. The numbers selected are comparatively brief, and easy of execution by singers of average capacity. The composers drawn upon are Claudio Casciolini, J. M. Asola, Francesco Anerio, and L. G. Viadana. The sequence, 'Day of Wrath,' is set to the old plainsong, with alternate verses to music by Casciolini. The Editor points out that the performance of this collection of music in its entirety at a given service is not necessary, or even desirable. The 'Simple Plainchant Requiem,' published in the 'Anglo-Catholic Choir Book' series, may well be taken as a basis for a complete and satisfactory Requiem, and the alternative settings here provided will gain in effect if only used in part as a contrast to the severer unison of the plainsong. The extent to which the polyphonic music replaces the plainchant must depend, of course, upon the traditions of the particular church, the judgment of the choirmaster, and the capacity of the choir for doing justice to the two contrasted styles of music. G. G.

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL

The St. Michael's Singers will hold a Musical Festival at this Church from November 2-5. On the first two days concerts will be given at 6, with a fine choice of works by Vaughan Williams, Frank Bridge, Gibbons, Weelkes, Byrd (the Magnificat from the 'Great' Service), Bach ('Jesu, Priceless Treasure'), and Parry. On the third evening, at 6, Miss Dorothy Silk will give a recital of old music, assisted by Mr. Stuart Robertson and the Hermitage String Quartet. On the closing evening the scene will be shifted to St. Martin-in-the-Fields, when, at 7, the St. Michael's Singers will perform the B minor Mass, with full orchestra and a strong list of soloists. Dr. Harold Darke will conduct on each occasion. At 1 o'clock daily during the Festival organ recitals will be given at St. Michael's, the players being Dr. Cyril Rootham, Dr. W. H. Harris, Mr. E. T. Cook, and Dr. Ernest Bullock. Admission to the Church is free.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

A very attractive series of Saturday musical services has been arranged for the coming season. Here are the programmes: November 7, Brahms's 'Requiem' and Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' and the slow movement from his first Symphony; December 12, the 'Christmas' Oratorio; January 2, Carols; Feburary 20, Parry's 'Job,' and 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Walford Davies's 'Men and Angels,' and Brahms's third Symphony; March 20, the 'St. Matthew' Passion; April 24, Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor, Holst's 'Evening Watch' and 'Two Psalms,' and Motets by Byrd. The London Symphony Orchestra has been engaged for all the occasions but the third and sixth. The services begin at 3 o'clock.

A series of lectures with musical illustrations will be given at St. Mary Aldermary, Queen Victoria Street, E.C., at 6 o'clock—on November 25 ('Carols,' by the Rev. Dr. G. R. Woodward); December 2 ('Synagogue Music,' by the Rev. Dr. W. O. E. Oesterley); and December 9 ('Elizabethan and Tudor Church Music,' by the Rev. Dr. E. H. Fellowes). At the same church, a series of organ recitals will be given on the Thursdays in November, at 1.15 p.m., the players in order of date being Messrs. Harvey Grace, Edgar T. Cook, Allan Brown, and Alan May.

The excellent series of recitals with which the new organ at the Battersea Polytechnic was inaugurated last winter, is to be continued during the coming season. In November, three recitals will be given, on Wednesdays, at 8, by Mr. G. Thalben Bell (4th), Dr. Harold Darke (11th), and Dr. Davan Wetton (18th).

On October 4, Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' was sung at St. Luke's, Hampstead, the choir being augmented by members from the St. Luke's Musical Society. Mr. Lambert conducted, and Mr. Matthew Kingston was at the organ.

The City Temple Choral Society sang 'Elijah' on October 10, the soloists being Miss Bessie Lang, Miss Beatrice Ashton, Mr. Osmond Davies, and Mr. Dan Richards. Mr. Allan Brown conducted, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ.

Ernest Austin's organ tone-poem, 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' will be played by Mr. N. Victor Edwards, at St. Matthew's, Croydon, on November 18 (Parts 1 to 4), November 25 (Parts 5 to 8), and December 2 (Parts 9 to 12). The recitals will begin at 8 o'clock.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson has been presented with an illuminated address in recognition of his work at High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, a post he now leaves for Derby Road Baptist Church.

The organ at St. Laurence's, Brondesbury, has been renovated by Messrs. Fuller, of Leyton.

RECITALS

Dr. Gordon A. Slater, Boston Parish Church—Sonata in D minor, Mendelssohn; Largo Sostenuto ('Sea' Symphony), Vaughan Williams; Final in B flat, Franck.

Dr. Albert C. Tysoe, Ely Cathedral—Sonata, Rheinberger; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Dithyramb, Harwood.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, St. Lawrence Jewry—Passacaglia in D minor, Reger; Arabesque in E, Debussy; Allegro in E flat, Bach; Chorale and Fugue (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Fantasia in G, Bach; Canon in C, Schumann; Choral, Boëllmann; Sursum Corda and Alla Marcia, John Ireland.

Dr. M. P. Conway, Parish Church, Littlehampton—Romanza (Sonata No. 9), Rheinberger; Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, Bach; Rhapsodie No. 2, Saint-Saëns; Communion ('Messe Basse'), Vierne.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, St. Lawrence Jewry—Sonata in the Style of Handel (first movement), Wolstenholme; Echo (double canon), Yon; Spring Song, Hollins; Finale in E flat, Guilmant.

Mr. Allan Brown, Parish Church, St. Mary Church, South Devon—Symphony No. 5 (first movement), Widor; Fugue in E flat ('St. Ann's'), Bach; Pastorale and Finale (Symphony No. 1), Guilmant.

Mr. L. M. Jones, St. Lawrence Jewry—Agitato (Sonata in D minor), Rheinberger; Fantasia in G, Bach; Pastorale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne; Finale, Faulkes.

Mr. H. Moreton, Wesleyan Church, St. Austell—Introduction and Fugue ('Pastoral' Sonata), Rheinberger; Air and Variations (Symphony in D), Haydn; 'The Ride of the Valkyries,' Wagner; 'Elegiac Romance,' Moreton; Final in B flat, Franck.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Sonatas Nos. 1 and 6, Mendelssohn; Fantasia and Fugue, Parry; Sonata No. 12 (first movement), Rheinberger; Lament, Harvey Grace; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; 'Chant de Mai,' Jongen; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; 'Sonata Britannica,' Stanford; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Herbert Howells.

Mr. Fred Gostelow, St. George's Cathedral, Perth, Western Australia—Fugue in E flat ('St. Ann's'), Bach; Meditation, Fred Gostelow; Choral in A minor, Franck; Overture in C, Hollins.

Mr. Maughan Barnett, Town Hall, City of Auckland—Concerto No. 4, Vivaldi-Bach; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Allegro (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; 'The Legend of the Mountain,' Karg-Elert.

Miss Marjorie T. Renton, St. Mary-le-Bow—Prelude and Fugue in B minor and Toccata in F, Bach; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Allegro Appassionata (Sonata in C sharp minor), Harwood.

Mr. Alban Hamer, Bloemfontein Cathedral — Fugue, Reubke; Scherzo in A flat, Bairstow; Preludes on 'Martyrdom' and 'Eventide,' Parry; Prelude to 'Parsifal.'

Mr. George Ryan, St. Lawrence Jewry—Allegro Vivace, Widor; Variations on 'Hanover,' Lemare; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Mr. J. Albert Sowerbutts, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasia in D minor, Alan Gray; Offrande Musicale No. 1, de Maleingreau; three Preludes on the Kyrie, Bach; Prelude in the form of a Toccata, Stanford; three Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert.

Mr. Arthur Meale, Wesleyan Central Hall, Westminster—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Introduction, Theme with Variations, and Fugue, Alfred Hollins; Sursum Corda, Elgar; 'Unfinished' Symphony; Symphony in E minor, F. W. Holloway.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue, with Theme and Variations (Sonata No. 10), Rheinberger; Menuet-Scherzo, Jongen; Andante con moto, Frank Bridge; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Joseph Soar, St. David's Cathedral—A Bach programme: Toccata in F; Chorale Prelude, 'Schmücke Dich'; Sonata in E flat; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor; Pastoral Symphony ('Christmas Oratorio'); Toccata and Fugue in D minor.

Mr. Ralph T. Morgan, St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol—Agitato (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Intermezzo, Stanford; Irish Rhapsody, Wolstenholme; Andantino (Symphony No. 4), Tchaikovsky; Toccata and Fugue ('The Dorian'), Bach.

Mr. Alfred S. Timcke, St. Laurence, Brondesbury—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Andante Meditativo, Ferrari; Capriccio alla Sonata, Fumagalli.

Mr. E. F. Mather, St. Mary-le-Bow and St. Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe—Passacaglia (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Fugue in C minor, Bach. (Miss Muriel M. Rogers played violin solos: Sonata in A, Handel; Aria, Adam Carse; Concerto in E, Bach.)

Mr. W. A. Roberts, St. James, Clacton-on-Sea—Overture, 'Siroe,' Handel; Pastorale and two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Harvey Grace; Fugue, Reubke.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Leonard G. Allen, choirmaster and organist, St. Peter's Wesleyan Church, Norwich.

Mr. Alwynne H. Griffiths, assistant music-master, Denstone College.

Mr. P. A. Grinyer, choirmaster and organist, St. Paul's, Herne Hill.

Mr. E. Douglas Stimson, choirmaster and organist, Sidcup Wesleyan Church.

Letters to the Editor

CHOIR-BOYS AND SCOUTS

[Readers will recollect that we sent a file of the correspondence on this subject to the Chief Scout, Sir Robert Baden Powell, who kindly sends us the following letter.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—I have read with great interest, profit, and some amusement, the correspondence in your columns on the subject of choirs and Scouts.

I have a very full sympathy towards both sides in the argument, because for six successive years I served as a choir-boy myself, and for many more years I have been a Scouter. So I am fairly impartial.

I gather from the correspondence that the principles of Scouting are generally approved, but that snags lie in their application in detail. I think, however, that in considering their respective cases both choirmasters and Scout-masters have rather overlooked an aspect of the question which to my mind is the most important of all, viz., the interests neither of the choir nor of the troop, but of the boy. Most of the difficulties exposed in the correspondence are met by the direction 'Think of the boy' and his development as a citizen, and don't let him be swamped out in your troop schemes or choir performances.

Manly, human leadership is needed just as much in the management of a choir as in that of a Scout troop. Indeed, more so. I remember so well the late Lord Alverstone, who himself had been a choir-boy in his time, addressing the choir of which I was a member, and telling us that 'Choir-boys with good voices almost invariably became priggish and swollen-headed, or girlish and emotional, unless they had some good counteracting influence to discipline them.'

If choristers take their religious contact seriously, and use their voice as a God-loaned talent for His service and not as their own production for their personal glorification, it tends the right way; but on the other hand—My! I have known some arch-villains among cherub-faced choir-boys, just as I have among Scouts! In a word, choir-boys, as much as any other boys, need discipline and training in manliness.

Through Scouting properly applied we can circumvent the above evil tendencies and can make a lad into a manly, disciplined fellow. Choirmasters have found the practical value of this when they have introduced Scouting into their choirs. But whether Scouting is successful or not among choir- or any other boys depends entirely on the quality of the leader, and that is where I read 'with amusement' some of the letters in the correspondence on the subject, because they blame the system when in reality it is its application that is at fault.

Where the choirmaster is thinking for the boy and is practising true leadership he does not look upon his choir as merely a singing machine at practices and services, but also takes an interest in its recreation outside of these and develops the character and the innate discipline of the boys for their own good. Therefore it is that the wide-minded choirmaster nowadays so often makes his choir into a troop of Scouts.

Of course with a nation like ours, where we are individualistic and can seldom work in true co-operation (there would be fewer industrial disputes if we could!), to have dual control, choirmaster versus Scoutmaster, in a choir-troop, is to ask for trouble. The ideal arrangement is for the choirmaster himself to be Scout-master, or to depute the duty to one of his choirmen who is also fitted thereto by being a 'boy-man.'

Where this is impossible, and an outside Scout-master has to be employed, he must remember that the boys are definitely on duty with their choir and that Scouting must be fitted in to meet the demands of the choirmaster.

On the whole it helps a choir to efficiency where its boys are Scouts. But there is something far higher than mere choir efficiency open to the choirmaster. Through the Scout training we are endeavouring to make good various little points in the education of the average boy which for one reason or another are not included in the regular school curriculum, and which are nevertheless important to his make-up as a citizen to-day. We develop, inter alia, his physical health and strength; but we want to balance this with such artistic sense as will raise the standard of his tastes, his moral tone, and his enjoyment of life.

This is a big step, but one that is vitally needed. The art which comes most readily to hand to this end is music. Self-expression through music is natural to the human thing, and is therefore easily developed, so that I am hoping to see the wider extension of the experiment which has been made in several cases of making Scout troops into choirs. If those who understand music care to give a little of their talent to its encouragement in this way, its standard can be put onto a widespread and elevated footing.

With this idea we are endeavouring in the Scout movement to obtain the co-operation of masters of music—that is, choirmasters—to help us not merely in fostering a few brilliant singers, but to spread the example of these and use them as apostles among the other boys around them till we develop a leaven of good musical influence among the masses.

Choirmasters have a high mission in the beautiful interpretation of Church music to the great benefit of their congregations; but a wider and still more satisfying field lies open to them, viz., that of influencing for good thousands who never go near a church and of drawing them on to the perception of higher things through the common chord. And that common chord goes further than this. The Scout movement is now a great Brotherhood in which boys of all other countries have come to be associated with those of our own nation. There is consequently growing up among the oncoming generation a widespread mutual understanding and sympathy such as has never before been consciously developed, and which should stand in the future as a strong guarantee against the danger of war when political questions may cause differences of opinion.

There is an immense possibility before us and a great opening for us all, whatever may be our different work in life, to join together in this great effort, each according to his ability, towards bringing about what the world is sighing for—Peace and Goodwill among men.

To choirmasters especially, then, here lies open a way to give play to their powers in bringing about greater harmony in the world.—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT BADEN POWELL.

Buckingham Palace Road, S.W.1.

WAGNER AND THE ENGLISH PRESS

SIR,—Mr. Newman, in the October number of your journal, misquotes my letter in the September issue. I never mentioned his book, 'Wagner as Man and Artist'; the words referring to it—the six words within brackets—were added by himself. This disposes of his charge against me. I was speaking of the attitude of the English press generally, including of course Mr. Newman's own contributions, during the last twenty-five years: that is, from the publication of his first Study in 1899. So much is quite clear from my letter.

As to Mr. Newman's disclaimer, I am at a loss to understand his meaning. In his book, 'Wagner as Man and Artist' (Dent, 1914), the earlier portion, down to p. 145, might almost be described as a compilation from Praeger, Hornstein, Kapp, and a few others (I omit Hanslick because, although strongly prejudiced, he does not belong in that galère). From these he quotes whole pages of letters and writings. In his earlier Study he extracts from Max Nordau a piece of particularly malicious scandal. All whom I have named are of Jewish extraction, but the writer whom I had principally in view was Herr Julius Kapp, a journalist living at Berlin, who has for many years been active in ferreting out prurient gossip about Wagner, Liszt, and others. I have said all that is needful about him in my article in Music and Letters for last January, and need not repeat it here.

I have replied to Mr. Newman because he invited me to do so. But for the future I am sure you will understand and forgive my saying that if he wishes me to take any notice of what he writes he must moderate his tone. He need not observe 'old-fashioned courtesy' if he dislikes it, but surely in England a controversy can be carried on between literary men without their calling each other liars.

I add that in referring to the Jewish press I intend no insult to a great people, for whom I have the highest respect. But there are Jews and Jews, just as there are Christians and Christians, and as a class they have received strong provocation from Wagner, for which the lower sort have sometimes thought fit to retaliate by defaming him.—Yours, &c.,

G. AINSLIE HIGHT.

[We sent Mr. Hight's letter to Mr. Ernest Newman, who replies as follows.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—Mr. Hight's letter merely heightens his original offence. To inaccuracy he now adds disingenuousness. He would have your readers believe that when he said that 'Mr. Newman draws for his material from the notoriously scandalous Jewish Press of Germany' he was not referring to my 'Wagner as Man and Artist.' He then proceeds to show that he was referring to that book by claiming that the sentence quoted does apply to it! To what else, indeed, could he be referring? My earlier 'Study of Wagner' (1899) was almost entirely a study of him as a musician, poet, and thinker. It was only in the final pages that I said something about Wagner the man, and then only in so far as his physique, temperament, and health bore upon the character of his work. I 'extracted' no 'particularly malicious scandal' from Max Nordau; even now Mr. Hight cannot be accurate. I indeed referred in a foot-note to some article or other by Nordau (of about 1898) that I have now completely forgotten; but I did not 'extract' a single sentence from it, and I indicated my disagreement with Nordau.

Mr. Hight, whatever he may say, cannot possibly have had the long out-of-print volume of 1899 in his mind when he wrote his first letter to you, for it contains no 'scandalous' material drawn from the German Jewish Press. His second paragraph, indeed, is a confession that, in spite of his disclaimer, it was my 'Wagner as Man and Artist' that he was libelling. Pressed for details, Mr. Hight gets as far as saying that the first hundred and forty-five pages of my book (i.e., the whole of the study of Wagner the man) 'might almost be described as a compilation from Praeger' and others. In no sense whatever are they a 'compilation' from these people. Praeger's name is mentioned only twice, and only to show that though Praeger as a whole is now rightly discredited, the belated revelation by Wagner himself of the Madame Laussot episode (so long and so carefully hushed up by Wahnfried and its satellites) gave reasons for thinking that Praeger was not wholly romancing on this one point, inaccurate as he is in the details he gives of it. I discussed the Laussot affair for twelve pages, carefully examining all the original documents: Praeger is only referred to in a foot-note at the end, and that, in part, to show that he is wrong. Mr. Hight's 'whole pages' of 'scandalous' material from Praeger thus boil themselves down to a citation, with a partial repudiation, of twelve lines of trivial chatter.

As for Baron Hornstein, the only use I have made of him is to quote in full the texts of the letters that passed between his father and Wagner in 1861. Apparently Hornstein was a Jew: so, for Mr. Hight, this citation of two very ordinary letters becomes a drawing for material upon 'the notoriously scandalous Jewish Press of Germany'!

Whether Julius Kapp is a Jew or not I cannot say. In any case it is irrelevant. If any of the material I quote from him is 'scandalous'—which no one would assert but Mr. Hight—then it is Wagner, not Kapp, who must be censured, for Wagner wrote the letters, while Kapp merely published them. I know of no 'prurient gossip' in Kapp's pages; for Mr. Hight everybody is prurient or malicious or scandalous who gives the whole facts about Wagner the man instead of concealing half of them. In trying to paint the portrait of the real Wagner I naturally made use of all the available material; and my book is not a 'compilation' from scandalous sources, but an attempt to reconstruct the man impartially from (1) his autobiography, (2) his own letters, (3) letters to him and about him, (4) the reminiscences of those who knew him.—Yours, &c.,

ERNEST NEWMAN.

THE R.C.O. ORGAN TESTS

SIR,—In the Examiners' Report on the A.R.C.O. playing tests, as given in your August issue, it is stated:

> 'It is noteworthy that there were still some instances of candidates playing with 16-ft. tone alone, the result, in a very low passage, being a vague murmur. Some 8-ft. tone should usually be combined with the 16-ft.'

The number of times that attention has been drawn to this defect in candidates' playing prompts me to wonder whether there is not a possibility that, owing to the peculiar nature of the examination room, and the consequent voicing of the pipes, there may be dead spots in the vicinity of the examiners' corner, which occur sometimes when bass stopped pipes are in use. Would it not give confidence to candidates were tests specially made in this connection, to see whether certain 8-ft. stops when added to the pedal Bourdon do not, in that part of the room where the examiners sit, and under similar conditions which prevail during an actual examination, give the aural illusion of only 16-ft. stops being in use?

Far be it from me to suggest an error on the part of the examiners, but having regard to the frequency of this matter being referred to, I beg to suggest, in the interests of candidates and their teachers, that a definite statement from the R.C.O. authorities would remove any doubts on this point.—Yours, &c.,

J. H. REGINALD DIXON.

Lancaster. September, 1925.

[We sent a proof of Mr. Dixon's letter to the R.C.O., and have received the following reply.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—An acoustical freak such as that suggested by your correspondent Mr. Dixon is, I believe, quite possible, but I can confidently say there are no dead spots in the organ-room at the R.C.O.; in fact, the acoustical properties of the room are such that the effect of performances on the organ is painfully clear and exact—there is no echo or illusion of any kind. I trust Mr. Dixon's letter will draw increased attention to the ill-selection of the pedal stops to which the examiners have so often referred.—Yours, &c.,

The Royal College of Organists, Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

H. A. HARDING
(Hon. Secretary)

ORGANISTS' SALARIES

SIR,—As a regular reader of the Musical Times I have sometimes noticed an indication of a slightly hostile feeling on the part of the professional towards the amateur musician. I realise that this feeling of exclusiveness is quite natural, and in moderation beneficial, as sustaining efficiency, &c. But in your September issue the matter is brought up in a way which does injustice to the amateur musician. 'Oxonian,' writing on organists' salaries, says:

> 'Who is going to qualify [i.e., by taking the R.C.O. choir-training diploma] when the large majority of the clergy are bent on ousting the professional organist, and appointing the more or less incompetent or untrained amateur? Many of the clergy are blind and deaf to the appeal of really good music and to efficient choir-training.'

I hope I do not read into these words anything that 'Oxonian' does not mean, but I should like to point out on behalf of my brother-incompetents that many of us do possess R.C.O. diplomas in organ-playing, and that as organists we can hold our own with the average professional. As for training, it would be interesting to know the proportion of schoolmasters (usually musico-specialists) among amateur organists. I fancy it would be higher than the number of business-men thus engaged. What occupation could better equip a man for a choirmaster's job than that of music-teacher in a school? During his training he has had opportunities for observation and practice in voice-production and the teaching of music, which the best accoutred musical academy must find it hard or impossible to provide. Class-teaching is his own particular job; discipline a daily matter. If he cannot compose a fugue, is he on that account the worse choirmaster or organist? His enthusiasm is generally greater because the time devoted to his duties is by way of being a diversion.

'Oxonian' goes on to say that 'many of the clergy are blind and deaf to the appeal of really good music'—for all the world as though the professional musician has the monopoly of musical taste. Does it need a great deal of specialised knowledge and acquired skill to get a simple anthem sung in musicianly and artistic fashion? Is no amateur capable of achieving this feat?

Many amateurs are qualified and trained, and are competent to make as great a success of an organist-choirmaster's job as any professional musician; also emphatically musical taste is not the property of the latter.

I may add that I neither hold an organist's post nor possess a R.C.O. diploma; so I am not out to blow my own trumpet.—Yours, &c.,

CLIFFORD C. HODGES.

41, Fieldway Crescent, N.5.

SIR,—I agree with the Editor that 'plenty of scope for pupils' is an inducement and a blessing, but not when used as a 'bait,' as is so often the case. One is surprised to find the gardener and verger being put on the same level as the organist. Evidently we are to presume it costs nothing to educate a musician. I do not agree that the churches are in such economic straits as the Editor would have us believe, except through their own management, or mis-management. Where the right man is at the head, i.e., the Vicar, there will always be a congregation and sound finance, for people require a good lead: at least, that has been my experience.

I could name a number of churches where there is any amount of wealth represented in the congregation, but the people so blessed are hard-headed business men who do not see beyond their noses in matters outside their own trade. With such it is not a question of cutting their coat according to their cloth, but of getting the cheapest man of a semi-professional type. Did space permit I could adduce numerous examples which have come under my notice recently. I will give one. In the September Musical Times there was a post advertised at a salary of £50—I believe the retiring organist was getting £60.

I learn from those in possession of the facts that there is any amount of wealth centred around the church, and that the people with it are quite willing to pay well for good music in their own households; but that so far as the church is concerned they are out for a man at £50, be he professional or amateur. I have not the slightest doubt that this church could afford to offer at least thirty pounds more if the Vicar felt disposed to do so. Yet in spite of assessing the post at such a low figure, this church expects to get a good choir-trainer to fill the vacancy.

I am afraid, however, that organists have only themselves to blame for the present state of affairs. They have no organization which can give weight to any demands that they may urge, and even if they had, no doubt the amateur would always be willing to step into any post for a smaller figure than a professional man would accept. Meanwhile the professional jealousy that is rife is enough to make angels weep.—Yours, &c.,

ANOTHER F.R.C.O.

SIR,—Let 'F.R.C.O.' count himself a happy man if he has a decent organ to play on, can maintain a good choir, and can make ends meet. There are probably many of us who find teaching music a pleasure, and the Sunday services the reverse. More than a year ago I refused an increase of salary, and lately offered to play voluntarily, if our people take up the question of a better instrument. Bad music is a worse evil than a meagre salary.—Yours, &c.,

'A.R.C.O.'

[This correspondence must now cease.—EDITOR.]

MUZIO CLEMENTI

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to a reference in your September issue to notes that I wrote some time ago concerning Muzio Clementi.

I am very glad to think that there are still people living at Evesham who are interested in the famous composer and in the circumstances of his death there, but I cannot confess to having been responsible for a book with such a title as 'Evesham Jottings'! My friend, Mr. Wythen Roberts, in his kindly note doubtless intended to refer to my 'Evesham and Four Shires Notes and Queries,' where, in vol. ii., page 154, there is the allusion to Muzio Clementi, which he quotes. Therein, the 'M. W.' to whom Miss Myra Taylor referred, stood for Mary Westwood—not Mary Webmore—and I referred to her by initials as she was then still alive.

In the autumn of 1908, Dr. Max Unger and I made many additional inquiries concerning the sudden death of Clementi at the Elm, Bengeworth, Evesham, on March 10, 1832, for I had never been satisfied that Clementi had any property there. Dr. Unger had already published his book when, through the courteous medium of Mr. H. E. Hayes, of the Victoria Library, Worcester, we were informed that he (Mr. Hayes) had found a reference to Clementi's death, in Berrow's Worcester Journal of Thursday, March 15, 1832, as follows:

> 'On Saturday, aged 81, there died at his cottage in the Vale of Evesham, Mr. Clementi, the eminent composer and pianoforte player.'

The historian May, who doubtless knew Clementi well, writes of him—only a few years after his decease—as having died at Evesham, 'whither he had a short time previously retired' ('History of Evesham,' second edition, p. 410).

So we may take it as fairly definitely established that Clementi's 'property' to which he retired was a cottage in the vicinity of the Elm, and doubtless the old gentleman was taking his walks abroad, and looking in on one and another of his neighbours, when he was seized with a fatal heart-attack in the laundry of the Elm, an 'eligible mansion' close at hand. Certainly I have never found his name in any local documentary evidences of his period, and I have good reason to think that it may be safely assumed that he was the tenant and not the owner of the Bengeworth cottage.—Yours, &c.,

E. A. B. BARNARD.

26, Warkworth Street, Cambridge.

[An article dealing with the above, and other Clementi matters, by Mr. Herbert Westerby, will appear in our next issue.—EDITOR.]

A CORRECTION

SIR,—On page 932 of your October issue you make a kindly announcement of the new hymn book which we are now preparing, 'Songs of Praise,' but there is one omission which may give a wrong impression, and I should be glad if you would allow this letter to correct it.

The editors of the book are not only Dr. Vaughan Williams, but a committee consisting of the aforementioned, Mr. Martin Shaw and Dr. Percy Dearmer.—Yours, &c.,

Oxford University Press, Amen House, Warwick Square, London, E.C.4.
October 2, 1925.

HUBERT J. FOSS
(Musical Editor).

IN DEFENCE OF THE GRAMOPHONE

SIR,—May I, as a vocalist-aspirant, be permitted to raise my voice 'in defence of the gramophone'? I heartily agree with Mr. Robertson of the Gramophone Company, when he asserts that the gramophone may be included among the musical instruments, and I think that with four years' experience of what I find a most alluring hobby, I am qualified to make this statement.

But with regard to its practical utility in vocal training, the gramophone can be either a blessing or a curse; it is moderation, I think, that should guide our steps in this matter. In some respects, particularly with regard to Caruso, I agree with Dr. Ivimey. To copy the great Continental vocal giants cannot be attended with anything else but disaster, for the English physical characteristics are quite inadequate to such demands being placed upon them.

Sir Henry Wood has written a most interesting pamphlet entitled, 'The Influence of the Gramophone on Musical Culture,' issued free by the Columbia Graphophone Company, in which he says

> '. . . if you want to send a pretty-toned English voice to the devil, you will send it to Italy. Very few English throats can force, yell, and bleat out open white notes in the style of the bad, modern Italian singers.'

Sir Henry also quotes the case of a young tenor who, having trained in London for about five years, went to Italy. When he returned, Sir Henry states that 'his tone had become shouty, white, and very tight on the top notes.' It ultimately transpiring that, having bought all Caruso's records, he had modelled his style upon these, with the disastrous effects shown.

There is, however, another side to the question. In the course of my studies I have found the gramophone of inestimable value. Indeed it was that instrument which first instilled into me a love of singing, and suggested to me the possibility of a musical career, so I owe it a debt I can never repay.

But as I have previously remarked, moderation should be used. The student should be careful not to merge his individuality into that of another singer, as was the case with Sir Henry Wood's young protégé, and not to expect his organ to perform impossible tasks. Bearing these points in mind, I am sure he will find in the gramophone a most efficient maestro. I heartily record my vote in defence of the gramophone both as a musical instrument and as a source of instruction to vocal students, provided it is used in the right way.—Yours, &c.,

55, Kendall Road, Beckenham, Kent.

'BASSO-CANTANTE.'

CHRISTOPHER TYE

SIR,—In reply to Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright's queries, I have much pleasure in taking them seriatim:

(1.) Of course there is no absolute proof as to the exact date of Tye's birth or of his stay as a chorister at King's College, Cambridge, but the date '1498' may be taken as fairly certain for his birth-date, according to notes which I received from the late F. G. Edwards. His stay at King's College was from 'about 1510 to 1515,' according to Mr. James Gairdner. Christopher Tye was in the choir in 1527, and it would be very remarkable if two of the same name were contemporary choristers. The fact of his Grace for the degree of Mus. D. at Cambridge, in 1536, referring to his ten years' study in the art of music, and his having had experience in teaching boys, almost certainly points to his lay-clerkship from 1526 to 1536 at King's College.

(2.) The date September 10, 1541, for the appointment of Tye as master of the choristers and organist of Ely Cathedral, is based on the assumption that Tye was one of the original members of the establishment, as he was certainly acting in that capacity in 1542. In this connection, Mr. Arkwright may be anxious to learn that the date of Archdeacon Cox's appointment as Archdeacon of Ely was November 24, 1540, and not '1541,' as given in 'Grove'; and it may also be of interest to mention that Cox was schoolmaster to King Edward VI. from October, 1543, according to the Prince's own journal.

(3.) My statement that Tye, in the end, 'probably' verted to the ancient creed' is merely its face-value, and I do not claim for it more than probability. I am sorry I cannot agree with Mr. Arkwright as to Tye being a man of 'extreme simplicity, not to say guilelessness, in affairs outside his music,' for assuredly he secured valuable preferment in the Anglican Church, no doubt owing to his friend, Bishop Cox.—Yours, &c.,

October, 1925. W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

P.S.—I need scarcely add that I gladly welcome any corrections in or additions to the present series of 'Late Tudor Composers' on which I have been endeavouring to throw new light.

A RECORD OF AN ANCIENT SONG SCHOOL

SIR,—Will you be so kind as to allow me the hospitality of your paper to inform your readers that I have written an account of the Grammar and Song Schools of Southwell Minster, or Cathedral, from the records preserved in the Library here? Both schools were probably in existence in 1020; the earliest documentary evidence I have found dates from the beginning of the 15th century. The book of a hundred and four pages contains lists of the masters of both schools, the organists, singing-men, and choristers, and also interesting details as to the musical services. As soon as sufficient orders are received the book will be printed privately. Copies should be ordered at once from Mr. Padgett, Market Place, Southwell, Notts. The price is 5*s*.—Yours, &c.,

W. A. JAMES
(Librarian, Southwell Minster).

Southwell.
September, 1925.

THE LURE OF THE VIBRATO

SIR,—Of late years it has become the fashion in some quarters to decry the type of production employed by singers in higher opera.

Mr. Travers Adams, in common with others whose opinions he endeavours to support, would appear to favour a somewhat reactionary school of thought (see August number, p. 731).

To hint that the striking brilliancy, penetration, vitality, power, &c., of the production used by the leading artists in grand opera to-day is 'unsuitable for purely beautiful effect,' demands further explanation. It is a question whether many of those who now frequent grand opera would subscribe to the words 'subjected to the INDIGNITY of super-production.' Modern modes of expression imperatively demand modern methods of voice-production.

Mr. Travers Adams will hardly deny that vocalization follows the law of progress in common with other arts and sciences.—Yours, &c.,

W. E. BELL-PORTER
(Late of the Moody-Manners Grand Opera).

4, Fielding Road, W.14.

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Travers Adams's letter in the August Musical Times, may I say, without any wish to appear discourteous, that I sincerely think his statements are exaggerated. It is news to me, and to others, to learn that the description of voice-production employed nowadays in grand opera is 'quite unsuitable for purely beautiful effect,' and contrasts so unfavourably with that of a past school.

Mr. Adams surely recognises that the demands of expression in grand opera at present are incomparably more exacting than in former times. I notice that his criticism is entirely destructive. Will he state specifically what he considers wrong technically with the production he criticises so unequivocally, and explain the remedy?

I can assure him that a considerable number of people will await this information with interest.—Yours, &c.,

26, Harcourt Avenue, Southend. PEARCE SMALL.

[The above correspondence was sent to Mr. Travers Adams, whose reply is subjoined.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—The statements I supply below may answer Mr. Bell-Porter's theory of the progressiveness of modern voice production, and Mr. Small's 'demands of expression in grand opera.'

Musical Times, April, 1910, the words of Signor Carugati:

'In Italy . . . the old robust voices capable of resistance, and all powerful, are no more . . . exceptions are very rare.'

Daily Express, January 29, 1925, Signor Battistini wrote:

'This century does not bring forth fine and lasting voices, for there is no one left to train the potential voices that there are. I myself am sixty-eight years of age, and have been singing in public all over the world unceasingly ever since I was about twenty-one. No voice which has not started its career with perfect training in production could possibly stand the strain. . . . The voice is an instrument the most fragile and perfect instrument in the world. Before it can be used, it has got to be built and seasoned with the same care as was used in making a Stradivarius violin. Unless a student spend time and care in the actual building of his voice, he is attempting to draw perfect sound from an instrument not only imperfect, but incomplete in its construction.'

We know from their writings, that the old Italian masters of repute taught that the voice should be 'propped up' above the throat, meaning that the lawful pressure should be distributed over the upper resonators—the head cavities, the mouth, the pharynx, and the inside of the larynx, as well as the chest. Nowadays these upper resonators appear to receive little use, most of the sound seeming to be confined to the bottom of the throat. This is the tragedy in practice, because of the loss of that special resonance which is responsible for body, richness, volume, and beauty, as well as mere loudness. The school represented by the present writer can hardly be called reactionary. But I am asked to state a remedy. That is rather a long story; I will do my best, in as few words as possible. Commence your training on the upper middle notes, and descend, singing lightly and gently. On the higher notes, sing as lightly as possible, and with very small breath pressure. Do not employ full breath pressure and vocal power at the beginning of training. Use the closed vowel oo (the old Italian masters used it to cause the larynx to descend on the upper notes). Sing gentle, dreamy kinds of songs; leave severely alone, at first, boisterous, warlike, noisy tunes. This initial practice will encourage high and forward placing. When a proper mould has been formed above the cords, and the larynx descends naturally, the open vowels can be admitted, and power and volume can be increased. Ah is a guttural, and must at first be sparingly used for that reason. Practice at full power and volume must be left to a comparatively late stage. The greatest point of all is to lift the pressure off the vocal cords as much as possible, and especially to bring it up into the nasal cavities. But I am afraid your space will not allow me to devote more time to this subject at present. If either of your contributors, or any teacher, or medical man, really interested in the subject will send me his address, I will send him gratis a copy of my latest book, which deals fully with the matter.—Yours, &c., H. TRAVERS ADAMS.

16, Warwick Avenue, W.2.

AN AMENDE

SIR,—With reference to my book, 'Wagner's Music-Drama of The Ring,' recently reviewed in your columns, I should be extremely grateful if you would allow me to correct an unintentional error in courtesy and recognition.

The quotations from Wagner's essay, 'Die Wibelungen,' appearing in chap. 2, are, of course, from William Ashton Ellis's translation of Wagner's prose works, published by Messrs. Kegan Paul. The copyright of the prose works and all other published literary works of the late W. A. Ellis is vested in Mr. T. Francis Howell, by whose kind permission the above-mentioned quotations are reproduced. I now desire to make acknowledgment of this permission, and to express regret for its inadvertently not having been made in my book. Anticipating your courtesy in giving publicity to this statement.—Yours, &c., L. ARCHER LEROY.

Sevenoaks.
October, 1925.

PIANOFORTE TRANSCRIPTIONS

SIR,—It is amazing to note that writers on the subject of pianoforte transcriptions usually skirt or shirk the question of the pianoforte concerto, wherein pianoforte and orchestra often have identical phrases to play. If a pianoforte transcription is quite unable to do justice to an orchestral theme and vice versâ, it follows that in a pianoforte concerto an injustice is often inflicted on one of the two parties. Let any one who nurses this theory take a well-knit work like the César Franck Variations, and pick out which themes were conceived orchestrally and which pianistically. I wish him joy!—Yours, &c., ROBERT LORENZ.

26, St. James's Mansions, N.W.6.

CHOIR CONTROL AND ORGANIZATION

SIR,—Referring to an article entitled 'A New System of Choir Control and Organization,' by Mr. H. F. Thielé, in your October issue, I do not wish to rob him of any credit that attaches to an idea which, in his case, has such admirable results. Fifteen years ago, however, I inaugurated a similar system, which I have adopted in all other churches to which I have been promoted. In my scheme I have five divisions—or, as I prefer to call them, classes—consisting of (1) head boys; (2) senior boys; (3) junior boys; (4) junior-junior boys; (5) probationers. There are four boys in class (1), six each in classes (2), (3), and (4), and as many as can be accommodated in class (5). The pay is graded accordingly, and the head boys are given a bonus of, say, 2*s.* a quarter, strangely enough as it may seem to Mr. Thielé, as a guarantee of good behaviour and attention to their special duties. Promotions take place quarterly, but my head-boys have no say in the matter, as surely it is one for the choirmaster, and for him alone. Promotion depends chiefly on the ability to point any given verse in the Psalms, as this is, to my mind, an essential qualification for a church choirboy.

With regard to reading music, I, with Mr. Thielé, feel how difficult it is to devote any of the precious time of rehearsal to this, and I thank him for his suggestions, though perhaps he is claiming too much when he states that the boys are 'able to make a really creditable exhibition the first time they tackle new music' after eight short lessons in theory of music.

I am all out with Mr. Thielé in giving the boys more responsibility whenever possible, but I have not found in an experience of some twenty years that there are many boys to whom any of the choirmaster's authority can be delegated, and I have regretfully to observe that it is most often the older boys who soonest get out of control. Of course circumstances alter cases, and the class of boy has a good deal to do with it. Generally, however, I think choirmasters would not find it wise to have the choir (of boys) 'run entirely by the boys themselves.' Boys are boys, and with all his proneness to error on occasion, the choirmaster is the one most likely to be just and impartial where merit or punishment are concerned.

Our thanks are due to Mr. Thielé for reopening a subject which must be of great interest to all those who pursue the none-too-easy task of forming and training a choir of boys.—Yours, &c.,

H. R. LAMPLUGH
(Organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Bridlington).

'Miranshah,' Carlton Street,
Bridlington.

A NEW DIPLOMA?

SIR,—Recently I passed a church where an organ recital was announced to be given by an organist who had after his name 'F.S.S.A.L.' Can you inform me what these letters signify?—Yours, &c.,

HERBERT HODGE.

5, Streatham Place, S.W.2.

[We can't.—EDITOR.]

Sharps and Flats

One day —— got so many inspirations all at once that he sat down thirty mornings running and composed both the music and the tunes of thirty songs.—Hannen Swaffer.

Each programme contains about half-a-dozen Chorale Preludes . . . and fills up with a Fantasia by M. Passacaglia. —Sunday Paper.

Overture ...	...'Frau Diavolo'...	...	Auber
Ballet ...	...'Lille des fees'...	...	Popy

Any of she above compositions may be purchased from Messrs. ——.

—Concert programme.

5.40 p.m.—Women's Hour. House-cleaning. (Beethoven.) —Berlin programme in Radio Times.

I thought Stracciari's Serenade from the 'Damnation of Faust' a poor effort. I never heard a less Satanic sneer; it sounded rather like an old gentleman clearing his throat in a bus.—Compton Mackenzie.

. . . that Salvation Army Symphony in A flat by Sir Edward Elgar, which is one of the most conspicuous monuments of banality in modern music.—W. J. Turner.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of November, 1865:

The opposition of Lord Dudley to the Worcester Festival has had the effect of testing the general feeling so thoroughly as to set the question permanently at rest; and we are happy to say that the Festival of the Three Choirs is likely, in consequence, to be placed on a more solid foundation than ever. We learn from the Worcestershire Chronicle that the Dean and Chapter, at a meeting in the Chapter Room, 'agreed to grant the use of the Cathedral and College Hall, as usual, for the Musical Festival next year, agreeably to the request made to them by the committee formed for the promotion of the Festival.'

The Meeting of the Church Congress at Norwich, which commenced on October 3, has not been the means of calling forth any startling opinions on the present state of ecclesiastical music, although the much-vexed question of the Anglican and Gregorian Chant has been again ventilated. The illustrated lecture, by the Rev. J. B. Dykes, Mus. Doc., was an intellectual attempt to disprove what we should imagine even the wildest Gregorian fanatic would scarcely believe, that 'God's ancient people,' as the lecturer termed them, could ever have handed down any set form of scale to be exclusively used in divine worship. There can be no doubt that the Church Tones served their purpose exceedingly well in their day; but as music advanced as a science, the ear became less satisfied with this crude form of chant, and 'Gregorianism' on its own merits, and not from its old associations, speedily found the utmost difficulty in asserting its power. Dr. Dykes, on the whole, appeared clearly in favour of adopting exclusively the Anglican Chant; but we regret that there was no discussion upon the question, as it appears perfectly fair that at a 'Congress' everybody who brings some knowledge upon the subject should be permitted to speak.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Viola player wanted for string quartet. Weekly practice.—T. L. FOUND, 79, Worple Road, Wimbledon, S.W.19.

Lady viola player seeks practice in chamber and orchestral music. S.W. London preferred.—OMEGA, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (medium ability) wishes to meet fairly capable violinist for mutual practice. Highbury or Islington districts preferred.—L. M. G., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to meet two other ladies (violin and 'cello) to form trio for mutual practice. Birmingham district. —Miss DORIS BROOKES, 'Fairfield,' Eastern Road, Selly Park, Birmingham.

Contralto and tenor, with well-trained voices, wanted to complete quartet. Birmingham.—A. B. C., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (medium ability) wanted to join 'cellist and pianist for mutual practice of orchestral music. Mondays and Thursdays, 7.30 to 9.30, and Sundays, 7 to 9.—'CELLIST, 20, Oseney Crescent, Kentish Town, N.W.1.

Soprano wishes to meet young lady accompanist for mutual practice. West London.—SOPRANO, c/o Musical Times.

Good viola player wanted to complete string quartet for chamber music. Quantity of good music.—HUNT, 41, Eardley Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

Violinist wishes to meet pianist who is a good sight-reader and accompanist, for weekly practice.—R. S., c/o Musical Times.

Two violinists (amateur) wanted to join violist and 'cellist for practice of string quartets. Bradford or Shipley districts.—J. B., 62, Leeds Road, Windhill, Shipley, Yorks.

Violinist wishes to meet good amateur pianist, one evening a week, for mutual practice. Classical music. West London.—W. E. F., c/o Musical Times.

Baritone wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Kennington district.—VOCALIST, 13, Guinness Buildings, Kennington Park Road, S.E.11.

Violinist wishes to meet other players to form string quartet.—LE JEUNE, 13, Ardberg Road, S.E.24.

Vocalist (soprano) wishes to meet lady accompanist for mutual practice. One evening a week. Near Clapham.—L., 197, Elmhurst Mansions, Clapham, S.W.4.

Bass vocalist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice.—N. G. I., 53, Schubert Road, East Putney, S.W.15.

First violinist wanted to complete quartet for fortnightly practice of easier classical music.—PROSSER, 12, Beverley Road, Barnes, S.W.13.

The Tudor Singers have a vacancy for a light tenor. Good reading and regularity essential. Meetings at Victoria every Friday at 6.30.—C. J. BATES, 16, Arterberry Road, Wimbledon, S.W.20.

Flautist wishes to meet accomplished pianist for mutual study. Sonatas, concertos, &c., from Bach to ultra-moderns.—J. T. T., c/o 68, Princes Road, Middlesbrough.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The autumn term and new academic year began on September 21. It is satisfactory to record that the number of students has never been larger, the total approximating to a thousand. The staff dinner of the professors was held on on Saturday, October 3, and at this function, the first of the new session, the Advisory Boards—under the deliberations and subject to the advice of which the technical work of the institution proceeds—were elected. These Boards have been functioning for twelve months, and the innovation has proved strikingly successful. Mr. Stewart Macpherson, the convener of the Advisory Board on harmony and composition, in a few words happily indicated the feelings of the staff towards this inspiration of the Principal's. He said:

> 'The meetings have been marked by a delightful friendliness. Discussion has been free and unconstrained, and many of us have been brought into touch with one another in a more or less intimate atmosphere.'

It is obvious, therefore, that this new institution will be greatly to the advantage of the business of the Academy and the good of the body corporate.

The main feature of the first fortnightly concert held on Saturday, October 10, in the Duke's Hall, was the address given in the interval by the Principal. Mr. McEwen spoke on 'Studentship,' with special reference to the recruits who had recently entered the Academy. Very aptly he quoted Kipling's poem beginning:

> 'The 'eathen in his blindness bows down to wood and stone,
> 'E don't obey no orders—unless they is 'is own.'

No more apposite text could have been chosen, for, as Mr. McEwen pointed out, young people are prone to suffer from excessive centralisation of interests and actions of the individual self, a state of affairs inimical to happiness and satisfaction in any community. These addresses, short and to the point, given at the beginning and end of each term, are admirable from every point of view. Their common-sense precepts are applicable not only to new and old students, but to many whose student days are long past, and the advice tendered is so sound, and offered in such a genuine spirit of comradeship, that all who hear must realise its worth and import. Adverting to the concert, it had many points of interest, too many, indeed, for detailed reference, but particular commendation may be given to the performance of two movements of Beethoven's Trio in C minor.

On November 5 and 19, gatherings of some eight hundred children from the schools in the Borough of Marylebone will be held in the Duke's Hall, to listen to talks on music by Mr. Stewart Macpherson. The subjects dealt with in the series are diverse, and include books, shells, the Zoo, and pictures. Mr. Macpherson will be assisted by students of the Academy, and the art will be treated in such a way as to give the young people some idea of what it means, and what is its scope. At the first of the two talks on music the chair will be taken by Alderman Sir Henry F. New; and on November 19 the chairman will be Alderman E. Sanger.

The following scholarships have been awarded: Elizabeth Stokes Scholarship (pianoforte) to Phyllis D. Sellick (Ilford), Gwenyth E. Misselbrooke, Kathleen E. Fenton, Marion G. J. McTurk, Inez M. Tognolini, and Esther Lewin being highly commended. Annie M. Child Scholarship (elocution) to Norah M. Lynch (London), Hilda M. Coxhead being highly commended, and Beryl N. Oldrey and Jacob L. A. Punt commended. Sisselle Wray Scholarship (female vocalists) to Phyllis M. Bonner (London), Vera D. B. Kneebone being very highly commended. Parepa-Rosa Scholarship (female vocalists) to Elizabeth M. Davies (Brynyfolin Dyffryn), Jane E. Evans and Mary G. Ross being highly commended. Broughton Packer Bath Scholarship (violoncello) to John M. Richards (Llandaff, Glam.), Stephen Blythe, Pierre Roberjot, and Henry Elman being highly commended. Sainton-Dolby Scholarship (female vocalists) to Gwendolene M. Embley (Blackburn), Ethel Alleway being highly commended, and Elizabeth M. Davies and Muriel G. R. Birch Jones commended. Thomas Threlfall Scholarship (organ) to Edward G. P. Biggs (Westcliff-on-Sea), William F. Glock being highly commended. Macfarren Scholarship (composition) to Robert O. Edwards (London), Monica Myatt being highly commended. George Mence Smith Scholarship (female vocalists) to Hilda Warren (Ilkeston), Agnes B. Thornton being commended. John Stokes Scholarship (baritones) to Alexander L. Morphy (Ballinorig, Tralee), Howard C. Lighten being commended. John Stokes Open Scholarship (baritones) to Francis M. Ryan (Coulsdon), Edwin Stevens being commended. Edward and Anne Seguin Scholarship (male vocalists) to Daniel E. Jones (London). Elizabeth Stokes Open (supplementary) Scholarship (pianoforte) to Dorothy Valentine Manley (Blackburn). Walter Stokes Scholarship (tenors) to Wilfred Thomas Miles (Ystradgfodwg), Frank Southwell being very highly commended, and James Topping and Thomas R. A. Hanson commended.

Ada Lewis Scholarships have been awarded as follows: Conducting, to Maurice E. Miles (Epsom). Violin, to Percy John Dyer (Croydon), William A. E. Ward, and Mary J. Townshend being highly commended, and Mary E. Davy commended. Pianoforte (two scholarships), to Mary J. Townshend (Hastings) and Josephine C. Harrison (London), Marion G. J. McTurk, Kathleen E. Fenton, Inez M. Tognolini, and Ione Constanduros being highly commended.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

With a very large influx of new pupils, the College assembled for the Christmas term on September 21. By the time these lines are in print some half-dozen of a list of nearly thirty concert and operatic fixtures will have taken place.

Foremost among the operatic events will be the performance of Nicholas Gatty's 'Tempest' as the first production under the new 'Ernest Palmer scheme for Opera Study,' in which Sir Ernest Palmer has followed up his generous encouragement of concert artists and composers with a similar endowment for the furtherance of opera study.

Students whose work lies in the direction of the study and practice of orchestral music enjoyed a great opportunity of making early acquaintance with the newest of new compositions early in the term, for the London rehearsals of the Leeds Festival took place in the College concert hall. Novelties by Holst, Coates, Respighi, Bax, and Vaughan Williams were rehearsed for the first time; hence a student possessed of daring, tempered with discrimination, was enabled to form his own opinion on some highly important contributions to music, unhampered or unassisted by preconceived notions acquired from other people's views. Possibly the most spectacular feature of these rehearsals was the magnificent splendour of the London Symphony Orchestra sailing in triumph through the unfamiliar and uncharted seas of Holst's new 'Choral' Symphony.

A grievous loss has been sustained by the College through the sudden death on October 14 of Mr. Herbert Sharpe, a member of the Board of Professors and a Fellow of the College. Mr. Sharpe had been intimately connected with the College for nearly fifty years, for he was one of the original scholars of the National Training School, the forerunner of the College. On the foundation of the College in 1883, he joined the teaching staff, and from that time onward enjoyed such love and affection of his fellow teachers and pupils as rarely fall to the lot of any man, save through whole-hearted devotion and unswerving faithfulness to great ideals.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The past three or four initial weeks of the current term have been crowded with interest. Following Sir Dan Godfrey's widely-noticed address to students, on the subject of 'Music as a Career,' came the very useful lecture of Mr. Ostrovsky on his system of 'Hand-Training for Instrumental Players.' The lecturer showed how by special exercises calling for the aid, in a number of cases, of some mechanical appliances of his own invention, natural defects of formation or lack of developed freedom of the hand could be modified or remedied. He emphasised the point that his system was one quite apart from the question of the mental control of the hand.

Vocal and pianoforte recitals by the students have been given, also a demonstration of 'Chamber Music by Gramophone.'

A number of distributions of certificates gained by candidates under the College scheme of local examinations in music have taken place, and were attended by Prof. J. C. Bridge and Sir Richard Terry.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Arrangements for some of the activities of the School in the current term as follows:

On October 21, a concert in the School theatre; and ten days later, on Saturday, October 31, a concert and prize distribution in the Great Hall of the City of London School for Boys.

On November 4 and 25 there will be two more School concerts, the later date being devoted to works of Mendelssohn.

Miss Linda Seymour, the young contralto singer who gained no less than eight prizes in two years, including the G.S.M. gold medal, is announced to give a vocal recital at Wigmore Hall in January next. Miss Doreen Kendall, who gained the Liza Lehmann Prize, has gone on tour with Mark Hambourg.

London Concerts

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS'S 'FLOS CAMPI'

The first of Sir Henry Wood's Saturday afternoon symphony concerts at Queen's Hall, on October 10, was distinguished by the production of a new composition by Dr. R. Vaughan Williams—'Flos Campi,' a suite for viola solo (Mr. Lionel Tertis), small orchestra, and wordless chorus (R.C.M. students). Sir Henry conducted. The composer was present, and was called to the platform at the end.

The interest of the occasion was such as could be excited by the work of only two other English musicians of to-day. The impression made was as refreshing as it was singular. We often enough apply the epithet 'intimate' to music, but what music is intimate in the way of Vaughan Williams in this 'wild-flower' mood? It seems to shrink from public light. Most music is obviously written to be heard, but this edges away, reluctant of exhibition, and is not so much heard as overheard.

By the very form it takes, the new composition seems bent on being dragged to the front as rarely as possible, reminding us, in that, of the same author's 'Delectable Mountains,' which fits into none of the every-day vehicles of music-making. Like 'intimate,' 'sincere' is another word terribly overdone in musical application, but we have to resort to it here, for this music is sincere—and past all ordinary degrees of sincerity, to the point of the barest candour in regard to the author's own mind. In such a self-communing not the shadow of a pretence can subsist.

Naturally, then, the utterance will only be explanatory enough for his own purpose, and the rest of us, especially those who look for the proper dotting of every i, may feel rather out of it. Well, that is the charge for a grateful deletion of superfluities. The programme provided each of the six sections with a text from the 'Song of Songs' (choosing to quote from the Vulgate). We were left to guess—and were, for that matter, quite ready to guess—whether the music had been prompted by the antique poem, or whether (as was Schumann's way) the adorning labels were affixed in after-thought. The effect of the wordlessness of the choral part contributed to the mystery.

A dialogue between viola and wood-wind was 'As a lily among thorns.' The melody of 'For lo, the winter is past; the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the voice of the turtle is heard in our land,' hinted at no Oriental land, but (most beautifully) at that of the 'Londonderry Air.' Solomon's 'three-score mighty men, handling the sword, and expert in war,' marched with muffled tread across the visionary stage. The Shulamite danced in the fifth movement ('How beautiful are thy feet in sandals, O prince's daughter!') a grave saraband. The Finale, 'Set me as a seal upon thy heart,' with the homeliest folk-song aid, dug to a profound well of tenderness.

It can be guessed what an eloquence Mr. Tertis's playing lent to the ejaculations and pleading of the viola part. Irony so had it that the next piece on the programme was a Concerto of Saint-Saëns (pianist, Joseph Hofmann), as though to insist that all sorts go to make a world. C.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Of several of the recent concert-givers I do not propose to speak in detail. Already in the new season there have been many singers on whom criticism would be wasted. It is obvious that they have not the intention of taking seriously to their art, or they would not have lightly risked making such bad impressions—impressions which it would take years to live down, if one were to regard their exhibitions as anything but the diversions of amateurs.

Clearly there is something wrong in our musical life—some laxness of judgment, some insincerity and indolence—that these ineffectual persons should be countenanced at all on West-End concert platforms. It indicates a complete lack, in some quarters, of a realisation of what good singing and acceptable musical performance generally should be. Money is asked for admission to exhibitions where in justice every listener deserves to be handsomely remunerated. A more severe standard of judgment by the critics of the daily newspapers might clear the field. I suggest another remedy: that the names of the teachers of these aspirants should be advertised on the programmes. The result would be damaging! Singing teachers certainly are to be blamed for not discouraging more students from premature concert-giving.

It is disappointing how many recitalists come back again and again with the same faults. This argues a terrible self-complaisance. Singers ought always to be learning, always improving; their work is never done. Alone among musicians, singers often appear to consider that a certain artistic sense and sympathy dispense them from acquiring a solid technical groundwork. As though a violinist might be excused amateurish execution on the ground of his fine feelings!

It must be understood that until a cast-iron technique is established the true expression of musical intentions cannot begin. 'But he is such an artist.' Nothing is more wearisome than this excuse for faulty intonation, disgraceful tone-quality, and all the other flaws of the amateur executant. As a matter of fact, only an irreflective and inconsequent listener will resort to such an excuse for the incompetent. An architect must plan his buildings so that at least they stand erect, or he obtains no regard, whatever his interesting intentions. But in London to-day the judgment on singers is too often more complaisant than on architects.

There is one excuse possible for the prevalent disregard of vocal technique, and that lies in the nature of the vocal writing of many modern composers—composers who, one would guess, had never in their lives heard the human voice used as a musical instrument. Such a composer as Schönberg writes evidently with the vocal apparatus of the cow, the ass, or the watch-dog in mind. There are plenty whose demands are nearly, if not quite, as zoological. Naturally, if freakish music definitely conquered the field, one would say no more about good singing, and leave the vocalists in peace to cultivate, as so many are actually doing, the mere art of the diseur. But since at the moment of writing Schönberg and his like are of interest purely to the æstheticians, and are, musically, practically unknown, it is still worth while for the singer to learn to fulfil the demands of Purcell, Handel, Mozart, and Verdi.

Miss Noel Eadie (Wigmore Hall, October 6) is a good singer in the making. Though her lowest notes are rather meagre, and at the apex of a coloratura scale she is inclined to hardness, the voice is, on the whole, of beautiful quality. She must be praised for her concentration on the essential signification of her songs. She took large views, and, resisting the temptation to linger on favourite words and phrases, she made her voice sound bigger than it actually was. Miss Eadie missed certain niceties in her French diction, and was too afraid of opening on some vowels in that troublesome language. Her English was now and again slipshod. Before she can rank as a truly outstanding singer, she must learn to vary more her tone-colours. But here, assuredly, is the right material. Miss Eadie is a singer considerable enough for us to find it worth while to listen attentively and criticise unsparingly. The programme was good; it included the two arias of the Queen of Night from 'The Magic Flute,' with which Miss Eadie has impressed many audiences.

Miss Catharine Stewart (Wigmore Hall, October 12) is a real contralto, not a mezzo-soprano masquerading as such. She at once captured attention by her rich, full quality, and her broad phrasing. She has been well trained, and when she has mastered a slight diffidence in launching legato phrases (this diffidence was chiefly apparent on the first note of a phrase), and has attained generally a more sensuous quality, she will be a singer of mark. She has definitely learnt to sing on her breath, and only occasionally, when tempted to overmuch intensity (as in 'The Friend,' of Wolf), did her voice harden. Her tone was of comforting quality in Wolf's 'Anacreon's Grave,' and her calm, assured bearing made the right effect in Brahms's 'Cool night of death.'

Madame Clarke Holland, at Wigmore Hall, gave a programme of 'Songs of Many Lands,' a task that proved too much for her talents in their present development, although if properly managed her voice would give pleasure.

The old Steinway Hall was re-opened as the 'Grotrian Hall' (with more comfortable seats and various alterations) by a concert given by Mr. Gilbert Bailey and Mr. Hugh Campbell. Their best work was in the choice of a programme—largely of folk-songs. Mr. Campbell's voice sounded meagre even in that small space, and it was not well produced. Mr. Bailey was the better singer. He makes a pleasant impression of being in love with the songs he sings, and in his sense of shading and his diction there is a good deal to admire. It will be a pity if he does not add to his accomplishments a quality of tone beautiful in itself.

The Albert Hall Sunday concerts began with a recital by Mr. John McCormack. The hall was full—always a strange sight, for it is a place where the music of no concert can ever be properly enjoyed (I speak, however, without having heard a military band there). Nevertheless, it holds enough people to gratify the financial ambitions of the 'stars,' and so long as thousands and thousands will put up with music heard in such unsuitable conditions, concerts will of course be held there.

Mr. McCormack is a great technician. Personally, I feel rather weary, at times, of his mannerisms and self-consciousness. Only from the more light-hearted of the Irish songs he sings does one get an impression of complete naturalness. All other things he sings as though carefully remembering note by note, and vowel by vowel, the injunctions of some masterful teacher.

E

Madame Frieda Hempel (in her own clothes) sang some German songs well-nigh to perfection. She was misguided enough to attempt some floridly decorative pieces. In these she has never excelled, and now less than ever. On this Sunday she got harder and harder as she went up, and was frequently out of tune. The lighter songs of Schubert, Schumann, and Strauss are surg by her as by hardly anyone else in the world to-day. On the altar of pop-pop-popularity she put in a group of feeble ballads at the end.

She was followed by Madame Toti Dal Monte. If nothing she did gave one quite the pleasure of Madame Hempel's best, her florid technique was superior. Her legato was not as expressive, and she is not so vivid an artist, but she has thoroughly learnt the tricks of coloratura. Throughout the concert she seemed perfectly assured, and to a connoisseur it was most entertaining to observe her skilful tactics. She found Giordano's 'Caro mio ben' as difficult as anything—so, young singers, take heart!

H. J. K.

MISS GULLAN'S SPEAKING CHOIR

Though not a note of music was played or sung, the 'concert' given by Miss Marjorie Gullan with her verse-speaking choir at Æolian Hall on October 17 was of interest to musicians. It set them longing to meet singers who had given as much attention to the English language as these fourteen girls from Glasgow. We say 'English language' because there was not a hint of Scotch in it. The fact is noted and not acclaimed—this is delicate ground—as a virtue. We might be told that the purity was the Scotch part.

In chorus or in antiphonal sections Miss Gullan's pupils spoke English lyrics, Greek tragedy, Milton, and children's play-poems. Where it was necessary they posed and gestured, and vested themselves appropriately and discreetly; but the speech was the thing, and we can echo Mr. Masefield's praise of it as the loveliest that is to be heard anywhere, while we add the reservation that some—but very few—of our more intelligent and gifted actresses can equal it. The choral part of the training had been minutely carried out, for the unison was perfect in its rise and fall of voice, its rhythm of word and phrase, and in its emotional stresses.

Church choirs would do their chanting all the better for a little attention from Miss Gullan. There is, in fact, plenty of scope for her work in the musical world—take, for instance, the monotoning of the Invocation to Pan in Holst's new 'Choral' Symphony.

CHORAL SOCIETY PROGRAMMES

LONDON AND DISTRICT

ALEXANDRA CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Allen Gill).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'The Creation'; 'Hiawatha' (complete); 'Te Deum' (Stanford); 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure' and 'Sing ye to the Lord'; 'Merrie England'; 'Go, song of mine.' Concerts at Northern Polytechnic, Holloway Road (formerly at Alexandra Palace).

BACH CHOIR (Dr. R. Vaughan Williams).—Jubilee Festival, May 10, 11, 12, and 14, at Central Hall. Bach Cantatas and Motets; Mass in B minor; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Alto Rhapsody' (Brahms); new work—'Sancta Civitas' (Vaughan Williams).

BARNET CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. Whittington).—'The Mystic Trumpeter' (Harty); 'John Gilpin' (Cowen); 'Requiem' (Brahms).

BECKENHAM CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. E. A. Coombs).—'Hiawatha.'

BERMONDSEY SETTLEMENT (Mr. W. H. Bullock).—Carols and miscellaneous; 'The Creation.'

CENTRAL CROYDON MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. Leslie-Smith).—'King Alfred the Great' (Hurlstone); 'The Last Post' (Stanford); Sea Chanties (Fagge); 'The Messiah.'

CENTRAL LONDON CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. David J. Thomas).—'Carmen'; 'The Rebel Maid'; 'Stabat Mater' (Rossini); 'The Messiah.'

CHISWICK AND GUNNERSBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. David M. Davis).—'John Gilpin'; 'Carmen'; 'King Olaf.'

CITY OF LONDON CHORAL UNION (Dr. Harold Darke).—'Samson.'

CITY TEMPLE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Allan Brown).—'The Dream of Gerontius.'

CIVIL SERVICE CHOIR (Mr. Rutland Boughton and Mr. A. Davies Adams).—Concert of contemporary British Works at Central Hall, on December 2.

CROYDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. W. H. Reed and Mr. Alan Kirby).—'The Kingdom'; 'Phaudrig Crohoore'; 'Songs of the Sea' (Stanford); miscellaneous.

CRYSTAL PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock).—'Meg Blane' (Coleridge-Taylor); Sullivan programme; plébiscite programme.

DARTFORD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ernest Leeds).—'Hiawatha.' (Also Eltham Choral Society.)

DULWICH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Fagge).—'Merrie England'; community concert; 'Judith.'

EALING PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. E. Victor Williams).—'King Olaf'; 'Requiem' (Brahms); 'Carmen'; three performances of light opera at Queen's Hall for Messrs. Chappell's Popular Concerts.

GRAFTON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Henry F. Hall).—Selection from the Mass in B minor; 'Toward the Unknown Region' (Vaughan Williams); 'Parsifal,' Act I; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

HARROW AND GREENHILL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—'The Rebel Maid'; miscellaneous.

HITHER GREEN CHORAL SOCIETY AND ORCHESTRA (Mr. Ernest Dumayne).—'The Dogs of Devon' (Bullock); 'Sea' Symphony; 'Songs of the Fleet' (Stanford).

ISLINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Ronald Chamberlain).—'Inchcape Rock' (Bridge); 'Merrie England'; 'King Estmere' (Holst); 'Requiem' (Brahms); 'Hymn of Praise'; 'Hear my Prayer'; 'The Creation.'

LOUGHTON CHORAL SOCIETY AND ORCHESTRA (Mr. Henry Riding).—'Hymn of Praise'; 'The Revenge.'

MANSFIELD HOUSE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. E. Coward).—'The Messiah'; 'A Tale of Old Japan.'

NORTH LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Henry F. W. Horwood).—Selected from: 'The Messiah'; 'Elijah'; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Toward the Unknown Region'; 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean.'

PENGE AND DISTRICT CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Alfred B. Choat).—'The Flag of England'; 'King Olaf'; 'Elijah.'

PEOPLE'S PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES (Mr. Frank Idle).—'Sing ye to the Lord'; 'The Golden Legend'; 'The Kingdom'; 'Requiem' (Verdi); 'The Messiah.'

PHILHARMONIC CHOIR (Mr. C. Kennedy Scott).—'The Messiah'; 'The Breast-Plate of St. Patrick'; 'The Song of the High Hills'; 'Requiem' (Mozart).

PLUMSTEAD CENTRAL HALL CHOIR AND ORCHESTRA (Mr. W. Wilson).—'Tom Jones'; 'Cavalleria Rusticana' or 'Elijah'; 'Requiem' (Verdi).

PURLEY CHORAL UNION (Mr. Harold Macpherson).—'Merrie England'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.—'Elijah,' October 17 (Mr. Albert Coates); Carols, December 19 (Mr. H. L. Balfour); 'The Messiah,' January 2 (Mr. H. L. Balfour); 'Hiawatha,' January 30 (Dr. Malcolm Sargent); 'The Dream of Gerontius,' February 27 (Sir Hamilton Harty); 'The Messiah,' April 2 (Dr. Malcolm Sargent); Mass in B minor, April 24 (Dr. E. C. Bairstow).

SEVEN KINGS CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Percy Saunders).—'Hiawatha.'

SEVENOAKS MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Hubert J. Foss).—'The Spirit of England'; 'Sleepers, wake.'

SOUTH LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. William H. Kerridge).—'Faust' (Berlioz); 'Hymn of Jesus'; Selections from 'Die Meistersinger' and 'Prince Igor'; 'Sleepers, wake'; 'Song of Destiny'; 'The Blessed Damozel' (Debussy).

SOUTH-WEST CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Saunders).—'Acis and Galatea'; 'Song of Destiny'; 'News from Whydah'; 'Requiem' (Verdi); 'The Messiah.'

SUTTON MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. L. Balfour).—Caractacus.'

WEST MIDDLESEX MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. C. Stanley Smallman).—'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'St. John's Eve.'

WESTMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Vincent Thomas).—'The Messiah'; 'Requiem' (Mozart); 'Song of Destiny'; 'Magnificat' (Bach); 'Tom Jones.'

WILLESDEN GREEN AND CRICKLEWOOD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. W. Belchamber).—'The Messiah'; 'A Tale of Old Japan'; 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; 'Faust' (Berlioz).

WIMBLEDON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Kenneth A. Brown).—'Choral' Symphony and Mass in C (Beethoven).

WIMBLEDON CHURCH CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. F. Wilment Bates).—'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' (Parry); 'The Banner of St. George.'

PROVINCIAL CHORAL SOCIETIES

ABERDEEN CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS.—'The Kingdom'; miscellaneous.

ACCRINGTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. B. Shaw).—'The Banner of St. George'; 'The Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé.'

ALNWICK CHORAL UNION (Mr. G. C. Gray).—'Phaudrig Crohoore'; 'Song of Destiny'; 'Turn back, O man' (Holst).

ARUNDEL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Norman F. Demuth).—'Christmas' Oratorio (Parts 1 and 2).

AUDLEM CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. R. A. Taylor).—'The Rose Maiden.'

BARNSLEY ST. CECILIA SOCIETY (Dr. J. Frederic Staton).—'The Golden Legend'; 'The Messiah'; 'Hiawatha.'

BATH CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. T. Sims).—'The Messiah'; 'Job'; 'The Revenge'; madrigals.

BEXHILL-ON-SEA CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. G. Christian).—'Hymn of Praise.'

BIRMINGHAM CATHOLIC CHOIR (Mr. Robert Eaton).—Mass in C (Beethoven); 29th Psalm (Elgar); 'The Battle of the Baltic'; 'Requiem' Mass in C minor (Cherubini); 'Lauda Sion.'

BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Adrian C. Boult).—'Elijah'; 'Job'; Mass in D (Ethel Smyth); 'Sea' Symphony; 'Alto Rhapsody' (Brahms); Mass in C minor (Mozart); 'The Messiah.'

BISHOP AUCKLAND MUSICAL SOCIETY.—'The Creation'; 23rd Psalm (Kilburn).

BLACKBURN ST. CECILIA AND VOCAL UNION (Mr. E. C. Robinson).—'The Spectre's Bride.'

BLACKPOOL CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Percy M. Dayman).—'King Olaf'; 'The Messiah'; 'Cavalleria Rusticana.'

BLAIRGOWRIE AND RATTRAY CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. E. F. Parker).—'St. Paul'; part-songs.

BOGNOR PARISH CHURCH CHOIR (Mr. Norman F. Demuth).—'Before the paling of the stars' (Dale).

BOLTON CHORAL UNION (Mr. Thomas Booth).—'Tom Jones'; 'The Messiah'; concert by the Hallé Orchestra.

BOSTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Gordon Slater).—'Christmas' Oratorio (Parts 1 and 2); 'Hosanna to the Son of David'; chamber concert.

BRADFORD FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Malcolm Sargent). — Mass in B minor; 'The Messiah'; 'Der Freischütz.'

BRADFORD OLD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Wilfred Knight).—'Faust' (Berlioz); 'The Messiah'; 'The Music-Makers'; 'Bon-bon Suite.'

BRISTOL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Arnold Barter).—'Ode to Music' (Parry); 'In no strange land' (Harold Darke); 'The Kingdom'; Orchestral programme includes the 'Pastoral' Symphony (Vaughan Williams).

BRIGHTON AND HOVE HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Percy Taylor).—'Faust' (Gounod); 'Everyman' (Walford Davies); 'Hiawatha'; 'The Messiah.'

BURNLEY MUNICIPAL CHOIR.—'King Olaf'; 'The Messiah'; 'St. Matthew' Passion. (Part of Municipal series that includes concerts by the Municipal Orchestra, and visits by the Hallé Orchestra, Glasgow Orpheus Choir, and Manchester Wind Quintet. Musical Director, Mr. Fred Myers. Chorus master, Mr. D. Duxbury.)

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY MUSICAL SOCIETY (Dr. Cyril Rootham). — 'Requiem' and 'Alto Rhapsody' (Brahms); 'God so loved the world' (Bach).

CARDIFF BLUE RIBBON CHOIR (Mr. Jenkyn Morris).—Five Saturday musical evenings; 'Hymn of Praise.'

CLECKHEATON PHILHARMONIC, CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY (Mr. Charles Stott).—'Cavalleria Rusticana'; part-songs.

CLITHEROE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. B. Shaw).—'Hymn of Praise.'

COLCHESTER AND DISTRICT MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. F. Kingdon).—Choruses from the Mass in B minor; Fantasia on Christmas Carols (Vaughan Williams); 'Merrie England'; 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' (Parry); 'Songs of the Fleet' (Stanford); 'The Banner of St. George.'

COLEHILL CHORAL SOCIETY (with Wimborne Choral Society).—'Elijah'; 'The Messiah'; miscellaneous.

CREWE PHILARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. R. A. Taylor).—Part-songs; 'Hiawatha's Departure'; Fantasias on 'Faust,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Die Meistersinger.'

CRIEFF CHORAL AND OPERATIC SOCIETY (Mr. J. D. Turner).—'Dorothy' (Cellier); 'Hymn of Praise.'

CROSSHILLS CHORAL UNION (Mr. Clement Waddington).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; 'The Death of Minnehaha'; 'The Banner of St. George.'

DARLINGTON BACH CHOIR (Dr. Arthur Kitson).—'St. Matthew' Passion; three programmes of shorter works, the first in conjunction with Mr. Harold Samuel.

DERBY CHORAL UNION (Dr. Henry Coward).—'Israel in Egypt'; 'Job'; 'Sea' Symphony.

DERBY CO-OPERATIVE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Frederick J. Stevenson).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; 'The Death of Minnehaha'; madrigals and part-songs.

DONCASTER MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. H. A. Bennett).—'The Vision of Life' (Parry); 'The Mystic Trumpeter' (Harty); 'Stabat Mater' (Dvorák); 'The Last Post' (Stanford); 'Requiem' (Brahms).

DORCHESTER MADRIGAL AND OPERATIC SOCIETY (Mr. Edgar A. Lane).—'The Yeomen of the Guard'; 'As the hart pants.'

DOVER CHORAL UNION (Mr. H. J. Taylor).—'Carmen'; an evening with grand opera; 'The Messiah.'

DUNDEE AMATEUR CHORAL UNION (Mr. Charles M. Cowe).—'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Caractacus.'

EAST HERTS CHORAL SOCIETY (Hertford).—'The Battle of the Baltic'; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

EXETER ORATORIO SOCIETY (Mr. Allan Allen).—'The Creation'; 'Faust' (Gounod).

FAVERSHAM INSTITUTE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. W. J. Keech).—'The Mountebanks'; 'Two Psalms' (Holst); 'Song of Destiny'; madrigals and part-songs.

FOLKESTONE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. F. E. Fletcher).—'Merrie England'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Elijah.'

GLASGOW CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL UNION (Mr. Wilfrid Senior).—'Requiem' (Brahms); 'The Blessed Damozel' (Debussy); Coronation Scene from 'Boris Godounov'; 'The Messiah'; 'Omar Khayyám,' Part I. (Principally orchestral concerts with various conductors.)

GRAVESEND CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. David J. Thomas).—'Carmen'; 'Stabat Mater' (Rossini); 'The Messiah.'

GRAYS AND DISTRICT CHORAL AND MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. W. H. Fraser).—'Elijah'; miscellaneous.

GRIMSBY CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Percy Wilson).—'Elijah'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Dream of Gerontius.'

GUILDFORD CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Claud Powell).—'The Song of St. Francis' (Walford Davies).

HALIFAX CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. A. C. Tysoe).—'King Saul'; 'The Messiah'; miscellaneous.

HUDDERSFIELD CHORAL SOCIETY (Dr. Henry Coward).—'Requiem' (Verdi); 'Song of Destiny'; 'The Messiah'; 'Faust' (Berlioz).

HULL HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Walter Porter).—'The Mystic Trumpeter' (Harty); 'The Banner of St. George'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Nativity' (Parry); Mass in B minor.

HULL VOCAL SOCIETY (Dr. Henry Coward).—'Hiawatha'; 'The Messiah'; part-songs.

ILKLEY VOCAL SOCIETY (Mr. A. T. Akeroyd).—'Elijah'; 'Coffee' Cantata.

KIDDERMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. J. Irving Glover).—'Song of Destiny'; 'The Banner of St. George'; 'King Olaf.'

KIRKCALDY MUSICAL SOCIETY (Mr. Charles M. Cowe).—'Caractacus.'

LARGS CHORAL UNION (Mr. N. Macquarrie).—'The Messiah.'

LEEDS CHORAL UNION (Dr. Henry Coward).—Excerpts from 'The Immortal Hour,' conducted by Mr. Rutland Boughton; 'The Messiah'; 'Alexander's Feast'; 'The Kingdom.'

LEIGH-ON-SEA CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur Rose).—'Hiawatha'; 'The Revenge'; 'From the Bavarian Highlands'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'King Olaf.'

LINCOLN MUSICAL SOCIETY (Dr. G. J. Bennett).—'Elegiac' Ode (Stanford); Fantasia on Christmas Carols (Vaughan Williams); 'Song of Destiny.'

LITTLEHAMPTON CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Norman F. Demuth).—'Toward the Unknown Region' (Vaughan Williams); 'Tubal Cain' (Dunhill).

LIVERPOOL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (chiefly orchestral concerts).—'Song of Destiny' and 'Re-awakening' (Weingartner), both conducted by Felix Weingartner; 'St. Matthew' Passion, conducted by Mr. Adrian Boult.

LIVERPOOL WELSH CHORAL UNION (Mr. Hopkin Evans).—'Faust' (Berlioz); 'The Messiah'; 'Choral' Symphony (Beethoven); 'Requiem' (Brahms).

MANCHESTER, THE HALLÉ CONCERTS (Sir Hamilton Harty).—The Hallé Chorus sings 'Messe des Morts' (Berlioz); 'The Messiah'; Mass in B minor; 'The Apostles.'

NEWBURY CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Bernard Ramsey).—'St. Paul.'

NEWCASTLE BACH CHOIR (Dr. W. G. Whittaker).—Gibbons concert; 'Ode to Death' (Holst); Mass in B minor.

NEWPORT CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Arthur E. Sims).—'John Gilpin'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Toward the Unknown Region' (Vaughan Williams); 'The Kingdom.'

NORMANTON CHORAL UNION (Mr. Arthur H. Lawrence).—'The Banner of St. George'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Death of Minnehaha.'

NORTH SHIELDS PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Robert H. Stapleton). — 'Samson'; 'The Messiah'; 'Ruth' (Cowen).

NORTH STAFFS DISTRICT CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. John James).—'The Messiah'; 'The Dream of Gerontius'; miscellaneous.

NOTTINGHAM ALBERT HALL CHOIR (Mr. Bernard Johnson).—'Requiem' (Brahms); 'Ecce Homo' (Johnson).

NOTTINGHAM SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY (Mr. Allen Gill).—'The Dream of Gerontius'; 'The Mystic Trumpeter' (Harty); 'The Messiah'; 'Elijah'; 'Requiem' (Mozart); 'Stabat Mater' (Dvorák).

NOTTINGHAM, ST. MARY'S CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Vernon S. Read).—'Awake, my heart' (Stanford); 'Toward the Unknown Region' (Vaughan Williams); 'Two Psalms' (Holst).

PENZANCE CHORAL SOCIETY (Mr. Hugh Bramwell).—'Hiawatha'; 'Merrie England'; miscellaneous.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL SPECIAL CHOIR (Dr. H. Coleman).—'Christmas' Oratorio; 'St. Matthew' Passion.

Peterborough Co-operative Choral Society (Dr. H. Coleman).—'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast.'
Plymouth Madrigal Society (Mr. Harold C. Lake).—'Go, song of mine' (Elgar); 'O death, thou art the tranquil night' (Cornelius); madrigals by Gibbons; 'Requiem' (Brahms).
Pontypridd Tabernacle Choral Society.—'Elijah'; 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'Two Psalms' (Holst).
Portsmouth North End Choral Society (Mr. Ernest Birch).—'The Martyr of Antioch'; 'Hiawatha.'
Port Talbot, Grove Place Church Choir (Mr. G. T. Llewellyn).—'God's time is the best.'
Port Talbot Temperance Choral Society (Mr. G. T. Llewellyn).—'Kynon' (Hopkin Evans).
Ripon Choral Society (Mr. P. R. Pfaff).—'Tom Jones.'
Rochdale Philharmonic Choral Society (Mr. F. Leach).—'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' (Handel); 'Blest Pair of Sirens'; 'The Music-Makers'; 'Parsifal' excerpt; 'The Messiah.'
Rye Musical Society (Mr. Roland Roberts).—'For the Fallen'; 'The Death of Minnehaha'; 'From the Bavarian Highlands'; miscellaneous.
Sandown Choral Society (Mr. Ernest A. English).—'The Wedding of Shon Maclean.'
Shanklin Philharmonic Society (Mr. Ernest A. English).—'Songs of the Fleet' (Stanford); 'St. Paul.'
Shrewsbury Philharmonic Society (Mr. F. G. Rowland).—'The Spectre's Bride'; 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean.'
Sittingbourne and District Musical Society (Mr. W. J. Keech).—'Iolanthe'; miscellaneous.
Stockport Vocal Union (Dr. T. Keighley).—'Faust' (Berlioz); 'Jephtha.'
Stoke-on-Trent Choral Society (Mr. Ernest C. Redfern).—'I wrestle and pray' (Bach); 'Bethlehem' (Boughton); 'Judas Maccabæus'; 'The Messiah'; miscellaneous.
Sunderland Philharmonic Society (Mr. R. F. Jarman).—'Hymn of Praise'; 'The Sun-Worshippers' (Goring Thomas); 'Faust' (Berlioz).
Tamworth Choral Society (Mr. H. Rose).—'Tom Jones'; 'Faust' (Gounod); 'The Revenge.'
Taunton Choral Society (Mr. Reginald Ward).—'The Messiah'; 'The Dream of Gerontius.'
Tonbridge Choral Society (Mr. G. J. Kimmins).—'Christmas' Oratorio; 'King Olaf.'
Truro Musical Society (Mr. Hubert S. Middleton).—'Ode on St. Cecilia' (Purcell).
Tunbridge Wells Vocal Association (Mr. W. W. Starmer).—'Tom Jones'; 'The Dream of Gerontius.'
Twynham Musical Society (Mr. C. H. Flatt).—'The Banner of St. George'; miscellaneous.
Uckfield and District Musical Society (Mr. H. R. Reveley).—'Acis and Galatea'; 'Faust' (Gounod).
Wareham Choral Society (Mr. E. A. Lane).—'The Revenge.'
Warrington Musical Society (Mr. F. H. Crossley).—'Elijah'; 'Cavalleria Rusticana'; miscellaneous.
Welwyn Garden City Music Society (Mr. J. Herbert Williams).—'Acis and Galatea'; community singing.
Weymouth Choral Society (Mr. Reginald J. Swindells).—'The Banner of St. George'; 'St. Paul.'
Windsor and Eton Choral Society (Rev. B. C. S. Everett).—'Songs of the Sea' (Stanford); 'Songs of the Open Air' (J. R. Dear); Gibbons and miscellaneous.
Wolverhampton Choral Society (Dr. Darby).—'The Messiah'; 'Stabat Mater' (Dvorák); 'Hymn of Jesus' (Holst).
Wolverhampton Musical Society (Mr. Percy Pitt).—Mass in G minor (Vaughan Williams); 'St. Paul'; 'The Dream of Gerontius.'
Wrexham Philharmonic Society (Mr. T. Hopkin Evans).—'I Pagliacci'; 'The Messiah'; 'The Golden Legend.'
Yeovil Choral Society (Mr. F. G. Risdon).—'The Revenge'; 'Song of Destiny.'

We regret that circumstances have compelled us to omit our report of provincial concerts and competitions and of several London events.

Competition Festival Record

THE FESTIVAL FEDERATION CONFERENCE

By Harvey Grace

York proved an ideal centre for the annual Conference of the Federation. The social side—unusually happy throughout—had the best of starts with a reception by the Lord Mayor (Sir R. Newbold Kay) at the Mansion House on the eve of the meetings—a function that gave great pleasure to all the members, not only for its own sake, but perhaps even more because we felt it to be an official recognition of the importance of the Festival movement. Nor did the Lord Mayor's kindness stop here. The members were to have lunched together on Saturday at one of the city restaurants. It was found, however, that the accommodation was likely to be inadequate. The Lord Mayor therefore arranged for the caterers to transplant the feast to the State-room of the Mansion House, where we ate in something more than comfort, with his Lordship presiding, the magnificent civic plate on the table, and the civic butler to interest us all at the end with a racy description of these and other treasures and curiosities. Prior to the lunch two meetings had been held. The adjudicators had assembled in Dr. Bairstow's music-room, and had discussed various matters. The proceedings were private, but certain conclusions were announced at the Conference by Vice-President Bisset. They were, briefly, as follows: (1.) The meeting unanimously decided that it preferred the title 'judge' to 'adjudicator.' It did not, however, recommend that the term 'adjudication' should give place to 'judgment,' owing to the uncomfortable legal smack about the latter. (2.) There was warm condemnation of a growing practice of executives when engaging judges: a number of judges are asked (sometimes by circular letter) to quote their terms, the aim obviously being the engagement of the cheapest. The matter is frequently left in the air for some weeks—to the inconvenience of the judges concerned, owing to the difficulty of arranging dates when several are left for weeks as merely provisional bookings. A more businesslike and dignified procedure would be for executives to decide how much they can afford for fees, and make a definite offer of an engagement at a figure that suits their exchequer. The matter could then be settled in a day. (Personally, I feel sure that this method would end in some of the smaller Festivals obtaining the services of the more experienced judges, who are often ruled out by the system of inviting tenders and accepting the lowest. Judges as a rule enjoy the small, happy-family type of Festival, and are ready to meet the executive in the matter of fee.) There was also a good deal of interesting and useful discussion of matters concerning marking-sheets, certificates, &c., and in all ways this informal meeting of judges proved its right to become a regular part of the annual Conference.

THE ANNUAL REPORT

The general meeting of the Federation, which followed, ran mainly on formal business lines. The annual report showed that sixteen Festivals have joined the Federation during the past year, the total number affiliated being now a hundred and seventy-one. The increase in the general membership was eighty-eight—a small figure. A good many of these had been obtained through the personal canvassing of Mr. G. J. Bowker, who pointed out that if all Festival centres achieved a membership equal to that reached by the Midland Festival through his efforts, the Federation would at once be placed in a sound financial state. The report showed that the past year had been one of great activity. The responsibilities of the Federation were rapidly increasing, and with the steady progress of the movement in the Dominions, the geographical area covered is immense. (Is the time coming when 'British' in the Federation's title will need to become 'Imperial'?)

ART VERSUS ARITHMETIC

Among the paragraphs at the end of the Report was one stating that

> . . . Festivals report complaints from competitors that some adjudicators do not give details of their marks, but totals only. Choirs especially have expressed their disappointment.

It happens that this question was pretty thoroughly discussed at the judges' meeting, both this year and last. Most of those present expressed the view that the time spent in juggling with the sub-totals might be more profitably devoted to writing criticism and counsel. After all, when a judge has decided that a performance is worth, say, seventy-five marks, and that its place in the award is fifth, he has arrived at the two conclusions that really matter. With another competitor waiting, and criticisms to write, he cannot spare time or mental effort for splitting hairs in the matter of sub-totals. He gets his total first, and his smaller figures have to be made to agree in sum. If at first they don't, he has to take off or put on a mark here and there. Is he justified in keeping the competition hung up while he makes quite sure that the sub-totals represent exactly the competitor's achievement under the various headings? I remember once working with a colleague who was conscientious over the matter. Timing his arithmetical struggles, I found that an average of rather more than a minute was spent over the sub-totals. In a class even so small as twenty, bang went twenty minutes. Carry on that kind of thing through a long and crowded day of soloists . . . No! the sooner the Federation brings out a new sheet with the total of a hundred marks divided into two fifties, one for technique, the other for interpretation, with ample sub-headings for underlining, the better for all concerned. Competitors who insist on the details of their marks in accordance with the present sheet are likely to get either a hasty series of figures, or sub-totals merely 'wangled' to fit the total. Time-tables are usually too crowded, and judges too pressed to allow of more, though it goes without saying that on the rare occasions when a judge is able to answer all the arithmetical demands of the sheet he is ready to do so.

THE CONFERENCE

An interesting afternoon was spent at the Conference. Sir Henry Hadow, in his brief opening address, emphasised the importance of variety in method, combined with unity of aim. Autonomous development should be the leading principle. The Festival movement was fertilising the musical life of the country as it had not been fertilised for three hundred years. (But I found myself wondering at the time limit. Has the country ever had so far-reaching and truly democratic a musical movement?)

CONDUCTORS

Mr. Adrian C. Boult opened a discussion on a scheme for training conductors. He began with some excellent practical hints on the art, rightly laying emphasis on the importance of economy in gesture. His suggestions for group rehearsals, conductors' meetings, &c., in preparation for combined performance, were evidently based on a scheme that has been worked in some happy part of the country. For most districts it seemed hardly feasible, owing to the cost. The discussion showed agreement as to the need of elementary instruction in conducting. Much has been done by the holding of an occasional conductors' class at a central point in a Festival area. But even this involves more expense than some districts can meet. A suggestion that part of the competition day should be set apart for such a class was practical. Time-tables are generally over-crowded, it is true, but even a half-hour reserved for this purpose would be so well spent as to be worth a sacrifice of some kind. Why not try to get an hour's demonstration-lecture, open it to the public at sixpence per head, and so benefit the conductors and the local funds at the same time? Something must be done somehow, for it is pitiful to see so much good and devoted work on the part of teachers and choirs being made ineffectual—sometimes entirely wrecked—by the same teacher's ignorance of the barest elements of conducting.

It was good to hear from Mr. John Graham, at the close of the discussion, that the next issue of the Year-Book will contain an article on the subject written by an expert trainer.

THOSE DATES!

Mr. Plunket Greene opened the subject of 'Congestion of Dates.' He made out a good case for his appeal that the larger city Festivals should leave the congested month of May for the country Festivals, which were precluded by weather, working conditions, and other factors from holding their Festivals during the winter, or later in the spring. They had great difficulty in securing the services of experienced judges, owing to the demands of the larger gatherings. It was all delightfully convincing, and the problem looked simple—until the urban representatives (Birmingham, Glasgow, Newcastle, &c.) rose up and pointed out that the only suitable halls in their cities were so taken up with concerts, dances, meetings, &c., during the winter, that May was generally the earliest month in which a hall could be obtained for the solid week or ten days a Festival needed. One or two representatives found June and July not too late to get competitors and public, but such centres were clearly exceptional, seeing that few choirs can be kept together after April or the middle of May. So the problem, instead of being simple, turned out to be insoluble. Or perhaps it had been wrongly labelled. Instead of 'Congestion of Dates' it should have been 'Shortage of Judges.' This ought not to be insoluble, seeing the crowded state of the musical profession. There must be scores of well-equipped men and women who, given a start, encouragement, and some experience of working in double harness with an old hand, would speedily become efficient. Some of the big Festivals would do a good work by giving openings of the kind to a few new judges each season.

SIGHT-SINGING

Dr. W. G. Whittaker set the ball rolling on this subject. He discussed various methods of school choir sight-singing competitions. He advocated the inclusion of a sight-test as a part of the ordinary competition, allotting a proportion of marks for the subject. He was opposed to very difficult sight-tests. The object was not to develop star readers, but to ensure that sight-reading became a part of a choir's ordinary work. The tests should take place in public, so that choirs should hear one another. The public was interested, too. Separate sight-singing competitions with very difficult tests were apt to lead to a few choirs specialising in reading to the detriment of other and more important work; very stiff tests also involved a risk of hopeless breakdown. Choirs had a natural objection to being made to look foolish, and so were put off the subject altogether. He would allow choirs to use either notation, but the Sol-fa, being easier, should be judged by a higher standard than the Staff. Eventually, he thought, the Staff only would be used, but choirs which sang only from Sol-fa should be encouraged to enter, with the Staff as the ultimate aim. In the case of adult choirs he advocated the keeping of new members for a short sight-singing class after the ordinary practices. A good, practical address, this. (I add that the method of including a reasonably simple sight-test in the ordinary competition is that used with great success at Newcastle, ten marks being allowed and counted in with the song total.)

TACT IN JUDGING

Mr. G. J. Bowker spoke on the judging of school choirs, with special reference to the consideration due to teachers. He drew a harrowing picture of a teacher who on her first appearance in the arena had been prostrated by some cutting criticism from the judge. Discipline was apt to be undermined when a class of youngsters heard their teacher 'ticked off' in public. It must be admitted that there was ground for Mr. Bowker's protest. Undoubtedly a good deal of the opposition to festival work shown by school teachers is based on this matter of public criticism. Genuine causes of complaint are no doubt very few; but it must be remembered that a single harsh or tactless criticism is enough to rouse resentment over a whole Festival area. The satirical remark is remembered long after the helpful and sympathetic judgment in which it occurred is forgotten.

The agenda announced also addresses on 'Folk-songs as Festival Music' and 'Sea Shanties,' by Geoffrey Shaw and Sir Richard Terry, but both speakers were unable to be present. We were sorry to miss them, but we bore up, seeing that even without their addresses, the Conference was over-long. The tea that followed, kindly provided by the Yorkshire Choral Competitions, and presided over by Miss Violet Argles, was a pleasant function that was greatly appreciated.

THE DINNER

The day wound up well with a dinner at which a very large company met under the chairmanship of Sir Henry Hadow. When we had eaten we sang three madrigals, 'The Silver Swan,' Morley's 'What saith my dainty darling,' and Wilbye's 'Adieu, sweet Amaryllis,' egged on and conducted by Dr. Bairstow. We were too big a body, and badly placed for seeing the Doctor and hearing one another, but we made a fair fist at it. (Another time we might with advantage sing table by table, the Chairman being asked to place the tables in order of merit!) Delightful speeches were delivered by Sir Walford Davies in proposing the toast of the Federation, and Sir Henry Hadow in responding thereto. Sir Walford mentioned an incident that deserves to be passed on for the benefit of choirs that read this record. Speaking of the need for 'inspired drudgery,' he mentioned that he recently had to judge a choir that sang so badly that he had much ado to temper his judgment. However, he let the singers down as lightly as possible, saying kind and encouraging things to them, 'Whereupon,' said Sir Walford, 'they came to me afterwards and said, Why, we only began to work at that piece last Tuesday week!'

Mr. F. H. Bisset had us all with him when he eulogised the work of Mr. Fairfax Jones and his staff in organizing the Conference. There was no hitch, nor was there any fuss. It might all have been improvised, so little did the machinery show.

Socially the event could not have been improved upon. It was an enormous advantage, to begin with, that well over a hundred of the delegates were housed under one roof—that of the Station Hotel. It was felt that a gathering of the kind, with all the publicity arising from the civic and other public functions, must do the Federation much good. We London members, of course, like the Conference to be held in the metropolis, but I doubt whether any Londoner who was at this York gathering would deny that the right place for such an event is a well-placed city in the provinces. (But the York standard of hospitality and interest will want some living up to.)

Dr. Bairstow and his fine choir at the Minster had arranged some music of special interest for the Sunday. The music at Matins included Walford Davies's setting of the Canticles, and we had an opportunity of hearing the Psalms chanted from the newly-issued 'English Psalter'—and so delightfully chanted, too, that it was hard to realise that the copies had arrived only a day or two before. At the Choral Celebration that followed the setting was Vaughan Williams's G minor Mass, very beautifully sung. Apart from the actual singing, with the cool, fresh voices of the boys, the effect in the Minster was such that one never wants to hear it sung again in Queen's Hall by a choral society, however good. Music and building were suited here as they rarely are.

In the evening about three thousand people filled the nave for a Hymn Festival, conducted by Sir Walford Davies in his inimitable manner. The Conference was thus rounded off in the best of ways. For the sake of completeness I mention that on Monday morning, by way of pleasant coda, the delegates visited the works of Messrs. Rowntree.

The 1925 Conference will long be remembered, especially for its happy fraternal spirit. All those responsible, from the staff at the London office to the York hosts and hostesses, earned our warmest congratulations and thanks.

The Festivals hitherto held by the League of Arts, the Guildhouse, the City of Westminster, and the Borough of Chelsea, will in future be combined in one event under the title of the Guildhouse Musical Festival. The first Festival under the new arrangement is to be held at the Guildhouse, Eccleston Square, S.W.1, on February 15, 16, 18, 19, and 20, with vocal and instrumental (concerted and solo) classes, poetry-speaking, and folk-dancing. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Gibbon, 160, Hammersmith Road, W.6, are the hon. secretaries.

Music in the Provinces

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT. — The Birmingham concert season opened on September 30 with a concert by the Catterall Quartet. With Mr. Leonard Hirsch as second violin in place of Mr. Bridge, the ensemble had gained in richness and nuance. The Tchaikovsky Quartet in F, Op. 22, played with telling pointedness of its alternating rhythms, prepared the way for the beautiful G minor Quartet of Debussy. If our English players do not bring to its performance quite the delicacy its changeful harmonies demand, it is probably a matter of temperament rather than any fault in the playing. The F major Quartet of Mozart, which completed the programme, was given with exquisite finish.——The first of the new series of 'Mid-day' concerts, under the direction of Mr. Johan Hock, was given on October 1. The programme consisted of Grieg's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata, with Mr. Arthur Catterall in charge of the violin part and Miss Beatrice Hewitt at the pianoforte, and Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in E flat, Op. 70, with the addition of Mr. Hock (violoncello). In the last-named work Miss Beatrice Hewitt's nice adjustment of the pianoforte part went far towards capturing the sense of harmonic strength which is lost if any one instrument is lifted out of its place. At another concert in this series, duets for two pianofortes were given by Miss Lucy Pierce and Mr. Charles Kelly. A delightful programme was presented, Mozart's Sonata in D major and two Chorale Preludes of Bach being the principal items.——A pianoforte and song recital was given on October 9 by Miss Edna Willoughby and Miss Muriel Nixon. Works by Mozart, Scriabin, Albeniz, and Purcell figured in a well-varied programme.—— At her violin recital on October 5, Miss Kathleen Washbourne played Ireland's A minor Sonata, the G major of Brahms, and the A major of Bach. Works by Weelkes, Youll, and others were given by the Elizabethan Trio.—— Under its new conductor, Dr. Darby, the Midland Musical Society gave a performance of Gounod's 'Faust' on October 10.——The winter series of Sunday concerts by the City Orchestra began on October 11. Beethoven's C minor Symphony was the principal orchestral item, and Parry's Variations were also given.——Miss Eveline Stevenson sang an aria from Massenet's 'Le Cid,' and was especially delightful in the 'Lotos Flower' of Schumann. ——Mr. Gustav Holst was the visiting conductor at the first Symphony concert of the City Orchestra on October 13. He conducted Haydn's E flat Symphony, No. 99, and his own 'Beni-Mora' Suite. The 'Fancy' section to Holst's new 'Choral' Symphony was conducted by Mr. Adrian C. Boult. The 'Mastersingers' Overture and Ravel's 'Pavane on a Dead Infanta' completed the programme.

CENTENARY OF CATHERINE HAYES: 'THE SWAN OF ERIN'

One of the great prima-donnas of the mid-19th century was the Irish soprano, Catherine Hayes, generally designated 'The Swan of Erin.' As her birth took place on October 25, 1825, it is appropriate that her centenary should not be allowed to pass without at least a passing appreciation.

The city of Limerick boasts the honour of giving birth to Catherine Hayes, whose musical education was provided for by a fund inaugurated by Dr. Knox, the Protestant Bishop of Limerick. From 1839 to 1842 she studied at Dublin under Signor Antonio Sapio, and made many successful appearances at Rotunda concerts. Her voice attracted the notice of Liszt, when at Dublin in January, 1841, and at the suggestion of Louis Lablache she proceeded to Paris to complete her studies under Garcia (1842-43) and under Roneoni at Milan (1844-45).

Her début, at Marseilles, in 'Puritani,' on May 10, 1845, was, as Bunn would say, 'a blaze of triumph,' and in September she repeated her triumph in 'Linda di Chamouni,' at La Scala, Milan, subsequently making a series of successful appearances at Vienna, Venice, Bergamo, Florence, and Genoa.

Catherine Hayes—after a short Irish tour—burst on London, in 'Linda,' on April 10, 1850, and showed her versatility by singing in 'Elijah' (April 26), 'Figaro' (April 18 and 25), and at Osborne's concert (May 23). Previously, in the late autumn of 1849, she had captured Dublin by her inimitable impersonation of Lucia; also she appeared in 'Norma,' in an interval of which, to placate her enthusiastic admirers, she had to sing 'The harp that once.' She visited Cork and Limerick, receiving remarkable ovations in both cities. At Limerick, naturally, her reception was wildly demonstrative, and it may be noted that the then special correspondent of the Dublin Press was the genial T. D. Sullivan, author of 'God save Ireland' and father-in-law of the present Governor-General of the Irish Free State.

Between the years 1851 and 1856 she astonished delighted audiences in America, India, and Australia. In 1857 she married Mr. W. A. Bushnell, who died in 1859. Her departure abroad was made a theme by Thackeray in his 'Irish Sketch Book.' On March 29, 1860, she sang at Covent Garden in aid of the funds of the Dramatic College, and in February, 1861, she made an Irish tour, with Mr. Francesco Berger (still happily living at the age of ninety-one) as musical director.

Five months later she was taken ill at her residence, 'Roccoles,' Sydenham, and passed peacefully away on August 11, 1861, leaving all her fortune (£16,000) to Mr. George John Power, of county Waterford. Her burial took place at Kensal Green, where also sleep Balfe, Wallace, Tom Cooke, Lover, O'Rourke, George Linley, and other Irish minstrels.

On her tomb is the following inscription:

Sacred to the Memory
OF
CATHERINE HAYES BUSHNELL.
Died 11th August, 1861.
'I know that my Redeemer liveth.'

Of the merits of this great Irish soprano it is sufficient to state that she held her own even with such an incomparable singer as her contemporary, Jenny Lind. Liszt wrote of her: 'I don't know of any voice more expressive than that of Miss Hayes.' At the time of her death The Times commented on her singularly sympathetic voice, adding: 'In Ireland her way may be said, without exaggeration, to have been paved with gold and strewn with flowers.'

W. H. G. F.

Music in Scotland

GLASGOW.—The British National Opera Company fared much better this year with its two-weeks' season at Glasgow. Full houses were the rule, and at the close Mr. Frederick Austin made the gratifying announcement that it would not be necessary to make any call on the local guarantors. The performances maintained a good standard throughout, although the programmes could hardly be described as enterprising, the only novelty being Bach's 'Coffee Cantata,' staged as 'Coffee and Cupid.' This item attracted a large audience, doubtless in part as a result of the staging last spring by the Glasgow Bach Society of another version of the same delightful little work. The most interesting feature of the Glasgow B.N.O.C. season was to us the special matinée performance of 'The Magic Flute' for senior school-children, which quite filled the theatre with an eager and enthusiastic audience. This is a development that is full of promise.——At the annual Chamber Concert Week of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir, which to music-lovers has now established itself as one of the great events of the musical season, the Léner String Quartet played fourteen complete quartets and twenty quartet movements by Beethoven, Borodin, Brahms, Debussy, Dvorák, César Franck, Goossens, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Ravel, Richter, Respighi, Schubert, Schumann, Smetana, Tchaikovsky, and Hugo Wolf. Of the novelties, the 'Quartetto Dorico' of Respighi, written last year for, and dedicated to, the Léner Quartet, failed to make any great impression, much as we ourselves liked it. On the other hand, the quiet charm of a Quartet by the 18th-century Fr. X. Richter created an immediate effect. The change of venue this year to the Lyric Theatre, which holds about a thousand people, was in every way a success. Audiences were good, and increased steadily as the week proceeded, people having to be turned away at the final concert. The superb playing of the Léner Quartet earned for these artists a great ovation at the close of the week.——The Glasgow Orpheus Choir paid a week-end visit to Ireland, giving two concerts at Belfast and one at Dublin to capacity houses. Enthusiasm ran high, at Belfast many people being unable to obtain admission.——Mark Hambourg and Backhaus gave pianoforte recitals to very small audiences. Backhaus continues to show artistic growth with each visit, but with Hambourg the growth appears to be mainly in the direction of perversity of outlook. Jean Baptiste Toner, a young Glasgow pianist who has quite a following, appeared to less advantage than usual at his pianoforte recital, owing to hardness and lack of sensitiveness of touch.——A recently-formed small group of Glasgow singers, styling themselves 'The Scottish Singers,' and directed by Miss Mary L. Clements, gave an inaugural recital of Scottish songs. —— Mr. Compton Mackenzie lectured to the Glasgow Gramophone Society on 'The Future of the Gramophone.'

EDINBURGH.—The pianoforte recitals by Mark Hambourg and Backhaus are already dealt with under Glasgow. Edinburgh audiences were no larger in number.——Señor Angel Grande, a young Spanish violinist, made a very favourable impression at his first Edinburgh recital.——At the annual general meeting of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, Edinburgh section, Prof. D. F. Tovey, Miss Margaret Kennedy, Miss Aitken, Mr. Martin Hobkirk, Mr. R. T. Langdon, Mr. J. S. Anderson (hon. treasurer), and Dr. Lee Ashton (hon. secretary) were elected to be the Council for the ensuing year.——The Edinburgh String Quartet announces a Beethoven Festival, in the course of which this combination proposes to play all the String Quartets of Beethoven.

KILWINNING.—The opening concert of the series promoted by the Kilwinning Musical Society took the form of a concert performance of 'The Magic Flute' by members of the British National Opera Company.

GENERAL.—The joint-committee appointed by the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church of Scotland to devise a scheme of training in Church music has issued an interesting syllabus of courses of lectures to be given at Glasgow, by Mr. T. C. L. Pritchard and the Rev. J. Moir-Porteous, and at Edinburgh by Mr. Herbert Wiseman and the Rev. George S. Stewart. The lectures embrace a wide outlook, and the scheme also covers examinations for diploma and certificates in the following subjects, viz., 'The Function and Use of Music in Church Worship'; 'Theory of Music'; 'History of Church Music'; 'Choir Training'; and 'Organ, Harmonium, and American Organ Playing.'

SEBASTIAN.

Music in Wales

ABERYSTWYTH.—On September 25 and 26, performances of the 'Beggar's Opera' were given. The sweetness of the old melodies was much appreciated, but in the absence of an orchestra much of the charm of the work was lacking.——On October 8, the Thursday College Concerts were resumed in University Hall. Two movements of Mendelssohn's Octet for strings were among the items played, and Mr. T. J. Pickering sang a Welsh translation of the solo 'choral' from Bach's cantata 'Bide with us,' and also the Benedictus from the B minor Mass.

BANGOR.—The College re-opened for the present session on October 6. The first weekly concert, being the ninety-fourth of the series, took place on October 8, when the following programme was played: Trio in E major, Mozart; violin solos, two movements from Concerto, Bach; String Quartet, Op. 11, slow movement, Tchaikovsky; Trio in B flat, Op. 99, two movements only, Schubert. At the next concert, on October 15, the principal items comprised: Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, Mozart (viola, Miss D. Seth Hughes); Sonata for 'cello, in D minor, de Fesch; pianoforte solos, two numbers from 'The Children's Corner,' Debussy; Trio in G, No. 2, slow movement and Finale, Beethoven. Mr. E. T. Davies, the Director of Music, is giving a series of ten lectures on the 'Foundations of Music and Musical Appreciation' during the present term. Two have already been delivered, the illustrations including Handel's Violin Sonata in E, several folk-tune arrangements for strings and pianoforte, and movements from Trios by Beethoven, Brahms, and Dvorák.——An interesting innovation in the activities of the Music Department this session is the establishment of six school lecture-concerts for the secondary schools of the district. Four hundred children have become subscribers to the series. The concerts, which are given on Friday afternoons, are approved by the local education authorities, and are allowed to take the place of the last school lesson on that day. The first concert took place on October 16; the programme comprised: Introductory remarks on Melody and Rhythm, with illustrations; Trio in G major, Mozart; slow movement from Trio, Op. 11, Beethoven; Finale from the 'Horn' Trio, Brahms; movement from String Quartet ('The Bird'), Haydn; and two Welsh Miniatures for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello, by Mr. E. T. Davies, who is directing the concerts and delivering helpful explanatory notes on the pieces played and upon the 'art of listening.'——The Choral Society is preparing Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio and Vaughan Williams's Fantasy on Christmas carols for performance in December. The orchestra is engaged on the 'New World' Symphony and Mozart's Symphony in G minor, along with some lighter items.

BRYN TANAT.—The fifth annual Festival of the North Montgomeryshire Musical Association (of which Mr. W. H. Leslie is a leading spirit) took place on October 18. Part 1 of the 'St. Matthew' Passion was given, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge, a feature of the performance being the singing by school-children of the Choral in the first chorus. The principal soloists were Madame Laura Evans-Williams, Dr. Ben Davies, and Mr. W. R. Allen. Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens' was also sung under the direction of Mr. Adrian C. Boult; a number of orchestral selections included Beethoven's 'Leonora' Overture (No. 3). The choral side of the Festival showed great improvement. Mr. Leslie and his supporters are to be congratulated on this definite advance in art and technique.

CARDIFF.—The first of a series of 'international celebrity' concerts was given on October 12. Madame Frieda Hempel was the vocalist, assisted by Franz Mittler (pianoforte) and John Amadeo (flute).——It is proposed to arrange for a testimonial to Mr. T. E. Aylward, the veteran conductor of the Cardiff Musical Society, in recognition of his long services to the cause of music.

CARMARTHEN.—The Festival mentioned in last month's issue appears to have been a pronounced success, and it is probable that the scheme will be enlarged next year.

LLANDUDNO.—On September 23 the evening concert on the pier was devoted to Welsh compositions, vocal and instrumental. Dr. Vaughan Thomas, Mr. T. Hopkin Evans, and Mr. Gwynne Williams conducted their own works. Another composer represented was the late Morfydd Owen, who died in 1917.

MOUNTAIN ASH.—Sixteen members of the Mountain Ash Male-Voice Choir have left for a prolonged tour in Canada and the United States.

NEWPORT.—The Newport Choral Society (conductor, Mr. A. E. Sims) is inaugurating an all-British programme for the coming season. 'The Kingdom' (Elgar) is announced for the next concert, and it is proposed to study Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and Vaughan Williams's 'Toward the Unknown Region.'

There has recently been considerable activity in dramatic performances in rural districts. The League of Arts has therefore opened a Parish Play Department, for giving advice and help to amateur producers of mystery and other plays suitable for acting in parish halls, and also for pastoral plays suitable for performance in the open air during the summer. A fee of one shilling is charged for advice. Inquiries (with the shilling) should be addressed to the Secretary, Parish Play Department, League of Arts, 12, Berwick Street, S.W.1.

Music in Ireland

The Dublin Musical season opened auspiciously on September 27, at La Scala Theatre, when Mr. Hugh S. Roberton presented his famous Glasgow Orpheus Choir. Great as was the enthusiasm at Dublin, Belfast was even more enthusiastic, and was privileged to enjoy two performances, one on September 25 and the other on September 28. It is gratifying to record that bumper houses greeted the Choir in both cities.

Backhaus, 'the faultless pianist of our time' (as per bills), gave recitals at Belfast and Dublin, on October 1 and 3, and attracted fairly large audiences. Belfast responded but feebly, and Dublin did not quite uphold its great traditions. En route to Dublin there was an awkward delay at Dundalk owing to Customs regulations, as it is said that the authorities mistook Backhaus's special pianoforte-stool for bagpipes, on which, of course, there is an import duty payable to the Free State.

No. 1 Army Band, 'personally conducted' by Colonel Fritz Brase, gave a fine selection at a concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on October 11, in aid of the St. John Ambulance Brigade. Vocal items were contributed by Miss R. Flynn and Mr. W. A. Sheehan.

Miss Denne Parker (a popular adjudicator at the Feis Ceoil) gave a song recital at the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, on October 15, when she sang five groups of songs with rare distinction. She had the advantage of an excellent accompanist in Mr. T. H. Weaving.

Commencing on October 16, Prof. Larchet will lecture at University College, Dublin, for the School Music Teachers' Certificate, during the Michaelmas term.

At the annual meeting of the Feis Ceoil, on September 12, it was announced that a balance of some £173 on the right side was the biggest since the initiation of the Festival in 1897, and that the number of entries had increased from 117 in 1897 to 949 in 1924, this year's being 869. Mr. E. Lupton, who presided, emphasised the need for an adequate concert hall (towards which £3,000 had been subscribed), and urged the necessity for securing the interest of as many citizens as possible. He regretted that there were not more choir entries at the last Feis, but rejoiced at the progress of the children. Incidentally, he praised the magnificent support of the Dublin press.

From an advance copy of the programme of the Belfast Philharmonic Society for the season 1925-26, it is evident that the Society's watchwords are continued vigour and high aspiration. The first concert was announced to be held on October 16, with a choir of three hundred and an orchestra of seventy. This opening event would be under the direction of Mr. E. Godfrey Browne, with Mr. J. H. MacBratney as organist and accompanist.

The Queen's Island Amateur Operatic Society, under the baton of Mr. C. J. Brennan, gave six performances of 'A Greek Slave,' at Ulster Hall, Belfast, during the week October 5-10, with a change of casts on alternate nights. This Society is deserving of adequate support, but though the undertaking achieved an artistic success, the attendance was not all that could be desired, save on the last three evenings.

NETHERLANDS MUSICIANS' UNION

By Herbert Antcliffe

For fifty years past the Nederlandsche Toonkunstenaars-Vereeniging, founded by Richard Hol, G. A. Heinze, and W. F. G. Nicolai, has been doing excellent work in encouraging Dutch composers to express themselves in their own way, and to employ their own language as the basis of their vocal work. Little known as Dutch music is outside Holland, and not yet known even there as it should be, that work has had sufficient result to justify the rejoicings at the Festival which took place at Utrecht from October 15 to 18. Apart from a group of small choral works from the Golden Era of Dutch music, Sweelinck, di Lassus, &c., the programmes were made up of works of a couple of dozen composers, the first-born among them being Richard Hol, and the latest H. E. Enthoven, a composer of twenty-two years of age, whose work was a Scherzo from a second Symphony (Op. 12).

A name prominent among the others stood out partly because it was the only one attached to more than a single work of any importance, and partly because of the strongly individual character of such works. It was that of Willem Pijper, who is not unknown outside Holland, but who will in all probability loom large in the coming years. His second Symphony, played at the opening concert, is powerful alike in its ideas and in their treatment. It is not a long work, but is very elaborate and demands an unusually large orchestra. It is written for strings, four flutes, three oboes and cor Anglais, four clarinets, three bassoons and double-bassoon, eight horns, four trumpets, four trombones, tenor horn, contra-bass, tuba, organ, four harps, three pianofortes, celesta, drums of various kinds, tam-tam, bell, clapper, castanets, xylophone, and tambourine. The composer's rhythmic sense, his complete control of his forces, and his ability to build out of a brief motive melodies of a broad, striking quality save the work from becoming too involved or overwhelmingly noisy. Seriousness prevails in the general sentiment, though there is some piquant satire, and occasional outbursts of sheer joy, and at the end of the fourteen minutes it takes to perform there is present the feeling that not a single note is too much or fails of its significance. The Sonata for flute and pianoforte, played by Joh. Feltkamp and the composer, and the part-song, 'Heer Halewijn,' sung by Sem Dresden's Madrigal Society, had more straining after effect. The latter work, too, required more rehearsal, and possibly also a slightly larger choir, to give a right impression of its qualities. Yet it was Dresden among the moderns—or the ultra-moderns, for Diepenbrock is not yet in the historical sense a classic—who gave us the most striking work after the Symphony of Pijper. This was a String Quartet based on two old Dutch songs, 'Er was een sneeuwwit vogeltje' and 'Het daghet uijh den Oosten.' Here again we had perfect lucidity, beautiful writing for the strings, rhythm that never flagged though it was drawn out to the utmost tenuousness, and an emotional driving force that made everything in the work inevitable. So far from hindering his work as a composer, at least in quality, whatever it may have done in quantity, Mijn. Dresden's appointment as Director of the Amsterdam Conservatoire seems on the other hand to have aided it.

Even these works, however, with all their power and beauty, were put into the background by the performance of Alphons Diepenbrock's music to 'The Birds' of Aristophanes. It was a happy idea to give a complete stage performance of this work, for it was only thus that the full effect of the music could be judged. And what music it is! That lovely, rich-toned Overture, with its suggestive touches which are the artistic culmination of Beethoven's experiments in the 'Pastoral' Symphony; melody, harmony, orchestration, all are beautifully combined to express a summary of the beauty and fun and satire of the play. And then the melodrama in which the orchestra carries along the voice of the speaker (in this case by no means a powerful speaker) as a vessel along the surface of the water. Not a feature that is in the slightest degree harsh or too loud, not a disturbing element of any kind. No wonder that Mijn. Evert Cornelis and his Utrechtsche Stedelyk Orkest played as they seldom play. And to close, the fine choral number for female voices and orchestra! One need not here say much of the stage performance except that it was admirably in keeping with the work as a whole, and afforded an excellent impression of the abilities of Dutch amateurs and students.

There were not many other works of any individual character. Dina Apeldoorn produced a new orchestral sketch, 'The North Sea,' which did not attempt to be too realistic and therefore succeeded in creating a poetical impression. Sigtenhorst Meyer played his Pianoforte Sonata, a work of considerable charm though less original and less concise than some of his descriptive pieces, and Willem Landré, who is forging ahead, had in the programme a Requiem, 'In memoriam matris.' This work has some beautiful elegiac moments, and is scored in a way that is entirely appropriate. It fails, however, because it is at least twice as long as the material will stand. At the other extreme there were the jolly 'Baron Hop' Overture of Alex. Voormolen, a heavy but humorous peasant sketch, 'Zevenzot,' by F. E. A. Koeberg, and a piquantly scored Overture to 'The Taming of the Shrew,' by Johan Wagenaar.

The concert performances, given in the great hall of the Tivoli Garden and in the Gebouw voor Kunst en Wetenschappen, were on the whole good of their kind. The Orchestra and Dresden's Madrigal Choir are well known, and they sustained their reputations. Madame Noordewier-Reddingius still possesses a voice of rare beauty, though in the work of the largest dimensions in which she took part it was generally inaudible because of the brutal and inept orchestration. The Dutch String Quartet and the local choruses were admirably competent.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

NEW OPERATIC ACTIVITY AT BERLIN

A fervent desire of all who are interested in the musical life of Berlin is fulfilled in the appointment of Bruno Walter as general-music-director of the Municipal Opera House, the institution which has grown out of the ruins of the Deutsches Opernhaus. To prophesy is to court disappointment, especially at the present economic crisis; but all that has been done in the first weeks of the new régime gives reason enough to nourish the best hopes for the future. If in the past Gustav Mahler, when director of the Viennese Royal Opera House, afforded a striking example of an artist able to transform a city's musical life by the power of his personal will and idealism, it may conceivably be the mission of his best pupil to rehabilitate the music of Berlin. The sincerity of Walter's intentions is undoubted, his experience as an operatic director is uncontested, and his kinetic ascendancy dominates that of any other conductor, so far as opera is concerned. Moreover, his particular capacity of attracting the best artists who seem intuitively to discern the potentialities of contact with him —leading to new heights—has won such singers as Maria Ivogün, Maria Olszewska, Lotte Lehmann, and Dr. Max Schipper, and this galaxy of artists will certainly be increased in the course of the next few months. But the task of creating an ensemble remains difficult, because all these exponents have other appointments, which, for the moment at least, they cannot relinquish. On the other hand, there remain a number of singers left as inheritance by the Deutsches Opernhaus. How are these mediocrities to be combined with the outstanding personalities above-named? Only a discerning insight such as that of Walter can succeed in making a synthesis of the best, and isolating the good and the inferior elements. The way to perfection is long, but it will be pursued. Walter, though in co-operation with the intendant Heinz Tietjen, acts not only as general-music-director, but very often also as stage-manager. This has the advantage of obtaining a unity of performance hardly to be reached by other means. The gestures and movements of the singers are determined by the music. Aside from that coincidence of gesture and motive which often plays so fatal a part in Wagnerian music-drama, this identity which Walter strives for, though much more elastic, is no less forceful, and its realisation depends solely upon the authority of the conductor transmitted to the acting singer. It is very interesting to see how artists of only moderate intelligence are inspired by the suggestive power of the orchestral leader to such an extent that little trace of their shortcomings remains. Of course, an inherent difficulty lies in the fact that Walter cannot always direct in person, but must relinquish the baton to assistants, who, unlike him, lack the inspiring impulse. Walter's conducting yields not only the most correct performance of ensemble pieces, but associates performance and action in the most natural way. Again, the coherence of single scenes is never disturbed nor, similarly, is the fluency of the score impeded. It is this unbroken current of music and action that endues the performances conducted by Bruno Walter with a special significance. The high aims of stately opera are very difficult of attainment in Wagnerian music-drama where tradition is so powerful, simply because of the demands in time and money entailed by such enterprise. Here, for the present, Walter deputes the stage management to other hands. Next year is to bring us the complete renewal of Wagner.

The repertory of the Municipal Opera House did not hold any surprises. There was a novelty, 'The Holy Duck' by the Viennese composer Hans Gal, which, though not uninteresting in plot and rich in exotic colour, did not win the favour of the public. This reception is explicable, for the composer lacks the capacity clearly to indicate his intentions. The 'Mastersingers,' 'Il Ballo in Maschera,' and 'Don Pasquale' have been the great deeds of Bruno Walter, who has the good fortune to be a man after the people's own heart. His mere outward personality suffices to put an audience in the right humour for enjoying a performance.

SOME ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

Furtwängler afforded the subscribers of the Philharmonic the first Berlin performance of Bela Bártok's Dance-Suite. Strangely, the work did not win public approval. People apparently are so accustomed to sweet consonances that the least harshness startles and annoys them to the extent that they miss the logical evolution of the leading motive and do not respond to the passionate character of the whole composition. Otto Klemperer performed Bruckner and Mahler—or, rather, celebrated them with the particular intensity of his musical interpretation. In this respect he has no equal. Erich Kleiber undertook to save from oblivion the 'Don Juan' Ballet, by Gluck. It is an almost unknown composition, wherein the composer treats the same subject as Mozart, but in dance form. Part of this music Gluck afterwards employed for his operas. Oscar Fried—who has seemed always to have found difficulty in establishing his reputation at Berlin, but is very popular in Russia and elsewhere—made his reappearance before the Berlin public. Though not a classical conductor, he demonstrated that he was capable of some impressive moments.

HOLLAND

The summer season at the Scheveningen Kursaal came to an end on September 15. For several weeks there had been little that was exciting, though not to the exclusion of interesting events, one of these being the appearance as conductor-composer of Hubert Cuypers. Cuypers is known as a facile and always devotional Church composer, and these predilections were evident in his Overture to Vondel's 'Adam in Ballingschap' and in the music to Heine's 'Die Wallfahrt nach Kevlaer,' of which the words were declaimed by Rodie Medenbach. Both in thematic construction and in instrumentation the two works revealed great skill, an exceptional gift of melody, and some feeling for modern harmony. A greater effort might have resulted in more originality. At the same concert Schneevoigt conducted Haydn's Symphony in G ('Parisian') and Beethoven's 'Pastoral.' Other local artists have been Annie Tydeman (a violinist who played with some success in London last year, and who on this occasion showed excellent taste as well as ability by playing one of the more neglected Bruch Concerti) and Mia Peltenburg, the last-named singing Senta's Ballad and songs by Ropartz, Wolf, and Hendrik Andriessen in an extremely charming manner. The Musica Amateur Orchestra, conducted by F. E. A. Koeberg, accompanied Madame Peltenburg, and the players gave a good account of themselves in Cherubini's 'Anacreon' Overture, the 'Reformation' Symphony, and the 'Casse-Noisette' Suite. On September 8, Erica Morini, the young Viennese violinist, made so great a sensation by the purity of her tone and the grace of her rhythm in Mozart's A major Concerto, that she was promptly engaged for the concert on the following Friday, when she had equal success in the Tchaikovsky D major. At the 'Soloists' concert on September 13 the items were contributed by members of the Residentie Orchestra. Several of the artists had already appeared earlier in the season. In the afternoon a concert performance of 'Der Freischütz' was given by the Roman Catholic Oratorio Society under Aug. Smets, with a well-selected group of Dutch solo singers. The idea of encouraging local and native talent seems to be growing, and among other works recently performed have been a Pavane by Leo Ruygrok and a Menuet by C. Hinderdael, both of whom are members of the orchestra. Among recent soloists mention ought also to be made of Sigrid Schneevoigt (who gave a virile performance of Tchaikovsky's B minor Concerto), and of Emmi Leisner, from Beyreuth. As matters of local history there is interest in the fact that J. A. de Zwaan has just celebrated the close of his fortieth year as carillonneur at the Groote Kerk at The Hague, where he is also organist, and Cornelie van Zanten, once famous in Europe and America as an opera singer, the fiftieth year of her musical activities.

For the remainder, a brief glance must suffice. The Vatican Choir, announced to tour the country between September 27 and October 4, would bring, it was stated, entirely new programmes. The exceedingly interesting scheme of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw will be presented under Pierre Monteux during the first half of the season, and under Mengelberg during the second half. It includes Holst's 'The Planets,' Bax's Symphonic Poem, Goossens's 'Tam-o'-Shanter,' Elgar's 'Cello Concerto, Delius's double-Concerto for violin and 'cello, and Bantock's 'Elegiac Poem' for 'cello. Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony was played recently, under Monteux. The work struck some of the critics as lacking in concision and varied inspiration, but its earnestness, originality, and power no one questions, and the public received it with enthusiasm. Stravinsky is to be well represented by having both his early first Symphony and 'Le Sacre du Printemps' played in one programme, and we are also to hear Loeffler's 'Pagan Poem,' Block's 'Schelomo,' and other modern works.

Several small ancient and modern British works played by the Dutch Chamber Orchestra at The Hague, under Anthony Bernard, and a group of Purcell's songs sung in the same town by Toos Hoog, a local soprano, made an excellent impression.

The season of the Residentie Orchestra is to be notable for its soloists, among whom will be Paul Loyonnet, Alma Moodie, Marthe Girod, Alex. Schmuller, Sem Swaap, Madame de Boer, Youra Guller, Lydie Demirgian, Madeleine Monnier, and Mia Peltenburg. Other concerts already announced are those of the Rotterdam Teachers' Choral Society, under Phons Dusch, which will include Lili Boulanger's 'Psaume du fond de l'abîme,' de Falla's 'La vie brève,' a Mass of Willem Andriessen, and Brückner's Te Deum; The Hague Toonkunst Chorus, which will give Diepenbrock's Te Deum, Wagenaar's 'Jupiter Amans,' and the second movement from a Symphony by Dina Apeldoorn, 'Das Ziel,' for chorus, soprano solo, and orchestra; and a series of chamber concerts alternately in the Lutheran Church and the Nutszaal, at Rotterdam. Among famous visiting string quartets are the Poulet, Bohemian, and Léner. The educational societies are announcing many lectures on musical subjects, and Dr. de Koos, who as a concert agent has almost a free run of the country with slight competition, has a long list of concerts and recitals.

With his little Chamber Orchestra, Anthony Bernard has a fine opportunity for propaganda of which he is availing himself fully, admirably supported by resident Dutch and British musicians. His recent programme, referred to above, contained short works by Weelkes, Dowland, Gibbons, and Purcell; and, from the moderns, Holst's Fugal Concerto for flute and oboes (of which the solo parts were admirably played by Messrs. J. Weyand and J. Stotijn), Goossens's 'By the Tarn,' and Peter Warlock's pleasant little 'Delius' Serenade. The novelty, Chavarri's 'Acuarelas Valencianas,' proved a pleasant, well-written work, but with little or no distinction.

Among new-comers here, Georg Kulenkampff was a pleasant surprise, and played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, Reger's Sonata, and a Suite by Sinding with a degree of musicianship and insight, though with wonderful power and technical resource, that entirely revitalised them. Willem Landre's new opera 'Beatrys' has been produced by Co-Opera-tie, but as the first performance clashed with the Utrecht Festival my notice of it must stand over.

HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

NEW YORK

For several years our Fall season of serious music has opened in September with Mrs. Coolidge's Festival in the concert hall she built at her home in the Berkshire Hills. This year she is giving her Festival in the hall of the Library of Congress at Washington, and the opening concert takes place on October 28. It is not easy to understand any advantages accruing from the change. The principal critics, the most ardent and cultivated music-lovers, have flocked to the little theatre with its picturesque mountain setting, and have brought back detailed accounts of the performances they have heard. This year they will be too busy in late October with concerts of every description in their own localities to go to Washington, and there will be no space in their various papers to print any adequate account of whatever Mrs. Coolidge provides for them. She gives prizes for novelties only once in two years. Thus, in spite of the value of the choice classical selections that will be offered, diminished interest will be felt in the Festival for another reason than change of date and venue.

Coincident with Mrs. Coolidge's undertaking we have had for several years at New York the opening of the season of the San Carlo Opera Company, but heretofore it has always taken second place in our regard, owing to the overshadowing richness of the music performed at the Festival. This year, however, we have nothing else to listen to or think about so early in the season, so the performances of the San Carlo receive our undivided attention. This company has been giving opera for about ten years in America. It opens with a four weeks' season at New York, and then tours through the winter months all over the country. It never presents novelties, but its standard has risen every year both in the artistic representation of the performances and in the quality of the individual singers. In many instances a year or two with the San Carlo Company results in an engagement with the Metropolitan Opera House. Last year the San Carlo had an exceptionally fine baritone, Basioli, who, this coming season, is joining the Metropolitan. This year it is a tenor, Tafuro, whose beauty of voice and good acting will probably also bring him to the Metropolitan some time, even if it takes more than one year in the San Carlo Company to reach the goal desired by all the singers in the world.

The concert season has begun with the free Sunday performances that were inaugurated last year, when we had a series conducted by Josiah Zuro, who leads the music in one of the picture-houses. This season Hugo Reisenfeld, another picture-house conductor, will present his orchestra in the same way. Both conductors will give programmes of the best kinds of music, the composers heard at Mr. Reisenfeld's first concert being Wagner, Grieg, Brahms, Smetana, and Bizet, with a young pianist playing the first movement of the Tchaikovsky Concerto. As Mr. Reisenfeld opens his Sunday concerts with a soloist, probably Mr. Zuro will follow suit. Both of these schemes are absolutely free, the necessary expenses coming out of the pockets of the rich music-lovers whose name seems to be legion at New York. The concerts begin at 12.30, and last about an hour. Thus all the performers can appear elsewhere later, either at the picture-houses or with some leading orchestra.

The season announcements of all the leading orchestras are now published. Almost all have added educational features to their regular programmes. Next to the coming of Toscanini, as guest-conductor of the Philharmonic, the most interesting feature lies probably in the fact that at last the Philadelphia Orchestra has succumbed to the rage for guest-conductors, and that the well-known Italian composer, Ottorino Respighi, will appear with the Orchestra, both as conductor and soloist, playing his own Concerto. Respighi will tour the country, as guest-conductor with some orchestras and as soloist with others. His first appearance in America will be as soloist with the New York Philharmonic Society. Much interest is also felt in Otto Klemperer's appearance with the New York Symphony Society (which he will conduct during the latter part of the season), and it is not all on account of his musical reputation. He is said to be seven feet tall, and his personality will arouse great curiosity.

An item that attracts attention is the re-appearance of Ernestine Schumann-Heink at the Metropolitan Opera House. This famous singer is sixty-four years old, and it is two decades since she last appeared in opera at New York. 'But do not think I am a fool,' she said to one of our most noted critics who interviewed her. 'Ortrud and Brangaene are no longer for me. I am content to go back to the smaller rôles in which I first appeared at the Metropolitan, and hope I can still sing them well enough to please my public.' Such a favourite has this great artist been for so many years that it seems safe to say of her performance in the smaller rôles that even should it prove inferior to that of her younger days, she would still be received with tumultuous applause. No one imagines that her impersonations will be inferior. All that will be in evidence is her wisdom in not attempting the great rôles.

The Metropolitan announces no new singers, except a German tenor, Melchior, who pleased some and failed to please others of our critics at Bayreuth this summer. Most of the old favourites have returned to the City, but are off on concert tours for the month preceding the opening of the Opera. The Metropolitan will open its season with 'La Giaconda,' Ponsell and Gigli filling the leading parts. Jeritza appears the second night with the everlasting favourite, Scotti, in 'Tosca.' During the first week, a double bill of two new operas will be presented—'The Barber of Bagdad,' in German, and the 'Spanish Hour,' by Ravel, in French, Bender and Rethberg appearing in the German opera and Bori and Tibbett in the French production. 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' which made such an enormous success last season, will also be given in the opening week. During the season there will be a total of five novelties and some ten revivals. Perhaps the most interesting of the novelties will be Stravinskys's 'Le Chant de Rossignol,' and quite the most attractive will undoubtedly be the revival of the 'Bartered Bride.'

M. H. Flint.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

George Lawrence Harter Gardner, at Marlow, on September 20, aged seventy-two. He was a Canon of Gloucester Cathedral, and had recently, through failing health, resigned the Archdeaconry of Cheltenham, which he had held for four years. Formerly Archdeacon of Aston and Chancellor of Birmingham Cathedral, he was a keen musician, and although his interests lay mainly in the direction of Church music—especially of the plainsong and polyphonic types—he was on familiar terms with most modern developments of the art, and could discourse as easily on Stravinsky as on Palestrina. Nor was his enthusiasm of the facile, uninformed sort; he was a capable composer, and took his Mus. Bac. degree at Oxford in 1875. He wrote a good deal on musical subjects for this and other journals and for various Church magazines; was author of 'Music and Worship' (1918); and, with Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, co-editor of 'English Church Music' (1923); and was a member of the Archbishops' Committee on Church Music and of the Church Music Society.

William Duncombe van der Horst Duncombe, at Cheltenham, on October 4. He had been connected with Hereford Cathedral for upwards of fifty years, first as assistant vicar-choral and ultimately as prebendary. He was born at Antigua in 1832, graduated at Brasenose, Oxford, where he studied music under Dr. Corfe, and made his début as a singer in Mendelssohn's 'Antigone' (1853). Upon leaving the University he went to Dresden, where he took lessons from Schneider, the famous organist. After holding various clerical posts he was appointed in 1877 Custos of the College of Vicars Choral at Hereford, an office he held until 1916. For many years he was a popular figure on the concert and oratorio platform, appearing both as vocalist and instrumentalist (usually playing bassoon or oboe) in connection with many musical organizations in the Hereford district. He was also a prolific composer, chiefly in the smaller vocal forms.

Herbert Sharpe, on October 14. He was one of London's most successful pianoforte teachers. Obtaining a scholarship at the National Training School of Music, the forerunner of the R.C.M., he later became a professor at the College. At the close of his pupilage he did a good deal of work as solo pianist and chamber-music player in the provinces and London. Since 1884, when he joined the staff of the R.C.M., he had confined his activities to teaching. He was a member of the Board of Professors and an Examiner for the Associated Board, and in these and other ways exercised a wide and beneficent influence on musical education.

Easthope Martin, the composer of 'Come to the fair,' and many other popular songs. He was born at Stourport about forty years ago. To his musical education at Trinity College of Music in years 1902-05, chiefly at the hands of Dr. Gordon Saunders, may be attributed a quality of refinement and technique not always to be found in songs that appeal widely to the public.

Alfred Kenningham, at Hull, on October 11, in his seventy-ninth year. A member of the choir at St. Andrew's, Wells Street, from 1871 to 1872, he was appointed assistant vicar-choral at St. Paul's Cathedral in 1873, and vicar-choral in 1888. He retired in 1919, and spent his remaining years at Hull, his birthplace.

Herbert Lane, organist of Lenzie U.F. Church (nr. Glasgow), a member of the musical staff of the Glasgow Athenæum School of Music, and conductor of the Kirkintilloch Musical Association.

P. A. Hope, a popular Scottish baritone, at Cologne, where he had been for some time entertaining the British troops.

Miscellaneous

The repertory of music for two pianofortes is larger than most people imagine, but opportunities for becoming acquainted with it are scarce. We therefore note with pleasure that Mr. A. M. Henderson and Mr. Wilfrid Senior, who have made a special study of this department of music, have been invited by the Musical Association to give a recital of music for two pianofortes at Central Hall, Westminster, on November 3. The composers drawn on will include Bach, Bax, Chopin, Handel, Haydn, Rachmaninov, &c., and several of the works will be heard for the first time.

Elgar's 'The Kingdom' is infrequently heard in the London district. We therefore draw attention to the performance announced by the Croydon Philharmonic Society to take place on November 28, at 8, in the Baths Hall, Scarbrook Road. The soloists will be Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Gladys Palmer, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Harold Williams. Mr. Alan J. Kirby will conduct.

The League of Arts has arranged an excellent series of concerts to take place at the Victoria and Albert Museum on Saturdays, at 3. The performers in November are: 7th, Reginald Paul and Joan Elwes; 14th, the Spencer Dyke Quartet and Dorothy Doria Grey; 21st, Isidora Algar, Dorothy Hudson, and Winifred Coombs; 28th, Harold Craxton and Marie Thompson.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

Would-be Sight-Reader—Our own experience is that the only way to improve one's sight-reading is the plain, obvious, and unornamental one of keeping on reading at sight. We know nothing of the correspondence courses to which you refer, but we shall be surprised if they supply a 'short cut.' The only plan that we have confidence in is the daily practice of the art—for it is an art. If we were in your position, with your special needs as a cinema pianist, we should systematically go through a great mass of pianoforte music of all kinds, from dance music to the '48,' making a start with such simple fare as Schumann's 'Children's Albums' and other easy classical pieces, side by side with easy popular dance music. Begin your sight-reading studies quite slowly, in order to develop the co-ordination of brain, sight, and finger-work. In ordinary pianoforte playing the proportion of these three elements is different from that in sight-reading. As a piece of music becomes familiar the need for readiness of mental grasp diminishes. Hence the importance of the sight-reader's concentrating on this particular faculty. Hence, too, the need for beginning with simple things, just as a child before he can mentally realise and articulate long words and sentences must learn to deal with short ones. From the first you must resist the temptation to halt and correct mistakes. The sight-reader does not profess to give a perfect performance. His job is to provide as good a sketch as possible at the right pace, and in the right style. This is another reason why at the beginning you should adopt a slow tempo—i.e., one that can be maintained throughout, no matter what may be the difficulties. Only thus can you avoid the habit of stammering, and of accommodating the pace to the difficulties. As sight-reading gives you the minimum of chance of looking at your hands, you should aim at developing a good sense of keyboard locality, especially, of course, in regard to long shots with the left hand. You should also practise sight-reading away from the instrument, so as to develop the faculty of mentally hearing the piece of music. Here again you must begin with the simplest of fare, such as hymn-tunes, chants, and even (if you are at present quite unable to do this sort of thing) simple chordal progressions. You should, of course, in the early stages at once verify your impressions by playing the passage on the keyboard, or getting a friend to do so. This foundation being well and truly laid, you ought to have no difficulty in imposing on it the ability to read at sight any kind of music that will be required in the normal way in your professional work. But we repeat, there is no short cut. The common mistake is to regard sight-reading as a gift, and certainly some people have a happy knack that way, but any normal musical person can, by systematic practice, make an astonishingly good fist at it. If you doubt this, you have only to see what can be done by a class of small elementary school children in sight-reading and musical dictation when the subject has been thoroughly taught; and compare their achievements with those of a choir of older children or adults who have not been so taught. On reading through the above we are so conscious of its seeming obviousness that we are tempted to run a blue pencil across the whole of it. Second thoughts, however, remind us of the experiences of pupils, and of other inquiries on the subject, so we leave it, hoping it will meet the eyes of some of the alleged sight-reading accompanists we encounter from time to time.

[Since writing the above we find that an article on the subject, by Mr. Watson Lyle, will be appearing in this issue. The duplication will be no bad thing, for so important a nail can hardly be over-hammered.]

G. M.—It is not easy to 'Name a few "comic" folk-songs, British and American,' to suit a particular singer, because the humour of such songs goes for little—indeed, it often becomes merely silly—unless the singer has just the right style. There are a few public singers able to delight any kind of audience with ditties of this type—e.g., Plunket Greene, John Coates, and John Goss occur to us at once. Study their programmes and methods, and choose the items that seem best for your purpose. As an illustration of the extent to which humorous folk-songs depend on the performer, we mention that at a Scottish Competitive Festival we once heard a string of young men essay 'The Deil's Awa.' All but one were so serious as to suggest an anxious concern at the fate of the Exciseman, and the audience remained torpid. The exception came last, had us all smiling before he had sung three lines, chuckling between the first and second verses, and stifling our laughter at the third. He departed amid a storm of clapping and guffaws. Coming farther South, we have known the house brought down by such things as 'Widdicombe Fair,' 'The Tithe Pig,' 'The Brisk Young Widow,' &c. No audience can resist them if the singer has the right racy style. If he hasn't, no word can describe the desolating completeness with which they miss fire. We know of no American songs of the kind you inquire about.

E. F. J.—(1.) 'A little information on the question of scoring music' is of no use to you. If you have a knack of song-writing you should study composition, and learn to express yourself to the best advantage. There are, however, musicians who will score your tunes, &c., for you. (See our advertisement pages.) But the result will be hardly your own, will it? Much better go to a good teacher, and become a real, not a potential, composer. (2.) The fact of a poem having been already set to music need not prevent you from trying your hand at it, always provided the words are non-copyright, as is the case with the poems you mention. (When you say 'last century writers,' we assume you mean writers of a century ago.) As to the 'degree of success' likely to be attained by a new setting of 'The Village Blacksmith,' prophecy is impossible. The old setting, though, as you say, 'almost obsolete,' is still to be reckoned with. 'Almost obsolete' settings, like creaking doors, hang long, and never lack hot champions when a new (and even better) setting or door comes along.

P. S.—Strictly speaking, the term 'Elizabethan' refers to the period rather than to the character of the work. It has, however, now come to represent a certain kind of vocal polyphony. (In regard to date, it is often used loosely to cover the Tudor period as well.) You ask whether the 'Flemish and Italian madrigal schools come under the classification.' The association is mainly one of similarity of style, though on close acquaintance you will find that there is a great deal of difference between the English and foreign madrigal idiom. You ask also whether folk-songs of the Elizabethan period, arranged for choral performance by a modern, would be called Elizabethan music. Surely the label does not matter? The point is that such works, if of good quality qua music, would fit in well with your programme of genuine Elizabethan madrigals. The success achieved by the Oriana Choir and the English Singers in blending such things as the Vaughan Williams and Holst arrangements of folk-songs with Elizabethan madrigals is proof of this.

W. H. M.—You say you have had no experience in conducting community singing, and, having been asked to conduct such an event, you ask for advice as to text-books, &c. We know of no such books, and, indeed, it is difficult to advise on such a matter. Your best plan is to attend a function conducted by an acknowledged master of the art. If this is impossible, we can only say that the main requisites are a good voice; the ability to speak briefly, pointedly, and not without humour when that quality is required; a knowledge of the elements of singing; some experience in simple choral conducting; enthusiasm; and a genius for leadership. If you have all, or at any rate most, of these gifts and graces, and sufficient nerve to stand up before a crowd and hand them out, you will soon make a job of it. Curwens have just issued some sets of songs suitable for community singing, and there are also some books of the kind published by Stainer & Bell, in connection with the League of Arts.

NARKY.—(1.) John E. West's 'The Story of Bethlehem' would probably meet your needs. It is laid out for soprano, tenor, and bass soli, chorus, and organ, and takes about thirty-five minutes in performance. (2.) For carols you had better make your own selection. Novello's will send you a parcel on approval, from which you can choose for yourself. (3.) Beethoven's 'Es ist vollbracht' is for bass solo, chorus, and orchestra, and forms the Finale to his Singspiel 'Die Ehrenpforten.' (4.) If you mean bar 2 of p. 113 (Aria in F, Bach, Novello Edition), there can be no doubt that the C in the bass should be natural. C sharp would be possible, but the C natural here is more logical as leading to the touch of G minor that comes on the third beat of the bar. We have referred to the German Society Bach Edition, and find that the note there is C natural.

W. H. G.—Most of the public libraries in London now contain a good proportion of musical literature. We happen to have by us a copy of the catalogue of music and books on music available at the Finsbury Public Libraries. It is a remarkably fine and inclusive selection, and we should recommend you to write to the Borough Librarian, Mr. H. G. T. Cannons, for a copy of the catalogue, price 3*d.* (As the volume consists of over two hundred pages, you should include at least 3*d.* for postage.) We cannot say where in London the most extensive collection of pianoforte music can be borrowed. We can hear of none where volumes can be hired, but separate works can be had from the Novello Circulating Library. The subscription is two guineas per annum, plus postage in the case of country members. No catalogue is issued.

A. H.—(1.) Apparently the organ bench is too high. In any case the manual is a fixture, and cannot be adjusted. Probably you will be able to alter the height of the bench sufficiently to make your manual position comfortable without upsetting your pedalling. (2.) The direction that the crescendo be made with the Swell pedal does not imply 'that English writers of to-day write with the German crescendo pedal device in view.' In the particular piece you mention, the composer indicates the Swell pedal in order to show that the increase is to be made that way, and not by adding stops. (3.) We know of no book dealing with sea shanties, but the collection edited by Sir Richard Terry, and published by Curwens, contains a long and excellent introduction.

C. T.—The whole question of the ornaments in Mozart's operas is too big a one to enter into here. Some were conventional, and so generally understood that they were not printed, their application being left to the singer. In course of time, certain singers have added their own, or have altered the originals, so that it would be difficult to say that any edition represented the actual mind of the composer in this respect. No doubt, as in the case of the profuse ornaments in old clavier music, some of the embellishments may be omitted to-day without serious loss, if not with actual gain.

W. P.—Very little of the organ music of the old French composers you mention is obtainable in handy form. The material in the articles you cite was obtained from the collections made by Guilmant and Pirro, and published by Schott in large volumes. There is, however, a collection of 'Noels' by d'Aquin, published by Schott, edited by Joseph Bonnet. Many of these are very florid, and unsuitable for the organ; but there are a few delightful things amongst them, some of which are played by Dupré at his recitals.

A. J. L.—You ask 'what instruments other than strings would be considered necessary in the formation of an amateur orchestral society.' The word 'necessary' hardly comes in. Our own inclination, if we were working as you are in a small provincial centre, would be to welcome practically any instrument that came along, adapting or re-scoring our music accordingly. When you know what your forces will be for the coming season, write to us again, and we will do our best to advise you as to choice of music.

A. J. S.—We think you would be suited by W. G. McNaught's 'School Sight-Singing Reader,' in which you will find carefully-graded exercises and numerous songs in Staff notation. There are various sections, among them being one designed for leading from Tonic Sol-fa to the Staff notation, which we gather is what you require especially. You had better come along to Novellos and examine the series for yourself. There are also sets of two-part studies in Staff notation from the same hand.

Cantate.—We cannot give any information as to the value of old books. Your best plan would be to write to Harold Reeves, 210, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.2, giving a full description of the volume, or sending it for his inspection.

E. V.—For books on the player-piano try the following: On the playing side: Newman's 'The Player-Piano and its Music' (Grant Richards); Grew's 'The Art of the Player-Pianist' (Kegan, Paul); Ellingham's 'How to Use the Player-Piano' (Grant Richards). As to the mechanical: Drake's 'The Player-Piano Explained' (Musical Opinion Office); and 'Repairing the Player-Piano' (Musical Opinion Office). For suitable pieces our monthly notes will, we hope, help you.

Organ Grinder.—The tune 'Æterna Christi munera' is, we believe, now generally regarded as being in the eighth Mode, so there is no leading-note. The Harwood harmonization is, therefore, correct. We have not space to go into the modal questions that puzzle you. You should read up in 'Grove,' or some other authority.

T. M. H. M.—The object of the Franklin Taylor Pianoforte School is set forth in the compiler's Preface. It is impossible to suggest a scheme of study for one working, as you are, without a teacher. You would find the Franklin Taylor book, 'Technique and Expression,' helpful (Novello).

W. H.—We advise you to assign no copyright on such terms as those mentioned in the publisher's letter you send us. Your best plan would be to ask for a royalty or for a fee for the copyright. If your composition is good, it should bring you something more substantial than a parcel of free copies.

W. E. P.—If you will copy out the bars of the Chopin piece where the sign occurs, or, alternatively, tell us the name of the particular piece, we will endeavour to explain it. We cannot enter on a search of the whole of Chopin for a sign that apparently occurs only once or twice.

Retford.—We know of no biographies of Stainer and Barnby, but full obituary articles of both, by F. G. Edwards, appeared in the Musical Times for May, 1901 (Stainer), and March, 1896 (Barnby). These, with the 'Grove' articles, will probably supply your needs.

H. P. L.—For Staff sight-singing, with the bass clef, for the use of your men, try the 'Sight-Singing Course' of George Lane, in Nos. 3 and 4 of Novello's Elementary Manuals.

R. T. C.—An Irish friend tells us that the 'Phaudrig' in 'Phaudrig Crohoore' is pronounced 'Faudrig,' though there are no doubt slight variants in different parts of Ireland.

Away.—The most comprehensive work of the kind known to us is 'The Complete Opera Book,' by Gustav Kobbé, published by Putnams, 15*s.*

C. H. T.—We know of no pianoforte arrangement of Bach's 'Jesu, Joy of man's desiring.' Perhaps a reader can supply the information.

Mr. R. M. Davies, The Pharmacy, Bovey Tracey, wishes to know where he can obtain, new or second-hand, a copy of Ascher's 'Spanish Dance'—the one dedicated to the Empress Eugénie. He understands that it is out of print.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

Charges for Advertisements:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
A Postscript to 'A Musical Critic's Holiday.' By Ernest Newman (continued)	977
Leonard Borwick. By Ernest Walker	981
Anglican Chanting: A Challenging Psalter. By Ernest Bullock	982
The Earliest Editions of Handel's 'Messiah' (New Light on an Old Subject). By William C. Smith	985
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XIII. Osbert Parsley. By W. H. Grattan Flood	990
Occasional Notes	991
New Music	993
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	996
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	998
Sight-Reading. By Watson Lyle	999
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	1000
The Musician's Bookshelf	1001
The Leeds Festival. By W. McNaught	1006
Parry: Memorial Tablet at Gloucester	1008
Church and Organ Music	1016
Royal College of Organists	1016
Letters to the Editor	1017
Sharps and Flats	1022
Sixty Years Ago	1022
The Amateurs' Exchange	1022
Royal Academy of Music	1023
Royal College of Music	1023
Trinity College of Music	1024
Guildhall School of Music	1024
London Concerts	1024
Choral Society Programmes	1025
Competition Festival Record	1028
The Festival Federation Conference. By Harvey Grace	1028
Music in the Provinces	1031
Centenary of Catherine Hayes: 'The Swan of Erin'	1031
Music in Scotland	1031
Music in Wales	1032
Music in Ireland	1033
Netherlands Musicians' Union. By Herbert Antcliffe	1033
Musical Notes from Abroad	1034
Obituary	1036
Miscellaneous	1036
Answers to Correspondents	1036

MUSIC:

'Hark! a thrilling voice is sounding.' Anthem for Advent. By ERIC H. THIMAN	1009

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Portrait of George Frederick Handel.
2. 'The Pilgrim Fathers.' Four-part Song. By Percy E. Fletcher.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 19 (FIRST POST).

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BLAIR, HUGH.—Two Pieces (Romance and Allegro Grandioso). (No. 104, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 1s. 6d.

BRAILLE MUSIC NOTATION, 1922, Key to the. With Synopsis and Index. Revised and Amplified by the Braille Music Notation Committee. 5s.

BREWER, A. HERBERT.—"A Sprig of Shamrock." Four Old Irish Airs, for Contralto or Baritone. 3s. 6d.

—— "A Sprig of Shamrock." String Parts (4). (High Voice.) 2s. each.

CLARKE, W. J.—"Te Deum Laudamus." Words only. 1d.

DALE, B. J.—"Cradle Song." Carol for Mixed Voices, with Soprano Solo. (No. 1427, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

ELGAR, EDWARD.—"The Herald." Part-song for T.T.B.B. (No. 598, The Orpheus.) 4d.

ENGLISH PSALTER. Containing the Psalms of David, together with The Canticles and Proper Psalms for Certain Days, edited and pointed for chanting upon the Principles of Natural Speech-Rhythm, by Charles Macpherson, Edward C. Bairstow, and Percy C. Buck. Demy 8vo. 4s. net.

HOLST, GUSTAV.—"Ode on a Grecian Urn." Slow movement from First Choral Symphony. 1s. 6d.

MILLERS, G. H.—Two Vesper Hymns. (1. "The night comes on"; 2. "Lead us, O Lord.") 2d.

PURCELL, HENRY.—"The Virtuous Wife." Incidental music. Suite for Strings. Edited by Gustav Holst. Score, 4s. String Parts (4), 2s. 8d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 401, contains the following music in both notations.—"Now once again our hearts we raise." Arranged for two-part singing. "Hark! the herald-angels sing," MENDELSSOHN. Arranged with Descant. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

	A.	B.
No. 1188. "The Drums of Freedom." Unison. H. E. CRIMP	4d.	—

SMITH, W.—"Casabianca." Song. 2s.

STEVENS, C. L. F.—"The sun is sinking fast." Hymn. 2d.

THIMAN, E. H.—"Hark, a thrilling voice is sounding." Anthem for Advent. (No. 993, The Musical Times.) 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2489.	"Coming through the craigs o' Kyle." Four-part Song. A. ROWLEY	3d.
2490.	Ascension Hymn. JOHANN SCHICHT	2d.
2492.	"The Lord is terrible and very great." Anthem. A. M. GOODHART	3d.
2493.	"Close to my heart." Four-part Song. W. DAVIES	3d.
2494.	"Song of Apple Trees." Four-part Song. P. E. FLETCHER	2d.

CHARLES LONGSTER

(BARITONE). Soloist, St. Michael's Church, Headingley. Leeds. Song Recitals, Oratorios, Concerts, &c. 10, Belvedere Terrace, Leeds.

ISIDOR SESTA, pupil of Jacques van Lier, the famous 'cellist, has VACANCIES for a few pupils. Audition by appointment, free of charge. Moderate terms. For all communications apply, 3, Robsart Mansions, Kenton St., Russell Square, W.C.1.

WOODFORD CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED. Vacancy arisen owing to Organist having gone abroad. State qualifications, experience, and remuneration required, by letter, to Rev. E. W. Franks, M.A., Woodford Green, Essex.

TENOR REQUIRED immediately, for St. Luke's, Redcliffe Square, South Kensington. Write, James L. Bell, 53, Redcliffe Gardens, S.W.10.

THE ORGANIST of the FOUNDLING has a VACANCY for a PUPIL-ASSISTANT. Apply by letter, to Dr. Davan Wetton, 19, Pembridge Mansions, W.2.

TENOR and BASS SINGERS WANTED for performances of "Yeomen of the Guard" to be given in January, Kensington district. Full particulars from the Hon. Secretary, New Opera Club, 216, Ladbroke Grove, W.10.

APOLLO ORGAN FOR SALE.—Two manuals. Made by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, Liverpool. Price, £100, or nearest offer. In splendid condition. Can be inspected any time at 8, Greenfield Road, Old Swan, Stoneycroft.

FOR SALE.—PIANO by Reifurt, in excellent condition. £75, or near offer. Linsell, 229, Springbank Road, Hither Green, S.E.13.

PIANO, with Organ Pedals attached, stool, &c.; radiating and concave, R.C.O. scale. Excellent condition. Accept £35. View by appointment. Maurice Barnes, Gosmore, near Hitchin.

VIOLIN (Gagliano FOR SALE. — Absolutely authentic. Very interesting instrument. Velvety tone. Apply, Mr. Wiltberger, notaire à Phalsbourg, Moselle, France.

COMPOSITIONS, ETC.

BY

W. D. V. DUNCOMBE.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Original and traditional melodies.

Two Series containing Ten in each, 2*s.*
Separate numbers, 3*d.* each.

TWO FOR ST. STEPHEN'S DAY.
ONE FOR ST. JOHN'S DAY.
ONE FOR HOLY INNOCENTS.
ONE FOR FEAST OF THE CIRCUMCISION.
TWO FOR FEAST OF THE PURIFICATION.

All the above are original music, 3*d.* each.

ONE FOR THE FEAST OF EPIPHANY, "O'ER THE HILL."
An old plainsong harmonized.

WEEKES & Co., 14, HANOVER STREET, W.1.

MUSTEL ORGAN, two-manual (Great and Swell), by Victor Mustel, 10 rows, fine powerful tone, condition as new. Price, £350. Full particulars from "K. G.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—Nearly new WITTON PIANO, with "Malkin" popular model pedals, radiating and concave; complete with stool. Price, £55. Seen in London; owner no further use. Apply, "Piano," 60, Maid's Causeway, Cambridge.

"APOLLO" ORGAN, two-manual and pedals, in excellent condition. Will accept £110 for quick sale. Apply, "Advertiser," 275, Westgate Road, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

NEW ORGAN BELLOWS, worked by crank shaft. Complete with Electric Motor, Starter, and Regulator. Arthur Spencer, Chippenham.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S
ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN
No. 9

TWELVE SELECTED PIECES
(WEDDING MUSIC)

CONTENTS.

No.
1.	WEDDING MARCH ...	William Faulkes
2.	HAPPY PAIR ("Alexander's Feast")	Handel
3.	LOVE SONG—LIEBESLIED ...	Henselt
4.	BENEDICTION NUPTIALE	Alfred Hollins
5.	BRIDAL MARCH	Alfred Hollins
6.	MINUET NUPTIALE ...	Edwin H. Lemare
7.	SPRING SONG ("Lieder ohne Worte")	Mendelssohn
8.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
9.	BRIDAL MARCH AND FINALE ("The Birds" of Aristophanes)	C. Hubert H. Parry
10.	FINALE ("Blest Pair of Sirens")	C. Hubert H. Parry
11.	SERENADE ("Schwanengesang")	Schubert
12.	BRIDAL CHORUS ("Lohengrin")	Wagner

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.
CLOTH, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON. NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEGRO SPIRITUALS

By H. T. BURLEIGH

ARRANGED AS PART-SONGS.

(a) ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES. (Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass)
Price 9*d.* net each

COULDN'T HEAR NOBODY PRAY
GO DOWN, MOSES
I GOT A ROBE (HEAV'N, HEAV'N). (Sol-fa, 3*d.* net.)
I'M A ROLLING
MY LORD, WHAT A MORNIN'!
SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS
STEAL AWAY
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT. (Sol-fa, 3*d.* net.)
WERE YOU THERE?

(b) ARRANGED FOR FEMALE VOICES. (2 Sopranos and 1 Contralto)
Price 9*d.* net each

BALM IN GILEAD
BY AN' BY DE GOSPEL TRAIN
DEEP RIVER
GO DOWN, MOSES
HARD TRIALS
I DON'T FEEL NO-WAYS TIRED
I GOT A ROBE (HEAV'N, HEAV'N)
I WANT TO BE READY
MY WAY'S CLOUDY
NOBODY KNOWS DE TROUBLE I'VE SEEN
OH, DIDN'T IT RAIN
O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS
SINNER, PLEASE DOAN LET DIS HARVES' PASS
SOMETIMES I FEEL LIKE A MOTHERLESS CHILD
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT
WEEPIN' MARY

(c) ARRANGED FOR MALE VOICES. (2 Tenors and 2 Basses)
Price 9*d.* net each

DEEP RIVER
DE GOSPEL TRAIN
GO DOWN, MOSES
I GOT A ROBE (HEAV'N, HEAV'N)
O, PETER, GO RING DEM BELLS
SWING LOW, SWEET CHARIOT
'TIS ME, O LORD
WERE YOU THERE?

Send a postcard now for FREE booklet giving thematic extracts of 12 of the songs, and try them over on your piano.

G. RICORDI & CO., 271, Regent Street, Oxford Circus, London, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS.
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s.*;
Music only, 3*s.*

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING
FOR
VOICE-PRODUCTION
(Rewritten and brought up to date).
PART I.
OF EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION
BY
H. H. HULBERT,
Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price ... Three Shillings.
Paper Boards, 4*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION
FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION
FROM
EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.
BY
H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

(THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings.
Boards, 4s.; Cloth, 6s.
Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each.
Parts 1 and 2, 1s. 6d.; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. 6d.;
Parts 5 and 6, 1s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12s. 6d.
Books of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

†CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG!)

A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)

Edited by J. E. WEST. English Words by C. AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

†BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY

C. ROSSETTI.

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY

H. M. BURNSIDE.

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE.

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence;
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY

S. J. STONE.

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE.

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings.
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. C. NUNN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS BY

S. WENSLEY.

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTHEMS, &c., FOR CHRISTMAS.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

P. E. FLETCHER.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

CAROL-ANTHEM.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, Female Voices, Fourpence.

G. RATHBONE.

AND WE BEHELD HIS GLORY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

C. V. STANFORD.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence.

SELECTED LIST.

A. ADAM.

O HOLY NIGHT

ARRANGED AS ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

T. ADAMS.

ARISE, SHINE, O JERUSALEM

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

T. ADAMS.

THOU ART MY SON

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK.

BREAK FORTH INTO JOY

Price Fourpence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

OF THE FATHER'S LOVE BEGOTTEN

Price Fourpence.

C. BAYLEY.

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

J. F. BRIDGE.

IN THAT DAY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

BEHOLD, I BRING GOOD TIDINGS

Price Threepence.

E. BUNNETT.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. A. CHAMBERS.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

P. E. FLETCHER.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

FESTIVAL CAROL

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, T.T.B.B., Fourpence.
Ditto, S.S.A., Fourpence. Ditto, S.A., Fourpence.

M. B. FOSTER.

CHRIST'S INCARNATION

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

CH. GOUNOD.

NAZARETH

ARRANGED FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. V. HALL.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. HOLLINS.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. H. LLOYD.

REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER OF ZION

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. MARCHANT.

O COME, REDEEMER OF MANKIND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. H. MAUNDER.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. L. SELBY.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

G. SHAW.

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.
Ditto, Unison Setting, Twopence.
Ditto, S.S.C. Threepence.

B. STEANE.

LET US NOW GO EVEN UNTO BETHLEHEM

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. STEANE.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. S. SULLIVAN.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. E. WEST.

A SONG OF JOY

Price Fourpence Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. WILSON.

WITH ALL THY HOSTS

Price Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

LATEST NUMBERS.

No.
384.	I sing the birth ...	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
385.	A Carol of Peace ...	G. J. Bennett	2d.
386.	When Christ was born...	Myles B. Foster	1½d.
387.	The Nativity	H. Rhodes	1½d.
388.	Ring, Christmas Bells...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
389.	Would I had been a Shepherd	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
390.	By Nazareth's green hills ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
391.	Sweet hours of night	H. C. Dixon	1½d.
392.	The Carollers	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
393.	The Rose and the Lily ...	A. Rowley	1½d.
394.	Carol of the Three Kings ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
395.	Green grows the Holly Tree ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
396.	The coming Christmas ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
397.	I sing the Birth ...	...Thomas Adams	1½d.
398.	O lovely voices of the sky ...	W. G. Alcock	2d.
399.	This Day	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*400.	Hark! what mean those Holy voices	A. Sullivan	4d.
*401.	Four Christmas Carols		2d.
	1. In Bethlehem, that noble place	B. J. Dale
	2. Sleep, Holy Babe! ...	R. W. Robson
	3. The First Christmas Night	W. H. Sangster
	4. There dwelt a King ...	John E. West
	(Words only, 4s. per 100.)
*402	Silent Night	Franz Gruber	2d.
403.	Carols of Bethlehem	C. W. Pearce	2d.
	1. No room in the Inn. 2. The heavenly host. 3. Our "House of Bread."
404.	Good King Wenceslas... ...	Geoffrey Shaw	2d.

No.
*405.	O lovely voices of the sky (Unison)	Cuthbert Harris	1½d.
*406.	Ditto. (Four Voices)	Cuthbert Harris	2d.
407.	His Birthday Keep	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
408.	Christmas Cradle Song ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
409.	Carol, Carol, tenderly, sweetly	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
410.	Rejoice, the Christ has come	Stanley Marchant	1½d.
*411.	The shepherds found Thee by night	Geoffrey Shaw	3d.
412.	The Carollers	E. Bunnett	1½d.
413.	The stars are shining bright and clear ... ... Carol, sweetly carol ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
414.	Christmas Bells	E. Bunnett	1½d.
415.	A Child this day is born Hark! what mean those Holy Voices ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
416.	The Angel's Carol	E. Bunnett	1½d.
417.	While shepherds watched Angels from the realms of glory	E. Bunnett	1½d.
418.	A Christmas chime	E. Bunnett	1½d.
419.	A Cradle Song	...A. H. Brewer	1½d.
420.	Gather the holly-bough...	... H. E. Watts	1½d.
421.	The Three Wise Men ...	Alfred Hollins	1½d.
422.	The Holly and the Ivy...	...Geoffrey Shaw	1½d.
423.	There is no rose... ...	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*424.	The Christ-Child	G. Rathbone	2d.

* Also published in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above...	3d.	3d
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use) ...	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SIX NEW CAROLS

SPECIALLY COMPOSED FOR

CAROL BOOKLET No. 3,

OF THE

National Institute for the Blind

(Registered under the Blind Persons Act, 1920).

MUSIC BY

NORMAN COCKER,
Sub. Organist, Manchester Cathedral.

G. D. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.,
City Organist, Birmingham Town Hall.

WILLIAM FAULKES,
St. Margaret's, Anfield, Liverpool.

T. W. HANFORTH, MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O.,
Sheffield Cathedral.

ARTHUR MEALE,
Director of Music, Central Hall, Westminster.

W. PRENDERGAST, MUS. DOC.,
Winchester Cathedral.

Published for the National Institute for the Blind, by NOVELLO & Co., LTD. Price Fourpence.

A FREE GRANT of the necessary copies for choirs will gladly be made to churches willing to set apart a Carol Service Collection in aid of the far-reaching work which the National Institute for the Blind conducts on behalf of the blind of the British Empire.

Applications for free copies (stating how many desired) should be addressed to the Secretary, Music Department, National Institute for the Blind, 224-6-8, Great Portland Street, London, W.1.

MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

ANTHEMS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise marked.

Behold, I bring you Good Tidings	Dr. Vincent	85091	3d.
Break forth into joy ... ... ,, ,,		85020	4d.
Glory to God in the Highest ... ... ,, ,,		85172	4d.
Hallelujah, for unto Us (Short) ... ,, ,,		85192	3d.
From East to West (Short) ...	...H. E. Watts	85199	3d.
Sing, O Daughter of Zion ...	... Hugh Blair	85219	4d.
There were Shepherds (S. Solo)	W. V. Bennett	85067	3d.
,, ,, ,, ,, ...	... J. Lyon	85108	4d.
,, ,, ,, ,, ...	P. J. Mansfield	85203	4d.
,, ,, ,, ,, ...	J. Tomlinson	85175	4d.
Wise Men from the East (S. & B. Solos)	Dr. Vincent	85019	4d.
While all things were in quiet silence (S. Solo)	E. C. Nunn	85157	4d.
While all things were in quiet silence	John West	85220	4d.
Whole earth is at Rest (S. Solo) ...	J. Stuart Archer	85243	4d.

CAROLS.

Bethlehem	Gounod	85256	2d.
Carol for Christmas (Unison) ...	J. Stuart Archer	85267	2d.
*a*Christmas Carols and Hymns, Set I. ... ... Fourteen Popular Carols and Hymns.		85239	3d.
*a*Christmas Carols and Hymns, Set II. ... ... Fourteen Popular Carols and Hymns.		85240	3d.
*a*Christmas Carols and Hymns, Set III. Eight Carols and Hymns		85241	3d.

CAROLS—contd.

*a*Christmas Carols and Hymns, Set IV. Five Original Carols		85242	3d.
*c*Forty-one Carols and Hymns, Sets I.—IV. Complete		15126	1/0
Christmas Call ("Musical Mirror" prize carol)	G. N. Meachin	85266	1d.
Christmas Carol	Alfred Hollins	85148	2d.
Christmas Song	N. W. Gade	85260	2d.
Earth has Grown Old, The ...	E. C. Bairstow	85176	3d.
Gloria in Excelsis...	... W. Cooke	85218	3d.
Hallelujah Chorus (Messiah) ...	... Handel	85249	3d.
Humble Maiden Waiteth, A ...	H. D. Wetton	85283	2d.
Hush, my Dear, Lie Still and Slumber	H. D. Wetton	85282	2d.
	Unis. O.N. & S.F. Together.
Lullay my Child (Traditional)	A. M. Fox	85212	2d.
New Noel, The	John Foulds	85271	1d.
There Came a Little Child ...	E. D. Palmer	85209	3d.
a'Tis the Birthday of our Saviour	Dr. Vincent	85040	3d.

ORGAN.

Christmas Pastorale ...	C. H. G. Mottram	57209	1/6
Carillon in C	W. Faulkes	57078	2/0
Carillon	P. J. Mansfield	57338	2/0
Cradle Song	P. J. Mansfield	57339	1/6

"Useful Voluntaries" of Xmas Music, Vol. 5.
Edited by Dr. C. W. Pearce.
Contents: Pastoral Symphony, Corelli; Grand Chœur, Mozart.
No. 22125. Price 1/6.

a Words, price 1d. each, 3s. per 100. c Words, price 3d. each, 9s. per 100.

Specimen copies will gladly be sent on approval to Conductors and Choirmasters sending professional card.

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS, OR

W. PAXTON & Co., LTD., 22, HIGH ST., NEW OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for Complete Choral List, C 201, post free.

POPULAR CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

*BEHOLD, I BRING	32nd 1000	4d.
*SING, O HEAVENS	23rd 1000	4d.
*CHOIRS OF ANGELS	12th 1000	4d.
*GOODWILL TO MEN	21st 1000	4d.
*WE HAVE SEEN HIS STAR	24th 1000	4d.
*BLESSED BE THE KING...	8th 1000	4d.
A SAVIOUR, CHRIST THE LORD	7th 1000	4d.
THE PRINCE OF PEACE...	20th 1000	4d.
Favourite MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in D	31st 1000	6d.

Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choir Festival.
*Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

NEARLY EIGHT MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*GLORY SHONE AROUND. Just Published ... ... Richly harmonized and exceedingly effective.		4d.
*PEACE AND GOODWILL ... ... Inspiring, melodious, interesting.	10th Edit.	4d.
*A SON IS GIVEN ... ... Contains imitative parts and rich modulations.	8th Edit.	4d.
*THE PRINCE OF PEACE	6th Edit.	4d.
*AND ON EARTH PEACE	6th Edit.	4d.

NEW CAROLS.

*THE SONG OF LOVE. *STAR OF THE MORNING	each	1½d.
*O SOFTLY TREAD. *JOYFUL CAROLS SINGING	each	1½d.
*HEARKEN TO THE CHRISTMAS BELLS		1½d.
*LET BELLS OF NOËL RING		1½d.
*GOODWILL AND PEACE. *O CAROL EXULTANT	each	1½d.
GOD IS OUR REFUGE	5th Edit.	8d.

Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
Very Popular Voluntary Books, 2s. each. Nearly 200,000 sold.
Recent Nos., Books 11 and 12. Seventeen Pieces in each, written on Two Staves with Pedal-part indicated.
*Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.*

London: A. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
Chicago, U.S.A.: CLAYTON F. SUMMY Co., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

CAROLS BY JOSEPH C. BRIDGE.

M.A., D. Mus. Oxon. et Dunelm.; F.S.A.; Chairman of the Board of Trinity College, London: Professor of Music in the University of Durham.

1. ON CHRISTMAS NIGHT		3d.
2. AWAY WITH GRIEF		3d.
3. THE MERRY CHRISTMAS MORN		3d.
4. HOLY NIGHT		2d.
5. AWAKE THE VOICE (S.S.A. only)		4d.
6. CHRISTMAS IN THE FIELDS (Béarnais Melody) ...		2d.
7. WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN (Chester Mystery Play)...		3d.
8. REJOICE WITH HEART AND VOICE (Old French Melody)		2d.
9. THE SHEPHERDS' CAROL (Coventry Mystery Play)...		2d
10. LULLABY (Coventry Mystery Play)		2d.
11. ACROSS THE SNOW		2d.
12 THE SHEPHERDS HAD AN ANGEL (S.S. only) ...		2d.
13. ON BETHLEHEM'S HILL		3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED. THE FIFTH SET OF

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS

BY H. ERNEST NICHOL,
Mus. Bac. Oxon.

O.N. or Sol-fa, 4*d*. Words, 4*s*. per 100.
Each Carol may be had singly.
Specimen of the Set, Gratis and Post Free to any Choirmaster.
Specimens of the Five Sets, with other Carols and Christma Anthems, 2*s*.

H. E. NICHOL, 23, CHARLOTTE STREET, HULL.

JUST PUBLISHED.

XVITH CENTURY PRAYER.

"O Lord, support us all the day long."

BY W. R. PULLEIN.

Price 3*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MOWBRAYS' CAROL BOOKS

"These two collections contain a vast mine of artistic wealth with never a lapse into bad taste or mediocrity."—Mr. FRANCIS BURGESS, in Green Quarterly.

The Cowley Carol Book.

For Christmas, Easter, and Ascensiontide.

FIRST SERIES.

COMPILED AND ARRANGED BY THE

REV. G. R. WOODWARD, Mus. Doc.

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.* : Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*

SECOND SERIES.

COMPILED BY THE

REV. G. R. WOODWARD, Mus. Doc.,

AND

DR. CHARLES WOOD.

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.* ; Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*
Words only, Both Series, 3*d.*

The English Carol Book.

MUSIC EDITED BY

MARTIN SHAW.

WORDS EDITED BY THE REV. PERCY DEARMER, D.D.

FIRST SERIES.

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.* 6*d.* ; Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*

SECOND SERIES.

Music and Words, Paper, 2*s.* 6*d.* ; Cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*
Words only, Both Series, complete, 3*d.*

Certain Carols from these books are published separately, with music, 1½*d.* each.

A. R. MOWBRAY & CO., LTD.,

28, MARGARET ST., OXFORD CIRCUS, LONDON, W.1 ; and 9, HIGH STREET, OXFORD.

MUSIC FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

	s.	d.
BENEDICITE IN D	0	4
MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in E minor	0	6
ANTHEM, "When the Son of Man shall come" ...	0	8
MOTET, "Jesus! Thy boundless love to me," for Chorus, Soli (or Semi-Chorus), Orchestra, and Organ	1	0
(Full Score and Orchestral Parts on Hire.)
TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS :
1. "Lowliest! Loftiest!"	0	3
2. "O hearken, all ye sad and lone"
ORGAN MUSIC :
Rhapsody	3	0
Fantasia, "Christmastide"	3	6

REEVES' LIST.

(PRICES NET.)

Additional to our List, see October, page 952.

THE ARTIST AT THE PIANO.—Essays on the Art of Musical Interpretation. By George Woodhouse. New and Revised Edition. With portraits of Paderewski and the Author, 8vo, cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.* (or paper covers, 2*s.*). Paderewski, after reading the manuscript of this stimulating volume, wrote: "The booklet is quite a remarkable work, and a really valuable contribution to the philosophy of pianistic art."

THE SYMPHONY WRITERS SINCE BEETHOVEN. Critical Essays on Schubert, Schumann, Götz, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Brückner, Berlioz, Liszt, Strauss, Mahler, Mendelssohn, Saint-Saëns, &c. By Felix Weingartner. Translated by A. Bles. Second Impression, with chapter added by D. C. Parker on Weingartner's Symphony No. 5. Twelve Portraits. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7*s.* 6*d.* "A most fascinating book . . . . the works of the various composers are critically discussed in regard to form and orchestration."—Musical Star.

OPERA STORIES OF TO-DAY AND YESTERDAY, Retold Act by Act (including Wagner's "The Ring"). By Edmondstoune Duncan. Complete, cloth, 4*s.* 6*d.* : or in 2 vols., paper, 1*s.* 6*d*, each. A racy account of the plots and histories of 50 famous operas from Purcell, Gluck, and Mozart to Richard Strauss and Ethel Smyth.

PRIMARY COURSE IN THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC, with Hints on answering Questions (Written work) for All Examinations in the Primary, Elementary, and Preparatory Grades. By Wilson Manhire, L.R.A.M., &c. 1*s.*

EXAMINATION CANDIDATE'S GUIDE to Scale and Arpeggio Piano Playing (with Tests).—All that is required for the Various Exams. By Wilson Manhire. 2*s.*

CANDIDATE'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO TESTS for the Piano. By Wilson Manhire. 9*d.*

YOUNG VIOLINIST'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO MANUAL.—With Directions. By Wilson Manhire. Folio. Text and Music. 2*s.*

70 PREPARATORY VIOLIN EXERCISES for Beginners, in the First Position. — Carefully Graduated. By Wilson Manhire. 2*s.*

EASY TRIOS ARRANGED FROM CLASSICAL COMPOSERS, by S. O. Goldsmith, for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello. Score and Parts. Two Books, each 3*s.*

BOOK 1.

1. Minuet ... ... Beethoven.
2. Moment Musical ... ... Schubert.
3. Largo ... ... Tartini.
4. Chiarina ... ... Schumann.
5. Minuet ... ... Pugnani.

BOOK 2.

6. Bourrée ... ... Martini.
7. Chanson Triste ... ... Tchaikovsky.
8. Scherzino ... ... Schumann.
9. "Song without Words," No. 3 ... ... Mendelssohn.

THE RUDIMENTS OF GREGORIAN MUSIC. By Francis Burgess, F.S.A., Scot. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, limp cloth, 1*s.* ; paper, 9*d.*

THE VIOLIN, its History and Construction.—Illustrated and described from all Sources. List of Tyrolese and Italian Makers. With 29 Illustrations and Folding Plates. Englished by J. Broadhouse, from Abele & Niederheitmann. Cloth, 4*s.* 6*d.* ; paper, 3*s.*

 Catalogue B, full list of Publications, free.

LONDON: 83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.2.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RISE, O SOUL, THIS HAPPY MORNING.

(SCHMÜCKE DICH, O LIEBE SEELE.)

CANTATA

For four Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(CANTATA No. 180.)

Edited by JOHN E. WEST.

English version by A. H. FOX-STRANGWAYS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Ye Holy Angels Bright

ANTHEM.

THE WORDS BY

R. BAXTER.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR THE 271st FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY

BY

STANLEY MARCHANT.

Price One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW

SET TO MUSIC BY

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

EDITED BY

EDWARD ELGAR AND IVOR ATKINS.

BOOK OF WORDS,
with the Music of the Chorales.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Leeds Musical Festival, 1925.

FIRST

CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 41.)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

Separately from the above:

Ode on a Grecian Urn

FOR CHORUS AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Band Parts of the Complete Work and of the

SCHERZO

which may be played as an Orchestral Piece without Chorus, may be had on hire.

It is proposed to publish the Full Orchestral Score of the complete work on Subscription terms.

If the scheme is carried out, the price for all orders received on or before December 31, prox., will be £2 2s. The price after publication will be £3 3s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

ORGAN WORKS

OF

RHEINBERGER

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

Cloth Gilt, xii. + 130 pages.

WITH 127 MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Five Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS

	No.
*BIDE WITH US	6	Bleib' bei uns
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON	4	Christ lag in Todesbanden
CHRISTIANS GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY	63	Christen, ätzet diesen Tag
COME, REDEEMER OF OUR RACE	61	Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland
FROM DEPTHS OF WOE I CALL ON THEE	38	Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu dir
GIVE THE HUNGRY MAN THY BREAD	39	Brich dem Hungrigen dein Brod
GOD GOETH UP WITH SHOUTING	43	Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen
GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD	68	Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt
*GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST	106	Gottes Zeit ist die allerbeste Zeit
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
†HOW BRIGHTLY SHINES	1	Wie schön leuchtet
IF THOU BUT SUFFEREST GOD TO GUIDE THEE	93	Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten
JESUS, NOW WILL WE PRAISE THEE	41	Jesu, nun sei gepreiset
JESUS SLEEPS, WHAT HOPE REMAINETH?	81	Jesus schläft, was soll ich hoffen?
LET SONGS OF REJOICING BE RAISED	149	Man singet mit Freuden
LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD, THE	79	Gott der Herr ist Sonn' und Schild
†LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, THE	112	Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt
LORD, REBUKE ME NOT (Funeral Ode)	198	Lass, Fürstin (Trauerode)
*MY SPIRIT WAS IN HEAVINESS	21	Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss
O CHRIST, MY ALL IN LIVING	95	Christus der ist mein Leben
O JESU CHRIST, THOU PRINCE OF PEACE	116	Du Friedensfürst, Herr Jesu Christ
*O LIGHT EVERLASTING	34	O ewiges Feuer
O PRAISE THE LORD FOR ALL HIS MERCIES	28	Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende
O TEACH ME, LORD, MY DAYS TO NUMBER	27	Wer weiss, wie nahe mir mein Ende?
PRAISE OUR GOD WHO REIGNS IN HEAVEN	11	Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen
PRAISE THOU THE LORD, JERUSALEM	119	Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn
RISE, O SOUL	180	Schmücke dich
SAGES OF SHEBA, THE	65	Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen
*SLEEPERS, WAKE!	140	Wachet auf
†STRONGHOLD SURE, A	80	Ein' feste Burg
THERE IS NOUGHT OF SOUNDNESS IN ALL MY BODY	25	Es ist nichts Gesundes an meinem Leibe
THOU GUIDE OF ISRAEL	104	Du Hirte Israel, höre
WAILING, CRYING, MOURNING, SIGHING	12	Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen
WATCH YE, PRAY YE	70	Wachet, betet
WHEN WILL GOD RECALL MY SPIRIT?	8	Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?
WHOSO DOTH OFFER THANKS	17	Wer Dank opfert

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

THE SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS

IN TWELVE BOOKS (THREE BOOKS FOR EACH VOICE)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

BACH'S MOTETS

*BE NOT AFRAID	Fürchte dich nicht. 8*d.*
Ditto. (Edited by G. R. SINCLAIR)	1*s.*
*BLESSING, GLORY, AND WISDOM	Lob und Ehre und Weisheit und Dank. 8*d.*
*COME, JESU, COME	Komm, Jesu, komm. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*I WRESTLE AND PRAY (J. C. BACH)	Ich lasse dich nicht. 6*d.*
*JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE	Jesu, meine Freude. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*Ditto. (Welsh Words)	1*s.* 6*d.*
*NOW SHALL THE GRACE	Nun ist das Heil. 8*d.*
*SING YE TO THE LORD	Singet dem Herrn. 1*s.* 6*d.* [1*s.* 6*d.*
SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH US, THE	Der Geist hilft unserer Schwachheit auf

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa, complete. † May be had in Tonic Sol-fa (Choruses only).

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE

Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries

AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE

SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book. Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Music to SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS

Messrs. SAMUEL FRENCH, Ltd., have pleasure in announcing the publication of the above.

NEWLY ENGRAVED PLATES, CLEAR PRINT.

THE OLD TRADITIONAL MUSIC

CAREFULLY EDITED.

The following Vocal Scores with Pianoforte Accompaniment are now on sale :

	Price Net cash. s.	d.		Price Net cash. s.	d.
AS YOU LIKE IT	4	0	THE MERCHANT OF VENICE ...	3	0
ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA ...	2	6	THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR	2	6
CYMBELINE	2	6	A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM	5	0
HAMLET	2	0	MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING ...	3	0
HENRY IV., PART II.	3	0	OTHELLO	2	6
HENRY THE EIGHTH	3	0	ROMEO AND JULIET	3	0
KING LEAR	2	6	THE TEMPTEST	3	0
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST... ...	2	6	TWELFTH NIGHT	2	6
MACBETH	3	0	TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA	3	0
MEASURE FOR MEASURE ...	2	6	THE WINTER'S TALE	3	0

Postage Twopence extra on each score.

SAMUEL FRENCH, LTD. (DEPT. M.T.)

26, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2.

MUSIC FOR ARMISTICE DAY.

By JOHN FOULDS.

"A WORLD REQUIEM."

THE GREAT WORK THAT HAS MADE MUSICAL HISTORY AT THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Baritone Soli ; Small Chorus of Boys and Youths (or Sopranos and Tenors) ; Full Chorus (Large or Small) ; Full or Small Orchestra and Organ. Available for performance by small choirs of 20 voices and upwards with organ ; or by larger choirs with small string orchestra and organ (the latter playing from the Vocal Score) ; or by the average Choral Society of about 200 voices with orchestra of about 60 ; or by large choruses of 350 voices with orchestra of 80.

The next Annual Commemoration Performance will be held at the Queen's Hall on Armistice Day, November 11th, with the Cenotaph Choir and Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the Composer.

VOCAL SCORE (complete), Price, O.N., 5s. S.F. (Choruses only), 2s. 6d.
EXCERPTS from the above published separately—

	O.N.	S.F.
REQUIEM. For Chorus with Baritone Solo ...	6d.	4d.
PRONUNTIATIO. For Chorus with Baritone Solo	6d.	4d.
ELYSIUM. Duet for S. and T., with small Female Chorus	6d.	4d.
HYMN OF THE REDEEMED (IN PACE). For Male Chorus	6d.	4d.
SONG OF THE BLEST (IN PACE). For Soprano Solo (Violin obligato, ad lib.) ...	2s. 6d.	—
BENEDICTIO AND CONSUMMATUS. For Chorus with S.C.T.B. Soli, and Small Chorus of Boys and Youths	6d.	4d.

By DR. HUGH BLAIR.

"A SHORT FORM OF SERVICE FOR ARMISTICE DAY."

An impressive and comprehensive Memorial Service comprising suitable Hymns, Prayers, and Responses, an Anthem, Three-fold Amen, and suggestions for "The Last Post and Réveillé," Benediction, &c., &c.

Complete Service. Price, 1s.
Anthem, "Rest and Peace Eternal." Price, 3d.
"Last Post and Réveillé." Arranged for Organ Solo. Price, 1s. 6d.
Words only for Congregation, 1d. each, 3s. per 100.

ORGAN MUSIC.

DEAD MARCH IN "SAUL" ... Handel	63020	6d.	MARCIA FUNÉBRE ... ... Beethoven	63019	9d.
ELÉGIE HEROIQUE. Tone-Poem Harry Farjeon	57356	1s. 6d.	MARCHE FUNÈBRE ... ... Chopin	63018	6d.
FLOWERS OF THE FOREST J. Stuart Archer	63026	1s.	LAMENT ... ... Cyril Jenkins	57355	1s. 6d.
			PRAYER AND FUNERAL MARCH Alfred Hollins	57159	1s. 6d.

OF ALL MUSIC DEALERS, OR

W. PAXTON & Co., LTD., 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for Complete Catalogues, Vocal and Choral, (C. 201) ; Organ, (C. 501), post free.

NOVELLO'S
POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS
FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH
DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE
Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER
EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES
Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

J. D. DAVIS.
FOUR LITTLE PIECES
Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN
HAPPY THOUGHTS
Price Three Shillings.

ARNOLD KRUG
TEN LITTLE PIECES
Op. 109.
In two Books. Price Two Shillings and Threepence each.

ARNOLD KRUG
SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND
In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

TH. KULLAK
TWENTY-FOUR PIECES
Op. 62 AND 81.
In four Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

MAX MAYER
BAGATELLES
Price Four Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN
SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

ERNEST NEWTON
WOODLAND DANCES
Price Three Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON
ROMANY LIFE
Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE
THREE PIECES
Price Three Shillings.

SCHUMANN
PIECES FOR THE YOUNG
Part I., Price 1*s.* 6*d.*; Part II., Price 1*s.* 6*d.*

SCHUMANN
THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS
(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).
Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES
Price Three Shillings.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING
OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER
Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

E. A. SYDENHAM
SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES
Price Three Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY
CHRISTMAS ALBUM
In three Books. Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

FRANCESCO BERGER
FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE
PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors ... ... H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ... Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A ... ... J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont" ... ... Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp" ... ... F. A. G. Ouseley
March ... ... Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser" ... ... Wagner
Marching off to Bed ... ... Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute" Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore" ... ... Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX
SEA SONGS

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET.

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE
Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE

ORGAN.

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOCTURNE

FOR VIOLONCELLO (OR VIOLIN) AND PIANOFORTE.

BY

COLIN MACLEOD CAMPBELL.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
Piano Conductor	1	6
String Parts	2	8
Wind Parts, &c.	4	0
Harmonium	0	8

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SUITE

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA (OR QUARTET)
TRANSCRIBED FROM THE CLAVICHORD WORKS OF

DOMENICO SCARLATTI

BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

SCORE.

Price ... Three Shillings.

String Parts, 3*s.* 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK
OF THE
BREARE VOCAL SERIES
No. 5,
"VOCAL ANALYSES:
SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

BY W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.

Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.

Publishers:
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

YORK ANTHEM SERIES, ETC.

No.
487.	MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS,			B minor	...T. T. Noble	6d.
822	Do.	do.	do.	B flat	... T. T. Noble	6d.
836.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	... Alec Rowley	5d.
865.	Do.	do.	do.	D minor	... J. S. Horne	5d.
866.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	Henry Gibson	5d.
880.	Do.	do.	do.	D ...	Edwin J. Crow	6d.

Write complete List.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

SELECTED STUDIES
FOR PIANOFORTE.

IN FOUR GRADED BOOKS. PRICE 2*s.* EACH.

* PRIMARY GRADE.
Selected, edited, and fingered by
DÉSIRÉE MACEWAN, A.R.A.M.

ELEMENTARY GRADE.
Selected, edited, and fingered by NANCY GILFORD, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

HIGHER ELEMENTARY GRADE.
Selected, edited, and fingered by
CUTHBERT WHITEMORE, F.R.A.M.

HIGHER GRADE.
Selected, edited, and fingered by
FELIX SWINSTEAD, F.R.A.M.

*MR. TOBIAS MATTHAY writes us as follows:
"Désirée MacEwan has sent me her latest, the set of Primary Studies. I think they are wholly admirable, a most charming selection, and those of her own composition most cleverly done. There is much room for such as the earlier ones, as there is hardly any music written so far, really suitable for the first stages. Her little advisory paragraphs are splendidly done and ought to prove very helpful."

GRANVILLE BANTOCK

2*s.* EACH. THREE SHIELING SONGS ALBUM, 3*s.* 6*d.*
"BANTOCK has produced nothing more charming than these simple and melodious songs."

"LOCK THE DOOR, LARISTON"
6*d.* STAFF. A virile setting of a famous Border Song for Male Voices. SOL-FA, 4*d.*

PATERSON'S PUBLICATIONS LTD.,
152, BUCHANAN STREET, GLASGOW. 95, WIMPOLE STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE
INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS.

No.
1.	LET THE WORDS OF MY MOUTH	Hugh Blair
2.	GRANT, O LORD	Josiah Booth
3.	LORD, WE PRAY THEE	H. A. Chambers
4.	HIDE NOT THOU THY FACE	Richard Farrant
5.	I WILL GO UNTO THE ALTAR	H. J. Gauntlett
6.	O LORD, INCREASE MY FAITH	Orlando Gibbons
7.	ONE THING HAVE I DESIRED OF THE LORD	G. A. Macfarren
8.	LET MY PRAYER COME UP	Henry Purcell
9.	GOD BE IN MY HEAD	R. Walker Robson
10.	LEAD ME, LORD	S. S. Wesley
11.	HIDE ME UNDER THE SHADOW	John E. West
12.	BLESSED LORD	C. Lee Williams

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY

F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

STRING PARTS, Price 8*s*.

An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published. Price 3*s*. 6*d*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LOVE INCARNATE

A SETTING OF LINES

BY ROBERT BROWNING.

With a Verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria,"

BY

ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.

Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.

Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 37.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NYMPHS

AND SHEPHERDS

BY HENRY PURCELL

Edited for the Use of Schools

BY CYRIL BRADLEY ROOTHAM

WORDS AND MUSIC

Fcap 4to. 3*d*.

(Reprinted from the same author's "Voice-Training for Choirs and Schools," 4*s*. 6*d*.)

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

FETTER LANE, LONDON, E.C.4.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Lording's Daughter

BALLAD.

WORDS

ELIZABETHAN.

MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY

AUSTIN DOBSON.

MUSIC BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY

FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOK, No. 271.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH

DESCANTS

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

AND OTHERS.

CONTENTS.

THE BAY OF BISCAY	EARLY ONE MORNING
A-HUNTING WE WILL GO	O, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE
JOHN PEEL	THE BRITISH GRENADIERS
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT	THE ASH GROVE
SCOTS WHA HAE	GOOD KING WENCESLAS
THE OAK AND THE ASH	THE FIRST NOWELL

PRICE, EIGHTPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS OF INTEREST

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

FANTASTIC POEM for Violoncello and Pianoforte ... ... 3s. od. net.
SALVE REGINA (Holy Queen of Heaven). For Violin (or Viola or Violoncello), with Pianoforte (or Organ) accompaniment ... 2s. od. net.

MANUEL DE FALLA.

SUITE ESPAGNOLE. For Violin and Pianoforte. Adapted from the Seven Popular Spanish Songs by P. KOCHANSKI ... ... 6s. od. net.

ARTHUR BLISS.

TWO INTERLUDES for the Pianoforte ... ... 3s. od. net.

IGOR STRAWINSKY.

Three Excerpts from "Pulcinella":
GAVOTTA CON VARIAZIONE. For Pianoforte Solo ... ... 2s. od. net.
SCHERZINO. For Pianoforte Solo ... ... 2s. od. net.
CON QUESTE PAROLINE. For Bass Voice ... ... 2s. od. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.,
11, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.

London: Printed by NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1. Saturday, October 31, 1925.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

No.
614	Absence	H. Goetz	3d.
217	* Do. (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	3d.
181	* Do.	,,	2d.
67	Adieu love, adieu	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
312	Adieu, my native shore	Pearsall	3d.
943	Adieu, sweet Amaryllis	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1227	Do. ...	C. Macpherson	4d.
390	Adieu to the woods	Egerton	4d.
658	Advice to lovers ...	P. W. Pilcher	3d.
1398	*After many a dusty mile	E. Elgar	4d.
913	After the battle	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	3d.
674	Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ...		4d.
1375	Ah! what is love ...	W. McNaught	4d.
515	Ah! woe is me (6 V.)	H. Lahee	6d.
648	Airley Beacon	C. V. Stanford	3d.
568	Airs of Summer ...	J. L. Roeckel	3d.
17	All among the barley	E. Stirling	3d.
971	*All for my true love	H. D. Wetton	4d.
81	All is not gold that shineth bright in snow (5 V.)	W. J. Westbrook	4d.
394	*All is still ...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
802	All Souls' Day	J. Rheinberger	4d.
59	All ye woods and trees and bow'rs	J. L. Hatton	2d.
83	* Do. (5 V.)	H. Lahee	2d.
940	Do. ...	H. W. Wareing	4d.
1037	*Allan Water	arr. H. E. Button	3d.
478	*Allen-a-Dale ...	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
1020	* Do.	J. B. McEwen	4d.
334	Already snow has fallen	R. Franz	2d.
113	Alton Locke's Song	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1011	*Amaryllis I did woo	J. E. West	3d.
1322	*American National Songs (Three)		2d.
972	Amintor's well-a-day	J. E. West	4d.
1364	An address to the nightingale	W. W. Pearson	4d.
175	An Autumn song ...	C. Pinsuti	4d.
20	An emigrant's song	W. Macfarren	3d.
1074	*An Empire song	A. C. Mackenzie	4d.
1053	An end will I bring	Schubert	4d.
1387	*An old Song resung	H. B. Gardiner	6d.
485	And then no more ...	R. Raff	3d.
1103	*Angelic hunter, The	arr. J. Brahms	4d.
1091	Angel's call, The	I. I. Viotta	2d.
960	*Angel's greeting, The	J. Brahms	4d.
1167	*Angelus (Tuscany)	E. Elgar	6d.
1340	*Anglers, The	W. W. Pearson	3d.
30	Angler's Trysting-tree, The	C. W. Corfe	4d.
1039	*Annie Laurie	arr. H. E. Button	3d.
108	Annie Lee	J. Barnby	2d.
182	April showers ...	J. L. Hatton	2d.
218	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
1318	*Arethusa, The ...	W. Shield	4d.
137	Arise, sweet love ...	H. Leslie	2d.
97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	F. Berger	4d.
520	Around the maypole tripping	J. L. Hatton	2d.
859	*Arranmore Boat Song	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	6d.
457	*Arrow and the song, The	W. Hay	4d.
973	As Amoret with Phillis sat	John E. West	3d.
1054	As dewdrops at morn	Schubert	4d.
525	As I saw fair Clora	F. Corder	4d.
146	As it fell upon a day ...	S. Reay	4d.
619	As the ripples flow	E. A. Sydenham	3d.
1052	As the watcher longs	Schubert	4d.
900	As through the land	J. Pullein	3d.
796	*As torrents in summer	E. Elgar	3d.
1180	As when the sun renews his strength (Madrigal)	C. E. Miller	4d.
1257	*Ash Grove, The	arr. Dunhill	4d.
1105	At Andernach in Rhineland	Abt	4d.
393	At first the mountain rill	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
981	At her fair hands ...	J. Elliott	3d.
788	Do. ...	C. H. H. Parry	4d.
335	At parting	R. Franz	2d.
358	*At the coming of the Spring	J. L. Hatton	4d.
195	Auburn	,,	4d.
582	*Auld Lang Syne	arr. E. Land	2d.
71	Autolycus' Song	C. A. Macirone	2d.
1006	* Do. ...	C. Lee Williams	4d.
158	Autumn	W. Macfarren	4d.
274	Do. (T.T.B.B.)	,,	4d.
353	Do. ...	A. C. Mackenzie	2d.
1162	Autumn fields, The	N. W. Gade	4d.
464	Autumn is come again (5 V.)	F. Corder	4d.
403	Autumn song ...	S. Reay	4d.
683	Do. ...	J. Rheinberger	3d.
484	Ave Maria	J. Raff	4d.
241	* Do.	H. Smart	2d.
968	*Awake, awake ...	G. Bantock	4d.
76	*Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold	H. Leslie	2d.
25	Awake the starry midnight hour	Mendelssohn	3d.
923	*Away to the woodlands	H. W. Warner	4d.
978	*Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
225	Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	4d.
193	Bait, The (Come live with me)	J. L. Hatton	2d.
996	*Ballad, A (8 V.) ...	T. Wendt	4d.
1016	Ballade of Midsummer	,,	4d.
1017	Ballade of Spring	,,	6d.
1044	*Battle of the Baltic, The	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
861	*Battle song, A	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	4d.
578	Do. ...	E. A. Sydenham	4d.
1334	*Beacon, The ...	A. Carse	4d.
689	Beauty, arise ...	K. J. Pye	4d.
841	Before me careless lying (5 V.)	C. H. Lloyd	6d.
1238	*Beleaguered, The	A. S. Sullivan	3d.
56	*Belfry Tower, The	J. L. Hatton	2d.
1311	*Belgian National song	F. Campenhout	2d.
572	Bells across the snow	Ch. Gounod	4d
432	*Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The	W. Knyvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart	6d
1271	*Ben Bowlegs (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	4d.
984	Bendemeer's Stream	J. Pointer	4d.
1216	Beside the river ...	A. Jensen	3d.
793	Better music ne'er was known	H. H. Parry	4d.
184	*Beware	J. L. Hatton	2d.
220	Do. (A.T.T.B.)	,,	2d.
111	*Bird of the Wilderness	J. Barnby	4d.
196	Do.	J. L. Hatton	4d.
1157	Birds are singing, The	Hans Sitt	3d.
798	Birthday serenade, A	G. J. Elvey	4d.
1308	Birthright, The ...	E. Elgar	4d.
300	*Bishop of Mentz, The	Pearsall	2d.
1107	*Black Monk, The (Welsh folk-song)	arr. R. Boughton	4d.
55	*Blow, blow thou winter wind	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1254	Blow, breeze, from the North	G. Elvey	4d.
1369	Blow, western wind	Pearson	4d.
661	*Blue-bottle's fate, The (humorous)	A. H. Ashworth	4d.
544	Blue-eyed lassie, The	F. Brandeis	3d.
933	*Blwyddyn Bywyd	D. Protheroe	4d.
187	Blythe is the Bird	J. L. Hatton	3d.
399	*Boat Song ...	H. Leslie	2d.
357	* Do.	E. Prout	6d.
1088	Do.	F. Schubert	3d.
385	Boat, The	R. Schumann	4d.
3	Boating Song ...	E. G. Monk	3d.
521	*Boatman's Good-night, The	F. Schira	2d.
545	*Bonnie Bell	A. C. Mackenzie	3d.
1310	*Boy, The (humorous)	Brewer	4d.
63	*Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
99	Breathe soft, ye winds	J. B. Calkin	2d.
1307	* Do.	W. Paxton	2d.
878	Bridal Song ...	H. Leslie	6d.
639	Bright be thy dreams	Oliver King	3d.
402	*Bright-hair'd morn, The	S. Reay	4d.
584	Bright Moon ...	John E. West	3d.
1222	*Bring me a golden pen	F. H. Cowen	4d.
601	Broken Flower, The	Oliver King	3d.
447	Brook, The	C. G. Reissiger	4d.
1015	*Brownies, The	Moellendorff	4d.
1416	Bushes and Briars ...	(arr.)	3d.
223	Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	3d.
743	*Butterfly, The	J. Blumenthal	6d.
1095	*By a gentle river laid	John E. West	4d.
1002	*By the waters of Babylon	P. Cornelius	3d.
1141	By woodland and wayside	E. Franz	3d.
1272	Call John (humorous)	arr. W. W. Pearson	4d.
1122	Calm is the lake	F. Abt	4d
359	Calm night	J. L. Hatton	4d
380	Calm of the sea, The	H. Hiles	6d.
911	*Capture of Cremona, The	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	4d.
314	Caput apri defero...	...Pearsall	4d.
178	*Caravan, The ...	C. Pinsuti	2d.
1251	*Cargoes ...	H. B. Gardiner	4d.
1273	Carrion Crow, The (humorous)	W. W. Pearson	4d.
607	Cavalier, The ...	C. Goodall	4d.
529	Cavalry song	C. A. Macirone	4d.
635	Cephalus and Procris	A. W. Batson	4d
482	Chafer's Wedding, A (humorous)	Lewandowski	8d
1087	Chapel, The ...	C. Kreutzer	4d
427	*Charge of the Light Brigade, The	E. Hecht	6d.
85	*Charm me asleep (6 V.)	H. Leslie	4d.
906	Do. ...	J. B. McEwen	4d
847	*Chase, The ...	E. German	4d
757	Cherry ripe ...	A. H. Brewer	3d.
583	Do.	arr. E. Land	2d.
1255	* Do.	W. G. Ross	3d
731	Do. (6 V.)	S. P. Waddington	4d
1212	Cheshire cheese, The	arr. J. C. Bridge	4d.
734	Chi la Gagliarda ...	B. Donato	4d.
315	Chieftain to the Highland bound, A	Pearsall	3d
466	* Do.	O. Prescott	6d.
94	Childhood's melody	F. Berger	2d.
101	Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.)	J. B. Calkin	6d.
1145	Chloe, that dear bewitching prude	H. Willan	3d
1147	*Chorus of Empire	C. A. E. Harriss	4d.
66	*Christmas...	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
1109	*Christmas greeting, A	E. Elgar	8d.
314	Christmas song, A ...	Pearsall	4d.
967	Do.	M. Prætorius	3d.
845	Close to my heart...	W. Davies	4d.
677	*Clouds, The	J. Rheinberger	4d
823	*Come again, sweet days	J. Dowland	3d.
726	*Come away ...	E. German	4d.
873	* Do.	H. Parker	6d.
1169	Come away, come away, death	arr. Arne	3d.
36	Do. (5 V.)	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
51	* Do. (5 V.)	,,	4d
58	Come celebrate the May	Hatton	2d
668	Come, fairies, trip it ...	F. Iliffe	4d
102	Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)	J. B. Calkin	4d.
118	*Come follow me	A. Zimmermann	2d
1143	Come forth, the summer's murmur hear ...	E. Franz	3d
14	Come, heavy sleep	J. Dowland	3d
745	Come if you dare... ...	Purcell	6d
1210	Come, lasses and lads	arr. J. C. Bridge	4d.
899	Come let me take thee	J. Pullein	3d.
317	Come let us be merry	Pearsall	2d.
507	*Come live with me	W. S. Bennett	2d.
360	Do. ...	J. L. Hatton	4d.
193	Do. (The Bait) ...	,,	2d.
497	Come, May, with all thy flowers	J. L. Gregory	3d
1052	Come, O come, dearest, come	Schubert	4d.
671	Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.)		3d.
1214	Come out across the heather	A. Jensen	4d.
791	*Come, pretty wag, and sing	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
38	Come sleep... ...	J. Benedict	4d.
1060	Do. ...	J. W. G. Hathaway	3d.
1110	* Do. ...	R. H. Walthew	2d.
945	Do. ...	A. G. Wathall	4d.
1087	*Come to me, gentle sleep	Cowen	4d.
701	Do. ...	H. W. Schartau	4d.
713	Come, tuneful friends (humorous)	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1032	Come with me, fairest	J. Brahms	4d.
615	Comfort	H. Goetz	3d.
999	*Comfort in tears...	P. Cornelius	6d
1422	Coming through the Craigs o' Kyle	A. Rowley	4d
1182	*Comrades' song of hope, The	arr. A. Adam	3d.
383	Confidence (8 V.) ...	R. Schumann	4d

MADE IN ENGLAND.

No. 1420 NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK (SECOND SERIES) Price (4*d.*)

THE PILGRIM FATHERS

FOUR-PART SONG

WORDS BY FELICIA HEMANS

MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

With dramatic fire and energy

SOPRANO f The break-ing waves dash'd high on a stern and rock-bound coast; And the ALTO f The break-ing waves dash'd high on a stern and rock-bound coast; And the TENOR f The break-ing waves dash'd high on a stern and rock-bound coast; And the BASS f The break-ing waves dash'd high on a stern and rock-bound coast; And the

With dramatic fire and energy. ♩ = 132

(For practice only) f mf woods, a-gainst a storm-y sky, their gi-ant branch-es toss'd; And the mf woods, a-gainst a storm-y, storm-y sky, their gi-ant branch-es toss'd; And the mf woods, a-gainst a storm-y, storm-y sky, their gi-ant branch-es toss'd; And the mf woods, a-gainst a storm-y, storm-y sky, their gi-ant branch-es toss'd; And the

mf

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited

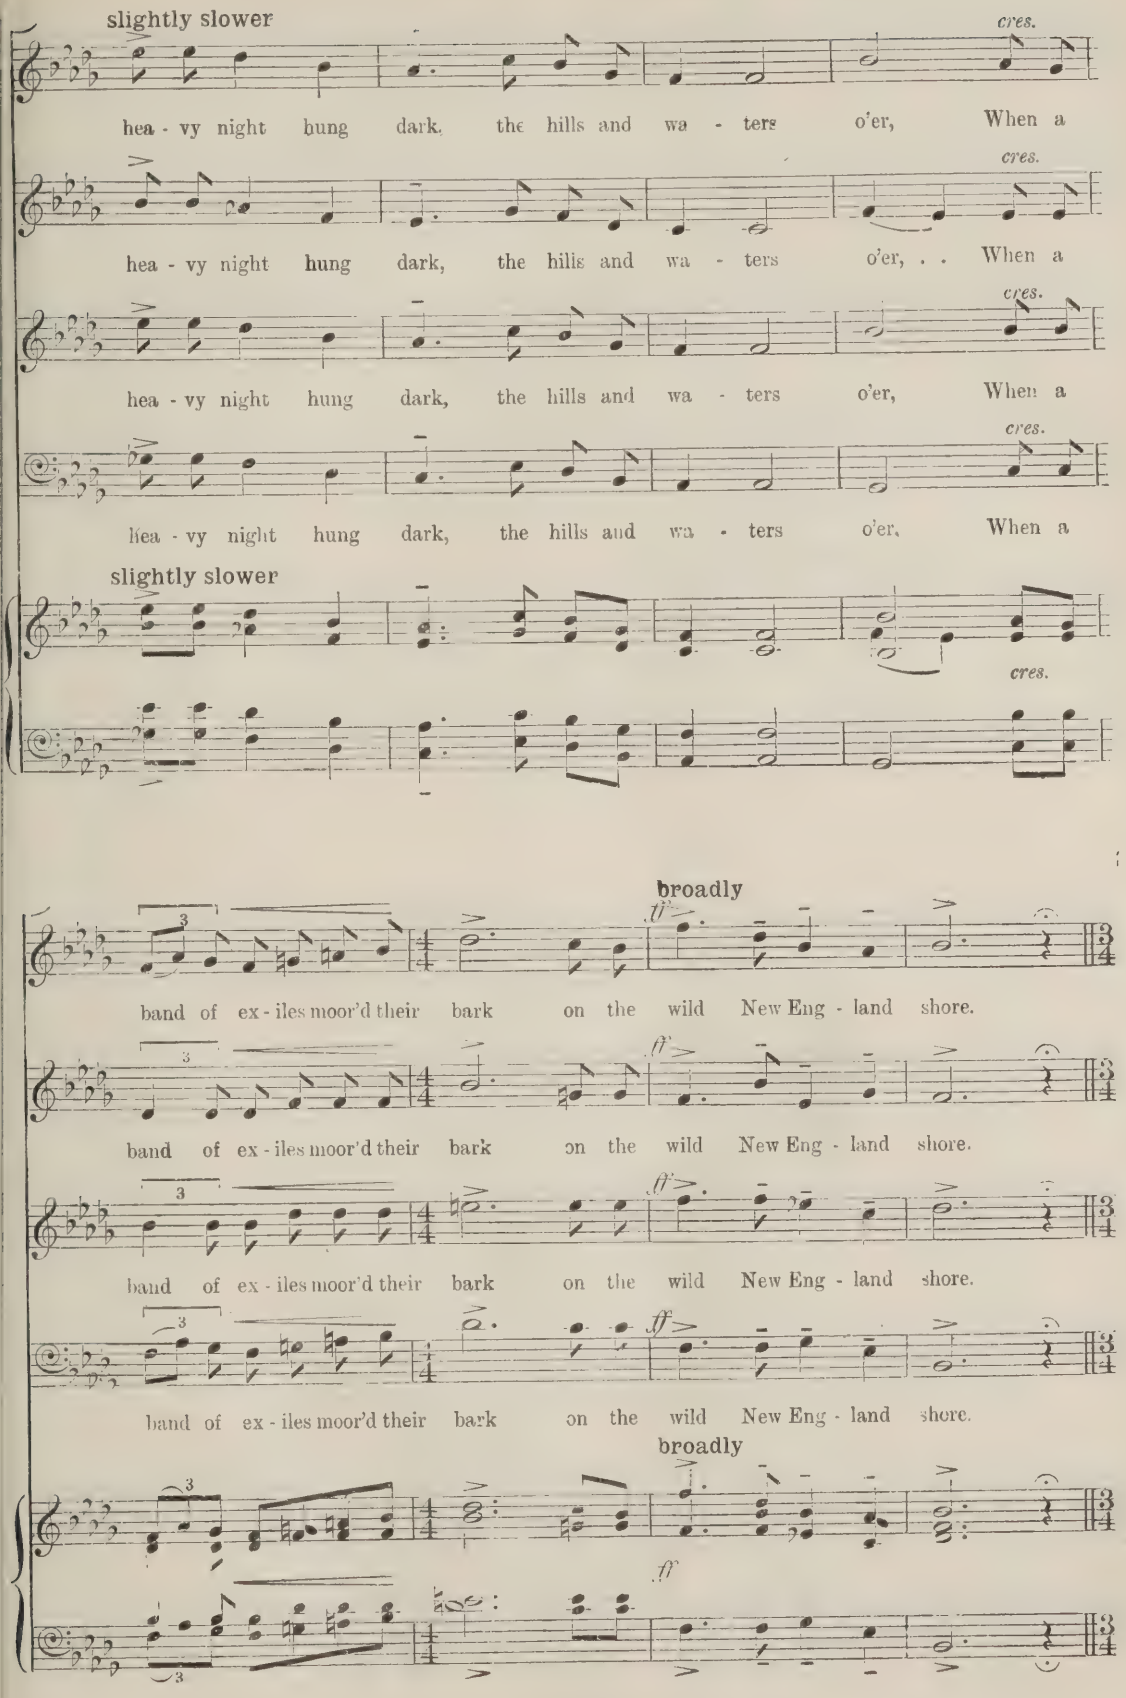
THE PILGRIM FATHERS



slightly slower
cres.
hea - vy night hung dark, the hills and wa - ters o'er, When a hea - vy night hung dark, the hills and wa - ters o'er, When a hea - vy night hung dark, the hills and wa - ters o'er, When a hea - vy night hung dark, the hills and wa - ters o'er, When a slightly slower
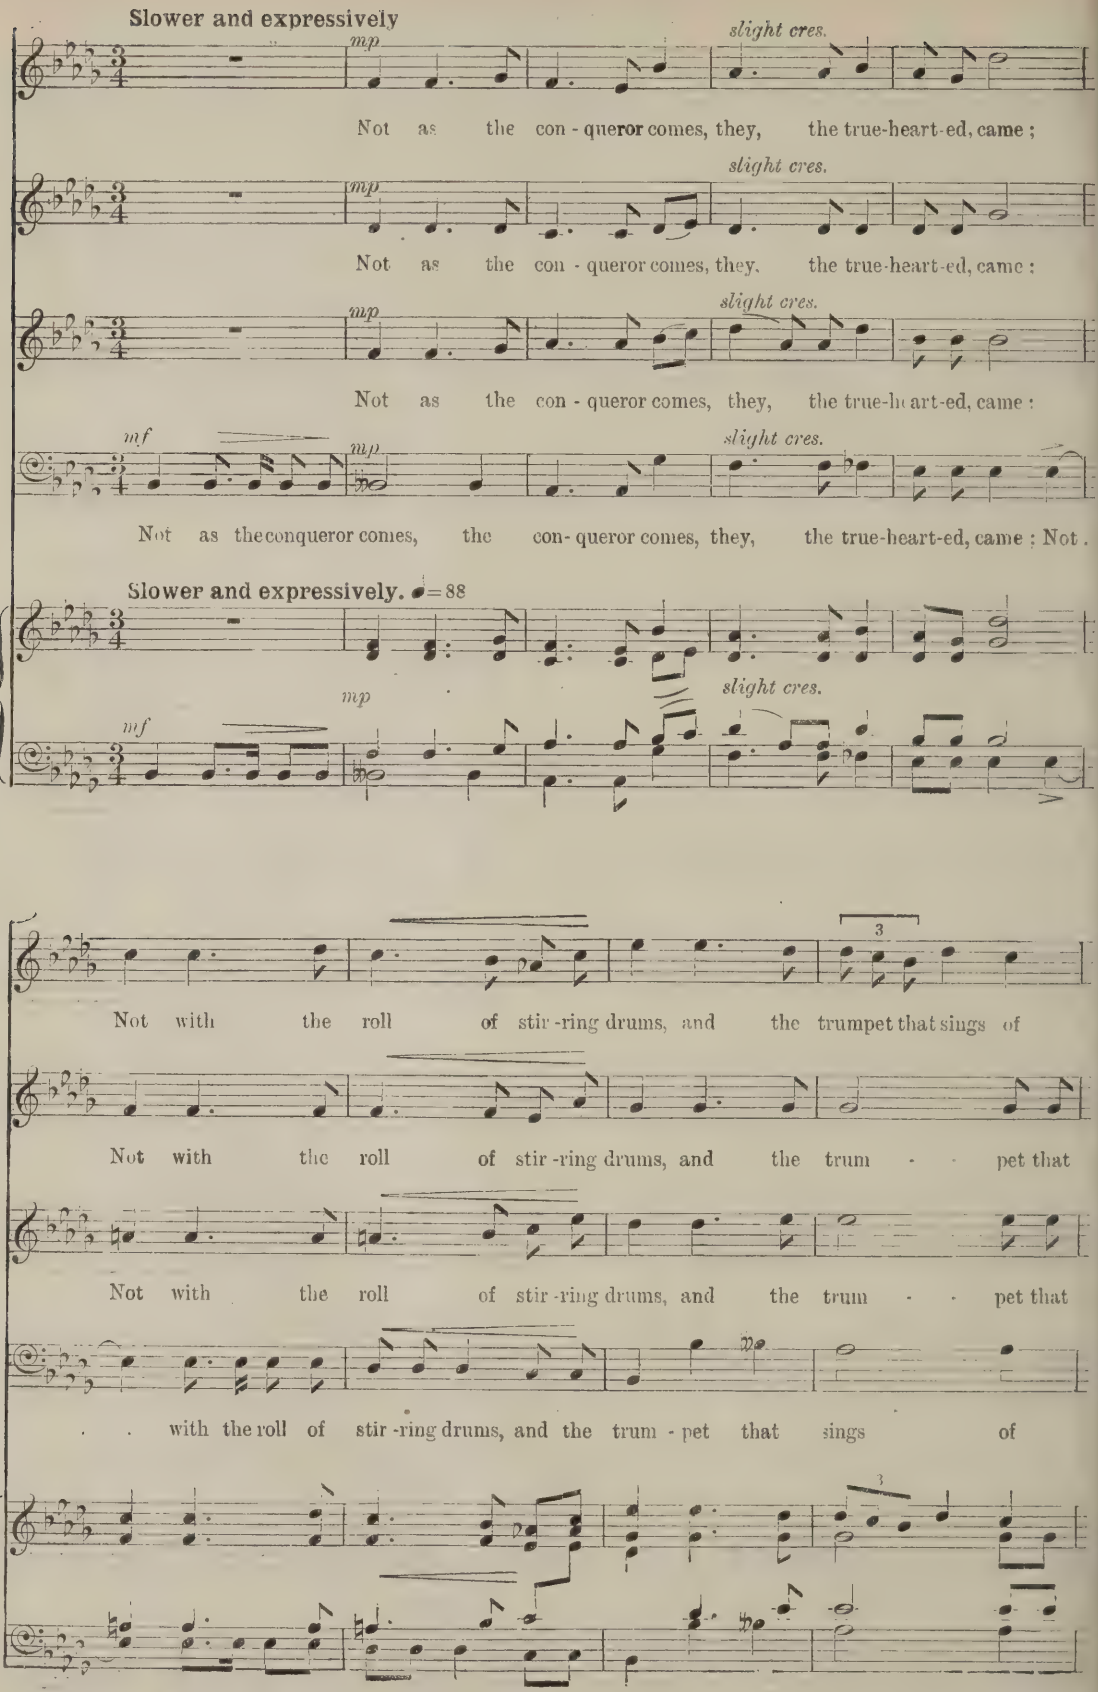
cres.
broadly
ff
band of ex - iles moor'd their bark on the wild New Eng - land shore.
band of ex - iles moor'd their bark on the wild New Eng - land shore.
band of ex - iles moor'd their bark on the wild New Eng - land shore.
band of ex - iles moor'd their bark on the wild New Eng - land shore.
broadly
ff



Slower and expressively
mp
slight cres.
Not as the con - queror comes, they, the true-heart-ed, came ;
Not as the con - queror comes, they, the true-heart-ed, came :
Not as the con - queror comes, they, the true-heart-ed, came :
mf
mp
Not as the conqueror comes, the con - queror comes, they, the true-heart-ed, came ; Not .
Slower and expressively. ♩= 88
Not with the roll of stir - ring drums, and the trumpet that sings of
Not with the roll of stir - ring drums, and the trum - - pet that
Not with the roll of stir - ring drums, and the trum - - pet that
. . with the roll of stir - ring drums, and the trum - pet that sings of

THE PILGRIM FATHERS

p fame; . . . Not as the fly - ing come, in si - lence and in sings of fame; Not as the fly - ing come, in si - lence and in sings of fame; Not as the fly - ing come, in si - lence and in fame; Not as the fly - - ing come, in si - lence and in quickening
cres.
f fear; . . They shook the depths of the des - ert's gloom . . with their fear; . . . They shook the depths of the des - ert's gloom . . with their fear; . . They shook the depths of the des - ert's gloom . . with their fear; . . They shook the depths of the des - ert's gloom . . with their quickening

With joyful ecstasy
ff hymns of lof - ty cheer, They shook the des - ert's gloom . . with hymns of lof - ty cheer, They shook the des - ert's gloom with hymns of lof - ty cheer, of lof - ty cheer. the gloom with hymns, their hymns of lof - ty cheer, They shook the gloom with With joyful ecstasy. ♩=112
drawn out
hymns . . of lof - - ty cheer. . . . .
hymns . . of lof - - ty, lof - - ty cheer.
hymns . . of lof - - ty, lof - - ty cheer.
hymns . . of lof - - ty cheer. . . .
drawn out

Original time slackening in time
A - midst the storm they sang: . . this the stars heard, and the sea; And the
A - midst the storm they sang: . . this the stars heard, and the sea; And the
A - midst the storm they sang: . this the stars heard, and the sea; And the
A - midst the storm they sang: . . this the stars heard, and the sea; And the Original time slackening in time sound-ing aisles of the dim woods rang to the an - them of the free. The sound-ing aisles of the dim woods rang . . to the an - them of the free. The sound-ing aisles of the dim woods rang . . to the an - them of the free. The sound - ing aisles of the dim woods rang . . to the an - them of the free. The slightly slower o - cean - ea - gle soared . . . from his nest by the white waves' foam, And the

cres.
o - cean - ea - gle soared . . . from his nest by the white waves' foam, . . And the o - cean - ea - gle soared . . . from his nest by the white waves' foam, And the o - cean - ea - gle soared . . . from his nest by the foam, And the slightly slower
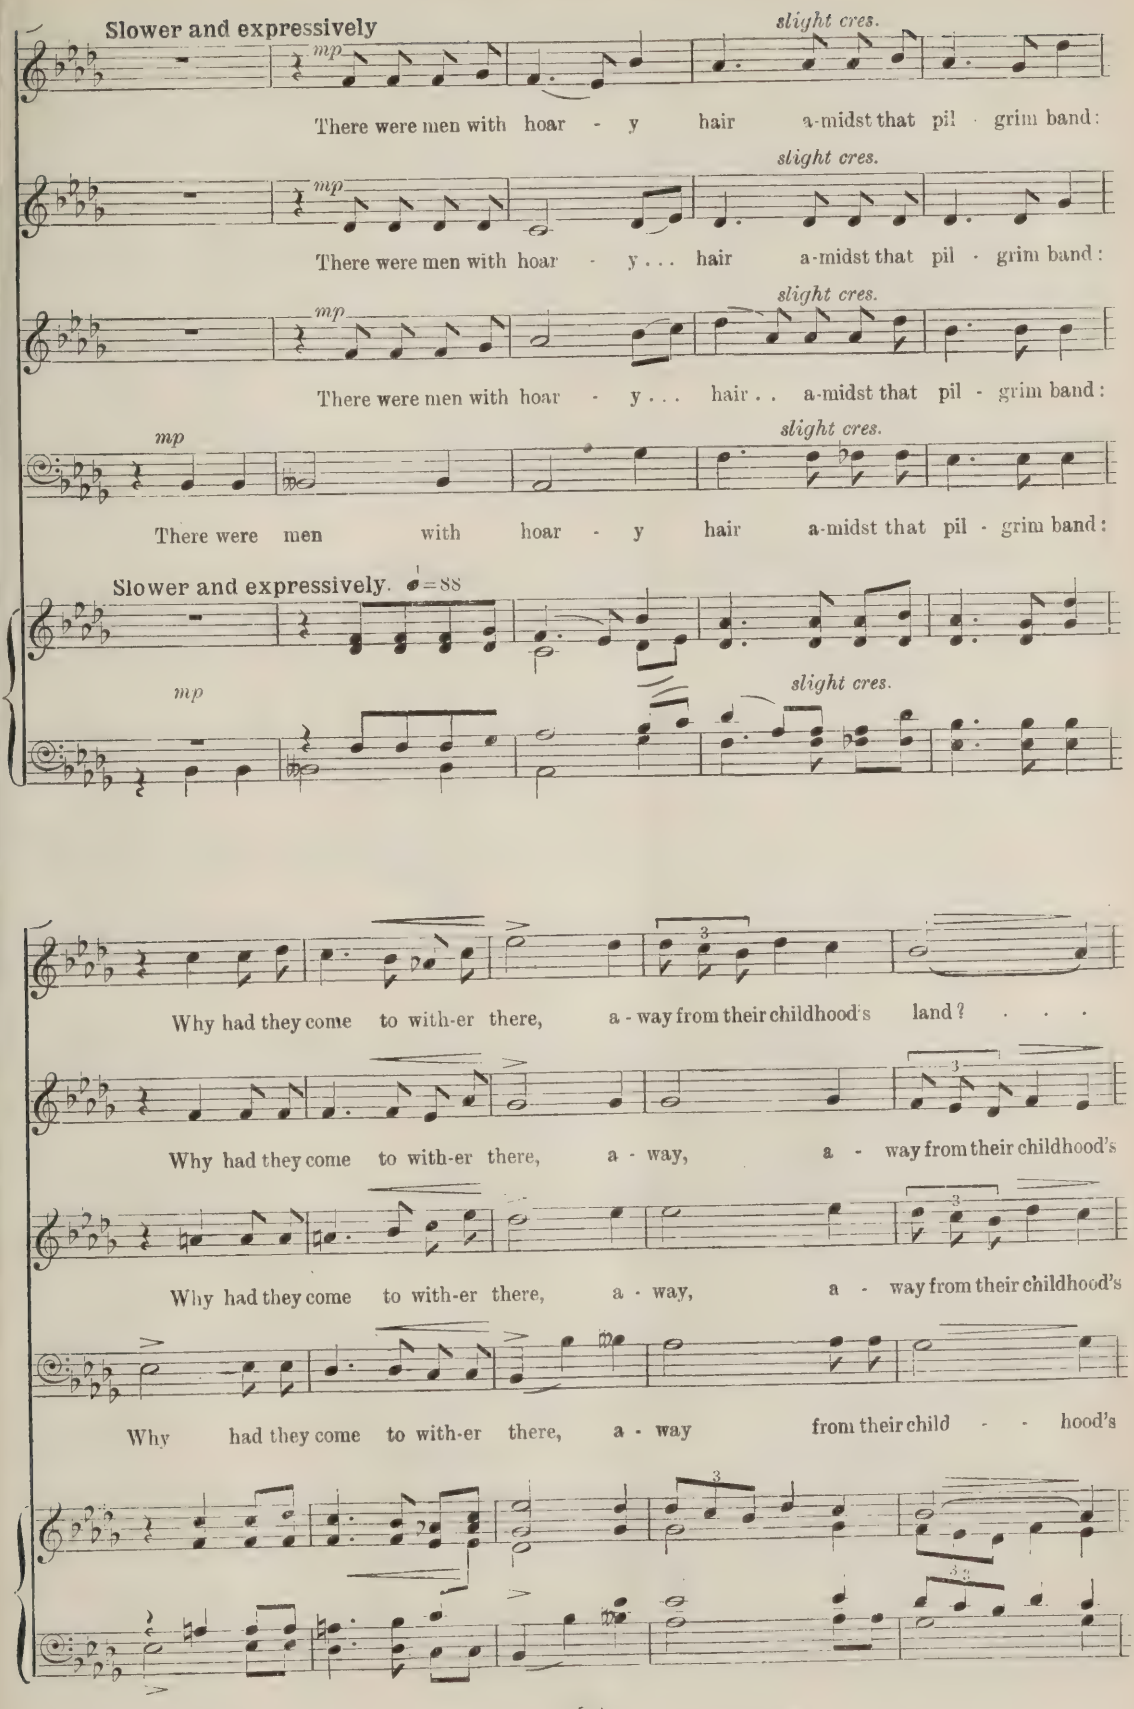
cres.
broadly
rock-ing pines of the for - est roar'd :— such was their wel - come home.
rock - ing pines of the for - est roar'd :— such was their wel - come home.
rock - ing pines of the for - est roar'd :— such was their wel - come home.
rock - ing pines of the for - est roar'd :— such was their wel - come home.
broadly



Slower and expressively
mp
slight cres.
There were men with hoar - y hair a-midst that pil - grim band:
There were men with hoar - y . . . hair a-midst that pil - grim band:
There were men with hoar - y . . . hair . . a-midst that pil - grim band:
There were men with hoar - y hair a-midst that pil - grim band:
Slower and expressively. ♩=88
Why had they come to with-er there, a - way from their childhood's land? . . .
Why had they come to with-er there, a - way, a - way from their childhood's
Why had they come to with-er there, a - way, a - way from their childhood's
Why had they come to with-er there, a - way from their child - - hood's with increasing animation

cres.
f
There was wo-man's fear - less eye, lit by her deep love's truth : . . There was land? Wo - - man's fear - less eye, lit by her deep love's truth ; There was land? There was wo-man's fear - less eye, lit by her deep love's truth ; . . There was land? Wo - - man's fear - less eye, lit by her deep love's truth ; . . There was with increasing animation
cres.
f ardently
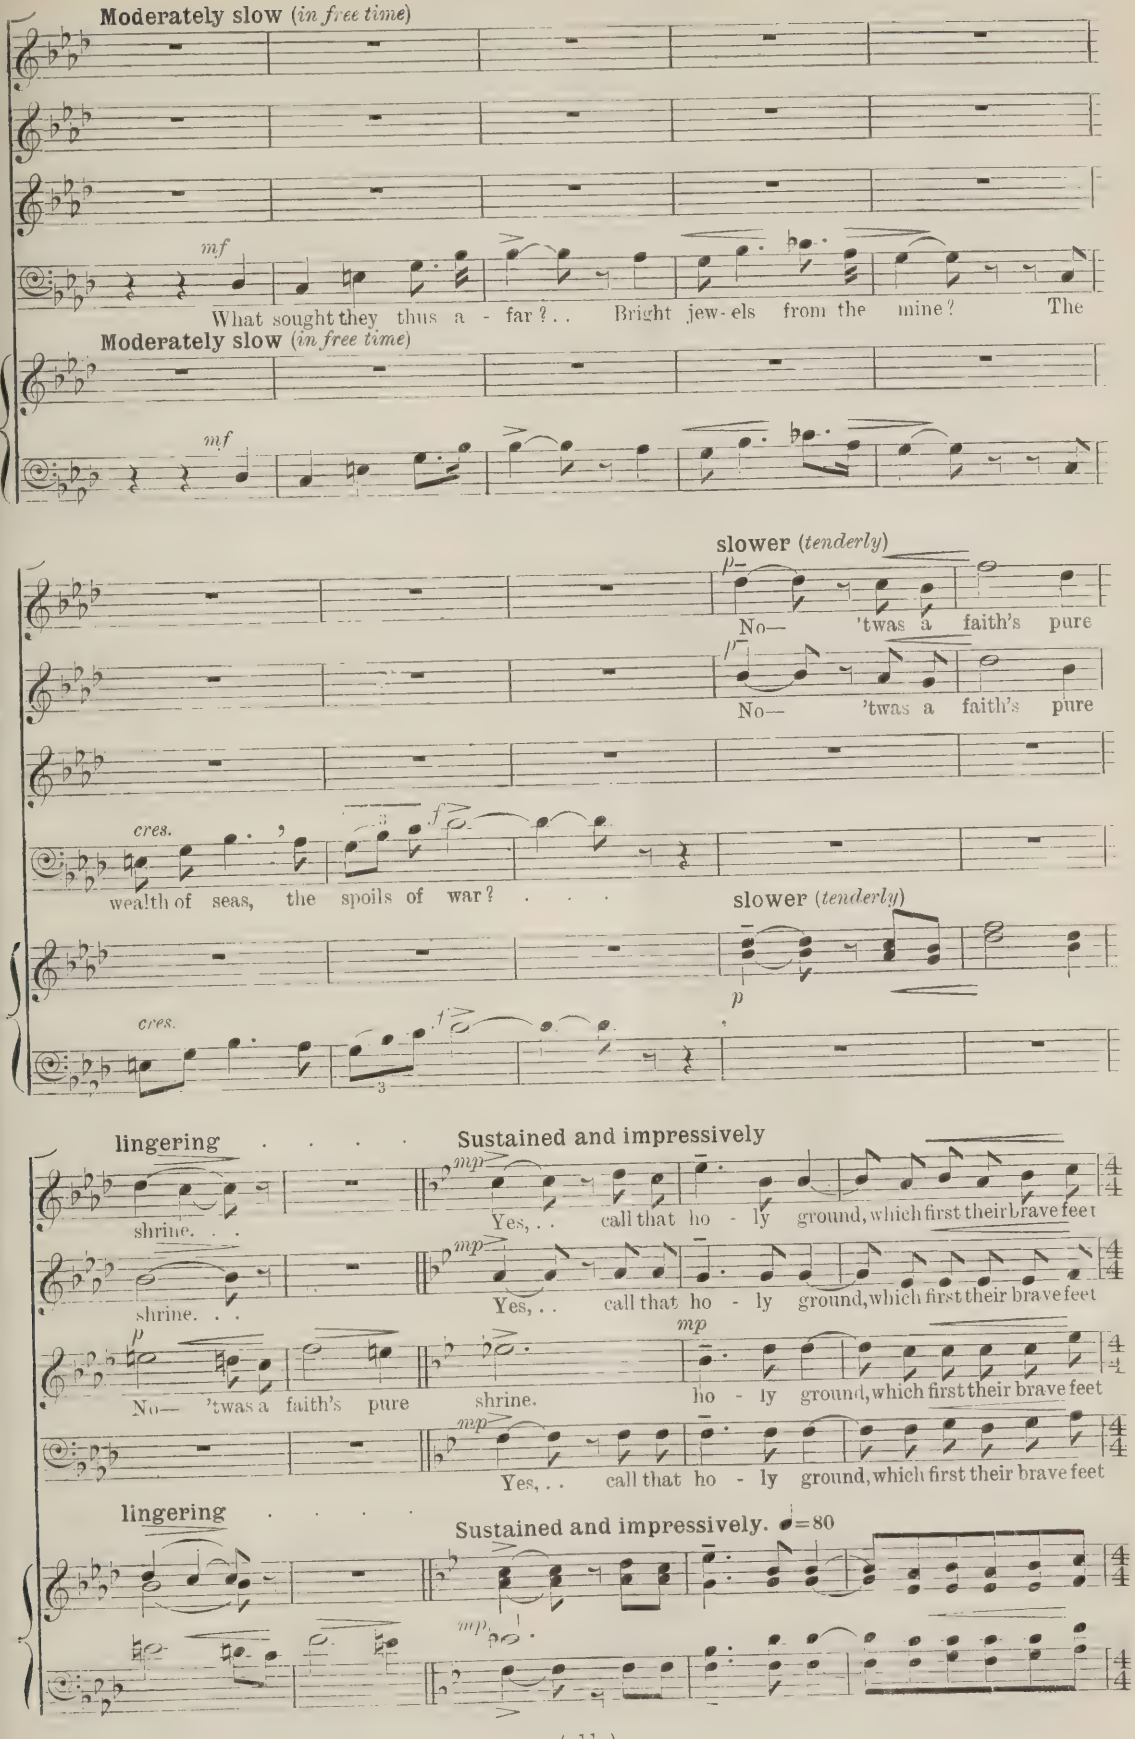
ff
man-hood's brow se - rene - ly high, . . and the fie - ry heart of youth. . .
man- hood's brow se-rene - ly high, . . and the fie - ry heart of youth. . .
man-hood's brow se-rene - ly high, . . and the fie - ry heart of youth. . .
man-hood's brow se-rene - ly high, . . and the fie - ry heart of youth. . .
ardently
ff



Moderately slow (in free time)
mf
What sought they thus a - far? . . Bright jew-els from the mine? The Moderately slow (in free time)
mf slower (tenderly)
p
No— 'twas a faith's pure
No— 'twas a faith's pure
cres.
f wealth of seas, the spoils of war? . . .
slower (tenderly)
p
cres.
f lingering . . . . .
Sustained and impressively
mp
Yes, . . call that ho - ly ground, which first their brave feet
shrine. . .
Yes, . . call that ho - ly ground, which first their brave feet shrine. . .
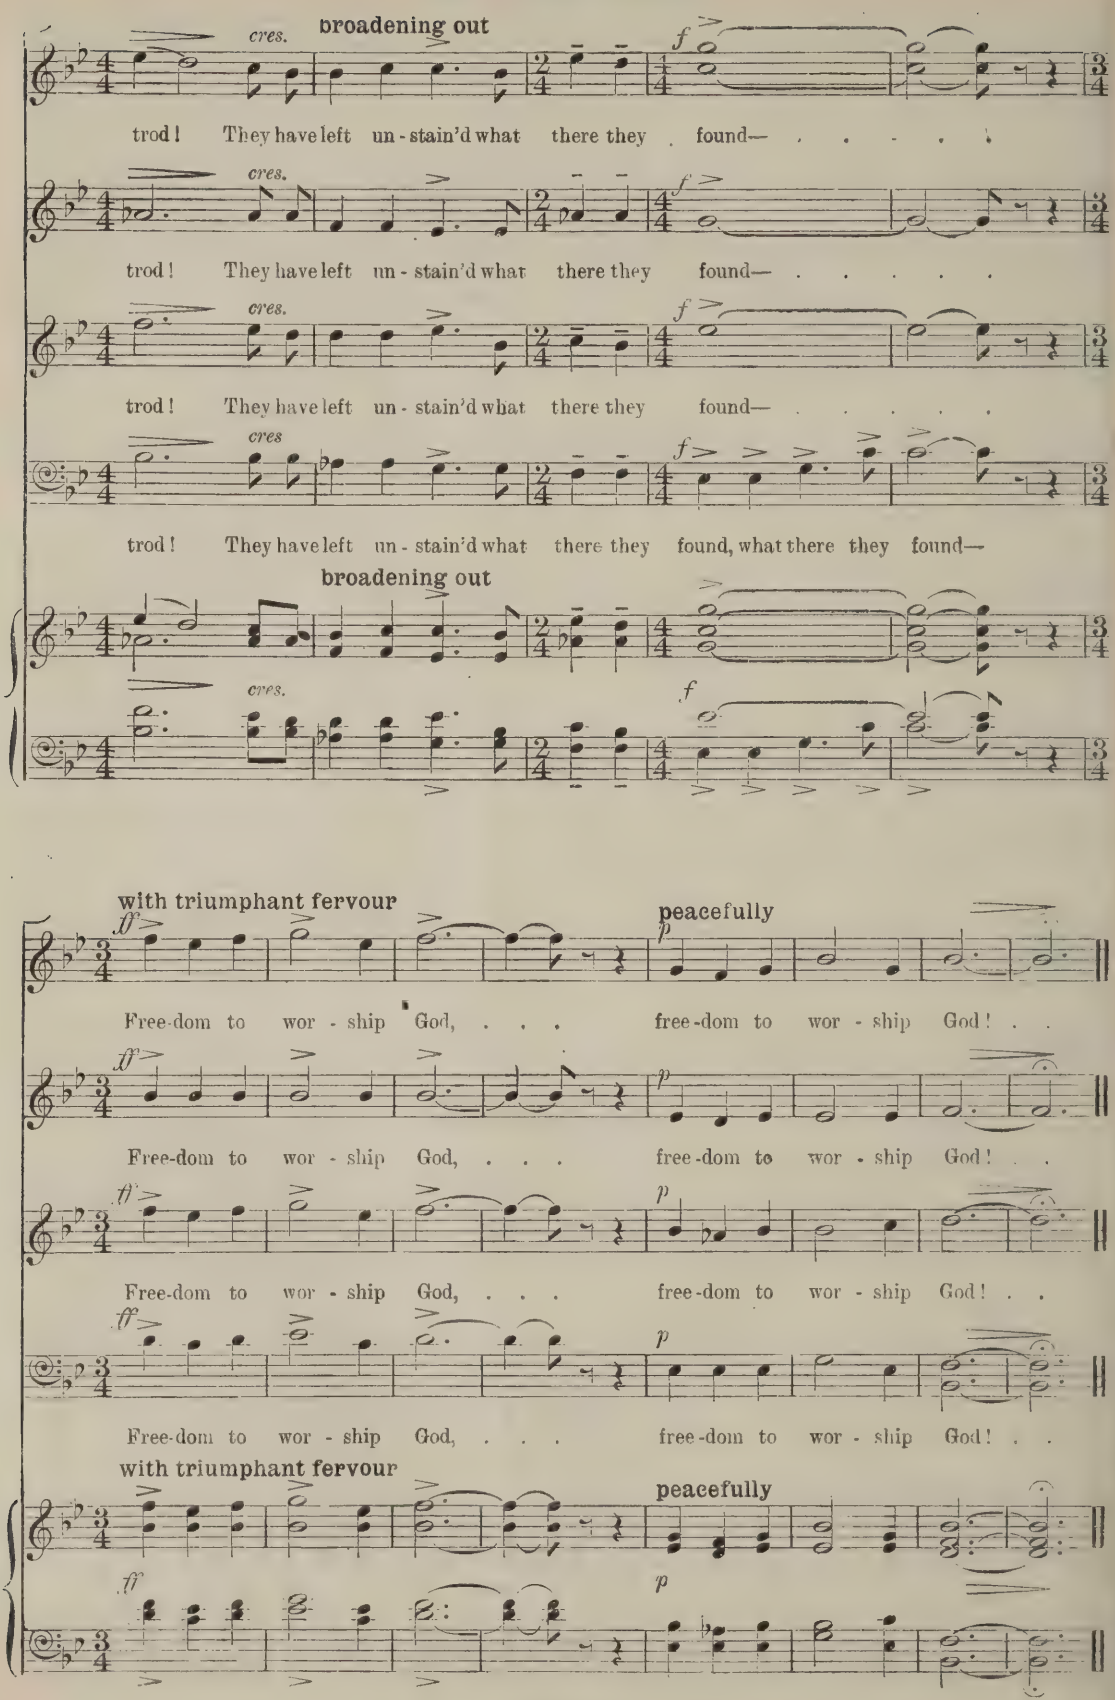
p
No— 'twas a faith's pure
mp
shrine.
ho - ly ground, which first their brave feet
mp
Yes, . . call that ho - ly ground, which first their brave feet
lingering . . . . .
Sustained and impressively. ♩=80
mp



broadening out
cres.
f
trod! They have left un-stain'd what there they found— . . . . .
trod! They have left un-stain'd what there they found— . . . . .
trod! They have left un-stain'd what there they found— . . . . .
trod! They have left un-stain'd what there they found, what there they found—broadening out with triumphant fervour
ff peacefully
p
Free-dom to wor-ship God, . . . free-dom to wor-ship God! . .
Free-dom to wor-ship God, . . . free-dom to wor-ship God! . .
Free-dom to wor-ship God, . . . free-dom to wor-ship God! . .
Free-dom to wor-ship God, . . . free-dom to wor-ship God! . .
with triumphant fervour
peacefully

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 994.—Vol. 66
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

DECEMBER 1 1925

Price 6d. ; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-FIFTH SEASON, 1925-1926.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 19, at 2.30 p.m.

CAROLS

MISS DORA LABBETTE.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. JOHN GOSS.

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1926, at 2.30 p.m.

MESSIAH - - - - HANDEL

MISS FLORA WOODMAN.
MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

Conductor - MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.
At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.; Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: JOHN B. McEWEN, M.A., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

The Members of the DRAMATIC CLASS, under the direction of MR. A. ACTON-BOND, Hon. R.A.M., will give three performances of

"THE HUNCHBACK"

(A COMEDY IN FIVE ACTS)

By SHERIDAN KNOWLES,

On THURSDAY and FRIDAY, DECEMBER 10 and 11, at 8 p.m., and SATURDAY, DECEMBER 12, at 2.30 p.m.

THE JUNIOR ORCHESTRA

(Conductor: SPENCER DYKE, F.R.A.M.), will play Entr'acte music of the period.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, December 8, at 3.

EMMA LEVY SCHOLARSHIP for Jewish Pianists. Last day of entry, December 21.

LENT TERM will begin on Monday, January 11.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about Thursday, January 7.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

FOUNDED 1913.

PRESIDENT FOR 1925: WILLIAM WOLSTENHOLME, MUS. B.

Organists, Assistant-Organists, and Choirmasters of all denominations are eligible. Register of vacant appointments.

Particulars and application to the Hon. Sec., DR. J. WARRINER, De Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

Patrons: { HIS MAJESTY THE KING. / HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.
Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., MUS. DOC.
Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.
Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.
Bursar. E. J. N. POLKINHORNE, Hon. R.C.M.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers Musical Criticism, and Ballet, are held at the College.

The OPERA CLASS has the use of the fully-equipped College OPERA THEATRE, with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

EXAMINATIONS for Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.), in all subjects, held three times a year, in April, September, and December. Syllabus and all particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

Guildhall School of Music.

(Founded in 1880 by the Corporation of London, and managed by the Music Committee.)
VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL: SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M., &c.

PRIVATE Lessons in any single Musical Subject, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera; Classes in Conducting.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

Telephone: Cent. 4459; and City 5565.

The Royal College of Organists.

THE SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Aria in F. J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 12, p. 112; Augener, p. 1178; Peters, Vol. 9, No. 8, page 34.)

Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Op. 18, César Franck. No 3 of Six Pièces d'Orgue. (Durand.)

Bridal March and Finale, "The Birds," C. H. H. Parry. Arranged by W. G. Alcock. Organ Arrangements edited by John E. West. No. 14. (Novello.)

The 10 selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the January, 1926, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1925.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their names for Fellowship by December 10th. for Associateship by December 17th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS, Proposal Forms, duly filled up, must be sent in before December 3rd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may be obtained at the College. Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

The College is open daily from 10 to 4: Saturdays 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD
OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.
FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).
Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 10th, 1926.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).
Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 3rd, 1926.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.
Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.
Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.
Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the training of Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

New Pianoforte Professor, Mr. Claud Biggs.

New Professor of Singing, Miss Marguerite Swale.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
16, ALBERT SQUARE.
Principal and Founder (1892): J. A. CROSS.
Late Principal (1897-1925): ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c. Single Subjects taught.

New Pianoforte Professor:
MR. ROBERT GREGORY.

Mr. Gregory was Professor of the Pianoforte in Vienna for many years, having studied there under the eminent Leschetitzky, teacher of PADEREWSKI.

Prospectus from the Secretary, 16, Albert Square.

GLASGOW
ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.
SESSION 1925-26.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 14 to December 5, December 7 to March 13, and March 15 to June 11.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.
Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:
STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS,
6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1924-1925.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 22 to December 20): WINTER TERM (January 14 to April 11): SUMMER TERM (April 20 to July 4).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary,
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

96 & 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.
TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING
20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.
President; A. NETTLEFOLD.
Principal: DAVID GODELL.

Complete training in all subjects for the Vocalist, Professional and Amateur. Evening Lessons. Frequent Students' Concerts. Free Scholarships. Prospectus from Secretary. Mayfair 3819.

Battersea Polytechnic, London, S.W.11.
Principal: ROBERT H. PICKARD, D.Sc., F.R.S.
Head of Music Department: H. DAVAN WETTON, Mus.D., F.R.C.O.

CLASSES IN THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, AND COUNTERPOINT.
UNIVERSITY COURSES FOR DEGREES AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC, L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. and R.C.M.
CLASS AND PRIVATE LESSONS IN MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND AURAL TRAINING, SOLO AND SIGHT-SINGING, PIANOFORTE, VIOLIN AND VIOLA, VIOLONCELLO AND DOUBLE-BASS.
CHORAL SOCIETY. ORCHESTRA AND ORCHESTRAL CLASS.
LESSONS ON CONCERT ORGAN. (Reconstructed and Modernised).
PREPARATION FOR R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.
SPECIAL CLASSES FOR TEACHERS. (Recognised by the London County Council.)

Next Term begins Monday, January 11, 1926.
Particulars of all Classes on application to the Principal.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.
OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.
"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."
RECENT SUCCESSES,
including the only pupil sent up, January, 1925.
2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.
"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an Organ Recital at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, on Thursday, December 10th, at 1.10. p.m.

"Fallacy Somewhere!"

MAYBE you know "Ruddigore" and appreciate its qualities as much as I do. No Gilbert and Sullivan opera so completely gathers together all the various excellences which are found separately strewn among the other operas. Yet "Ruddigore," when first produced, was not received with the approval it deserved. We read that the librettist was considered "at something less than his best," and that "the subject satirised had become somewhat old-fashioned and out of date." Musically, however, it was held to contain "work equal to anything Sullivan wrote for the Savoy."

A little incident that occurred at the first performance is instructive. "Fallacy somewhere!" says one of the ghostly ancestors who have descended from their picture frame "You're right, there is," was the comment of an occupant of the gallery. At that time the satire was not understood, but to-day the revival of "Ruddigore" has restored Gilbett his due.

The unfamiliar often meets with opposition and misunderstanding. It has been so with the teaching of the Pianoforte by correspondence. "FALLACY SOMEWHERE!" has been the cry, and there have been many to echo in chorus, "You're right, there is." But in spite of the incredulous, Mr. Charles A. Gillert can point to evidence which shows that this unique system of pianoforte teaching by correspondence has overcome the cry of "Fallacy somewhere," and become established on the many testimonies of appreciation from pupils, professional and amateur, who have profitably passed through his hands. If you, too, desire to be efficient in pianoforte playing by the modern method of the application of Weight Touch, send for particulars.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

Principal exponent of Weight Touch, the only source of beautiful and finely graded tone.

"THE REAL USE OF RELAXATION AND WEIGHT TOUCH"

Fully developed in Twelve Correspondence Lessons.

PERSONAL LESSONS DAY AND EVENING.

Open to Beginners,

Professional and Amateur Students, Advanced Players, and Teachers.

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

How To Play Difficult Music With Ease.

PIANISTS who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are adverse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "BRAIN TO KEYBOARD" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this System, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome; and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Many eminent musicians, including the late SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, have used and highly recommended my System—the ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM. More than 19,000 Successful Students of all ages add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "LIGHT ON PIANOFORTE PLAYING," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C1.

ORCHESTRATION.

MR. GORDON JACOB (A.R.C.M.),

undertakes Scoring and Arranging of all kinds for Full or Small Orchestra, Theatre Band, Military or Brass Band, &c.

2, HILL SIDE, WIMBLEDON, S.W.19.

THE TECHNIQUER

AN APPARATUS FOR DEVELOPING THE HANDS OF ALL INSTRUMENTALISTS.

BY INVITATION OF THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC (PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.),

MR. R. J. PITCHER, MUS. BAC., will give a

LECTURE DEMONSTRATION

On TUESDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1925, at 8 p.m. Admission Free.

The Chair will be taken by The Principal:

DR. T. H. YORKE-TROTTER, M.A.

Send for striking list of testimonials, &c.

"Hand Development," with photos, 1*s.* 6*d.*

Secretary: MISS F. L. FITCH, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8. 'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

TO PIANISTS, ORGANISTS, VIOLINISTS, ETC.

"SIMPLEXA"

POCKET FINGER TRAINER

(Registered No. 692810).

INCREASES STRETCH, INDEPENDENCE, FLEXIBILITY, AND STRENGTH.

Editor Musical Times says: "Have no hesitation in recommending."

Improved Model, 2*s.* 6*d.* post free.

"SIMPLEXA," 1, LONGFORD TERRACE, FOLKESTONE.

ST. NICHOLAS, Cole Abbey, E.C. Miss Lilian Trott, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an Organ Recital on Tuesday, December 1st, at 1 p.m.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING
FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING
Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

For Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

REVISION COURSES
THIS MONTH

covering all essential requirements for :

(1) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Christmas Exams.

(2) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O., January.

Also Full Preparation now begins for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., Easter, 1926, and Durham 1st Mus. Bac.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

PERSONAL LESSONS ALSO IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
46, CLARENDON ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

ALBERT GARCIA'S
VOCAL STUDIO.

59, QUEEN'S ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

VOICE-PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

TRAINING FOR OPERA AND CONCERTS.

PUPILS PREPARED FOR A.R.C.M. AND L.R.A.M. EXAMS.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices, so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone, from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

MANUEL GARCIA'S "ART OF SINGING"

has recently been edited and revised from the original edition by ALBERT GARCIA.

Publishers: Messrs. LEONARD & Co., 47, Poland Street, W.1. Price 6*s*.

"MASTERY OF THE KEYBOARD."

SIGHT-READING LESSONS.

COMPLETE COURSE OF SIX POSTAL LESSONS, THREE GUINEAS.

Personal Lessons if desired.

PRESS EXTRACTS.

Aberdeen Press and Journal: "The scarcity of good sight-readers, and even among capable pianists, is proof of the need for a more systematised form of training than obtains at present, and Mr. Denham's system has the double advantage of being both simple and practical."

Music: "Mr. Denham goes fully and thoroughly into his subject from every possible standpoint, and deals with it in clear and informant fashion. Cannot fail to be of service to the earnest seeker after improvement in pianoforte playing."

The Times: "Deals with the subject systematically from the first stage."

GEORGE DENHAM, L.R.A.M., ETC.,
41, AVONDALE ROAD, S. CROYDON: AND 32, WIGMORE STREET, W.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL:

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

Which of the following do you wish to PASS at the 1st ATTEMPT?

(1.) MATRIC.
(2.) 1st MUS. BAC.
(3.) EXERCISE.
(4.) FINAL MUS. BAC.
(5.) A.R.C.O.
(6.) F.R.C.O.
(7.) L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte.)
(8.) A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte.)
(9.) L.R.A.M. (Singing.)
(10.) A.R.C.M. (Singing.)
(11.) A.R.C.M. (Musical Appreciation.)
(12.) L.R.A.M. (Voice Culture and Class Singing.)
(13.) L.R.A.M. (Aural Training.)
(14.) A. MUS. T.C.L.
(15.) L. MUS. T.C.L.
(16.) A.T.C.L.

PLEASE STATE

(a.) Name of Exam.
(b.) Standard of work.
(c.) Time you can devote to study.

Do you require LESSONS in any of the following?

MEMORY TRAINING. MENTAL HEARING.
HARMONY. ORCHESTRATION.
SIGHT READING. FORM.

20, SHERWIN ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

ORGAN RECITAL

ON THURSDAY, 3RD DECEMBER, 1925, AT 6.30 P.M.

BY

MARCEL DUPRÉ.

The Programme will include the following Improvisations based on submitted themes:

1. TRIO SONATA.
   Allegro—Andante—Finale.
2. PRELUDE—CHORALE—FUGUE.

A Perfect Supply of Wind for Organ Blowing.

BY APPOINTMENT.

A PERFECT supply of wind is assured by installing a "DISCUS" Organ Blower. Designed and constructed by engineers who have specialised in this class of work for over thirty years, its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed. Installations can be supplied to suit any type of organ, large or small, and the motive power may be either electricity, gas, or oil. We shall be pleased to submit estimate on receipt of particulars.

An interesting booklet which has been written by experts is available, post free upon application.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER
REGD. TRADE MARK.

WATKINS & WATSON,

Telephone: NORTH 2039. WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

"DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWERS
have been installed in Cathedrals, Churches, and public buildings, both at home and abroad. Some of these are:

Westminster Abbey
York Minster
Southwark Cathedral
Bath Abbey
Westminster Chapel
City Temple
St. Martin-in-the-Fields
Malvern College
Wellington College
Eton
Harrow
Royal Albert Hall
Queen's Hall
Royal Academy of Music.

LONDON

Musical Competition Festival.

President: H.H. PRINCESS HELENA VICTORIA.
Chairman: ERNEST READ, Esq., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.O.

TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL FESTIVAL,

CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER,
MARCH 8th to 13th and 15th to 20th, 1926.

Choral, Vocal, and Instrumental Classes open to all parts of the Country. All old and well-tried features retained. New Subjects include: Three 10-Guinea Exhibitions: Holders designated "The President's Exhibitioner." (These are in addition to Two 9-Guinea Exhibitions, presented by Trinity College of Music.) Women's Institute Choirs. Choral Class for Societies formed since September, 1924. Pianoforte Répertoire Class. Separate Gold Medals for all Voices; Self-Accompaniment Class; Gold Medal for Elocution; Home Music-Makers' Vocal or Instrumental Class; Conductors' Classes, &c.

ADJUDICATORS:
J. PERCY BAKER, H. L. BALFOUR, Mrs. ACTON-BOND, E. T. COOK, BENJAMIN J. DALE, HERBERT FRYER, JULIUS HARRISON, WELTON HICKIN, Dr. E. F. HORNER, JOSEPH IVIMEY, FREDERICK KEEL, Dr. STANLEY MARCHANT, FREDERICK RANALOW, ERNEST READ, Dr. WALKER ROBSON, E. STANLEY ROPER, ARTHUR R. SAUNDERS, KENNEDY SCOTT, Dr. SYDNEY SCOTT, GEOFFREY SHAW, Dr. FREDERICK SHINN, FELIX SWINSTEAD, Mrs. HELEN TRUST, MISS KATIE THOMAS, Dr. JOHN WARRINER, MISS MARY WILSON, and Mr. CHARLES WOODHOUSE.

Subject to future confirmation, Prizes distributed by H.H. Princess Helena Victoria, Lady Bowlby, Lady Muriel Paget, and Mrs. Ernest Read.

Syllabus from the Hon. Secretary,
Mr. T. Lester Jones, 130, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, London, E.11.

PIANOFORTE RECITAL-LECTURES.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

(Mus. Doc., Lond.).
(See page 1060.)

Subjects of Recital-Lectures already given include:

1. "Liszt's Pianoforte Music" (at Cardiff).
2. "Modern Pianoforte Music" (at Worcester).
3. "The Story of Pianoforte Music" (at Newton Abbot).
4. "Romantic Pianoforte Music" (at Newport).

For vacant dates, &c., apply,
46, Clarendon Road, Redland, Bristol.
Telephone: Bristol 3033.

Read what PUPILS say about the

MASTER-METHOD of MEMORY-PLAYING

NO matter whether you are about to enter for an examination, play in public, or wish to play from memory for your home amusement, it is the one thing that will ensure success. Memorising is not the gift of the favoured few, but is an established fact with the hundreds of pupils who have taken my short postal Course. Ordinary soul-racking methods of constant repetition are useless: THE MASTER-METHOD OF MEMORY-PLAYING is THE SYSTEM that will enable you to overcome your memorising difficulties in a few short weeks. The Method can be used with equal success by amateur and professional; it requires no knowledge of Harmony; no tedious study of Form; repetition is entirely cut out, with the result that staleness is eliminated. Send to-day for my free book, "The Master-Method of Memory-Playing," and learn how you can overcome this dreaded weakness. It contains a selection of signed and addressed testimonials, and discusses fully the whole problem of reliable memory playing from your point of view, together with MY PERSONAL GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS. It will be sent free, and post free, upon request. Courses for PIANO, VIOLIN, 'CELLO, ORGAN. Please state which instrument you play.

PUPILS' PRAISE.

Under this heading appears convincing testimony of those who have actually taken a Course. Each give the result of memorising a piece of their own selection after the third lesson.

Student's Number, G 230.

"1, Cemetery Road,
"Southport, Lancs.

"I return my third Result Sheet, by which you will see I have chosen Grieg's 'Berceuse' for my third piece, and have memorised same with ease. My very sincere thanks to you and your wonderful 'Master-Method' for helping me to realise one of my greateat desires, to be able to play from memory. I have found the course of Lessons most interesting, and shall certainly recommend to anyone who is desirous of learning to memorise.

"Yours faithfully,
"(Signed) Mrs. Peggy Barrie."

Piece memorisod for third lesson:
Berceuse, Opus 58, No. 1 (Grieg).
Result: I have memorised the piece quite satisfactorily.

MR. REGINALD C. FOORT, F.R.C.O.,
19, BEACON HOUSE, HEMSTAL ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

ELIZABETH MELLOR
(L.R.A.M.). SOPRANO.
CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, OPERA, ETC.
(Royal Albert Hall and Central Hall Concerts, and Provinces).
Pupils received for Voice Production and Singing.
West-End Studio.
Letters, c/o Central Hall, Westminster, London

MISS LYDIA JOHN
(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.). CONTRALTO.
Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &c.
Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &c.
Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.
Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &c.
New Address—28, ALBION ROAD, LONDON, N.W.6.
Tel.: Hampstead 5797.
Lessons given at West-End Studio or above address.

HORACE CURTIS
TENOR
ORATORIO, WORKS, REQUIEMS, ETC.
99, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W.12. 'Phone: Streatham 5246

CHARLES HEDGES
TENOR.
"MESSIAH."
Walsall Civic Board of Music ("Messiah").
Mr. Charles H dges sang the tenor numbers in the fine approved manner of English singers of Handel's music; and that is with strength, fluency, and directness of movement. The tones of his voice have some beautiful qualities, his technique is admirable, and he understands the art of intelligent phrasing. Consequently he brings freshness and individuality to his performance of these old numbers, and his work at this concert was a constant delight. His voice, as with most genuine tenors, is gaining in power as years of experience accumulate behind him. SYDNEY GREW, Walsall Observer.
Communications to: 784, Pershore Road, Selly Park, Birmingham.

HAROLD KNOWLTON
TENOR,
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
1, Hatherley Gardens, Crouch End, N.8. Mountview 5289.

EDMUND LANG
TENOR
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
93, Kelvin Road, Highbury, N.5.

EDWARD REACH
TENOR,
ORATORIO, CONCERTS, ETC.
12, Maybury Street, London, S.W.17.

MILLARD THOMPSON
(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.
17, Forest View Road, Highams Park, E.17.

JAMES CAPERN
BASS-BARITONE.
Cleeve, Parkside Drive, Watford. Telephone: Watford 531.

VERNON HARRISS,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.
Oratorio, Concerts. Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.
Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

JOHN HENDERSON
BARITONE. For Oratorio, Masonic (Lodges), Concerts, &c
Press Notices, &c., "Hazeldene," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.
Telephone: Willesden, 70.

ARTHUR LEES
BASS.
Concerts, Recitals, Masonics, Oratorios, &c.
58, Marmion Road, Hove, Sussex.

CHARLES LONGSTER
(BARITONE). Soloist, St. Michael's Church, Headingley, Leeds.
Song Recitals, Oratorios, Concerts, &c.
10, Belvedere Terrace, Leeds.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.)
BASSO-CANTANTE.
Bookings include "Hiawatha," "A Tale of Old Japan."
33, Hounslow Avenue, Hounslow. Hounslow 1536.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY
BASS.
8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

RODERICK WILLIAMS
BASS BARITONE.
"MESSIAH," SCOTCH CONCERTS, ETC.
19, Bank Street, Aberdeen.

R. ARNOLD GREIR
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
Organist to the Royal Choral Society, London.
RECITALIST AND ACCOMPANIST.
2, Highview Road, West Ealing, W.13. Ealing 201.

MISS MARY LINDSAY
L.R.A.M. (Teacher's Diploma),
Gives lessons in Voice Production and Singing.
Moderate Terms.
17, Cromwell Road, South Kensington. Tel.: Western 3595.

TO CONCERT DIRECTORS.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF
(British).
The well-known Pianist is arranging a Recital Tour for the coming season.
Special terms can be quoted for a Recital or part programme if immediate application is made.
Managers of suitable Concert-Halls also please send terms for hiring.
Please address all communications to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

H. FORSTER RICHARDSON
R.C.M. (Leipzig), A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M.
(Pupil of Tobias Matthay, Plunket Greene, Gregory Hast),
gives lessons in Pianoforte Playing, Voice-Production and Singing.
Tuition on the most modern technical principles.
Coaching for Concert Work and Examinations.
Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1, and 390, Upper Richmond Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

EVERARD C. VAN-ESSEN,
OBOE AND COR ANGLAIS (High and Low Pitch).
Oratorios, Choral and Orchestral Concerts, Opera, &c.
10, The Avenue, Grove Park, Lee, London, S.E.12.

MISS MARY WILSON, F.R.A.M.
Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, London,
Gives SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS to Candidates entering for the L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Singing Teachers' Diplomas.
Particulars on application.
Address: 10, Harley Street, London, W.1.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.
CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN
VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 1,000 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer and Teacher.
Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.
"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.
LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.
For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

DR. REGINALD H. HUNT
D. Mus. London, F.R.C.O.
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, W.1.
Tuition for Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., &c.
POSTAL COURSES IN PAPER WORK.
Address: 7, Woodgrange Avenue, N. Finchley, N.12.

MADAME ALBA, Dramatic Soprano (Italian Bel Canto), receives pupils. Perfect breath control; clear enunciation. Compass extended. Italian, French, English. Drawing-room singing. Cramers Studios, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. B. and MUS.D. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of L.L.C.M. (April, 1924), L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. L.C.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, Certificates, and valuable professional appointments. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Compositions by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS. Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O., L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Essay Models, Sight-Reading Courses, Study Aids, 9d. Studies in Modulation, 3s.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm., F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—
(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-25 ... 277 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-25 ... 75 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MISS J. BLAKE, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teacher of Singing), prepares pupils L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Exams., as Teacher or Performer. Highest recommendations. — Studio, 139, New Bond Street, W.1.

MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Organist and Musical Director, The City Temple, London, E.C.).

Special preparation for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Also L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. Organ Examinations.

SINGLE LESSONS and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. instrument. Pieces registered.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN ORGAN WORK:

1	L.R.A.M., Dec., 1919.	3	A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
1	A.R.C.M., April, 1920.	1	A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
1	L.R.A.M., April, 1924.	3	A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
1	F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	1	A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
1	F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	4	A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
3	F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	1	A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3	F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	3	A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
2	F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	3	A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
3	F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	5	A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Hints for R.C.O. Candidates" to be obtained from the Publishers, Messrs. Reid Bros., 2s. 8d. post free.
298, Balham High Road, London, S.W.17.
Telephone: Battersea 916.

J. C. BRYDSON, MUS. B. (Dunelm.). Correspondence Coach. Special "Elementary Guinea Course." Kegworth, Derby.

THOMAS CARPENTER, L.R.A.M., L.T.C.L., Specialises in preparation for Associated Board (Pianoforte) Exams. (Primary to Final Grade.) Also short Postal Courses in Rudiments and Harmony. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. FRANK A. CHAPPLE (Mus. Doc. Dunelm.), F.R.C.O Correspondence Coach for Degrees and Diplomas. Recent Successes: 1st Mus. Bac. (2), Mus. Bac., Final, F.R.C.O. (Turpin Prize), A.R.C.O., and A.T.C.L. Address: The Mount, Pontefract, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-Work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., CORRESPONDENCE COACH, R.C.O., R.A.M. Exams., &c. "Zelgart," Harborough Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 406 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply, Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, Organist and Director of the Choir, Brighton Parish Church, will have a VACANCY for an ARTICLED PUPIL
in January. Thorough Tuition.
Former pupils have proceeded to good appointments in England and abroad, and have obtained the following diplomas:
F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., and A.R.C.M.
Large four-manual Willis Organ.
(Address as above.)

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A.G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1925, 7 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also 1st Mus. Bac. pass. Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Exs., after prelim. course in composition, also in 1925. Both Mus. Doc. passes in 1924. 170 Successes at Durham alone, besides R.C.O. diplomas. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, "Cramond," Oakhurst Avenue, East Barnet, London, N.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music. Private Lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MR. C. E. de M. LEATHES, M.A., MUS. BAC., F.R.C.O. Tuition in Piano, Harmony, Composition, &c. Pupils successfully prepared for all examinations. Cramer's Studios, 139, Bond Street, W.1, and 128, Kensington High Street, W.8.

W. LAURENCE LEE (Professor of Singing). Pupils' recital, Wigmore Hall, London, 7.45 p.m., Friday, November 20. Write, c/o Messrs. Ibbs & Tillett, 124, Wigmore Street, W.1.

DR. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, MUS. DOC., University of Toronto; Mus. Doc., Trinity University, Toronto; F.R.C.O.; F.A.G.O., &c. Sirsa House, Cheltenham. Correspondence Lessons. Revision of MSS. Scoring, editing, and arranging. Examination pieces analysed and annotated.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 800 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. Exams. Correspondence lessons in Harmony. Form, Teaching, &c. 23 pupils' successes. Moderate terms. Arthur W. Morrison, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c., 39, Clarendon Road, Fulwood, Sheffield.

MR. ALBERT ORTON, L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., Master of the Music and Organist, St. Anne's, Soho, &c., is shortly commencing a Sight-Reading Class for Singers, and also a Harmony Class. Particulars will be sent on application to Mr. Orton, 19, Clarendon Gardens, W.9.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

POSTAL TUITION, R.C.O., T.C.L., R.A.M.—Special Hints for Essay, Aural Tests, Art of Teaching, &c. H. Taylor, A.R.C.O., A.Mus. T.C.L., 10, South Street, Manchester.

DR. TAYLOR'S POSTAL PUPILS HAVE passed Mus. Bac. 1st and final. A.R.C.O.; L.R.A.M.; A.T.C.L. Pupil gained the Stillie Bursary at Glasgow for Counterpoint. Latest success, A.R.C.O. for 1924. Portland Place, Lancaster.

W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O. Recitalist, &c. Preparation for Exams. Organ lessons given on new four-manual Willis. Address, Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, S.E.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music).
(4) A. Mus. T.C.L. and L. Mus. T.C.L.

Several recent successes in all these examinations.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

273 A.R.C.O. Successes since 1909.
169 F.R.C.O. " " "

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1924.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1924.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1925.
1 F.R.C.O., July, 1925.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1925.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MR. TRAVERS ADAMS regrets that he is quite unable to answer immediately all communications he has received. Answers will be sent as speedily as possible. With sincere apologies for delay, and many thanks for certain kind letters. 16, Warwick Avenue, W.2.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—These splendidly appointed Studios are the recognised centre of the best musical activities in London. Forty-five rooms. Grand Piano in every room. Lift, telephone, and every comfort and convenience. Low inclusive rates. One morning or afternoon per week the minimum time arranged for. Apply, 38, Wigmore Street, W.1.

CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE.—Solo and Chorus Boys for special engagements or permanent choirs. Apply to F. W. Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

SOPRANO LEADER (good reader and soloist), Wesley's Chapel, City. Write, experience, qualifications, &c., "Organist," 6, Grange Road, N.1.

ALTO WANTED for Wandsworth Parish Church. Good reader essential. £15 per annum. Apply, W. C. Barnes, Organist.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.

VACANCY for LAY-CLERK. TENOR. A trial to fill the above will take place early in December. Duties begin January 16th, 1926. Commencing salary, £110, increasing every 3 years up to a maximum. A pension after a certain number of years' service guaranteed. For further particulars, apply to Rev. Dean of Divinity, Magdalen College.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL. There will shortly be vacancies for a Tenor and a Bass. Candidates must be Members of the Church of England. Age preferably not more than 35. Applications, enclosing copies of three testimonials, should be sent to the Chapter Clerk, Diocesan Registry, The Close.

SOLO TENOR REQUIRED for Stratford Parish Church. Good reader essential. Salary, £15 to £20 per annum. Apply, Percy West Taylor, F.R.C.O. (Borough Organist, West Ham), 63, Seymour Gardens, Ilford. 'Phone: Ilford 1277.

TENOR WANTED.—£15. City Church. Light duties. Communicant. Apply, "M. K.," 171, Grove Lane, S.E.5.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for St. John's Wood Presbyterian Church, N.W.8. Salary, £100. Particulars and forms of application, from Mr. A. D. Drury, "Wayside," Preston, near Harrow. Latest date for applications, December 12th.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Peterhead, Aberdeenshire. Good with men and boys; voice-production essential. Salary, £100. Part-time appointment under Local Education Authority held by present Organist is also vacant. Present Organist has excellent teaching connection. Apply, with copies of recent testimonials, to David Troup, Solicitor, Peterhead.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Parish Church, Peterhead. Salary, £130 per annum. Applications, with testimonials (copies only), to the subscriber, from whom particulars of office and other prospects may be obtained. William Ingram, Session Clerk, Peterhead.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for the New Barnet Congregational Church. Sundays, Wednesday evening, and Choir practice. Bishop Organ, electric blower. Application to be made not later than Dec. 10, to Church Secretary, Mr. Arthur T. White, "Sol Datch," Bosworth Road, New Barnet.

ORGANIST WANTED after Christmas, Holy Trinity, Ramsgate. Usual Services, including Choral-Eucharist. Good choir-training essential. £60.

AN ORGANIST (A.R.C.O.) and Choirmaster of many years' experience, used to various types of service, seeks post, preferably in Scotland. Apply, "R. A.," c/o J. Jackson, Esq., 2, Derby Street, Sunderland.

RESIDENT MUSIC STUDENTS received in country Rectory near Oxford. Organ, Choir-training, Paper work. All Exams, &c. Rev. C. L. Bradley, M.A. (Mus. Doc. final), Wendlebury Rectory, Bicester, Oxon.

ABERDEENSHIRE EDUCATION AUTHORITY.

PETERHEAD ACADEMY AND BURGH SCHOOLS.

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC. Part-time, must devote three days per week to teaching, and supervising the teaching of, Singing. Salary, £150 per annum.

Applicants must lodge five copies of letter of application, stating age, qualifications, and experience, and five copies of testimonials, with the Director of Education on or before December 7.
14, Crown Terrace, Aberdeen.

HIGHLY-QUALIFIED TEACHER REQUIRED to take charge of the Pianoforte Section of a successful Singing School. Must be thoroughly practical, business-like, and not an examination addict. No investment, but must possess a central studio. Write fully, "Vigoroso," c/o Dixon's, 195, Oxford Street, W.1.

STAFFORDSHIRE MENTAL HOSPITAL,

CHEDDLETON, LEEK.

STRING PLAYERS WANTED to act as attendants, especially violinists and 'cellists. Good practice in classical music with full orchestra. Permanent posts and pensions for suitable persons. Salary commences at 52*s.* per week, with prospect of rise to 70*s.* per week. £4 per annum band money. Single men or women may live in for 19*s.* 10*d.* per week. Applications to the Medical Superintendent.

TO COMPOSERS.—A Music Traveller at your service. Write, "Music," Times Office, Torquay.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

PEDAL REED ORGANS, best makes, 1-, 2- and 3-Manual; 1 M. & P., £20; 2 M. & P., £30 to £100; 3 M. & P., £50 to £150. Terms arranged. Stagg, 56, Red Lion Street, Holborn.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

PIPE ORGAN FOR SALE.—Two-manuals. 2 stops and coupler; full compass pedals; side hand-blower, or foot by player; stool included. £30. Particulars, W. A. Rudling, 30, West Street, Prittlewell, Essex.

FINE-TONED REED ORGAN in good condition. 18 Stops, Walnut Case. £15 or offer. 27, Penrith Street, Streatham.

AMERICAN ORGAN, by Clough & Warren. Pre-war make, in splendid condition. 11 stops, with qualifying Reeds. FOR SALE, £25. Can be seen by appointment. "K.," 38 Sedgemere Avenue, East Finchley, N.2.

ORGAN PRACTICE, 1s. 4d. an hour, or 6s. a week. Hydraulic-blown, two manuals and pedals (R.C.O. scale). Reduced fee for combined lessons and practice. Single practices (pupils only), 9d. per hour. The Fulham School of Music, 2, Edgarley Terrace, Fulham Palace Road, S.W.6.

ORGANS in any situation can be successfully photographed, owing to the unique apparatus used by Gilbert Benham, "Natal," New Barnet.

FOR SALE.—Organ Pedal Attachment (Norman & Beard), with Stool, &c. Excellent condition. £12. Apply, J. J. Pownall, 18, Grosvenor Street, Stalybridge.

TWO-MANUAL ROGERS PIANO with Pedals and Stool. Fine condition, £75. J. Nokes, Barnet.

PIANIST (gentleman) wishes to meet another pianist, with a view to practising two-pianoforte music. Reply to "A. E. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

LADY CONDUCTOR would like Viola player to join small Orchestra. Also another 'Cellist. Particulars from Miss J. McKnight, 113, Stonhouse Street, Clapham, S.W.4.

DULCITONE FORTE PIANO. Oak. Sweet tone, as new. £15. 14c, Holland Villas Road, W.14.

FINE ITALIAN 'CELLO, made specially for owner, in Italy, 1924, by the famous Italian maker, "Giuseppe Pedrazizini." Grand tone and condition. Any trial. £65. 14, Burlington Street, Ashton-u.-Lyne, Lancs.

WANTED.—Old Vols of "Organist and Choirmaster" after 1897. Capt. J. G. Bird, Quetta, Baluchistan.

WANTED.—To hire, LANTERN SLIDES, suitable for a lecture on Organ Construction. Please write, W. E. Shepherd, Organist, Parish Church, Hitchin, Herts.

TO MANUFACTURERS Stringed Musical Instruments. The Proprietor of Patent No. 184,809 desires to enter into negotiations for grant of licenses to manufacture on royalty or otherwise, or treat for sale of Patent outright. Particulars furnished by A. M. & Wm. Clark, 53 & 54, Chancery Lane, W.C.2.

PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMS., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M, ETC.
(a) Outline of Course of Instruction (lists of Technical Exercises, books of Studies, Pieces), 5s
(b) Studies for Special Purposes (first bars given), 5s.
(c) Two Special Test-Papers (including correction), 5s. each.
"J. H.," Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., &c., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS, Key F. By Charles Ward. Price 4d. 1st 1000 copies only, half-price to Advertise. Ward, 79, Town Street, Armley, Leeds.

PALESTRINA.—Choice Selections from, set as Short Anthems (S.A.T.B.), to English words. Specimen copies gratis to Choirmasters, from Dr. H. G. Smith, St. Margaret's, N.C.R., Dublin.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessle.

A TREATISE ON CONDUCTING.
12,000 WORDS. 1s. 8d. Illustrated! Method thoroughly explained. Invaluable to Conductors and progressive Members of any Orchestra, Band, or Choir. Bandmaster M. T. Cooper, 23, Beech Avenue, Blackpool.

OPERA LIBRETTO FOR DISPOSAL.
THREE ACTS, MODERN-DAY SUBJECT.
DOROTHY PENN, 6, Graham Road, London, W.4.

BARITONES AND BASSES should buy new song just published "UP SAIL!" (Oakley). Compass B♭ to E♭. Also descriptive Song, "The Bull Fight" (Oakley). Compass A to E. Price 2s. each. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MUSIC BY MAIL.
EVERYTHING IN MUSIC.—Vocal, Instrumental, Educational, British and Foreign. Largest Stock in London. Murdochs, 23, Princes Street, Oxford Circus; and 463, Oxford Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 25, Irving Rd., Bournemouth.

COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS.—SONGS, LYRICS, and MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS wanted for Publication. We set Lyrics to Music if desired. Send MSS. (words or music) to The Carlton Music Agency, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

A.R.C.O. EXAMINATION AIDS.
A series of practical papers outlining courses of study and giving helpful hints with expert advice on the following Tests:
SOLO-PLAYING. SCORE-READING.
TRANSPOSITION. ACCOMPANIMENT.
ESSAY. (With list of 75 Solos.)
3s. each. 10s. 6d. the set.
At the request of many who have derived valuable help from the above, the writer has now prepared a similar AID to the
A.R.C.O. PAPER-WORK TESTS.
Price, 5s.
"A.R.C.O. EXAMN. AIDS." 44, BLANTYRE RD., LIVERPOOL.

READY DECEMBER 1ST.
DONT'S FOR CHOIRMEN.
A COMPANION TO "DONT'S FOR CHURCH ORGANISTS"
(Second Edition, considerably enlarged) and "DONT'S FOR CHOIRMASTERS."
By JOHN NEWTON.
Foreword by DR. WILLIAM PRENDERGAST.
6d. net. Postage, single copies, ½d.; 12 copies, 6d.
W. HEFFER, Ltd., Cambridge; MOWBRAY, 28, Margaret Street, W.1.
WARREN Ltd., High Street, Winchester.

"THE CHOIR AND MUSICAL JOURNAL."
PRINCIPAL CONTENTS FOR DECEMBER.
SIR R. P. STEWART (Centenary).
A MUSICIAN'S WANDERINGS IN LONDON.—XII.
ST. ANDREW'S, HOLBORN (illustrated).
THE MUSIC OF THE PSALMS.
NOTES OF THE MONTH. PASSING NOTES.
MUSIC SUPPLEMENT: ANTHEM, "O ZION, THAT BRINGEST GOOD TIDINGS." By W. T. Crossley. CAROL, "NO ROOM IN THE INN." By B. J. Dale.
Monthly, Fourpence. Annual Subscription, 5s.
"The Choir" Office, 25-35, City Road, London, E.C.1.

MUSIC FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS
BY BASIL HARWOOD.

	s.	d.
BENEDICITE IN D	0	4
MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in E minor	0	6
ANTHEM, "When the Son of Man shall come" ...	0	8
MOTET, "Jesus! Thy boundless love to me," for Chorus, Soli (or Semi-Chorus), Orchestra, and Organ ... ... (Full Score and Orchestral Parts on Hire.)	1	0
TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS: 1. "Lowliest! Loftiest!" ... 2. "O hearken, all ye sad and lone"	0	3
ORGAN MUSIC: Rhapsody	3	0
Fantasia, "Christmastide"	3	6

THE SUPERB

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

You can examine a magnificent selection of Bechstein Pianos—new and second-hand—at

126, NEW BOND ST., W.1.

Can be purchased by instalments, no deposit required.

Old Pianos taken in exchange, highest value allowed.

Call or write for Catalogue.

The Autoplayer Co., Ltd.,
BECHSTEIN PIANO SPECIALISTS.
Mayfair 2653.

STEINWAY STUDIOS

COMFORTABLY FURNISHED
ELECTRIC LIGHT
CENTRAL HEATING
TELEPHONE LIFT
NEW STEINWAY PIANOS

Full particulars from
STEINWAY & SONS,
THE NEW STEINWAY HALL,
1 & 2, GEORGE ST., CONDUIT ST., LONDON, W.1
'PHONE : MAYFAIR 6541-5.

PIANOS

BECHSTEIN, BORD, SCHIEDMAYER, ROGERS

NEW AND SECOND-HAND
CASH OR HIRE PURCHASE.

Pianos taken in exchange.

Apply for lists:

CHAS. STILES & CO.
74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.
Phone: MUSEUM 439.

TEXT-BOOKS

BY

ALBERT HAM, MUS. DOC., F.R.C.O.

OUTLINES OF MUSICAL FORM

WITH ANALYSES FROM

WELL-KNOWN CLASSICAL WORKS.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"In all respects this is an admirable little work, with no waste, no hiatus of a serious nature, handy in size, and with a practical scheme well carried through."

DR. C. W. PEARCE, in alluding to the above work, says:

"Quite the best I have ever seen, and I shall lose no opportunity for recommending it."

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY.

THIRD EDITION.

Price ... Five Shillings.

"Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."
—Musical Times.

ANTHEMS: The Desert shall rejoice. S. or T. Solo and Chorus (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.
I heard the Voice of Jesus say. Bar. Solo and Chorus (T.T.B.B.) ... ... 3d.
PART-SONG: Music, when soft voices die (S.A.T.B.) ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW SERIES of ORGAN WORKS

EDITED BY

MARTIN SHAW

		s.	d.
1. FANTASY IN D, No. 4 ...	Alan Gray	2	0
2. RHAPSODY ON AN OLD ENGLISH TUNE	Cyril B. Rootham	3	0
3. COMMUNION	C. H. Kitson	2	0
4. PRELUDE ON "IRISH" ...	C. H. Kitson	2	0
5. SERENADE PEU SERIEUSE	Harry Farjeon	2	0
6. BERCEUSE	Harry Farjeon	1	6
7. CAPRICCIETTO ...	E. Markham Lee	2	0
8. SCHERZO IN A ...	E. Markham Lee	2	0
9. FOUR VERSETS ON "SALVE, FESTA DIES"	Godfrey Sceats	2	0
10. CHORAL PRELUDES ..	Geoffrey Shaw	2	0
11. VARIATIONS ON AN OLD CAROL TUNE	Geoffrey Shaw	2	0

J. B. CRAMER & Co., LTD., LONDON, W.1.

NAVAL AND MILITARY MUSICAL UNION SONG BOOK

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS FOR MEN'S VOICES.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

(Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.)

CONTENTS.

1.	A VINTAGE SONG	Mendelssohn
2.	DRINK TO ME ONLY WITH THINE EYES	(Arr. by) H. Elliot Button
3.	FAR DOWN THE GREEN VALLEY	C. H. Döring
4.	GIPSY SONG	Mendelssohn
5.	MAIDEN FAIR, O DEIGN TO TELL	Haydn
6.	MEN OF HARLECH	(Arr. by) J. Tilleard
7.	O WHO WILL O'ER THE DOWNS	R. L. Pearsall
8.	ONCE MORE WITH JOY (Pilgrims' Chorus, Tannhäuser)	Wagner
9.	SERENADE	Mendelssohn
10.	SOLDIERS' CHORUS (Faust)	Gounod
11.	SWEET AND LOW	J. Barnby
12.	THE COMRADES' SONG OF HOPE	Adolphe Adam
13.	THE DEAR LITTLE SHAMROCK	(Arr. by) H. Elliot Button
14.	THE FROG (humorous)	Ernest Newton
15.	THE LONG DAY CLOSES	Arthur Sullivan
16.	THE THREE CHAFERS (humorous)	H. Trühn
17.	THE THREE HUNTSMEN (humorous)	C. Kreutzer
18.	THE WINTRY WINDS ARE BLOWING	J. Müller
19.	THURINGIAN VOLKSLIED	Franz Abt
20.	WHAT CARE I HOW FAIR SHE BE	Jacques Blumenthal

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVEMBER'S BULLETIN OF OXFORD MUSIC

During November the following additions were made to the Oxford Music List:

Songs

	s.	d.
Three Poems by WALT WHITMAN ... By R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS	3	6
"Yarmouth Fair" ... By PETER WARLOCK	2	0
"The Hill" ... By COLIN TAYLOR	2	0
"Never more, Sailor"	2	0
"The Fiddler" By NORMAN PETERKIN	2	0

Chamber Music

Sonata for violin and piano ... By C. B. ROOTHAM	7	6
Bach's Violin Concerto in G minor, arranged for violin and piano by J. BERNARD JACKSON	4	0

Chamber Music—continued

	s.	d.
Two Poems for 'cello and piano:
1. Rawhiti	3	6
2. Nga Patu Paiarehe By HUGO ANSON	5	0

Small Orchestral Series

Bach's Violin Concerto in G minor, arranged by J. BERNARD JACKSON ... Score 4 6

Parts 6d. each.

Educational Piano Music

Four Traditional Tunes ... By GERRARD WILLIAMS 2 6

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS

AMEN HOUSE, WARWICK SQUARE, E.C.4, AND 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

POCKET SING-SONG BOOK

FOR

SOLDIERS, SAILORS, SCHOOLS, HOMES, Etc

EDITED BY W. G. McNAUGHT.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

THE POCKET SING-SONG BOOK (6" x 4½", rounded corners) is designed to provide in a portable volume a collection of Unison Songs of the best type that will, it is hoped, be found welcome in camps, ships, clubs, class-rooms, and wherever "sing-song" gatherings are popular. A number of the songs will serve as marching tunes. The vocal part is printed in both notations.

Simple accompaniments are given, except in the case of a few Folk-songs, where such aids are dispensable. If, however, accompaniments to these are desired, they are to be found in Novello's School Series, at 2d. each. Any of the other pieces in the collection can also be obtained separately at 1½d. or 2d. each. The songs are generally printed in low keys, in order, as far as possible, to suit all voices. A competent pianist can, if necessary, easily transpose to other keys.

NATIONAL ANTHEMS, ETC., OF THE ALLIES.

Belgian National Song
God save the King
Japanese National Anthem, The Rule, Britannia
Russian National Anthem, The Maple Leaf for ever, The Marseillaise, The

MARCHING SONGS.

Admiral Benbow
Begone! dull care
British Grenadiers, The
Charlie is my darling
Coasts of High Barbary, The Dashing away with the smoothing iron
Flight of the Earls, The Girl I left behind me, The Good-morrow, Gossip Joan Greenland Fishery, The
Heave away, my Johnny
John Peel
Lass of Richmond Hill, The
Let the hills resound
Loud Tattoo, The
March of the Men of Harlech
Mermaid, The Nuts in May
Soldier's Life, A
We be three poor mariners
Wi' a hundred pipers
Widdicombe Fair (Old Uncle Tom Cobleigh)
Young May Moon, The

NATIONAL AND FOLK-SONGS.

All through the Night
Ash Grove, The
Auld Lang Syne
Bay of Biscay, The Bells of Aberdovey, The Blow, blow, thou winter wind
Blue bell of Scotland, The Flowers o' the Forest, The Golden Vanity, The
Harp that once through Tara's halls, The Heart of Oak
Here's a health unto His Majesty
Home, sweet home
Land of my fathers
Last Rose of Summer, The Let Erin remember
Long, long ago
Man's a man for a' that, A Meeting of the Waters, The Minstrel Boy, The Neptune and Britannia
O no, John
Red, White, and Blue, The Scots' wha hae
Summer is a-coming in HYMNS.

Abide with me
All people that on earth do dwell
Now thank we all our God
Onward, Christian Soldiers
Rock of Ages
Sun of my soul
Through the night of doubt and sorrow

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF WELL-KNOWN TUNES

ARRANGED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

TUNES, AND APPROPRIATE HYMNS.

TUNE.	METRE.	HYMN.
Austria	8.7.8.7.D. ...	Glorious things of thee are spoken
		Praise the Lord! ye heavens, adore Him
Bishopthorpe	C.M. ...	This is the day the Lord hath made
Darwall's 148th	6.6.6.6.4.4.4.4. ...	Ye holy Angels bright
Ein' feste Burg...	8.7.8.7.6.6.6.7. ...	A safe stronghold our God is still Rejoice to-day with one accord
Eisenach	L.M. ...	Great God, Who, hid from mortal sight
		O Love, how deep! how broad! how high!
Hanover	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King All-glorious above
Hyfrydol	8.7.8.7.D. ...	Alleluia! sing to Jesus
Irish	C.M. ...	The Son of Man from Jordan rose
Lasst uns erfreuen	L.M. ...	Light's glittering morn bedecks the sky
	(with Alleluias)
	...	Ye watchers and ye holy ones
Leoni	6.6.8.4.D. ...	The God of Abraham praise
Luther	8.7.8.7.8.8.7. ...	Great God, what do I see and hear?
Melcombe	L.M. ...	New every morning is the love
Morning Hymn	L.M. ...	Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Nun danket	6.7.6.7.6.6.6.6. ...	Now thank we all our God
Old 100th (1st Version)	L.M. ...	All people that on earth do dwell
Old 100th (2nd Version)	L.M. ...	Before Jehovah's awful Throne
Old 104th	10.10.11.11. ...	Disposer Supreme, and Judge of the earth
		O worship the King All-glorious above
Richmond	C.M. ...	Praise to the Holiest in the height
Rockingham	L.M. ...	My God, and is Thy Table spread?
		When I survey the wondrous Cross
St. Anne (1st Version)	C.M. ...	O God, our help in ages past
St. Anne (2nd Version	C.M. ...	The Son of God goes forth to war
St. Theodulph	7.6.7.6.D. ...	All glory, laud, and honour
St. Thomas	S.M. ...	The Advent of our God
Surrey	8.8.8.8.8. ...	The Lord my pasture shall prepare
		We have not known Thee as we ought
Tallis' Canon	L.M. ...	Glory to Thee, my God, this night
Unser Herrscher	8.7.8.7.8.7. ...	Come ye faithful, raise the anthem
Victory	8.8.8.4. ...	The strife is o'er, the battle done
Wareham	L.M. ...	O Saviour, Lord, to Thee we pray
Warrington	L.M. ...	Now that the daylight fills the sky
Wiltshire	C.M. ...	Through all the changing scenes of life
Winchester New	L.M. ...	On Jordan's bank the Baptist's cry
Winchester Old (1st Version) ...	C.M. ...	When God of old came down from Heaven
Winchester Old (2nd Version) ...	C.M. ...	While shepherds watched their flocks by night

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Voice Parts only, 8*d*.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

President:
THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O., C.B.E.
Chairman of Board and Director of Studies:
Professor J. C. BRIDGE, M.A., Mus. D., F.S.A.
Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

December 3rd, at 3 p.m. Students' Concert at Æolian Hall, New Bond Street, W.

December 5th. Last day of entry for Open Scholarships to be competed for at the end of Term.

December 7th. Last day of entry for Diploma Examinations to be held in January next.

December 9th, at 3 p.m. Recital by Mr. HENRY GEEHL and Mr. WILLIAM LOVELOCK, Mus. B., of works for two Pianofortes.

December 12th, at 3 p.m. Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W. (sole lessee of Queen's Hall, Chappell & Co.). Conductor: Mr. JOSEPH IVIMEY.

January 11th. Lent Term begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

A special Class for Scoring for Brass and Military Bands, and the Theatre Orchestra, is conducted by Mr. HENRY GEEHL.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned. C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.

A SIMPLE CAROL for UNISON SINGING.

WE SING THE BIRTH

Words by BEN JONSON.

Music by ERNEST AUSTIN.

PRICE THREEPENCE.
(Staff Notation and Sol-fa combined.)

The above is in the ELKIN CHORAL SERIES, of which Dr. JOHN BORLAND is General Editor. The Series also contains Part-songs and Unison Songs by ELGAR, MACDOWELL, BANTOCK, CYRIL SCOTT, EDGAR BAINTON, ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH, CHARLES WATERS, Etc., Etc.

Specimen copies may be had on approval.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,
20, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

SACRED MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

ANTHEMS.

	Price.
DERING, RICHARD.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (6 parts)	4d.
GOSS, JOHN.
Behold, I bring you good tidings	3d.
HANDL, JACOB.
Behold, thou shalt conceive	4d.
HOPKINS, E. J.
Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	3d.
DI LASSO, ORLANDO.
Let Zion resound with praise	4d.
Whom saw ye, Shepherds? (5 parts)	4d.

CAROLS.

ADAMS, THOMAS.
SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Separately ...	each 3d.
In one volume, complete...	9d.
BRIDGE, J. FREDERICK.
Ring out with jocund chime	3d.
A Babe ys borne I wys	3d.
Welcome, Yule	3d.
Christmas Day	3d
When Christ was born	3d.
Yonder in Bethlehem	3d.
The Star of the East. A Fantasy for contralto solo (ad lib.) and chorus, S.A.T.B.	9d.
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.
A selection of 25 (Ancient and Modern)	1s. 0d.

SPECIMEN COPIES SENT ON REQUEST.

ORGAN MUSIC.

BACH, J. S.
Two Preludes on "In dulci jubilo" (from book of selected chorale preludes). Steingraber Edition, No. 2172	2s. 6d.
GRUNDMANN, A.
At Christmas Eve. Three Pastorales. Steingraber Edition, No. 2018	1s. 6d.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,
MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE
ENGLISH PSALTER
CONTAINING
THE PSALMS OF DAVID
EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING
UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY
CHARLES MACPHERSON, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).
EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, MUS. DOC.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).
PERCY C. BUCK, MUS. DOC.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

Demy 8vo size, 4s. net.
Imperial 32mo, 1s 6d. net.
The Canticles only. Demy 8vo, 6d. net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

DECEMBER 1 1925

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 1137.)

THE PROBLEM OF INTERPRETATION: WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO SONG

BY ERIK BREWERTON

Interpretation in music is one manifestation of that individualism which lay at the heart of the romantic movement. When an artist claims to say what he likes in his own way, when he regards the search for self-expression as the Alpha and Omega of his mission in life, he becomes a romantic composer if he creates music, and a romantic interpreter if he reproduces it. Without the growth of this essential individualism we should have heard very little of interpretation in the world of music. When we think of the performances of a Liszt or of a Rubinstein, for example, in comparison with the earlier style of playing associated with the names of Clementi and Mozart, we are conscious of a pungency of difference which cannot be accounted for on merely technical grounds.

Whatever be the ultimate value of this claim to compose and reproduce music as the musician in each case thinks fit, it has had the support of the public, which is itself romantic in its interest in persons rather than in things, in its demand for novelty and in its taste for strong sensations. In other words, the demand for interest, to the exclusion of such ideas as pleasure or truth or beauty, comes to mean the insurgence of the individual who takes things up and makes them part of himself, infusing them with his own life until he is tired of them and sheds them as a tree its leaves. The interpreter believes that what is right and proper in general may be disregarded by some, if they are strong enough to assert themselves and convince their audience. He takes short views—those of a career—and he instinctively stretches out his hands to the flames of his own kindling. The interpreter tends to exploit music for his own advantage, as many an actor exploits a play, and, gifted with a personality, he succeeds so long as the public betrays almost as languid an interest in the name of the composer as in that of the playwright. The interpreter is a showman who decks himself in borrowed plumes. He stakes all on an immediate impression. This is the service he would say that he renders for the applause he receives—that he conducts thousands to the shrines of a Mozart, a Beethoven, a Chopin, who, left to themselves, might never make these pilgrimages at all. It is useless to deny that he is a most important and influential person. He has the prevailing charm of the child with its irresponsibility and disposition to tell lies. This only means that he is an artist like his elder brother, the composer, with a smaller sphere to work in, but with more liberty and more immediate success. Although children are charming, their evidence is admitted to be so seriously warped by their imagination as to be of little or of no value in a law-court, and how to make artists—the children who seldom grow up—responsible, is a problem which troubled Plato so much that he had, much against his will, to debar them from entrance to his ideal state of society.

In spite of what de Vigny eloquently claimed for the poet, and Liszt, following him, for the musician, there will always be a deep-seated reluctance to allow these 'music-makers' and 'dreamers of dreams' to give laws to the world with the authority of a chef d'orchestre. The romantic artist, transported by his inspiration, forgets that what he would like to impose on all is only his own private dream—that his vision has no overwhelming superiority over the more humble insight of others. From the composer as from the poet, we demand more than inspiration, just as from the performer and the actor we demand more than temperament. With the creative artist it is not so much his inspiration that matters, as what he says under its influence; with him who reproduces the work of others, not so much his temperament as the value of his reproduction. No critic could dogmatically pronounce on the right way to play a Beethoven Sonata or a Shakespearean rôle, but there are certain ways of playing them which a critic might pronounce emphatically wrong. If he may not do this, then art and its appreciation collapse; art, with more pleasure in it, being like the business of life, a matter of making choices, and choice implies exclusion.

The true musician is seldom conscious of that power of interpretation which is often attributed to him. He would resent the idea of being congratulated on his powers, because he would feel that he is not exerting himself so much as submitting himself to the composer he admires. The more intimately acquainted he is with the composer, the less is he conscious of himself. The dozen songs of Schubert he sings represent the hundred in which he has steeped his sensibility. Art is long, and a man might be a great Beethoven player and only play six of the Sonatas.

The expressiveness of a work of art grows and thrives on the imagination of a sensitive public. 'Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts' is what others besides Shakespeare might say. It is the work which the performer does for the composer, which the audience does for both composer and performer. But there should never be a doubt as regards the primacy of the composer, never a suggestion that the performer or listener is indulging himself at the expense of another. It is perhaps due to our lack of a national spirit in music, springing from the soil, as in Russia, or from the best traditions of Germany, that the names of great composers do not warm us with a vigilant and cherishing affection. Wherever this feeling runs strong we ought to hear less of the performer's originality, temperament, and powers of interpretation, because we should expect a high seriousness in all he undertook, and, recognising it, should respect him more, though we talked about him less.

The musician, like the poet, interprets life and ennobles it thereby. He does this through a powerful instinct there is no need to attempt to examine here. But great things are often put to little uses, and interpretation, which in its highest sense is merely the scope of every artist, is often confined nowadays to a wanton emotionalism on the one hand and to a narrow intellectuality on the other.

It is noticeable in Mr. Plunket Greene's book on 'Interpretation in Song' that his shrewd and acute remarks are the more welcome as the music considered is the less great. What is excellent in Stanford's 'Crow' is irritating in Schubert's 'Doppelgänger.' Great music cannot be intellectualised. Certain characteristic songs may be, because here we can afford to treat the claims of music lightly. The question suggested after reading each of these analyses the author is so fond of giving is, 'Will all this enable one to sing the song?' The answer naturally comes, 'One must feel the song first through the music.' But when the song is felt in this complete and direct manner the detailed analysis is not only forgotten in the stress of the emotion, but henceforth inapplicable. There are 'reasons of the heart,' as Pascal reminded the logicians of his day, and a climax in music which is not made from the heart, but is merely an effect dictated and elaborated from the head, lacks the true ring of good metal. These instructions on 'How to sing a song' may convey many useful hints as regards details that are sometimes overlooked, but in the main, songs must convince of themselves, and need no sponsor to introduce them to some one who then takes upon himself to act as their interpreter. An actor might carry us away with his Hamlet or Macbeth, but if he wrote a series of articles explaining how he acted these parts—as Poe in an essay professed to explain how he wrote 'The Raven'—we should no doubt be interested but unconvinced, for we should know that it was what he left unexplained that moved us in his acting. The result of this growing intellectualising of art which stands in such contrast with the spirit of the earlier 'Romantics' is to degrade the artist to the level of the craftsman. The craftsman may interest and delight us, but he does not carry us away. Studying a Schubert song as a problem, classifying it, resolving it, pruning away everything in the matter of rhythm or of diction which may offend the taste, will never re-create it. Only the musical imagination can do this, and it is impossible to analyse such a power, any more than we can analyse the charm of Pachmann's playing. It was such a mistaken attitude that Liszt exposed when he wrote of some famous operatic singer of his day:

> Tout est bien appris ; rien n'est spontanément créé. On trouve presque toujours que cela est bien ; on ne sent presque jamais que cela est beau.

It is not surprising, therefore, that one who is convinced that song is music and must in the end be judged on the same parity as all other music, will find songs mentioned in this book on interpretation, which are not of great musical importance, and secondly, will complain that some of the author's remarks assume a very paradoxical appearance. As grounds for this later grievance the author permits himself to say, of 'Der Doppelgänger': 'The purely musical effects of this song are nil,' and of Schumann's 'Er, der herrlichste von Allen,' 'This song is entirely musical in its effects. It is in this respect the exact opposite of "Der Doppelgänger."' A song must stand or fall as music. We are not dealing with any outlandish form of entertainment such as a musically accompanied recitation in the style of Schumann or of Grieg, nor even with an extract from an opera in the advanced style of 'Pelléas et Mélisande.' Both are songs ; and to select them for their merits as such and then to say that one is less musical than the other is paradoxical. No pianist would think of saying that a Chopin Polonaise or Scherzo is less musical, being less melodic, than a Chopin Nocturne. Is Handel's recit., 'Deeper and deeper still,' less musical than the air, 'Waft her, angels,' that follows it? When a writer warns the singer against making 'purely musical effects,' he surely means simply that the singer should not make the wrong musical effects. When he contrasts 'Der Doppelgänger' with 'Er, der herrlichste von Allen,' he surely means that each has its own character. A singer would probably succeed better in the one than in the other because one would appeal to him more than the other. But that there is any radical difference between them, or that those who preferred 'Er, der herrlichste von Allen' were more musical than those who preferred 'Der Doppelgänger,' which the author claims to be 'the greatest song in the world,' it is difficult to see. If song is partly literature, partly drama, and partly music, it is a sorry hybrid, and it is obviously better to read literature, hear pure instrumental music, and visit the theatre for the drama. And this is what intellectual singers more or less imply.

Song can be a genuine form of art only when it lifts the words into a new world where they have a new life. Only by the absorption of the words into music can the song escape being a hybrid, the fate of opera. Just as Berlioz was the first to demoralise the symphony, introducing impurities into its system which some modern composers such as Glazounov have endeavoured to expel, so Wagner and his disciples degraded singing, robbing it of melody, confining it with merciless consistency to the words, making it heavy, unlyrical, and tedious. To have done this for something which we associate with the birds, the open air, and all that is free and noble and spontaneous, required extraordinary abilities.

It is difficult to believe that singing could ever be made tedious, but 'Tannhäuser' made it so. Now, in the interests of 'dramatic truth,' it is common to hear phrases broken up, sobs, shouts, and speech interpolated, a monotonous declamation adopted, a sensitive instrument abused. There is some truth in Nietzsche's caustic remark, 'Wagner is only sung by ruined voices; they are more dramatic.' With a Schubert Sonata the pianist has only the notes. They are sufficient for him, and he feels no call to dredge the composer's life for some dramatic episode to guide him in his playing. With one of his great songs the music is equally sufficient. The singer is more likely to give the opening phrase of 'The Wanderer' impressively by a sympathetic surrender to the introduction on the pianoforte than by thinking of the meaning of the first words of the poem. What Schubert thought of—if he thought of anything—is not our concern. In such songs he has left us something just as satisfying and supreme as in his best instrumental music. Through him and a few others who by their native genius have realised a distinct form of art, and not merely superimposed one art on another, the musician can leave the orchestra, the violin, or the pianoforte and take up song without stooping.

I recollect hearing a composer last year adjudicating on the performance of one of his choral compositions. In his remarks he spoke of the power music had of bringing out the hidden beauties of certain words, and he instanced 'pearl' and 'gold' which occurred in the piece he had set to music. He might have said with more truth that music invests words with beauty of its own exceeding power, as art in general adds a splendour and dignity to our lives. Music does not follow words; it transfigures them. Anyone can test this assertion by reading the poem over before he knows the music and afterwards when he has responded to it. It is by no means fantastic, for example, to say that Schumann has exalted the poet Heine, giving him a greater power and range. To dot the i's and cross the t's of the poem, to trot along by its side with dog-like fidelity; how many composers we have who aim at just this—and succeed! As from the speaking voice words sometimes come with a charm or pathos which gives a kind of ulterior value to their literal significance, so music has a power which makes it impossible to read certain poems without recalling notes that have enshrined them, makes it impossible to read Goethe's 'Kennst du das Land' without recalling the nostalgic opening phrase of Liszt's setting, or W. Müller's 'Das Wandern ist des Müllers Lust' without falling a victim to Schubert, or Heyse's 'Murmeldnes Lüftchen' without echoing Jensen's sweet strain. Good poems, the musician will confess, but better songs!

It is refreshing, when speculations such as the foregoing are nearing deep waters, to find precisely the opposite opinion developed by the French editor and critic, M. Chantavoine, in his book, 'De Couperin à Debussy.' In his introductory essay he is emphatic that the character of French music is inherited from the primitive 'chanson,' where it is the aim of the music to follow the words in every twist and turn of their course. From this endeavour and achievement he deduces the general unpopularity of instrumental music in France—peu goûtée, as he says—and points out the constant presence in it of verbal, pictorial, and intellectual preoccupations, as may be illustrated from early days in the curious titles Couperin gave to the pieces he composed for the clavecin. The author is not slow to demonstrate the advantage of such a keenly alert, nimble, intelligent, and adaptable music, but he admits that these qualities are only compensations, though great compensations, for something weak, thin, and anæmic in French melody, which lacks both the richness of Italian and the capacity for development of German melody. French music so critical, interesting, and ductile, has not, according to M. Chantavoine, a strong, vigorous life of its own. It neither lives, nor is loved, for itself, and therefore easily suffers from the invasion of foreign elements. It remains analytical music, always tributary to some thought, gesture, or action, which it seeks to emphasise or evoke. Such a view makes it quite clear that this music cannot be approached from the same angle of appreciation as Italian, German, or English music. For the foreigner it will retain the attractions and the drawbacks of the exceptional. Its art-song should be of a very different order from that of other countries—notably from that of Germany, which owes so much to Schubert and Schumann, instrumental composers of songs to this extent, that it is impossible to admire their best songs without having an admiration for instrumental music also; and Liszt nobly vindicated this view in making his famous Schubert transcriptions. When we read:

> La musique instrumentale réussit peu en France, elle n'amuse pas les Français; il leur faut du chant, une musique où, tandis que les notes plaisent à l'oreille, des mots sollicitent l'esprit. Dans la musique purement instrumentale l'intelligence perd pied et le Français a l'horreur de ne pas comprendre—we feel that it is only necessary to translate such a book as 'Interpretation in Song' into French, and read it overlooking a boulevard in Paris, to endorse everything within its pages.

Meanwhile we remain in solid England, and are forced to the conclusion that the French, like other peoples, have the defects of their qualities It is unfortunate that instrumental and vocal music have not, with them, achieved a more lasting and favourable rapport. For to their mind there is evidently something quite pointed and invidious in the antithesis we often hear expressed in common parlance, 'music and singing.' Or, if 'music should be song,' as Chopin once declared, we must add that song should also be music. If this were so, an otherwise excellent Italian writer, Roberto Bracco, would not have been moved to write a perfectly sincere eulogium on the romances of Tosti.

In the long run, the reluctance our vocalists often betray to sing good songs is due not so much to a lack of intelligence as to a lack of musical sensibility, or at any rate to a lack of trust in it. There is the musical side of the imagination, just as there is the poetical and the pictorial. The better a man sings his Schubert, the better he will sing his Handel, and vice versâ. Both wrote for musical people, and if species differ in music, the genus remains the same. The singer who finds no joy in a sonata, or the instrumentalist who is untouched by a song, is a defective. The message which comes through the artist and arouses an answering thrill in the breast of the listener is the same message in the sonata and in the song. It can neither be analysed by the critic nor superimposed on the notes by the performer. When there, it is there like light, and gives the musician certain inalienable powers which may be abused, but are none the less real, privileges of true breeding, and authentic signs.

The usurpation of æsthetics over art, of the craftsman over the artist, of the interpreter over the creator, augurs ill for the instincts of the generation which allows and encourages it. When music is abandoned to the mercies of the busy and curious intellect, many must share the resentment of the Greeks when Socrates set about to convert into a science what to them was the art of life—a profound feeling of alarm and irritation.

A POSTSCRIPT TO A 'MUSICAL CRITIC'S HOLIDAY'

By Ernest Newman

(Concluded from November number, page 981.)

III.

When I began this 'Postscript' I intended to discuss at length the question raised by Mr. Evans of objectivity in criticism, but as I cannot inflict myself indefinitely on the Editor and the readers of the Musical Times, I must reserve for another occasion the bulk of what I had proposed to say on that subject. Perhaps I may be allowed a personal explanation on one or two points. After what I said in the first of these articles, it should be unnecessary for me to add that in my discussion (in 'A Musical Critic's Holiday') of the problems of objectivity v. subjectivity in criticism, consistency of opinion over a number of years, and so on, I was not, as Mr. Evans seems to imagine, claiming certitude for either my own principles (if I have any) or my own practice, but arguing a certain case. On the problem of objectivity and subjectivity there is a vast amount to be said on both sides, and so far am I from supposing that I know what the solution of the problem is, that I was secretly rather glad when circumstances put it out of my power to go on with the consideration of it. One or two reviewers have quite rightly pointed out that an apparent promise, in the early part of the book, to take up the question of objectivity in criticism later is not fulfilled. The truth is that the writing of the book was several times interrupted by ill-health and by other work, and, finally, for some five or six months, by my visit to America. Three-fourths of it had been in the printer's hands for months before the concluding sections were written. When I came to write these, and I considered taking up the thread I had abandoned, I found not only that it was impossible to take it up again without running on to an inordinate length, but that the more I thought about the problem the more thinking it seemed to call for. In the end, the promise to take up again the question of objective criticism had to be left unredeemed, it being impossible then to alter the earlier pages of the book, which had been long in type.

I only trouble the reader with these personal details to assure him, and, I hope, to convince Mr. Evans also, that I am very far indeed from imagining I can see light at the end of the dark tunnel in which this age-long controversy of subjective and objective is carried on. I have let my Imaginary Critic point out certain fallacies in the subjective theory; and Mr. Evans has in turn pointed out certain fallacies in the objective theory; and the list might be almost indefinitely extended on both sides of the case. One thing, however, seems to me to be tolerably certain. When two people allege diametrically opposite things, they cannot both be right. Now what does 'right' mean in musical criticism? In the last resort, in art or anything else, it can mean only what the vast majority of people think, not because they have any reasons for wanting to think it, but because the logic of things has forced them to do so. We have no real ground for declaring positively that Shakespeare is a greater poet than Longfellow, except that practically every one who cares for poetry thinks he is. There are no doubt people who prefer Longfellow to Shakespeare; and if the two camps were about equal in numbers we should be compelled to admit that the one side was about as likely to be right as the other. But the numbers are so overwhelmingly the greater on the one side that we have no hesitation in saying that the Shakespeareans are right and the Longfellowians wrong.

The antithesis here is an extreme one. The case becomes more difficult when it is contemporary art that is in question. Which of us, when dealing with this art, is entitled to claim that he is right and those who differ from him wrong? Right and wrong have surely no certain meaning except as applied to centuries, or at least generations, of opinion; therefore to claim that we are right and the others wrong is to claim for ourselves the gift of prophecy. If anyone tells me that Vogler's music is more vital than Beethoven's, I take the liberty to laugh at him, because my own experience in the matter is confirmed by that of millions of other people during the last hundred years. I cannot say at the moment whether in their own day there were people who regarded Vogler as being the equal of Beethoven. I have not looked into the records, but I do know there were people—Weber was one of them—who thought Vogler a man of the future. Had I told Weber, in 1820, that he was wrong on this point, he would probably have asked me heatedly who the devil I thought I was to say I was right and he was wrong on a matter of opinion; and he would have had some justification for doing so. It is time that has proved the Beethovenians to have been right and the Voglerians to have been wrong.

Apply this now to present-day conditions. If a man chooses to say that Milhaud is a greater composer than Elgar, who can gainsay him? It means only that he prefers the Milhaud flavour to the Elgar flavour; and there is not the slightest reason why he should not do so, just as there is no reason why he should not prefer burgundy to sauterne. It is the expression of a purely personal preference, of a personal constitution of the palate and a personal state of the digestion—a matter of diet, in fact, about which it is futile to quarrel, for in art, as in life, each man must be allowed to eat what he likes best and what best agrees with him. It is time that will decide whether Elgar matters more than Milhaud, just as it is time that has decided that Beethoven matters a good deal and Vogler not at all. We no longer say of a man who in 1850 preferred some inferior French composer to Berlioz that these things are all a matter of subjective taste, and that nobody is objectively 'right' and nobody 'wrong.' We say quite positively that such a man was wrong, and we are entitled to say so because, and only because, time has shown him to be wrong. This brings us round again, it will be seen, to something like an objective standard; by 'time' we mean the pressure upon the consciousness of the vast majority of a certain logic inherent in things.

But the passion for prophecy is ineradicable in us; each of us tries to strengthen himself in his opinion of his contemporaries by persuading himself that the Great Assize of the future will think as he thinks. To keep on merely shouting party or personal cries at each other is worthy only of school-boys or clansmen; and it was because I was tired of this absurdity that, in my book, I tried to find out whether some light on our present problems could not be thrown by the past. For the problems of judgment in our day are essentially no different from those in previous periods. We know just where previous periods were right and where wrong; is it not possible, then, to derive from a study of the past some guiding principles, if only negative ones, for our own practice? But for A and B to bellow contrary cocksure affirmations at each other without giving any reasons why the personal taste of the one should be accepted more than that of the other is quite puerile.

Some months ago, Mr. Cecil Gray published a volume on contemporary composers in which, I understand, he laid it down that my own opinions were 'generally wrong.' The book appeared during my absence in America, and so did not come to me for review. It would, indeed, have been an exceedingly difficult task for me to review it: for if I had ventured to disagree with Mr. Gray on any point, then, on his own admission, I should have been wrong, while if I had agreed with him, that would automatically have put him in the wrong. I cannot imagine a reviewer to be in a position of greater embarrassment. The only review of Mr. Gray's book that I read was a short but decisive one by M. André Cœuroy, in La Revue Musicale, and this was very interesting to me because of the light it seemed to throw on subjective criticism:

> This book [said M. Cœuroy] does not bore you for a moment, and is often amusing: the author thinks he is a Ravachol, and is only a Homais.* All the commonplaces of the small bourgeois musician are to be met with here.

M. Cœuroy then gives the reader a hint of what Mr. Gray's opinions are on Stravinsky, Ravel, the French school in general, the 'Six,' &c. He finds Mr. Gray's innocence and energy 'very sympathetic':

> What is less so is that this book, which, to judge by its title, is a survey of contemporary music, devotes whole chapters to Strauss, Delius, Elgar, Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, Scriabin, Schönberg, Sibelius, Bartók, Busoni, van Dieren, contains three pages on Puccini, and does not even mention the name of Fauré. However, no great harm is done, for no one will take this comical little book seriously.

Now I am not to be understood as agreeing with everything that M. Cœuroy says. I have read various articles of his, and, able writer as he is, on most matters I think I should be more in agreement with Mr. Gray—if the latter can bear the shock of my saying so. I quote the review only to show the absurdity and the tiresomeness of merely subjective criticism. Mr. Gray could not be more convinced that he is right and M. Cœuroy wrong than the latter is that he is right and Mr. Gray wrong on any point on which the two disagree. What for Mr. Gray is an apodictic certainty is for M. Cœuroy merely comical. In our school-days we used to be invited to try to imagine what would happen if an irresistible force were to meet an immovable body. Our awe at the possible result is nothing to what we feel when the irresistible force is itself an immovable body, and the immovable body another irresistible force, as is the case when two subjective critics lay down the law to each other. Can it be wondered at that the public, tired of all this dogmatic confrontation of one purely personal opinion by another, gives up reading musical criticism as a pure farce that, so to speak, cannot be taken seriously?

* The stupid chemist, the type of the self-satisfied bourgeois, in 'Madame Bovary.'

I make no claim to be any less absurd than my colleagues. I too, in my younger days, suffered from a superiority complex, and thought, like Mr. Gray, that the mere fact that anyone differed from me on a point of art proved him to be wrong. One becomes less confident as one grows older, more inclined to leave to the next generation but two the business of settling who has been right and who wrong in this matter or that. All we can venture to be fairly sure of is that though individuals may be wrong in their judgment of contemporary musical values, the community as a whole is right; the extremes cancel each other out, leaving the commonsense of the majority in permanent possession. This conclusion, I know, is unpalatable to the gentlemen who constitute the extremes, but after hearing all they have to say my original opinion, based as it was on a study of the past, remains undisturbed. Once more let me say that it is only by an anatomy of the dead past that we can hope to get any light upon the perplexing present; there is nothing we can think or say that was not thought or said by our ancestors in the same line of business. Mr. Evans, with his usual passion for ignoring facts and painting pretty but fantastic pictures, divides the critics into two neat parcels, one—a very small one—of 'progressives,' the other—a very large one—of 'reactionaries':

> One type [he says] clings tenaciously to what is, and therefore dedicates itself to the past, or, at most, to such composers of more recent date in whom the inventive element is not paramount. The other is curious as to what may be, and on the alert for all that offers a hope, however faint, of growth and development.

And so on and so on. It is a pretty picture, but it is based upon a complacent ignorance of the facts, both present and historic. Some of the 'alert' minds of the past prided themselves on their 'alertness' as much as Mr. Evans prides himself on his; but we can see now that their 'alertness' did not guarantee their wisdom in the matter of critical judgment. We call some of these people reactionaries now; to themselves, however, they were the progressives of their time. I cannot give the evidence in detail here. It is a subject for a book rather than an article; but evidence in plenty can be found by any one who, instead of repeating the current clichés about the mistakes of the critics of the past, will take the trouble to get a first-hand acquaintance with the facts. We call Chorley a reactionary, but in his own opinion he was a progressive. He saw Rossini as the daring innovator who was carrying opera to heights hitherto undreamed of, and the new German school as people who, if they had their way, would ruin opera. Chorley was no fool, let me repeat; when we get inside his mind, and also manage to place ourselves at the point of view—or one of the points of view—of his epoch, we see that he thought as hard, and, in his way, as logically, about the problems of his day as any of us are doing about the problems of ours. The trouble has been simply that the commanding genius of Wagner in his great period completely altered all the factors of the problem.* One of the points I have tried to establish in my book is that all the theories, all the calculations of a period are liable to be upset by the coming of a genius who himself is incalculable, something that cannot possibly be deduced from the general trend of the art at the time—an explosive force after whose coming music will never be the same again, and who consequently makes the problems of his age bear a very different look to posterity from what they bore to the men of that age. I suggest that the history of previous phenomena of this kind should teach us a lesson in prudence and humility.

To this it may be objected that the 'alert' minds that picked out Wagner have justified themselves. I would counter this by saying that equally 'alert' minds have gone lamentably wrong, and, believing themselves to be the daring progressives of the day, exist for us now only as melancholy warnings against the vanity of prophesying. Suppose I were to tell of a composer of the 19th century who was described by his admirers as the greatest dramatic composer the world had ever seen; a master of expression; the creator of heart-searching melodies; the man who, for the first time in the history of music, had made opera a contemporary art, i.e., one that voiced the thoughts, the moods, the aspirations of the best intelligence of the day; the man who, in his restless quest for perfection, found it necessary to break all the older moulds and forge a new dramatic instrument for himself; a composer so far in advance of his time that he had to watch in person over every detail of the production of his operas, and create a new type of singer and actor to bring out all the subtlety there was in his music: a composer whose glory would assuredly grow from generation to generation. Suppose I were to ask the reader to guess the name of this marvellous composer. He would almost certainly reply, 'Wagner.' He would be wrong; it was Meyerbeer. Practically everything that is now said in praise of Wagner was at one time said of him also. It will not do to sneer at the writers who said it; they were quite as intelligent, quite as well-informed, as the critics of to-day. We must once more try to place ourselves at their point of view. They surveyed the past and the present, and from them forecasted the future; that they were not the ignoramuses that modern criticism is inclined to see in them is evidenced by the fact that so fastidious a musician as Chopin could say that Meyerbeer had

* It is constantly forgotten by modern writers upon this subject that they and the earlier critics of Wagner are really talking about two quite different Wagners. The Wagner that most of the earlier critics treated so critically—and quite rightly in some respects—was the Wagner of the first period. Schumann, for instance, heard nothing of Wagner's later than 'Tannhäuser.' People to-day do not generally realise that no new opera of Wagner's was produced between 'Lohengrin' in 1850 and 'Tristan' in 1865. The 'Meistersinger' followed in 1868. All the earlier critics had to go upon, then, were the operas of his youth plus his confused and confusing prose works, which I am convinced from a study of the documents of the time, were the chief agent in arousing opposition to him. Their arrogance especially irritated many readers. It was only with the superb operas of his later period that Wagner justified himself; and we cannot blame the critics of the mid-century for not foreseeing that the muddled theoretician of the 'Lohengrin' period would develop into the superb practician of a decade later. The reader should constantly bear these details in his mind when he is reading quotations arbitrarily selected to show how wrong 'the critics' were about Wagner.

'made himself immortal' with 'Robert the Devil.' Had Wagner never been born, perhaps we should still be seeing in Meyerbeer something of the great man he was for his contemporaries. The trouble has simply been that the Wagner dynamite charge has blown that old world of opera sky-high; and the Meyerbeer partisans who plumed themselves on being the progressives of their day now seem to possess the progressiveness only of the crab. Again I suggest the necessity for humility and caution. We are all 'alert,' in that we are all keen to know what is going on around us in music; but to succumb to the vanity of calling ourselves 'progressives' is to claim a foreknowledge of the musical history of the next fifty years or so. Only our posterity can say whether our activities have meant progress or not—progress as distinct from fermentation. The tendencies that we imagine to be progressive may prove to be really no more progressive than those of Rossini and Meyerbeer were; they may all be put in the lumber-room by some man of high genius, like Wagner, whose coming no one can predict.

But I must stop. The subject is infinite. I have no desire to dogmatise; I suggest only doubts and lines of inquiry. It is impossible to spend one's life in the practice of criticism without arriving at a feeling of doubt about it all; but it is also impossible to go on doing one's work in doubt as to the fundamental principles of it. May I suggest once more that it is only from an anatomy of the music and the criticism of the past that we can derive any principles at all (and those, perhaps, mostly only negative), and urge upon some student with the necessary leisure the desirability of writing a carefully documented history of musical opinion?

'THE CORPORACON FOR REGULATEING THE ART AND SCIENCE OF MUSIQUE'

By Jeffrey Mark

It has often seemed to me that artists do not sufficiently emphasise the professional nature of their activities. There is something of art in every profession, but little of profession in any art. (Here, of course, I am using 'profession' in the strict sense of the word. I am not thinking, for instance, of 'professional' musicians.) The actual difference between a profession and an art is that the first professes its direct usefulness to the community, and insists, therefore, on a scheme for the support of its individual members, whereas artists are simply content to 'go on,' and occasionally appeal for interest and reward. Doctors and lawyers, for instance, have imposed themselves on humanity at large in a truly remarkable manner. They have managed to persuade people outside the mystery of their practice that what they do is absolutely necessary for their safety and comfort. What is more, they have an organization behind them which, although it disdains to use the more ordinary methods of advertisement, is yet able to persuade us to a conviction about anything else it can possibly conceive as 'necessary' or 'beneficial.'

Musicians would benefit considerably, in material matters, if only they would adopt some of the methods of the lawyers and doctors. I do not recommend that they should do so, but only say that this would be the result. Even if they began to insist on the dignity of their profession, and, among other things, to cut away all musical quacks and cheap-jacks from the sacred circle of qualified practitioners, it is fairly certain that the best of musicians would still remain outside that circle.

This preamble, irrelevant as it may seem, will serve to bring to notice a 17th-century effort in this direction, evidences of which I came across in the British Museum (Harleian MSS. 1911), about a year ago. This is a book of Minutes relating to the meetings of 'The Corporacon for Regulateing the Art and Science of Musique,' re-founded, apparently, by Charles I., and containing direct evidence of its activities intermittently between 1661 and 1679.

The intention behind the work of the Corporation was no new one. The unattached minstrel had been a problem for two or three centuries. As early as 1469, Edward IV., finding that all sorts of greasy knaves were earning good livings under the colour of his own livery, established a Guild of Minstrels to restrain all unqualified songsters and instrumentalists, and insisting that all such should practise at home until they were considered sufficiently expert. When they attained to the pass standard, they were admitted to the Guild on payment of 3*s.* 4*d.* Similarly, the series of severe ordinances against strolling players, minstrels, tumblers, and the like, culminating in the famous Act of Elizabeth classing them as 'rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars,' was not only designed as a necessary measure for the public safety, but was brought about to some extent, at least, by pressure from the professional classes of musicians, whose fears for the dignity of their profession were strengthened (as in the case of the doctors and lawyers to-day) by the more powerful contingency that these nondescripts were capable of influencing the security of their own livelihood.

It would be interesting to trace the various stages in the struggle between licensed and unlicensed musicians, and to determine to what extent music was professionally developed between, say, 1300 and 1700. Much of the evidence as to minstrel guilds, town waits, and the various bodies of private (i.e., noblemen's) musicians will be found in E. K. Chambers's 'The Mediæval Stage' (vol i., chap. 3). Here it will be sufficient to say that a good deal was done in this direction even before 1469, and that everything points to a conclusion that Edward's Guild continued its existence, intermittently and in rather a vague way, right up to the time of Charles I., when the Corporacon was definitely re-founded.

I have not been able to find anything (indeed I have not looked) as to the doings of the new Corporation before 1660. Perhaps this is just as well, as I can see already that an account of its activities even in Charles II.'s time will take up a good deal of space.

It is interesting to note, at the outset, that Edward IV.'s original foundation—a Marshal, two Wardens, and an Assistant—still holds good in Charles's Corporation, the only difference being an increase to five, six, or more in the number of Assistants. This in itself is fair evidence as to some sort of continuity. The first date under which Minutes are recorded is October 21, 1661, and from then until July 12, 1664, they are signed by the Marshal only, Nicholas Lanier (who received his appointment under Charles I.), or by (Captain) Henry Cooke (Deputy-Marshal). There is a gap between this early date and June 24, 1662, when it was > . . . ordered that John Hingston and George Hudson are chosen Wardens . . . (and that) Assistants shall pay five ppounds for their Admission.

It is evident either that the Corporation met at irregular intervals, or that Minutes were taken haphazardly, or perhaps only when business of some importance was transacted. The meetings for the most part would seem to have been > . . . holden at Durham Yeard in the Strand in the County of Midd.,

as appears in an entry:

> Upon the 31st day of August in the nineteenth year of our Soveraigne Lord King Charles the Second;

although on two occasions they were 'holden in Yorke buildings,' and on two others 'at y^e^ 3 tunns Talvern.'

The third record of a meeting is on June 27, 1662, while on October 28, 1662:

> Henry Cooke, Charles Colman, Christopher Gibbons, Matthew Lock [were] nominated Assistants.

On October 23, it was decided that > . . . Thomas Laniere be chosen and admitted Assistant in the Roome and place of Henry Lawes deceased.

The next meeting recorded is on January 13, 1663, and a week later we come across the first evidence of the Corporation's disciplinary activities, when it was > . . . ordered that Edward Sadler for his insufficientie in the Art of Musique be from Henceforward Silented and disabled from the Exercise of any kinde in publique houses or meetings:

—which would seem to indicate that the officers took a very wide view of their activities. Other cases, however, had already been dealt with, or at any rate summoned to appear before them, for under the same date it was > . . . ordered that John Gardner be fined for his non appearance the sum of four shillings, and John Howard and John Mosse the sum of five shillings each of them.

On February 3, the Corporation's activities in this connection were increased, and one member of a respectable family of organists (Wanlesse*) came under its censure rather heavily, when it was > . . . ordered by the Marshall, Wardens and Assistants of the Art and Science of Musique that Joseph Galloway, John Howard, Thomas Wanlesse, and Thomas [Helgele?] be and are hearby fined for their non appearance upon sumons three poundes each person.

Evidently about this time the officers began to feel the strain of controlling such offenders too much for them, for at the same meeting it was resolved > . . . that Mr. Richard Graham be ordered their Solisotter at Law to be imployed from tyme to tyme accordingly as there shall be occasion for him.

Possibly the hiring of the new 'Solisotter' had some effect, for a fortnight later (February 17) we find the refractory Mosse under a still more ponderable indictment:

> Ordered by the Marshall, Wardens and Assistants for Regulateing of those that doo use, exercise or teach Musique that John Mosse of London: for his contempt in not appearing before them upon severall sumons be and is hearby find the sum of three pounds.

A meeting is recorded on February 24, then there is a sudden gap until November 10, when, no doubt, the winter sessions began. On November 24, it is noted that > Whereas Symon Hopper one of the Assistants to the Corporacon of Musique, surrenders his Interest in the same, it is ordered that John Bannister be and is hearby elected to his Roome and place.

Meetings were continued through December 1 and 15, and then held over into the New Year, when, on January 13, 1664, it was ordered that > . . . Matthew Lock, Chr. Gibbons, Doctr. Charles Colman and William Gregory . . . do come to the Chamber at Durham Yeard on Tewsday next at too of the Clock in the Afternoon and to bring each of them four poundds or to show cause to the Contrary.

Evidently then, as now, subscriptions were very hard to gather in, for on March 23 we find a resolution to the effect that > . . . those of the said Corporacon that have not paid in their five pounds a man do bring it each of them on Wensday next for the use of the Coporacon . . . and if any faile the Corp. . . . do proceed to an election of others in his or there Roomes and places.

On March 1, it had already been decided that > . . . their be a peticon drawne and presented to the Kings Matie for the Renewing of their former patent.

And they were fortunate in getting the Royal confirmation very quickly. Meetings are recorded on April 20 and June 21, but on June 24,

* A John Wanlesse was organist at Lincoln Cathedral from 1616 until, possibly, 1625. An anthem by him is included in Adrian Batten's organ-book at St. Michael's College, Tenbury. A Thomas Wanlesse was organist of York Minster in 1691; Mus.Bac. (Cantab.), 1698; died, 1721. Church music by him is in the B.M. (Tudway Collection, Harleian MSS. 7341, Add. MSS. 17,820). This may be the delinquent of 1663, grown wiser with years—or possibly his son.

feeling their 'solisotter' and the new patent behind them, the officers proceeded to a re-affirmation of their policy that

> . . . the Corporacon do proceed to a Suite in Law against all such that make any Benefitt or advantaige of Musique in England and Wales, and that doe combine or doe not obey the Kings Maties Gratious Graunt under the great Seale of England to the said Corporacon.

A trifle vague, perhaps, but otherwise very impressive!

On June 24, John Bannister and John Lilly were appointed Wardens. Next comes a misplaced entry under the date March 31, that > . . . Henry Cooke and George Hudson, John Hingston and John Lilly doe meete fower of the musique of the cittie of London to treat upon such Matters and things as concerne the good of the said Corporacon.

On June 28, it was ordered that > . . . John S[. . .]er and his Company doe appeare before this Corporacon.

An entry, under July 2, gives us an inkling as to how the practical examinations as to 'suffitientie' were carried on:

> That Richard Hudson doe sumon all the comon Minstrell from tyme to tyme before the Corporacon and also to sumon all such as have been approved by us —which would seem to suggest that once a musician had attained to the pass standard, the Corporation insisted on his keeping his technique up to scratch.

Under July 9, we read that > Mr. Thomas [Purc]ell be and is hearby chosen . . . assistant in the roome and place of Dr. Charles Colman deceased.

Apparently, also, the Corporation exercised some sort of professional supervision over the Royal Musicians, for on July 9, 1664, it was ordered that > . . . all his Maties Musique doe give their attendance at the Chamber at Durham Yeard for practise of Musique when the Master of the Musique shall appoyent them upon forfeature of 5^{d} each neglect.

Another meeting is recorded three days later, but a big gap appears between this date and January 21, 1671. In the interval, Cooke had become Marshall—probably in 1666, when Lanier died. The new records begin with the following announcement, that > Mr. Pelham Humfrey be and is hearby chosen one of the Assistants of y^{e} Corporacon of Musique in the Roome and place of Gregory Thorndon deceased.

The Minutes are signed as follows: Henry Cooke, Marshall; John Hingston, George Hudson, and John Lillie, Wardens. From this time onwards the records become very scrappy and perfunctory. Meetings were held on February 3, 1672 (when Hingston became Deputy-Marshall), on March 2, and on June 24, when Henry Cooke, 'by reason of sicknesse unable to attend the businesse of the Corporacon,' resigned his position, and was succeeded by Thomas Purcell, the uncle of Henry Purcell. (Thomas became an Assistant on July 9, 1664.) The Minutes under this last date bear the following signatures: John Hingston, Dept.-Marshall; Hum. Madge and Pell. Humfrey, Wardens; Antoni Robert, George Hudson, John Strong, John Lillie, John Rogers, Alphonso Marsh, John Harding, Assistants.

On July 18, John Blow was appointed an Assistant; on December 19, we read 'George Hudson deceased'; and on June 26, 1673, John Blow and William Gregory sign as Wardens. There are mere records of meetings on December 4, 1673, and on June 24, 1674. On July 23, W$^{m.}$ Gregory signs as Marshall, and John Hingston and Robt. Strong as Wardens. Meetings are noted on April 16, 1675; June 24, 1675; December 17, 1675; and January 10, 1676. Under the December date we read:

> Nicholas Staggins chosen Assistant and admitted Deputy-Marshall.

Staggins, the composer of the music to Dryden's 'Conquest of Granada,' was later to become Master of the King's Music. Although a musician of little ability, he early gained the favour of Charles II., and his immediate appointment to Deputy-Marshall was no doubt directly due to the King's influence.

The remaining dates of meetings are as follows: July 1, July 6, September 9, September 21, December 7 (1676); January 4, February 8, June 25, December 6 (1677); June 24, 1678 ('holden in Yorke buildings'); June 24 and July 20, 1679 (both 'holden at y^{e} 3 tunns Talvern'). No Minutes are recorded on any of these dates.

Whether or not the '3 tunns' proved too much for the discipline of the Corporation is not known, but it is certain that no meetings of the Marshall, Wardens, and Assistants are recorded after these two. At the back of the book, however, are a few entries 'made the 24th July, 1668,' by the Clerk of the Corporation, relating to the payment of 'quartridges' as below:

> Mr. Hazard } pd. their quartridges till Midsom̄er
> Mr. Galloway } day last.
> Mr. Jaques pd. allsoe till the 24th of June, 1668.
> Mr. John [Warren?] pd. allsoe till 24th June last.
> Mr. Lowe pd. his quartridges untill the 29th Sept., 68.

The difficulty of getting in quarterly dues from the members of the Corporation has already been referred to, and the only other entries in the book relate to this same matter. Under date August 31, 1679, are noted 'certain Acts and Orders at an Assembly of the Marshall, Wardens, and Assistants of the Science of Musique,' whereby members who had defaulted were fined 'fforty shillings' for 'refusal to pay' and 'contempt.'

The contents of this Minute-book have been given here in some detail. The book is valuable in that it contains a direct record, in part, of the activities of most of the principal musicians we know of between the time of the last of the great 'Elizabethans' and the rise of Purcell. It is remarkable how many of the better-known of them found it worth their while, for one reason or another, to act on the Corporation in some capacity. At best, it was not a great period for music production, and it is arguable that D'Urfey and Playford did more for music than the whole of them put together; but the Corporation, with John Bannister, Captain Cooke, Charles Colman, Christopher Gibbons, John Hingston, Pelham Humfrey, Nicholas and Thomas Lanier, Henry Lawes, Matthew Locke, Thomas Purcell, and Nicholas Staggins acting for it, certainly got the pick of the bunch. Thinking rapidly over the period, the names of George Jeffries, Christopher Simpson, and John Jenkins are the only ones which occur to me as missing, and of these, Jeffries was too busy otherwise (he was steward to Lord Hatton of Kirby, and a prolific composer besides), while Simpson is chiefly known as a theorist (his famous 'Division Violist' was first published in 1659).

The Corporation is chiefly interesting, however, because of the nature of its activities—particularly in that of restraining musicians from performing 'by reason of their insuffitientie.' It is possible that some such Corporation will be formed again.

There will be the old blind (to some extent true, of course) about the purpose and dignity of the profession, but the chief care will be—as always—the maintenance of a system securing adequate remuneration for the members. There are many ways of doing this, besides the stigmatising of quacks and cheap-jacks—it would be an interesting thing to draw up a list of practices possible to professional musicians as a parallel to those already established by the doctors and lawyers. However, I have no space to tell.

It will be a sorry day in many ways! But there are geese and swans in every profession and in every art. In music, at any rate, the swans still live largely on their inspiration, and the geese are an underfed and scraggy-looking lot—there is, indeed, little corn for either. The geese would become better fed, better looking, and more aggressive probably; and perhaps the swans would be left with more opportunity and more leisure—to sing!

THE NATURE OF HARMONY

By Matthew Shirlaw

(Concluded from September number, page 795.)

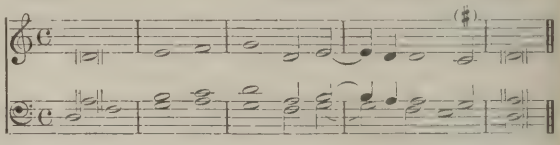
III.

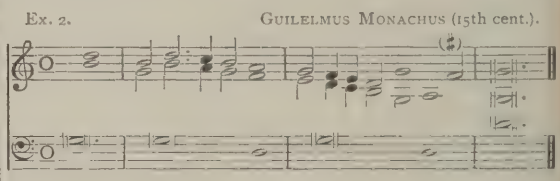
The Faux-bourdon, with its parallel thirds and sixths, does not of course constitute a true polyphony. For this, independence of the parts, diversity, is necessary: a diversity, however, that can be gathered up into an all-comprehending unity or harmony. In the polyphonic music of the 13th and part of the 14th centuries, while diversity exists in abundance, the union of the diverse elements in an appropriate harmony is still evidently a matter of considerable difficulty. Although composers did their best to make their three- or four-in-hand melodic teams run smoothly together, the result frequently led to confusion and intolerable clashing of the various voices. Beyond all question, the faux-bourdon helped greatly to clarify the harmony of polyphony, and to secure greater artistic unity. Before long, as in the case of the Organum, its strict parallelism was broken, and contrary as well as similar motion was introduced. It is highly significant that one of the principal factors in bringing about such a change was the Cadence:

Ex. 1. Franchinus Gafurius (15th cent.).



Another was a device that contains, as Prof. Wooldridge has remarked,* the obvious suggestion of an important principle which perhaps more than any other has contributed to the formation of modern music, viz., the harmonic bass. Thus while the two upper voices in Ex. 2 move in parallel thirds, the lowest voice seeks for the most part the bass or fundamental note of the harmonic triad:

Ex. 2. Guilelmus Monachus (15th cent.).



The influence of the faux-bourdon on the further development of polyphonic music was widespread and powerful. Faux-bourdons continued to be composed and written up to and even after the culminating polyphonic epoch of Palestrina and Lassus. The famous 'Miserere' of Gregorio Allegri consisted in large part of music written in this style. Nor did the principle of harmonic parallelism decay with the overthrow of the old polyphony. We find it flourishing in the new art that began to develop in the 17th century. Abundant examples of its employment may be discovered not only in the works of Scarlatti, Corelli, Handel, or in those of their contemporaries and immediate successors, but also in the works of composers right up to our own day. In new forms, and consisting of dissonant as well as consonant intervals, it presents one of the most characteristic features of 'modern' harmony.

The following example from Strauss's 'Elektra' differs in no respect from the ancient organum or faux-bourdon except with regard to the dissonances employed and its use of the chromatic instead of the diatonic scale:

* 'Oxford History of Music,' vol. ii., p. 118.

Ex. 3.

This is sufficiently obvious. Fairly obvious, also, is the composer's reason for tearing the ear with anything so violently discordant. Discord, even harsh discord, is not infrequently æsthetically justifiable, so long as the composer is able to preserve a due sense of proportion, and to remember that realism is not always necessarily artistic. What is not so obvious, however, is the manner in which Strauss arrives at such a super-discord. He first uses the chord as follows:

Ex. 4.

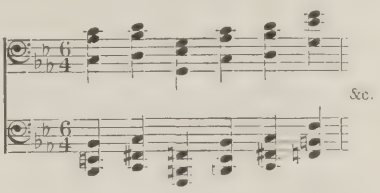
If this chord be played with the omission of its lowest note, we hear a harmonic formation that is quite familiar to us. It corresponds with what we know as the last inversion of a dominant 7th chord. The fact that Strauss employs the notation he does is of little moment. He writes exactly the same chord later as b, c♯ e♯ g♯, and at a different pitch as f g b d. And if the passage in Ex. 3 be played with the lowest note omitted, we have a chromatic succession of such chords, sweet and even cloying in effect. What, then, of the lowest sound of the chord. Whatever learned or unlearned explanations we may advance in order to account for this sound (and of course the full import of such chords can only be discussed later), the simple fact remains that it is actually heard, whether placed in the score or not, as the combination tone resulting from the sounds b—g♯, the two extreme sounds of the chord b c♯ e♯ g♯:

Ex. 5.

And when Strauss first writes the chord (see Ex. 4) he takes care to place its lowest note exactly where we hear it as a resultant sound. Every one who has conducted an orchestral rehearsal is but too well aware of the existence of such sounds, for they are sometimes very unpleasantly prominent. Strauss's method of procedure differs in no respect from that of the old discanters of the organum, except that with a familiar harmonic formation already present, he adds to this a lower resultant instead of a higher harmonic sound.

The same in principle, except that the harmonies do not proceed by successive degrees of the scale, is the following by Debussy, from his 'Pelléas et Mélisande':

Ex. 6.



Let the passage be played as below:

Ex. 7.

and it will be found that we have a succession of perfectly familiar chords. The harmonic basis of the first chord is simply c e g. Now if the sounds c e (or the inversion e c) be played:

Ex. 8.

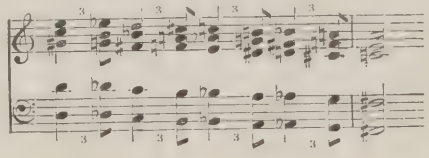
the fifth harmonic sound above e, viz., g♯, will be heard very distinctly. Although he writes it as a♭, this is the sound that Debussy uses instead of the more familiar g, the third harmonic sound of c. And similarly with the other chords, which are the same in every respect as the first.

Our last example of harmonic parallelism, from the same music-drama, is characteristic enough to satisfy the most ardent Debussyite:

Ex. 9.

At first sight it appears to be entirely different in character from the other examples, seeing that it exhibits contrary, not similar, motion throughout. A glance at Ex. 10, however, informs us of the real nature and explanation of the passage:

Ex. 10.

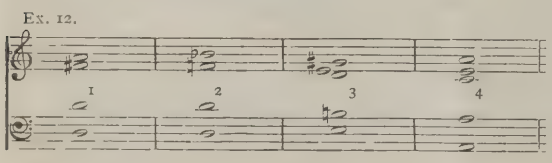


It is indeed nothing more than a parallel succession of chords on a descending chromatic scale. Debussy's discord here is the same as in Ex. 6. The first chord is familiar to us in the form e g♯ b d. For b, however, Debussy substitutes c, really b♯, the fifth upper partial of the sound g♯. The chords which follow are exactly the same in character. Debussy's employment of contrary motion in what is in reality a parallel harmonic succession is extremely ingenious, but not new. Chopin gives an instance of it in his Pianoforte Study in E major, Op. 10, No. 3, bars 38-42, and again in bars 47-53, where we find a descending succession of chords of the diminished seventh. But in fact the device of using familiar things in an unfamiliar way, of producing an original, even a startlingly original, effect by means of well-worn chords and tiresomely conventional harmonic successions, is at least as old as the time of Bach and Handel. It is an effect that is mightiest in the hands of the mightiest, for, as is often said, it is an attribute of genius to produce great effects by simple means. A passage that must have appeared somewhat daring to Beethoven's contemporaries is to be found in a comparatively early Pianoforte Sonata by that master, viz., the Sonata, Op. 26, in A♭ major:

Ex. 11.

Transposed to the key of A minor, the simple explanation of this is as follows:

Ex. 12.



It is extremely interesting to observe how the methods of the old discânters of the organum agree with those of such modern composers as Strauss and Debussy, especially with regard to the requisition of partial tones for the purposes of chord formation. Solvitur ambulando. Let the musical sound be produced, and harmony begins to reveal itself. Or, in an ethical sense, as Carlyle puts it—'do the duty that lies nearest thee: thy next duty has thereby already become clearer.' The source of the consonances is no longer a mystery. Early peoples attributed to their music a divine origin. But just as man, abandoning his search for the divine in some dim region external to himself, as the French scientist is said to have searched the heavens with his telescope, finds it at length in his own heart, so we have learned to recognise that the source of the consonances, and therefore of harmony, resides in musical sound itself, and in its resonance. The first six partial tones of the harmonic series produce all the consonances, and at the same time the major harmony. This is one of the only two consonant harmonies used in music. The other is the minor harmony. We know enough, it may be said, concerning the major harmony; let us now turn to the minor, and then get on with the explanation of the dissonant chords. Writers on harmony, however, have too frequently assumed that the principal difficulty in harmonic theory is the explanation of these dissonant chords. The major and minor harmonies, presumably, need no explanation! Kirnberger, J. S. Bach's pupil, who sets out to explain the mysteries of the key system, and of chord formation, blandly informs us that we may place a triad on each degree of the scale, quite evidently unaware of the nature of the problems he has set himself to deal with. He regards the diminished triad as consonant; although he does not tell us that the major second, as d e, or the minor second, e f, and still less all three, blend together in consonance, or dwell together in unity.

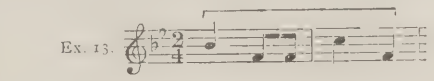
Just as dissonant intervals arise from consonant intervals, and cannot be accurately determined otherwise, so dissonant chords arise from consonant chords. It is therefore waste of time to attempt to explain the former until we have ascertained the nature of the consonant chords from which they spring.

What we know of the nature of consonance is of a negative rather than of a positive character. In his 'Sensations of Tone,' Helmholtz explains consonance as due to the absence, or comparative absence, of beats. This is a distinct, if not an entirely original contribution to our knowledge of this subject, and we cannot well object that it does not inform us what consonance is, but rather what it is not. Consonance may be of such a nature that it does not admit of a positive explanation. Already, in the 16th century, Gioseffo Zarlino perceived clearly that the perfection, or, as Helmholtz would say, the smoothness of a consonance depended on its nearness to the fundamental tone represented by unity. Thus the octave and fifth, represented by the proportions 1 : 2 and 2 : 3, were more perfectly consonant than the thirds, represented by the proportions 4 : 5 and 5 : 6. Some connection exists, then, between smoothness or perfection of consonance and simplicity of proportion. But here a feeling of scepticism can scarcely be avoided. Music and mathematics! It is true that ratios, proportions, mathematical formulæ, do influence us in a material way. The scientist or chemist who is unfortunate enough to make a mistake in his proportions may be suddenly sent flying through the roof of his laboratory.

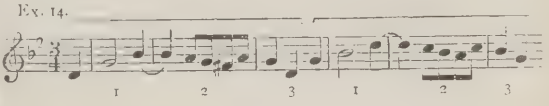
And if we are doubtful as to whether proportion can affect us æsthetically, can produce in us a sense of the beautiful or of its opposite, the ugly, we need only recall our first impressions of the Alps or of the Apollo Belvedere; or to go to the other extreme, the streets in some of our large towns. But music and arithmetic! Lives there a man with soul so dead as to relate the one to the other? Not the musician: perhaps not even the mathematician. Certainly not the writer of this article. But, alas! how small is the step from the sublime to the ridiculous! For do we not find that one of the first and most necessary duties of a conductor is the working out of certain simple arithmetical calculations, the results of which he communicates to the orchestra by means of a small baton: in other words, he must count 2, 3, 4, &c., in a bar, and this he does perhaps a few thousand times during the performance? Of course! 'How sour sweet music is, when time is lost and no proportion kept.' Even if it be admitted that we cannot hope to find in proportions the ultimate explanation of consonance, if indeed it be possible to find the ultimate explanation of anything, we cannot afford to neglect them, in so far as they are capable of shedding some light on an obscure and difficult subject.

Proportion in music undoubtedly has an æsthetic significance, and produces in us an æsthetic effect. Musical sound itself has its birth in proportion, and it is just this proportion that differentiates it from noise. In musical sound, the aerial vibrations must be periodic, must fall on the ear at regular intervals. And in the intervals which form part of the resonance of musical sound, such a periodicity also obtains. Now it is a remarkable fact that the proportions existing in harmonic resonance reproduce themselves in various ways in musical rhythm. Thus the proportion of the octave, 1 : 2, is found again in the bar of two beats, as $\frac{2}{4}$ Here the minim, or the accented beat, represents the fundamental sound, or first term of the proportion 1 : 2, and the two crotchets the second term. We have here, in fact, in the beats or impulses of the bar of duple time, only a reproduction of what already exists in the sound vibrations of the octave, but taken at a greatly slower rate of speed. Conversely, were it possible to perform, or tap the beats in such a bar at the rate of fifty to a hundred beats a second, we should hear the interval of the octave. And we might proceed in a similar way with 3, 4, 5, 7, 9, &c., beats in a bar. The bar of three beats, appreciated without difficulty by us, is nevertheless not quite so obvious a rhythmical construction, is not apprehended by our rhythmical sense quite so immediately and directly, as the duple bar. This fact may be readily appreciated if, using hands or feet in a regular succession of right and left, and taking due care to emphasise the accented beat, we compare our sensations in thus marking out a few bars of duple, and thereafter a few bars of triple time. Another means of noting the peculiar æsthetic effect of a triple rhythm is the following. If we compare Exx. 13 and 14, we find that while in the former the two bars readily combine so as to form a fresh and larger rhythmical organism, the latter presents slightly more difficulty to our rhythmical sense, and the three-bar phrase is not so readily appreciated as a rhythmical whole:

Ex. 13.

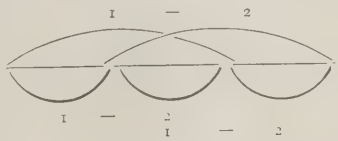


Ex. 14.



Indeed, Dr. Riemann and Prof. Prout consider such a phrase to be in reality a truncated four-bar phrase. Not many musicians will agree with them. On the other hand, such authorities cannot be lightly set aside. Only those who have investigated this subject of rhythm are fully acquainted with its difficulties.

The binary division and binary grouping appeal most directly to our sense of rhythm, and this is reflected in musical notation itself. Thus a crotchet is equal in time-value to two quavers, and is itself the half of a minim; and so with other note-values. For the division of a note into three equal parts a special sign is necessary—the dot. And such a primary predisposition towards a binary grouping may be observed in triple time itself. Hauptmann, in his 'Harmony and Metre,' after remarking that the three-part in time is not metrically intelligible as a succession of three members strung together, explains the rhythm of three beats as brought about by an interlacing of two and two, as indicated by the following diagram:



Hauptmann's views correspond in alarming fashion with those of Riemann and others, for just as these authorities consider the three-bar phrase to be in reality a truncated four-bar phrase, so does Hauptmann consider triple time to be a truncated quadruple time, arising from the interlacing or overlapping of two duple bars. Other writers of consequence, some of whom have made a particular study of the nature of rhythm—e.g., R. Westphal, in his 'Theorie der Rhythmik'—are of a similar opinion. And certainly Hauptmann's views on the subject of ternary rhythm are infinitely to be preferred to those of writers who have no difficulty in accepting such a rhythm as being as direct, simple, elemental, as binary rhythm and grouping itself. Somehow, in some way, the binary element appears to enter into, perhaps even is the ultimate source of, the ternary rhythmical structure. On the other hand, the explanation of such a structure as arising from a quadruple rhythm, one of whose members has been lopped off, does not satisfy us as to the real nature of this rhythm.

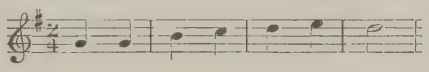
So important is this question for rhythm in general, and for melody, harmony, and consonance in particular, that the writer may be permitted to advance the following considerations in an attempt to throw some additional light on the problem. In the binary measure, as | ♩ ♩ | consisting of an accented followed by an unaccented beat, we find a proportion of 2 : 1; that is, two crotchets are heard against the minim which represents the complete bar. Now there is a natural tendency, especially in folk-music, to emphasise the accented note by lengthening it. Thus:



becomes:

In such a simple fashion there emerges from the binary construction something new—the ternary measure. And both arise from one and the same proportion 2 : 1, for in the ternary measure, as | 𝅗𝅥 ♩ |, the minim has twice the time-value of the crotchet. The whole process is displayed in the clearest possible manner in verse. In the poetical foot of two syllables, consisting of an accented followed by an unaccented syllable, i.e., the trochee, we have a metrical arrangement that corresponds to our bar of two beats. The trochee may therefore appear in musical notation as | ♩ ♩ |. But in trochaic verse, how naturally the accented syllable is emphasised by lengthening it. Even as children we recited the appalling tragedy of Jack and Jill in a lilting triple, not duple, measure:

and this lilting kind of measure is characteristic of many of the oldest melodies in triple time that we possess.

The remarkable fact, then, stands out clearly: ternary, as well as binary, rhythm arises from one and the same proportion, 1 : 2 or 2 : 1. But in its evolution from such a proportion the ternary measure does not appear as a truncated quadruple, or a distorted duple measure: its true nature is revealed, and it appears as a new and fresh rhythmical formation. The whole process is as simple as it is natural, and it is possible to regard its very simplicity as evidence of its truth. It may also be pointed out that in our musical notation, where the binary principle prevails, and where the ternary division of a note has to be indicated by means of a dot, such a dotted note—e.g., 𝅗𝅥.—represents a minim and a half, that is, the proportion 2 : 1.

These simple duple and triple rhythms form the basis of our entire system of time-signatures, simple and compound. Thus 4-4 time consists of two bars of 2-4 time grouped in such a way as to form a larger binary structure. Similarly 9-8 time is a grouping of three bars of 3-8 time, or it may be regarded as being evolved from 3-4 time by means of a ternary division of the beat. In the bar of 5-4 time, as in that of 7-4, the grouping is not that of equals but of unequals. Still the simple and duple times form the basis of even such groupings, for in 5 time the grouping is 2 + 3, or 3 + 2, and in 7 time 3 + 4 or 4 + 3. But inasmuch as 4 admits of a binary division into 2 + 2, other groupings are possible. The bearing of all this on the question of consonance, the intimate relationship existing between consonance, rhythm, and proportion, and the effect on the ear of the various intervals as they arise in the harmonic series, has perhaps already been grasped by the reader: for if such rhythms as and so on, could be performed at a greatly accelerated pace, say, at the rate of 100 to 200 beats or vibrations a second—and it is possible by means of such an acoustical instrument as the syren—we would hear the musical intervals corresponding to these proportions. And conversely, if the rates of vibration of the various intervals that arise in the harmonic series were correspondingly reduced, we should hear successive bars of 2-4, 3-4, 5-4, &c., times. Is it possible to doubt that an intimate connection exists between rhythms expressed by time-signatures such as 2-4, 3-4, 7-4, 11-4, &c., and the musical intervals corresponding to these proportions?

Ad Libitum

By 'Feste'

Having recently said a good deal on choralism, I had intended keeping off the subject for a time. I feel, however, that some frank things have to be said on the Leeds Festival Choir's performance of Holst's 'Choral' Symphony at the recent Philharmonic concert, and, at the risk of boring some readers and offending others, I am going to say them. It is a lonely and unpopular job, and will no doubt bring me a shower of half-bricks and accusations of partisanship and cantankerousness; but no matter. My head will probably be bloody; I will undertake to keep it unbowed.

There was a curious difference of critical opinion as to the relative merit of the Leeds and London performances of the Holst work. Reading between the lines, it appears that the verdict depended largely on whether the critic's standard in choral singing was as exacting as it ought to be in the case of a choir so drastically chosen and intensively trained as the Leeds body. There is no injustice in demanding from such a choir a technical perfection, a dynamic range, and a beauty of tone that we expect from a professional orchestra. Very few critics set the public a lead in making such demands, and the result is seen in the absence of a standard on the part of the average audience. I was not present at the Leeds performance, so I can make no comparisons. But if the eulogies that greeted the singing in the Holst work at Leeds were well founded (as they seem to have been), I am disposed to believe those who say that the London performance showed a marked falling-off: for the singing at Queen's Hall, judged by the standard mentioned above, was far from good. It was not even note-perfect. There were some poor leads, several moments when the ensemble was shaky, and at least one passage in which a part failed completely—on p. 62 of the vocal score, where the mezzo-soprano lead at bar 4 was inaudible. The diction was less incisive than we had been led to expect, and the monotoned recitative in the Prelude was disappointing in its failure to achieve the perfect unanimity and subtlety of verbal accentuation on which the passage largely depends. Only occasionally throughout the work were the words clearly audible, and in the Scherzo there was not only a want of clearness, but also of alertness. There were some truly thrilling climaxes, of course, and it is impossible to avoid a conclusion that audiences (and even some critics) are as easily and obviously bamboozled by a shattering choral fff as the groundlings at a ballad concert are by a singer's high note. Both feats seem to be readily accepted as a set-off against a good number of faults.

But what of the other end of the dynamic scale? Where were the pianissimos, even the pianos? Ernest Newman did not exaggerate when he said that the singers gave us instead 'a hefty Yorkshire forte.' The Times report suggested that the choir was too big for the 'Ode on a Grecian Urn.' Certainly this movement would be better suited by a small force, but a Leeds Festival Choir ought to be able to moderate its transports and give us at least an approach to the intimate style the Ode demands. We do not find it necessary to silence four-fifths of an orchestra in order to obtain pianissimos and intimacy. A big choir, no less than a full orchestra, ought to be able to cover all the ground from a whisper to the loudest ever. The Leeds singers were at their best—and a very fine best it was—when concerned with the butt end of the wedge; at the other end they were disappointing. Apropos of this, John Graham, in the Musical News and Herald, says:

> I only wished that when the score was marked down to pppp I could have heard the clock tick as I have heard it in Yorkshire rehearsals long ago.

In regard to quality of tone it is significant that whereas no critic, so far as I recall, found it notable for beauty, several made adverse comment. Mr. Graham wrote that the contraltos:

> . . . seemed to magnify the usual defect of solo vocalists of similar compass, white quality above and dark in the low register, intensified in the blanching of open vowels.

This is what I felt even before the Holst began. 'Jerusalem' and the National Anthem were quite enough to show the altos to be lacking in unity of tone, and the defect became even more apparent when the difficulties of the Holst work had to be dealt with. Mr. Graham considers that the sopranos had 'a floating quality in their first freshness; later the tone hardens'; E. C. Rose, another Musical News writer, found the choir 'brilliant, if somewhat hard.' Everybody seems to be agreed that the basses were fine.

I doubt if many will be found to dispute the above criticisms, and I quote them for two reasons: First, it is only fair to Holst that those who were disappointed with his 'Choral' Symphony at Queen's Hall should realise that the performance did the work a good deal less than justice. Second, I have so often groused at certain defects in Yorkshire choralism that I am glad to bring forward some support for views that may have been regarded as prejudiced or faddish. My conscience is clear on both points. After reading the glowing reports of the choral work at the Leeds Festival, I went to Queen's Hall prepared to be enthusiastic. Instead, I was disappointed. I heard a magnificent lot of voices, but a choir with curious limitations and lacking in vision and subtlety. I don't know any choir that could sing so loudly, or that could so brilliantly meet the physical demands of the Ninth Symphony; but I know several in various parts of the country that could show more musicianship, alertness, and appeal. The fact is, either the choir or the conductor, or both, took their task too lightly. The singers left Leeds before eight in the morning, and most of them must have risen before any but the most foolish and restless of larks. (The Huddersfield contingent, I understand, left before 5 a.m.!) They reached London at 1.30, rehearsed the Ninth Symphony, but not the Holst—at all events, only a bit of it, and that without orchestra; went straight off and spent the interval till tea-time making gramophone records; took tea, and went to Queen's Hall to dress for the concert. This is not the way to ensure a first-rate performance of a new and exacting work. The Holst Symphony ought to have been rehearsed thoroughly. A performance, however good, at Leeds some weeks earlier, was no guarantee of similar success at Queen's Hall, especially after the fatigues of the journey, and in a hall that was unfamiliar to many of the singers. Despite the eulogies in the press, no one who heard the subsequent discussions of the performance can avoid the conclusion that the prestige of Yorkshire singing had suffered a nasty jar. However good the choir may have been at the Leeds Festival (and with such splendid material it might well have been superlative), it was nothing to write home about at Queen's Hall. If, as Mr. Newman says Yorkshire choirs are far below their best when singing in London, the explanation lies in the fatigue of the journey and the shortage of sleep on the night before. Let us hope, for their sake and ours, that when they come again the travelling may be got over on the preceding day.

It happened that two days after this Queen's Hall performance I spent a day listening to competitive choirs at Nottingham. For the second year in succession I was struck by the sheer beauty of tone in female, male, and mixed choirs. I have heard nothing in Lancashire or Yorkshire to beat the pick of the Midland bodies for lovely, expressive quality. They can achieve a pianissimo too, and—a prime virtue—they rarely, if ever, sacrifice quality to quantity. The music they sang was only moderately difficult, it is true, but that does not affect the point. They have the instrument: a pure, unified, expressive, and well-coloured tone, and when a choir is so equipped, all other things shall be added unto it. In a word, we ought to withhold superlatives from any choir that cannot give us pretty much the same command of tonal beauty, colour, variety, and nuance that we expect from a solo singer of the front rank; and when we are as critical as we ought to be in regard to choralism, we shall refuse to be satisfied with thrilling climaxes and feats of virtuosity in the Finale of the Ninth Symphony. We want these, of course, but they represent only one part of a choir's equipment, and the part that, in an unusually powerful set of voices, is most easily attained.

In the October issue of Vogue appeared an article by Miss Edith Sitwell on 'The Work of Gertrude Stein, a Modern Writer who brings Literature nearer to the apparently irrational World of Music.' The interest of Miss Sitwell's article lies chiefly in that it shows certain of the extremist composers to be not alone in their amusing pretences to originality, and their methods of work. Thus, one would have regarded it as an obvious and accepted fact that a poet worthy the name always considered, not only the sense of his chosen words, but also their sound, singly and in combination. That is one of the prime differences between poetry and prose. Thus (to take two lines that at once come to mind) when Milton wrote:

> And birds of calm sit brooding on the charmèd wave, and Kipling:

> And we drowsed the long tides idle till Thy trumpets tore the sea, their choice of words was not guided by considerations of sense and metre only. They had their eye on euphony as well, and so gave us lines that we can enjoy as mere sound. But according to Miss Sitwell, this ingredient of poetry has just been discovered, or revived, by Gertrude Stein:

> Miss Gertrude Stein is, I am convinced, one of the most important living pioneers, quite apart from the intrinsic value of her work. Language had come to be a threadbare thing, too tired to move—with words grouped together in their predestined families, bloodless and timid. Miss Stein brings back life to these dead creatures by what appears to us, when we read her first, as an anarchic process. First she breaks down the predestined groups of these words—their sleepy family habits; then she rebrightens their use by building them into fresh shapes.

Mutatis mutandis, naven't we heard something like this claimed on behalf of such composers as 'The Six,' and others?:

> Then, too, she is making new discoveries in what my friend Mr. Robert Graves calls texture. In his book, 'Contemporary Techniques of Poetry,' published by the Hogarth Press, Mr. Graves defines texture thus: 'The term "texture" covers the relations of a poem's vowels and consonants, other than rhymes, considered as mere sound, and supplementing the rhythm and images. It will . . . include the variation of internal vowel-sounds to give an effect of richness; the use, perhaps, of liquid consonants and labials and open vowels to give smoothness, of aspirates and dentals to give force, of gutturals to give strength; the careful use of sibilants, which are to texture what salt is to food.' Miss Stein is making inquiries in the exact result which is to be obtained from this rough material.

Miss Stein need not search far in her inquiries. Any collection of poetry, old or new, will provide plenty of examples of all the points mentioned by Mr. Hogarth. Miss Sitwell admits that Miss Stein 'is, at present, mainly a writer's writer—and often exceedingly difficult at that.' When, however, she goes on to claim that 'it is worth any amount of tiring work, to a writer, to come to understand her,' most of us will part company with her. The main difficulty, we are told, is that we are 'unaccustomed to abstract patterns being built of words, though we have long been accustomed to abstract patterns in the pictorial art and in music.' Precisely; but music is not concerned with the expression of definite ideas, and pictures only occasionally; whereas such expression is the prime function of words. Miss Sitwell goes on to explain that by abstract patterns in words she means > . . . the use of words, not for the sake of their philosophical content, but for the sake of discoveries whereby we may know more about the intrinsic atmosphere of each word, apart from its group-soul as part of a family.

Miss Stein, we are told,

> . . . places words in contexts hitherto unknown, so as to gain their exact personality, deprived of that produced by their usual surroundings. This is not just playing about with words; it is an urgent necessity. There is always a connecting thread in each pattern, otherwise it would not be a pattern.

If the reader can see the 'urgent necessity' for the following 'pattern in words' he will enjoy it, though he is not likely to understand it:

> With the flag.
> With the flag of sets.
> Sets of colour.
> Do you like flags.
> Blue flags smell sweetly.
> Blue flags in a whirl.
> The wind blows.
> And the automobile goes.
> Can you guess boards.
> Wood.
> Can you guess hoops.
> Barrels.
> Can you guess girls.
> Servants.
> Can you guess messages?
> In deed.

Miss Sitwell admits that she does not find this as beautiful as other work: she quotes it because 'we see the processes of her thinking':

> Flags make her think of irises. Flags make her think of the wind. The wind makes her think of the speed of automobiles. Then she goes off on another track. Boards make her think of wood. Wood makes her think of barrels, of hoops, which make her see little girls, and so on. In much of her work she is too apt to take our sympathy and understanding for granted. She eliminates too much of her thought processes. As her work is exceedingly strange to those unaccustomed to it, if they are only made acquainted with the farthest end of this thinking and not with the gradual steps that led up to it, how can we hope that they will jump the intervening stages?

Again, doesn't all this sound familiar? Don't we know composers who make such a fetish of 'elimination of the unessential' that they end by becoming incoherent.

Here is another sentence that has an amusingly familiar ring:

> It is unfortunately impossible to give a concrete explanation of Miss Stein's work. Either one understands it, or one doesn't. For it is a very crippling fact that there has not been sufficient preparation for this writer. She is often at the disadvantage of having gone so far ahead of our time that she is almost out of sight, and between her and her reader there is a gap.

This is real 'progress,' and of a type that is painfully frequent in modern music.

Perhaps the most amusing thing in the article is Miss Sitwell's quoting of the following 'lovely phrases,' and then solemnly trying to explain them:

> Oh the bells that are the same are not stirring and the languid grace is not out of place and the older fur is disappearing. There is not such an end.

On this Miss Sitwell naïvely comments:

> To my apprehension, this means (if we put it coarsely and roughly)—that youth has passed, spring comes again, with the same flower-bells upon the trees,—but they no longer sound the same music,—yet the older, furrier leaves have gone. I can imagine this phrase ending,—though it does not end so, with the knowledge that soon we, too, shall be gone from the forests and the gardens. . . . That is what I read into this.

Here is another gem:

> A pale rose is a smell that has no fountain, that has upside down the same distinction, elegance is not coloured, the pain is there.

Says Miss Sitwell:

> This is, to me, an abstract pattern of very great beauty. The answer to the inquiry, 'What does this mean?' is— 'It means exactly what a rose means.'

Still, in our reactionary way, we shall go on preferring a rose, by a long chalk.

However, this is a trifle to what Miss Stein can do in the way of mystification. In the following she leaves even Miss Sitwell in the dark:

> Puzzle is more than a speck and a soiled collar. A pound is more than oatmeal and a new institution. A silence is more than occasional. It respects understanding and salt and even a rope. It respects a news-stand and it also it very also respects desert. All the ice can descend together.

C

There is a plaintive touch in Miss Sitwell's remark on this conglomeration:

> I do not gain any idea whatsoever from this. My respect for Miss Stein makes me presume it is an abstract pattern with a thread, with a beauty, which I have not caught, but it appears to me quite incomprehensible, even as an abstract pattern.

It beats me also—in fact, very also.

Let me try my rough, unpractised hand at 'an abstract pattern':

> It is true, it certainly is true and a coat, any coat, any dress, all dress, a hat, many hats, all colours, every kind of colouring, all this makes shadows longer and birds, makes birds, just makes birds. . . . Not much limping is in the back, not much limping is in the front, not much limping is circular, a bosom, a candle, an elegant footfall, all this makes daylight.

How's that for a beginner? . . .

Perhaps a Stein-ite objects that this is an absurd exaggeration, and that here, as in 'advanced' music, it is easier to poke fun than to imitate; that, in fact, the game is less easy than it appears to be. I hope such an objection is made, because it enables me to point out that this passage, so far from being an absurd exaggeration, is actually a quotation from Miss Stein! Miss Sitwell gives it, assuring us that 'it needs great experience to produce beauty in a passage like this.'

Yet one more analogy with some aspects of modern music is shown in the following remarks of Miss Sitwell:

> Here, and in paragraphs like this, we find the danger of Miss Stein's method—a danger less to herself than to the people influenced by her. I hope the influence she is bound to have will be over able and experienced writers, not over the very young, incapable, and silly. These very young, incapable, and silly people who imitate and ruin all the modernist work of the time are a terrible problem. They mean well, but they hamper the movement, harass the real artists, and are, frankly, a great nuisance, as they bring ridicule on the modernist art.

Modernist art of this kind appears to be able to provide itself liberally with whatever it deserves in the way of ridicule. In fact, the more you look at it, the more certain you are that the pain is there, and that all the ice can descend together.

P.S.—Since the above was set up, this particularly choice example of Miss Stein's 'poetry' has been reprinted in a daily paper:

> Tingling they were they were they were tingling pink ice leads to trees they went twice they went parrots fall gently across glass where they see Spain they see nothing nothing is greener where are bronze it cannot save from what is unbalanced in February in March in April is undivided in three undivided it is undivided it is indivisible it is.

Very well; who says it isn't?

The Audrey Chapman Orchestra will give a concert at Queen's Hall on December 15 at 8, in aid of the Fund for Orchestras in Poor Districts. The programme includes the Franck Symphony, and Suggia will be heard in a Haydn Concerto, as well as in solos. Mr. Frank Bridge will conduct.

WAGNER AND THE NINTH SYMPHONY

By Edith A. H. Crawshaw

The Ninth Symphony, which played quite an important part in the life of Wagner, has received varying criticisms, from positive hatred to real affection. Sir Michael Costa, writing in 1877, said :

> The 'Choral' Symphony, except the Andante, is an awful work, and a perfect infliction on principals and chorus. It failed at the Philharmonic, at Bradford, Exeter Hall, Birmingham, and at the Crystal Palace.

And Costa was probably glad it had failed ! How different was Schumann's criticism in a letter to Hirschbach, in 1838 :

> In our opinion the Ninth Symphony is still, in spite of everything, the mightiest work in recent orchestral music.

The late Prof. Niecks says it is 'a musical exposition of Beethoven's philosophy'; and Stanford calls it 'the culminating point of Beethoven's life-work.' Dr. Agnes Savill speaks of it as 'the culminating point of spirituality, the purest height possible to human expression through the medium of music.'

It seems strange to read that Richard was the only child in the Wagner family who did not have music-lessons. Intercourse which Weber had with the Wagners helped the boy to an appreciation of music. 'Freischütz' and 'Oberon' fascinated him, and he delighted to hear his favourite music. Wagner tells us ('My Life') that the mere tuning of the instruments put him in a state of mystic excitement ; and the striking of fifths on the violin seemed like a greeting from the spirit world which had a very real meaning for him. The first music of Beethoven's which he heard appears to have been the Overture to 'Fidelio'; then the music to 'Egmont.' At one of the Gewandhaus concerts he heard the A major Symphony, and the effect on him was indescribable. Wagner had but recently heard of Beethoven's death, and he was much impressed by the composer's features, which he saw in the lithographs circulated at that time, and by the fact that he was deaf, and had lived a quiet, secluded life. Wagner tells us his musical instruction did him no good, even when he was allowed to have lessons. But he spent his time in copying out the scores of his beloved masters, and he believes his copies of the C minor Symphony and the Ninth Symphony are still preserved as souvenirs. This latter attracted him particularly because it was the opinion of musicians at Leipsic and elsewhere that Beethoven was half-mad when he composed it. But to Wagner it became > . . . the mystical goal of all my strange thoughts and desires about music. . . . It was considered the non plus ultra of all that was fantastic and incomprehensible, and this was quite enough to rouse in me a passionate desire to study this mysterious work. At the very first glance at the score, of which I obtained possession with such difficulty, I felt irresistibly attracted by the long-sustained pure fifths with which the first phrase opens: these chords, which had played such a supernatural part in my childish impressions of music, seemed in this case to form the spiritual key-note of my own life.

Wagner made an arrangement of the Symphony for pianoforte solo, and offered it to the firm of Schott, the publishers of the score, at Mainz. They replied that they had not yet decided to issue the Symphony for pianoforte, but they would gladly keep Wagner's laborious work, and offered him as remuneration the score of the great 'Missa Solemnis' in D, which Wagner gratefully accepted. Concerning his early work, the Overture in B flat major, Wagner says this was the outcome of his study of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, as 'Leubald und Adelaïde' had been the result of his study of Shakespeare. During the winter of 1831-32 Wagner attended some of the Gewandhaus concerts, and heard a rehearsal of the Ninth Symphony with Pohlenz as musical conductor. At this time, Wagner tells us, > . . . instrumental works were not conducted by what we call 'a conductor of the orchestra,' but were simply played to the audience by the leader of the orchestra. As soon as the singing began, Pohlenz took his place at the conductor's desk.

The first movements were played straight through like a Haydn Symphony, as well as the orchestra could manage it, says Wagner. But at the Presto movement in 3-4 time (the last movement)

> . . . the wild shrieks of the trumpet (with which this movement begins) resulted in the most extraordinary confusion of sound.

Wagner's idol, Beethoven, was near to falling ! One of the double-bass players suggested that Pohlenz should put down his baton, after which things went better. It led Wagner to feel, however, that this work was still beyond his comprehension.

In 1839, Wagner arrived at Paris, and attended the concerts at the Conservatoire. The Ninth Symphony of Beethoven was rehearsed for three years before being performed in public, the capacity for taking pains being then, as now, a feature of French orchestral concerts, so Mr. Lidgey tells us in his 'Wagner.' Wagner says in his 'Life' that the rehearsals which he attended exercised a decisive influence in the crisis of his artistic development :

> This was due to the fact that I listened repeatedly to Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which, by dint of untiring practice, received such a marvellous interpretation at the hands of this celebrated orchestra, that the picture I had had of it in my mind in the enthusiastic days of my youth now stood before me almost tangibly in brilliant colours, undimmed, as though it had never been effaced by the Leipsic orchestra, who had slaughtered it under Pohlenz's baton. Where formerly I had only seen mystic constellations and weird shapes without meaning, I now found flowing from innumerable sources a stream of the most touching and heavenly melodies which delighted my heart. . . . I owed the recovery of my old vigour and spirits to the deep impression the rendering of the Ninth Symphony had on me when performed in a way I had never dreamed of. This important event in my life can only be compared to the upheaval caused within me when, as a youth of sixteen, I saw Schröder-Devrient act in 'Fidelio.'

At Dresden, Schumann and Wagner became friends, and 'as far as it was possible with a person so sparing of words,' as Wagner puts it, he and Schumann exchanged views on matters of musical interest. Schumann was looking forward to hearing the Ninth Symphony produced under Wagner's baton, having been very much disappointed by Mendelssohn's conducting, who year by year took the first movement at a distracting speed.

The Symphony for Palm Sunday, 1846, fell to Wagner's lot to conduct. As the Ninth Symphony was almost unknown at Dresden, Wagner chose this work. It was with great difficulty that the directors of the orchestra allowed him to carry out his intention. Wagner borrowed the orchestral parts from the Leipsic Concert Society, as the directors were dubious about the outlay needed for procuring them :

> Imagine my feelings [writes Wagner] on now seeing for the first time since my earliest boyhood the mysterious pages of this score, which I studied conscientiously! In those days the sight of these same pages had filled me with the most mystic reveries, and I had stayed up for nights together to copy them out. . . . It is not likely that the heart of a disciple has ever been filled with such keen rapture over the work of a master as mine was at the first movement of this Symphony. If any one had come upon me unexpectedly while I had the open score before me, and had seen me convulsed with sobs and tears as I went through the work in order to consider the best manner of rendering it, he would certainly have asked with astonishment if this were really fitting behaviour for the Conductor Royal of Saxony!

Wagner drew up a programme to act as guide to the understanding of the work, and in the Dresden Anzeiger wrote 'all kinds of short and enthusiastic anonymous paragraphs in order to whet the public taste,' as the work had not been favourably received at Dresden hitherto :

> Concerning the artistic side of the performance [he continues], I aimed at making the orchestra give as expressive a rendering as possible, and to this end made all kinds of notes myself in the various parts, so as to make quite sure that their interpretation would be as clear and as coloured as could be desired. It was principally the custom which existed then of doubling the wind instruments that led me to a most careful consideration of the advantages this presented, for in performances on a large scale the following somewhat crude rule prevailed : All those passages marked piano were executed by a single set of instruments, while those marked forte were carried out by a duplicated set. As an instance of the way in which I took care to ensure an intelligible rendering by this means, I might point to a certain passage in the second movement of the Symphony, where the whole of the string instruments play the principal and rhythmical figure in C major for the first time; it is written in triple octaves, which play uninterruptedly in unison, and, to a certain degree, serve as an accompaniment to the second theme, which is only performed by feeble wood instruments. As fortissimo is indicated alike for the whole orchestra, the result in every imaginable rendering must be that the melody for the wood instruments not only completely disappears, but cannot even be heard through the strings, which, after all, are only accompanying. . . . I made the strings play only moderately loudly instead of real fortissimo, up to the point where they alternate with the wind instruments in taking up the continuation of the new theme : thus the motive, rendered as it was as loudly as possible by a double set of wind instruments, was, I believe, for the first time since the existence of the Symphony, heard with real distinctness. I proceeded in this manner throughout, in order to guarantee the greatest exactitude in the dynamical effects of the orchestra. . . . Many brains had been puzzled by the Fugato in 6-8 time which comes after the chorus, 'Froh wie seine Sonnen fliegen,' in the movement of the Finale marked alla marcia. In view of the preceding inspiriting verses, which seemed to be a preparing for combat and victory, I conceived this Fugato really as a glad but earnest war-song, and I took it at a continuously fiery tempo, and with the utmost vigour. . . . Furthermore, I devoted special attention to that extraordinary passage, resembling a recitative, for the 'cellos and basses, which comes at the beginning of the last movement, and which had once caused my old friend Pohlenz such great humiliation at Leipsic . . . After twelve special rehearsals of the instruments alone concerned, I succeeded in getting them to perform in a way which sounded not only perfectly free, but which also expressed the most exquisite tenderness and the greatest energy in a thoroughly impressive manner.

In order that the choral parts might be successfully performed, Wagner enlisted the help of the Dreissig 'Academy of Singing,' the choir from the Kreuzschule, with its fine boys' voices, and the choir of the Dresden Seminary : thus he had a chorus of three hundred singers, whom he tried to get 'into a state of genuine ecstasy' at the frequent united rehearsals. Gade, who was present at the general rehearsal, said he would willingly have paid double the price of his ticket in order to hear the recitative by the basses once more. Hiller considered that Wagner had gone too far in his modification of the tempi. The performance was a complete success, and Wagner was particularly pleased with the praise of the philologist, Dr. Köchly, who said it was the first time he had been able to follow a symphonic work from beginning to end with intelligent interest.

On Palm Sunday, 1849, Wagner again conducted the Ninth Symphony at Dresden. The work had been chosen in order to secure a financially successful concert. Mr. Lidgey writes :

> To Wagner, Beethoven represented the fulfilment, not only of what had already been achieved, but of all that was possible in the domain of absolute music. With unerring instinct the great tone-poet had followed up the varied springs of emotion, until in his colossal Ninth Symphony he had set himself to exhaust the limits of the sea of sound. And in the end, to satisfy his inner yearning, to express all that he meant that Symphony to reveal, he joined speech to tone and cried, 'Rejoice! Breast to breast, ye mortal millions! This one kiss to all the world!' Only by the aid of poesy could the message of his crowning work be fully conveyed—that was the meaning to Wagner of the 'Choral' Symphony. To him it was no mere species of art-variety—a symphony with a chorus—it was Beethoven's tacit acknowledgment of the limitation of absolute music, the confession that poetry as well as tone was essential to the art-work of the future.

In 'The Work and Mission of My Life,' Wagner says it was his introduction to Beethoven's Symphonies, which he heard at Leipsic at the age of seventeen, that first stirred the pulse of music in his being. These gave to music in his eyes

> . . . an altogether supernatural power: their harmonies and movements appeared to me rather like ghostly, spiritual forces, which seemed to address themselves to me individually, and to put on the most fantastic shapes! . . . I had suddenly become a musician.

In his 'Beethoven,' Wagner writes thus of the choral section of the Ninth Symphony :

> Never has the highest art produced anything more artistically simple than this refrain, whose childlike innocence breathes on us (when we first catch the theme given in a unison of perfectly even whispers by the bass strings of the orchestra) with holy awe. The refrain now becomes the Cantus firmus, the Chorale of the new Commune; and round it, as round the Church Chorale of Sebastian Bach, the voices harmoniously entering group themselves in counterpoint. Nothing equals the pure depth of feeling with which each new voice as it enters animates this primitive song of perfect innocence; until every adornment, every splendour of growing emotion is united to it and in it, like the breathing universe round a final revelation of purest Love.

Can we doubt that Beethoven's influence did indeed make Wagner a musician?

THE FETISH OF FORM

By J. H. Elliot

In this age, when the high-priests of musical culture are bestirring themselves towards the education and improvement of taste among the uninitiated, one sees with misgiving the tendency towards an idolatrous ritual which may be termed the Fetish of Form.

Far be it from me to belittle the canons and codes of musical composition. I have no desire to be associated with the historic gentleman who 'spoke disrespectfully of the solar system.' I realise, as we all must, that composition is governed by rules, and that music without any form, established or improvised, would be impossible even if it were desirable. But I do protest—with some reason, as I hope to show—against the exaggerated emphasis which is so often placed upon the purely mechanical aspect of the art.

I hope and believe that the bias is achieved unconsciously. There may be professors whose idea of teaching 'musical appreciation' is to parade their pedantry before the uninitiated, but their number, let us hope, is small. Yet there is danger for the most sincere and earnest.

Let us consider for a moment the attitude of the person who 'doesn't know much about art,' but is none the less anxious to discover what there is in Bach, Brahms, or Wagner. He takes up a book, or listens to a lecture, on musical appreciation—and either of these, emanating from one whom he knows to be of the initiated, cannot but inspire him with confidence and trust. What does he find? Too often, he is merely told exactly what happens (on paper) in a symphony, &c.—a theme is set forth and treated in such and such a manner; this is followed by that and the other, and so to the bitter end. What does he infer? Almost inevitably that 'classical' music is really an arid, dull, and desperately logical succession of sounds, without any genuine opportunity for poetic beauty or feeling—or, at least, that if the latter be admitted, it can remain only for a moment, and must always be followed by a prolonged douche of cold water in the shape of a 'development' passage or some such irksome necessity.

This is, perhaps, putting the matter a trifle strongly; but from the insistence laid upon musical form in so many quarters, it must appear to the uninitiated that this is the only aspect of the art which matters. Why are they not told at the outset that the value of a musical work rests not upon its form, but upon the degree in which it rises above that form? Why should the 'development' bogey, &c., always be presented as a necessarily pedantic exercise, as though its very nature at once precluded all possibility of poetic feeling? Tell them, if you will, that a lengthy musical work cannot be always at a hundred per cent. white-heat (though no one but an imbecile would expect or wish it to be); but, in the name of music, why not admit that if a 'development' fails to stimulate the intellect through the ear (as opposed to the eye), it at once falls to the ground, an empty and vapid display of mechanical pedantry?

How many novices may we expect to take an increasing interest in great music if they are told, or as good as told, that they cannot really enjoy it unless they can recognise at once all the dry bones beneath the living flesh, especially when the bones are meticulously described while the flesh (that is, the æsthetic value) is totally ignored? When will our professors remember to emphasise that 'variety in unity' and all its offspring are, primarily, under the direction of an abstract sensibility? As soon as a technical device becomes acceptable to the intellect—which, aided by its subordinate the ear, is the representative of the unseen and unknown judge, the musical sensibility—it mechanically becomes an admitted rule.

Sonata-form, Rondo-form, Binary, Ternary—what, then, are these if not the simple means by which the masters have attained infinitely greater ends? If musical appreciation cannot be taught by any known method (and I do not think it can), at least we may guard against this everlasting harping upon scientific machinery as opposed to artistic inspiration. We cannot, it is true, explain the latter, but at least we can avoid the erection of false standards by mitigating our insistence upon the former. It is highly desirable to explain in simple terms what is meant by melody, harmony, &c., and to point out the necessity of training the ear to follow complicated inter-weavings; but to commence the instruction by dissecting an entire work into subjects, developments, and recapitulations is as misleading as it is wearisome.

'But,' it is urged, 'by learning first to understand the formal outline of a work, the appreciation of its æsthetic value will follow as a matter of course.' I reply (and here is the very crux of my protest): It is more likely that nothing at all will follow, for unless the learner has already become a slave to form-worship (which is valueless in any case), he will probably lose interest altogether, convinced that listening to 'classical' music demands dreary and irksome studies for which he has neither time nor patience, and that the reward of such studies would be nothing better than the possession of a stagnant and futile pedantry. Tell him what you will concerning musical form, but let it be emphasised clearly and constantly that it is useless, empty, and dead, unless it be the channel for the pure white flame of æsthetic truth.

I have, perhaps, spoken a trifle strongly; I will now be even bolder. I do not believe for an instant that a knowledge of musical form (that is, Sonata-form, &c.) can help anyone, intrinsically, to appreciate and enjoy great musical works. If the formalism be present—subordinated, as it should be, to artistic value—the ear will acknowledge it unconsciously. To tell the beginner that such and such a passage is a development of such and such a theme is to tell him what his own senses would discover in any instance. This may not be achieved at once, for a certain number of repeated hearings are necessary to the appreciation of a great work, whether its form be previously understood or not.

The whole trouble, I think, arises from a confusion between the qualifications necessary to the elementary stages of coherent composition and the degree of knowledge necessary for listening intelligently to what has been composed—as I conceive them, two vastly different things. The exact knowledge of form may assist us to realise the extent of the composer's mechanical ingenuity—to worry out, in fact, the dry bones which he has been at pains to conceal, because they can have no true efficacy until they are so concealed, and to all intents and purposes are subordinated to the point of obliteration; but for the aspects of the art which really matter, and by which that art must ultimately be judged, such knowledge is useless—worse than useless where it detracts from the vital considerations.

I shall be answered, no doubt, that to look minutely into musical works and 'see the wheels go round' does add to one's enjoyment. I can only reply that I doubt it, and that if it be true, this form of enjoyment is not only negligible (compared to the æsthetical stimulation), but totally irrelevant. And why? Because musical form and all technical devices, in themselves are of no artistic value. Any bungler could invent a few 'motives' and juggle with them contrapuntally for a given period: it requires a Bach or a Wagner to employ this method and create music of sustained vital interest. If in any part of a musical work it becomes necessary consciously to direct the attention to formal devices in order to sustain the interest, I hold that such a passage fails æsthetically, and is therefore musically worthless. This is perhaps a sweeping statement, but surely a purely mathematical interest arising from a musical work is as far removed from the true spirit of the art as a naïve astonishment at the virtuosity of an agile pianist. We all unite in condemning the latter viewpoint, but what is musical form, qua form, if not the mere external virtuosity of the composer?

It will perhaps be argued, however, that the mathematical and the æsthetical viewpoints do not of necessity exclude each other. I admit this to be true, but only to a limited extent. In listening to Bach, we cannot avoid hearing the melodies running together and gloriously interweaving; but who stops consciously to admire the music as a chef d'œuvre of counterpoint? Who has a thought for Sonata-form when hearing the Symphonies of Beethoven or the Quartets of Mozart? Or who, having stopped to think of it, can honestly claim to have enjoyed music any the better? The enjoyment derived from form-study is purely extra-musical; and, practised to its full extent elsewhere than on paper, it cannot but detract from the enjoyment of music in the spirit in which, at its best, it is conceived. No one will deny, surely, that æsthetic value forms the raison d'être of all the music which counts, and that to achieve their end the great masters have made their own rules—or, at least, adapted and developed those which their predecessors made, which is much the same thing. Therefore to emphasise the means rather than the end is, to my mind, a superficial and ludicrous procedure.

Let me repeat, however, that I am in no way deprecating the exposition of musical form to the listener; I merely protest against the extraordinary insistence which is so often placed upon it—a course which is not only misleading, but definitely discouraging to beginners; and while I admit that it is difficult to make some points clear without going into technicalities, I venture to suggest that the emphasis should at all events be laid in the right place.

The Destra Choir gave a capital performance of 'Merrie England' at Fulham Town Hall on November 6, with Miss Lillian Stiles-Allen, Miss Edith Furmedge, Mr. Walter Glynne, and Mr. Herbert Heyner as soloists. Mr. William S. Lewis conducted.

THE CLEMENTI MYSTERIES

By HERBERT WESTERBY

An able résumé, by Dr. Orlando Mansfield, of some of the biographical problems connected with the life of Muzio Clementi has recently appeared in this journal. Clementi, as the 'Father of the Pianoforte,' bulked largely in the musical history and activities of this country, and, like Handel, is buried in Westminster Abbey. What is said by E. Dannreuther in his article on Clementi in 'Grove' is still true as regards his pianoforte works, that 'they are indispensable to pianists to-day and must remain so.'

Unfortunately no 'life' of Clementi has appeared in English. Unger in his (German) 'Muzio Clementi's Leben' (1914) seems to have gone to the proper sources and worked with system on the 'mysteries' of his life. Parabeni in his 'Muzio Clementi nella vita e nell' arte' (1921) has touched on other aspects. The present problems may be discussed in order, thus:

WHO BROUGHT CLEMENTI (IN 1766) FROM ROME TO ENGLAND?

This has been variously asserted to be: (a) Lord Mayor Beckford of Fonthill Abbey, who died in 1770. (b) His son William, the author of 'Vathek.' (c) Peter Beckford of Steepleton House, Dorset—cousin of the Lord Mayor.

Dr. Mansfield and Mr. H. Southern both assert it was Peter Beckford, and that Clementi resided at Steepleton House, but they do not give proof in support. Previous to Dr. Mansfield's article, there appeared (Spring, 1925) in the Year-Book of the Dorset Society,* a most interesting contribution by Mr. H. Southern entitled 'Clementi in the Dorset Park Country.' Mr. Southern shows that Clementi's patron could not have been the author of 'Vathek,' because in 1766 he was only seven years old. It follows that if Lord Mayor Beckford did not go to Italy, he could not have brought Clementi here, so we must fall back on Peter Beckford. Unger in his German 'Life' seems to be the first to quote in proof from Peter Beckford's 'Familiar Letters from Italy,' vol. 2, p. 228, thus:

> . . . the famous Clementi whom I found here in the year 1766 and bought of his father for seven years.

This point seems settled therefore, though it introduces a new problem, because the period of his adoption has always been given as four years: but of this later.

WHERE DID CLEMENTI RESIDE?

Dr. Mansfield and Mr. Southern say at Steepleton House in Dorset, but there is no actual apparent proof. Unger and other authorities say Fonthill Abbey.

Meanwhile, if Clementi were adopted for seven years, he probably would not go to London until 1773, and the English biographers say 1770, i.e., after four years' residence. If Clementi went first to Fonthill, he would probably leave there on the death of the Lord Mayor and go to Steepleton House for the rest of the time. If he went to Steepleton House, he might have spent seven years there, or made a change in 1770 and gone to stay with the young author of 'Vathek,' who afterwards (in 1780) himself went to Italy and wrote an anonymous account of his travels there. This problem is still unsolved.

---

* 274, Gresham House, Old Broad Street, E.C.2, 3*s.*!

WHEN DID CLEMENTI COMMENCE HIS CAREER IN LONDON?

No account of Clementi's appearance in London has been found earlier than that of April 3, 1775. What did he do between? Probably he was establishing himself first as a teacher. The Harmonicon of 1832 (which seems to have had personal information) states that on reaching London he was 'speedily' appointed cembalist or conductor to the Italian opera. This appointment was from 1777 until 1800, when he went to Paris and met with a great reception. Mereaux the Paris publisher also states that the success of Clementi's Op. 2 (published in 1773) determined him to go to London, so it was apparently between 1773 and 1775.

WHERE WERE HIS EARLIEST WORKS, OPP. 1 AND 2, PUBLISHED?

Prosniz says Op. 1 at Paris, and Op. 2 by André, of Offenbach. In the British Museum I have recently seen original editions of both as published by S. A. & P. Thompson of 75, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, and dedicated to Peter Beckford, Esq. This also points to his patron, but does not prove where he resided.

WHAT WAS HIS BIRTH-DATE?

English notices all say 1752, but birthday unknown. This I found after an examination of the funeral book extract in Chester's Registers of Westminster Abbey. Clementi died on Saturday, March 10, 1832. The extract is, 'Interred, March 28, from 26, Newman Street, Oxford Street, aged 80 years, 1 month, 15 days.' Parabeni quotes from this, and calculates Clementi's birthday as '25 Gennais del 1752,' i.e., January 25, 1752. The day is right, but the year must be wrong. Dr. Mansfield writes 'the life of Clementi opens with mystery. . . . His career closes in like manner.' Prosniz says that Clementi died 'in the neighbourhood of London' ('in der nahe London's'), which is doubtless intended for his house at Elstree; others have named Elm Lodge, Evesham. The well-informed Harmonicon of 1832 (p. 86) states that he 'died on Saturday the 10th of last month [March] at his cottage in the vale of Evesham, Worcestershire, in his eighty-first year.' Here a foot-note occurs, 'His age is thus stated in the public prints, but we have good reason to think that he was at least four or five years older.' A predecease biographical notice in the same journal seven months previous (August, 1831) stated that the year 1752 'is not authorised'; the notice continues, 'we think that it admits of correction and ought to be three or four years earlier.' In the 'Life of Moscheles' (by his wife), on p. 263, vol. i., we read, 'Clementi died at the age of eighty-four years, and was followed to his grave in Westminster Abbey by many of his brother artists.'

Parabeni points out that four different authorities—Gerber's Lexicon (1st ed.), G. Bertini's Dictionary, 1812, Choron's Dictionary, 1810, and Hauser's Lexicon, 1833—all state the birth-year to be 1746, which makes Clementi six years older than usually given, i.e., the prodigy would be twenty when he left Rome, twenty-nine at his first London concert, and thirty-five when he met Mozart in competition in 1781.

The probability is that Clementi's father understated the age of his son at an early stage of his career, as was similarly done by Beethoven's father, and Mozart's. It only remains now for some one at Rome to see the parochial registers and note if the date (January 25) is in one of the years 1746 to 1748.

In the Funeral Book, Clementi is mentioned as being 'late of Lincroft House, near Lichfield (Staffs), and then of Evesham.' As the family would be present at the interment it is likely that these details are correct, though as the former prodigy might not be sure of his age, his family would not.

Dr. Mansfield says that 'the Staffordshire story is an invention.' Why? I am curious to know. Note the elapse of eighteen days between the date of decease and the interment, of which, by the way, the Philharmonic Society took charge. To harmonize the various versions it is likely that the body was brought from his 'cottage' near Evesham, to his residence at Elstree, and from thence to 26, Newman Street and the Abbey.

WHERE ARE THE CLEMENTI 'SYMPHONIES'?

These seem to have disappeared. They were specially associated with the Philharmonic Society, of which Clementi was a founder and first conductor, and as such 'presided at the pianoforte.' The first concert of this historic Society took place on March 8, 1813, with Clementi at the pianoforte. The Harmonicon, speaking of Clementi and the Philharmonic Society, says:

> To this Society he presented two of his MS. Symphonies, the first of which was performed on the 1st of March, 1819. The venerable musician last presided at the pianoforte in 1828.

I have made inquiries, and Mr. W. Wallace, one of the Trustees, writes to say that though Clementi's name

> . . . does not appear in the catalogue of the Royal Philharmonic Society's Library now housed at the Royal Academy of Music . . . it may be that some MS. of Clementi's has been bound up with the score of some other composer.

In M. B. Foster's 'History of the Philharmonic' there are references to 'Symphony—Clementi,' but no indication of what this was.

I have seen this Library, with its huge piles of scores (about six hundred) and numerous parcels of band parts. Many students will be interested to know what an examination of these will yield.

Perhaps the above will help to settle various points in doubt. Nos. 2 and 6 still remain—mysteries. Those interested in Clementi as the 'Father of the Pianoforte' can see his tombstone in the South Cloister of Westminster Abbey.

JOSEPH FRANCK

By Andrew de Ternant

Joseph, the elder brother of César Franck, will probably have a niche in the future annals of music similar to that of Michael, the younger brother of Joseph Haydn. Michael Haydn was a meritorious musician, but, of course, he has long since been completely overshadowed by the fame of the composer of 'The Creation.' Joseph Franck, however, has other claims for remembrance than being the brother of a now more famous composer than himself. Joseph, who commenced his professional career in his native Liége, and afterwards divided it equally with that town and Paris, was one of the most unselfish of musicians. Two noble traits to his credit were his untiring championship in Belgium of the 18th-century Bach, and the 19th-century Rheinberger. Before Joseph undertook the task of making him better known, Bach was generally regarded in Belgium as 'a dull and dry Protestant musician, only of interest as belonging to an antiquated period of the history of music.' Joseph Franck founded no Bach Society, but he soon convinced his fellow-countrymen that the Leipsic cantor, though a Protestant musician, was also a loyal subject of a Roman Catholic Elector of Saxony, and had composed a colossal Mass in B minor and a beautiful Latin Magnificat. Fortunately for Joseph, music plays an important part in the education of the Belgian Roman Catholic clergy, and although Belgium is the smallest country in Europe, the percentage of musical culture is higher in the priesthood than in any other country in the world, excepting the much larger German Empire (or now Republic). When Joseph Franck commenced his teaching connection in the seminaries for the training of priests and in the convents in Belgium, the Alexandre harmonium was coming into fashion, and he had the happy thought of arranging a selection of the Preludes and Fugues for that instrument. Lithographed copies made by himself were used (long before he published a series), and these soon created a demand for more works of John Sebastian. Joseph was a pianist, organist, and violinist, and had a good baritone voice. With the assistance of his clerical pupils and the nuns he had no difficulty in arranging Bach concerts. The 'Christmas' Oratorio was one of the earliest undertakings, and for many years performances of that work were an annual event in some of the Belgian seminaries and convents.

The Organ Sonatas of Rheinberger were entirely unknown in Belgium until Joseph Franck took them in hand, and played them at public recitals and privately in Catholic Cathedrals and churches before his fellow professional organists. Though Rheinberger's Sonatas were first heard in Belgium before any other country—excepting, of course, Germany—there was no epistolary correspondence between the Belgian musician and the Bavarian composer.

It was not until Joseph Franck was sent by the Belgian Government to make a special report of the various systems of teaching in German music schools, that he became personally acquainted with Rheinberger at Munich Conservatorium. Rheinberger was delighted to see his Belgian champion, and insisted that he should leave his hotel and live in his (Rheinberger's) house while he stayed in the Bavarian capital. At this time a concert of Rheinberger's choral and orchestral works took place at Munich Conservatorium, but the Belgian musician was not much impressed with the programme, and was heard to mutter on leaving the hall: 'That man has left all his soul in the organ-loft.' Fortunately the remark was not heard by the thin-skinned Bavarian composer, and Joseph Franck on his return to Belgium continued with the same zeal as before his propaganda of Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas; but he never ventured to recommend his choral and orchestral works to conductors and concert-givers.

Joseph Franck's first regular appointment at Paris was as choirmaster and organist of the Church of the 'Missions Étrangers,' and afterwards at the more fashionable St. Thomas-d'Aquin. Joseph, in his selection of music for the church service, did not allow personal preferences to prevail, and it embraced all periods and all styles. Anyone who attended the churches under his musical direction could in less than twelve months become acquainted with practically the whole history of Roman Catholic Church music from the early part of the 16th century down to near the end of the 19th. The early Flemish, Spanish, Italian, and English Tudor composers were represented, as well as the most modern. Byrd's Masses and Motets were performed under Joseph's direction in the 'fifties and 'sixties, when these works were considered only of antiquarian interest by the composer's own countrymen. But Franck said it was not advisable to produce 16th-century Church music consecutively, as constant performances were likely to prove monotonous to modern congregations, who were not necessarily all serious students of the art—many barely understood even the musical idiom of their own day. Franck had no love for Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and 'Messe Solenelle,' and often remarked facetiously that the 'artful' Italian maestro made up the so-called sacred works from fragments of his forgotten and unfinished operas. But there was no denying the fact that many of the clergy warmly approved of the performance of Rossini's works in churches, and they were received with rapturous enthusiasm by the majority of congregations. It was the duty of organist-choirmasters, Joseph said, as well as the clergy, to attract the people as much as possible to church, and for the sake of peace it was advisable to satisfy their demands.

Joseph Franck, however, subsequently gave up his organist appointments, because they rather interfered with his periodical visits to Belgium. In his native town of Liége he was considered a 'great man.' Here he had opportunity for playing his own Pianoforte Concertos (in the style of Beethoven) before appreciative audiences. He gave concerts wholly of his own compositions, was requested to select the entire programmes for the season at the leading societies' concerts, acted as chief adjudicator at musical competitions, and was consulted generally on the appointments of music teachers in the schools and the choir and organist vacancies at the churches of the city of Liége. He was also often asked to compose for important municipal functions. At Paris he was lost in a crowd of men better known than himself, and he possessed none of the qualities adapted to allure the popular taste. He dressed like a provincial man, and was ill at ease in Parisian society. He eventually became a naturalised French citizen, but this did not place him on the same footing as French musicians of established reputation, and his change of nationality offended many of his old Belgian friends.

But Joseph, like his more distinguished brother César, belonged to a patient stock. He soon drew popular attention to himself by composing a number of pianoforte pot-boilers, and likewise polkas. His 'Feringliëd polka des Thugs' was one of the 'best-sellers' of the Paris Exhibition year of 1867. It was played by command of the Empress Eugenie at the Tuileries Imperial State balls, and soon found its way to the notorious 'Mabile' Gardens.

Joseph Franck died in 1891, having outlived his brother César by some seven months. He was seventy-one years of age, but looked much older. A more prolific composer than César, his contributions to Roman Catholic Church music alone number more than a hundred, but few were printed and published in the ordinary way. The majority were mainly circulated through the medium of lithographed copies (done by himself), and subsequently by means of other duplicating processes. The following, however, are among the most important issued by well-known Parisian musical publishing firms, viz.: Huit Motets avec accompagnement d'Orgue, Op. 1 (Choudens, second edition, 1885); 1er Messe Solonelle en Ut majeur, à quatre voix, Op. 13, 2me Messe Solonelle, en Fa majeur, à trois voix, Magnificat en Ré. majeur, à deux voix égales (Bibliothèque Leduc, 1885); and 'Panis Angelicus,' solo de mezzo-soprano et chœur, Op. 96 (Durand, 1899). In the 'Lyra Sacra' are included Veni, Sancte Spiritus, pour tenor ou soprano, Op. 134; Kyrie Eleison pour tenor ou soprano, Op. 162; Veni, Creator, solo et chœur à l'unison, Op. 189; and Ave Verum à deux voix égales, Op. 190. He also contributed some tunes to the collection 'La Chapelle du Couvent,' of J. Lecocq and L. D. Besozzi (1867).

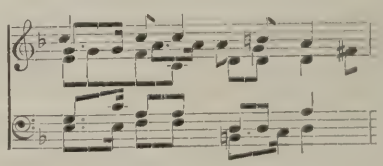
Some of Joseph Franck's compositions were at one time not unknown in English Roman Catholic churches. From 1850 to about 1882, the Redemptorists Order in England was largely composed of Belgian priests, and some of the members brought over with them lithographed copies of Joseph's works. They were frequently performed during the 'seventies at the Redemptorists' Church of St. Mary's, Clapham Park, S.W., under the direction of the English organist, the late Mr. Shepherd, who was a personal friend of the composer. By a curious coincidence also a prominent member of the congregation of that time was the late W. H. J. Weale, a former keeper of the National Art Library, South Kensington, who is as well-known in Belgium as in England by his many volumes on ancient Belgian art, and whose 'Bibliographia Liturgica' (1886) is still considered a standard work on the subject by foreign musical antiquarians.

MONTEVERDE'S 'ORFEO'

By J. A. Westrup

'L'Orfeo, Favola in Musica da Claudio Monteverdi,' was first produced in 1607, and published two years later. Since that date it has had a peculiar, almost a pathetic history. Scholars have always referred to it with a touch of condescension. It has received the disapproval of Burney, and, in our own day, the faint praise of Parry. Critics refer to it as a back number. 'Even so,' they say, 'will the crude extravagances of our contemporaries appear to a later and more enlightened age.' One of our most distinguished historians has been heard to remark that the composer was rather a 'second-rate man.'* Perhaps there is some reason for this, and it may be that editors are largely responsible for the attitude which is generally (at any rate in this country) adopted towards this curious work. They cannot be absolved from the charge of presenting it in an unattractive form, or, if the presentation has been attractive, of embellishing the original with a specious veneer which has little in common with Monteverde. Mr. Howes, in an article in the Musical Times last year,† drew attention to the existing editions, but made little comment on them. Robert Eitner's reprint of the original,* with the addition of a realisation of the bass, is almost as badly-printed as the score of 1615 which received the well-merited censure of Dr. Burney.† The emendations are frequently unnecessary and fussy. For example, he removes a perfectly good false relation in the ritornello which follows the chorus, 'Lasciate i monti' (p. 135). But this edition was published in 1881. Of Orefice's edition there is little to say except that it is certainly not Monteverde, and that if we are to enjoy Signor Orefice's compositions we would prefer to hear a work that was not based on a 17th-century music-drama. D'Indy's edition suffers from being a selection. He omits the whole of Act 1, blandly remarking that it 'ne consiste qu'en chansons et danses pastorales,' as if that were any reason for leaving out some of the most delightful music in the whole opera. But d'Indy travelled on the right road. 'Nous n'avons pas eu,' he says, 'l'intention de faire œuvre d'archéologue, mais œuvre d'artiste,' and even though the marks of expression are a little too freely scattered over the pages, and the translation is at times forced and the harmony often 'in contrasto con lo spirito monteverdiano,'‡ the selection, as far as it goes, is not unpleasing. D'Indy, however, did not alter the original time-values, which were left for Malipiero in his edition published two years ago. The use of the crotchet as the unit does much to remove the antiquarian flavour of an old-fashioned work. Yet even Malipiero retains the minim unit in the choruses, and spoils them further by insisting on making each part clear and distinct in the accompaniment, as if the parts were not already clear enough on their separate lines. What could be more ugly or more unnecessary than this from the first chorus (p. 9)?:

Ex. 1.



A simple reduction of the essentials would have been quite sufficient. Malipiero falls between two stools, for he is neither literally faithful to the original nor sufficiently attractive to be popular. He has, however, the advantage of being an Italian, and so easily corrects errors in the libretto which Eitner marks with a suspicious qurey.§

'Orfeo' can hardly be said to have a plot in the melodramatic sense. Its general structure is closely akin to that of the Greek tragedy, and all the familiar ingredients of that form are here reproduced and coloured with a wealth of musical invention. The impersonal chorus, the messenger recounting deeds too awful to be acted on the stage, the long soliloquy, the deus ex machina, and the 'happy ending,' all reappear and take their proper place in the unfolding of the narrative. The sententiousness of the final

* For an appreciation, however, see Schneider, 'Claudio Monteverdi' (Paris, 1921), pp. 250 et seq.

† June, 1924, p. 509.

* 'Gesellschaft für Musikforschung,' vol. x.

† 'The work is so ill-printed that some sagacity is necessary to discover the errors of the press from those of the composer.' Burney, like Hawkins, was not acquainted with the first edition of 1609. I imagine that this is as badly-printed as the second edition.

‡ Malipiero's preface, p. 1.

§ I have given references to the editions of Eitner, Malipiero, and d'Indy by the letters E. M. and D. and the numbers of the pages.

chorus is not unlike that of the old Euripidean tag. Here is the second verse :

Thus to all of us is given
Who obey the Lord Eternal ;
He shall taste the joys of Heaven
Who on earth has brav'd th' infernal,
He who sows his seed in sorrow
Fruits of grace shall reap to-morrow.*

The strain of piety seems a little out of place, and mixes oddly with the rest of the opera.

The work opens with a Toccata, a brilliant fanfare on the brass, with (apparently) all the rest of the orchestra as well. Some editors have so far misunderstood the purpose of this Toccata as to mark it piano the first time. But it clearly serves to attract the attention of the audience, and is feeble and ineffective unless played fortissimo. It bears no resemblance to the Prelude to 'Rheingold,' and it is strange that any should have been discovered. It should properly be repeated twice, after which, to the strains of a delicate little ritornello (Ex. 2), the Spirit of Music enters as Prologue :

Ex. 2. Andante. (E. 123, M. 2, D. 2.)†

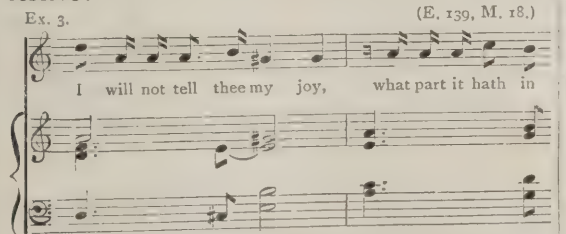
She differs in her function from the Prologue to a Greek play, in that she is neither a character in the drama nor does she reveal the plot beforehand. Her office is merely ceremonial. She addresses the audience as renowned heroes, explains that she is moved to sing of Orpheus, and bids all Nature be still. To the accompaniment of the same ritornello she retires.

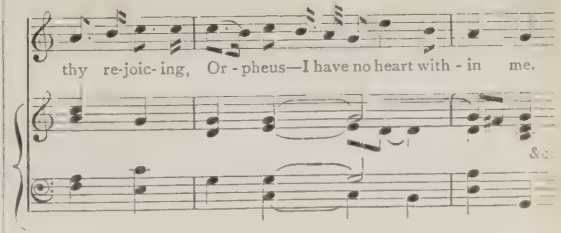
In Act 1 the interest centres mainly in the choruses and dances. A shepherd delivers a panegyric suitable to the nuptials of Orpheus and Eurydice, upon which the chorus sings an ode invoking the blessings of Hymen on the happy pair. A Nymph replies, calling them to song and dance. A delightful chorus ('Haste from the mountains,' E. 133, M. 12) and ballet follows. The Shepherd then addresses Orpheus, who, moved by his entreaties, sings of the happiness which he has found in the requital of his passion. Eurydice answers him in a very short recitative, full of simplicity and maidenly reserve :

Ex. 3. (E. 139, M. 18.)



* I quote here, and throughout this article, from the translation by Mr. R. L. Stuart.

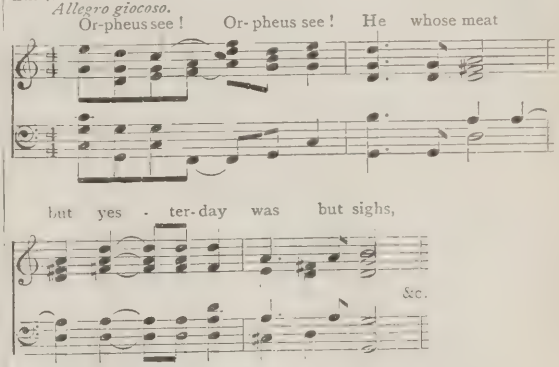
† M., Allegro; D., Lentement; Schneider (op. cit., p. 255), 'd'un mouvement plus lent et mélancholique.'



The Act closes with an elaborate choral simile, interspersed with a particularly rugged ritornello, likening the joy of Orpheus to the brightness of the summer after winter and of the sun after storm. The first part of the simile is in two and three parts, but at the end the whole five-part chorus swings in with this splendid tune, softening at once at the mention of their hero's past affliction :

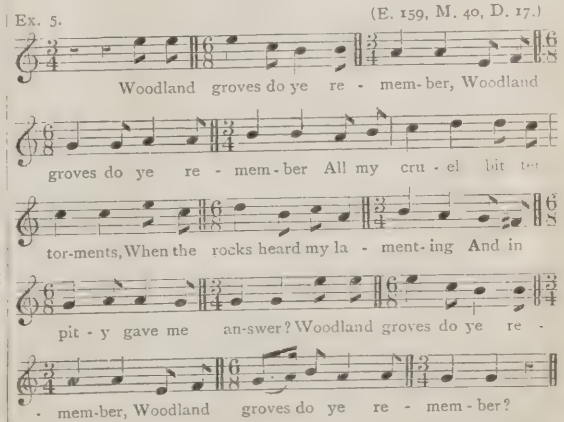
Ex. 4. (E. 146, M. 31.)

Allegro giocoso.



The opening of Act 2 is again pastoral, and includes a charming little duet for two shepherds. The second half of their song is taken up by the chorus, and leads straight into an air of four verses for Orpheus, barred irregularly with alternations of 3-4 and 6-8. It seems quite clear that the crotchet of the 3-4 is equal to the dotted crotchet of the 6-8, though Malipiero makes no distinction, and Eitner (in the ritornello) gets into quite a muddle of semiquavers wrongly grouped together. The song has a fascinating lilt which is quite spoilt if the alternate 3-4 is taken as a syncopated 6-8. I give the voice-part of the first verse. The repetition of the first line is a quaint touch :

Ex. 5. (E. 159, M. 40, D. 17.)



Woodland groves do ye re - mem-ber, Woodland groves do ye re - mem-ber All my cru-el bit-ter tor-ments, When the rocks heard my la - ment-ing And in pit-y gave me an-swer? Woodland groves do ye re -
- mem-ber, Woodland groves do ye re - mem-ber?

The first shepherd begs Orpheus to notice how all nature shares in his rejoicing. The song ends in C major. A slight pause, and we hear an ominous chord of the sixth on C sharp, innocuous in any other context, but here full of sinister foreboding. It is Silvia, the messenger, one of the companions of Eurydice. 'Ah, bitter sorrow,' she sings to a melody which is afterwards skilfully used as the bass of a five-part chorus. Orpheus overhears. 'Whence dost thou come, whither go? Nymph, tell thy tidings.' 'To thee, Orpheus, I come, cruel tidings I bear thee, a tragedy of bitterness and grieving.' And then—

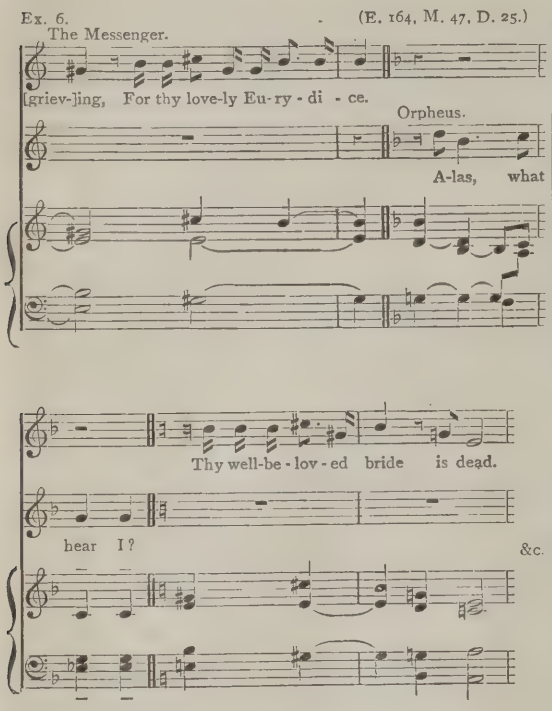
Ex. 6. (E. 164, M. 47, D. 25.)



The beauty of this is not peculiar to any one age or epoch; it does not have to be analysed by the scholar or defended by the antiquarian. All men have felt emotion like this at some time or other. Schneider well says: 'Nous ne sommes plus ici en face d'un compositeur échafaudant des notes; nous avons devant nous un homme que pleure véritablement.' Eitner introduces strange chords which profess to bridge the gaps that were never meant to be bridged. It is German scholarship of this type that tempts the choleric to blaspheme.

The rest is soon told. Orpheus declares that he will recover his bride from the dead or else remain with her below. The Messenger renounces the light of day and departs to lead a life of solitary penance. Two shepherds sing a dirge for the death of Eurydice, a victim to the serpent's fangs, and for the loss of Orpheus, torn from them by the bitterness of grief. With the chorus 'Ah, bitter sorrow' the Act closes.

In Act 3 Orpheus, guided by Hope, arrives at the bank of the Styx, where Charon greets him and warns him not to force his way into Tartarus. There follows the impressive little symphony quoted by Mr. Howes (p. 510), and the long and elaborate solo with which Orpheus tries to win Charon's heart. The old ferryman refuses to be charmed, but the sweetness of the song at length induces slumber, and Orpheus passes across to the other shore, singing on his way, 'O give me back my love, Tartarean spirits.' A chorus of spirits comments on the invincibility of man's will.

The scene of Act 4 is Hades. Pluto sits in state to receive the suppliant, who by the advocacy of Persephone is granted his desire. In thankfulness he sings a pæan of joy to his lyre which has thus won his victory for him. This is the climax of the work, and the composer rose to the occasion with a tune which (but for posterity) would have been numbered among the world's noblest melodies.* The triumph is short-lived. As Orpheus leads his bride back to the world above, he turns to look at her and she is taken from him. The chorus of spirits, once more in philosophical mood, point out the danger of desire and the glory of true virtue:

> He only aye is glorious
> Who's o'er himself victorious.

In Act 5 Orpheus is wandering disconsolate through the plains of Thrace, Echo following him as he laments his misfortune and sings of the matchless beauty and goodness of Eurydice. Apollo opportunely descends in a cloud, and takes Orpheus with him to heaven, there to behold his lovely bride for ever.

The final chorus is followed by a moresca, danced by shepherds. Schneider suggests that it was intended as 'le morceau de vestiaire,' during which the audience prepared to leave the theatre. In any case, to the sophisticated mind it seems an anti-climax, and one feels that the opera would have ended more appropriately with the final chorus.

It will be seen from this rough outline of the story that the dramatic interest is slight, and that consequently the music bears a greater burden on its shoulders. Only in Acts 2 and 4 are there what could be called dramatic moments, and it is remarkable that in spite of this handicap the level of inspiration remains so high throughout. Words like this may seem strange to those who regard 'Orfeo' as a peculiar kind of fossil, presumably interesting to its contemporaries, but unworthy of any serious attention to-day. It never occurs to them that the dry bones can live, or that inspiration is not a quality peculiar to those favoured persons who are more nearly connected with their own epoch. They fail to see that the more remote a work is, the more necessary it is really to live with it in order to know it. It is not sufficient to subject this music to the critical microscope. It is stifled by the air of the study and the library. To hear its beauties revealed by singers of flesh and blood is a very different thing from examining the faded pages and obsolete notation of an antique score. Criticism like that of Burney† then appears impertinent, and it is not the composer who is shown up, but the doctor.

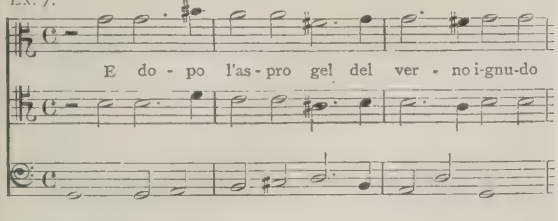
One of the most interesting features of Monteverde's style is the picturesque setting which he gives to particular words and phrases. He himself said, 'The declamation is expressed by the music,' but it would have been obvious without this assurance. A good example of his word-painting is the beginning of one of the choruses in the long simile which I have already mentioned, particularly

* Quoted by Mr. Howes (in part), p 511: E. 202, M. 105, D. 56. What does Hawkins mean by saying 'solo airs there are none'?

† 'The common precept of avoiding two fifths or two eighths, particularly in two parts, is frequently and wantonly neglected, without the least necessity or pretence of producing new and agreeable effects by such a licence' (General History of Music,' iv., 27). This is the pedantic method. You discover the consecutives first, and then declare that they are disagreeable.

as it has proved a stumbling-block to the editors. The first and second editions both read :

Ex. 7.



The error is plainly in the second bar of the tenor. Eitner (p. 145) alters it to—which breaks the flow of sixths, and does not explain the corruption. Malipiero (p. 30) transfers the sharp to the first C, and reads :

Ex. 8.

Ex. 9.

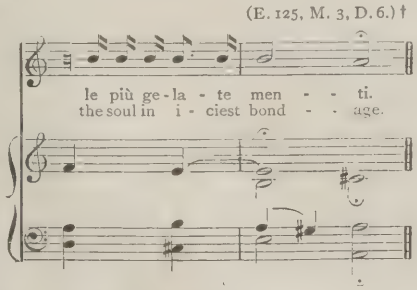
But there is no place for a C sharp in the vocal parts, and so far from it being necessary to avoid a discord Monteverde clearly intended one on the word 'aspro.'* Burney realised this, and read what is almost certainly right :

Ex. 10.

The offending sharp is, in fact, a natural which has escaped from before the B where it should have stood, just as the B in the alto part is marked with a natural. An interesting parallel to this occurs in the prologue, the significant chord falling on the word 'iciest' :

(E. 125, M. 3, D. 6.) †

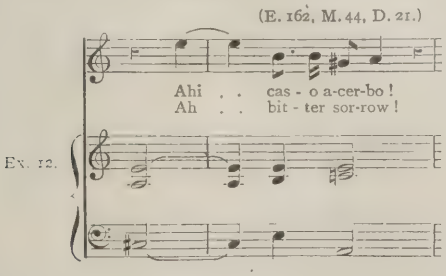
Ex. 11.



So also in the Messenger's first solo :

(E. 162, M. 44, D. 21.)

Ex. 12.



the discord accentuates the effect of 'acerbo.' Nor is it only bitterness which the music expresses. This delightful little flourish (from a shepherd's song) both looks and sounds like a ripple of laughter :

Ex. 13. (Ibid.)

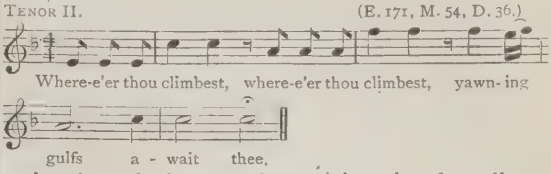
It would be easy to go on multiplying examples of this picturesque method. But any one who looks into the work at all closely cannot fail to discover them. As most of them occur in recitative, it may be interesting to give one from a chorus as a last instance. The other parts follow the second tenor in imitation :

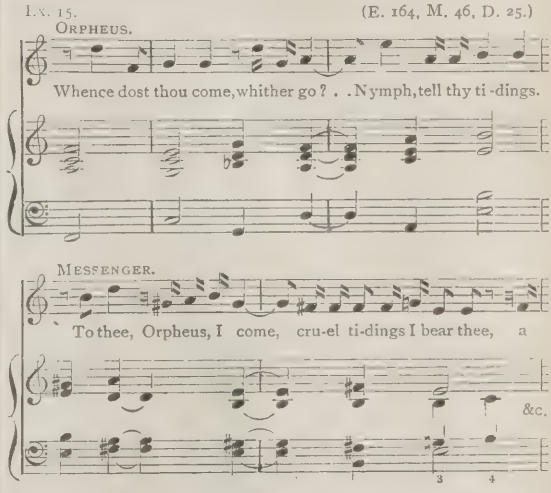
Ex. 14

TENOR II. (E. 171, M. 54, D. 36.)



Another device worth noticing is the climax reached by an ascending scale or sequence, a process which afterwards became a commonplace and the chief resource of every Kapellmeister who ever set pen to paper. There are two good examples, both from the Messenger scene in Act 2. The first is the anxious cry of Orpheus, followed by the restrained melancholy of the Messenger's reply :

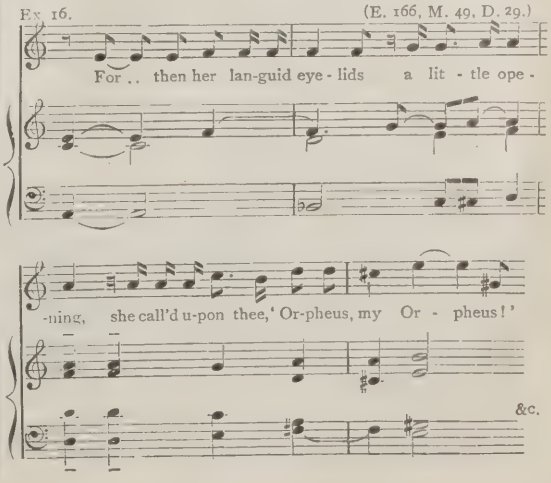
Ex. 15. (E. 164, M. 46, D. 25.)



ORPHEUS.
Whence dost thou come, whither go? . . Nymph, tell thy ti -dings.
MESSENGER.
To thee, Orpheus, I come, cru-el ti-dings I bear thee, a
&c.

The other is from the Messenger's long narrative, where she describes the last moments of Eurydice. (The reading of the fourth bar is that of the 1615 edition. M. differs from E. and D.) :

Ex. 16. (E. 166, M. 49, D. 29.)



* The English version is : 'And after biting frost of naked winter.'

† E. and D. read D sharp in the bass, and D.'s translation misses the point of 'gelate.'

The forces required for the performance of 'Orfeo' are considerable. The solo singers (some of whom are members of the chorus) number seventeen, thus :

Sopranos (6): Spirit of Music, Nymph, Eurydice, Messenger, Hope, Persephone.
Altos (1) : 2nd Shepherd.
Tenors (7) : Orpheus, 1st and 3rd Shepherds, 1st and 2nd Spirits, Echo, Apollo.
Basses (3) : Charon, Pluto, 3rd Spirit.

However, some of the parts can easily be doubled, e.g., the Spirit of Music, Eurydice, the Messenger, and Hope, can all be performed by one person. The five-part disposition of the chorus varies. Sometimes the sopranos are divided, sometimes the tenors. The spirits of the underworld are altos, tenors, and basses, sopranos apparently being considered unsuitable for Pluto's choir. No doubt the real reason is that Monteverde wanted a sombre tone-quality (compare the opening of the second number of Brahms's 'Requiem'). Of the orchestra there is not much need to speak. Mr. Howes has given the list of the instruments in his article (p. 509). He goes on to say :

> How are we to modernise this? . . . We could either hand the whole score to Sir Edward Elgar and get him to give us a modern version complete with tubas and triangles—this would be the course that Monteverde himself would have wished to see adopted —or, unable to divest ourselves entirely of our antiquarian scruples, we might prefer to keep as near the original as possible, and merely make a few substitutions for the impossibly obsolete instruments.

I am bound to say that the first of these suggestions does not commend itself. There is no harm in orchestrating a work like the Bach C minor Fugue, which is (presumably) already fairly well-known in its original form, though it is ridiculous to say that Bach would have revelled in it. But to present a work in a new dress when we are unacquainted with its proper garb is a particularly obnoxious form of artistic deceitfulness. Orchestral resources and styles of composition are not so independent of each other that any work can naturally and easily be transplanted to a new setting. At the same time, it is of course impossible to reproduce exactly the original orchestration. The following scheme, which is much less drastic than the suggestions of Mr. Howes, will be found on comparison with the original list to form an adequate substitute, and to be reasonably economical :

2 Piccolos (flautini alla vigesima seconda).
2 Oboes } (in unison, cornetti).
2 Clarinets }
2 Trumpets (to play 1st and 2nd trombones where necessary).
3 Trombones.
Harp.
Organ (with reed and flue stops).
Harpsichord (or Pianoforte).
Strings.

Particular interest attaches to the strings, as they are once used to accompany recitative, viz., at the end of Act 3, a very striking and unusual procedure. Their warm and restful tone provides a marked contrast to the more severe combination of organ and lute, which has gone before. A special study might well be made of the instruments used for accompanying the recitative. It was no doubt the frequent changes in the Messenger scene that confirmed Hawkins in his belief that a special instrument was assigned to each character. Of the wind instruments in this list the oboes, clarinets, trumpets, and trombones play the seven-part symphonies. The piccolos are used, as in the original score, to give piquancy to the ballet in the first Act, and in the ritornello in thirds in Act 2. The organ employs reed or flue stops according as it represents the 'regale' or the 'organo di legno.'

It is a mistake to look for foreshadowings of later styles in 'Orfeo.' Such an attitude prevents one from seeing the fruits of Monteverde's genius in their true light. But a lesson may be learnt from his innovations. It appears that they are most successful when they seem to come most from the heart. We smile at the florid scales for cornetti or violins. Here he was trying to be impressive, and we feel that it does not quite come off. In just the same way, when we have recovered from our first rapturous prostration before the shrine of some modern prestidigitateur, hailed by his intimates as a genius, by the public as a fool, do we perceive that the tricks are threadbare, the bombast puerile. We cease to marvel, and realise that the Emperor has no clothes on.

It is over three hundred years since primitive brass blared out the rugged Toccata, and the curtain rose at Mantua before the 'offspring of princes.' Yet while Striggio's libretto has worn thin and the conceits of a more artificial age have become palpable, the freshness and vigour of the music remain untainted by so long a burial. It might be worth while to consider whether some of the energy which a belated patriotism has expended on resuscitating the Elizabethans—a process in which enthusiasm has not infrequently been anterior to discrimination—might not with advantage be devoted to extending a welcome to a patriarch from another clime. Perhaps the public is too sophisticated to listen with equanimity to simple recitative accompanied by harpsichord or organ. Students again may laugh at the direction con tutti li stromenti, and go away to introduce some new and hideous instrument of percussion into their most recent symphonic poems. All this can only be determined by the event.

It has not been the purpose of this article to give the history of 'Orfeo,' which can be collected from the ordinary works of reference, nor to attempt a complete critical estimate of it as an artistic creation. It has been sufficient to touch on some of its many aspects. To do justice to the harmonic and melodic invention, to the expressiveness of the recitative, and the vigour of the choruses, homophonic and contrapuntal alike, would require a more ample exegesis. An opportunity for renewing acquaintance with the work will be afforded on December, 7, 8, and 9, when it will be performed in English at Oxford. Particulars were announced in last month's Musical Times.

NEW LIGHT ON LATE TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. Grattan Flood

XIV.—William Hunnis

Although the fame of William Hunnis is more closely connected with the development of the English drama than with that of music, yet he composed a good deal, and was also Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal for thirty-one years. He was born circa 1530, and in 1551 became a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. One thing is certain, that Hunnis's name appears in the Stowe MSS. (British Museum) 571, fol. 366, in 1552, acknowledging the payment of his fee, his description being given as 'of the Chappell.'

Hunnis was undoubtedly imbued with the reforming doctrines under Edward VI.; yet Queen Mary retained his services in the Chapel Royal.* However, in March, 1556, he was found to be more or less implicated in a Protestant plot, and was deprived of his post. In 1559 he was restored under Queen Elizabeth, and as a mark of favour was appointed Keeper of the Queen's Gardens at Greenwich, for life, at a salary of 12*d.* a day, by Patent dated June 20, 1562.

On the death of Richard Edwards, on October 31, 1566, Hunnis was appointed his successor as Master of the Children of the Chapel, and was sworn into that office on November 15, 1566, at an annuity of £40, the number of boys being twelve. Five months later, on April 18, 1567, he was granted a commission to take up choristers for the Chapel Royal. These choristers were selected as much to be boy-actors as singers in the Chapel, and at Shrovetide (February 29-March 2), 1568, Hunnis presented his players at Court, giving a yearly performance till 1572. In that year, on January 6, he produced a play called 'Narcissus'; and on Shrove-Sunday, 1576, his dramatic venture was rewarded by the sum of £13 6*s.* 8*d.* From 1576 to 1580 Hunnis joined forces with Farrant, both companies being styled the 'Children of the Chapel,' with Farrant as manager or producer. Their first play was 'Mutius Scaevola,' given on January 6, 1577, for which the Queen allowed an extra £10 in addition to the usual fee of £6 13*s.* 4*d.*

Meantime Hunnis did not neglect the musical side of his appointment, and on December 11, 1578, a work of his entitled 'A Hive Full of Hunny' was licensed to Thomas Dawson. This quaint work contained 'The first book of Moses, called Genesis, turned into English metre,' with a melody in the minor mode. Three years later, on November 7, 1581, Hunnis issued 'VII. Steppes to Heaven, alias the VII. Psalmes reduced into meter,' of which a second edition appeared in 1583 under the varied title of 'Seven Sobbes of a Sorrowful Soull for Sinnes,' printed by Henrie Denham in Aldersgate Street at the Sign of the Starre, dedicated to the Countess of Sussex—with musical setting.

In addition to his three printed volumes, Hunnis composed many sacred pieces, which are in MS., in the Music School, Oxford. His 'Alack, when I look back,' was revised by Byrd (see 'Tudor Church Music,' vol. 2, William Byrd, page 223).

On Farrant's death (November 30, 1580), his widow sold the lease of the Blackfriars to Hunnis, who continued to train the Children of the Chapel Royal for the Queen's delectation. The Children of Windsor do not appear to have acted after 1580, and, as Prof. Wallace writes, 'from that time forth they are never heard of again as actors.' On December 20, 1581, the Widow Farrant signed a confirmatory lease of her whole property to William Hunnis and John Newman, at an increased rental of £6 13*s.* 4*d.*, and Hunnis presented Court plays by his boys during the years 1581, 1582, and 1583.

At length the Earl of Oxford, believing in Lyly's ability to do great things in drama, bought the Blackfriars lease, and in June, 1583, made a present of it to Lyly. In the winter of 1583-84 the Earl of Oxford's boys—that is to say, the combined forces of the Children of the Chapel and the Children of St. Paul's Cathedral, under William Hunnis and Thomas Gyles respectively—gave several Court plays, including 'Alexander and Campaspe' (which has the charming lyric 'Cupid sang, Campaspe played') on January 1, 1584, and 'Sapho and Phao' on the following Shrove Tuesday, March 3, at night. Hunnis received £20 for presenting two plays—on Twelfth Day and on Shrove Tuesday, 1584. However, in May, 1584, Sir William More got an order from the Sheriff of London awarding him possession of Lyly's theatre, and thus ended the first Blackfriars Theatre and the Children's plays under their master, Hunnis.

From 1585 to 1597 Hunnis devoted himself to the training of the children for the Chapel solely, and composed some sacred music for them. A new edition of his 'Seven Sobbes of a Sorrowful Soull' was issued in 1587.

His death occurred on June 6, 1597, and three days later Nathaniel Gyles, Mus.Bac., Master of the Children of Windsor since October 1, 1595, was sworn Gentleman of the Chapel Royal and Master of the Children, receiving a Patent for his appointment on July 14, 1597.

* See 'Queen Mary's Chapel Royal,' by the present writer, in the English Historical Review (1918).

CRITICS IN EXCELSIS

By Arthur T. Froggatt

Disraeli said that the critics were the men who had failed. A recent writer puts it in this way: 'One might describe the average art critic as a parasite living on the endeavour of others.' I am disposed to think that these judgments are not undeserved—at all events the second, which only applies to the average critic. But what of those who are below the average? I remember one who was fined two hundred pounds for a false and malicious libel, and escaped punishment because all his possessions (so he said) were the property of his father. So, possibly, they do not always succeed in 'living on the endeavour of others.' At any rate, let us hope not.

Of course on this occasion I confine my remarks to musical criticism, without reference to such works of art as the memorial to Epstein—I beg pardon, I mean the memorial to Hudson. But the criticism we meet with is often calculated to take our breath away—possibly, intentionally so calculated. We are inclined to wish that it were a little less emphatic, a little less sweeping. We might even desire that the critics were a trifle more in agreement one with another. It is somewhat disconcerting to feel compelled radically to revise our estimate of the great composers every few months or so.

Most of us were educated in the belief that Henry Purcell stood at the head of English composers. But two years ago it became necessary to celebrate the Tercentenary of William Byrd; and some time earlier—I suppose as one of the preparations for that event—it was discovered that he was the greatest English composer. (I remember, in this connection, the late Dr. McNaught congratulating the Musical Association on the fact of England possessing more than one greatest composer.) We were told, indeed, that Purcell was a pigmy compared with Byrd. In the Tercentenary year an eminent musician, after praising Byrd, warned us that we might soon be talking nonsense about him; but it seemed to me that the advice came rather late. However, another musician informed me that he preferred Byrd to Palestrina, the music of the latter being too smooth—I think that was the adjective. I took this to mean that when listening to a piece of 16th-century music we expect occasional crudities, and are disappointed if we do not get them.

With respect to the comparative merits of Byrd and Purcell, I should have thought it might be sufficient to say that they were the greatest English musicians of the 16th and 17th centuries respectively. Ouseley, by the way, seems to have preferred Tallis to Byrd; and possibly Ouseley was as good a judge as any of those who now instruct us in these matters. But the custom (for it has become a custom) which I deprecate is not so much the pitting of one composer against another, as the absurd depreciation of the one whom it is the fashion to despise, or the equally absurd exaltation of the other whom it is the fashion to adore. Most of the great composers have had the misfortune to suffer in both ways.

A short time ago I was astounded at reading in the musical column of one of the great London dailies that Orlando Gibbons's 'Hosanna to the Son of David' was perhaps the finest piece of sacred music ever written. Not the finest by Gibbons, not the finest by any Englishman, but the finest ever written. The 'perhaps' of course was an indication that the habit of 'hedging'—almost universal among musical critics when discussing new works—had not been entirely laid aside. But think of it. If the writer had said that this anthem was 'perhaps' the finest sixty-six bars of sacred music ever written, I might, in this year of enthusiasm, have agreed with him. But when I reflect that such things as the 'St. Matthew' Passion, the Mass in B minor, the Requiem Masses of Cherubini and Mozart, the Missa Solemnis, to mention only a few trifles, are in existence, I can only conclude that this particular critic had lost all sense of proportion—temporarily, of course.

Talking of 'hedging,' how changed are the methods of criticism since the days when Joseph Bennett had the courage to declare that a certain oratorio was the finest since 'Elijah.' (I don't say he wasn't right.) But now we seldom go beyond saying that the present work marks the latest stage in the talented composer's progress—which very likely it does, whether the upward progress tend towards heaven or merely into the clouds. It is only when dealing with the great masters that the critic seeks to astonish us.

I do not know that I have ever heard much abuse of Haydn—for some years he was simply treated with silent contempt. Very occasionally the first part of 'The Creation' was honoured by a performance, but his Symphonies, and even his Quartets, were laid aside. Now there are signs of a change for the better. A few Symphonies were revived during last year's Promenade concerts, and I am delighted to find that eleven were included in the programmes of the recent season. With Mozart it has been very different. 'Childish' was, I think, the favourite epithet for his music. Sometimes it was received with a patronage which was even more offensive than abuse, as though one should say, 'How nice it really is, after all!' I could name an examiner who said to a candidate, 'Now play this silly little piece by Mozart.' But I have been much amused lately by reading great praise of Mozart, chiefly from critics who are learning to sneer at Beethoven. It has been discovered that Mozart's music is absolutely perfect. And this although he knew nothing of the whole-tone scale!

At the present time Beethoven is on the down grade. I have seen it stated that not more than ten of his Sonatas are worth playing. Quite recently we were told that the 'Pastoral' Symphony belongs to a type which is fast passing away—I forget the exact words. Remarks of this kind have been tolerably frequent of late. It happens just now to be the correct thing to take every opportunity for exalting Bach; and in order to do this effectively it is of course necessary to depreciate Beethoven. Next year it may be the other way about.

Mendelssohn, at one time ranked with Handel and Beethoven and for years placed above Schumann and Chopin, has long been removed from his pedestal. There are, I venture to believe, some signs of a revival of favour. At all events his music has never failed to attract the multitude. Perhaps that is why some of our modernists hate him so thoroughly.

A mastery of form has not been commonly reckoned among the many great qualities of Chopin's music. A few years ago, however, I read a series of articles which was intended to prove that in reality this was one of its strongest points. This year, from another source, I have learnt why it is that his music so often fails to please. This is all rather amusing, if at the same time a little perplexing.

One of the most fatuous pieces of criticism I ever heard was uttered, a good many years ago, during the discussion following the reading of a paper (written by myself) on Liszt's Symphonic Poems. The speaker (a Cathedral organist, by the way), who was unable to agree with my estimate of Liszt, quoted Mendelssohn as having described Liszt's compositions as 'the apotheosis of commonplace.' In view of the fact that Mendelssohn died before the Symphonic Poems were produced, this was pretty good.

I once entered a concert room, on the seats of which I saw copies of a hand-bill liberally sprinkled. I took up one of these, and read thereon the opinion of 'the celebrated critic, Mr. X.,' on the merits of the artists who were about to perform. I raised my eyes and beheld the 'celebrated critic' himself two or three rows of stalls away. I couldn't help wondering whether he was feeling comfortable or uncomfortable.

I have avoided mention of the name of anyone living; but I wish to take this opportunity for paying a tribute to the memory of one who has passed away. To my mind, Sir George Grove was an admirable example of all that a critic should be. Almost invariably accurate in matters of fact, devoted to the classics, yet always ready to welcome new works of genius, accomplished in many different ways, warm-hearted and full of enthusiasm, no one who knew him even slightly, as I did, would ever dream of associating him with 'the men who had failed.' And he had the saving grace of modesty.

Mr. R. J. Pitcher will give a lecture-demonstration on 'The Techniquer' at the London Academy of Music, on December 15, at 8, with Dr. Yorke Trotter in the chair. Admission is free.

The Reigate Choral Society's plans for the season include a performance of 'Hiawatha' in December and a miscellaneous programme in the spring.

New Music

SONGS

A good handful of Schubert's songs is now well established in the school singing class, and even in the junior solo classes at some competition festivals. Teachers will therefore welcome a book of thirty just issued by Novello as Book 273 of their 'School Songs' series. Most of the favourites are here—'Ave Maria,' 'Courage,' 'Litany,' 'The Organ Grinder,' 'Peace,' 'The Trout,' 'Who is Sylvia?' &c. The form is handy, the price low (it works out at less than a penny per song!), and the voice-part appears in both notations. Obviously the collection should be of great service, not only in schools but to vocal students and teachers generally.

A further half-dozen songs by Bernard van Dieren come from the Oxford University Press. His methods were discussed pretty fully by a colleague in a recent issue of this journal, so there is no need for lengthy criticism. No one can question the sincerity and high ideals of the composer, nor can one deny the frequent beauty of the music. Yet the result is less convincing than it ought to be. The interest and beauty are unequally spread; the music is often unnecessarily difficult; and the composer appears to disdain some practical considerations in the laying-out and notation. For example, in the setting of Despréaux's Chanson ('Voici les lieux charmants') the pianoforte part is set out mainly in such small type as to be almost undecipherable to the player. The reason for this uncomfortable method is thus given in a Note:

> The effect to be aimed at is to obtain a balance of sound which, while allowing the big notes to stand out, preserves those printed in small type sufficiently clear and distinct to make them heard as a supporting polyphony (e.g., a relation similar to cor anglais and strings).

But surely the part to be made prominent can be indicated by the customary signs; a player of intelligence can be trusted to realise 'a supporting polyphony' without its being printed so minutely as it is here. This Note points to another weakness of the composer: he is too often writing for one medium and thinking in terms of another. His pianoforte parts abound in passages that are obviously conceived in the idiom of string and wind combinations. In addition to the Chanson, the songs received are 'Balow' (anonymous words of 16th century), a Sonnet of Spenser for tenor and eleven solo instruments, Mörike's 'Schön Rohtraut,' a passage from de Quincey's 'Levana and our ladies of sorrow,' and 'Weep you no more, sad fountains.' The Mörike song and 'Balow' contain some exquisite passages, but both are blemished by occasional over-elaboration. However, a reviewer makes these strictures with diffidence. The whole-hearted advocacy of such a singer as John Goss makes one hesitate. Clearly the proof lies in an unusual degree in performance, so it is to be hoped that Mr. Goss and others of like enterprise will give their public a chance of getting on terms with this much-debated composer. In the present stage, however, it is difficult to avoid an impression that van Dieren is more interesting to the singer and player than to the listener.

A good many other songs have been received from the Oxford University Press. Hubert J. Foss's setting, for baritone, male-voice chorus, and pianoforte, of seven poems by Thomas Hardy is highly provocative, and at first sight its interest seems to lie chiefly in that quality. The ironic and grim outlook of so many of our younger song-composers rarely makes for attractive music, and this collection, one feels, overworks the vein. Mr. Foss (again in the fashion) is inclined to work a figure thread-bare, and he appears to forget that a progression designed for reiteration should not as a rule contain any specially striking feature, especially in regard to harmony. Thus the very effective opening bar of 'The Sleep-Worker' gets on our nerves long before we have finished with it. Probably the composer intended it to do so, but he could have produced the desired effect of a quietly relentless and monotonous background without reminding us that composition on such lines is fatally easy. The accompaniment of 'The Dark-eyed Gentleman' is another example of the overworking of a figure—this time diatonic. A good deal of the harshness elsewhere seems to be forced and unconvincing, e.g., the opening bars of 'Night in the old home.' But the composer has something to say, and has only to suppress his originality complex in order to say it well. Some capital songs by E. J. Moeran are in the parcel. 'Troll the bowl' (Dekker) has some discords that exactly suit the text. (But those in the opening page depend upon the pianoforte part being not a bit louder than the mf indicated. It may well be only mp. The right proportion between the voice and pianoforte is more than usually important here.) The jolly, bell-like chords that develop as the song goes on are fine, and Moeran shows his knack in such details as the occasional and startling A natural in the bass on page 3, where everything leads one to expect the sharp. A rousing song, this, full of the gusto of the mighty topers of old. Very happy is Moeran's arrangement of the Suffolk folk-song, 'The Little Milkmaid.' 'Come away, death' is beautifully set; the sudden return to the original key at the end of the verse is not only daring and skilful, but poignant. (In bar 6 of the last page the first B in the left hand needs a flat.) In 'The merry month of May' (Dekker) the composer is again at his best, with a setting full of vivid life and fancy. It calls for a first-rate pianist, and yields full value for every note. These four Moeran songs are among the best things I have seen since Peter Warlock burst upon us. Gordon Slater's 'The Green Willow' is a simple and expressive setting of some traditional words. Edward Rubbra ventures on 'It was a lover and his lass,' but the result hardly justifies his daring. The words call for more light-heartedness than is here. His setting of Edward Thomas's 'Out in the dark' suggests monotony, cold, and remoteness very skilfully and yet simply. 'A Hymn to the Virgin' is too deliberately mediæval, and the retention of the old spelling and phraseology (some of which has to be explained in foot-notes) is surely 'precious.' We shall look for some good work from Mr. Rubbra when he has found himself and lost some too-easily imitated models. 'The Windmill' has for text some quaint words inscribed on an old Sussex mill-post; they have been set in the right vein by Colin Taylor. Four English songs of the early 17th century, transcribed and edited by Peter Warlock, consist of 'Like to the damask rose,' 'My thread is spun,' 'Phillis was a fair maid,' all three anonymous, and 'Sigh no more, ladies,' by Thomas Ford. All are good, and the last is extremely interesting and effective, leaving Stevens's familiar version far behind in every way, especially in its rhythmic enterprise. The songs are under one cover.

From Elkins come some attractive songs. The best appear to be Robert Elkin's 'Spring goeth all in white' (Bridges), Ernest Austin's 'Sleep, little rose,' and Eric Fogg's 'Hunting Song of the Seeonee Pack' (Kipling). The last-named is particularly good, being highly graphic without a trace of far-fetchedness. Stanton Jefferies's setting of Austin Dobson's 'Ballad to Queen Elizabeth' fails in the matter of style, moments of the right directness being mixed with others in which some fashionable and cloying dissonances intrude.

Among the latest issues from Winthrop Rogers is a good example of effective simplicity and directness in Maurice Besly's 'Siesta' ('Hushed the trees'). His 'Bend low thine ear' is also simple and tuneful, but its imitation of the 18th-century English song writers is too deliberate. In 'The Rolling English Road' Mr. Besly has the advantage of one of Chesterton's best poems, and so the result is attractive, but the music does not fully reflect the rich fantasy and humour of the poet. Alec Rowley's 'Derbyshire Song' (John Drinkwater) is delightful; his 'Mad Tom Tatterton' (same poet) is too fruitily harmonized towards the close. 'Mad songs' once had a great vogue. It is interesting to see how a modern composer tackles a difficult subject. This song must have a singer with good command of characterisation and tone-colour. Lily Strickland's 'Lonesome Moonlight' is a real ragtime song, a kind of sophisticated essay in the coon vein, 'Honey, ah'm a-settin' in de moonlight thinkin' of you; Seem lak yo' face keeps a-hantin' me.' Isn't this field pretty well exhausted, especially on its necessarily limited musical side? Wintter Watts in 'Blue are her eyes' makes effective use of a whole battery of conventions of the passionate, intense order.

Two outstanding things among the new Chester songs are Koenemann's 'The King and the Jester' and the Finale from Manuel de Falla's 'Master Peter's Puppet Show.' The Russian song is in the dramatico-satiric vein that these composers manage so well. The text is in Russian, French, and English, the last being by Mrs. Newmarch. J. B. Trend supplies the English for the de Falla work, and Jean-Aubry the French. The original Spanish is also given. A bass or baritone is needed, and if a tenor (with a sense of humour) happens to be on hand to interpolate the little bits for Master Peter, so much the better, though the scena may apparently be sung by Don Quixote alone. The quality of the music makes one hope for a chance of hearing the complete opera. Eugène Bonner's 'Whispers of Heavenly Death' is a setting of three of Walt Whitman's poems. The music seems to be overloaded. A French version is added. Järnefelt's well-known Berceuse has had words written to it by Elisabeth M. Lockwood, and makes a pleasant cradle-song.

André Caplet's 'Ecoute, mon cœur' is a curious essay for voice and flute, the text being by Tagore, done into French. 'Deux Poèmes de Ronsard,' by Jacques Durand, are simple, but the first too faithfully follows an old model, and in the second the new and wearying convention of consecutive open fourths and fifths is overdone (Durand).

Ernest Bullock's 'For her gait if she be walking' at once impresses by its sincerity. The words, by William Browne, a Devonshire poet of 1588-1643, are a distinct 'find.' The composer has admirably caught the poet's blend of fancy and feeling. Gerrard Williams provides sprightly music to some words from Morley's First Book of Madrigals—'On a fair morning as I came by the way.' Albert Mallinson's setting of Browning's 'All the breath and the bloom of the year' shows the practised hand of the older school of song writers, and will please those who don't find the harmonization over-rich. Granville Bantock's 'Three Nocturnes,' issued under one cover, are successful essays in the Oriental vein he has exploited so often. All these songs come from Cramers.

But Bantock is no more tied to the East than to any other part. Here he is, back once more in his native Highlands, with 'Three Shieling Songs,' the words by a brither-Scot, Donald Mackenzie (Patersons). Singable and effective songs, and little the worse for the fact that some of the music might be exchanged with that of the Oriental songs noticed above without the listener being aware of a misfit.

Much more than mere antiquarian interest attaches to vol. 4 of 'English Ayres,' edited by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson. The set consists of eight songs by Alfonso Ferrabosco the younger. These are worthy companions to the best of the type that have recently been revived. An interesting and lengthy biographical note is a capital feature (Enoch).

Coal-black mammies are no longer peculiar to coon songs, apparently. Mentioned here for its oddity is 'An Arab Lullaby' (the Folk Press) containing an assurance that while jackals whine and palms rustle, my love, mammy's by thee to-night. And after reading that 'Raiding afar the tribesmen are' we have a shock on finding that 'Daddy leads them on, dearie.' However, sleep, and 'you will hear your daddy dear, call "Wake thee! Wake thee, love!"' The last verse considers the possibility of daddy biting the dust during the dirty work at the cross-roads:

> Or I shall see the jackals flee
> That have been feasting late;
> And bow to Allah's blest decree,
> Knowing thy Daddy's fate.

The music to this curious mixture is quite without character, suggesting neither lullaby, desert, palms, nor raid. H. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC

Alexander Tcherepnin's music is always that of the practical musician rather than that of the theorist, and his Trio for violin, 'cello, and pianoforte (Durand) is no exception. But when all has been said that should be said for an able, industrious, and gifted composer, one heavy handicap remains, for there are moments in more than one of his compositions when the music suggests that Tcherepnin lacks a sense of humour. We do not expect him to be witty at our expense or to make merry about the weaknesses of his predecessors or contemporaries. But a sense of humour implies, amongst other things, a capacity for just measures, the quick realisation that the sublime is on the point of turning, and becoming ridiculous. The insistence on certain rhythmic figures is apt to make listeners giggle, even when the composer means them to be terrifying. All the quavers from section 4 to the end of the first movement may produce that effect, and the same may be said of the melodic figure which starts at the Più mosso in the second movement and carries on to the end. To our thinking, a

(Continued on page 1109.)

There was a maid

FOUR-PART SONG

Words from the "Jovial Crew" — Old English Tune harmonized by C. Lee Williams

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited; New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

Allegro
Soprano
Alto
Tenor
Bass
There was a maid and she went to the mill, Sing trol - ly lol - ly,
Allegro. ♩=144
(For practice only)
rall.
a tempo
lol - ly, lol - ly, lo! The mill went round, but the maid stood still, . . . Oh

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

Also published for A.T.B.B. in The Orpheus, No. 504

Oh ho, oh . . ho, oh . . ho, did she ho, oh . . ho, oh . . ho, did she so? Oh ho, oh . . ho, oh . . ho, did she ho, oh ho, oh ho, did she so? Oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, did she ho, oh ho, oh ho, did she so? Oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, did she Andante con moto espressivo
Tempo 1mo.
so? did she so? The mil-ler he kissed her; a-way she went, Sing so? did she so? The mil ler he kissed her; a-way she went, Sing so? did she so? The mil-ler he kissed her; a-way she went, Sing so? did she so? The mil-ler he kissed her; a-way she went, Sing
Andante con moto espressivo
Tempo 1mo.
trol-ly lol-ly, lol-ly, lol-ly lo; The maid was pleased, and the mil-ler con-tent, trol-ly lol-ly, lol-ly, lol-ly lo; The maid was pleased, and the mil-ler con-tent, Oh
trol-ly lol-ly, lol-ly, lol-ly lo; The maid was pleased, and the mil-ler con-tent, Oh
trol-ly lol-ly, lol-ly, lol-ly lo; The maid was pleased, and the mil-ler con-tent, Oh oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, was it ho, oh ho, oh ho, was it so? Oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, was it ho, oh ho, oh ho, was it so? Oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, was it ho, oh ho, oh ho, was it so? Oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, was it

Animato
so? was it so? He sang and he danced, and the mill went clack, so? was it so? He sang and he danced, and the mill went clack, Sing so? was it so? He sang and he danced, and the mill went clack, Sing so? was it so? He sang and he danced, and the mill went clack, Sing
Animato
And he cher - ished his heart with a trol - ly lol - ly, lol - ly, lol - ly lo, And he cher - ished his heart with a trol - ly lol - ly, lol - ly, lol ly lo, And he cher - ished his heart with a trol - ly lol - ly, lol - ly, lol - ly lo, And he cher - ished his heart with a cup of old sack, Oh . .

cup of old sack, Oh . . ho, oh . . ho, oh . . ho, did he so? Oh cup of old sack, Oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, did he so? Oh cup of old sack, Oh ho, oh ho, oh ho, did he so? Oh ho, oh . . ho, oh . . ho, did he so? did he so?
ho, oh . . ho, oh ho, did he so? did he so?
ho, oh ho, oh ho, did he so? did he so?
ho, oh ho, oh ho, did he so? did he so?

(Continued from page 1104.)

composer endowed with a keen sense of humour would have avoided or tried to avoid the repetition and the loss of effect. If Albert Roussel's second Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Durand) does not quite convince us, the reason is that it errs in the opposite direction. The composer is at pains to prove that he is clever, that he has wit, that he is not sentimental, that he is modern in deed and feeling. He convinces us that he actually is all that; but, to be quite frank, we should prefer proof of purely musical tastes and beauty—above all, proof of a temperament more thoughtful than brilliant, more sincere than sensational. B. V.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The most interesting things in a big parcel from Durand, Paris, are some pieces by Alexandre Tcherepnin—a formidable Nocturne in E flat minor, 'Feuilles Libres,' a set of four short pieces, and 'Pièces sans titres,' a collection of eight. The sets of pieces, some of which are only moderately difficult, contain some very striking things. Tcherepnin's keyboard-writing differs from that of most modern composers in that it is on the slender side. But everything tells, and he is rarely deluded into the all-too-common belief that the instrument can sing. He exploits to the full its dry, percussive qualities. This means, of course, that much of his pianoforte music is unemotional in the ordinary sense of the term; and although he can at times plumb the depths of uncomfortable misery (as in No. 2 of the 'Feuilles Libres'), he is at his best in the bizarre. André Pascal's 'Deux Nocturnes de la Mer' are a tangle of dissonances that seem to yield little for the trouble. Rhéné-Baton's 'Dans la clarière' is more negotiable and attractive, but the figure of the opening is perhaps overworked. One of the results of the anti-emotional phase of to-day seems to be the composition of pieces for such non-sustaining, finicky instruments as the guitar and harp. Some of these bear transplanting to the pianoforte, but they soon begin to sound of the harp, harpy. Here are André Caplet's 'Divertissements' ('A la Français' and 'A l'Espagnole'), Gabriel Fauré's 'Une Châtelaine en sa Tour,' for harp, all transcribed by Jacques Durand; and Albert Roussel's 'Segovia,' for guitar, arranged for pianoforte by the composer. Of these, the Fauré piece seems most worth while.

Very successful examples of transcription are 'Deux Danses Espagnoles' from Manuel de Falla's 'La Vida Breve.' Both are arranged by G. Samazeuilh for solo and duet. Only the solo form of No. 1 and the duet version of No. 2 have been received for review. The duet form appears to suit the dances best. They are published by Chester. From this enterprising house comes also an 'Album of Modern Bohemian Composers' that should not be missed by those who want to get on terms with a group of writers likely to increase in importance. Seven are represented here—Otakar Sín, Jaroslav Křička, Alois Hába, Ladislav Vycpálek, K. B. Jirák, Boneslav Vomáčka, and Vilém Petrželka. There is, of course, a fair share of modern harmonic spice, but there is plenty of genuinely attractive writing, e.g., a tuneful Serenade by Křička, a lively Gavotte by Jirák, and a beautiful, tender, and original Lullaby by Vycpálek. Some sets of pieces by Dvorák have interest, but are not, I think, the best Dvorák—Three Album Leaves, Four Eclogues, and Two Impromptus. Dalhousie Young's 'Rigaudon,' strongly reminiscent of the Sailor's Hornpipe (apparently with intent) ends by overworking the reminiscence. The same composer's 'China Town, Humoresque de Concert,' is constructed mainly over a little group of consecutive fifths. But there is a conflict of styles, for the theme that goes with the fifths suggests a part of London farther west, and in the middle section we are switched off into an old-fashioned tarantelle.

Rupert Erlebach's 'Mystic Suite' (Curwen) is difficult to play, and perhaps even more difficult to understand. It shows a fine command of the technique of composition and of keyboard writing, but like so much present-day music it is too consistently discordant, and contains an overdose of features that a few years ago were bold and in some cases refreshing enough — consecutives, modal touches, queer conglomerations of notes, and so forth—but which are already becoming a new set of conventions. One longs more and more for a young composer who can say something worth the saying without such an elaborate paraphernalia and such frantic cerebration. Composers are becoming so aggressively clever that the public for contemporary music is likely to decrease: the vogue for 17th- and 18th-century music of all kinds is not without significance. Our big schools of music contain scores of young folk, hardly out of their 'teens, who can orchestrate better than Berlioz, exploit the possibilities of the pianoforte more fully than Chopin, and reel out by the yard polyphony compared with which the average texture of Bach is simple. And yet . . . .

A set of Four Pieces by Jon Leifs (Max Thomas, Magdeburg) almost takes the palm for sheer ugliness. The very first number, a 'Valse lento,' sets one's few remaining teeth on edge by a constant use simultaneously of major and minor tonality; and in No. 3 the left hand plays almost throughout in ninths, often against stacks of unrelated notes in the right hand. When in No. 4 M. Leifs sets out to write a short piece in what he calls 'classic style,' he becomes merely dull, despite such features of 'classical style' as a time-signature of 4-4, 2-4, 3-4, combined, and sudden alternations at a beat's distance of ff and mp.

Yvonne Adair's 'Suite in 18th-century style: Handelesques!' (ugh! what a word!) is, as the composer admits in a Foreword, 'sheer imitation.' As such it is good, though so long as there are piles of Bach, Handel, Scarlatti, and other old keyboard music waiting for the young player, one fails to see the object of such imitative writing save for purposes of study in composition—and not for publication. From an educational point of view the chief value of the pieces lies in the fingering added by Nancy Gilford, who has aimed at developing the weak fourth and fifth fingers (Forsyth). H. G.

Bach's Sonatas for flute and pianoforte, Nos. 1-3, have just been issued in one book, edited by Louis Fleury.

PIANOFORTE DUETS

G. Samazeuilh has made an excellent transcription for four hands of a 'Danse Espagnole' from Manuel de Falla's 'La Vida Breve.' It calls for good players (Chester).

The duet has its place in teaching, and for this purpose two sets by Geoffrey Shaw are first-rate. In his 'Six Traditional Melodies' the primo part of four, and the secondo of two of the pieces, may be played by a youngster of rather meagre technique. 'Six Sea Songs' are rather more difficult, but not too much so for the average fairly advanced pupil. The tunes are 'Spanish Ladies,' 'High Barbary,' 'The Arethusa,' 'Bobby Shaftoe,' 'Lowlands,' and 'To all you ladies.' So good is the treatment that grown-ups with a healthy taste for bold and lively music will enjoy them no less than the young people Mr. Shaw probably had in mind. Both sets are published by Novello.

For cases where there is one good player and one in the very earliest stages nothing could be better than André Caplet's 'Un tas de petites choses' ('Pour les enfants bien sages'). The five lengthy pieces have for primo a simple theme based on the five-finger exercise, beneath which is a secondo rich and strange. The resource, especially harmonic, is extraordinary. Striking, too, is the variety in character, the pieces being a Berceuse, a Danse Slovaque, a Barcarolle, a Petite Marche bien Française (in which the 'Marseillaise' makes a stirring appearance), and a 'Petit Truc Embetant.' The part for 'les petites mains' is always in C, but that for 'les autres' moves through the sharps and flats regardless. And it always sounds right. This most engaging work can be even more fully enjoyed by two grown-ups, provided they don't quarrel over sharing the 'fat.' H. G.

Many readers have chuckled over the delightful verses, 'When we were young,' of A. A. Milne, either in Punch week by week or in the collected form. The most popular of the set was, perhaps, 'The King's Breakfast.' It has now been issued separately, set to music by H. Fraser Simson, with illustrations by E. H. Shepard. Mr. Milne has written an amusing Introduction that will appeal to all adults, and to the older among the children. Mr. Fraser Simson's music and Mr. Shepard's thumb-nail sketches could hardly be bettered. Here is a gift-book of whose success there can be no doubt (Methuen; and Ascherbergs).

STRING SOLOS

Chesters have just published 'Salve Regina, edited by Granville Bantock; 'Fantastic Poem,' composed by Granville Bantock; and 'Londonderry Air,' arranged by Granville Britton. They are all for 'cello and pianoforte, but 'Salve Regina' can also be played on the violin or viola, and in the 'Londonderry Air' arrangement the violin can take the place of the 'cello. Perhaps it is hardly necessary to say that 'Salve Regina' is well edited; Granville Bantock is a past master at that game. As a string piece, however, 'Salve Regina' has a serious drawback in that its compass is that of the voice and not of the violin or 'cello. It never rises above  or touches below  —this the weakest compass of the fiddle. The 'Fantastic Poem' on the other hand exploits the resources of the 'cello with considerable felicity, and the music has all the polish and dexterous touch so characteristic of its composer. The 'Londonderry Air' is a less happy experiment. Its 'arrangement' is mainly an affair of harmonic structure, and in this sense quite a worthy thing. But the soloist—'cellist or violinist—has to sing the melody unadorned by double stoppings or by those happy strokes which make, for instance, Kreisler's arrangements so popular. This great melody suggests better things even if they imply greater difficulty. A 'Gavotte and Musette,' by Spencer Dyke (Joseph Williams), is simple, harmless, and not unattractive. B. V.

VIOLIN METHODS

We have received two violin methods purporting to deal in a presumably new fashion with technical problems—O. C. Dounis's 'The Staccato' (the Strad Edition) and Léon J. Fontaine's second book of graduated 'Studies for the Violin' (Paxton). Well, there is nothing new under the sun. 'Graduated' studies have been published long ago, and all that can be said about the staccato has been said by the more thoughtful men who have controlled the teaching of violin playing in the last hundred years. Nevertheless both volumes would seem to have their uses. The competitive festival has kindled ambition in players who live away from the great centres where capable teaching can be had for the asking. These young musicians would have been content to play somehow or other before the advent of the festival. The days of the 'somehow or other' are now over. Those who lack a teacher capable of supervising their progress and to detect and correct in the shortest possible time any physical or intellectual weakness should find both volumes helpful—'The Staccato' because, leaving nothing to chance, the author explores and explains in copious notes every corner of the field; the 'Graduated Studies' because the increasing difficulty of each forward step has been measured to a nicety. By the way, a better word than 'Staccato' should be adopted to define this special bowing. 'Staccato' means 'detached'—nothing more. It consequently applies to passages where each note is bowed with a separate stroke and to passages where many notes are played in one bow. B. V.

The Musician's Bookshelf

'Robert Schumann.' By Frederick Niecks. Edited by Christina Niecks.
[Dent, 10*s.* 6*d.*]

This is not an introduction to the subject. It is a book meant for him who already knows the outline, and above all loves Schumann's music.

The method is a patient amassing of detail, with, every now and then, a general glance round. Given an interesting enough theme, this is a good method. Nothing that Prof. Niecks has here to tell us is dull, because a gilding gleam falls on everything from the glory of Schumann's music. In the earlier part of the book Niecks's details have often only a distant connection with Schumann. That does not matter. They illustrate a period and a society which bore a charming musical school, and so are interesting to a musical reader.

Prof. Niecks did not carry out his scheme quite on the heroic lines he had in mind. As the tale goes on the treatment becomes more summary, and Schumann's later musical works are not discussed as the earlier ones were.

Perhaps the biographer became oppressed, as the reader certainly is, by the heavy melancholy of the later years. It always requires an effort to realise that Schumann was only forty-six when he died. If we have followed his career either in the outward events or in the succession of his compositions, we feel that the Schumann of the 1850's was old, or at least elderly—a man whose bright youth was far, far away.

The mystery faces us again in Prof. Niecks's book, which states the case vividly but does not clear it up. Probably the only solution would take the form of a pathological statement, and Niecks, though he tells us much that he learnt about Schumann from many contemporaries, does not bring in the medical evidence.

All the same he is not of the tiresome tribe of whitewashing biographers. His candour is refreshing, and inspires confidence. He does not attempt to hide the faults of the youthful Schumann—his indolence, laxness in money affairs, and addiction to strong drink. He attempts to get at the truth of this period, just as he does later on, when he comes to the dismal Düsseldorf chapters. What happened in the meantime?

The spoilt, irresponsible, brilliant youth sobered down, and only too rapidly and completely. He who had been wild and fantastical became simply glum. He won his Clara, whom he idolised and then martyrised. Even the grey light of the later years was not to last long. The end was rapid cerebral decay.

There are fairness, frankness, and good sense in Niecks's comments. He puts the case for the City Fathers of Düsseldorf against the indignant Schumanns. Chorus and orchestra were going to pieces under this impossible conductor. The oddest thing is that Clara—delightfully infatuated with her great Robert even after years of his queerness, not to speak of a large family—seems never to have suspected that he simply had not the first notions of conducting. In fact, one of the minor puzzles of the story is the nature of the celebrated Clara's musical intelligence. She was an admirable executant, assuredly, and understood some things well, but her limitations were strange.

Another thing is Schumann's attitude towards the orchestra and the opera. He aspired to write for them, but out of a sort of modesty, not to say a sense of propriety, he shunned a close acquaintance with their nature and exactions. Can it be that the musical prudery of a piano-playing wife counted at all here?

No one could argue that domestic felicity killed Schumann's genius, for it was at its strongest in the two or three years after his marriage. But he certainly succumbed to the contemporary demand for domesticated music. The German family life of the time could absorb any quantity of mild and amiable pianoforte pieces, chamber music, and part-songs—'originality no object.' Mendelssohn was the ideal, and the superiority of Schumann's genius, obvious as it is to-day, seems to have struck no one.

Schumann was indeed accepted, but by a public with a large appetite and rather mediocre taste. The flash and fancy of his youthful pieces, which we now prize so much, were passed over, instead of being seen as the rarest vein. Schumann's muse was tamed by her surroundings—and was fortunate in that, unlike Sterndale Bennett's, she was not wholly extinguished. The 1840's did not want brilliant, wayward music-makers. Schumann was respectabilitated, while Wagner remained suspect.

At the present time, when music has cut itself free from all domestic trammels (with certain inconvenient results all too plain), it is curious to look back to a period when it suffered from over-domesticity.

C.

'The Well-Tempered Musician: A Musical Point of View.' By Francis Toye. Preface by Hugh Walpole.

[Methuen, 5*s*.]

Can one be a musical critic and still have a good temper? Mr. Toye says 'Yes,' and proves it by writing a book without one jot of unkindness. This does not mean dullness. His buoyancy quite heartens the reader. He talks such sound sense that it is hard anywhere to pick a quarrel with him; but he does not talk in platitudes.

He writes on Nationalism, Teaching, Criticism, Opera in England, and other general topics, and contrives not to find them hackneyed. It is indeed no small feat to have written chapters at once so reasonable and so readable. Mr. Toye likes everyone that is at all likeable—from Bach to Offenbach. He is a regular enthusiast for Handel, and can acknowledge the spells of George Gershwin. His unfailing eclecticism is no doubt the right thing for a critic, and it certainly makes for a happy life to be able to adjust one's point of view to see what the other fellow is getting at—sermons in stones, and good in everything.

Mr. Toye starts by putting the case of the fellow who knows what he likes and doesn't 'like' simply because he ought. That, he suggests, is really the good musical case. The musical taste has no predilection for a certain category of music. There is only good and bad music, and the music we like is good. That instinctive decision comes first, and then we may proceed to justify it with what ingenuity we may.

He goes on to plead for the recognition of the value of music purely as a source of pleasure. If it can educate, elevate, refine us, all the better, of course. But we are poor lovers of the art if we exalt it for some irrelevant or imaginary function. Glorious Beauty! Are you not in yourself your own raison d'être? It is sheer, magnificent luck to have the gift of perceiving beauty—not a reward for merit.

Mr. Toye in 'Music and Modern Society' notes the enormous gulf existing here between the best music and the most popular ('shop ballads') as compared with the lesser gulf existing on the Continent. He interestingly argues that the cause may be our lack of opera—the easiest means of access to good music for the plain man.

There is something in Musical Nationalism—more than the pure cosmopolitans, but less than the Jingoes, believe:

> To musicians the glory and love of music for its own sake must remain the ultimate criterion of values. Local and personal considerations are only valuable if and when they promote the good of that general cause which should claim the passionate devotion of us all.

On Performance Mr. Toye lectures musical England for not caring enough for fine finish. The wonder of fine execution is part of the wonder of fine music. Music slovenly performed is deprived of part of its vitality, and when sometimes we lament to ourselves that such-and-such a once-loved music seems to be growing dull it is more than likely that mediocre performance is to blame. Yet in some estimable English musical circles to-day there is—out of apprehension of egoistic virtuosity, no doubt—positive approbation of executive mediocrity, particularly on the part of singers.

Mr. Toye is a lover of good singing, quite to an old-fashioned extent. If people would sing more, then the world of music would grow healthier. Let children dance more, and let adults learn to sing—that seems a very good exhortation for the quickening of the musical spirit in the land.

And after all the reviewer has not been able to quarrel with his author. But one moment! Mr. Toye has an exasperating, a pedantic, and an ill-founded mannerism: he spells Handel, 'Händel.' To our eyes this looks hideous in English prose.

C.

'Les Quatuors de Beethoven.' Par Joseph de Marliave. Publié par Jean Escarra. Preface de Gabriel Fauré.

[Paris: Alcan, 30 frs.]

This is a book of 406 pages, and there are 322 quotations from the Quartets in music-type. This will give some notion of its scope.

The author was a young French officer, whose passion was Beethoven. Fauré's Preface tells us that on leaving Saint-Cyr and being sent to one of the eastern garrison towns, Marliave got together every week musical friends to play the String Quartets. War came. He was killed. His Study has been put together and completed by M. Escarra.

One can best describe the book by saying that it is rather like a collection of concert-programme analyses—of the most serious sort, of course. Not the scrappy notes which so often in our degenerate days merely serve to extract a shilling from the concert-goer; but the solid, old-fashioned analyses of St. James's Hall.

It is written by a charmed devotee. He follows his master faithfully step by step, and naturally does not set out to be a detached and searching critic. His book is a very detailed guide to other followers. The analyses are extremely full. To earnest listeners to the Beethoven Quartets by wireless, gramophone, or actual performance the book may well be a great help. It is hardly to be ranked as a work of high literature. Nor is it a student's text-book—its technical considerations do not go deep enough. But it is so far sound and serious and sincere, that the lover of chamber music and of Beethoven will (if he reads French) like to have it on his shelf.

One might add that compilers of programme-notes may find it useful. We all know their habit of handing on certain classical obiter dicta—what Spitta said about this, and Jahn about that. There is an abundance, an excess even, in Marliave, of such quoted opinions—often enough the opinions of persons of small interest. If A. B. Marx has attempted to 'explain' the A minor Quartet by a fatuous literary programme, Marliave cannot bring himself to dismiss the man. He has him shown in, so to speak, and argues with him at unnecessary length. Even when the tiresome Marx is, as we fancied, at last dismissed, and we can get back again to business, Marliave will, every now and then, return to the charge. It is a traditional weakness of the musical analyst.

Our review of this immense labour of love must not, however, end grudgingly. It is a striking evidence of the empire swayed by Beethoven's spirit. Marliave must have been writing at about the time when Beethoven was out of fashion. He and his like—benighted provincial devotees of chamber music—observed this about as much as though the fashion had decreed eating no more bread, but brown paper instead.

It was a noble passion that started this French amateur on his huge annotation. Marliave was certainly a type. Others, too, when they have had a full evening's playing want to stay up and talk the music over; and here through his posthumous book his spirit has the satisfaction of talking on with his fellow quartettists—tenderly about the First Period Quartets, properly earnestly about the Last Period, and with a special adoring ardour about Op. 59.

C.

REVIEWS IN BRIEF

J. Allanson Benson's 'Handel's "Messiah": the Oratorio and its History' contains not only a great deal of interest and value on the historical side, but many notes and suggestions in regard to the text of various editions, and hints as to pace and other details of performance (William Reeves, 2*s*.). Among other questions the author raises is that of the pianoforte score. After comparing a number of versions he alludes to the difficulty of playing 'a really satisfactory organ accompaniment from these published scores,' and asks a question that has often been put by others: 'Why not publish an organ arrangement?' A well laid out organ version, on three staves, of reasonable difficulty, would be welcomed in hundreds of organ-lofts where throughout the year players (often deputies officiating while the regular organist conducts) have to re-arrange from sight and memory practically every bar of the pianoforte arrangement.

In 'Chopin, the Child and the Lad,' by Zofia Umińska and H. E. Kennedy, appears, apparently for the first time, much information concerning the early days of the composer. It is a pity the authors fail to distinguish between the important and the trivial; and the plan of giving a good deal of the matter in story-book form makes one uncertain as to where the authentic ends and the imaginary begins. The book includes many folk-dances and songs in which the boy presumably took part. The extracts from a journal edited by young Frederic and circulated among his little circle of companions are too copious. The boy was merely doing what hosts of other children do, and a very small sample is enough to show that he did it no better than most and less well than some. The translation at times seems quaint. But the book has value as a contribution to a side of Chopiniana that seems to have been hitherto neglected (Methuen, 5*s*.).

Harold Scott's 'English Song Book' (Chapman & Hall, 10*s*. 6*d*.) is a collection of ditties, comic and sentimental, that were popular in the 18th and 19th centuries. Judging from the publisher's note, Mr. Scott's qualifications for the task of collecting and editing seem to lie in the fact that he is an actor and founder of the Cabaret dancing club. His opening discussion of the 'submerged and often unconscious battle' between the layman, who 'demands a tune, pure and simple,' and the 'scientist musician,' who (Mr. Scott implies) is determined to give the layman everything but what he asks for, shows a failure to realise that a very large proportion of the world's 'purest and simplest' tunes have been written by the 'craftsmen' so slightingly dismissed by the author. Mr. Scott's lack of musicianship is exposed in the music pages of his book. 'Black-eyed Susan' appears in a version so distorted (apparently through careless slurring and confusion of time-values) that it does not fit the words, and two of its bars contain only two and-a-half beats instead of three; 'Lilliburlero' is twice spelt minus its first r, and is a bar short; various catches are given, but with no indication as to the point of entry of the various voices, though the editor alludes to 'the complicated technique of this form of writing'; 'A frog he would' is included among the 19th-century songs merely because it was in 'Sam Cowell's repertory' (Mr. Scott says a version of it is in 'Pills to purge melancholy,' but an editor's job is to give the original source when it is so easily ascertainable as in this case); in the tune of 'Oh dear! what can the matter be?' the last phrase is missing; and so on. There are some misprints in proper names, e.g., Thackray for Thackeray, Haynes Bailey for Bayly, Shields for Shield, &c. Many of the songs are desperately poor; the editor is not responsible for their quality, of course, but one feels that he might have made a better selection. There is room for a book dealing with this byway of popular music, but apparently the job must be undertaken by a mere despised 'scientist musician' who knows how to set tunes on paper.

'The English Madrigal,' by Dr. E. H. Fellowes, deals not only with the history, form, technique, &c., of the madrigal; the words also are discussed, and there are brief biographical sketches of about forty composers (Oxford University Press, 2*s.* 6*d.*).

Herbert Witherspoon's 'Singing: a Treatise for Teachers and Students' (Schirmer) is from start to finish marked by practical commonsense. Holding the view that 'the teacher of singing has already been burdened with too much [anatomical] science, which is only too often pseudo-science,' Mr. Witherspoon gives that side of the subject the minimum of space. He comes down heavily on all sorts of fads and tricks, and strikes out a new line in a book of this sort by making a strong plea for a higher standard of ethics among teachers. He would have them all friends and co-workers; he holds that they should refuse to encourage a pupil in false hopes of success, even at the cost of fees; they should not hold out as baits the promise of public appearances: they are teachers, not concert agents. On his side the pupil must play the game too, and Mr. Witherspoon is frank on the young singer in a hurry: 'I would say that few pupils can become real singers, let alone great singers, with less than five years of close application and unselfish devotion to their art.' He ends this particular chapter with the code of ethics adopted by the American Academy of Teachers of Singing. There are ten Articles, and they might well be adopted on this side of the water. A good, thoughtful, and modest book. H. G.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this list neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

'Liszt.' By Frederick Corder. Pp. 170. Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'Schumann.' By Herbert Bedford. Pp. 270. Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'Wagner.' By William Wallace. Pp. 332. Kegan Paul, 7*s.* 6*d.*

(The above three books are from the 'Masters of Music' series.)

'The Foundations of Practical Harmony and Counterpoint.' By R. O. Morris. Pp. 144. MacMillan, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'Melodies and Memories.' By Nellie Melba. Pp. 335. Thornton Butterworth, 21*s.*

'The Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institution, 1923.' Pp. 578. Washington: Government Printing Office.

'A Liturgical Psalter.' Arranged for use in the Services of the Church. By Walter Howard Frere. Mowbray, 6*s.*

'The First Book of the Player Pianist.' By Sydney Grew. Pp. 136. Musical Opinion Office, 5*s.*

'The New Marguerite.' By Robert MacBean. Pp. 318. John Long, 7*s.* 6*d.*

'The Glee Maiden.' By J. F. Rowbotham. Pp. 254. Elliot Stock, 6*s.*

'Beethoven.' By Paul Bekker. Translated from the German by M. M. Bozman. Pp. 391. J. M. Dent, 10*s.* 6*d.*

Points from Lectures

'Music and Poetry,' Herder said long ago, 'should agree: the sister and the brother.' Sir Henry Hadow carried this thought further when delivering the Henry Sidgwick Memorial Lecture at Newnham College, Cambridge. He considered the relationship of the arts generally, but his musical sympathies led him to a conclusion most favourable to music. The vocal sentence of music was greater than the spoken word. Think of the finest speaker we knew, and then think of a great singer. The metre of poetry had comparatively narrow limits. Notice (said Sir Henry) the wonderful effect of phrasing across the bar, but not of the syncopation, which he termed 'musical hooliganism.' Poetry was just beginning to learn how to produce something like this phrasing, but would never quite succeed, because music had much more varied forms to work upon. Sir Henry instanced as a fundamental resemblance between the two temporal arts the fact that both needed a fixed succession in time to apprehend them. A notable point of difference was that the poet dealt far more with concrete images than the musician, who, indeed, hardly dealt with them at all. At the same time, music had its own significance, and its own logic, which were as precise as those of poetry.

Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, speaking at Durham Diocesan Conference, found that material for good singing was plentiful in the rising generation. In ordinary churches he would have the whole responsibility for the singing placed upon the congregation, not necessarily singing the whole time. The choir should be recognised as an integral part of the congregation, and not set up in antagonism. A service over-weighted with music was just as unwelcome as one over-weighted with preaching.

Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, at Horsham, said that the English idiom in music was not better than that of other nations, but it was more natural to us, and we should try to become ourselves again. To plead for English music was not to be chauvinistic. With a renewed interest in our own music, great national composers would arise. It was time we paid back our borrowing from other nations, not in a debased coinage, but truly and honestly in a coinage of our own, and of our best.

'Purcell suffered as a composer from a lack of critical appreciation; he would have been justified in saying "Save me from my friends"'—thus Mr. Gustav Holst, in an introductory note to a fine appreciation in a lecture given at Bangor University College.

Purcell's gift of melody was considered by some to be excelled only by Mozart. In addition, there was his sense of harmony, his feeling for orchestral colour, his humour, his intensity, his lyrical power. Yet all these details of composition were subordinate to his amazing gift of dramatic characterisation. In one way Purcell was a finer stage composer than Wagner. His music was full of the movement of the dance. His was the most facile music in all the world for the actor's art. J. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'Discus'

COLUMBIA

The set of records of the Beethoven A minor Quartet, Op. 132, played by the Léner Quartet, leaves the reviewer looking round for expressions that will not sound like hyperbole. Here is one of the greatest of works recorded without cuts, and with scarcely a flaw. Only in the last side of all—the tenth—does one feel that there seems to be a slight failure in regard to intonation. Otherwise the set is as near perfection as the most exacting can demand. Each repeated hearing has given me increased satisfaction, though in regard to the work itself I still feel that in the modal movement the composer goes on a little too long with his thanksgiving for recovery from sickness. Perhaps this impression is due to the impatience of present-day ears when listening to slow movements generally. The modern desire for shorter concert programmes is reflected in our attitude towards the classical slow movement that goes over the same ground several times at a leisurely pace. This by the way. Even in such an achievement as these records there are outstanding moments, and so one remembers specially the opening section, with its delicate and unexpected arabesque for the first violin, and the whole of the second movement, in which Beethoven does magical things with the little two-bar phrase.

These Beethoven records would be in themselves a worthy month's output on the instrumental side, but there are three other important works. It is a genuine pleasure to find Sammons and Murdoch associated in recording, and they are heard at their best in Grieg's G major Sonata (three 12-in.). The lyrical style of this suits the violinist particularly well. Holst's 'St. Paul's' Suite is done on three sides, the fourth being given to his 'Country Song.' The composer conducts, and the result only needs a little more tone here and there to be completely satisfying. The same remark applies to the 12-in. of Weber's 'Oberon' Overture, played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood. Everything is beautifully clear, and the blend of romance and sprightliness that characterises Weber's work in his operatic overtures is well shown. But a lack of power in the louder portions leads to a lack of contrast. Vocal records are of the average type: Miriam Licette in familiar operatic extracts; Dale Smith in a couple of old songs; William Heseltine in two newer examples (one bearing a title which in itself is enough to put some of us off 'The throb of a passionate day.' Mr. Heseltine well and truly throbs, and will please those who like such passionate goings on); and Dame Clara Butt sings two poor ballads—a meagre output for one labelled as 'Britain's Queen of Song.' A more conscientious royalty would consider the needs as well as the demands of her subjects.

H.M.V.

Everybody is talking about the new H.M.V. instrument. I defer my remarks on it until next month, partly from lack of time and space, and also because I want to give it a more extended trial than so far has been possible. As in the case of the new recording, we shall have to consider gains and losses, and strike a balance. This is what I have been doing with the 'Parsifal' records (eight 12-in.). At first one jibs a bit at the keen and at times somewhat steely tone produced by the new process, and although one soon gets used to it, as one does to a certain amount of surface noise and other gramophonic drawbacks, it must be put down on the debit side. But everything else is solid gain. The increase in power and brilliance is obvious, but perhaps the most notable point is the extraordinary advance in the choral recording, and above all in the reproduction of passages for chorus and orchestra. For example, in the second of the three records of the 'Grail Scene,' the climaxes of the orchestra and chorus combined are far and away better than anything of the kind I have so far heard on the gramophone. The two forces blend, balance, and retain their individuality to a degree not always—perhaps not often—heard in a first-hand performance. These 'Grail Scene' records are among the best of the set. The bells of course come through well, but, equally of course, they are not in tune. (Are they ever?) The other records that strike me specially are those of Klingsor's Magic Garden and the Flower Maidens Scene, the damsels being represented, however, by strings. I have not space to name all the performers. It must suffice to say that the solo voices are particularly good. Still, as is nearly always the case with Wagner, the thing that matters is the orchestral stream on which the voice-parts are borne along. Coates conducts with apparently even more than his wonted fervour, and if his coat and collar were not lying in a corner of the recording-room before he had got far, I should be surprised. A great feat, this 'Parsifal' set. (For the sake of accuracy I add that in one of the records Eugène Goossens conducts. Presumably this is an earlier recording. It is interesting to compare it with the later ones.)

The rest of the month's H.M.V. output seems small beer after this. Sir Landon Ronald conducts the Albert Hall Orchestra in the Nocturne from Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music (12-in.)—a good record, especially in regard to the horn playing and tone; and the Piccadilly Orchestra, conducted by de Groot, plays Coleridge-Taylor's 'Petite Suite de Concert' (12-in.). Among the vocal records I am most struck by that of Jeanne Gordon in a couple of excerpts from 'Carmen' (10-in.). Here we have that unusual thing—a contralto voice without hooty, throaty, and tubby quality, a freedom and flexibility that many a good soprano might envy, and ample variety in power and colour. As a result it records well—which very few contraltos do. The orchestral part is very good. Florence Austral sings 'Hear ye, Israel' and 'From mighty kings he took the spoil' (12-in.). In the former she is not very clear, and sometimes off the pitch; the Handel air is capital, and here again the orchestral accompaniment deserves praise. Tito Schipa is heard in 'O sole mio' and a couple of traditional Italian songs, both being delightful and, I think, far better sung than the operatic piece (10-in.). There is a welcome lightness that we don't hear often enough from these operatic tenors. George Baker gets only a proportion of his words through in Aiken's 'Sigh no more' and Fisher's 'Spanish Gold,' and when he is distinct there is a sense of effort in his diction. A magnificent voice is that of Paul Robeson, the negro actor. He sings a couple of 'spirituals,' one alone, and one with Lawrence Brown (10-in.). Those of us who are getting a bit tired of the 'spiritual' (which after all is bound to lose by being sophisticated and concertised) will look forward to hearing Robeson in other songs. What about 'Ethiopa saluting the colours'?

NATIONAL GRAMOPHONIC SOCIETY

The Society has, I feel, given us nothing more delightful than the Mozart Oboe Concerto. In fact, it is not easy to name many better sets of records of the kind from any source. The work is Mozart at his purest and best, and the playing, by Leon Goossens and the Spencer Dyke Quartet, leaves scarcely a loophole for fault-finding. The one little weak spot is in the slow movement, where the ensemble and intonation seem to weaken for a moment. But that may be a blemish in the recording. The neatness, delicacy, clarity, and rhythm of the quick movements leave one with an all too rare sense of content and exhilaration. The sixth side of the three 10-in. is worthily filled with a Bach Prelude for oboe and strings, taken from a cantata.

The other production of the Society—the Brahms Sextet—hardly reaches the same level. The first movement especially is rather drab. There is an improvement in every way as the work goes on—mainly, no doubt, because the music itself brightens. There can be no doubt that part of the somewhat dull character of the opening is due to the colour and texture of the music. It is evidently of a type that the gramophone so far is not able to reproduce perfectly. But so few opportunities occur for hearing this fine piece of chamber music, that the records supply a need. It is just in regard to such works as this that the Society finds its fullest justification; the gramophonist who wants to build up a fine library will gladly overlook a few comparatively unsuccessful moments for the sake of possessing complete records of the less frequently heard classics. I add that the surface in all these records shows a marked improvement on the Society's past issues.

POLYDOR

Strauss's 'Also sprach Zarathustra' is a big proposition for the gramophone, and it has been tackled with a surprising degree of success. The players are the Berlin State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Max von Schillings. The cuts must have been liberal in order to get the work on to three 12-in. As the music is not of red-hot interest throughout this matters less than usual. The playing and recording reach a high level, being rarely other than clear even in the most complex passages.

Eugène d'Albert strikes me as being rather matter-of-fact in his playing of Liszt's 'An einer Quelle'—the last kind of fault that Liszt can survive. The player is better in a movement from Mozart's A major Sonata—the 'Turkish March,' which is not much of a march, anyway, and is not a bit suggestive of Turkey. I wonder how often we should hear this strumming movement had it been written by Dittersdorf instead of Mozart! (On second thoughts I don't wonder: I know.)

A pleasant vocal record is that of Maria Olszewska in a couple of Christmas songs—the familiar 'O Stille Nacht' and 'O du frohliche o du selige,' the tune of the latter being that generally known in this country as the 'Sicilian Mariners' Hymn.' Both songs are bedecked with an accompaniment that includes nice little bits for violin solo, celeste, bell, &c., and Olszewska sings with appropriate tone and style.

Lauritz Melchior is admirable in the 'Prize Song' from the 'Mastersingers,' despite the touches of strain that no tenor seems to be able to avoid in the final climax (12-in.). He shows a very sympathetic voice, with some beautiful soft singing, in two extracts from 'Tannhäuser' (12-in.). This latter feature has struck me very much in recent Polydor records. They lead me to think that, judging from the gramophone, Germany's present-day men singers are better in taste and musicianship than those of any other country—certainly of Italy.

VOCALION

Practically all that was said about the Gramophonic Society's records of the Mozart Oboe Concerto applies to the Vocalion records of his G major Violin Concerto (three 12-in.). The player is Jelly d'Aranyi, and Stanley Chapple conducts. The balance between soloist and orchestra is unusually good. The fact is emphasised because one has had to grumble a good many times on this point. Evidently the special problem set up by a string soloist accompanied wholly or mainly by strings is by way of being solved. The only other instrumental record received is that of the orchestra of the New York Metropolitan House in an Intermezzo and Spanish Dance by Granados, which are a good deal less interesting than one expects them to be, both in material and performance (12-in.).

Nothing better in vocal records has lately come my way than the 12-in. of Malcolm McEachern in 'Sperte 'o figli!' from Verdi's 'Nebuchadnezzar.' In range, power, and flexibility this noble voice is shown at its best. The song on the other side, Cawley's 'A Song of the Seraphs,' is good in a somewhat conventional way, and is as splendidly delivered as the Verdi. If there is a bass among all the much-boosted Italians to rival this home product, give him a name!

John Coates sings Coleridge-Taylor's 'Elëanore' with fine passion, and in Balfe's 'Come into the garden, Maud' shows so much conviction that we are sure he thinks it is a great song, and begin almost to have a feeling that way ourselves. So great and dangerous is the power of the singer! (12-in.).

Player-Piano Notes

By WILLIAM DELASAIRE

ÆOLIAN

I suppose Mr. W. J. Turner would say that the first movement of Mozart's Sonata in D, No. 15 (6756), was unquestionably the finest 'Duo-Art' roll of the month. Personally, I should not care to choose Mozart as my sole musical companion on a desert island, as Mr. Turner doubtless would; but this is certainly delightful, heart-easing music, and an epitome of the composer's virtues. It may be pattern music, but what a perfect pattern! I would not suggest that its merit is not self-sufficient, but it is as a relief from emotionalism on the one hand, and emotionless modernism on the other, that it chiefly appeals to me. Its delicate clarity provides a wonderful contrast to such music, and the playing, by Landowska, disarms criticism.

Another first movement is given us, that of Schumann's Fantasie, Op. 17, recorded by Katherine Goodson (0234). I will refer to this later, as the whole work is issued in 'Animatic' rolls.

Brahms's Ballad in D minor, Op. 10, No. 1, is a magnificent piece of music, admirably recorded by Lester Donahue (5931). It is a dramatic tone-poem in miniature, with a characteristic note of austerity about it. The modal flavour of the middle section, working up to a thrilling climax, especially impresses me. It is the sort of work that may not make an immediate appeal to the casual listener, but with repeated hearings the real significance of the title and superscription will be appreciated. And it is strong enough to stand many repetitions.

I am not much struck with Tchaikovsky's 'Humoresque,' Op. 10, No. 2 (6202). Its title is apt enough, and parts of it are very happy; but I fancy the composer's name lends it a lustre which it would otherwise lack.

Robert Armbruster again displays his facility at improvisations on popular themes in 'Meditations' No. 3 (3077). We are treated to a batch of American 'Flower Songs,' in which MacDowell scores heavily in juxtaposition with Ethelbert Nevin. I dare say 'Mighty Lak' a Rose' goes down well with some of our American cousins, but I don't see why the contrast should be made quite so invidious.

The roll editor shares honours with the same pianist in 'Venetian Carnival' (6905). Here Ricordi, the well-known publisher, tries his hand at a pianoforte duet which Mr. Armbruster has played—no, not simultaneously!—and which has subsequently been wrought into this roll. The music is of no special consequence, though it is all very jolly and rhythmical—the sort to which annoying people tap their feet at concerts. Not to affect his publishing business too adversely, it is issued under the name of 'J. Burgmein.'

I really think that Miss Geneviève Pitot deserves more credit than the composer for her record of Bartlett's notorious 'Polka de Concert' (6737). She makes its terrible Victorian tinklings quite interesting by her remarkable style, so wonderfully—I must say it again—pianistic is it. The last ounce of effect is extracted from the notes—and there are so many!—which makes for amusement, if not uplift. I recommend my readers to get this roll and compare it with an ordinary one of the same piece. They will have an object-lesson in the virtues of the recorded roll.

The 'Brook's Lullaby,' by J. F. Gilder (6898), is what the title leads us to expect—a commonplace tune, very square, 'arpeggiated' strictly according to rule. Let us say what most drawing-room listeners will say—'a nice little piece.'

The outstanding hand-played roll is Schubert's Impromptu in A flat, Op. 142, No. 2 (A827). It is played by Paderewski, which I suppose is sufficient recommendation. The tunes are lovely, but the length is not very heavenly, and I sigh for a little development instead of so much repetition.

Emil Sauer plays his own well-known 'Echo de Vienne' (A829) in true virtuosic style. A sparkling concert waltz, it lends itself most effectively to our instrument. Considerable care is needed in playing, however, otherwise a tendency may reveal itself to play too much of it with the same dynamic intensity—fortissimo—and to forget all about the limitations of the human fingers. Of course, some will say that it is foolish to insist upon this when armed with the super-technique of the player-piano, but I believe such a view to be quite mistaken.

As composers of what is called 'light classical' music for the pianoforte I suppose one would bracket together Moszkowski, Chaminade, and Schütt. I think I should place the latter first for many things, and his 'Mélancolie,' Op. 34, No. 1 (A833), confirms my opinion. The roll is cut non-contiguously, however, to an extent that verges on the dangerous in places. Why? Perhaps it is just to disprove the disparaging comment that the player-piano never plays a wrong note!

Those player-pianists who find joy in difficulty will appreciate Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 54, in F (T 24637/8), for this reason if for no other. It is issued in straight-cut form, and provides first-class practice in a number of technical points—accentual and metrical pedalling, with frequent syncopation, the production of delicate, crisp tone (especially in the second subject of the first movement) and—most of all—dynamic phrasing, that hall-mark of fine playing. The music, of course, speaks for itself, in every sense.

Three little salon pieces, roughly in order of merit, are Archie Rosenthal's 'Petite Valse' (T 24655), with plenty of opportunity for rubato; 'Mélodie Symphonique,' by Leonard Butler (T 24654), not very 'symphonique'; and 'Danse Humoresque,' by Henry Coleman (T 24657).

The song roll this month is Schubert's 'Erl-King' (27130). There are also three popular ballads by well-known exponents of this style.

ANGELUS

I like Cyril Scott's 'Valse Caprice,' Op. 74, No. 7 (92022), very much. It is a musicianly little piece in a piquant, harmonic style. Its title must evoke a corresponding spirit from the performer, however, otherwise half its charm is lost—a rigid tempo lever is fatal. Another piece which depends much upon manner of performance is Albeniz's 'Serenade Espagnole,' Op. 181 (92142). It is very obviously Spanish, and the guitar-like accompaniment should move the heart of the stoniest of ladies. The right accent is a sine qua non, and here the roll markings are very helpful, especially when playing at sight. A finger-like crispness of touch should be aimed at throughout. With exhausters and springs on the small and light side, and mind, eyes, and feet alert, this should not be impossible of attainment.

Rosenbloom's Polonaise in A flat (93477) and Arensky's 'Basso Ostinato' (93452) were noted in recent issues as Æolian rolls. Likewise the song rolls.

ANIMATIC (Hupfeld)

Priority of place is taken, as I have already hinted, by Schumann's Fantasie, Op. 17, in C (54006/8). It is superfluous, at this time of day, for me to say that it is a magnificent work, and when I add that it is recorded by Gabrilowitsch, almost as superfluous to comment on the playing. The specially interesting point, however, is that in the first movement one is enabled closely to compare his tempo and nuance with those of Miss Katherine Goodson, who plays the 'Duo-Art' roll. The question of dynamics must be temporarily disregarded, as with the 'Animatic' rolls the performer co-operates with the pianist in this respect. Such a comparison is most instructive, more particularly to those who recently had the good fortune to hear Hofmann play the same work. Surely the most prejudiced of our instrument's critics will now acknowledge its supreme educational value, if nothing else.

I have no space to analyse the work in detail—it is so full of lovely tunes—but as I write the recollection of the great theme of the second movement makes my pen travel faster and more illegibly than ever. I can only advise readers to get these rolls and study them hard.

Paderewski's Legend, Op. 16, No. 1 (55557), seems to rely more upon his fame as a pianist than upon any special merit. I should not think it would stand the test of transcription to another medium, though it is played by Oswin Keller in a manner which must earn the composer's endorsement to every punch-mark.

Joseph Wieniawski, brother of the famous violinist, plays his own Polonaise, Op. 27, in G sharp minor (54217). Without great originality, it is a brilliant piece of writing, well suited to the pianoforte, and might at least serve to remind our débutantes that there are other pieces of this name besides those of Chopin.

The beginner who wants a perfect study in tone-control by means of the pedals alone should essay MacDowell's sea piece, 'A.D. 1620' (58360). I know of nothing better for such a purpose; and to a lesser degree his 'From a Wandering Iceberg' (58359) is also useful. Beyond the sustaining pedal no manual control need be used, as Gustav Riemann's tempo is unexceptionable.

Roll 59518, Schütt's 'Lose Blätter,' Nos. 3 and 1, is more of his admirable salon music, with Max Pauer at the recording pianoforte. Each is an engaging little piece, well-contrasted, and always melodious and effectively written. The same pianist plays Emil Sjogren's 'Im Walde,' from his Fantasie, Op. 15 (59520). The composer is unknown to me, but my dictionary tells me that he was a gifted Swedish organist who won fame by the delicate refinement of his style. I can well believe this—the present piece is a picturesque piece of programme music calling for careful playing.

Cyril Scott's 'In the Temple of Memphis' (58960), from the 'Egypt' Suite, is not a good example of his work. It strives after a quasi-impressionism à la Debussy, which doesn't quite come off.

The remaining rolls are well-known enough to need but a mention—Elgar's charming 'Bavarian Dance' (55889) and Tchaikovsky's everlasting 'Chanson Triste' (59362).

Church and Organ Music

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Members and friends are cordially invited to attend the distribution of diplomas to successful candidates at the Fellowship and Associateship Examinations on Saturday, January 23, 1926, at 2.30 p.m. The President, Dr. H. W. Richards, will deliver an address on 'The Study of Musical History,' after which Mr. G. D. Cunningham, organist of the Town Hall, Birmingham, will play upon the College organ the following pieces selected from the July Examination, 1926:

FELLOWSHIP

1. Prelude only, from Prelude and Fugue in E flat ('St. Ann') ... ... J. S. Bach
2. Choral Prelude on 'Newtoun' (Sixteen Preludes, vol. 1, Stainer & Bell) Charles Wood
3. Fantasie in F minor (Best's Arrangements, No. 76, Novello) ... ... Mozart

ASSOCIATESHIP

1. Intermezzo in A flat (Stainer & Bell) T. T. Noble
2. Prelude only, from Prelude and Fugue in D minor ... ... Mendelssohn

There will be an informal conversazione immediately following the organ recital, to which members and friends are invited.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

ORGAN RECITALS IN SCOTLAND

We have been much interested in reports of recent organ recitals at Kirkcaldy and Dundee. At the former place Mr. J. Gray, the Corporation organist, has played to a crowded audience in the Adam Smith Hall, with a programme that included the Bach D minor Double Concerto (Mr. Horace Fellowes and Mr. James A. Cooper), and songs by Miss Jean Gibson; at Dundee, Mr. Ernest Treasure has inaugurated a series of lunch-hour recitals at the Caird Hall. Here the fare was of organ music alone—Mendelssohn (Sonata No. 3), Coleridge-Taylor, Lemare, Bach, Wesley, and Rheinberger (Sonata in F sharp). The charge for admission is 2*d.*, and the venture made a capital start with an audience of nearly five hundred. An interesting point about these Dundee recitals is that they are expected to solve the problem of the upkeep of the instrument, in a manner highly satisfactory to the Town Council, and with benefit to the public. Organs in public halls that are heard only on special occasions are apt to prove 'white elephants.' Their maintenance is costly, and if funds are not forthcoming, they rapidly deteriorate. This Dundee example might well be followed in many provincial towns. Local organists, we are sure, would gladly play for a small fee, or no fee at all, in order to assist in the upkeep of the municipal instrument, especially as any movement that stimulates public interest in organ music has a beneficial effect on their own activities as Church organists and teachers. The Kirkcaldy recitals are on more ordinary concert lines, with reserved seats at 2*s.* 4*d.*, and a silver collection. It is difficult to overestimate the educational value of such a scheme, which gives a big audience an opportunity of hearing fine organ, string, and vocal music at so low a cost as a threepenny-bit.

At the Worshipful Company of Musicians' dinner, held on October 27, Mr. F. W. Rushton, F.R.C.O., was the recipient of the Company's silver medal. In introducing him to the Worshipful Master, the President of the Royal College of Organists (Dr. H. W. Richards) said that Mr. Rushton began the study of music at an early age. He afterwards became a schoolmaster and lecturer; and later joined His Majesty's forces for the Great War. After this he took up music as a profession, and is now music-master of the High School for Boys, Leytonstone. He was the winner of the Lafontaine Prize at the Royal College of Organists, which meant that he passed both the practical and theoretical parts of the Fellowship diploma at the same examination. He also obtained the highest number of marks for organ-playing of any Lafontaine Prize-winner during the last three years. It was for this reason that Mr. Rushton had the honour of receiving the silver medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians.

At the National Institute for the Blind, 224, Great Portland Street, W., on December 2, at 3, Mr. H. V. Spanner will give an organ recital, the programme of which will include the Fellowship pieces for the January R.C.O. examination.

A GibbonsCommemoration Service took place at Clapham Congregational Church on October 21, the music including the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis from the 'Short' Service, the anthems 'Lift up your heads,' 'O God, increase my faith,' 'Almighty and Everlasting God,' 'O Lord, in the wrath,' and 'Great Lord of Lords.' Mr. Henry F. Hall conducted, and Mr. Reginald E. Redman played on the organ the Voluntaries in A minor and D minor, and the Fantazia in Foure Parts.

Under the auspices of the Southwark Diocesan Plainsong Association, a lecture will be given by Mr. Royle Shore at the Chapter House, Thomas Street, S.E., on December 5, at 3 p.m., on 'The New Late Evening Service in the Revised Prayer Book, and its Ancient Music.' It is proposed that the lecture be followed by the singing of Compline. Non-members will be welcome, and no tickets are required.

Festal evensong was sung at St. Peter's, Loudwater, Bucks, on October 28, by the combined choirs of five villages. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson conducted, and gave an address on the improvement of music in village churches. The music included Parry's Evening Service in D, Walford Davies's 'God be in my head,' Stanford's 'St. Patrick's Breastplate,' and a fine choice of hymns.

The organ at Holy Trinity, Wakefield, has recently been overhauled and enlarged, the work being done by Messrs. Fitton & Haley, of Stanningley. In connection with the re-opening, Mr. Charles Stott, of Bradford, gave a recital, playing Liszt's Fugue on 'Ad nos,' Lemare's variations on 'Hanover,' Hollins's C minor Overture, Grace's 'Resurgam,' Harwood's 'Pæan,' Widor's 'Pontifical March,' &c.

The Glasgow and Galloway Diocesan Choral Association held a festival service at St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow, on October 24, about six hundred and fifty singers being heard to fine effect in Macpherson's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D, the same composer's anthem, 'O praise God in His Holiness,' and Stanford's Te Deum in B flat. Mr. F. Pugh was at the organ, and Mr. John Pullein conducted.

At the hundred and eighteenth anthem and organ recital at Brighton Parish Church the choir sang Mendelssohn's 'I waited for the Lord,' and a lengthy selection from 'Parsifal.' Dr. Chastey Hector played Bach's G minor Fantasia and Fugue, a Schumann Study, and Wolstenholme's Finale in B flat. On November 10, Elgar's 'The Spirit of England' was sung.

M. Marcel Dupré will give a recital at Westminster Cathedral on December 3, at 6.30. His programme will consist of pieces played 'by request,' and one of his two improvisations will take the form of a trio-sonata—probably the most difficult of all forms for the purpose.

RECITALS

Mr. James Easson, Church of the Holy Trinity, St. Andrews—Grande Pièce Symphonique and Final in B flat, Franck; On a Breton Theme, Roparts; Rustic Suite, Alec Rowley; Fugue in E minor, Bach; Chorale Preludes: 'Jesu, my Joy,' Karg-Elert; 'St. Peter,' Harold Darke; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Pièce Héroïque Franck; Evening Song, Bairstow.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C.—Sonata in F minor, Merkel; Tragic Overture, Brahms; and a Bach programme.

Mr. E. A. Collins, All Souls', Langham Place, W.—Sonata in G, Elgar; Epinikion, Rootham; Largo sostenuto ('Sea' Symphony), Vaughan Williams; Marche Pontificale, Widor.

Dr. C. F. Waters, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Pastorale, Franck; First movement (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Postlude on 'Hampton,' J. A. Sowerbutts; Choral Fantasy, C. F. Waters.

Mr. Wallace J. Madge, Parish Church, St Mary Church, Torquay—Minuet (Sonata No. 1), Stanford; Three Chorale Preludes: 'Eventide,' Parry; 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; and 'Abridge,' Charlton Palmer; Intermezzo and Fuga Cromatica (Sonata No. 4), Rheinberger.

Mr. J. Harry Lee, St. Andrew's, Rowbarton, Taunton—Præludium (Sonata No. 20), Rheinberger; Scherzo in B flat, Wolstenholme; Postlude in D minor, Stanford; Epilogue, Healey Willan.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral—Concerto No. 5, Handel; Minuetto (Symphony No. 3), Widor; Sonata, Elgar; Allegretto in B flat, Lemmens; Overture, 'Carneval,' Dvorák; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Sonata, Op. 30, Merkel.

Mr. Guy Michell, Union Church, Queen Square, Brighton—Agitato (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Fugue in G minor ('Great'), Bach; 'Sunset,' Karg-Elert; Fantasia in F, John E. West.

Mr. B. J. Orsman, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Variations, Dupré; Toccata, Parry.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, St. Lawrence Jewry—Two Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 3, Rheinberger; Meditation in F sharp minor, Guilmant; Toccata in F, Bach.

Mr. Eric Smith, Luton Parish Church—Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge; Reverie on 'University,' Grace; Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt.

Mr. H. Bentley, Christ Church, Lowestoft—March for a Church Festival, Best; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; Festal Commemoration, John E. West; Finale ('Sonata Britannica'), Stanford.

Mr. J. Roland Middleton, Mold Parish Church—Prelude on 'Hanover,' Parry; 'Pilgrim's Progress' (part 8), Ernest Austin; Festal Commemoration, John E. West.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, Louth Parish Church—Romance, Watling; Sonata in the Style of Handel (third movement), Wolstenholme; Villanella, John Ireland; Finale, Guilmant.

Mr. Stanley Lucas, South Croydon Congregational Church—Prelude on 'Vater Unser,' Bach; Triumphal March, Hollins; Laus Deo and Cradle Song, Grace; Festive March in D, Smart; Evening Song, Bairstow.

Mr. Ernest A. Harris, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude on a Theme by Tallis, Darke; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' John E. West; Chorale and Variations, Bach.

Miss Marjorie T. Renton, St. Lawrence Jewry—Toccata ('Dorian'), Trio in C minor, and Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Four Sketches, Schumann; Andante (String Quartet), Debussy.

Mr. W. C. H. Pearse, University College, Reading—A Bach programme: Fantasia and Fugue in G minor; Prelude in E minor; Toccata and Fugue ('Dorian'); Prelude and Fugue in E flat; and five Chorale Preludes.

Mr. Norman Cocker, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Air, Variations, and Finale in A, Smart; Minuetto antico e Musetta, Pietro Yon; Fugue in G, Parry.

Mr. Hugh Taylor, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Aria in F, Bach; Canzone, Karg-Elert; Bridal March and Finale, Parry; Sonata in A minor, Borowski.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Christ Church, Penrith—Concerto in G minor, Handel; Sonata in E flat, Bach; Variations, Bonnet; Prelude to 'The Cloud Messenger,' Holst.

Rev. L. G. Bark, Christ Church, Penrith—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; three Chorale Preludes, Karg-Elert; Concerto No. 8, Avison; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck.

Mr. Edwin S. Taylor, All Saints', Oxford Road Manchester—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Legend, Grace; Marche Héroïque, Brewer.

Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. Giles's Cathedral, Glasgow—Adagio (Symphony No. 3), Vierne; March on a Ground Bass, Dohnányi; Postlude on the 'Old Hundredth,' Grace; 'Verdun,' Stanford; Toccata on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; a Franck programme; and two Bach programmes.

Mr. F. Dalrymple, Tredegarville Baptist Church, Cardiff—Phantasy and Fugue (Sonata No. 2), Rheinberger; Largo and Allegro (Sonata No. 5) and Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. Albert Orton, St. Anne's, Soho—A series of Bach programmes, e.g., Concerto No. 3; Prelude and Fugue in A; Sonata No. 1; Trio in C minor; Prelude and Fugue in G; and three Chorale Preludes.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Preludio (Sonata No. 6), Rheinberger; Concerto No. 2, Handel; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Reverie on 'University,' Grace; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; 'Twilight Sketches,' Lemare.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, All Saints', Oxford Road, Manchester—Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Grace; Allegro maestoso (Sonata No. 2), Claussmann; Intermezzo upon an Irish Air, Stanford; Triumph Song, Arthur Baynon.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Prelude on 'Ye boundless realms of joy,' Parry; Elegy, Bairstow; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells.

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Alban the Martyr, Westcliff—Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Scherzetto, Vierne; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Cantabile (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Finale, Wolstenholme; Pastorale, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in C, Hollins.

Mr. H. Heath-Gracie, St. Lawrence Jewry—'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Four Versets on 'Salve festa Dies,' Sceats; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Final in B flat, Franck.

Dr. C. H. Moody, Wigan Parish Church—Fugue in C, Bach; Toccata, Boëllmann; Pastorale, Bossi; Scherzoso, Rheinberger.

Councillor J. E. Adkins, Preston Parish Church—'Question and Answer,' Wolstenholme; Introduction and Passacaglia, Merkel; Canzone, Haigh; Air with Variations, Smart.

Mr. F. W. Belchamber, St. Gabriel's, Cricklewood—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Adagio ('Scotch' Symphony), Mendelssohn; Air with Variations, Hesse; Scherzo and Finale, Guilmant.

APPOINTMENT

Mr. Teasdale Griffiths, music-master of Birkenhead Institute.

Letters to the Editor

COMPETITIVE MUSICAL FESTIVALS

SIR,—Your interesting report of the Festival Federation Conference indicates that the views of competitors were not expressed to any degree.

SUB-TOTALS OF MARKS

Competitors desire to know where they excel and where they do not excel. As judges cannot give sub-totals of marks without 'wangling,' a new kind of mark-sheet is required, and the following is suggested: Give total marks; divide the sheet into six columns; in the left-hand column print the desirable qualities, e.g., intonation, diction, accuracy, expression, &c.; head the other five columns, respectively, 'Excellent,' 'Very Good,' 'Good,' 'Moderate,' 'Fair.' All the judge would then have to do would be to place a tick in the appropriate column against each of the qualities.

TIMES OF CLASSES

When fixing the times of classes, authorities should ensure that the most distant competitor can attend, perform, hear the judge's comments, and reach home again in one day.

SIGHT-SINGING

As a competitor I support the proposal that sight-singing should be made compulsory at all solo competitions, on the following grounds:

(a) It would force competitors to study this neglected subject;

(b) Between competitors of approximate ability it provides a further test of musicianship;

(c) It provides relief from the monotony of hearing the same song scores of times.

TACT IN JUDGING

If the marking-sheet above suggested were adopted, there would be no need for judges to make derogatory remarks in public.

UNIFORM STANDARD

Can judges agree upon some uniform standard which all could adopt and mark accordingly? At present the marking as between one competition and another, one class and another, and one judge and another is merely capricious. Similarly certificates should be awarded on a uniform standard.

CHOICE OF SONGS

I happen to be a bass, with the normal amateur bass compass of lower E flat to E flat (two octaves). Songs are frequently chosen with a top E natural required. I cannot enter. Moreover, musical competitions should not encourage the constant use of the extreme ranges of the voice. I would define an ideal competitive bass song as:

(a) Lying within the compass F to D?;

(b) Having one half of its notes within the middle octave of that range, viz., A to A;

(c) Being rather burly in sentiment; and (d) Containing intervals which are appropriate to the bass voice.

The following are not, in my opinion, bass songs, but have been set in bass competitions: Stanford's 'A soft day,' Campion's 'When to her lute Corinna sings,' Wagner's 'Star of eve.'

Similarly other voices should be considered from the point of view of compass, middle range, sentiment, and interval. The Federation would perform useful service by classifying songs into appropriate voices.

Songs should not be chosen which compel competitors to buy books of songs they do not want. Copies should be provided for judge and accompanist by the festival authorities.

ENTRANCE FEES

The entrance fees range from 1*s.* to 8*s.* 6*d.*, sometimes with 1*s.* added for accompanist and 1*s.* for mark sheet. The higher charges are spoliation if the lower are reasonable. Five shillings should be the maximum charge to cover both accompanist and mark sheet. Less for juveniles.

JUDGES

If there is more than one judge, they should mark and comment separately, and the average should be taken. All mark sheets should be handed to the competitor.

These comments are not made in any critical, still less in any captious, spirit, but in the hope that the competitive festival movement will be improved.—Yours, &c.,

'Pantiles,' Woodside Avenue, E. R. SCOVELL.
Beaconsfield, Bucks.

'HYMNS A. & M.'

SIR,—Our attention has been called to a paragraph appearing in your issue for October (page 932), under the heading 'Some New Hymn Books.' It is there stated that 'Hymns A. & M.' is to be revised, or to have a further supplement, by way of showing its vitality. We have been in communication with the Chairman of 'Hymns A. & M.' committee, and we have his authority to say that no revision or addition to the book is at present contemplated.

In these circumstances we shall be much obliged if you can see your way to contradict your previous statement, as it has already caused considerable confusion in people's minds.—Yours, &c., WILLIAM CLOWES & SONS, LTD.

94, Jermyn Street, S.W.1.

THE R.C.O. AND CHOIR-TRAINING

SIR,—The recent addition of the Choir-training Certificate and Diploma to the Diplomas granted by the Royal College of Organists is certainly a step in the right direction; but it by no means supplies that long-felt want for a standard of choir-training—a standard which is really so necessary, and yet, at present, does not exist.

For the organist who is an Associate or a Fellow of the College, the Certificate is no doubt an additional qualification, but to the choirmaster who is only a choirmaster and not an organist it is of little value, as it carries no title and is easily overtopped by the Licentiateship of the R.A.M. for voice-culture and class-singing.

At present, apart from this comparatively easily obtained certificate, the College does not recognise the existence of the choirmaster. Could not the College authorities institute examinations in choir-training equivalent in standard to the F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O., carrying with them the right to append these letters, but insisting that the word 'Choir-master' be added? The examination might be left exactly as at present, allowing, however, the candidate choice of organ playing or choir-training.

It is a great pity that the question of church choir-training, which is of so much importance, should be so consistently ignored and overlooked by our various Colleges of Music.

The R.C.O. has a great opportunity for lifting this branch of music out of the hands of the charlatan and the inexperienced if it cares to take up the matter thoroughly—not as a side-line to organ playing, but as a subject worthy of consideration on its own merits.—Yours, &c.,

45, Firshill Road, Sheffield. DESMOND MACMAHON.

THE LURE OF THE VIBRATO

SIR,—I was glad to read the letters of Mr. Travers Adams and Mr. Small. I am sorry Mr. Adams cannot continue, because, though I understand the difficulties of space, I must still protest against what he has written. I may say that Mr. Small agreed so thoroughly with my remark that he told me so by letter, and gave me permission to say so. I do not wish to prolong the controversy, but on behalf of those who agree with me, I would request permission to make a final statement. I have, with others, read Mr. Adams's latest book, but I cannot discover where he writes about the particular point in dispute. We have been discussing GRAND opera. I have been intimately connected with grand opera since the year 1904, and in spite of what some singers, professors, and musical critics have written, I beg leave to hold to what I have said. There is a certain kind of production demanded for the portrayal of the effect required in grand opera.

The quality of timbre of the voice must be, above all, grand, massive, solid, exhilarating, open, peculiarly penetrating, and forceful. It demands a certain drive, a clang in the timbre.

Modern audiences are not interested in dreamy, dark, ultra-sentimental tone. The style of beauty peculiar to grand opera is, with little exception, of a grand, lofty, exalted kind. We admit that on occasions even the best singers may overstep the bounds and produce too much hardness, and perhaps too much evidence of effort, but they are not machines. All the great singers who are before the public to-day have been building up and carefully developing their voices for years. Perhaps Mr. Adams may see his way to stating his case more fully later. At present I feel, with great respect, that his judgment is not satisfying.—Yours, &c.,

4, Fielding Road, W.14. W. E. BELL-PORTER (Late of the Moody-Manners Grand Opera).

SIR,—I write only as an amateur, with no claim to any professional knowledge. On and off, however, for the last fifteen years I have devoted my spare time to the study of the production of the human voice, and have purchased almost every book that I heard of about voice-production, that of Mr. Travers Adams included. I am sorry to say that I can glean nothing really comprehensible from any of them. Mr. Adams states in the Introduction to his book that he is writing only for students, but I do not find it any the simpler. If we amateurs have to wade painfully through a mass of anatomical, physiological, acoustical, highly-scientific verbiage; if we have to wrestle with 'phonetics,' 'fundamental tone,' 'harmonics,' 'reflection,' 'reinforcement of upper partials,' &c., we can pick out little of practical use. What may seem easy to experts is hopelessly difficult to the average student. There is no amateur that I know who intelligently grasps more than the simplest points. If writers clearly understood this, it would be much better for the tyro. I am very sorry to say so, but I was intensely disappointed at reading the rather (I hope he will excuse me) abrupt closure, by himself, of what Mr. Adams has been writing to us about the way to practise. I thoroughly understood all he said. It was significant, as far as it went, but I felt he could have said so much more which might have cleared up many difficulties in a simple way. Is it impossible to put in transparent language information upon a complete, detailed method of practice whereby the voice could be produced and properly developed?—Yours, &c.,

190, Camberwell Grove, Denmark Hill, S.E.5. F. P. SYLVESTER MILLS.

THE MALADY OF CHOPIN (OR SHOULD IT BE, OF SCHUBERT?)

SIR,—I suspect that it was despair at being unable to pick holes in the rest of my argument about Schubert that led Mr. L. J. Green to select for his assault the only part of my letter which could possibly be conceived as a mere attempt at cleverness. But if he wished to revile my little epigram, he should at least have quoted it correctly. I described Schubert's music as providing 'factitious [not "fictitious"] opportunities to be soulful'; by which I meant that there is, as a rule, nothing in the inspiration or the construction of the music itself that calls for any particular soulfulness in the performance. It usually resolves itself into a series of tonic-and-dominant or similar thread-bare progressions, which must have been outworn before the time of Beethoven; and the opportunities to be soulful are provided either by adding what I believe is called 'lilt,' or by an occasional sugariness of harmony which we usually associate with such a composer as Gounod. This I call poverty of musical ideas.

Examples of what I mean may be found in two of Schubert's most popular compositions—the Pianoforte Impromptu in B flat, and the second movement of the 'Unfinished' Symphony. (The first movement is, I admit, scarcely open to these objections.) Compare these efforts to make a sow's ear look like a silk purse with (say) the soaring sixths and sevenths in Elgar's Violin Concerto, which are essential to his melodic scheme, and whose innate nobility would shine through the most soulless performance.

In conclusion, I may add that to designate the man who, while among his five hundred odd songs he produced a few fine examples, was nevertheless more than any other composer responsible for the deadening tradition of the Lied, as 'by almost universal acclaim the greatest song-writer of all time' (as though, by the way, universal acclaim proved anything to the purpose), displays not only a fundamental weakness, but an unoriginality of musical appreciation which I trust nothing in my letter has equalled.—Yours, &c.,

19, Ellerslie Road, Tuebrook, Liverpool. NORMAN C. SUCKLING.

WAGNER AND THE ENGLISH PRESS

SIR,—As Mr. Newman offers no sort of apology for his libellous letter printed in your October issue, I must decline to continue the discussion with him in your columns

I ask you to give publicity to this statement lest my silence should be mistaken for acquiescence.—Yours, &c.,

Oxford. GEORGE AINSLIE HIGHT.

'THE PROBLEMS OF MODERN MUSIC'

SIR,—In your last issue I read the criticism of my 'Problems of Modern Music,' translated from the German. Your reviewer, considering the actual form of my book, justly remarks that on Stravinsky the author 'has hardly anything to say.' May I be allowed to point out that to my great and disagreeable surprise the Stravinsky chapter, which, after Schönberg, was meant to give a more consoling outlook into the future, and which is contained in the second German edition of my book, has been omitted from the English translation. It is not possible for me to decide whose fault it is. I did not see the translation before going to press. This omission is, indeed, much against my intentions, as well as the proportions of the book.—Yours, &c.,

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

Berlin-Wilmersdorf, Konstanzerstr. 11.

'F. S. S. A. L.'

SIR,—For Mr. Herbert Hodge's benefit I can, I think, interpret the mystic initials 'F.S.S.A.L.,' which I too have often smiled over when passing the church to which I think he refers. Be prepared to be awed. Here it is: 'Fellow of the Society of Science, Arts, and Literature.' As if this were not sufficient recompense for passing an examination—if they really do have to pass one—I believe the distinction carries with it a hood. Such a non-diploma-possessing person as myself could not presume to assess the value, great as it must be, of such an imposing slice of the alphabet, so I will refer your correspondent to a well-known catalogue of 'diplomas,' 'Musical Examinations' (Dubious), which I believe can be obtained from Messrs. Curwen—and which, incidentally, should be brought up to date.—Yours, &c.,

A. M. HAWKINS.

11, Claverdale Road, S.W.2.

A DISCLAIMER

SIR,—The whole of my remarks as distinct from the fragments chosen by Mr. Newman for his very free fantasia appeared in the New Age of October 1. They will be found to sound widely different from Mr. Newman's fantasia. To declare that I plumped for Bartók in that article is quite untrue. Mr. Newman also implies that I did not give my reasons why I supposed, to put it briefly, that there was any difference between the audience of 1820 and 1920; that also is untrue, as any one who takes the trouble to read me will see for himself. Yet again it is untrue to say that I rejected 'the evidence and the argument in toto.' I said nothing at all about the evidence as such. Unlike some others I do not regard insufficient knowledge or no knowledge at all of a matter as a justification for posing as an authority on it. I confined myself to questioning the validity of applying conclusions drawn from musical happenings a century ago to musical events happening now.—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens,
Regents Park, N.W.1.

[Mr. Augustus Toop writes at great length taking exception to a review in our last number of his book, 'The Organist and his Choir.' As the points at issue are of opinion rather than of fact, we cannot publish the letter. Our columns are open to authors and composers who wish to correct any actual mis-statement in a review, but no useful purpose is served by arguments between reviewer and reviewee on so large a number of points as Mr. Toop raises. Mr. Toop asks if our reviewer knows anything at all about ordinary parish choir work. We think it more than likely that he has some knowledge of the subject, seeing that he has had thirty years' experience, six at a village church, six at a church in a London slum, and the remainder at typical London parish churches.—EDITOR.]

Dr. George J. Bennett has been appointed Sheriff of Lincoln for the coming year. Congratulations to Lincoln and the Doctor!

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Lady pianist wishes to join dance band or amateur concert party. Able to lead.—E. D., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wanted (advanced) by violinist and 'cellist for practice of sonatas and trios. London W.5 district.—W., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady singer wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice.—F. M. A., 465, Grove Green Road, Leytonstone, E.11.

Ladies' vocal trio, meeting fortnightly on Fridays, requires an accompanist. Classical and modern songs, for mutual practice.—Mrs. K. OSTREHAN, 82, Waller Road, New Cross, S.E.14.

Young pianist wishes to meet violinist (lady or gentleman) for practice of classical sonatas. N. or N.W. district.—R. FINLAYSON, 1, Cecil Road, Muswell Hill, N.10.

Pianists wishes to meet singer for mutual practice, preferably soprano.—R. A. J., 95, Shirland Road, W.9.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist to form trio. Also wishes to join vocalists in mutual practice and reading.—R. M., 14, Sandringham Road, Golders Green, N.W.11.

Advertiser wishes to meet viola player to complete string quartet. N. London. Good library of classics and moderns. STOKOE, c/o Musical Times.

Experienced accompanist (gentlemen) desires instrumental and vocal accompanying. Classics preferred. London district. H. V. A., c/o Musical Times.

Violinists (first and second) and pianist wish to meet 'cellist for trio-playing, &c.—A. V. H., 15, Hanover Park, Peckham, S.E.15.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist one evening a week.—M. K., c/o Musical Times.

Good pianist wishes to meet good violinist and 'cellist to form trio.—A. T., 2, Milton Park, Highgate, N.6.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist or vocalist for mutual practice. Classical music.—A. P., c/o Musical Times.

MUSIC FOR TWO PIANOFORTES

On November 3, Mr. A. M. Henderson read a paper on the above subject before the members of the Musical Association. It was illustrated by several examples played by himself and Mr. Wilfrid Senior. The lecturer began by saying that it was surprising that the literature of music for two pianofortes—rich, attractive, and high in quality as it was—should receive so little attention by artists and teachers. It was delightful to play and enjoyable to hear, and was as refreshing and exhilarating in the studio of the teacher as in the concert room.

After referring to Farnaby's quaint little Duet for two virginals in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and the three short pieces by Couperin, which, he added, lacked the charm and personality of Couperin's writing for solo instruments, Mr. Henderson said that Bach had left us two splendid Concertos—in C major and C minor—with accompaniments for strings. These, however, were not essential to the performance, which was quite effective if they were omitted. There were also two Fugues for two claviers in 'The Art of Fugue,' but, though interesting, they were musically not very attractive. From Mozart we had a Sonata in D major, a very original work, full of fire and life, and having a lovely Andante for middle movement. Also this composer had given us a fine and dignified Fugue in C minor. A Concerto in E flat was even more effective than the Sonata, and had the added interest and colour of a delightful orchestral accompaniment. Clementi had written two really beautiful Sonatas, both in B flat. These were little known or played, although to his (the lecturer's) mind, they were superior to the composer's solo Sonatas.

Beethoven and Schubert wrote no music in this form, and so we came to the Romantic School. Schumann's poetic Andante and Variations, Op. 46, certainly deserved its popularity. Chopin's Rondo in C, published posthumously, was written before the composer was twenty, and though brilliant and effective could hardly be classed as one of his best works. Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Op. 56, was one of the finest and most genial of the composer's works, and was unquestionably one of the masterpieces in this genre, characterised as it was not only by great musical beauty, but by astonishing mastery of the technique of composition.

Reinecke had written many delightful works, all of them grateful to play. Among the more important were Andante and Variations, Op. 6; Variations on a Sarabande by Bach, Op. 24; Impromptu on a Theme from Schumann's 'Manfred,' Op. 66; 'Pictures from the South,' Op. 86; and Improvizata on a Gavotte by Gluck, Op. 125. Theodore Kirchner had written some refined and musical Waltzes, and Duvernoy an effective piece, 'Feu roulant,' Op. 256. Christian Sinding's Variations in E flat minor, Op. 2, was a splendid and characteristic work. Saint-Saëns had contributed very generously to the two-pianoforte literature, and in every case most effectively. Mention might be made of his Variations on a Theme of Beethoven, Op. 35; Polonaise, Op. 77; Scherzo, Op. 87; a very beautiful Caprice Arabe, Op. 96; and Caprice Héroïque, Op. 106. Chabrier had written 'Trois Valses Romantiques,' and Debussy had left us 'En blanc et noir,' a group of his last pieces in his most refined and sensitive manner. To the same school also we were indebted for further fresh and original additions to this répertoire, including several pieces of Gueroult, a Suite in B minor by Aubert, two very original pieces, 'Jeux en plein air,' by Tailleferre, and a poetic 'Caprice mélancolique' and 'Trois Pièces' by Reynaldo Hahn.

Eduard Schütt had composed a few charming pieces, including Variations, Op. 9; Valse Paraphrase, Op. 58, No. 1; Impromptu Rococo, Op. 58, No. 2; and Andante Cantabile and Scherzino, Op. 79. The Russians had given us some fine, characteristic pieces, which in originality, rhythmic interest, and pianistic qualities were excelled by none. Arensky had to his credit five fine Suites, the last of which, Op. 65, consisted of eight short movements, all written in the form of canons, and perfectly charming. Glière had written some beautiful duets. His Six Morceaux, Op. 41, were excellent. His Op. 61 consisted of a series of twenty-four pieces, many of them very beautiful. Rachmaninov had composed two Suites, Opp. 5 and 17—fine, but very difficult. By British composers there were Norman O'Neill's Variations and Fugue on an Irish Theme, Arthur Somervell's Variations on an Original Theme, and Arnold Bax's Irish tone-poem, 'Moy Mell.'

Besides original works such as those mentioned above, there were a large number of transcriptions, amongst which were some of Bach's organ works, a selection from 'The Well-Tempered Clavier' and the Goldberg Variations. Other arrangements mentioned included four of the finest of Handel's Concerti Grossi; Mozart's Fantasia in F minor (originally written for a mechanical organ); some of Haydn's works; Beethoven's Septet; the Rondino for wind instruments; and some of the Symphonies. Brahms had himself arranged his Quintet in F minor, Op. 34, calling it in this form a Sonata for two pianofortes, and had also arranged five of the Waltzes originally written for pianoforte duet. The works of Saint-Saëns afforded some transcriptions of exceptional interest, among them being the six Preludes and Fugues, Opp. 99 and 109, for the organ, the Marche Héroïque, Op. 34, the Septet, Op. 65, and the Etude Chromatique, Op. 111, No. 5. Practically all of César Franck's finest organ works had been arranged by Duparc and Jules Griset.

There were also some excellent second pianoforte parts to works written for pianoforte solo, such as those by Grieg to four of Mozart's Sonatas, those by Henselt to the Etudes of Cramer and of Bertini, and the twenty-four characteristic pieces by Corder to the Studies of Czerny, Op. 636. The paper ended with a brief account of some noted players of music for two pianofortes, including Mozart and his sister, Clementi and his pupil, John Field, the brothers Thern, Bülow and d'Albert, Rachmaninov and Siloti, Sophie Menter and Sapellnikov, Harold Bauer and Ossip Gabrilowitsch, and in England Myra Hess and Irene Scharrer.

THE ANNUAL DINNER of the Association was held on the evening of November 3 at the Criterion Restaurant, the president (Dr. Charles Wood) being in the chair. In proposing the toast of the 'Musical Association,' Prof. J. C. Bridge spoke in high terms of the extraordinary value and interest of the papers which had been read before the Association during the last fifty-one years. The volumes were so prized that many of the earlier numbers were very difficult to acquire. Dr. Wood, in replying, also emphasised the value of the work that was being done. He regarded it as a great honour to serve as President of such a body. Dr. C. H. Kitson proposed 'The Council and Officers,' to which Mr. F. Gilbert Webb responded. Dr. Percy Buck, in submitting 'Our Overseas Members,' pointed out that the Association had members in many distant parts of the world, notably in America. At the present moment there were proposals under consideration for some degree of reciprocity between the Association and the National Federation of Music Teachers in America, a body founded only two years after the Musical Association. It was hoped that members of each, when in the others' country, would visit meetings, and possibly deliver lectures. Dr. Albert Stanley, Emeritus Professor of Music in Michigan University, U.S.A., in replying, gave a further account of the National Federation, and expressed a lively satisfaction at the prospect of closer relations. Dr. Charles Hoby proposed 'The Visitors,' which was acknowledged by Mr. Wilfrid Senior.

During the evening much pleasure was afforded by some pianoforte trios, admirably played by Miss Enid Bailey, Miss Kathleen Jacobs, and Miss Doris Hibbert, from the Royal Academy of Music.

London Concerts

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

M. Tcherepnin père is one of the most innocent of composers—innocent, that is, of composition and its ways and means as they are usually understood and practised. Music does not grow connectedly under his hands; it happens jerkily. Though not gifted in melody, development, and form, M. Tcherepnin has the gift of the gab. He kept us attentive to it for fifty minutes at Queen's Hall on October 19, while Mr. Albert Coates conducted, and the London Symphony Orchestra played his large and imposing 'Symphoniette.' The diminutive in the title may stand for the amount of musical thought that lay in the untiring orchestral horse-play. The same programme brought 'The Nightingale' to the notice of London—not Stravinsky's ballet, but Respighi's gramophone record, about which 'The Pines of Rome' wave their branches in a thin breeze. The voice of the bird grows on one, but the music takes no root.

Mr. Coates conducted the Orchestra again on November 2, for a brilliant evening of Wagner. M.

SIR HENRY WOOD'S CONCERTS

Mlle. Germaine Tailleferre's D major Pianoforte Concerto was played by M. Alfred Cortôt at the Queen's Hall Symphony concert on October 24. The composer has here tackled a problem much like that of Dr. Vaughan Williams in his new Violin Concerto—that is, reconciling a Concerto Grosso of early 18th-century shape with early 20th-century content. The young Frenchwoman has a pretty, nimble gift, but, one would say, far less conviction in her undertaking than the Englishman, and no such personal style. The spirit of the music seemed little more than a caprice. One thing and another began, and was given up with a shrug of the shoulders. Now if one characteristic is stronger than another in the Bach Concertos, which have clearly been her model, and which the listener cannot possibly exclude from his mind, it is the unrelaxed thoroughness with which the musical matter is examined and expounded. In this form Mlle. Tailleferre's art betrayed a certain triviality.

After the Concerto Sir Henry conducted the Suite from Stravinsky's 'Pulcinella' ballet-music. This music, it will be remembered, was drawn from Pergolesi and freely 'gingered up' by Stravinsky. The effect is amusing. At first it is demure enough—Pergolesi au naturel. The adapter gradually creeps in, and by and by pretty well eclipses the other. The violent anachronisms make the impression of a skit. We should not call Stravinsky humorous—he is too cutting and bitter. But these orchestral quips of his seem expressive of acid satire, and, for what it is worth, that is rather a novelty in music. We were by that time (at the end of the afternoon) far away from the generous and naïve outpourings of the Symphony of the concert, Franck's D minor.

The next concert (November 7) was distinguished by an excellent performance of Dr. Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony, a performance for which a special expression of thanks is due to Sir Henry and his men, the more as the great work is a bit of a rarity in our programmes. The opportunity for hearing it played makes a day long memorable. The authors of the analytical notes wanted us to accompany the music by evoking a whole panorama of London life. Is that really necessary? Surely such music ('mehr Empfindung als Malerei') deserves to be taken solely for its own sake—not being like the poor food at a gaudy restaurant where the noise of the band attempts to divert our minds from the inferiority of the cooking. Too much of such poetical annotations might well frighten a composer from giving his work a name at all. Yet 'London' is a good name for the Symphony: for this strong and ranging music is in the last resort baffled of something—something it would grasp and define—just as is the thinking man who pores over our city's multitudinous life. The dark streams flow and eddy. To our 'Whither?' there is no answer but a mysterious echo among the soft inconclusive chimes at the end.

It has been said that Vaughan Williams's 'London,' or his Symphony, is very sad—that even the holiday-making in the Scherzo is wistful. If so, the sadness is of a right sane and manly sort, for the music leaves one with a sense of elevation. We may have been looking into a puzzling and elusive world. Yes, there is just the point—the looking into! The artist has helped us to look—has given us insight—beyond our normal vision. For such extensions of our own poor senses we go to the arts, and so do we enjoy the powers of better men than ourselves.

As on the other Saturday, this afternoon ended with Stravinsky—the whole of the 'Petrouchka' ballet-music. Perhaps this music was 'mehr Malerei als Empfindung.' Anyhow there were many 'early Britons' who failed to sit it out. One could only guess that they had not seen 'Petrouchka' on the stage, and that the music does not speak clearly for itself to those. Is 'Petrouchka' intelligible as sheer music? Impossible for such of us as know it well on the stage to say. Every action is sharply evoked for us by the concert performance, and we do not regret the lack of the stage, especially as the execution of the score is naturally superior at a Saturday Symphony concert. Still, for my part, I felt that the 'early Britons' might, however bewildered, have stayed on to give a fair chance to this music. Of course, the thing is a masterpiece. What a certainty and what an ingenuity in that demonic hand!

Between the Symphony and the ballet M. Jacques Thibaud was in capital form in Bruch's second Violin Concerto. C.

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

The first concert of the season drew a packed audience, thanks to the attractive power of the Leeds Festival Choir and the interest roused by Holst's 'Choral' Symphony. The performance of Holst's work was unequal, with some splendid moments and some in which the forces needed pulling together. This was felt specially in the Scherzo—the movement in which the choir most distinguished itself in the first performance of the work at Leeds. The poetry of the slow movement was missed; it is of an unusual and elusive type, and the failure seemed to lie at the door of the half-chorus. Miss Dorothy Silk sang beautifully in the solo part (but we were astonished to find her making 'here' a dissyllable in the 'Spirit here that reignest' lines). The Ninth Symphony found the choir triumphing gloriously in a field that is often strewn with stricken and exhausted singers. Mr. Albert Coates conducted.

The second concert (November 19) was an 'Elgar night' (to adopt a term from the opera-house, with its far less important prima-donna 'nights'), and gave as good a survey of the composer as could well be managed in one programme. The 'Enigma' Variations, the 'Cello Concerto (Miss Beatrice Harrison), 'In the South,' and that neglected masterpiece, 'Falstaff,' with the Bach C minor Fantasia and Fugue to remind us of Elgar's unsurpassed skill as orchestrator, were conducted by the composer, and received with an enthusiasm that made one ask whether an Elgar Festival would not, after all, be a popular success. During the evening Sir Henry Wood presented the composer with the Society's Gold Medal—an honour that would have been conferred long ago were composers given their due place in the musical hierarchy. (Things being as they are, Tetrazzini and Pachmann got theirs first!) But better late than never, and the crowded audience forgave the belatedness in their enjoyment of the opportunity of showing that a prophet is not always without honour in his own country. H. G.

FAURÉ'S POSTHUMOUS QUARTET

A French concert given by the Music Society, Tufton Street, Westminster, on October 20, contained alongside works of Franck, Debussy, and Ravel, the posthumous String Quartet in E minor, Op. 121, of Gabriel Fauré. It was performed by M. André Mangeot's quartet, which players were joined by M. Cortôt in a performance of Franck's Pianoforte Quintet.

* * *

The intimate conditions of the Tufton Street concerts favoured the new composition. Fauré's music has never won anything like its Paris vogue in the outside world, and when we ask why, we find one reason in that it was so beautifully designed to harmonize with the local circumstances of music-making. His chamber music is indeed for the chamber. And he wrote for listeners who were willing to be charmed but not harangued. Fauré's sentiment in his songs is often declared here to be 'artificial' or 'too scented.' But let us consider the society in which these songs were to live—not the earnest German middle-classes for whom the great German lieder-composers wrote, but a more sceptical, more fastidious, more limited, more lightly musical world—and we shall see better how exquisitely his art shaped itself. Most concert-rooms are too big for Fauré. Yet it sounds like disparagement to call his a 'drawing-room music.' It is that: but of what a cultivated, elegant, sensitive drawing-room!

The new Quartet was written when Fauré was seventy-nine. In his latter years he had singularly reined upon the always delicate style of his writing. The songs of 'Le Jardin Clos,' 'L'Horizon Chimérique,' and 'Mirages,' are not much known, but in their discreet beauty is something very attractive, if one but lends a sympathetic ear. The Quartet is even more discreet. Vitality had evidently waned. The musical shapes that appear (such as the little question-and-answer of the opening, and the succeeding G major subject on the first violin) are of a very slight characterisation. The Andante seemed long (though it is not) because of the extreme sedateness of the figures. The Finale is enlivened by a springing triplet which ends by capturing the whole field. Fauréans will cherish the work as the farewell to art of the old master, and not therefor only, but also because of certain subtle little harmonic adventures characteristic of Fauré's open mind to the last. The ending of the Andante should not be missed by those who have appreciated other beautiful cadences in the later Fauré. C.

Miss Guiomar Novaes, a young pianist from Brazil, made a great impression on a very critical audience by her pianoforte-playing at Æolian Hall recently. She gave two recitals, of which the first was probably better than the second, though both were exceedingly interesting. Taking her at her best, which was certainly in Chopin's 'Funeral March' Sonata, she struck us as quite the most remarkable woman pianist who has appeared in London for several years. Perfect technique we expect nowadays from every good exponent, but Miss Novaes combined with this a strength and fire which are very rare in any pianist, male or female. Plenty of people in the hall—musicians as well as amateurs—spoke of her as the legitimate successor of Carreño, and there was point in the conjunction; for Miss Novaes shows nothing of what we are accustomed to call the feminine qualities in her playing. Her Chopin was never sentimental, nor yet febrile. Rather we were conscious of an extraordinary fierceness in her interpretation of the music, even the softer passages revealing, as it were, the claw under the silk glove. What is or is not an ideal interpretation remains inevitably a matter of opinion, but many of us felt that here was an example of Chopin-playing perfect in its own way, which, moreover, hardly won from the professional critics—most of whom were absent—the recognition it deserved. F. T.

GERALD COOPER'S CONCERT

Dr. Vaughan Williams is ranging through all the musical forms, helping to make them afresh: symphony, choral symphony, cantata, mass, opera, string quartet, song, part-song—these he has cultivated and fertilized; and there is one 'Flos Campi' which grows in nobody else's garden. Most of us, if given the choice, would ask next for a violin concerto, knowing that he would take his cue not from the overgrown style of the 19th century, but from the clarity and directness of the 18th. So it has been. The 'Concerto Accademico,' which we heard at a Gerald Cooper concert on November 6, proceeds like a concerto of Bach. The abrupt rhythms of the opening Allegro, the 'third species' writing over a sturdy bass, and the conversational give and take between the solo violin and the string orchestra were all in character. So too, in the slow movement, were the free figuration of the solo part over the steadily-growing pattern of the accompaniment, and the serene and highly-wrought beauty of the movement itself. The third movement, a Scherzo, carries on the analogy with its quick triplets. Add a reference to the continual forward urging that is distinctly Bach-like, and we may drop a comparison that is brought in largely as a kind of terminological shorthand and admit that the work is entirely Vaughan Williams. The play of part-writing and harmony are pure V. W. of the nineteen-twenties, strong and steady, with the face of noble melancholy which we may well describe as 'the Cotswold look.' Quite a success, shared by Jelly d'Aranyi (violinist), Anthony Bernard (conductor), the London Chamber Orchestra, and a large and well-chosen audience.

On the same evening Mr. John Goss sang Sonnet VII. from Spenser's 'Amoretti,' set to music for low tenor voice and eleven instruments by Bernard van Dieren. Mr. Goss has since announced that he likes van Dieren songs as songs. All honour to him for his opinion, and felicitation from us who can only like them as music, and then not always. In this case Mr. van Dieren works a pretty spell with strings and wind, with harmonies that are accessible to the most timid ear for all their shifting lights, apt digressions on this or that instrument, a sweet richness in it all, and music enough to throw off servitude to words. The words, too, have a claim to reject the companionship of so much music. Clearly a misfit somewhere. The vocal part does not pulsate with the words, though, as an expressive line, it is full of comeliness. Probably this is the foundation of Mr. Goss's liking. Anyhow, the song was both admired and enjoyed.

The balance of a sterling programme consisted of a Suite of Purcell Ayres, arranged by Mr. Anthony Bernard, the 'Amor Brujo' Suite of de Falla, Mozart's G major Violin Concerto, and the 'Siegfried Idyll.' M.

FESTIVAL AT ST. MICHAEL'S CORNHILL

The St. Michael's Singers—that excellent 'choral society for City workers in connection with St. Michael's, Cornhill'—are now in the seventh year of their prosperity, and celebrated their fifth Festival on November 2-5. As in former years, Dr. Harold Darke had arranged a daily organ recital at mid-day and four evening performances of sacred music. In this scheme the Universities and Cathedrals were able to pay back some of the debt which the provinces owe to London in the matter of music, for Dr. Rootham, of St. John's College, Cambridge, Dr. W. H. Harris, of New College, Oxford, and Dr. Ernest Bullock, of Exeter Cathedral, played three of the organ programmes, leaving the fourth to Mr. Edgar Cook, of Southwark, and the evening work to Mr. Thalben Ball, of the City Temple. The four evening programmes were devoted to modern choral music, unaccompanied choral music, old music for vocal solos, and the B minor Mass, thus securing a maximum of interest and variety without recourse to music incongruous with the circumstances of the Festival. The first programme contained choral works by Frank Bridge ('A Prayer'), Leslie Woodgate (Two Hymns for solo, men's voices, and strings), Dr. Rootham ('Brown Earth'), and Vaughan Williams ('Five Mystical Songs'), and settings from such varied sources as Thomas à Kempis and Herrick. There was, however, a certain greyness over them all which was broken in welcome fashion by the spirited singing of Parry's 'God breaketh the battle,' by Mr. Trefor Jones. The Tuesday programme contained a Bach Motet ('Jesu, Priceless Treasure'), placed between some Elizabethan unaccompanied music and two of Parry's 'Songs of Farewell.' There was a time not so very long ago when choral singers found the idiom of Bach as strange as they now find the Elizabethan idiom. In 'Jesu, Priceless Treasure' the St. Michael's Singers revealed what they were to display more fully in the B minor Mass—the familiarity with Bach's idiom which invests his music with that curious affectionate intimacy which makes so strong an appeal to the listener who loves his Bach. But the Magnificat from Byrd's 'Great' Service needs an entirely different treatment, and in it the choir showed that it is possible to know the music in one sense, and yet remain on terms of merely formal acquaintance with it. If a bass sees an entry in the comfortable part of his register on the second beat of a bar, he can hardly help treating it as a syncopation, however often he has been told to disregard bar-lines. Moreover, when all allowance has been made for Byrd's habit of putting unimportant words like conjunctions on non-accented beats, the fact remains that, unlike a modern composer, he more often than not sets them to long notes which tend to acquire an accent of duration, while the important words, which he accents strongly, are equally often set to short notes. The second phrase of the Magnificat shows both these peculiarities: and (minim) my (crotchet) spirit (monosyllable and quaver, but accented) re- (quaver) joiceth, &c. To make such passages sound free and smooth takes much practice, and though we may congratulate the St. Michael's Singers on making a beginning they have not yet reached the end. The third concert took the form of a recital of old music by Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Stuart Robertson, interspersed with Quartets of Glazounov and Mozart, played by the Hermitage String Quartet. Schütz and Tunder were the less familiar composers, and on the whole deservedly so, for neither of their three numbers equalled in quality Purcell's 'The Blessed Virgin's Expostulation' nor Bach's cantata, 'Blessed is the man.'

The B minor Mass was given in St. Martin-in-the-Fields Church for the sake of its greater accommodation, which was used to the full. The performance was chiefly noticeable for the differentiation of feeling in each number, which was achieved through Dr. Darke's careful attention to detail. Slight variations in tempo, small adjustments in instrumentation, and sparing but well-judged use of climax, produced a more vital reading than is often obtained by larger choirs which, in seeking huge effects, frequently make all equally huge and equally unimpressive. This was an interesting performance, and a fitting conclusion to a Festival of which the prevailing note was sincerity.

F. S. H.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Chaliapin sang to a huge audience at the Albert Hall (November 3). He was in first-rate form, and sang as only Chaliapin can. It was a fascinating study to watch his face and hands. Their expressiveness was always at the service of his songs, but it never struck one as a studious expressiveness. Even when he was most terrifically intense his muscles were easy and natural. His eyes glowed, but his face was freely mobile. His hands opened and closed almost incessantly, but they were never clenched. This loose and easy bearing was one of the many lessons the great singer had to give us. Whatever his lessons, however, we have to come back to admitting the phenomenon of sheer natural genius to cover the whole impression he creates. All men feel, but few know how to say. Chaliapin feels more generously than the average, and has a simply supreme gift of utterance. Really it is not fair to compare other singers with him.

But it is worth emphasising that all his quick and powerful imaginativeness as a singer would be invalidated if he had not a first-class vocal technique—a breath control as marvellous as one could ever hope to witness. 'Control,' indeed, seems an awkward word for the technique of Chaliapin, who has certainly long been able to leave the regulation of the supply of his voice to his subconsciousness. Perhaps only a singer could appreciate the audacity with which, that night, he toyed with ideas as they crossed his mind. He never sings a song twice alike, and he gives the impression of making sudden raids on his resources—from the lightest, most whimsical form of expression to the weightiest and most passionate. But his resources on this last evening never failed him.

His beautiful high pianissimo was something such as no other contemporary singer gives us. And likewise those extraordinary series of in-rolling waves of tone, each a little bolder and intenser than the last. The programme was mostly Russian, but of mixed qualities.

Schubert's 'Doppelgänger' was the thing of things to remember. At a very slow pace it was sustained and intensified with preternatural courage and strength. Chaliapin played the most extravagant tricks with Leporello's 'Catalogue Song,' but I for one am not going to say that he was not justified in being as funny as he possibly could be therein. Isn't it a funny song? And don't most singers tackle Mozartian comedy as solemnly as a devotional exercise—like churchwardens handing round the plate? I add a little extra ardour to my praise of the incomparable artist because of a certain Beckmesserish priggishness which has here and there been noticeable in regard to him. It seems to be a grievance—it does not fit in with the rules!—that Chaliapin should be able to take up a mediocre song, like Tchaikovsky's 'Night,' or Flégier's 'Cor,' or Malashkin's 'Oh, could I but express in song,' and somehow make a masterpiece of it. I will admit he fell short of making a masterpiece of that unlucky 'Blind Ploughman,' on which—an intermezzo!—he practised his newly-acquired English before us.

In the same week we heard, at the New Chenil Galleries, Chelsea, another artist who brings a similar springing imaginativeness into singing, if in a smaller way. I mean John Coates. He gave a recital of 'English songs before Purcell,' including some great favourites and some unfamiliar revivals. William Corkine's 'Go, heavy thoughts' was one of the best of the latter. A Coates recital would be pure pleasure if the audience would applaud a little less unrestrainedly. Hand-clapping in a small room is a horrid noise, and Mr. Coates's boisterous admirers always want every song twice over. Not but that this is natural enough. Mr. Coates is the best English singer of his time, and one of the finest artists in the world to-day. No one else could give to the Elizabethan love-songs his shades of purely English wit, whimsicality, and humour, which suit them so well.

An American soprano, Miss Florence Macbeth, sang at Queen's Hall. She came trailing clouds of newspaper eulogies. The tone of these was pitched so high that there was some little disappointment in the actual performance. One cannot avoid the rather unkind word 'pretty' about it all. And it was of a not very convinced, not single-hearted prettiness. It was a light voice of some charm and agility, but after a time one had an uncomfortable impression of affectation in the exhibition of it—as though the singer were utterly regardless of the music she was singing (true, much of it did not deserve great regard), but engrossed by the business of a 'pretty' platform demeanour. She took the Mad Scene from 'Lucia' most seriously, but she was not quite familiar enough with French to sing it with the right glibness.

Mr. Eric Marshall (baritone) gave another recital at Wigmore Hall, and struck one as an improving technician, while his programme gave evidence of his musicianly aspirations. His fine voice, which has a 'cello-like quality, is more contained than it was, and is gaining a power and boldness which ought to tell in opera. His French was good, only there were far too many signs of a certain bluntness of musical perception. Mr. Marshall is still far from being a musician's singer. If he matures artistically he will deserve to become really famous.

Miss Astra Desmond sang at the same hall. One debated inwardly whether she were simply temporarily 'off colour,' or whether she had been rather unluckily experimenting in method. Certainly her tone that evening seemed, in comparison with our memories of her singing in the past, disappointingly thin and hard. In a variety of things, including some of Ortrud's music from 'Lohengrin,' she pretty consistently dispensed with full chest resonance. The eye tells us that this singer was not intended by nature for such comparatively colourless, insignificant utterance.

Mr. Riddell Hunter gave a recital at Wigmore Hall. A graceful and in some ways really accomplished singer. So long as he was unambitiously lyrical he could please us nicely, and he used his mezza-voce to charming effect in a song from his own pen. But if he wants his words to fly higher he must point and wing them with better consonants.

Miss Dora Stevens's singing reminded one, at its best moments, of that of Miss Silk, and her fine programme showed her to be a singer of similar good taste. Her way of mounting a phrase that is to go curving above the stave suggested the art of the more renowned singer, but Miss Stevens cannot yet match Miss Silk in other ways. At present, sweet though her voice is, it is one-coloured, and so is apt to seem cloying after a number of songs. Possibly the limitations of her physical strength influence her style, and, if so, she might be well-advised to cultivate seriously the muscular development which would invigorate her singing. There were Arias from the 95th and 127th cantatas of Bach, songs of Wolf, and new pieces by Hubert J. Foss and Harold Craxton (the admirable accompanist of the concert).

Another most musicianly programme was that of Miss Marie Howes (Grotrian Hall, November 11). She, again, was of the class of singer—a class in which the modern musical world must, for all its shortcomings, be considered rich—which considers the voice essentially as a gift sent to be put at the service of the best sorts of music. The programme contained some out-of-the-way Bach, a cantata of Rameau, a setting of the Church scene of Goethe's 'Faust,' by Schubert, and, among the modern songs, an example of the protean Bernard van Dieren. Miss Howes was joined in the duets by Mr. John Goss, and she was accompanied by Mr. Frank Howes. She was nervous, but one cannot put down wholly to nervousness some indifferent quality in her singing. It was more likely the result of a faulty method, and so probably was her nervousness, for most nervousness is due to uncontrolled breathing. Now and then, in an animated passage, Miss Howes would show us how well she might sing generally if her technical foundations were sure. This came out most noticeably in the joyous 'Ah, yes! Just so!' from Bach's 'Phœbus and Pan,' in which—the movement happening to install an instinctive breath-control in the singer—the tone was bold and the diction perfectly clear. Then, too, at the opening of the recitative, 'My God, how long?' the voice had real weight and dignity—the characteristics which ought, indeed, to belong to it normally. Elsewhere one felt an unbalanced preoccupation with verbal expression, and sensuous vocal quality—otherwise beauty, otherwise the whole raison d'être for singing instead of talking—was lacking. Let her enrich her tone, and Miss Howes will find her words will not require half so much looking after.

Miss Mary Congreve sang at Wigmore Hall (November 13). She possesses more than ordinary knowledge of breath-control, and in the result one had, in her opening songs, the impression of a voice of sweetness and untrammelled movement. It was curious that in some modern English songs (Bax, Hughes, and Craxton) she went astray, obscuring her diction and failing to support her high notes. But disappointing as her technical aberration here was, Miss Congreve must still be put down as one of the best new singers of the season, and as one who bids fair to achieve a real professional standard. H. J. K.

Competition Festival Record

FESTIVALS IN GENERAL, AND BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL IN PARTICULAR

Ever since Matthew Arnold wrote about

> . . . this strange disease of modern life,
> With its sick hurry—

we who live in the time that is modern now, seem to be getting more and more hurried. Because wireless and transport have made the world shrink, it has become an enormous place to us minute individuals. It is full of new interests, places, and people all just waiting to please and excite us. It is, therefore, now imperative that we should limit our activities, unless we are going to let our lives become one incoherent, feverish rush. There is not time during our three-score years and ten to do all that we should like to do.

The need for this limitation was seen clearly in the Musical Festival held in October at Blackpool. Buttressing Blackpool are many great towns containing many, many people, all of whom are becoming increasingly interested in music. This is evident from the large attendance of choirs, orchestras, and soloists from the industrial towns of Bolton, Manchester, Blackburn, Burnley, Wigan, Rochdale, &c. It is a fact that the interest of these people is increasing; this is proved by previous records of entries when these are compared with recent figures. A problem now faces Blackpool; probably it also faces other towns that hold competitive festivals.

The festival must be limited. Blackpool Festival lasts a whole week; it is held in six halls, which comprise the Winter Gardens, and music is being judged in at least four of these halls simultaneously during each day. Unless this Festival is to become unwieldy it must not be allowed to grow any larger. So much is certain. In some opinions it is equally certain that the Festival is too large already. The officials are justly proud of their management; so proud, indeed, that one sometimes wonders if the organization and the motto, 'Progress'—on the programme, in all local papers, and even in coloured lights on the trams—is not more important to them than the music, which is, after all, the main thing. One adjudicator remarked to me, 'The organization is flattened out so smoothly as to make one feel that the music is in danger of getting flattened out too.'

There is a danger of this. Some classes of music at the Festival were so large that it was inconceivable that the patient judge should retain sufficient alertness to do his task adequately. A hundred and six sopranos, each singing three pieces, is too much for any one man to adjudicate thoroughly; and there were eighty-three mezzo-sopranos, each also singing three pieces. Mr. Steuart Wilson in this class gave up hope of teaching the competitors in his adjudications anything more than they were able to learn from the scale of awards and his brief remarks. (But he made up for this by arranging an unofficial time with the competitors for a mutual and valuable exchange of ideas.) The class began at 9.0 a.m., and at 6.20 p.m. he was still busy. The evening session, at which he was appointed to adjudicate, was due to begin at 6.0 p.m. Of course, he couldn't meet this engagement; and even had he been able, it is not probable that his physique or intelligence would have been equal to the strain.

The chief point of holding these festivals is that they should teach the competitors. Otherwise entrants might as well save their fare and entrance fee, learn the music at home, and perform it at tea-parties. Every competitor should return with fresh light both on the piece he has been learning and the instrument with which he has been interpreting it. Some singers at Blackpool used their voices in a completely wrong way. They should not only be informed of this, but should be told how to remedy it; indeed, there is no reason why they should not have a practical lesson there and then. Sir Richard Terry on several occasions actually provided this. He caused church choirs to sing a hymn so that it made music, and small boys to march round the platform singing Balfour Gardiner's setting of Masefield's 'Cavalier' to a quick march rhythm, as it should be sung. All of which is excellent.

Mr. Steuart Wilson's extension of Sir Richard's idea might, with advantage, be generally adopted. Half-an-hour should be set apart for each class in which the judge would have time really to teach the competitors something they did not know about the music. This should be in addition to the adjudication, which is generally very necessarily brief, and open to the public. The special time need not be brief, and it would not be public. It would simply be an opportunity for the judge to see that his remarks had been understood, and to initiate along the right lines practice based on them. This really would be worth doing.

But before it can be attempted, some limitation must be put on Blackpool's ambition after 'records.' The important thing in a festival is the amount of enlightenment the competitors take home, not the number of entries, 'breaking all previous records,' which the committee has received. The management must cause the classes to be limited to a reasonable size, thereby considering and sparing the judges, so that, besides adjudicating, they may teach. Then the work of the Festivals, besides being one of the good causes of education, will become of musical value in England. K. C.

BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL (OCTOBER 19-24)

(FROM OUR MANCHESTER CORRESPONDENT)

Although the widespread appeal of this Festival brings in its train baffling problems of management and control, yet each succeeding meeting finds embarrassments which elsewhere would spell confusion and delay, only stimulating the host of voluntary workers to more incredible feats of managerial triumph. Artistically the revelations of the week were in the domain of chamber and orchestral music, Frank Bridge's 'Miniatures' and Schubert's A minor Quartet providing the surprises in concerted work, whilst the quality, and high efficiency of five full orchestras, each comprising fifty players, so astounded Mr. Maurice Besly that he was perhaps prematurely betrayed into the view that in the North Country the problem of municipal music was as good as solved. There was a striking example of the way in which quality will triumphantly emerge from the ruck provided by a lady violinist—from Preston, if memory serves me rightly. Quite by chance I heard her in some solo work, a Joseph Gibbs Sonata, I believe, and instantly one's critical instincts recognised unusual quality both of technique and interpretative power. Later in the same day, strolling into the hall during the Schubert Quartet competition, and quite ignorant of the identity of the players then performing, the ear was arrested at the quality of the first violin in the quartet then playing. Closer investigation revealed the player of the morning's experience, and one or two questions elicited the interesting fact that also she had been the leader (in the Frank Bridge 'Miniatures') of the winning trio! At last it almost seems that an instrumental dawn is breaking, and if the expectation should prove well founded, it is bound to have a tremendous reaction on the vocal side of these Festivals in the direction of improved musicianship, in which very often the vocalists are lamentably deficient. All the artistic arguments which may be formulated against the Rose Bowl competition—where the winning vocalist in each of the six voices sang their three songs (and superb songs, too!) before a judge (Mr. Frederic Austin) who knows nothing of the course of these solo competitions—are completely pulverised when your six hundred or more entrants have produced such voices as were heard from the soprano, contralto, baritone, and bass. Small wonder, perhaps, that the monster crowd applauded prematurely in the soprano's 'Ah! perfido' aria—many more distinguished singers would have given their all for such a spontaneous tribute. She beat the bass (another Norman Allin in the rough) who followed her with arias from Bach and Mozart, and then very appropriately Pogner's Address, which fitted the situation like a glove! Had he preceded the soprano, she might not have won the audience's approval quite so emphatically, for two such emotional outbursts in twenty minutes cannot leave folk equally moved. This feature of the audiences' participation in these awards needs some emphasis, for the standard of judgment revealed was extraordinarily high. Between items they chatter eagerly on keen comparisons of ideas, but at the tinkle of the judge's bell silence falls upon the vast throngs. No visitor can come away without the most vivid impressions of their almost uncannily sound judgment of what's what. In vocal and choral music especially, this knowledge of form is supplemented by an intimate acquaintance with the music, and it has to be recorded that some of the judgments in the final day's choral work were openly derided. South Wales may dispute decisions with rioting, but in the North the fine sportsmanship amongst the choirs accepts awards with more philosophic calm, ups and downs being taken in the spirit that such affairs are mere incidents in their artistic life's journey. But I am going to attempt to make articulate this feeling animating the thinking crowds that assemble at such Festivals as Blackpool, and no more fitting place for the presentation of this view can be found than in the columns of this journal, which, since the earliest days of the late Dr. McNaught's work, has maintained so keen an interest in the Competitive Festival movement.

On Saturday morning, in the female-voice class, an accompanied setting by Orsmond Anderton of Keats's 'Ode to Autumn' was used, lasting about six minutes. In the ranks of a Southern choir was a soprano who sang so badly out of tune the whole time her part was going that she could easily be located in the front row; of course there was an end to any æsthetic enjoyment of that performance—the fundamentals were wrong, and probably the conductor squirmed more than many in the audience. But when it is discovered that such a violation of first principles of good choral singing is overlooked, and the choir included in the finalists, the audience does not lose its temper after the manner of violent partisans. No, it simply laughs the decision to scorn, for it is remembered that there were plenty of good choirs excluded. During the afternoon a mixed-voice choir, singing in Sakhnovsky's 'Pampas Grass,' broke down so badly that everybody in the building knew the ensemble was off the rails, and its unhappy conductor had practically to stop and try a re-start, only to end in hopeless confusion. Here again was a big class, with plenty of choirs of repute that probably never sang better in their lives; yet, to everybody's consternation, the breakdown choir was rewarded with election to the evening's final! Again the people laughed loud and long at the verdict of the pundits; but it was the laughter of cynicism, and when such audiences do that, the competitive movement, fraught as it is with so much power for instruction, is in the gravest danger. Nobody moving through those thronged corridors that afternoon could doubt that after these decisions the whole question of adjudicatory principles was on its trial. To adapt Abraham Lincoln—you may fool some of the people part of the time, but you cannot fool everybody all the time. It may be suggested that exceptional instances are here quoted; agreed. But whilst not characteristic of the adjudicating in general at Blackpool, they do not by any means stand alone, and the marvel is that dissent from this sort of thing has not manifested itself before now, because reason and instinct alike revolt against such negations of judgment. The plain man (and the plain woman, too!) have no use for mere caprice in these matters. These earnest folk come to learn, and to pick up wrinkles, and to their utter amazement they find this sort of thing not condemned, but rewarded. It does not square either with their critical instincts (sound in the main) or with their sense of justice. They ask in bewilderment, 'What sort of standards are judges setting up these days?' Momentary and occasional lapses from true intonation are assessed at a true value, and choirs do not suffer seriously at a judge's hands on that account, but six minutes' persistent off-pitch discordance is another matter. Again, all understand differences of opinion on interpretation, particularly in a work sung for the first time in public. Other things being equal, if a conductor's reading coincides with the views of the judge he is 'in'; whereas another's reading may be distinctly good, even more intellectual, but, not coinciding with the judge's, he is 'out.' Both have a perfect right to their respective views, and might well refuse even to modify them—all that sort of thing the audience understands as the result of differing temperaments. But the points named above are more concerned with fundamentals. What is going to be done about them? It is possible that had opportunity been afforded the adjudicators to give reasons for their decisions, as is usually the case, popular judgment might have been modified. Time-tables ought to allow for this to be done. A question very often heard these days is: 'Do the judges always prepare their work with the same assiduous care as the bulk of the choirs?' Of course, adjudicators and executives alike have such matters in their own hands, the latter by always sending the music for advance study, and the former by making sure that the score is in their heads and not their heads in the score.

For the Festival Scholarships of £150 for three years over a hundred candidates entered, and nineteen of these appeared at an exhaustive examination during the Festival. Miss Dorothy Haigh, a contralto singer, employed at the Bradford Co-operative Society's offices, was awarded the Scholarship. Her training hitherto has been by the Manchester tenor, Charles Neville.

[Our correspondent's attack on the choral adjudicators calls for an answer, on quite other than mere personal grounds: the reputation of experienced judges may be trusted to survive such criticism. Both the judges concerned have served a long spell as choir-trainers, and have also had some years of experience in judging choral classes at festivals, large and small, in widely different parts of the country. Further, one of them has shared in the judging of the chief choral contests at Blackpool during the past few years. These qualifications should be sufficient to dispose of any implications as to incompetence. But a much larger issue is raised—one that affects the public confidence in judges as a body, and makes an already difficult task ungrateful as well. We append, therefore, a statement by the judges concerning the award to which our correspondent takes exception.]

What an easy task judging would be if carried out on such superficial lines as those indicated above! A choir (or rather, a solitary member thereof) sang out of tune in one of the tests; another came to grief badly at a difficult modulation. Enough! Both are damned beyond redemption. Happily, the official judges went to work on very different lines. They placed the choirs according to the performance of the whole of both tests; and they were concerned no less with the virtues than with the defects. In regard to the Sakhnovsky piece, the correspondent is apparently unaware that practically every choir failed to negotiate the more difficult of the chromatic passages, especially that on page 12. Indeed, if memory serves us, only the winning choir was correct as to notes, and even these singers were momentarily out of tune on the chord for 'bleaching.' Had only one choir blundered badly at this point, it could hardly have got into the final, save by virtue of some extraordinarily good singing in other ways. But as the failure was general, its bearing on the result was considerably reduced. Now, one of the deadliest traps in judging a number of performances lies in the fact (obvious, but generally overlooked by audiences) that the most easily-perceived faults are not necessarily the worst. There are some mistakes that the most casual ear can detect—a sudden falling to pieces of the ensemble, a bit of bad tuning, the unexplained failure of a lead, and so forth. The audience misses none of these blemishes. What it does miss is the type of fault that doesn't sound radically wrong, and which is often the result of bad taste or bad musicianship. Thus the Blackpool audience appears to have been well aware of the general failure of most of the choirs on page 12 of 'The Pampas Grass.' Were they as conscious that many of the choirs spoilt the power-scheme of the song, and its effect as a whole, by singing nearly all the forte passages fortissimo? To the casual ear the effect was not bad: some no doubt found it stirring. An even more serious fault was the misreading of the alla marcia direction on page 10. The pace was often so quick as to rule out the marcato effect the composer asks for. Again, hardly one of the choirs sang the six- and seven-part chords firmly. Sometimes an inner part was missing; more often the harmony was not clear; sometimes the chord was actually wrong, though it no doubt sounded right to all but those who knew the piece well, or were following the copy closely. And no single choir did all that a Blackpool mixed-voice 'A' choir ought to be able to do in the morendo on page 15. Did our critic note how all the choirs stood in regard to these points, and a dozen others, such as blend, tone-quality, diction, pace, phrasing, &c., all of which are as fundamental as the two points he mentions? And did he observe how all the choirs sang the other test, Parry's 'My soul, there is a country'? There were matters here not less—sometimes more—important than the loss of pitch by one singer, or the bungle of a choir in 'The Pampas Grass.' We wonder if the writer observed carefully which of the twenty competing choirs managed to avoid the pitfall of scrappiness in their joining-up of the various sections of the Parry song; to what extent the relationship of the two passages in 6-8 time was shown; how many choirs realised that the injunction 'O my soul, awake!' is a kind of parenthesis, and not a fortissimo alarum; what was done in the building up of the final section, and the expansion of the cadence to a final ≺ on the very last word. Only those who listened searchingly to these and other technical and interpretative points in the Parry, in every performance, are in a position to give a judgment. The correspondent's remarks as to the general intelligence of festival audiences are well-founded, but exaggerated. However acute an audience may be, it must not be encouraged to believe that its findings are likely to be so conclusive as those arrived at by the far more intensive method of the judges. And even the fairest of audiences has its local or personal leanings, whereas a judge is usually quite ignorant of the identity of the competitor. If the Blackpool audiences were all that is claimed for them above, it is clear that the official judges are an unnecessary expense. Let the results be decided by a show of hands!

There are only two methods of judging competitive work. The one followed by the correspondent and his fellow-scoffers is fully exposed (in both senses of the word) in his comments. That followed by the official judges may be fallible (like all human effort), but it reduces the risk of caprice and injustice to the minimum.

The preliminary contests in the female 'A' and mixed choir 'A' classes took close on seven hours, and it is safe to say that only the judges kept their minds on the job at full stretch during that time, writing full notes on each performance while it was in progress (not afterwards from memory), comparing the notes from time to time, in order to be able to set the performance of (say) No. 16 beside that of No. 2, and at the same time jotting down impressions of the class as a whole. Even a judgment reached by these arduous methods is liable to err, but at least it is based on hard work and honest endeavour. One reached by such slapdash methods as that of our critic is not worth the paper it is printed on. We treat it seriously however, because, in regard to the mixed-voice class, this is the only opportunity we have had of justifying our award. We were given no opportunity of delivering the adjudication in the preliminary contest. The moment the last choir had sung, an official voice from the platform bade us give the marks at once, minus any comment, as time pressed. We are confident that a general adjudication on the singing of both tests, and a reading of the notes concerning the individual choirs, would have convinced the bulk of those present that our choice of finalists was sound. Nor was there a chance to deal with the matter later. When the final stage was over, the hour was so late that the audience was obviously tired, most of the choirs had gone home, and the remainder were becoming concerned about their trains. All that could be done was to deal hastily with the final stage. As a result, one of the chief educational features of the Festival was missed, and the judges given no opportunity for making clear to choirs and audience the grounds on which they had based their award. This is no new experience at Blackpool, but so far as our experience goes, it happens nowhere else. It is high time that the Executive bestirred itself in this matter. Many handsome things are said about the wonderful organization at Blackpool, and most of them are deserved. An executive, however, may organize until it is black in the face, but it cannot get a quart into a pint pot. As our contributor, 'K. C.,' points out, the strength of Blackpool—its large entry and wide appeal—is likely to prove its weakness. Unless something drastic is done, the task of the judges will soon become impossible. The Festival movement, like everything that has grown very rapidly, is open to risks. Not the least of these dangers is that brought about by a programme so congested as to make it impossible for judges to do the most important part of their work—the oral adjudication. The result is to defraud the audiences of a valuable educative feature, and to lay the judges open to ill-informed and ill-natured attacks of the type printed above.

Harvey Grace.
W. R. Anderson.

Jersey.—An Eisteddfod began on Monday, October 26, and lasted throughout the week. All kinds of musical competitions were held, including one for wind instruments in which the competitors could choose their own instrument. The adjudicator had to decide between players on the flute, cornet, and accordion. In the three chief choral competitions (male, female, and mixed voices) the 'Mayo' Choir, conducted by Mr. W. Morley Powell, carried everything. The Lieut.-Governor attended the final concert on October 31.

Keighley.—The 'Summerscales' competitions, held for the twenty-eighth time on October 31 and November 7, were again a choral festival of considerable importance, and produced some keen competitions of a high standard. In the open mixed-voice and male-voice classes there was little to choose between the two best choirs. These were as follows: Mixed-voice: 1st, York Old Priory (Mr. J. H. Forster); 2nd, Bradford Philharmonic (Mr. E. S. Hird). Male-voice: 1st, Colne Orpheus Glee Union (Mr. Luther Greenwood); 2nd, Greetland Vocal Union (Mr. H. Shepley). Elementary Schools sang Morley's 'When, lo, by break' and Armstrong Gibbs's 'Five Eyes.' Utley Council School (Mr. F. Linsey), Thornton Council School, (Mr. E. G. Ellison), and Drummond Road Girls, Bradford, were awarded 180, 179, and 178 marks respectively.

LEICESTER.—This two days' Festival (October 9 and 10) is making good progress in every way, especially in the matter of finance. During the last six years it has provided £800 for charities. The chief choral awards went to Cheslyn Hay Male Choir, Swadlincote Ladies, and Swadlincote Glee Singers, and the first-named won the Challenge Bowl for the best choral singing of the Festival. Leicester Oriana and Nottingham Philharmonic were second and third in the mixed-voice competition.

MEXBOROUGH.—This Festival, held in October for the eighth time, has a normal two-days' programme and a steady following. Kilnhurst Choral Society (female voices), Birdwell (male voices), and Swinton P.M. (mixed) were at the head of the choral competitors, and Barnborough Colliery (Mr. W. Williams) sent the best full orchestra and string orchestra. Mr. Cameron Hall, tenor soloist, won a gold medal, and great praise as an artist.

NOTTINGHAM —The twenty-third Festival at Nottingham (October 29, 30, 31) had a record entry—nearly a hundred increase on that of 1924, and well over a thousand more competitors. Happily the up-grade was in quality as well as quantity. Various challenge shields were won by Kettering Gleemen, Mr. W. Turner's Ladies' Choir, and Priory Place Wesleyan Choir. In the class for mixed choirs up to sixty voices the tests were Coleridge-Taylor's 'Dead in the Sierras' and Bantock's 'Jack and Joan,' and the result as follows: 1st, Kettering (Mr. S. Roughton); 2nd, William Woolley Choral Society, Nottingham; 3rd, Leicester Oriana (Mr. A. C. Nichols); 4th, Doncaster Choral Union (Mr. S. W. Casey). The work of the schools won high praise from Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, and the choral work was described by Mr. Harvey Grace as being second to none in his experience in regard to beauty of tone and expressive quality. The singing of the massed choirs, male, female, and mixed voices, on the Saturday evening, under the admirable direction of Mr. Charles Riley, was the best of answers to those who contend that massed performances are mere 'scratch' affairs. That the large audience felt otherwise was shown by its finding six massed items too few; it demanded and got an encore from the male-voice choirs, whose singing of Vaughan Williams's 'Bushes and Briers' was something one will not easily forget. Mr. Spencer Dyke, Mr. Frederick Dawson, and Mr. T. F. Dunhill judged the solo and chamber-music classes.

PLYMOUTH.—This Festival (October 26-28) is arranged by the Plymouth Centre of the British Music Society, and all the test-pieces are by British composers. Over fifty contests were held. Choirs came from various parts of Cornwall, and there was a notable increase in the entries of church choirs.

WALLASEY.—Competitors came to the Wallasey Festival (October 7-10) from Liverpool, Bootle, Ansdell, Lytham, Blackpool, Crewe, Macclesfield, Scunthorpe, Huddersfield, and Hull. Seven choirs sang Parry's 'There is an Old Belief,' James Lyon's 'Marry me, Mary Veen,' and Balfour Gardiner's 'Cargoes' in the chief mixed-voice class. Altrincham P.M. Choir (Mr. J. A. Hill) won the shield for the third time in succession (the fourth time altogether), and returned it to the Festival. The second and third choirs were Douglas Festival Choir (Mr. Noah Moore), and Oldham Choral Union (Mr. H. Hannam). Prize-winners in the solo-singing classes competed for a rose-bowl. Miss Evelyn Bury, of Bolton, the soprano, won the trophy with full marks.

The list of Choral Society programmes for the 1925-26 season in our November issue inadvertently omitted reference to the London Choral Society. We learn that in addition to the Mozart C minor Mass, announced for the first concert, November 25 (too late for notice in this number), the Society will give on February 10 a programme of unaccompanied music (Bach's 'Be not afraid' and 'Now shall the Grace,' and many modern examples), and on April 21 the first performance of a new work by Bantock, 'Song of Songs.'

CROYDON TRIENNIAL FESTIVAL

Croydon is privileged in two ways. It has a group of musicians at hand who understand the ways and means and artistic standards of festival performance; and it has a large Parish Church and a large public hall in which performers and audiences can meet in large numbers. Everything has long been ready for a Festival, and a Festival has at length arrived. Croydon thus rises in the musical scale, but only triennially.

The Festival opened on Armistice night at the Parish Church. Elgar's 'For the Fallen' was performed as a prologue to 'Elijah.' A good choir and a very good orchestra, led by Mr. W. H. Reed, were conducted by Mr. H. Leslie-Smith. On the following evening the choir sang Coleridge-Taylor's 'Meg Blane' at the Baths Hall, under Mr. H. L. Balfour. The rest of the programme was varied, and the number of festival conductors was brought up to eight. The Borough has reason to be very well satisfied with its first venture, and it may be added that the Borough officials—Mayors, Aldermen, and Councillors—were active in helping it along.

Music in the Provinces

ALNWICK.—The London String Quartet played at the British Music Society's second concert on November 5, the programme including Waldo Warner's 'Fairy Suite.' It was announced that the number of members and associates had increased by fifty this season.

BANBURY.—The Banbury and District Musical Society having sold fifty fewer serial tickets than last year, the first concert, on October 20, was a rebuke to the deserters, for Mr. Adrian C. Boult brought the Birmingham City Orchestra and played the Beethoven Septet, a Bach Suite for flute and strings, Mozart's G minor Symphony, and Parry's 'Lady Radnor's Suite.' Mr. Harold Samuel is coming to play on December 15, and the Buda-Pesth Quartet later on.

BEDFORD.—The 'Cockaigne' Overture, the 'New World' Symphony, and a Bach Concerto for two violins were played at the Musical Society's concert on November 3. Mr. Herbert J. Colson is hon. conductor.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—Owing to the unsafe condition of Birmingham Town Hall, the concerts of the month have been housed chiefly in Central Hall, a building ill-suited to the needs of the usual concert audience, but possessing keen acoustics. Vaughan Williams's 'London' Symphony was heard here at the second Symphony concert of the season by the City Orchestra. It occupied the whole of the second half of the programme. If many members of the audience thought it too long, that was probably the fault of the composer, whose ideas do not seem big enough for such lengthy treatment. The fault did not lie with the performance, which was a fine one in every musical way. In the same programme an orchestrated version of an Octet for strings by Mendelssohn was given. Mr. Arthur Catterall played Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 5, in A, very beautifully, and Mr. Adrian C. Boult conducted.—— At one of the Sunday night concerts Franck's Symphony was given. Unfortunately, Mr. Boult missed the note of exaltation which is so essential to a right hearing of the work. Without this, good playing goes for nothing. At a later concert Elgar's 'In the South' was the novelty of the programme. The performance was excellent in every way; especially noteworthy was the beautiful little melody for the viola. Haydn's 'Military' Symphony and Berlioz's 'Roman Carnival' were also given. Miss Rebe Hillier sang two of Elgar's 'Sea Pictures,' as well as a song by Gordon Bryan called 'Silver Point.'——Dupont's Quintet found its way into the Mid-day concerts, played by the Philharmonic String Quartet, with Miss Mary Abbott at the pianoforte. Dvorák's 'Nigger' Quartet was heard on another occasion, and at a later date Elgar's Quintet was given by the Philharmonic Pianoforte Quartet. To any to whom Elgar's music makes a strong appeal the performance was a joy from beginning to end. The slow movement in particular was beautifully played.——A concert by the Catterall Quartet, on November 11, proved one of the most enjoyable we have listened to for a long time. The programme consisted of three works by Brahms: Trio in A minor for clarinet, pianoforte, and 'cello; the Quartet in A minor, Op. 51; and the Quintet for clarinet and strings, in B minor. Miss Beatrice Hewitt was at the pianoforte and Mr. Harry Mortimer played the clarinet parts. All the works were beautifully interpreted, especially the last named, in which Mr. Mortimer's clarinet-playing was something to marvel at and to remember.——The first of two 'Recitals Intimes' was given on November 13, by Mr. Leonard Rayner. His programme included Schumann's 'Faschingsschwank,' Franck's Prelude, Aria, and Finale, and two pieces by Liszt.——At an 'international celebrity' concert on November 30, Heifetz gave a recital. He played Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' Sonata, a Bach Chaconne, and several smaller pieces.——Schumann and Beethoven figured in a programme given by Backhaus on October 29. Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Paganini were also played.——In our report last month of the City Orchestra's first Symphony Concert the programme given, though it purported to be complete, omitted mention of an important novelty—a Suite of six original pieces by Byrd, arranged for orchestra by Gordon Jacob.

BLACKBURN.—Recent musical events include a very successful five-days' choral Festival by Blackburn Schools, arranged by the Education Committee, and the embracing of Tetrazzini by Pachmann on a concert-platform.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The winter Symphony concerts, given by the Municipal Orchestra under Sir Dan Godfrey, opened with Kallinnikov's G minor Symphony and Palmgren's Pianoforte Concerto, 'The River,' played by M. Victor Schioler.——Sir Dan Godfrey was lecturer at Miss Julette Folville's harpsichord and pianoforte recital on October 28.——On the following day Mr. Lloyd Powell played Stanford's C minor Pianoforte Concerto.

BRADFORD.—St. George's Hall has changed hands, and it seems doubtful whether the building will be available for concerts after this season. If the use of it is withheld, the Subscription concerts, the Permanent Orchestra, the Festival Choral Society, and the Old Choral Society will be without a home.——The first-named series opened on October 30, when the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Sir Hamilton Harty, played Enesco's 'Rumanian Rhapsody,' Dvorák's Symphonic Variations, Turiña's 'Procession du Rocio,' Brahms's 'Academic Festival' Overture, and, with Backhaus, Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte Concerto.——A scheme is on foot for a series of Sunday evening concerts.

BRIGHTON.—Mr. Ernest Grimshaw conducted a Wagner programme at the Regent on Sunday, October 18, with an orchestra of twenty and an organ.——The Brighton and Hove Harmonic Society will shortly be celebrating its centenary.

BURNLEY.—'King Olaf' was performed on October 25 under the auspices of the Symphony Orchestra and the Choir Committee, the principals being Miss Bella Baillie, Mr. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Roy Henderson.

CAMBORNE.—The Cornwall Symphony Orchestra, of more than forty string players and twenty others, played at St. George's Hall, Camborne, on Sunday, November 1, under the direction of Dr. Charles Rivers. The programme, which lasted well over two hours, included the third 'Leonora' Overture, the 'Scotch' Symphony, and Brahms's Violin Concerto, played by Mr. Harold Fairhurst. The performance was repeated at Truro on the next afternoon.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Cambridgeshire Council of Musical Education has appointed a Village Concerts Committee to send out concert parties from Cambridge to the villages of the county. The parties will include some of the best amateurs from the town, the county, and the University. The Council is also encouraging the formation of choral and orchestral societies. This season at least seven choral and two orchestral societies are being started on their way, and these and the older bodies are expected to take part in the competitive festival. The Council is doing what it can to provide conductors, music, and instruments. A fund for the purpose, to which subscriptions are invited, is administered by the Rev. B. Dennis Jones, Trinity College.

CHESTERFIELD.—The Manchester Wind Quintet played some out-of-the-way music by Pierné (a Pastorale), Pessard, Lefèvre, Sobeck, and Ludwig Thuillé (a Sextet, with Miss Ethel Cook at the pianoforte) at the first of the Stephenson Subscription concerts on October 6.

EASTBOURNE.—The third Festival of the Municipal Orchestra, held at Devonshire Park Winter Gardens on November 13-21, was a credit to Captain H. G. Amers and all who helped him. The orchestra of fifty-five met its heavy duties without much apparent difficulty, and some of its performances were of the highest merit. Three of the concerts were conducted by Sir Landon Ronald, Sir Hamilton Harty, and Sir Henry Wood respectively. The visiting composer-conductors, and the works that they directed, were as follows: Sir Edward Elgar ('Polonia,' 'Sea Pictures,' and 'Cockaigne'), Eric Coates (a new tone-poem, 'The Selfish Giant,' after Oscar Wilde), Gustav Holst (four of the 'Planets'), A. Brent-Smith (Symphony in G minor), Dame Ethel Smyth ('The Wood-spirits' Song,' for chorus and orchestra, from 'Der Wald'), Rutland Boughton ('The Cloud,' for female voices), Dr. Malcolm Sargent ('An Impression of a Windy Day'), and W. H. Reed ('Æsop's Fables'). Many well-known solo artists took part, and everything was done to make the Festival a popular as well as an artistic success.——Before the coming of the annual Festival, Capt. H. G. Amers and the Municipal Orchestra had already given six Symphony concerts. The Symphonies were Tchaikovsky's fifth, Beethoven's seventh, Glazounov's sixth, Schubert's C major, Mozart's G minor, and Rachmaninov's second. Each programme included a Concerto, and something else of particular interest.

EXETER.—The Oratorio Society, conducted by Mr. Allan Allen, opened its season with 'The Creation,' on November 4.

EXMOUTH.—Mr. A. Raymond Wilmot has started a series of 'Saturday Pops,' and has brought together the 'Exmouth Music-Makers' for the purpose. This title covers the Exmouth Orchestral Society, the Oriana Ladies' Choir, and the Exmouth Gleemen.

GUILDFORD.—The second of Mr. Claud Powell's orchestral subscription concerts took place on October 28, at the County and Borough Hall. The Symphony was Beethoven's eighth, Miss Ivy Parkin played the Symphonic Variations of Franck, and Mr. Maurice Blower conducted the first performance of his two pieces for small orchestra, 'March Landscape' and 'Bonfire.' At the third concert, on November 11, the programme included a Prelude and 'Derrybeg Fair,' by William Alwyn, and Nicholas Gatty's 'Old King Cole' Variations.

HANLEY.—The Stoke-on-Trent Choral Society brought the Léner Quartet to Hanley to take part in a recent concert. Schubert's Posthumous Quartet in D minor and Borodin's No. 2 were the visitors' share. The choir, under Mr. E. C. Redfern, sang Parry's 'There is an Old Belief,' Gerrard Williams's 'Whither runneth my sweetheart,' and Bach's 'I wrestle and pray.'

HARTLEPOOL.—A Folk-song Suite for strings, by Mr. Arthur J. Bull, was played at the Town Hall, West Hartlepool, at the first concert of the Symphony Orchestra on November 4. Mr. J. F. Chalmers Park conducted.

HASTINGS.—The winter season of orchestral concerts opened at the Pier Pavilion on October 31. Mr. Basil Cameron is the musical director, and a small and highly efficient orchestra is at his disposal. The most remarkable feature of the concerts is the price for admission. For the ordinary concerts the most expensive seat costs a shilling, but a season-ticket works out at just over a penny per concert. Over four hundred season-tickets have been sold.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The 'New World' Symphony and German's 'Richard III.' Overture were played at the opening concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, Mr. J. Fletcher Sykes being the conductor.——The A. W. Kaye Orchestra gave Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Smetana's 'Vltava,' and the B minor Violin Concerto of Saint-Saëns (with Miss Jane Marcus), on October 24.——Bruch's 'Morning Song of Praise,' Morley's 'I follow, lo, the footing,' and Julius Harrison's 'In the forest,' were in the excellent programme given by the Glee and Madrigal Society on October 27, under Dr. T. E. Pearson. The 'C.X. Quartet,' a Huddersfield party, sang to admiration, and Mr. Lionel Tertis took part in the concert with viola solos. ——A concert of exceptional interest was given by the Holme Valley Male-Voice Choir, at the Town Hall, on November 7, under Mr. Irving Silverwood. Boughton, Bantock, Vaughan Williams, Walford Davies, and Holst were among the names in the programme.

HULL.—Four Hull choirs were heard within eight days. The Male-Voice Choir (Mr. Edgar T. Sales) sang a programme largely made up of Elgar on October 31; the Vocal Society (Dr. Coward) gave the whole of 'Hiawatha' with a good orchestra on November 4; the Ladies' Musical Union (Miss Eleanor Coward) sang Schubert's 'God in Nature' and a number of three-part songs on the same evening; and on November 7 part-songs were given by the Musical Union (Mr. Edward Stubbs).

IPSWICH.—Four organizations are at work giving music to the town: the Orchestral Society, which has been preparing a good programme under Mr. E. R. Wilby for performance on November 25; the new Chamber Music Society, which brought the Wilson Quartet from London to play Haydn, Beethoven, and Schubert at its first concert; the Choral Society, which opened its season with 'The Messiah,' under Mr. W. H. Dixon; and the Municipal Concerts, which employed the Choral Society and its conductor on November 4, for a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast.'

KEIGHLEY.—The Keighley and District Choral Society has ceased to exist, owing to lack of public support.

LEEDS.—The Town Hall was well filled for the Saturday evening concert on October 17, when Mr. Julius Harrison conducted the 'Pathetic' Symphony, Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un Faune,' the 'Perfect Fool' Ballet Music, the 'Hänsel and Gretel' Prelude, and a Hungarian Rhapsody.

LEICESTER.—A fine concert opened the Symphony Orchestra's season on October 22. Dr. Malcolm Sargent, who has had the orchestra in hand for three seasons, conducted Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Capriccio Espagnole,' and, with M. Cortôt playing, Schumann's Concerto and Franck's Symphonic Variations. Dame Ethel Smyth's 'Boatswain's Mate' Overture was given under the composer's personal direction.——With the same orchestra Dr. Sargent conducted a Haydn Symphony at a Sunday evening concert on November 1.

LIVERPOOL.—One of the best concerts of the season has been given by the Hallé Orchestra, which came to Philharmonic Hall on October 27. Sir Hamilton Harty conducted the 'King Lear' Overture of Berlioz, Strauss's 'Don Juan,' the 'Enigma Variations,' and the Grieg Pianoforte Concerto, the solo part being played on the Duo-art player-piano from a record made by Miss Myra Hess.——Weingartner conducted the Philharmonic concert in November. The programme included Brahms's third Symphony, the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny.'——The season of the Rodewald Concert Society opened on October 19 with a visit by the Brussels Quartet. ——A number of recitals have been given by the eminent.

MAIDSTONE.—The Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent, gave Maidstone a splendid concert at the Corn Exchange early in November. The programme included Beethoven's second Symphony, de Falla's 'El Amor Brujo' Suite, Delius's 'On hearing the first cuckoo in spring,' and Mozart's fifth Violin Concerto in A, with Miss Marie Wilson as soloist.

MALVERN.—Quartets of Elgar, Grieg, and Beethoven (Op. 132, in A minor) were played by the Brodsky Quartet at the first concert of the season held by the Malvern Concert Club.

MANCHESTER.—There are several indications that the present winter season will witness the re-establishment of our musical life on a full pre-war basis—in one respect indeed, that of municipally-provided orchestral music, on a basis much in advance of pre-war standard. The series projected this winter is subsidised from the City rates to the extent of £1,500, and the concerts already given have been on a more ambitious scale than even a year ago. Whether the primary object of attracting from among the masses those who are unable to afford the prices charged for the regular orchestral concerts run under Hallé or Brand Lane auspices will be realised, can only be proved in this definite try-out of a fine idealistic policy. There is a shrewd commonsense view widely prevalent that folk value more a thing which really costs them something to attain; opposed to this is the view that the finest music, books, and art should be 'on tap,' so to speak, as easily as Thirlmere water for those who desire them. Where is the line to be drawn? Here, at any rate, we seem to stop short of city-aided opera. Even its warmest advocates admit that housing, sanitation, and a host of other expensive post-war schemes claim precedence, and until the essentials of a decent physical life are abundantly provided, with what sincerity can even a musical enthusiast advocate support from rates for what we know to be within the enjoyment only of comparatively few? Which brings us to the heroic endeavour of the B.N.O.C. in drafting a three-weeks' programme of the big grand operas—'Tristan,' 'Meistersinger,' 'Otello,' as well as the 'Ring' dramas without cuts. And the Company had to face the competition of 'Nanette' and 'Rose Marie'—the former ending and the latter commencing a longish run; houses booked solid for both. 'Tristan' and 'Coq d'Or' both played to not more than respectable houses; 'Meistersinger' distinctly better; the 'Ring' dramas, spread over six evenings, best in 'Rheingold,' but still not 'sold out' by a long way. Here clearly was a challenge to the champions of light opera. The B.N.O.C. has made a loss, whilst 'Nanette' and 'Rose Marie'—quite good of their class—show a decent margin. This is quite as baffling in its way as was the Covent Garden Syndicate's tabulated list issued a few days ago. It is impossible in the December issue to comment with full knowledge upon the æsthetic aspects of a redistribution of dramatic climax brought about by the subdivision of the 'Ring' sequence into six performances. In this country no experience of this has been available so far, although it has in Germany—the one thing that can here be authoritatively said about the B.N.O.C. Wagner performances ('Tristan,' 'Meistersinger,' and, up to now, 'Rheingold' and Acts 1 and 2 of 'Walküre') is that there is not a solitary weak spot in the casts of 'Tristan' and the 'Ring,' and that the revelations of unsuspected resources in the case of Miss Brunskill, Miss Constance Willis, and several younger male singers are positively startling. But more of this in January. Until this winter also we have never had the opportunity, afforded by the Léner group, of hearing all the Beethoven Quartets. Mr. Edward Isaacs, who introduced the Léner players in this Beethoven Quartet Festival, once again revealed that strain of adventurous sanity which has so frequently characterised his work in this city. I am inclined to rank this event alongside Manchester's first experience of the 'Ring' dramas in their entirety years ago, as a definite stage in the journey towards a fuller musical experience. It seems well-nigh incredible that a community that knows its Beethoven Symphonies backwards, so to speak, should have waited until now for the fuller Quartet revelation. The gradual increase in the Léner audiences was a notable feature, and I cannot refrain from suggesting that it was very probably influenced by our gramophone experiences, say with the great C sharp minor, which led people to hear them in the flesh. The visits of this group have lent an added interest to the appearances of the Catterall players, whose schemes have this year forsaken Beethoven, retaining a superb Brahms evening (January 13 next) and including a good half-dozen works representative of contemporary art. Mr. Leonard Hirsch (another Brodsky pupil) replaces Mr. John Bridge, now preoccupied with the Hallé Orchestra leadership. The Catterall style may be said to have been grafted on the Mozart stock, and both the strength of the shoot and its full efflorescence were strongly evidenced at the opening concert devoted to Mozart. Armstrong Gibbs's E minor Miniaturesque and Dale's Suite for viola and pianoforte were both welcome novelties at the second concert. Thus far we have had no orchestral music save two municipal concerts and the first three Hallés. Attendance at Blackpool Festival kept me from hearing a great Brahms C minor Symphony reading, more opulent than ever now that the Hallé band is playing a hundred strong. On my return from the U.S.A in November, 1919, I shall never forget the feelings of artistic shame that our fine band should be restricted to about eighty, whilst the Americans luxuriated in a hundred minimum and anything up to a hundred and twenty as need arose. It is good to have the old Richter standard of string balance restored, and to hear the steady, solid tramp of the basses in Bach. But size is not all gain, as we felt in the Haffner and Haydn Symphonies, and still more when the players accompanied Suggia in a Haydn Concerto or Cortôt in the Schumann Concerto. Probably the nimbleness and lightness of spring will not come from the increased numbers this side of the New Year, but when they have 'bedded down' we should get some playing calculated to raise our rather mild self-esteem.

Although Richter conducted Berlioz's 'Requiem' at Birmingham, and Balling did it at Leeds and (I think) Bradford, strangely enough neither of these conductors during their Manchester reigns ever performed it here, and it has remained for Harty's well-known and widely-recognised Berlioz enthusiasm to secure the choral, orchestral, and brass-wind co-ordination necessary for its first performance here on a festival scale. In the February Musical Times I wrote of the supremely artistic work now being done by the Besses o' th' Barn Brass Band, under the guidance of that great tuba-player Mr. Harry Barlow, who plays in the Hallé band. The timpani were finely placed, and the separate groups of Besses brass occupied the ends of galleries rising above the orchestra. In a thirty years' experience of Hallé choral concerts, I recall no occasion of a 'first performance' so well conceived and executed. Climatic conditions hardly made for ideally pure intonation; this apart, the choral handling was splendidly secure, and as expressive in the full sense as I ever expect to hear from an English choir singing a Latin text, which appears to be (yet ought not) a permanent disability. The superb technique and tone-production of the Besses o' th' Barn men made the 'Tuba Mirum' climax one of true grandeur, the rolling timpani lending a solemn majesty to the whole; and the choral bass forces being at full strength too, we had the unique experience of massed sonorities which imagination often conjures up but experience rarely realises. Much the same may be written of the majestic achievement in the 'Rex Tremendæ.' After these appeals of mass production, after all due to the architectonic strain in Berlioz's make-up, and by no means peculiar to him, we got at the much greater genius of the man in the unaccompanied 'Quærens me' and the succeeding 'Lacrymosa'—these for me constituting the real emotional appeal of the work. Too often in the other sections the amateurishness of Berlioz is greatly in evidence. Those flutes in altissimo and trombones (eight of them) most profound, recurring so frequently in the course of the 'Hostias,' may have been imaginative in conception, but are the direst of failures in result. Again, what conviction is conveyed in the 'Sanctus' save that of sugary prettiness—the very negation of all that the text conveys. Or take the beginning of the 'Agnus Dei,' where long-held wood-wind chords dissolve into echo-chords in the violas—that is a device to be heard at the hands of any organist with chords on Great and Swell, then cutting off the Great. The Mass presents in its acutest form the eternal Berlioz enigma—unparalleled vastness of conception; the vision of a Michel Angelo; sublimity one moment and most trivial commonplace the next. The appalling pretentiousness of Glazounov's 'Kremlin' for orchestra and brass band, which followed the Berlioz, must be heard to be believed. What would be thought of a young British musician who served up such stuff? If only those gorgeous-toned brass instruments had been utilised in, say, the Valhalla music or Siegfried's Death March, what memories would have been ours! C. H.

NEWCASTLE.—The 'Pathetic' Symphony opened the orchestral season. It was played by the Philharmonic Orchestra at the Palace Theatre, Mr. Edgar L. Bainton conducting.——The Glee and Madrigal Society gave its third concert on October 14, singing part-songs and madrigals, under Mr. J. R. Liddell.——The Bach Choir held an Orlando Gibbons celebration on November 7. The madrigals, sung under Dr. Whittaker's direction, were 'Fair ladies,' 'Nay, let me weep,' 'I weigh not fortune's frown,' and 'How art thou thralled.' Two Fantasias for viols were played by the string orchestra.

NORWICH.—At the first four Municipal concerts the principal works performed were the 'Unfinished' Symphony, Holst's first Suite in E flat, Mackenzie's 'Rule, Britannia' Overture, and Boëllmann's 'Fantaisie Dialoguée' for organ and orchestra, in which Mr. Maddern Williams, the conductor-in-chief of the series, played the organ part, and Mr. Edmund Weeks conducted.——A dozen string players, brought together by Mr. Cyril Pearce, recently gave the following programme: two Fantasias in F, by Orlando Gibbons, Bach's fifth 'Brandenburg' Concerto (with a pianoforte), a Haydn Symphony in D, arranged for strings, and three Folk-Dances by Rutland Boughton. Miss Annie Callis sang songs in keeping.

NOTTINGHAM.—Mr. Harold Samuel talked as well as played to the Nottingham Music Club on October 22, and gave the audience in all two hours of, and about, Bach. ——The programme of the opening concert of the Municipal Orchestra included Beethoven's eighth Symphony.

OLDHAM.—The Musical Society opened its season with 'Elijah,' under the direction of Mr. Ernest Craig.

PAINSWICK.—On October 31 Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse gave a harpsichord recital to the Painswick Music Club.

PETERBOROUGH.—Over three thousand people attended the pianoforte recital given at the Cathedral, on October 20, by Backhaus, in aid of Peterborough Infirmary.

PORTSMOUTH.—Seventeen Free Church choirs sent singers to form a chorus of four hundred and fifty at the Town Hall on October 20. The conductors were Mr. T. E. Plater and Mr. A. E. Labdon. The music included Elgar's 'How calmly the evening' and Shaw's 'Worship.'——The 'Pathetic' Symphony was played by the Royal Marines Orchestra, under Lieut. O'Donnell, at a Municipal concert on October 24.——The sixth year of Major Bullin's chamber concerts opened in the presence of eight hundred people on November 2, when the programme included Hurlstone's Pianoforte Quartet in E minor.

READING.—The British Women's Symphony Orchestra paid a visit to University College on November 4. Beethoven's second Symphony, the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Parry's 'Lady Radnor's Suite' were played under Mr. W. Probert Jones. Miss Eveline Fife conducted the 'Hebrides' Overture.

ROCHDALE.—Mr. Fred Leach conducted the 'New World' Symphony at the opening concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra.——The artists for the first of the Rochdale Chamber concerts were Miss Jelly d'Aranyi and Miss Myra Hess.——An excellent programme was given by Mr. George W. Gaythorpe and an orchestra of twenty-five at Champness Hall on October 31.

ROTHERHAM.—The 'Keltic Suite' of J. H. Foulds and the 'Unfinished' Symphony were played at the Hippodrome on Sunday, November 1, by the orchestra of the Rotherham Musicians' Union, under Mr. Breakwell.

ST. ALBANS. — Mr. Claud Powell, whose series of orchestral concerts at Guildford has become well-known, has arranged a similar series at St. Albans, the first of which took place at the Grand Palace Cinema on October 20. Mr. Powell conducted the 'Pathetic' Symphony and, with Madame Fachiri as soloist, the Mendelssohn Violin Concerto, and Dame Ethel Smyth conducted her own Overtures to 'Entente Cordiale' and 'The Wreckers.' There was an audience of a thousand.

SALISBURY.—The Wyndham Choral Society of fifty voices, with a small orchestra, gave Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' and 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' under Miss Ethel Martin's direction, at Victoria Hall, on November 4. The women's voices of the choir contributed part-songs by Armstrong Gibbs, Frank Bridge, and Stanford.

SCARBOROUGH.—The concert version of 'Tannhäuser' was performed at the Spa, on November 4, by the Musical Society, assisted by the Leeds Symphony Orchestra. Mr. A. C. Keeton conducted.

SHEFFIELD.—The Five o'Clock concerts arranged by the Misses Foxon are to take place on various Wednesdays during the winter. A selection from 'Hugh the Drover' was given on November 4, in anticipation of the coming first performance of the opera at Sheffield by the B.N.O.C. ——The University Musical Society has arranged four concerts to be given by the Yorkshire String Quartet. At the first, on November 6, McEwen's 'Biscay' Quartet was played.——The Sheffield Musical Union opened its Jubilee season on November 12, with Dame Ethel Smyth's Mass, selections from Rutland Boughton's 'Bethlehem,' and 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'

STOCKPORT.—The Vocal Union opened its fifty-third season with an Elgar evening, under Dr. T. Keighley's direction. The choir sang eight part-songs, including 'Go, song of mine' and 'The Shower.'

TORQUAY.—At the first Symphony concert of the season, Mr. Ernest Goss conducted Beethoven's first Symphony and a new work by Dr. Harold Rhodes entitled 'Tor and Cleave.'——Dr. Rhodes is giving six pianoforte recitals at the Pavilion during the season.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The trilogy of 'Hiawatha' was performed by the Tunbridge Wells Choral Society, under Mr. Francis Foote, on November 4. The band was composed entirely of players from Queen's Hall Orchestra.

WALSALL.—With the assistance of the '5IT' Orchestra from Birmingham, the Philharmonic Society gave 'Judas Maccabæus' on October 29, under Mr. Joseph Lewis.—— Mr. Graham Godfrey is now director of the Walsall Institute of Music, Mr. Joseph Yates having retired.

YORK.—The city enjoyed an exceptional privilege when the Hallé Orchestra came and gave a concert under Sir Hamilton Harty's direction. The works played included Beethoven's seventh Symphony and Delius's 'Brigg Fair.'

CENTENARY OF SIR ROBERT STEWART

BORN DECEMBER 16, 1825

In its long roll of chief musicians, Christ Church (Holy Trinity) Cathedral, Dublin, can boast of such names as John Farmer (madrigalist), Thomas Bateson, Randall Jewitt, Daniel Roseingrave, Richard Woodward, Samuel Murphy, Dr. Frank Robinson, and others, but it is doubtful if any of her organists gave such long and faithful service as Sir Robert Prescott Stewart. For almost sixty years, as boy chorister and organist, he gave of his best to the Church, and now rests in the Musicians' Corner of the Cathedral in the western end of the aisle adjoining the Baptistry, next to Woodward and Stevenson.

Born at Dublin, on December 16, 1825, Stewart was a boy chorister in Christ Church Cathedral from 1835 to 1841. In 1836 he wrote a Service in B flat, and won a third prize for an anthem in 1838. He studied under Dr. Frank Robinson and John Robinson, succeeding the latter, in 1844, as organist of the Cathedral, and as organist of Trinity College Chapel. In 1846 he married Miss Mary S. Browne, of Sligo, and in the same year became conductor of Dublin University Choral Society. Five years later he accumulated the degrees of Mus. B. and Mus. D. of Dublin University, and in 1852 was appointed organist and vicar-choral of St. Patrick's Cathedral, still retaining his post at Christ Church.

Between the years 1846 and 1851 he composed many part-songs and glees, including 'The Dream' and 'The Haymakers' Song' (which gained the Novello prizes in 1850 and 1851), and, in 1852, his Inaugural Ode for the Cork Exhibition was much admired. His best-known work is, however, the cantata, 'The Eve of St. John,' produced by Dublin University Choral Society, on April 12, 1861, and reproduced by Stanford, at Cambridge, in 1872. Stewart never courted the limelight, and allowed some of his best compositions to lie in obscurity. As a fact, this last emotional, beautiful work for nine solo voices, chorus, and orchestra was not published till 1884. At least four of his charming odes—including an 'Ode to Shakespeare,' composed for the Birmingham Festival of 1870—have disappeared, as has also his orchestral 'Fantasia on Irish Airs,' for the great Peace Festival at Boston, in 1872. Prior to this date he had composed half-a-dozen arrangements for the Dublin Glee and Madrigal Union, including 'The Bells of St. Michael's Tower,' 'The Wine Cup is Circling,' and 'The Cruiskeen Lawn.' A delightful specimen of his work is his arrangement of the Danish Volkslied, 'Fair Daughter of the Sea King' (April 12, 1885).

In 1861 Stewart was appointed Professor of Music in the University of Dublin, and in 1872 he was knighted by Earl Spencer. In 1873 he was appointed conductor of the Dublin Philharmonic Society, and in 1875 was prevailed on to accept the conductorship of the Belfast Philharmonic Society. In the following year (1876) he edited the Irish 'Church Hymnal,' and in 1888 he composed the 'The Breastplate of St. Patrick'—a sacred cantata for bass solo, quartet, and chorus. His 'Ode for the Tercentenary Festival of Trinity College, Dublin,' performed on July 5, 1892, was, as the late Provost (the Rev. Sir John P. Mahaffy, Mus. D.) assured me, a hasty substitution for Henry Purcell's Centenary Ode (1692), which was originally intended to have been performed, but the score of which could not be obtained at the time. (Two Irishmen, Tate and Purcell, had been asked to collaborate in the Centenary Ode.) His last work was for the 'Church of England Hymnal,' edited by Dr. Mann, in 1894. He passed away on March 24, 1894.

Distinguished, however, as Stewart was in the domain of cantatas, glees, and Church services, he achieved a greater reputation as an organist and extemporiser, and as a lecturer. To his credit must be placed the inclusion of a literary test for musical degrees at Trinity College, an example which was afterwards followed at Cambridge University.

Ireland has not been unmindful of Sir Robert Stewart's great services, for, in addition to a fine portrait by Sir T. A. Jones, in the Royal Irish Academy of Music, there is a noble statue of him on Leinster Lawn, Dublin (unveiled by Earl Cadogan, Lord Lieutenant, in 1898), and in 1896 the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church Cathedral placed a beautiful memorial brass, with a suitable inscription, in the Musicians' Corner.

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

Musical Notes from Abroad

NEW YORK

The orchestral season was opened by the Philharmonic, which is as it should be, for it is by far the oldest instrumental combination in America and the second oldest in the world. Since Mengelberg became one of its conductors he had previously directed the last half of the season, but this year he has come for the first half, opening with Bach's Suite in B minor, No. 2. At the Stadium concerts given this summer each of the four conductors played Strauss's 'Don Juan,' and one played it twice! Perhaps Mengelberg regarded it as a challenge, for this composition took second place on his first programme. It was interesting to the veteran concert-goer to listen to the five interpretations of the tone-poem, and a very pleasant duty to be able to praise them all, the little differences attracting attention but never proving offensive to catholic taste.

There was a time when almost every orchestra opened its season with a Beethoven Symphony, but the fashion has become obsolete, and Brahms seems to have usurped the place of the former. Mengelberg chose the second, while Stokowsky (the Philadelphia Orchestra following the Philharmonic Orchestra in five days) selected the third Symphony. The visiting organization also began with Bach, presenting an orchestral transcription of the chorale prelude 'Wir glauben all' an einen Gott.'

For a novelty Stokowsky played Gustav Holst's 'Japanese Suite,' written for the Japanese dancer Michio Ito, who appeared in it at the London Coliseum in 1910. Later it was performed as a concert suite at Queen's Hall, and last year the Philadelphia Orchestra played the work at Philadelphia. The themes (almost all of them provided by Michio Ito himself) are Japanese, but the construction of the Suite is not, and it would probably interest us more in ballet form than in concert guise. Following his predecessors faithfully, Ernst Dohnànyi also introduced Brahms on the opening night of the State Symphony series, playing the first Symphony. The critics were much divided on the question of Dohnànyi's merit as a conductor. The orchestra is crude compared with either the Philharmonic or the Philadelphia, and perhaps it was not fair to be too severe on his Brahms, but those who predicted that he would do better in the Schubert in C at his second concert were doomed to disappointment, for the roughness of the players was more than ever in evidence. The great success of the evening was that of Lucrezia Bori, and it would be difficult to say which she sang best—her aria from 'The Marriage of Figaro' or 'Depuis le Jour.' She is a delightful artist either in opera or on the concert stage, always giving her audiences immense pleasure. Mozart and Charpentier seem equally well suited to her voice and style.

At the second Philharmonic, Mengelberg brought out Alfredo Casella as pianist and composer, who contributed a suite from the ballet 'La Giara,' and a Partita for pianoforte and orchestra, both labelled 'first time.' The Partita did not give prominence enough to the pianoforte part for us to place the composer as a pianist, and neither composition showed any great originality. If one deplored this at the Philharmonic, one was almost reconciled at the second concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, when Stokowsky played Casella's orchestral setting of Balakirev's 'Islamey.' Naturally, with his talent for plagiarism, Casella did not confine himself to Balakirev in this most brilliant and effective piece of scoring. It was evidently the intention of the adapter to use the work of other composers, and the effects were so startling that one marvels why Casella tries to compose instead of giving himself complete freedom for his wonderful gift of combining the ideas of others.

At the first concert of the New York Symphony, Damrosch played Saint-Saëns's Symphony in C minor, but the orchestral event of the evening was the production for the first time at New York of Charles Martin Loeffler's 'Memories of my Childhood.' When a boy, Loeffler spent more than three years of his life in a Russian village, and he tries to express in the music the memory of those happy days. Russian peasant songs, fairy-tales, and dance-songs follow the opening, suggesting a quiet village and the sound of distant bells. Towards the end the Volga boat song is heard, and again the clanging of the bells, which dies away into silence. It is very beautiful music, and may be slightly reminiscent of Moussorgsky, but never of Stravinsky. Lawrence Tibbett, the young Californian baritone who made such a pronounced success at the Metropolitan last winter, followed the Loeffler work in a group of Moussorgsky's songs. The programme was repeated a few days afterwards at the opening of the new Mecca Auditorium. Damrosch at his third concert played Brahms's fourth Symphony, thus completing the cycle of the Symphonies in two weeks.

The usual flood of recitals is already engulfing us—the two most worthy of mention being those of Florence Easton and Elizabeth Rethberg. We are indeed fortunate to have these two singers with us year after year.

The Metropolitan Opera House opened its doors with 'La Giaconda.' An old opera is always chosen for the first night, and if there is any system in the idea it seems to me that of giving the various prominent singers their turn. This was the first time Rosa Ponselle opened the house. The first week also gave us a performance of 'Pelléas and Mélisande,' so exquisitely produced in the latter part of last season, and at the first matinée Lawrence Tibbett scored another success in Ravel's 'L'Heure Espagnole.'

Old Steinway Hall is no more. The auditorium where Dickens read, Patti sang, and Rubinstein played, was long ago turned into warerooms, but now the building is abandoned and a very beautiful new one has been erected in 57th Street. There has been an immense reception where every person prominent in the musical life of New York was present, and three dedicatory concerts in the small hall where the most prominent resident professionals performed. It is luxurious also everywhere in every detail, as a 20th-century building should be, but will the names and achievements associated with the old 'Steinways' of the 'fifties, 'sixties, and 'seventies ever be rivalled?

M. H. FLINT.

TORONTO

It speaks well for choral music at Toronto that the two most famous organizations of their kind in Canada (some even whisper on the Continent) introduce and bow out the musical season. I allude, of course, to the Canadian National Exhibition chorus, of some seventeen hundred voices, which gives four concerts in the early autumn, and the Mendelssohn Choir, nearly four hundred strong, whose Festival usually falls in March, when most of the outstanding musical events are over.

This year about forty thousand people attended the performances of the larger chorus in the Coliseum. Dr. H. A. Fricker had prepared a more pretentious programme than ever, and the vast audiences were treated to choral singing on a scale unfamiliar to most present. As one critic pointed out, the scheme was 'eminently suited in magnitude alone to represent our vast Dominion.' The works chosen speak for themselves, and the glowing tributes of the press attested to the maintenance of a standard befitting a city which considers its Mendelssohn Choir the most valuable of its artistic assets. The programme was arranged as follows: Chorales, 'Break forth, O beauteous, heavenly light' (from the 'Christmas Oratorio'), 'In the Word of God enduring' (Bach); 'An Eriskay love lilt' (Roberton); Lullaby and Dance from the 'Bavarian Highlands' (Elgar); 'The Song of Victory' (Purcell); 'An Indian Lullaby' (Vogt); 'Old King Cole' (Forsyth); 'The long day closes' (Sullivan); 'Billy Boy' (arr. by Terry); 'John Peel' (arr. by Andrews); 'He gave them hailstones' (Handel); selections from Gilbert and Sullivan operas: Policeman's Chorus, 'Strange Adventure,' 'I have a song to sing, O,' 'A Cachucha,' Girls' chorus from 'The Gondoliers,' 'Three little maids,' 'Brightly dawns our wedding-day,' 'For he's gone and married Yum-yum.' The evening closed with 'Hail, Canada! Dominion of the North' (Murray) and 'Rule, Britannia!' The choir was accompanied by the Queen's Own Band, under Capt. R. B. Hayward.

Strange to relate, the first Massey Hall attraction proved to be the immortal Sousa, who, if he did not have much to offer the educated palate, certainly set a standard for purity of tone and balance of ensemble which, as far as experience goes, is unrivalled. Technically and tonally his huge band is without a flaw.

New York's first offering here was four Metropolitan Opera 'stars'—Frances Alda (soprano), Carolina Lazzari (contralto), Rafael Diaz (tenor), and Giovanni Martino (bass). Of course, operatic selections were in order, the most entertaining being a condensed version of Flotow's 'Martha,' given in costume. Jeritza, the great Viennese prima-donna, followed a week or so later in recital, but here, as also in the previous concert, one felt that operatic artists have not the same appeal on the concert-platform as on the stage, their art being definitely of the opera house. Shorn of scenic effects, the glamour of costume, and orchestra, they have neither tonal purity nor style for song interpretation.

Since Jeritza's appearance our own Symphony Orchestra has embarked upon its fourth season, and, judging by the size of the audiences at the first two concerts, the year should be an auspicious one in the annals of the organization. Toronto has had little orchestral education, and does not yet realise the value of the finest symphonic music. But Mr. Luigi von Kunits is a persevering man who has the loyal support of energetic colleagues, and business at last seems to be improving. The two programmes, which had much to commend them both in regard to performance and selection, contained Elgar's 'In the South' Overture, Goldmark's 'Sakuntala', Beethoven's fourth Symphony, 'Danse Macabre' (Saint-Saëns), the Tchaikovsky B flat Pianoforte Concerto, tastefully played by Ernest Seits, and a group of soprano numbers by Madame Dusseau—'Recit. et air de Lia,' from Debussy's 'L'Enfant Prodigue,' 'Widmung' Schumann), and 'Lament of Isis' (Bantock).

One other event of interest was the Convention of the Canadian Guild of Organists, held here in October. The new president for the year is Dr. H. A. Fricker, and Dr. Albert Ham has been honoured with life-membership. A number of well-planned meetings were held, recitals being given by prominent organists from Canada and the United States. Next month I shall be able to give some idea of Kussewitzky's work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As a rival to the great Stokowsky, the famous contra-bass-conductor is just now attracting much attention.

H. C. F.

VIENNA

THE JOHANN STRAUSS FESTIVAL

The outstanding event of the new season so far has been the celebration of the Johann Strauss centenary, which extended over a period of several weeks and culminated in various festivities on the jubilee day, October 25. Musical organizations, musicians, and government authorities vied in an effort to honour the memory of him who has finally come to be regarded not merely as a popular composer, but as a classic of a species of music which, though narrow in its realm, is infinite in its appeal alike to the musically cultured and to the broad masses. The latter, of course, have always been strongly for Strauss, even at a time when the professional critics still considered him untalented, and when a man of Eduard Hanslick's position sneeringly alluded to one of his waltzes as a 'Waltz Requiem,' and objected to the composer's 'heavy Lisztian chords,' 'Wagnerism,' and 'false pathos.' In the memory of the people, Strauss lives as a composer of innumerable beautiful waltzes and of two classic operettas, 'Der Zigeunerbaron' and 'Die Fledermaus'—the latter, by the way, was a dismal failure at its Vienna première. The popularity of his waltzes proved an obstacle to his operetta aspirations, and later his established fame as an operetta writer injured the realisation of his highest aim, i.e., to be recognised as a composer of grand opera. Strauss's one example, 'Knight Pazman,' was a failure at the Vienna Opera, and a sore disappointment to his own hopes.

The over-zealousness with which all concerned strove to do honour to Strauss's memory on his centenary day was perhaps subconsciously inspired by a desire to atone for old omissions. At any rate, no stone was left unturned to make the occasion a memorable event. Strauss concerts ruled in every concert-hall, and Strauss operettas in every Vienna theatre. The most notable of the concerts was that given by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, under Felix Weingartner, and at which both conductor and orchestra surpassed themselves in brilliance and enthusiasm. The Philharmonic Orchestra had previously paid homage to Strauss at one of its subscription concerts with a unique performance of the 'Beautiful Blue Danube'—the same Waltz which was a sad failure at its first performance and which meanwhile has become a true national hymn of Austria. To see it incorporated in a programme of the aristocratic Philharmonic would probably have been beyond the wildest hopes of its modest composer; and still more might he have marvelled at Weingartner's surprisingly lyrical, indeed rather melancholy, reading of the first part, and at the brilliant contrast afforded by his brisk tempi in the second part.

An interesting programme of rarely-heard Straussian music was offered at one of the Workers' Symphony concerts, under the direction of Felix Greissle (son-in-law of Arnold Schönberg), who made his public débût on this occasion. The programme comprised the hitherto unknown waltz, 'Fairy-tales from the Orient' (the Op. 444 of its prolific author), which arrested by its exotic colouring and interesting shadings of tempo and dynamics; the ballet from 'Knight Pazman,' beautifully danced by the Hellerau School, which has recently made its home at the ex-Imperial Castle of Laxenburg, near Vienna; and the burlesque polka, 'Liguorian Sigh,' Strauss's merry contribution to the 1848 Revolution and vetoed by the contemporary Austrian Government for political reasons, although the harmless and amusing character of the piece hardly seems to justify any anxiety. A rarity in the festival scheme was the performance at a local Church of one of Strauss's earliest compositions, a Graduale for four vocal parts and eight wind instruments. This youthful effort dates from his studies with Josef Drechsler, a then popular sacred composer, and betrays its author's talent through a deft treatment of the voice and some good melodic writing. It is, however, remarkable less on account of its musical merit than for the piquant spectacle that it affords of the Waltz King as a Church composer.

At the Theater an der Wien the event was commemorated with a production of 'Der Zigeunerbaron,' which simultaneously marked the fortieth anniversary of the day on which this opera was first produced, at the same theatre, on the occasion of Strauss's sixtieth birthday. Carl Streitmann, the veteran singer who then created the rôle, was again present to sing it at the jubilee performance. The Staatsoper fell back on one of its familiar and excellent performances of 'Die Fledermaus.'

One of the most interesting features of the festival was the Strauss Exhibition arranged by the Community of Vienna, and containing a wealth of manuscripts, paintings, photographs, and sculptures. Particular historical interest attached to the libretto of Strauss's maiden opera, 'The Merry Wives of Vienna,' which has never seen the footlights, and the score of which is lost. An object such as probably never before graced a musical exposition was one of Strauss's handkerchiefs covered with manuscript notes, such as the composer used to dash on cuffs, nightshirts, and even pillows, during sleepless nights when his supply of manuscript paper had failed him.

OPERATIC EVENTS

The Staatsoper has produced one novelty so far in Moussorgsky's 'Boris Godounov,' splendidly directed by Franz Schalk. This belated but elaborately prepared première was notable chiefly for its unique scenic environment, by Emil Pirchan, an Austrian artist who has made his reputation in Germany. For once the obvious and obsolete methods of stage naturalism and materialism so long customary at the Staatsoper were relegated, and replaced by modern ideas. Pirchan, like every alert stage-designer, works with light and colours rather than with cloth and wood. The results are at once economical and stimulating. The coronation scene was an example of what could be achieved in this direction. A predilection for staircases, an inheritance from the Russians and a hobby of young German stage-designers, was forcibly in evidence and not always well applied. The staging and costuming were beautiful, and the stage management of Hans Esdras Mutzenbecher, though it did not exhaust all possibilities in the grouping and motions of the chorus, was very satisfactory. Dr. Emil Schipper was vocally excellent as Boris, but histrionically conventional, and Richard Schubert as Dimitri looked and acted more impressively than he sang. Claire Born was colourless as Marina; but Norbert as Varlaam, and Manowarda as Ranzoni, were remarkable, and Mayr wonderful as ever in the rôle of Pimen.

What excellent results can still be achieved with the forces of the Staatsoper (however disorganized by the ruinous five-years' régime of Richard Strauss, the deplorable results of which director Franz Schalk is manfully struggling to redeem) was shown in a production of 'Aïda,' under Felix Weingartner as guest-conductor. Orchestrally at least the performance was one of the most brilliant ever heard here, and a great improvement over Mascagni's arbitrary tempi. The Staatsoper has now at last adopted a new policy by materially reducing the prices of admission, a measure which it is hoped will react favourably upon the waning attendances. A reduction of the star salaries is also planned, but is confronted with difficulties. The Volksoper has once more been closed for a period of several weeks, following the collapse of the Gruder Guntram directorship, which failed from the manager's policy of relying upon often unsuccessful star guests amid an otherwise mediocre ensemble. Under the circumstances even a great conductor like Leo Blech could not save the undertaking from collapse. The personnel of the house is now playing on its own responsibility, on a sharing basis, and is doing well. It is hoped soon to find a new manager capable of making the Volksoper what it should be, a theatre for the people.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC

The first two programmes of the Philharmonic Orchestra, under its permanent conductor, Felix Weingartner, indicated that the practice of this organization will remain unchanged during the current season. Neither Weingartner nor his men are given to experiments. They see their mission not so much in pioneer work for contemporary music as in the cultivation of and faithful adherence to classical ideals. Weingartner's catholic and plastic readings of Beethoven's second and Brahms's third Symphonies, and especially of Berlioz's 'Symphonie Fantastique'—a piece particularly dear to his heart—were as fine as ever. A first performance, at least locally, was that of Handel's Concerto for two groups of wind instruments and stringed orchestra, in an arrangement by Kogel, which is, in fact, a composite of two Handel Concertos. D'Albert's 'Cinderella' Suite, given as a novelty, proved a pleasing series of five smaller pieces written for the composer's children, and inspired, it is said, by Ravel's 'Ma mère l'oye.' The last-named, however, far surpasses the d'Albert effort in originality and refinement.

A classic programme also served to introduce the Buxbaum Quartet in its reorganized form, with M. van den Berg as its new first violinist. The Quartet is rightly named after its 'cellist, Friedrich Buxbaum, whose art, proven in his long connection with the Rosé Quartet, entitles him to the status of a real leader in the ensemble. The standard set by the Rosé organization is, of course, so far unrivalled here, especially as regards the performance of classical chamber works. In their first concert of the season, these players blazed the trail for a new composer, Gustav Hawranek, like the Rosé group, a member of the Philharmonic Orchestra, and one who has listened with profit to the music of Wagner and Strauss, Puccini and Massenet. The popular elements of his music, inspired by such examples, evoked tremendous enthusiasm at the première of his Quartet. This is rather long and loquacious, and is hardly redeemed by a brisk and original Scherzo somewhat arbitrarily supplied with a perfumed and obvious Trio.

In the recital field the most significant event was the attitude of at least a portion of the public towards Vaša Prihoda, the Czech violinist, who has stepped into the virtuoso shoes of Jan Kubelik, and fascinated Vienna for three seasons past with a cold display of violinistic pyrotechnics. His return this season was the signal for a more reserved and discriminating attitude towards his largely superficial artistry. It is gratifying to note that as the wizardry of a Prihoda begins to miss its mark, the supreme and noble art of Josef Szigeti, the eminent Hungarian violinist, is impressing itself more deeply upon the consciousness of the public. There is no artist before our public to-day more opposed to tricks and more bent upon the purely artistic side of his work. Szigeti was equally great in Brahms's Violin Concerto and in the Concerto by Serge Prokofiev, heard here for the first time. Prokofiev's work is, perhaps, the ideal conception of a modern Violin Concerto—grateful for the instrument, and at the same time drawing upon all the resources of the artist; effective without concessions; rich in invention and splendidly orchestrated. A young violinist from America, Franz Hóne, could not justly be measured with the standards of a master like Szigeti. His tone is small, but of beautiful quality, and his youth augurs well for his future achievements. Leff Pouishnov, the Russian pianist from London, made his Vienna débût with three formidable programmes in which vehicles for his splendid technical equipment held the balance with mediums for more spiritual utterance. Roland Hayes, the negro tenor, awakened boundless enthusiasm with his finished and deeply-moving interpretations of American 'Negro Spirituals'; but his singing of Schubert, and especially of Wolf, does not conform to German standards. The beauty of his piano effects induces him to emphasise solely the lyrical side of his lieder to an extent which creates monotony, and what remains is mere admiration for the singer's linguistic feat. A new-comer to Vienna was Eva Gauthier, whose programme was a welcome departure from the routine-worn Schubert-Brahms-Wolf-Strauss scheme. She was perfect in style in her Bach and old Italian and English numbers, and piquant and stimulating in some modern English pieces.

PAUL BECHERT.

[We regret that the remainder of the foreign news arrived too late for insertion in this issue.—EDITOR.]

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

AGNES ZIMMERMANN, in London, on November 14, aged seventy-eight. She was born at Cologne, and came to England at an early age, commencing her studies at the Royal Academy of Music under Charles Steggall and Cipriani Potter. She remained at the Academy for seven years, holding a King's Scholarship, and made her first appearance at the Crystal Palace in 1863, a tour in Germany in the following year setting the seal on her success. Though an admirable composer of pianoforte and chamber music, Miss Zimmermann is best remembered as an unusually fine pianist of the classical type. Her last public appearance in London took place in 1913.

J. W. NICHOLL, on October 27, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. Musical circles at Belfast are the poorer by his death. Though a chemist by profession, he had been organist of St. Anne's Parish Church and Belfast Cathedral, from 1874 to 1904, performing the duties most satisfactorily for thirty years. He was a member of the Cathedral Board, and was unsparing in his loyalty to the Church.

CHARLES DAVENPORT, a well-known organist, pianist, and teacher at Glasgow. Organist and choirmaster for many years at Maxwell Parish Church, and later at Hyndland Parish Church, he had latterly devoted himself exclusively to the pianoforte, and made occasional public appearances as a solo executant. He published some pianoforte pieces of a light type.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

L. E. W.—We know of no book that gives a set of rules suitable for a parish church choir. But local needs vary so much that we should not recommend the adoption en bloc of any such set. Our advice is: make your own rules; see that they be few and simple, and cut out any that cannot be enforced without injustice or undue rigour. The last point is important, because a rule that has to be relaxed very frequently will soon prove fatal to the whole code. Above all, take care to include no rule that cannot be as stringently applied to the soloists as to the rank and file. For example, a rule that no boy will be allowed to sing at a service unless he has attended a certain proportion of practices, or is in the vestry ten minutes before the service, is likely to lead to trouble the first time it is broken by a solo boy or any prominent leader. Such matters should be made subjects for recommendations rather than for hard and fast rules. The choirmaster can then tighten or relax at discretion, without the appearance of injustice that is fatal to good feeling and discipline. If a few parish church organists who have sets of rules will send them along, with notes on their efficacy, we will discuss the matter in an article. The subject is important, because parish church choir work, concerned as it is with volunteers, and making considerable demands on the boys' spare time, calls for a type of discipline very different from that of schools, or of cathedral choirs. Moreover, since the war, the usual difficulties of voluntary choirs, especially as regards the boys, have been accentuated. A discussion of disciplinary methods would be valuable, and we therefore invite the co-operation of choirmasters among our readers.

O. H.—(1.) Church music for S.A.B. is scarce. The Novello Catalogue contains some, but we cannot pick out and make a list. Write to Novello's, explaining your exact requirements—length, degree of difficulty, solo voices (if

The Musical Times EXTRA SUPPLEMENT. December 1, 1925

No. 425. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

ALL CHRISTIAN MEN THIS MORN REJOICE

Composed by H. A. CHAMBERS.

Stainer, John } CAROLS.
Bramley, H. R. } NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1.	God rest you merry, gentlemen	Traditional
*2.	The Manger Throne	C. Steggall
3.	A Virgin unspotted	Traditional
*4.	Come, ye lofty	Elvey
*5.	Come, tune your hearts	Ouseley
*6.	The First Nowell	Traditional
7.	Jesu, hail	J. Stainer
*8.	Good Christian men	Old German
*9.	Sleep, holy Babe	Dykes
*10.	Good King Wenceslas	Traditional
*11.	When I view the Mother	J. Barnby
*12	The seven joys of Mary	Traditional
*13.	On the Birthday of the Lord	Dykes
*14.	What Child is this?	Old English
*15.	Glorious, beauteous	Maria Tiddeman
*16.	Waken! Christian Children } 1½d.	S.C. Hammerton
*17.	A Child this day is born }	Traditional
*18.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Ouseley
19.	When Christ was born	A. H. Brown
*20.	Christmas Morning Hymn	J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Traditional
22.	Jesus in the Manger	H. Smart
*23.	The Holly and the Ivy } 1½d.	Old French
24.	The Moon shines bright }	Traditional
*25.	The Virgin and Child	C. Steggall
26.	The Incarnation	Traditional
*27.	Christmas Day	J. Stainer
28.	The Cherry-Tree Carol	Traditional
29.	God's dear Son	Traditional
*30.	See, amid the winter's snow	Goss
31.	The Babe of Bethlehem	Traditional
32.	In Bethlehem, that noble place	Ouseley
*33.	A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin	J. Barnby
34.	Christmas Song	Dykes
35.	Jacob's Ladder	Traditional
36.	The Story of the Shepherd	J. Barnby
*37.	The Wassail Song	Traditional
*38.	In terrâ pax	Dykes
39.	Dives and Lazarus	Traditional
*40.	From far away	Dykes
*41.	Carol for Christmas Day	A. Sullivan
42.	The Child Jesus in the Garden	J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43.	What soul-inspiring music	Har. by J. S.
44.	In the country nigh to Bethlehem	G. Hine
45.	We three Kings of Orient are	Har. by J. S.
46.	Emmanuel, God with us	H. Gadsby
47.	New Prince, new pomp } 1½d.	C. Steggall
48.	A Babe is born }	Har. by J. S
49.	Come, let us all sweet Carols sing	F. Cnampneys
50.	Let music break on this blest morn	J. B. Calkin
51.	Carol for New Year's Day	A. H. Brown
52.	The Angel Gabriel	Har. by J. S.
53.	The Shepherds amazed	A. H. Brown
54.	Noël! Noël!	Har. by J. S.
55.	I sing the birth	G. C. Martin
56.	Christmas Night	A. H. Brown
57.	The Christmas Celebration	E. Prout
58.	Arise and hail the Sacred Day	A. H. Brown
59.	The Holy Well	Har. by J. S.
60.	The Angel and the Shepherds	E. H. Thorn
61.	The Coventry Carol	Har. by J. S.
62.	The Morning Star	J. F. Bridge
63.	The Shepherds went	J. F. Barnett
64.	I saw three ships	Har. by J. S.
65.	Mountains, bow your heads	W. H. Cummings
66.	Luther's Carol	J. Higgs
67.	The Boy's Dream	W. H. Monk
68.	Legends of the Infancy	J. F. Bridge
69.	Let Christians all } 1½d.	Traditional
70.	Immortal Babe }

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6	0
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11	6
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) each	1	6
Words only, complete	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, T. } CAROLS,
Neale, J. M. } Set to Ancient Melodies.

71.	Here is joy for every age.
72.	Earthly friends will change.
73.	Gabriel's message.
74.	Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75.	Earth to-day rejoices.
76.	Good Christian men, rejoice.	1½d. each.
77.	From church to church.
78.	In the ending of the year.
79.	Royal day that chasest gloom.
80.	O'er the hill and o'er the vale
81.	Good King Wenceslas.
82.	Toll! toll! because there ends.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment	7	0
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Twelve Carols.—Words by S. WENSLEY.
Twopence each.

83.	O holy star	J. Stainer
84.	The shepherds	Eaton Faning
85.	Hymn of the angels	G. M. Garrett
*86.	The anthem of peace	J. Barnby
87.	The desert	Emma Mundella
88.	Bethlehem	Myles B. Foster
89.	Daybreak	Berthold Tours
90.	In the manger	J. Barnby
91.	The mother and child	Myles B. Foster
92.	Christ is born	J. F. Bridge
93.	Christmas Day	Battison Haynes
*94.	Sweet Christmas Bells	J. Stainer

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Carols. Twopence each.

95.	Now join we all with holy mirth	J. Stainer
96.	Softly the night	J. M. Crament
97.	Sleep, Holy Babe	J. T. Field
98.	Now dies in David's City	J. Swire
99.	There dwelt in Old Judea	R. Jackson
100.	Good people give ear	J. Swire
101.	Carol for Christmas Day	J. T. Field
102.	Ye stars of night	J. Swire
103.	Ring out, ye bells	J. H. Wallis
104.	Two thousand troubled years	J. F. Bridge

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/- Words only, 3d.

* All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

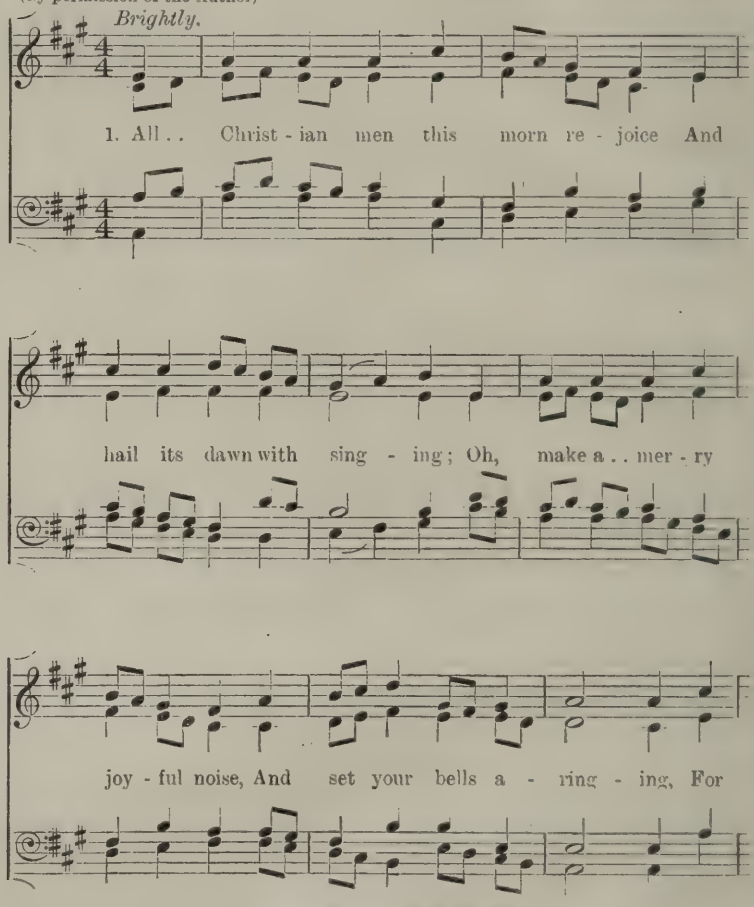
(August, 1925.) MADE IN ENGLAND

All Christian men this morn rejoice

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Words by W. SAUNDERS
(By permission of the Author)

Music by H. A. CHAMBERS



Brightly.
1. All . . Christ - ian men this morn re - joice And hail its dawn with sing - ing; Oh, make a . . mer - ry joy - ful noise, And set your bells a - ring - ing, For

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

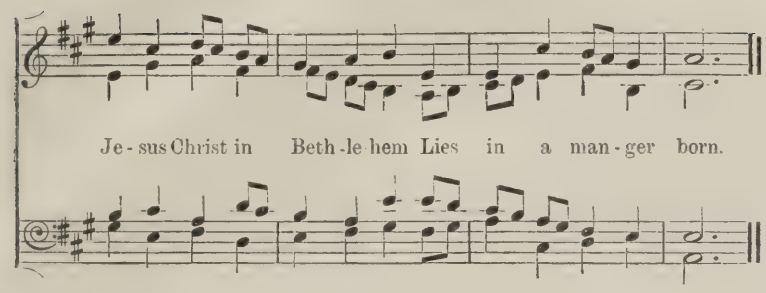
ALL CHRISTIAN MEN THIS MORN REJOICE



2.

All Christian men wend ye your ways,
Hate, strife and warfare quelling;
On this auspicious day of days,
The wondrous tidings telling,
That Jesus Christ in Bethlehem
Lies in a manger born.

3.

Christians, let there no discord be,
Your songs and anthems raising
In universal harmony,
God in the highest praising
For Jesus Christ in Bethlehem
Low in a manger born.

4.

But Christians as abroad ye wend,
And wide the news are speaking,
Inward, fail not your thoughts to bend
And anxiously go seeking
If Jesus Christ of Bethlehem
Lies in your hearts re-born.

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Stainer, John (Adapted and arranged by).
TWELVE OLD CAROLS. Three-halfpence each.

*105. Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep.
106. Come, shepherds, come! shake off your sleep.
107. Now sing we all full sweetly.
108. The good men all of Chastres.
109. Whence comes this rush of wings afar?
110. Come with us, sweet flowers, and worship / Infant so gentle, so pure, and so sweet! } 1½d.
*111. O night, peaceful and blest!
112. Of the Father's love begotten.
113. We saw a light shine out afar.
114. Christmas hath made an end.
115. Now farewell, good Christmas.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Martin, G. C. (Harmonised by).—CHRISTMASTIDE CAROLS. Three-halfpence each.

PART I. (Old Breton Melodies).

116. Hail! Christmas Bells.
117. O'er her Child the Virgin weeps. / The stars are bright. } 1½d.
118. On this day was born.
119. Glad hymns, with one accord.
120. Outside the city gates.
121. On Asia Minor's sunny shore.
*122. Across the desert sands by night.
Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

PART II. (Old French Melodies).

123. The Shepherds glad.
124. Merrily ring the Christmas bells.
125. The sombre shadows darker fall.
126. Poising bright on golden wing.
127. Round the Virgin gently sleeping.
128. The Circumcision.
129. In the golden lands afar.
130. A Legend of the Flight.
Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Bramley, Rev. H. R. / Stainer, John. } CHRISTMAS CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Men's Voices.
Complete, 3s.; each 2d. Words only, complete, 3d.

131. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
132. The Manger Throne .. .. C. Steggall
133. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. .. Dykes
134. Good Christian men, rejoice .. Old German
135. 'Twas in the winter cold .. .. J. Barnby
136. Good King Wenceslas .. Helmore's Carols
137. Come! ye lofty .. .. .. Elvey
138. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
139. Listen, Lordings .. .. .. Ouseley
140. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
141. When Christ was born .. Arthur H. Brown
142. Jesu, hail! O God most holy .. J. Stainer
143. The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
144. What Child is this? .. .. .. Old English
145. The Waits' Song .. .. . Traditional
146. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
147. The Holly and the Ivy .. .. Old French
148. The Lord at first .. .. .. Traditional
149. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
150. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
151. A Cradle-song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
152. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
153. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
154. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional

Bramley, Rev. H. R. / Stainer, John. } CHRISTMAS CAROLS. NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Two-part Singing by W. McNAUGHT. 2d. each.

155. Good King Wenceslas.
156. Good Christian men, rejoice.
157. Christmas hath made an end.
158. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
159. The First Nowell.
160. A Virgin unspotted.
161. The Wassail Song.
162. I hear along our street. / The Boar's Head Carol. } 2d.
163. The seven joys of Mary.
164. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
165. The Holly and the Ivy.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only,

Fox, George.—CAROLS FOR CHRISTMASTIDE. Set to Music for Little Singers.
Complete, 4s.; each 2d.

166. Good King Wenceslas.
167. I hear along our street.
168. Brightly shone the Eastern star.
169. As Joseph was a-walking.
170. Hark! what mean those holy voices.
171. The Holy Well.
172. While Shepherds watched.
173. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
174. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
175. A little robin.
176. As I sat on a sunny bank.
177. Why in tones so sweet and tender.
178. The moon shone bright. / All you that in this house. } 2d.
179. Clearly in the East it shone
180. Shepherds at the Grange. / These good people. } 2d.
181. Nuns in frigid cells. / Washerwomen old. } 2d.
182. The Holly and the Ivy.
183. How grand and how bright. / Hosanna to the living Lord. } 2d.
184. Lo! a heavenly form appearing. / The Boar's Head Carol. / In excelsis gloria. } 2d.

Legge, Robin H.—TWELVE NEW CHRISTMAS CAROLS. For Unison Singing. Words by A. E. ALSTON. Twopence each.

185. Præludium.
186. The Midnight Masse.
187. The bells of Christmas.
188. Pastor Bonus.
189. Rejoice! Christian men.
190. A Children's Carol.
191. Caraula Pastorum.
192. Wassail Song.
193. Kings of Orient.
194. Good Christians all.
195. Cometh the day.
196. Ye Angelus Bell.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only

* All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON. NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(July, 1923.)

No. 426. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

I SAW THREE KINGS A-RIDING

Composed by GEORGE RATHBONE.

Bramley, Rev. H. R. / Stainer, John — CHRISTMAS CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
*2. The Manger Throne .. .. .. C. Steggall
*3. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
*4. Come, ye lofty .. .. Elvey
*5. Come, tune your hearts .. .. Ouseley
*6. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
*7. Jesu, hail .. .. J. Stainer
*8. Good Christian men .. .. .. Old German
*9 Sleep, holy Babe .. .. Dykes
*10. Good King Wenceslas .. .. Traditional
*11. When I view the Mother .. .. J. Barnby
*12 The seven joys of Mary .. Traditional
*13. On the Birthday of the Lord .. .. Dykes
*14. What Child is this? .. .. Old English
*15. Glorious, beauteous .. .. Maria Tiddeman
*16. Waken! Christian Children } 1½d. S. C. Hammerton
*17. A Child this day is born } .. Traditional
*18. Carol for Christmas Eve .. .. Ouseley
*19. When Christ was born .. A. H. Brown
*20. Christmas Morning Hymn .. .. J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21. Carol for Christmas Eve .. .. Traditional
22. Jesus in the Manger .. .. .. H. Smart
*23. The Holly and the Ivy } 1½d. .. Old French
24. The Moon shines bright } .. Traditional
*25. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
26. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
*27. Christmas Day .. .. .. J. Stainer
28. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
29. God's dear Son .. .. .. Traditional
*30. See, amid the winter's snow .. .. Goss
31. The Babe of Bethlehem .. .. Traditional
32. In Bethlehem, that noble place .. Ouseley
*33. A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
34. Christmas Song .. .. Dykes
35. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
36. The Story of the Shepherd .. .. J. Barnby
*37. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional
*38. In terrâ pax .. .. Dykes
39. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
40. From far away .. .. Dykes
*41. Carol for Christmas Day .. .. A. Sullivan
42. The Child Jesus in the Garden .. J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43. What soul-inspiring music .. Har. by J. S.
44. In the country nigh to Bethlehem .. G. Hine
*45. We three Kings of Orient are Har. by J. S.
46. Emmanuel, God with us .. .. H. Gadsby
47. New Prince, new pomp } 1½d. .. C. Steggall
48. A Babe is born } Har. by J. S
49. Come, let us all sweet Carols sing F. Champneys
50. Let music break on this blest morn J. B. Calkin
51. Carol for New Year's Day .. A. H. Brown
52. The Angel Gabriel .. .. Har. by J. S.
53. The Shepherds amazed .. A. H. Brown
54. Noël! Noël! .. .. .. Har. by J. S.
55. I sing the birth .. .. G. C. Martin
56. Christmas Night .. .. A. H. Brown
57. The Christmas Celebration .. .. E. Prout
58. Arise and hail the Sacred Day A. H. Brown
59. The Holy Well .. .. Har. by J. S.
60 The Angel and the Shepherds E. H. Thorne
61. The Coventry Carol .. .. Har. by J. S.
62. The Morning Star .. .. .. J. F. Bridge
63. The Shepherds went .. .. J. F. Barnett
64. I saw three ships .. .. Har. by J. S.
65. Mountains, bow your heads W. H. Cummings
66. Luther's Carol .. .. .. J. Higgs
67. The Boy's Dream .. .. W. H. Monk
68. Legends of the Infancy .. J. F. Bridge
69. Let Christians all } 1½d. .. Traditional
70. Immortal Babe }

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series ..	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) .. each	1	6
Words only, complete (cloth, 8d.) ..	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, Rev. T. / Neale, Rev. J. M. — CAROLS FOR CHRISTMASTIDE. Set to Ancient Melodies.

71. Here is joy for every age.
72. Earthly friends will change.
73. Gabriel's message.
74. Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75. Earth to-day rejoices.
76. Good Christian men, rejoice.
77. From church to church.
78. In the ending of the year.
79. Royal day that chasest gloom.
80. O'er the hill and o'er the vale.
81. Good King Wenceslas.
82. Toll! toll! because there ends.

1½d. each.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment ..	7	0
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Wensley, Shapcott.—TWELVE NEW CAROLS FOR CHRISTMAS. Twopence each.

83. O holy star .. .. J. Stainer
84. The shepherds .. .. Eaton Faning
85. Hymn of the angels .. .. G. M. Garrett
*86. The anthem of peace .. .. .. J. Barnby
87. The desert .. .. .. Emma Mundella
88. Bethlehem .. .. .. Myles B. Foster
89. Daybreak .. .. .. Berthold Tours
90. In the manger .. .. J. Barnby
91. The mother and child .. Myles B. Foster
92. Christ is born .. .. J. F. Bridge
93. Christmas Day .. .. Battison Haynes
*94. Sweet Christmas Bells .. .. J. Stainer

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Christmas Carols. Twopence each.

95. Now join we all with holy mirth .. J. Stainer
96. Softly the night .. .. .. J. M. Crament
97. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. .. J. T. Field
98. Now dies in David's City .. .. J. Swire
99. There dwelt in Old Judea .. .. R. Jackson
100. Good people, give ear .. .. J. Swire
101. Carol for Christmas Day .. .. J. T. Field
102. Ye stars of night .. .. .. J. Swire
103. Ring out, ye bells .. .. J. H. Wallis
104. Two thousand troubled years J. F. Bridge

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/. Words only, 3d.

* All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(July, 1923.) MADE IN ENGLAND

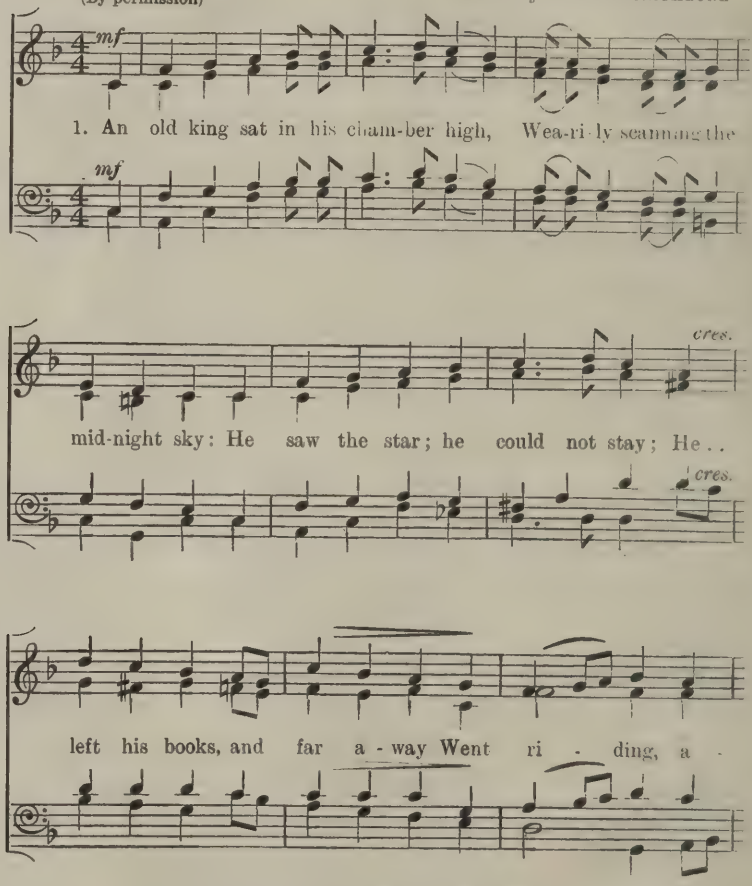
FOR THE
Rev. G. VICKARS-GASKELL

I saw three kings a-riding

EPIPHANY CAROL

Words by D. M. JONES
(By permission)

Music by GEORGE RATHBONE



mf
1. An old king sat in his cham-ber high, Wea-ri-ly scanning the mf
cres.
mid-night sky: He saw the star; he could not stay; He . .
cres.
left his books, and far a - way Went ri - ding, a -

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

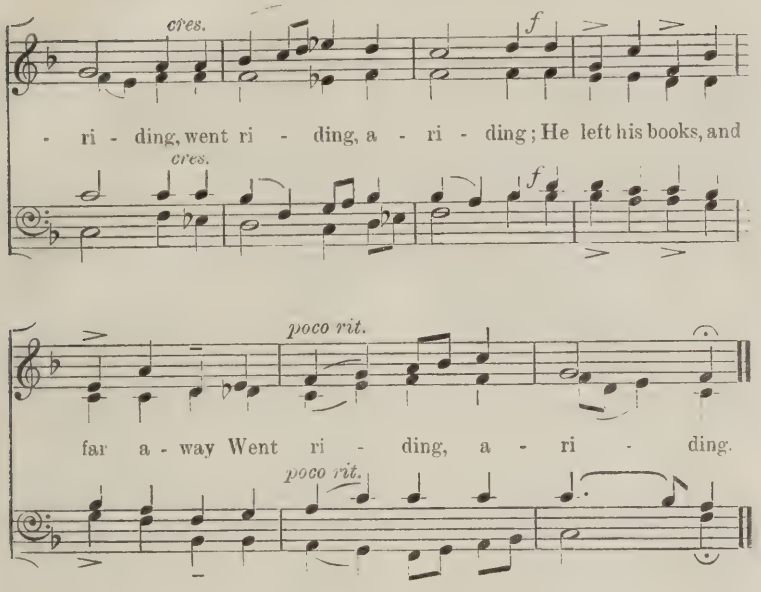
I SAW THREE KINGS A-RIDING



2 A strong king sat in his palace hall,
Seven | armies waited on his call,
He heard a voice: he could not stay;
He left his pomp, and far away
Went riding, a-riding.

3 A young king strayed in the evening glow,
In a | land of flowers, while the | lute spoke low,
One touched his arm; he could not stay,
He left his love, and far away
Went riding, a-riding.

Slower. 4 Lord Christ, Who hast Thy secret word
For | each man's soul, too oft unheard,
So light our wandering feet to Thee,
That in our hearts Thy grace may be Abiding, abiding.

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Stainer, John (Adapted and arranged by).
TWELVE OLD CAROLS. Three-halfpence each.

*105. Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep.
106. Come, shepherds, come! shake off your sleep.
107. Now sing we all full sweetly.
108. The good men all of Chastres.
109. Whence comes this rush of wings afar?
110. Come with us, sweet flowers, and worship. / Infant so gentle, so pure, and so sweet! } 1½d.
*111. O night, peaceful and blest!
112. Of the Father's love begotten.
113. We saw a light shine out afar.
114. Christmas hath made an end.
115. Now farewell, good Christmas.

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Martin, G. C. (Harmonised by).—CAROLS.
Three-halfpence each.
PART I. (Old Breton Melodies).

116. Hail! Christmas Bells.
117. O'er her Child the Virgin weeps. / The stars are bright. } 1½d.
118. On this day was born.
119. Glad hymns, with one accord.
120. Outside the city gates.
121. On Asia Minor's sunny shore.
*122. Across the desert sands by night.

Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

PART II. (Old French Melodies).

123. The Shepherds glad.
124. Merrily ring the Christmas bells.
125. The sombre shadows darker fall.
126. Poising bright on golden wing.
127. Round the Virgin gently sleeping.
128. The Circumcision.
129. In the golden lands afar.
130. A Legend of the Flight.

Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Men's Voices.

Complete, 3s.; each, 2d. Words only, complete, 3d.

131. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
132. The Manger Throne .. .. C. Steggall
133. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. .. Dykes
134. Good Christian men, rejoice .. Old German
135. 'Twas in the winter cold .. .. J. Barnby
136. Good King Wenceslas .. Helmore's Carols
137. Come! ye lofty .. .. .. Elvey
138. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
139. Listen, Lordings .. .. .. Ouseley
140. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
141. When Christ was born .. Arthur H. Brown
142. Jesu, hail! O God most holy .. J. Stainer
143. The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
144. What Child is this? .. .. .. Old English
145. The Waits' Song .. .. . Traditional
146. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
147. The Holly and the Ivy .. .. Old French
148. The Lord at first .. .. .. Traditional
149. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
150. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
151. A Cradle-song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
152. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
153. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
154. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. CAROLS. NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Two-part. 2d. each.

155. Good King Wenceslas.
156. Good Christian men, rejoice.
157. Christmas hath made an end.
158. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
159. The First Nowell.
160. A Virgin unspotted.
161. The Wassail Song.
162. I hear along our street. / The Boar's Head Carol. } 2d.
163. The seven joys of Mary.
164. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
165. The Holly and the Ivy.

Complete, 8d. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 2d

Fox, G.—CAROLS. For Little Singers. Each, 2

166. Good King Wenceslas.
167. I hear along our street.
168. Brightly shone the Eastern star.
169. As Joseph was a-walking.
170. Hark! what mean those holy voices.
171. The Holy Well.
172. While Shepherds watched.
173. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
174. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
175. A little robin.
176. As I sat on a sunny bank.
177. Why in tones so sweet and tender.
178. The moon shone bright. / All you that in this house. } 2d.
179. Clearly in the East it shone.
180. Shepherds at the Grange. / These good people. } 2d.
181. Nuns in frigid cells. / Washerwomen old. } 2d.
182. The Holly and the Ivy.
183. How grand and how bright. / Hosanna to the living Lord. } 2d.
184. Lo! a heavenly form appearing. / The Boar's Head Carol. / In excelsis gloria. } 2d.

Legge, R. H.—TWELVE NEW CAROLS.
Unison. Words by A. E. ALSTON. Each, 2d.

185. Præludium.
186. The Midnight Masse.
187. The bells of Christmas.
188. Pastor Bonus.
189. Rejoice! Christian men.
190. A Children's Carol.
191. Caraula Pastorum.
192. Wassail Song.
193. Kings of Orient.
194. Good Christians all.
195. Cometh the day.
196. Ye Angelus Bell.

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only,

*197. The Anthem of Peace .. J. Barnby / On Christmas Morn A. C. Mackenzie / Across the desert sands .. G. C. Martin / Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep .. .. .. J. Stainer } 2

(Words only, 4s. per 100.)

 All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(August, 1925.)

No. 427. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

O COME THIS DAY AND PRAISE HIM

Composed by HENRY G. LEY.

Stainer, John / Bramley, H. R. } CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1.	God rest you merry, gentlemen	Traditional
*2.	The Manger Throne	C. Steggall
*3.	A Virgin unspotted	Traditional
*4.	Come, ye lofty	Elvey
*5.	Come, tune your hearts	Ouseley
*6.	The First Nowell	Traditional
*7.	Jesu, hail	J. Stainer
*8.	Good Christian men	Old German
*9.	Sleep, holy Babe	Dykes
*10.	Good King Wenceslas	Traditional
*11.	When I view the Mother	J. Barnby
*12	The seven joys of Mary	Traditional
*13.	On the Birthday of the Lord	Dykes
*14.	What Child is this?	Old English
*15.	Glorious, beauteous	Maria Tiddeman
*16.	Waken! Christian Children (1½d.)	S.C. Hammerton
*17.	A Child this day is born (1½d.)	Traditional
*18.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Ouseley
*19.	When Christ was born	A. H. Brown
*20.	Christmas Morning Hymn	J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Traditional
22.	Jesus in the Manger	H. Smart
*23.	The Holly and the Ivy (1½d.)	Old French
24.	The Moon shines bright (1½d.)	Traditional
*25.	The Virgin and Child	C. Steggall
26.	The Incarnation	Traditional
*27.	Christmas Day	J. Stainer
28.	The Cherry-Tree Carol	Traditional
29.	God's dear Son	Traditional
*30.	See, amid the winter's snow	Goss
31.	The Babe of Bethlehem	Traditional
32.	In Bethlehem, that noble place	Ouseley
*33.	A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin	J. Barnby
34.	Christmas Song	Dykes
35.	Jacob's Ladder	Traditional
36.	The Story of the Shepherd	J. Barnby
*37.	The Wassail Song	Traditional
*38.	In terrâ pax	Dykes
39.	Dives and Lazarus	Traditional
*40.	From far away	Dykes
*41.	Carol for Christmas Day	A. Sullivan
42.	The Child Jesus in the Garden	J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43.	What soul-inspiring music	Har. by J. S.
44.	In the country nigh to Bethlehem	G. Hine
45.	We three Kings of Orient are	Har. by J. S.
46.	Emmanuel, God with us	H. Gadsby
47.	New Prince, new pomp (1½d.)	C. Steggall
48.	A Babe is born (1½d.)	Har. by J. S.
49.	Come, let us all sweet Carols sing	F. Champneys
50.	Let music break on this blest morn	J. B. Calkin
51.	Carol for New Year's Day	A. H. Brown
52.	The Angel Gabriel	Har. by J. S.
53.	The Shepherds amazed	A. H. Brown
54.	Noël! Noël!	Har. by J. S.
55.	I sing the birth	G. C. Martin
56.	Christmas Night	A. H. Brown
57.	The Christmas Celebration	E. Prout
58.	Arise and hail the Sacred Day	A. H. Brown
59.	The Holy Well	Har. by J. S.
60.	The Angel and the Shepherds	E. H. Thorne
61.	The Coventry Carol	Har. by J. S.
62.	The Morning Star	J. F. Bridge
63.	The Shepherds went	J. F. Barnett
64.	I saw three ships	Har. by J. S.
65.	Mountains, bow your heads	W. H. Cummings
66.	Luther's Carol	J. Higgs
67.	The Boy's Dream	W. H. Monk
68.	Legends of the Infancy	J. F. Bridge
69.	Let Christians all (1½d.)	Traditional
70.	Immortal Babe (1½d.)	Traditional

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6	0
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11	6
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) each	1	6
Words only, complete	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, T. / Neale, J. M. } CAROLS, Set to Ancient Melodies.

71.	Here is joy for every age.	1½d. each.
72.	Earthly friends will change.
73.	Gabriel's message.
74.	Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75.	Earth to-day rejoices.
76.	Good Christian men, rejoice.
77.	From church to church.
78.	In the ending of the year.
79.	Royal day that chasest gloom.
80.	O'er the hill and o'er the vale.
81.	Good King Wenceslas.
82.	Toll! toll! because there ends.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment	7	0
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Twelve Carols.—Words by S. WENSLEY. Twopence each.

83.	O holy star	J. Stainer
84.	The shepherds	Eaton Faning
85.	Hymn of the angels	G. M. Garrett
*86.	The anthem of peace	J. Barnby
87.	The desert	Emma Mundella
88.	Bethlehem	Myles B. Foste
89.	Daybreak	Berthold Tours
90.	In the manger	J. Barnby
91.	The mother and child	Myles B. Foster
92.	Christ is born	J. F. Bridge
93.	Christmas Day	Battison Haynes
*94.	Sweet Christmas Bells	J. Stainer

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Carols. Twopence each.

95.	Now join we all with holy mirth	J. Stainer
96.	Softly the night	J. M. Crament
97.	Sleep, Holy Babe	J. T. Field
98.	Now dies in David's City	J. Swire
99.	There dwelt in Old Judea	R. Jackson
100.	Good people, give ear	J. Swire
101.	Carol for Christmas Day	J. T. Field
102.	Ye stars of night	J. Swire
103.	Ring out, ye bells	J. H. Wallis
104.	Two thousand troubled years	J. F. Bridge

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/- Words only, 3d.

* All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

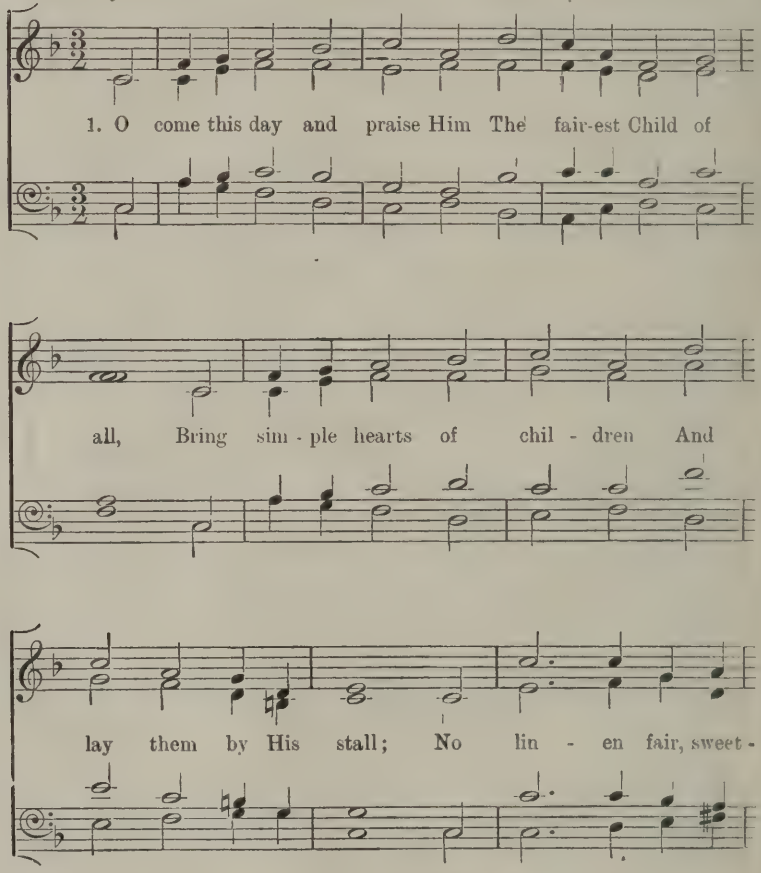
LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(August, 1925.) MADE IN ENGLAND

O come this day and praise Him

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Words by E. M. L. Music by Henry G. Ley



1. O come this day and praise Him The fair-est Child of all, Bring sim - ple hearts of chil - dren And lay them by His stall; No lin - en fair, sweet -

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

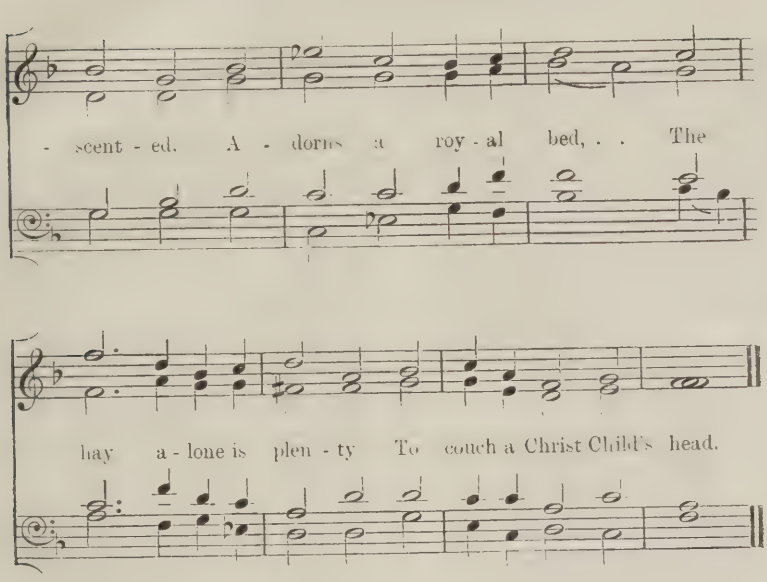
O COME THIS DAY AND PRAISE HIM



2 Beneath the starlit spaces
The houses stand and frown.
They shelter not a stranger
Within the little town;
There is no room of welcome
Within the dwellings trim;
Warm coated are the oxen
That keep the stall for Him

3 A mother's love He needeth:
He does not ask for more,
And Mary's love exceedeth
The richest, golden store.
So on this Christmas morning
Good Christian people rise.
Bring simple hearts of children
And lay them where He lies

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Stainer, John. Adapted and arranged by Twenty Old Carols. Three-halfpence each.

1. Shepherds' shoon of your snowy fleece
2. Come, shepherds, come! awake and hear news
3. Now sing we all full merrily
4. The good man at Chesterton
5. Whence comes this rush of wings afar
6. Come, visit us, sweet flowers, and worship
7. Infant so gentle, so pure, and so sweet 1d
8. O singer, powerful and silent
9. In the Father's love beginning
10. We have a virgin Rose put after
11. Christmas Bells made us glad
12. Most heavenly good Christmas.

Complete, 1s. Tonic Sol-fa, 6d. Words only, 1d

Martin, G. C. Harmonised by L.—Carols.
Three-halfpence each.

Part I. (Old French Melodies)

1. Hail, Christmas bells
2. Oh! the Child the Virgin bears
3. The night was bright
4. At this tide was born
5. Glad tidings visit our earth
6. Rejoice this day glad
7. We have Wise Men under there
8. Across the desert sands to-night.

Complete, 1s. Words only, 1d

Part II. (Old French Melodies)

9. The Shepherds glad
10. Merrily ring the Christmas bells
11. The stormy winter's career fell
12. Flowing bright on golden wing
13. Around the Virgin gently sleeping
14. The Consummation
15. In the greatest needs like
16. A Legend of the Flight.

Complete, 1s. Words only, 1d

Stainer, John.
Bramley, H. R. Carols. New and Old.
Arranged for Mens Voices.

Complete, 2s each. Words only, complete, 2d

1. A Virgin unspotted
2. The Wassail Song
3. Sweet Baby Babe
4. Good Christian men, rejoice
5. What is this mother's love?
6. Good King Wenceslas
7. Come, ye lofty
8. God rest you merry gentlemen
9. Lullaby, Lullaby
10. The First Nowell
11. The Virgin unspotted
12. The Wassail Song
13. The Holly and the Ivy
14. The Lord at first
15. The Incarnation
16. The Cherry Tree Carol
17. A Cradle-song of the Blessed Virgin
18. Jesus's Lullaby
19. Dives and Lazarus
20. The Wassail Song

Stainer, John.
Bramley, H. R. Carols. New and Old.
Arranged for Two-part. 2d each

1. Good King Wenceslas
2. Good Christian men, rejoice
3. Christmas day shall make us glad
4. God rest you merry gentlemen
5. The First Nowell
6. A Virgin unspotted
7. The Wassail Song
8. I saw three ships come sailing
9. The Boar's Head Carol
10. The seven joys of Mary
11. Hark! how sweetly the bells
12. The Holly and the Ivy

Complete, 2d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1d. Words only

Fox, G.—Carols. For Little Singers. Each

1. Good King Wenceslas
2. I saw three ships come sailing
3. Bringing home the Easter lily
4. As Joseph was a-walking
5. Hark! what mean those holy voices
6. The Holly and the Ivy
7. While shepherds watched
8. God rest you merry gentlemen
9. Hark! how sweetly the bells
10. A little town
11. As I lay on a summer bank
12. Why so sweet so sweet and tender
13. The moon shone bright
14. All you that in the house
15. Cradled in the East a-stone
16. Shepherds at the Grange
17. These good people
18. Noble an ingle sells
19. Wassailing old
20. The Holly and the Ivy
21. How grand and how bright
22. Rejoice in the living Lord
23. Lo! a prophet from appearing
24. The Boar's Head Carol
25. Excelsis glorie

Legge, R. H.—Twelve New Carols.
Unison. Words by A. E. Ashton. Each 2d

1. Preludium.
2. The Midnight Masse
3. The birth of Christmas
4. Pastor Bimbo
5. Previous Carollers meet
6. A Labourer's Carol
7. Carolus Pastorum
8. Wassail Song
9. Three Jolly Knights
10. Good Christians all
11. Lumpish the day
12. The Angelus Bell.

Complete, 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only

	The Anthem of Peace	J. Barnby.
	The Christmas Morn	A. C. Mackenzie.
1d.	Across the desert sands	G. C. Martin.
	Sweet Babe! sweet babe of your snowy fleece	J. Stainer.
	Shepherds, shake off your drowsy sleep	J. Stainer.

Words only, as per 100.

† All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 428. NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS. Price (1½*d.*).

ALL HAIL WITH JOY

Composed by CHASTEY HECTOR.

Stainer, John / Bramley, H. R. } CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.

FIRST SERIES. Three-halfpence each.
Tonic Sol-fa (complete), 1/6.

*1.	God rest you merry, gentlemen	Traditional
*2.	The Manger Throne	C. Steggall
*3.	A Virgin unspotted	Traditional
*4	Come, ye lofty	Elvey
*5.	Come, tune your hearts	Ouseley
*6.	The First Nowell	Traditional
*7.	Jesu, hail	J. Stainer
*8.	Good Christian men	Old German
*9.	Sleep, holy Babe	Dykes
*10.	Good King Wenceslas	Traditional
*11.	When I view the Mother	J. Barnby
*12	The seven joys of Mary	Traditional
*13.	On the Birthday of the Lord	Dykes
*14.	What Child is this?	Old English
*15.	Glorious, beauteous	Maria Tiddeman
*16.	Waken! Christian Children } 1½d.	S.C. Hammerton
*17.	A Child this day is born }	Traditional
*18.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Ouseley
*19.	When Christ was born	A. H. Brown
*20.	Christmas Morning Hymn	J. Barnby

SECOND SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

*21.	Carol for Christmas Eve	Traditional
22.	Jesus in the Manger	H. Smart
*23.	The Holly and the Ivy } 1½d.	Old French
24.	The Moon shines bright }	Traditional
*25.	The Virgin and Child	C. Steggall
26.	The Incarnation	Traditional
*27.	Christmas Day	J. Stainer
28.	The Cherry-Tree Carol	Traditional
29.	God's dear Son	Traditional
*30.	See, amid the winter's snow	Goss
31.	The Babe of Bethlehem	Traditional
32.	In Bethlehem, that noble place	Ouseley
*33.	A Cradle Song of the Blessed Virgin	J. Barnby
34.	Christmas Song	Dykes
35.	Jacob's Ladder	Traditional
36.	The Story of the Shepherd	J. Barnby
*37.	The Wassail Song	Traditional
*38.	In terrâ pax	Dykes
39.	Dives and Lazarus	Traditional
*40.	From far away	Dykes
*41.	Carol for Christmas Day	A. Sullivan
42.	The Child Jesus in the Garden	J. Stainer

THIRD SERIES. Three-halfpence each.

43.	What soul-inspiring music	Har. by J. S.
44.	In the country nigh to Bethlehem	G. Hine
45.	We three Kings of Orient are	Har. by J. S.
46.	Emmanuel, God with us	H. Gadsby
47.	New Prince, new pomp } 1½d	C. Steggall
48.	A Babe is born }	Har. by J. S.
49.	Come, let us all sweet Carols sing	F. Champneys
50.	Let music break on this blest morn	J. B. Calkin
51.	Carol for New Year's Day	A. H. Brown
52.	The Angel Gabriel	Har. by J. S.
53.	The Shepherds amazed	A. H. Brown
54.	Noël! Noël!	Har. by J. S.
55.	I sing the birth	G. C. Martin
56.	Christmas Night	A. H. Brown
57.	The Christmas Celebration	E. Prout
58.	Arise and hail the Sacred Day	A. H. Brown
59.	The Holy Well	Har. by J. S.
60.	The Angel and the Shepherds	E. H. Thorne
61.	The Coventry Carol	Har. by J. S.
62.	The Morning Star	J. F. Bridge
63.	The Shepherds went	J. F. Barnett
64.	I saw three ships	Har. by J. S.
65.	Mountains, bow your heads	W. H. Cummings
66.	Luther's Carol	J. Higgs
67.	The Boy's Dream	W. H. Monk
68.	Legends of the Infancy	J. F. Bridge
69.	Let Christians all } 1½d.	Traditional
70.	Immortal Babe }

	s.	d.
The above 70 Carols, complete, cloth, gilt	6	0
Library Edition, with Historical Preface Roxburgh binding	11	6
Illustrated Edition, 1st and 2nd Series	11	6
Three Series (cloth, gilt, 3s.) each	1	6
Words only, complete	0	6
Words, each Series	0	2

Helmore, T. / Neale, J. M. } CAROLS, Set to Ancient Melodies.

71.	Here is joy for every age.
72.	Earthly friends will change.
73.	Gabriel's message.
74.	Christ was born on Christmas Day.
75.	Earth to-day rejoices.
76.	Good Christian men, rejoice.	1½d. each.
77.	From church to church.
78.	In the ending of the year.
79.	Royal day that chasest gloom.
80.	O'er the hill and o'er the vale.
81.	Good King Wenceslas.
82.	Toll! toll! because there ends.

	s.	d.
The above 12 carols, complete	1	6
Folio, with pianoforte accompaniment	7	0
Treble part	0	8
Words only	0	2

Twelve Carols.—Words by S. WENSLEY. Twopence each.

83.	O holy star	J. Stainer
84.	The shepherds	Eaton Faning
85.	Hymn of the angels	G. M. Garrett
*86.	The anthem of peace	J. Barnby
87.	The desert	Emma Mundella
88.	Bethlehem	Myles B. Foster
89.	Daybreak	Berthold Tours
90.	In the manger	J. Barnby
91.	The mother and child	Myles B. Foster
92.	Christ is born	J. F. Bridge
93.	Christmas Day	Battison Haynes
*94.	Sweet Christmas Bells	J. Stainer

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/-. Words only, 3d.

Ten Carols. Twopence each.

95.	Now join we all with holy mirth	J. Stainer
96.	Softly the night	J. M. Crament
97.	Sleep, Holy Babe	J. T. Field
98.	Now dies in David's City	J. Swire
99.	There dwelt in Old Judea	R. Jackson
100.	Good people, give ear	J. Swire
101.	Carol for Christmas Day	J. T. Field
102.	Ye stars of night	J. Swire
103.	Ring out, ye bells	J. H. Wallis
104.	Two thousand troubled years	J. F. Bridge

Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1/- Words only, 3d.

* All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

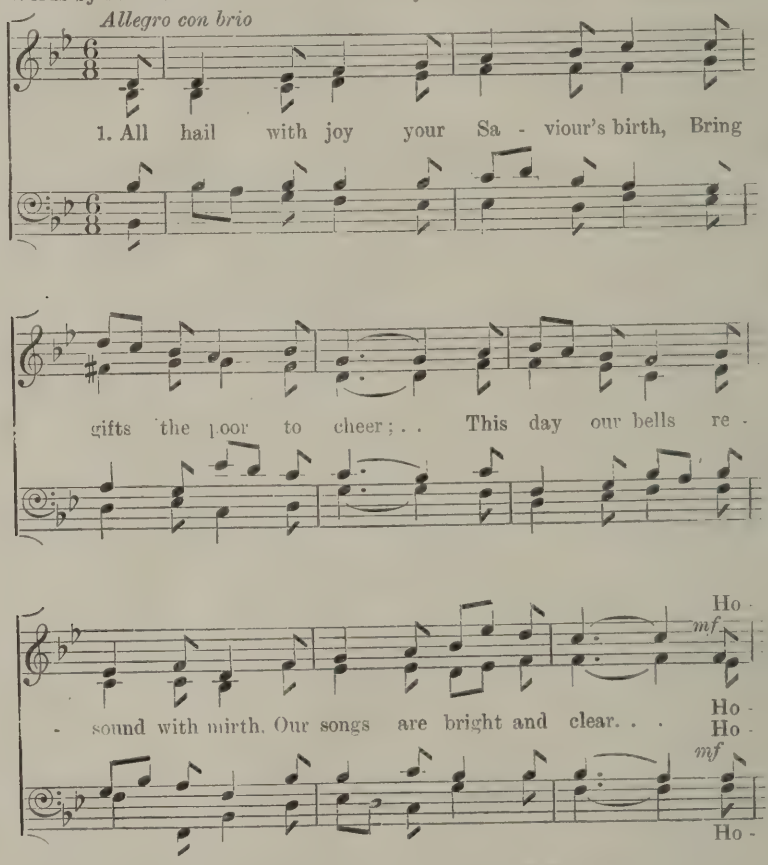
LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MADE IN ENGLAND

All hail with joy

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Words by ARTHUR YARDLEY Music by CHASTEY HECTOR, D.Mus., Oxon.



Allegro con brio
1. All hail with joy your Sa - viour's birth, Bring gifts the poor to cheer; . . This day our bells re - Ho -
mf
- sound with mirth, Our songs are bright and clear. . .
Ho -
Ho -
mf
Ho -

Copyright, 1925, by Novello and Company, Limited

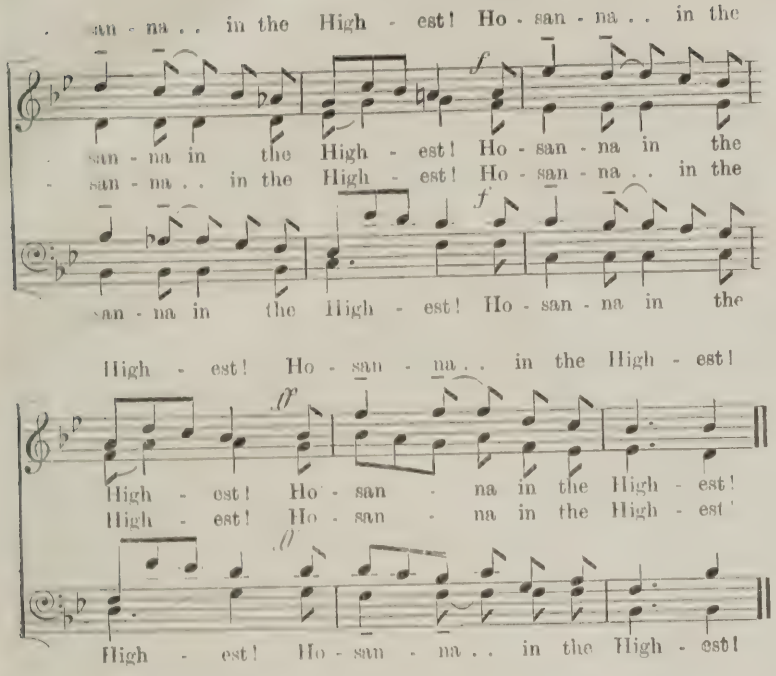
ALL HAIL WITH JOY



san - na . . in the High - est! Ho - san - na . . in the san - na in the High - est! Ho - san - na in the san - na . . in the High - est! Ho - san - na . . in the san - na in the High - est! Ho - san - na in the High - est! Ho - san - na . . in the High - est!
High - est! Ho - san - na in the High - est!
High - est! Ho - san - na in the High - est!
High - est! Ho - san - na . . in the High - est!

2 What wondrous love this day is shown
To man's unworthy race,
Goodwill and peace from Heav'n flow down,
With love and truth and grace.
Hosanna in the Highest!

3 The Son of God this day was born
A pure and holy Child;
Rejoice, rejoice, this Christmas morn,
In Him we're reconciled.
Hosanna in the Highest!

4 Sing then your song with joyful heart,
Your bright hosannas raise;
Draw nigh with faith, He will receive
Your worship and your praise
Hosanna in the Highest!

NOVELLO'S
CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Stainer, John (Adapted and arranged by).
TWELVE OLD CAROLS. Three-halfpence each.

*105. Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep.
106. Come, shepherds, come! shake off your sleep.
107. Now sing we all full sweetly.
108. The good men all of Chastres.
109. Whence comes this rush of wings afar?
110. Come with us, sweet flowers, and worship. / Infant so gentle, so pure, and so sweet! } 1½d.
*111. O night, peaceful and blest!
112. Of the Father's love begotten.
113. We saw a light shine out afar.
114. Christmas hath made an end.
115. Now farewell, good Christmas.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

Martin, G. C. (Harmonised by).—CAROLS.
Three-halfpence each.
PART I. (Old Breton Melodies).

116. Hail! Christmas Bells.
117. O'er her Child the Virgin weeps. / The stars are bright. } 1½d.
118. On this day was born.
119. Glad hymns, with one accord.
120. Outside the city gates.
121. On Asia Minor's sunny shore.
*122. Across the desert sands by night.
Complete, 8d. Words only, 1½d.

PART II. (Old French Melodies).

123. The Shepherds glad.
124. Merrily ring the Christmas bells.
125. The sombre shadows darker fall.
126. Poising bright on golden wing.
127. Round the Virgin gently sleeping.
128. The Circumcision.
129. In the golden lands afar.
130. A Legend of the Flight.
Complete, 8d Words only, 1½d.

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. } CAROLS, NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Men's Voices.
Complete, 3s.; each, 2d. Words only, complete, 3d.

131. A Virgin unspotted .. .. .. Traditional
132. The Manger Throne .. .. C. Steggall
133. Sleep, Holy Babe .. .. .. Dykes
134. Good Christian men, rejoice .. Old German
135. 'Twas in the winter cold .. .. J. Barnby
136. Good King Wenceslas .. Helmore's Carols
137. Come! ye lofty .. .. .. Elvey
138. God rest you merry, gentlemen .. Traditional
139. Listen, Lordings .. .. .. Ouseley
140. The First Nowell .. .. .. Traditional
141. When Christ was born .. Arthur H. Brown
142. Jesu, hail! O God most holy .. J. Stainer
143. The seven joys of Mary .. .. Traditional
144. What Child is this?.. .. .. Old English
145. The Waits' Song .. .. .. Traditional
146. The Virgin and Child .. .. C. Steggall
147. The Holly and the Ivy .. .. Old French
148. The Lord at first .. .. .. Traditional
149. The Incarnation .. .. .. Traditional
150. The Cherry-Tree Carol .. .. Traditional
151. A Cradle-song of the Blessed Virgin J. Barnby
152. Jacob's Ladder .. .. .. Traditional
153. Dives and Lazarus .. .. .. Traditional
154. The Wassail Song .. .. .. Traditional

Stainer, John. / Bramley, H. R. } CAROLS. NEW AND OLD.
Arranged for Two-part. 2d. each.

155. Good King Wenceslas.
156. Good Christian men, rejoice.
157. Christmas hath made an end.
158. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
159. The First Nowell.
160. A Virgin unspotted.
161. The Wassail Song.
162. I hear along our street. / The Boar's Head Carol. } 2d.
163. The seven joys of Mary.
164. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
165. The Holly and the Ivy.
Complete, 8d Tonic Sol-fa, 8d. Words only, 2d.

Fox, G.—CAROLS. For Little Singers. Each.

166. Good King Wenceslas.
167. I hear along our street.
168. Brightly shone the Eastern star.
169. As Joseph was a-walking.
170. Hark! what mean those holy voices.
171. The Holy Well.
172. While Shepherds watched.
173. God rest you merry, gentlemen.
174. Hark! how sweetly the bells.
175. A little robin.
176. As I sat on a sunny bank.
177. Why in tones so sweet and tender.
178. The moon shone bright. / All you that in this house. } 2d.
179. Clearly in the East it shone.
180. Shepherds at the Grange. / These good people. } 2d.
181. Nuns in frigid cells. / Washerwomen old. } 2d.
182. The Holly and the Ivy.
183. How grand and how bright. / Hosanna to the living Lord. } 2d.
184. Lo! a heavenly form appearing. / The Boar's Head Carol. / In excelsis gloria. } 2d.

Legge, R. H.—TWELVE NEW CAROLS.
Unison. Words by A. E. ALSTON. Each, 2d.

185. Præludium.
186. The Midnight Masse.
187. The bells of Christmas
188. Pastor Bonus.
189. Rejoice! Christian men.
190. A Children's Carol.
191. Caraula Pastorum.
192. Wassail Song.
193. Kings of Orient.
194. Good Christians all.
195. Cometh the day.
196. Ye Angelus Bell.
Complete, 1/6. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 3d

*197. The Anthem of Peace .. J. Barnby
On Christmas Morn A. C. Mackenzie
Across the desert sands .. G. C. Martin
Shepherds! shake off your drowsy sleep .. .. .. J. Stainer } 2d
(Words only, 4s. per 100.)

 All Carols marked with an asterisk are also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

(August, 1925.)

any), &c.—and ask them to send you a selection on approval. (2.) Candidates in the organ-playing tests at the R.C.O. are of course allowed to play from memory, but no extra marks are awarded for the feat. (3.) The following biographical and critical works will give you a choice. Bach: Parry's 'John Sebastian Bach' (Putnams); Schweitzer's 'Bach the Musician-Poet,' translated by Newman (Breitkopf & Härtel); Forkel's 'J. S. Bach,' translated by Sanford Terry (Constable); Pirro's 'Bach the Organist' (Schirmer); and Grace's 'The Organ Works of Bach' (Novello). Handel: Rolland's 'Handel' (Kegan Paul); Newman Flower's 'George Frideric Handel' (Cassell); Robinson's 'Handel and his Orbit' (Sherratt & Hughes); and Allanson Benson's 'Handel's "Messiah": The Oratorio and its History' (William Reeves). Purcell: Books by Cummings (Low) and Holmes (Novello).

A. C. J.—We think you are unduly concerned about the modal question and the tritone. The edition of the 'Missa de Angelis' you mention, in which the signature is three sharps, the G being naturalized every time, is strictly correct, as the work is in the fifth mode, transposed. Where you go astray is in thinking of the transposition as being to A, instead of to D. Hence your feeling that, logically, the result ought to be the key of A with a D♯. Instead, it is D, with a G sharp (fe), instead of G♮ (fa) in the signature, the fe being changed always to fa, in order to avoid the tritone. There is much to be said in favour of regarding this particular work as being in the modern major scale, and noting it accordingly, as is done in some editions.

F. B. R.—The following are some text-books suitable for the L.R.A.M. elocution Teacher's Diploma: 'Higher English,' Campbell (Blackie); 'Pronunciation for Singers,' Ellis (Curwen); 'The Art of Singing,' William Shakespeare (Metzler); 'Voice-Production in Singing and Speaking,' Wesley Mills (Curwen); 'The Art of Versification,' R. F. Brewer (Grant, Edinburgh); 'Modern English Metre,' Joseph B. Mayor (Cambridge University Press); 'The Technique of Speech,' Dora Duty Jones (Harper). We know of no periodical dealing with elocution.

EAST COAST.—You want to 'bring a lyric to the notice of a composer of merit,' and ask how to set about it. We have answered this question several times already, and shall soon apply the closure. Obviously, you can do no more than send a copy to such composers as take your fancy. As dozens of other poets are also bombarding the same composers, you must not be over-sanguine. Another way: send a copy to the likeliest of the song-publishing firms. If it has possibilities, they will probably place it to advantage.

W. A. G.—The Historical Edition of 'Hymns A. & M.' is published by Wm. Clowes, and the cost is 12*s.* 6*d.* You will also find material for your lecture in Lightwood's 'Hymns and their Writers' (Epworth Press), and Curwen's 'Studies in Worship Music' (Curwen). The latter is, we think, out of print, but you may be able to borrow a copy. It is full of interesting stuff.

F. P.—You asked the question about the Irish harp some time ago, and we answered it fully in the October number.

L. G.—Davidson Palmer's 'Manual of Voice-Training' is published by Joseph Williams (2*s.*).

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

F

CONTENTS

	PAGE
The Problem of Interpretation: with Special Reference to Song. By Erik Brewerton	1073
A Postscript to 'A Musical Critic's Holiday.' By Ernest Newman (concluded)	1076
'The Corporacon for Regulateing the Art and Science of Musique.' By Jeffrey Mark	1079
The Nature of Harmony. By Matthew Shirlaw ...	1082
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	1086
Wagner and the Ninth Symphony. By Edith A. H. Crawshaw	1090
The Fetish of Form. By J. H. Elliot	1092
The Clementi Mysteries. By Herbert Westerby ...	1093
Joseph Franck. By Andrew de Ternant	1094
Monteverdi's 'Orfeo.' By J. A. Westrup	1096
New Light on Late Tudor Composers.—XIV. William Hunnis. By W. H. Grattan Flood ...	1100
Critics in Excelsis. By Arthur T. Froggatt	1101
New Music	1103
The Musician's Bookshelf	1110
Points from Lectures	1113
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	1114
Player-Piano Notes. By William Delasaire	1115
Church and Organ Music	1117
Royal College of Organists	1117
Letters to the Editor	1119
The Amateurs' Exchange	1121
Music for Two Pianofortes (Musical Association Paper)	1121
London Concerts	1122
Competition Festival Record	1126
Festivals in General, and Blackpool Festival in Particular	1126
Blackpool Festival (October 19-24)	1126
Croydon Triennial Festival	1129
Music in the Provinces	1120
Centenary of Sir Robert Stewart, Mus.D. By W. H. Grattan Flood	1133
Musical Notes from Abroad	1133
Obituary	1136
Answers to Correspondents	1136

MUSIC:

'There was a maid.' Four-part Song. Old English Tune, Harmonized by C. Lee Williams 1105

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS—Four Christmas Carols:

1. 'All Christian men this morn rejoice.' By H. A. Chambers.
2. 'All hail with joy.' By Chastey Hector.
3. 'O come this day and praise Him.' By Henry G. Ley.
4. 'I saw three kings a-riding.' By George Rathbone.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than FRIDAY, DECEMBER 18 (FIRST POST).

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

CRIMP, HERBERT E.—"The Drums of Freedom." Soprano (or Tenor) Solo and Chorus S.A.T.B. (No. 1428, Novello's Part-song Book.) 4d.

DALE, B. J.—"Rosa Mystica." Carol for Mixed Voices, with Tenor Solo. (No. 1426, Novello's Part-song Book.) 4d.

DAVIES, H. WALFORD.—"The Blessed Birth." An unaccompanied Carol for Christmas or Epiphany. Re-arranged for equal voices. 3d.

DESCANT HYMN-TUNE BOOK.—A Collection of well-known Tunes arranged by Geoffrey Shaw. 2s. Voice Parts only, 8d.

ENGLISH PSALTER.—Imperial 32mo. 1s. 6d.

FOREMAN, J.—"Bluebells." Song. 1s. 6d.

GOUNOD, C.—"Nazareth." Sacred Song. In E flat, and F. 1s. 6d. each.

HANDEL.—Overture in D minor. (Arranged by H. F. Ellingford.) (No. 66, Organ Arrangements, edited by John E. West.) 2s. 3d.

HARWOOD, BASIL.—Original Compositions for the Organ, No. 17. "Three Preludes on Anglican Chants." Op. 42. 2s.

HAVERGAL, CECILIA.—"Light 'mid the shadows." Christmas Carol. 1d.

KEELER, BRADLEY.—"Swing High" (Lullaby). (Low key.) Song. English and French words. 2s.

— "Thine Image." (Low key.) Song. English and German words. 2s.

MARSH, REV. F. T.—"Let all the world this day rejoice." Carol. 2d.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

No. 425. "All Christian men this morn rejoice. H. A. CHAMBERS. 1½d.
No. 426. "I saw three Kings a-riding." G. RATHBONE. 1½d.
No. 427. "O come this day and praise Him." HENRY G. LEY. 1½d.
No. 428. "All hail with joy." C. HECTOR. 1½d.

PULLEIN, W. R.—16th Century Prayer. ("O Lord, support us all the day.") 3d.

ROSS, T. H.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D. 6d.

RUSSELL, F. G.—Twelve Original Hymn-Tunes. 6d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 402, contains the following music in both notations.—"The singer in the night." Unison Song. Composed by Cecil Sharman. "Good Christian men, rejoice." Carol. Arranged with descant. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

		A.	B.
No. 982.	"Children pray this love to cherish." Arranged as a Two-part Song. SPOHR.	—	1½d.
1397.	"As I was going up the hill." Unison Song. ROY THOMPSON.	2d.	—
1398.	"Jacky, come give me the fiddle." Unison Song. ROY THOMPSON.	2d.	—
1399.	"A Child's Grace." Unison Song. ROY THOMPSON.	1½d.	—
1402.	"Rolling down to Rio." Arranged as a 2-part Song. E. GERMAN.	—	3d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2495.	"How calmly the evening." S.S.C. EDWARD ELGAR	3d.
2497.	"The lass of Richmond Hill." A.T.B.B. A. HERBERT BREWER	3d.
2498	"I will magnify Thee. O Lord." Motet. PALESTRINA	3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—continued.

WAREHAM, F.—Seven Hymn-Tunes. 2d.

WILLIAMS, C. LEE.—"There was a maid." Arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 994, The Musical Times.) 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BLAIR, HUGH.—Andante Pastorale. For Organ.

— Short Festival Postlude. For Organ.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"A Song of Praise." Cantata. $1.50 (6s.).

DICKINSON, C.—"Memories." For Organ.

— (arranged by) Spanish Folk-Song. "Out on the plains, shepherds watching." 15 cents (8d.).

LESTER, W.—"A Southern Idyll." (In Georgia.) For Organ.

MACKINNON, H. A.—"Lord Christ came walking." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

PEELE, D.—"A song in the night." For Organ.

WILLAN, HEALEY.—"Hail Thee, Festival Day" (Dedication). 10 cents (6d.).

WILLIAMS, D. McK.—Credo. 10 cents (6d.).

THREE DANCES

COMPOSED BY

FRANK E. TOURS.

Pianoforte Solo	... ...	3*s.*
Violin and Pianoforte	...	4*s.* 6*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC REQUIRES COVERS

TO KEEP IT NICE AND CLEAN.

Now is the time to prepare for the winter season.

Send P.O. for 1*s.* 3*d.* and obtain specimen covers for sheet and Choir Music.

R. H. MUDDIMAN,
77, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.4.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.
St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Owing to increased output, we have reduced the price of our Popular Model to 14 guineas cash. Deferred payments if desired.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

"LIGHT 'MID THE SHADOWS." A New Christmas Carol. By CECILIA HAVERGAL. Price One Penny. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FULL SCORES. — Schönberg's "Gurrelieder," "Erwartung," "Die Gluckliche Hand." Finely bound. 2½ and 1½ guineas respectively. Less than cost of binding. 175, Clarence Gate Gardens, N.W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O. (Jan., 1926), on the book "WILLIAM BYRD," 12 MODEL ESSAYS, with valuable hints. 1st Series of 6 Essays, 4s. 6d.; 2nd Series of 6 Essays, 4s. 6d. Send P.O. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

HALF-PRICE ORGAN (John Holt). 2 manuals and pedals. Nearly new. Seen London. "J. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.,160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED to PURCHASE, Teaching Connection (Pianoforte or Singing), within fifty miles of London. "A.R.C.M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

COMPOSERS.—Music and Songs negotiated. The only established Music Agency in the United Kingdom. The Cambridge Music Agency, 8, Henrietta Street, W.C.2.

POETS.—Your lyric set to music would make a nice Christmas Present for a friend. I set lyrics, harmonize melodies. Harry Jupp, composer of Dix, Ltd.'s, latest waltz success, "Always wanting you." 8, Alhambra Road, Southsea.

FOR SALE.—2-manual Harmonium by Alexandre. Walnut case, 22 stops, 2 knee-swells, expression, of remarkably fine tone. In splendid condition. Price £65. Apply, G. Brown, 102, Teignmouth Road, Cricklewood, N.W.2.

ÆOLIAN ORCHESTRELLE, in new condition; £400 model. Played by hand or with a roll. £175 for speedy sale. "S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PEDAL ATTACHMENT to PIANO. Radiating, Concave. Stool. £7 complete. Clifton House, Church Road, Leyton.

ALFRED MORRIS, L. Mus. T.C.L., Specialist in Postal Tuition, assures each individual student personal care and attention. Harmony, Counterpoint, &c. Preparation for Diplomas, &c. Model workings. Moderate terms. 9, West Lorne Street, Chester.

ORGANIST desires POST as Organist or Choirmaster-Organist. Many years' experience. Sympathetic accompanist. Mr. Harry Oakes, 74, Lady Margaret Rd., Tufnell Park, N.19.

TENOR WANTED IMMEDIATELY, for Non-conformist Church in West London. Must read well. Two Sunday Services and rehearsal. £20 per annum. Apply, "A. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR (Soloist) REQUIRED for West-End Church. Good reader. Duties: Sundays, 11 and 6.30, and Friday rehearsal. £20. Write, "E. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ALTO REQUIRED.—Christ Church, Wanstead, must be good reader. £15 per annum. Practice on Friday, 8 p.m. Commencing duty, December 18. Apply to S. Harrington, 5, Gordon Road, Wanstead.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED, South Croydon Wesleyan Church. Salary, £35 per annum. Applications, with testimonials, by letter to Trustees' Secretary, "Whitecot," Birdhurst Avenue, South Croydon.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST required at Kensal Rise Baptist Church. Two-Manual hydraulic-blown Organ. Apply, Organist, 53, Whitefriars Avenue, Wealdstone, Middlesex.

ALTO REQUIRED, City Church. £15 per annum. Good reader. Write, "Choirmaster," St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, E.C.3.

LONDON SELECT CHOIR.—There are at present VACANCIES in all parts. Apply, J. G. Cathro, Secretary, 86, Park Road, Kingston-on-Thames.

THE Advertiser would like to buy (or borrow) J. B. Cramer's "Utile et Dolce" and Czerny's Preludes and Cadenzas, Op. 61, and his "School of Extemporaneous Playing," Op. 200. Frederick Dawson, Delf View, Eyam, Sheffield.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE INTROITS OR SHORT ANTHEMS.

No.
1.	LET THE WORDS OF MY MOUTH	Hugh Blair
2.	GRANT, O LORD	Josiah Booth
3.	LORD, WE PRAY THEE	H. A. Chambers
4.	HIDE NOT THOU THY FACE	Richard Farrant
5.	I WILL GO UNTO THE ALTAR	H. J. Gauntlett
6.	O LORD, INCREASE MY FAITH	Orlando Gibbons
7.	ONE THING HAVE I DESIRED OF THE LORD	G. A. Macfarren
8.	LET MY PRAYER COME UP	Henry Purcell
9.	GOD BE IN MY HEAD	R. Walker Robson
10.	LEAD ME, LORD	S. S. Wesley
11.	HIDE ME UNDER THE SHADOW	John E. West
12.	BLESSED LORD	C. Lee Williams

PRICE ONE SHILLING.
Each Introit may be had separately.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

(THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED)

THE MUSIC BY

T. ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Price, Paper Cover, Three Shillings.
Boards, 4s.; Cloth, 6s.
Vocal Parts, One Shilling and Sixpence each.
Parts 1 and 2, 1s. 6d.; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. 6d.;
Parts 5 and 6, 1s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 8d.
Book of Words, complete (per 100), 12s. 6d.
Books of Words, Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 6s. 6d.

†CHRISTIANS, GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY

(CHRISTEN ÄTZET DIESEN TAG!)

A Christmas-Day Cantata (S.A.T.B. Soli)

Edited by J. E. WEST. English Words by C. AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

†BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

(FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA)

THE WORDS BY

C. ROSSETTI.

THE MUSIC BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

THE COMING OF THE KING

CANTATA FOR FEMALE VOICES

THE WORDS BY

H. M. BURNSIDE.

THE MUSIC BY

M. B. FOSTER

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

N. W. GADE.

Price, Paper Cover, One Shilling and Sixpence;
Boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

R. D. BETJEMANN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. HARRISON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

†FIRST CHRISTMAS MORN

THE WORDS BY

S. J. STONE.

THE MUSIC BY

H. LESLIE.

Price, Vocal Score, Four Shillings.
Vocal Parts, Eightpence each.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. C. NUNN.

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

†THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN.

THE WORDS BY

S. WENSLEY.

THE MUSIC BY

J. E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence;
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

† Full Score and Orchestral Parts may be had.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ANTHEMS, &c., FOR CHRISTMAS.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

P. E. FLETCHER.

NOW ONCE AGAIN

CAROL-ANTHEM.

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.
Ditto, Female Voices, Fourpence.

G. RATHBONE.

AND WE BEHELD HIS GLORY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

C. V. STANFORD.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence.

SELECTED LIST.

A. ADAM.

O HOLY NIGHT

ARRANGED AS ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence

T. ADAMS.

ARISE, SHINE, O JERUSALEM

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

T. ADAMS.

THOU ART MY SON

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

W. G. ALCOCK.

BREAK FORTH INTO JOY

Price Fourpence.

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

OF THE FATHER'S LOVE BEGOTTEN

Price Fourpence.

C. BAYLEY.

GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

J. F. BRIDGE.

IN THAT DAY

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. BUNNETT.

BEHOLD, I BRING GOOD TIDINGS

Price Threepence.

E. BUNNETT.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

H. A. CHAMBERS.

ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT IS COME

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Threepence.

P. E. FLETCHER.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

FESTIVAL CAROL

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.
Ditto, T.T.B.B., Fourpence.
Ditto, S.S.A., Fourpence. Ditto, S.A., Fourpence

M. B. FOSTER.

CHRIST'S INCARNATION

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

CH. GOUNOD.

NAZARETH

ARRANGED FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

E. V. HALL.

WHILE SHEPHERDS WATCHED

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. HOLLINS.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

C. H. LLOYD.

REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER OF ZION

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. MARCHANT.

O COME, REDEEMER OF MANKIND

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. H. MAUNDER.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. L. SELBY.

IN THE BEGINNING WAS THE WORD

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

G. SHAW.

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.
Ditto, Unison Setting, Twopence.
Ditto, S.S.C. Threepence.

B. STEANE.

LET US NOW GO EVEN UNTO BETHLEHEM

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

B. STEANE.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Fourpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. S. SULLIVAN.

SING, O HEAVENS

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

J. E. WEST.

A SONG OF JOY

Price Fourpence Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

A. W. WILSON.

WITH ALL THY HOSTS

Price Twopence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS.
LATEST NUMBERS.

No.
390.	By Nazareth's green hills ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
391.	Sweet hours of night	H. C. Dixon	1½d.
392.	The Carollers	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
393.	The Rose and the Lily ...	A. Rowley	1½d.
394.	Carol of the Three Kings ...	J. F. Bridge	2d.
395.	Green grows the Holly Tree ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
396.	The coming Christmas ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
397.	I sing the Birth ...	Thomas Adams	1½d.
398.	O lovely voices of the sky ...	W. G. Alcock	2d.
399.	This Day	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*400.	Hark! what mean those Holy voices	A. Sullivan	4d.
*401.	Four Christmas Carols		2d.
	1. In Bethlehem, that noble place	B. J. Dale
	2. Sleep, Holy Babe! ...	R. W. Robson
	3. The First Christmas Night	W. H. Sangster
	4. There dwelt a King ...	John E. West
	(Words only, 4s. per 100.)
*402.	Silent Night	Franz Grüber	2d.
403.	Carols of Bethlehem	C. W. Pearce	2d.
	1. No room in the Inn. 2. The heavenly host. 3. Our "House of Bread."
404.	Good King Wenceslas... ...	Geoffrey Shaw	2d.
*405.	O lovely voices of the sky (Unison)	Cuthbert Harris	1½d.
*406.	Ditto. (Four Voices)	Cuthbert Harris	2d.
407.	His Birthday Keep ...	A. M. Goodhart	1½d.
408.	Christmas Cradle Song ...	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
409.	Carol, Carol, tenderly, sweetly	J. F. Bridge	1½d.
410.	Rejoice, the Christ has come	Stanley Marchant	1½d.
*411.	The shepherds found Thee by night	Geoffrey Shaw	3d.
412.	The Carollers	E. Bunnett	1½d.
413.	The stars are shining bright and clear ... ... Carol, sweetly carol ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
414.	Christmas Bells	E. Bunnett	1½d.
415.	A Child this day is born Hark! what mean those Holy Voices ...	E. Bunnett	1½d.
416.	The Angel's Carol	E. Bunnett	1½d.
417.	While shepherds watched Angels from the realms of glory	E. Bunnett	1½d.
418.	A Christmas chime	E. Bunnett	1½d.
419.	A Cradle Song	A. H. Brewer	1½d.
420.	Gather the holly-bough...	H. E. Watts	1½d.
421.	The Three Wise Men ...	Alfred Hollins	1½d.
422.	The Holly and the Ivy...	Geoffrey Shaw	1½d.
423.	There is no rose... ...	Gerrard Williams	1½d.
*424.	The Christ-Child	G. Rathbone	2d.
425.	All Christian men ...	H. A. Chambers	1½d.
426.	I saw three Kings	G. Rathbone	1½d.
427.	O come this day	H. G. Ley	1½d.
428.	All hail with joy	Chastey Hecter	1½d.
429.	Rosa Mystica	B. J. Dale	4d.
430.	Cradle Song	B. J. Dale	4d.

* Also published in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC
BY
J. H. MAUNDER

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
Or, separately :—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s. 6d.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for general use) ...	2s.	1s. 4d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CAROLS FOR CHRISTMAS
BY
W. D. V. DUNCOMBE.

One Series of Ten, and one Series of Twelve, 2*s.* each.
Separate numbers, 3*d.* each.
Original and Traditional Melodies.

ST. STEPHEN'S DAY
"Head of the Church triumphant."
"Prince of Martyrs."
ST. JOHN'S DAY.
"Teach us by His example."
HOLY INNOCENTS.
"Blest little Martyrs."
CIRCUMCISION.
"Eight days amidst this world of woe."
PURIFICATION.
"Who is this from Bethlehem coming?"
"Hail to the Lord Who comes."
All the above music, original.

ALSO ONE FOR EPIPHANY, "O'ER THE HILL.
Old Plainsong, harmonized.

WEEKES & Co., 14, HANOVER STREET, W.1.

ENOCH & SONS' NEW ISSUES.
FOR CHOIRS, CHORAL SOCIETIES, AND SCHOOLS.

"THE HOLY CHILD." S.A.T.B. ... ... Easthope Martin
A beautiful setting of Luther's Wonderful Hymn.
(Also as a Song in keys to suit all voices, 2*s.* net.)
*"THE IMMORTAL LEGIONS." S.A.T.B. ... Edward Elgar
This is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful choruses ever written by this famous composer.
"A CAROL OF BETHLEHEM." T. or S. Solo & Chorus Dudley Glass
"THE SHEPHERDESS." S.A.T.B. ... Dermot Macmurrough
Ditto. T.T.B.B.
*"COME TO THE FAIR." S.A.T.B. ... ... Easthope Martin
(* Also as Two-part Songs). Price each, 6*d.* net.
* Unison Song, T.S.F., 2*d.* net.
Specimen copies on application.
ENOCH & SONS, LD., 58, Great Marlborough Street, London, W.1.
And at Paris, New York, Toronto, and Melbourne.

CAROLS BY JOSEPH C. BRIDGE.

M.A., D. Mus. Oxon. et Dunelm.; F.S.A.; Chairman of the Board of Trinity College, London: Professor of Music in the University of Durham.

1. ON CHRISTMAS NIGHT ... ... 3d.
2. AWAY WITH GRIEF ... ... 3d.
3. THE MERRY CHRISTMAS MORN ... ... 3d.
4. HOLY NIGHT ... ... 2d.
5. AWAKE THE VOICE (S.S.A. only) ... ... 4d.
6. CHRISTMAS IN THE FIELDS (Béarnais Melody) ... 2d.
7. WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN (Chester Mystery Play)... 3d.
8. REJOICE WITH HEART AND VOICE (Old French Melody) ... ... 2d.
9. THE SHEPHERDS' CAROL (Coventry Mystery Play)... 2d.
10. LULLABY (Coventry Mystery Play) ... ... 2d.
11. ACROSS THE SNOW ... ... 2d.
12. THE SHEPHERDS HAD AN ANGEL (S.S. only) ... 2d.
13. ON BETHLEHEM'S HILL ... ... 3d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUNDATIONS OF PRACTICAL HARMONY AND COUNTERPOINT.

By R. O. MORRIS, of the Royal College of Music.

8vo. 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

TWELVE CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

Arranged by SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON,

Organist of Westminster Abbey. PAPER, 3d.

 A reprint of the traditional Carols which form the Carol section of NICHOLSON'S BRITISH SONGS FOR BRITISH BOYS, taken from the Pupil's Edition (2s. net), with voice parts in Tonic Sol-fa and Staff notation.

MACMILLAN & Co., LTD., LONDON, W.C.2.

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN

BY

ROBERT BROWNING.

SET TO MUSIC FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

GEORGE RATHBONE.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1*s.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Music and Books

at Great Reductions.

Foyles hold a wide range of Second-hand Copies in good condition of Pianoforte and Organ Music, Oratorios, Operas, and Choral Works of every description, Standard Musical Text-books, Dramatic Literature and Plays, which they offer at tremendous reductions. Send for Catalogue 122 (free); mentioning definite requirements if possible.

New Books and Music supplied on best terms, and prompt delivery guaranteed.

Music and Books Purchased.

FOYLE'S MUSIC DEPT.,

121-125, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

THE PSALTER

NEWLY POINTED

THE aim of this Psalter is to help choirs to chant as naturally as they would speak, and to do this within the bounds of the Harmonic Chant known as Anglican.

It is the work of many minds, and has taken many years to prepare and complete.

During the war Mr. Bridges, the Poet Laureate, sought out Dr. Walford Davies to discuss such a Speech-Rhythm Psalter as this. On July 1, 1916, he further expounded his views to sixty London choirmasters at the Temple. A Psalter Committee was formed, and was joined by many men of wide experience—Sir Hugh Allen of Oxford, Dr. Alan Gray of Cambridge, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Mr. Cook of Southwark Cathedral, the late Mr. Marshall (Editor of the "Barless Psalter"), Mr. Ramsbotham, Mr. Leeds, Mr. Cuthbert Kelly, and others.

Whole days of conference were spent in discussion of principles and simplification of details, methods were tested on choirs of many kinds, and this Psalter has emerged as the result.

$8\frac{3}{4} \times 5\frac{3}{4}$. 224 pp. Cloth boards. 3*s.* 6*d.*

Smaller size, cloth boards. 1*s.* 8*d.*

A MANUAL OF ENGLISH CHURCH MUSIC.

Edited by GEORGE GARDNER, M.A., Mus.Bac., and SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON, M.A., Mus.Bac., Organist of Westminster Abbey. 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

SIR RICHARD TERRY says: "It is the best book on the subject at present in circulation . . . ought to be in the hands of every one interested in Church music."

WORSHIP AND MUSIC.

By GEORGE GARDNER, M.A., Mus.Bac. Preface by BISHOP GORE, and Musical Illustrations. 2*s.* 6*d.*

Musical Opinion says: "We heartily commend the book to all who have to do with Church Music."

MUSIC IN WORSHIP.

Report of the Archbishops' Committee. 1*s.*

[Some of the points dealt with in this unanimous Report are: The place of music in worship; suitable and unsuitable music; the choice of music in town and village worship; hymn singing; training of choirmasters and organists; use and abuse of the organ, &c.]

LONDON:

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE,

NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.

And of all Booksellers.

NOVELLO'S EDITION OF
BACH'S CHURCH CANTATAS

	No.
*BIDE WITH US	6	Bleib' bei uns
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON	4	Christ lag in Todesbanden
CHRISTIANS GRAVE YE THIS GLAD DAY	63	Christen, ätzet diesen Tag
COME, REDEEMER OF OUR RACE	61	Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland
FROM DEPTHS OF WOE I CALL ON THEE	38	Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu dir
GIVE THE HUNGRY MAN THY BREAD	39	Brich dem Hungrigen dein Brod
GOD GOETH UP WITH SHOUTING	43	Gott fähret auf mit Jauchzen
GOD SO LOVED THE WORLD	68	Also hat Gott die Welt geliebt
*GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST	106	Gottes Zeit ist die allerbeste Zeit
*Ditto (Welsh Words).
†HOW BRIGHTLY SHINES	1	Wie schön leuchtet
IF THOU BUT SUFFEREST GOD TO GUIDE THEE	93	Wer nur den lieben Gott lässt walten
JESUS, NOW WILL WE PRAISE THEE	41	Jesu, nun sei gepreiset
JESUS SLEEPS, WHAT HOPE REMAINETH?	81	Jesus schläft, was soll ich hoffen?
LET SONGS OF REJOICING BE RAISED	149	Man singet mit Freuden
LORD IS A SUN AND SHIELD, THE	79	Gott der Herr ist Sonn' und Schild
†LORD IS MY SHEPHERD, THE	112	Der Herr ist mein getreuer Hirt
LORD, REBUKE ME NOT (Funeral Ode)	198	Lass, Fürstin (Trauerode)
*MY SPIRIT WAS IN HEAVINESS	21	Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss
O CHRIST, MY ALL IN LIVING	95	Christus der ist mein Leben
O JESU CHRIST, THOU PRINCE OF PEACE	116	Du Friedensfürst, Herr Jesu Christ
*O LIGHT EVERLASTING	34	O ewiges Feuer
O PRAISE THE LORD FOR ALL HIS MERCIES	28	Gottlob! nun geht das Jahr zu Ende
O TEACH ME, LORD, MY DAYS TO NUMBER	27	Wer weiss, wie nahe mir mein Ende?
PRAISE OUR GOD WHO REIGNS IN HEAVEN	11	Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen
PRAISE THOU THE LORD, JERUSALEM	119	Preise, Jerusalem, den Herrn
RISE, O SOUL	180	Schmücke dich
SAGES OF SHEBA, THE	65	Sie werden aus Saba Alle kommen
*SLEEPERS, WAKE!	140	Wachet auf
†STRONGHOLD SURE, A	80	Ein' feste Burg
THERE IS NOUGHT OF SOUNDNESS IN ALL MY BODY	25	Es ist nichts Gesundes an meinem Leibe
THOU GUIDE OF ISRAEL	104	Du Hirte Israel, höre
WAILING, CRYING, MOURNING, SIGHING	12	Weinen, Klagen, Sorgen, Zagen
WATCH YE, PRAY YE	70	Wachet, betet
WHEN WILL GOD RECALL MY SPIRIT?	8	Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?
WHOSO DOTH OFFER THANKS	17	Wer Dank opfert

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

THE SOLOS FROM THE CANTATAS

IN TWELVE BOOKS (THREE BOOKS FOR EACH VOICE)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH

BACH'S MOTETS

*BE NOT AFRAID	Fürchte dich nicht. 8*d.*
Ditto. (Edited by G. R. SINCLAIR)	1*s.*
*BLESSING, GLORY, AND WISDOM	Lob und Ehre und Weisheit und Dank. 8*d.*
*COME, JESU, COME	Komm, Jesu, komm. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*I WRESTLE AND PRAY (J. C. BACH)	Ich lasse dich nicht. 6*d.*
*JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE	Jesu, meine Freude. 1*s.* 6*d.*
*Ditto. (Welsh Words)	1*s.* 6*d.*
*NOW SHALL THE GRACE	Nun ist das Heil. 8*d.*
*SING YE TO THE LORD	Singet dem Herrn. 1*s.* 6*d.* [1*s.* 6*d.*
SPIRIT ALSO HELPETH US, THE	Der Geist hilft unserer Schwachheit auf

* May be had in Tonic Sol-fa, complete. † May be had in Tonic Sol-fa (Choruses only).

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOW READY.

THE ENGLISH PSALTER

CONTAINING

THE PSALMS OF DAVID

TOGETHER WITH

THE CANTICLES

AND

PROPER PSALMS FOR CERTAIN DAYS

EDITED AND POINTED FOR CHANTING

UPON THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL SPEECH-RHYTHM

BY

CHARLES MACPHERSON, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL).

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc.
(ORGANIST OF YORK MINSTER).

PERCY C. BUCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
(DIRECTOR OF MUSIC IN HARROW SCHOOL).

PRICES:

Demy 8vo size ... Four Shillings net.
Imperial 32mo ... One Shilling and Sixpence net.

THE CANTICLES ONLY

Demy 8vo size ... Sixpence net.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

JUST PUBLISHED.

OVERTURE IN D MINOR

COMPOSED BY

HANDEL.

ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN

BY

H. F. ELLINGFORD.

FROM THE ORCHESTRAL TRANSCRIPTION

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

RISE, O SOUL, THIS HAPPY MORNING.

(SCHMÜCKE DICH, O LIEBE SEELE.)

CANTATA

For four Solo Voices, Chorus, and Orchestra.

BY

J. S. BACH.

(CANTATA No. 180.)

Edited by JOHN E. WEST.

English version by A. H. FOX-STRANGWAYS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW

SET TO MUSIC BY

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

EDITED BY

EDWARD ELGAR AND IVOR ATKINS.

BOOK OF WORDS,
with the Music of the Chorales.
PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

33rd 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Leeds Musical Festival, 1925.

FIRST

CHORAL SYMPHONY

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE POEMS OF

JOHN KEATS

AND SET TO MUSIC FOR

SOPRANO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

GUSTAV HOLST

(Op. 41.)

PRICE FOUR SHILLINGS.

Separately from the above:

Ode on a Grecian Urn

FOR CHORUS AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

Band Parts of the Complete Work and of the

SCHERZO

which may be played as an Orchestral Piece without Chorus, may be had on hire.

It is proposed to publish the Full Orchestral Score of the complete work on Subscription terms.

If the scheme is carried out, the price for all orders received on or before December 31, inst., will be £2 2s. The price after publication will be £3 3s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

ORGAN WORKS

OF

RHEINBERGER

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

Cloth Gilt, xii. + 130 pages.

WITH 127 MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Five Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THESE
12 VOLUMES
CARRIAGE PAID TO YOUR ADDRESS FOR 10/-
DOWN.
IN PAPER OR GILT CLOTH EDITIONS.

Send for Complete List of Contents, Post free, To-Day, and see Instalment Purchase Terms Given Below.

LAST OPPORTUNITY!
ONLY A FEW COMPLETE SETS LEFT.
OFFER CLOSES ON DECEMBER 31ST.

The . .
ORGAN LOFT
12 SUPERB VOLUMES
Comprising 2,280 Pages and 360 Compositions by the Leading Organist-Composers.

Some of the Composers:
ARCHER, J. STUART
BELLERBY, E. J.
BLAIR, DR. H.
BOTTING, DR. H
CRACKEL, H.
D'EVRY, E.
DIGGLE, ROLAND
DRIFFIELD, T.
DRIFFILL, W.
DUNCAN, EDMONDSTOUNE
ELLINGFORD, HERBERT J.
FARJEON, HARRY FAULKES, W.
FERRARI, GUSTAVE
FRICKER, H. A.
GOSS-CUSTARD, R.
GRAY, ALAN
GOSTELOW, F.
HAIGH, DR. T.
HALSEY, E.
HARRISON, JULIUS
HOLLINS, ALFRED
JENKINS, CYRIL
MANSFIELD, PURCELL J.
MEALE, J. A.
NUNN, E. CUTHBERT
NOBLE, T. TERTIUS
PALMER, DR. C. CHARLTON.
ROWLEY, ALEC
TOZER, FERRIS
VINCENT, CHARLES
WHITE, L. MEADOWS
WIEGAND, AUG.
WOLSTENHOLME, W.
YON, PIETRO
ETC. ETC. ETC.

Look at these Names

They are all names to conjure with in the sphere of modern organ music. They are the names of men who have composed some of the finest organ music extant—

And the fruits of their genius are at your disposal for 2/6 per week!

"THE ORGAN LOFT" is an absolutely unique collection of the best works of modern composers. It is a "Library" of organ music in the widest and most comprehensive sense. Within its twelve volumes there is a wondrous store of organ music fascinating in its variety, its diversity of styles, and its ever-changing appeal. There is music here to please all tastes and charm the most captious critics.

In "THE ORGAN LOFT" the choice of pieces is almost endless. To the organist who would do justice to his post by playing music of a consistently high standard "THE ORGAN LOFT" is a necessity.

In each volume there are approximately 190 pages of music, comprising 30 compositions, And They Are All Good. Whether you are a church organist, a recitalist, or a cinema organist, you will find in "THE ORGAN LOFT" music to suit all needs, no matter what the occasion may be.

Though produced at enormous cost, we have determined to bring this splendid range of organ music within the reach of all by means of the instalment system of payment GIVEN BELOW. This is an absolutely new idea in music selling. We provide the organist to whom these great works have hitherto been unattainable with an unexampled opportunity of enjoying them, and we practically loan him the capital to enable him to do so.

By sending 10/- with order you will receive the entire set of twelve volumes, carriage paid, and you pay the balance by the monthly instalments shown below :

TERMS.

PAPER EDITION—
Cash with Order ... £5 5 0 (carriage paid).
Instalment System ... ... 10/- with Order and 10 Monthly Instalments of 10/- each.

CLOTH EDITION—
Cash with Order ... £7 7 0 (carriage paid).
Instalment System ... ... 10/- with Order and 10 Monthly Instalments of 14/6 each.

SEND YOUR ORDER WITH FIRST INSTALMENT TO-DAY.

If you already possess some of the volumes of this Series, we shall be pleased to specially quote Instalment Terms for the remaining Volumes.

W. PAXTON & Co., Ltd., LONDON: 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S
ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN
No. 9.

TWELVE SELECTED PIECES
(WEDDING MUSIC)

CONTENTS.

No.
1. WEDDING MARCH ... William Faulkes
2. HAPPY PAIR ("Alexander's Feast") Handel
3. LOVE SONG—LIEBESLIED ... Henselt
4. BENEDICTION NUPTIALE Alfred Hollins
5. BRIDAL MARCH ... ... Alfred Hollins
6. MINUET NUPTIALE ... Edwin H. Lemare
7. SPRING SONG ("Lieder ohne Worte") Mendelssohn
8. WEDDING MARCH ... ... Mendelssohn
9. BRIDAL MARCH AND FINALE ("The Birds" of Aristophanes) C. Hubert H. Parry
10. FINALE ("Blest Pair of Sirens") C. Hubert H. Parry
11. SERENADE ("Schwanengesang") Schubert
12. BRIDAL CHORUS ("Lohengrin") Wagner

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.
CLOTH, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 101.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS

EAR-TRAINING

INCLUDING

MUSICAL APPRECIATION AND RHYTHMIC MOVEMENTS.

BY

MABEL CHAMBERLAIN.

COMPLETE, SIX SHILLINGS,
Or,
In Two Books: Letterpress and Illustrations, 4*s*
Music only, 3*s*.

The Ear-Training Course outlined in this book is intended primarily for Class use, but if a judicious selection be made from the exercises, the course can be used with equal benefit by private teachers for individual pupils. Senior pupils and students who desire to Study music, and who have received little or no previous tuition, cannot do better than work rapidly through these progressive exercises and tests. A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 63.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

BREATHING
FOR
VOICE-PRODUCTION
(Rewritten and brought up to date).
PART I.
OF EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION
BY
H. H. HULBERT,
Capt. R.A.M.C., M.A. Oxford, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., &c.

Price ... Three Shillings.
Paper Boards, 4*s*.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

No. 100.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

PRONUNCIATION
FOR VOICE-PRODUCTION
FROM
EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION.

BY
H. H. HULBERT.

PRICE, ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SCHOOL MARCHES

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BOOK III.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

CONTENTS.

Arrival of the Visitors ... ... H. Hofmann
Bright and Buxom Lasses, from "Martha" ... Flotow
Instrumental Band, The ... ... Percy E. Fletcher
Little March, A ... ... J. D. Davis
March from "Egmont" ... ... Beethoven
March from "St. Polycarp" ... ... F. A. G. Ouseley
March ... ... Th. Kullak
March from "Tannhäuser" ... ... Wagner
Marching off to Bed ... ... Myles B. Foster
March of Priests, from "The Magic Flute" Mozart
Soldiers' Chorus, from "Il Trovatore" ... ... Verdi
Toy Soldiers' March ... ... Tschaïkowsky

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX SEA SONGS

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET.

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE Short Introductory Voluntaries

FOR THE

ORGAN.

BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOCTURNE

FOR VIOLONCELLO (OR VIOLIN) AND PIANOFORTE.

BY

COLIN MACLEOD CAMPBELL.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

	s.	d.
Piano Conductor	1	6
String Parts	2	8
Wind Parts, &c.	4	0
Harmonium	0	8

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SUITE

FOR STRING ORCHESTRA (OR QUARTET) TRANSCRIBED FROM THE CLAVICHORD WORKS OF

DOMENICO SCARLATTI

BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

SCORE.

Price ... Three Shillings.

String Parts, 3*s.* 4*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FINAL BOOK

OF THE

BREARE VOCAL SERIES

No. 5,

"VOCAL ANALYSES:

SENSITISING BREATH—
EMOTIONAL EVOLUTION."

Price 5*s.*, by Post, 5*s.* 4½*d.*

Previous Books of the Series—No. 1, "Vocalism: Its Structure and Culture, from an English Standpoint." No. 2, "Elocution: Its First Principles." No. 3, "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." No. 4, "Vocal Technique: How it Feels to Sing."

Books No. 1 to No. 4, price 3*s.* 6*d.* each, till pre-war editions exhausted.

BY W. H. BREARE, J.P., M.I.J., Vocal Adviser.

Address: HERALD BUILDINGS, HARROGATE, ENGLAND.

Publishers:

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co.
Harrogate: R. ACKRILL, Ltd.

YORK ANTHEM SERIES, ETC.

No.
487.	MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS,			B minor	...T. T. Noble	6d.
822.	Do.	do.	do.	B flat	... T. T. Noble	6d.
836.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	... Alec Rowley	5d.
865.	Do.	do.	do.	D minor	... J. S. Horne	5d.
866.	Do.	do.	do.	A ...	Henry Gibson	5d.
880.	Do.	do.	do.	D ...	Edwin J. Crow	6d.

Write complete List.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A SPRIG OF SHAMROCK

FOUR OLD IRISH AIRS.

For Soprano or Tenor Voice, with String Quartet or Pianoforte Accompaniment.

POEMS BY

F. W. HARVEY.

MUSIC ADAPTED AND ARRANGED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

STRING PARTS, Price 8*s.*

An Edition for Contralto or Baritone is also published. Price 3*s.* 6*d.*

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Produced at the Gloucester Musical Festival.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LOVE INCARNATE

A SETTING OF LINES

BY ROBERT BROWNING.

With a Verse of the Hymn, "Jesu, dulcis memoria,"

BY

ST. BERNARD OF CLAIRVAUX.

Translated by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.

Composed for Chorus, Semi-Chorus, Orchestra, and Organ

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 37.)

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

Price Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Lording's Daughter

BALLAD.

WORDS

ELIZABETHAN.

MUSIC BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

ON A NANKIN PLATE

SONG.

WORDS BY

AUSTIN DOBSON.

MUSIC BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS.

Price Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

BOOK 273.

THIRTY SONGS

BY

FRANZ SCHUBERT.

BOTH NOTATIONS.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONG BOOK, No. 271.

NATIONAL SONGS

WITH

DESCANTS

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

AND OTHERS.

CONTENTS.

THE BAY OF BISCAY	EARLY ONE MORNING
A-HUNTING WE WILL GO	O, DEAR! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE
JOHN PEEL	THE BRITISH GRENADIERS
ALL THROUGH THE NIGHT	THE ASH GROVE
SCOTS WHA HAE	GOOD KING WENCESLAS
THE OAK AND THE ASH	THE FIRST NOWELL

PRICE, EIGHTPENCE.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

Price, Paper Boards, Six Shillings each Series.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S LATEST SONG SUCCESSES

GUY D'HARDELOT.
"The Quiet Country Places"
"Wings"
"Love's Ecstasy"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.
"The Fairy Laundry"
"The Dawn has a Song"
"A Border Home"
"Fiddler, come and play for me"

TERESA DEL RIEGO.
"If any little Song of Mine"
"Some Day"

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE.
"Song of the Homeward Bound"

RICHARD KOUNTZ.
"Sleepy Hollow Tune"

RAYMOND LOUGHBOROUGH.
"High on the Sleepy Hills"

CECIL BAUMER.
"Spring, the Fiddler"
"Follow the Fairies"

HERMANN LÖHR.
"Friendships"
"Immortality"
"It's a year almost"

HAYDN WOOD.
"I Look into Your Garden"
"Dearest, I Love the Morning"
"The Valley of Roses"

ERIC COATES.
"The Little Green Balcony"
"Song of the Little Folk"
"The Gates of If-Ever"

MOLLY CAREW.
"Canterbury Bells"
"The Market"

REGINALD BENYON.
"Gossamer Wings"

CHAS. WAKEFIELD CADMAN.
"The Shadowless Hour"

GEORGE H. GARTLAN.
"The Lilac Tree"

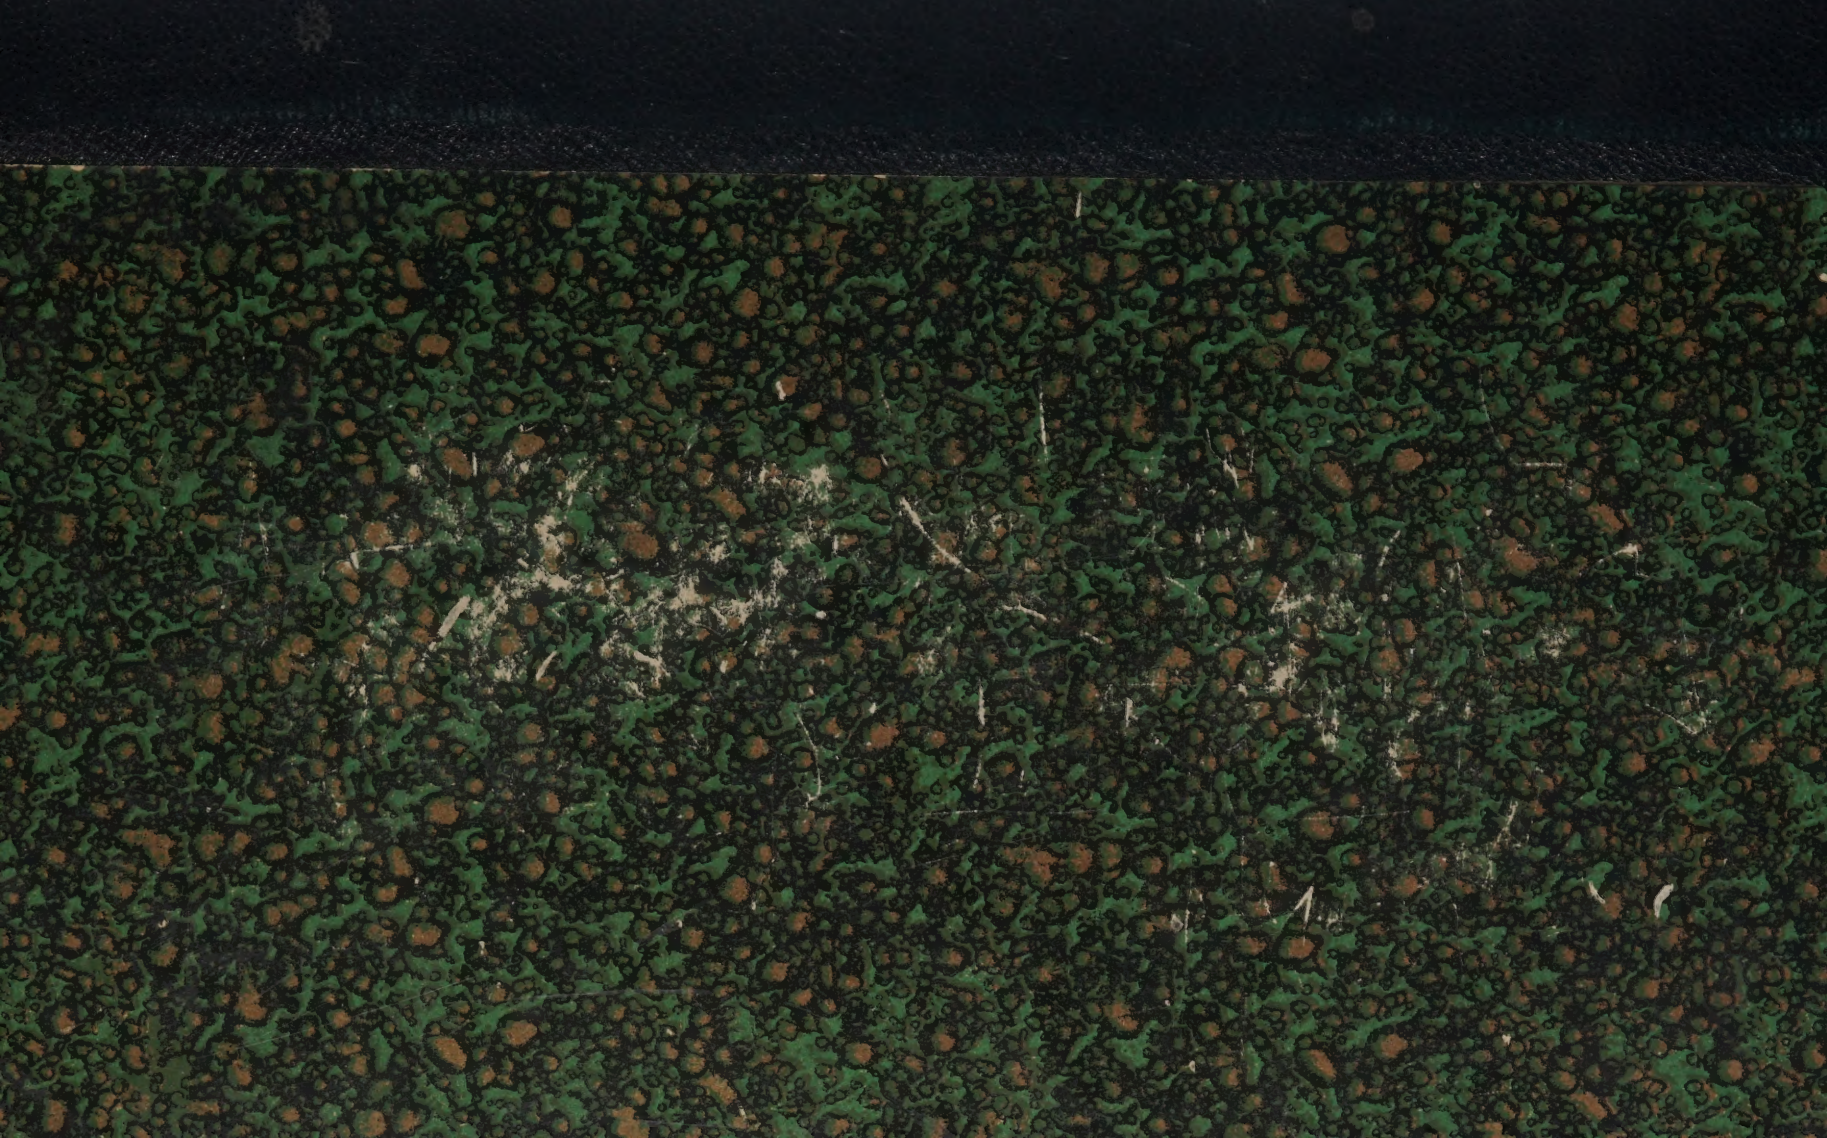
CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.
and may be obtained of all Music Sellers. NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

A few Suggestions for Suitable Christmas Gifts

PIANO SCORES.

	s.	d.
EL AMOR BRUJO, Manuel de Falla (Cover design by N. GONTCHAROVA.)	10	0
THE THREE-CORNERED HAT, Manuel de Falla (Cover design by ETHELBERT WHITE.)	15	0
EAST OF SUEZ, Eugène Goossens Suite from the Incidental Music. (Cover design by GEORGE HARRIS.)	5	0
LA BOUTIQUE FANTASQUE, Rossini-Respighi (Illustrated by A. DERAIN.)	10	0
" " SUITE for Piano (Artistic cover design by WYNDHAM PAYNE.)	3	0
THE GOOD-HUMOURED LADIES, Scarlatti-Tommasini (Cover design by A. P. ALLINSON.)	10	0
THE SLEEPING PRINCESS, Suite, Tchaikovsky (Fine cover design in Four Colours by BAKST.)	5	0
MASTER PETER'S PUPPET SHOW, Manuel de Falla (With illustrated cover and title-page.)	15	0

J. & W. CHESTER, Ltd., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

London: Printed by NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.1.
Tuesday, December 1, 1925.


BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 9999 08819 015 0
JUL 7 1926